Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Children working in agriculture. The Committee previously noted the collaboration between the Ministry of Manpower and Migration and the Ministry of Agriculture to prevent underage children from working in the cotton harvesting sector and to provide children working legally with the necessary protection while engaging in agricultural activities. It noted that monitoring and follow-up systems for working children were established, within which inspections are conducted on large agricultural plantations. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the number of children who were prevented from performing hazardous work as a result of the activities conducted by child labour inspectors in the agricultural sector.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that, in the first quarter of 2010, the labour inspectorate detected six violations involving children in agriculture in addition to 68 violations of Order No. 118 (which prohibits children under 18 from performing certain types of agricultural tasks). The Government indicates in this report that citations were issued for these violations. The Committee also notes the child labour inspection report submitted with the Government's report under the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), which indicates that in the last three months of 2009, 1,668 warnings and seven citations were issued by labour inspectors regarding violations detected during daily periodic inspections (of both rural and urban workplaces). This child labour inspection report indicates that a further 245 citations were issued after follow-up inspections were conducted. The Committee further notes the information in the Government's report submitted under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that a monitoring and tracking system has been set up for children working in agriculture.

Nonetheless, the Committee notes the information in the Survey of Young People in Egypt (Preliminary Report) of February 2010 (produced by the Egyptian Cabinet Information and Decision Support Centre and the Population Council) that 53 per cent of working children work in the agricultural sector. In this regard, the Committee notes UNICEF information that over a million children are hired each season to bring in the Egyptian cotton crop, and that these children routinely work 11 hours a day, seven days a week, in 40-degree summer heat. The Committee therefore urges the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that children under 18 who work in agriculture are not engaged in hazardous activities. In this regard, it requests the Government to take measures to strengthen the capacity of child labour inspectors with regard to monitoring of the agricultural sector, and to enhance the functioning of the monitoring and tracking system for children working in agriculture. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved.

Street children. The Committee previously noted that large numbers of street children (who have migrated from the countryside) live in urban areas. It also noted that, since 2003, the NCCM and UNICEF have been implementing the National Strategy for the Protection and Rehabilitation of Street Children which aims to rehabilitate and integrate street children back into society. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the impact of the National Strategy for the Protection and Rehabilitation of Street Children.

The Committee notes an absence of information on this point in the Government's report. However, the Committee notes the Government's statement in its report to the UN Human Rights Committee of 16 November 2009, that the NCCM has proved effective in dealing with the situation of street children (A/HRC/WG.6/7/EGY/1, page 5). The Government also indicates in this report that it provides special care, through 20 specialized programmes, to children living in difficult circumstances, including street children (A/HRC/WG.6/7/EGY/1, page 18). The Committee also notes the information in the Trafficking Report that the NCCM, in partnership with an international NGO, continues to run a day centre in Cairo to rehabilitate abused street boys involved in forced begging or petty crime.

Nonetheless, the Committee notes the information from UNICEF estimating that there are some one million street children in Egypt. The Committee also notes a report on the worst forms of child labour in Egypt of 10 September 2009 (available on the website of the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org)) which indicates that street children who work collecting garbage, begging and vending, are particularly vulnerable to becoming involved in illicit activities, including pornography and prostitution and are trafficked internally for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation, forced begging, and domestic labour. In this regard, the Committee further notes the information in the Trafficking Report that in May 2009, two men were convicted under the amended Child Law and the Penal Code of forcing street children into prostitution with wealthy Egyptians and tourists from the Gulf. The Committee expresses its concern at the situation and high number of street children in Egypt. Recalling that street children are particularly exposed to the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that children under 18 years living and working on the streets are protected from the worst forms of child labour, particularly trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation and begging. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures taken in this regard.

Clause (e). Special situation of girls. The Committee previously noted one of the three main goals of the Ministry of Education's policy concerning school-based development, included girls' education. In this regard, it noted the initiatives taken by the NCCM to reduce the gender gap in seven governorates. It also noted the UNESCO information that, while the gender parity index in both primary and secondary education was on the rise in the country, Egypt was on the list of countries at risk of not achieving the gender parity goal in 2015 or even 2025.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that 77 girl-friendly schools were established, which provide services to 1,737 girls. The Committee also notes the information in the Government's report submitted to CEDAW of 5 September 2008, that one-class schools have been established to enable female drop-outs to complete their education (CEDAW/C/EGY/7, page 12). The Government also indicates in this report that, in response to parents in rural areas who do not want to send their daughters to co-educational schools, the Government is attempting to increase the number of girls' schools in the countryside. Nonetheless, the Committee notes the information in the UNESCO report entitled "Global Monitoring Report – Education for All" of 2010 that girls' enrolment rates for primary education remain 4 per cent lower than that of boys. This report also indicates that 96 per cent of out-of-school children between the ages of 6 and 11 are female. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to achieve gender parity with regard to education, so as to ensure equal protection for girls from the worst forms of child labour. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on measures taken to facilitate access to free basic education for girls in rural areas.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. Self-employment. The Committee previously noted that the provisions in Labour Proclamation No. 118/2001 (Labour Proclamation) concerning the minimum age were applicable only in the context of a contract of employment, and therefore appeared to exclude self-employed workers from the application of these provisions. However, it also noted the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour and Human Welfare intended to introduce a programme with regard to self-employment. The Committee expressed the hope that this programme would ensure that self-employed children benefited from the protection laid down in the Convention, and requested information on progress made in this regard.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that, due to financial constraints, no programme on self-employment has yet been undertaken. The Government indicates that a programme in this regard will be contemplated once funding is available. The Committee reminds the Government that the Convention applies to all types of employment or work, whether or not it is performed on the basis of an employment contract. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children working outside of an employment relationship, such as those working on a self-employed basis, benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged in this respect, including through the Ministry of Labour and Human Welfare's programme on self-employment.

Article 2(3) and (4). Age of completion of compulsory schooling and minimum age for admission to employment. The Committee previously noted that the Labour Proclamation establishes a minimum age for admission to employment of 14 years, the age specified by the Government upon ratification. The Committee also noted the Government's intention to render education compulsory until middle school. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard.

The Committee notes the statement in the Government's report that education is compulsory for eight years (five years of elementary school and three years of middle school). The Government indicates that children start elementary education at the age of 6 years, and therefore complete compulsory education at 14 years, the minimum age for admission to work. While taking due note of this information, the Committee also notes the information in the UNESCO report of 2010 entitled "Education for All: Global Monitoring Report" that, in 2007, the net enrolment rate in primary education was only 41 per cent, and that there were approximately 349,000 children of primary-school age who were not in school. The UNESCO report further indicates that the survival rate to the last grade of primary school was 60 per cent in 2006, a significant decline from the 95 per cent survival rate in 1999. The Committee expresses its concern at the low school enrolment rates, in addition to the significant number of children who leave school prior to completing primary education. Considering that education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee urges the Government to improve the functioning of the education system, so as to increase school enrolment rates and reduce school drop-out rates. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, and on the results achieved.

Article 3(2). Determination of the types of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, under section 69(1) of the Labour Proclamation, the Minister may, by regulation, issue a list of activities prohibited to young employees, including apprentices, which shall in particular include work in docksides and warehouses involving heavy weight lifting, work connected with toxic chemicals, dangerous machines, underground work, work in sewers and digging tunnels. The Committee further noted that such a regulation on hazardous work had been drafted and finalized, following consultation with the social partners.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that this draft regulation has yet to be adopted. The Committee observes that the Government has been referring to the upcoming adoption of this list since 2007, and reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 3(2) of the Convention, the hazardous types of employment or work shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure, in the very near future, the adoption of the regulation pursuant to section 69(1) of the Labour Proclamation, containing a list of hazardous activities prohibited to persons under the age of 18. It requests the Government to provide a copy of this regulation, once adopted.

Article 6. Apprenticeship. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the general minimum age of 14 years applied for admission to apprenticeships. It also noted that pursuant to section 38 of the Labour Proclamation, the Minister may issue regulations to supervise the conditions of training of apprentices. The Committee further noted that while no such regulation had been issued, the Government indicated that a regulation pertaining to the training of apprentices was envisaged. The Committee notes the Government's statement that no regulation has yet been issued pursuant to section 38 of the Labour Proclamation. However, the Government indicates that it does intend to issue a regulation concerning the training of apprentices in the future. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the regulation on the training of apprentices once adopted.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee previously observed that the legislation in force contained no exception for light work for children below the minimum age of 14 years. It also noted the Government's statement in its report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) of 23 December 2002 that the Constitution Commission had indicated that there should be statutory regulations on how many hours children work (light work and after school hours) in addition to the types of work which should not be performed (CRC/C/41/Add.12, paragraph 40).

The Committee notes the Government's statement that no measures have been taken regarding the regulation of light work activities or the determination of light work conditions. It also notes the Government's statement that, in practice, some children from the age of 12 are engaged in part-time work, such as the distribution of newspapers or the selling of food items. In light of this information, the Committee recalls that by virtue of Article 7(1) and (4), of the Convention, national laws or regulations may permit children from the age of 12 to engage in light work, which is: (a) not likely to be harmful to their health or development; and (b) not such as to prejudice their attendance in school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received. Furthermore, pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Convention, the competent authority shall determine what light work is and shall prescribe the number of hours during which, and the conditions in which, such employment or work may be undertaken. The Committee therefore encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to determine light work activities that may be undertaken by children between 12 and 14 years of age, and to determine the number of hours which, and the conditions in which, light work may be undertaken.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers by employers. The Committee previously noted that, pursuant to section 20(7) and 10(1) of the Labour Proclamation, employers were required to keep a register, but that the register that was required did not include the names and ages or dates of birth of persons employed who are under 18 years. However, the Committee noted the Government's indication that this issue would be addressed in an upcoming regulation that would be adopted pursuant to section 69(1) of the Labour Proclamation relating to hazardous work. The Committee expressed the firm hope that the regulation would be adopted in the near future.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Ministry of Labour and Human Welfare is currently undertaking studies in preparation for developing a regulation on employers' registers. The Committee recalls that Article 9(3) of the Convention requires national laws or regulations or the competent authority to prescribe the registers or other documents which shall be kept and made available by the employer, and that such registers shall contain the names and ages or dates of birth, duly certified wherever possible, of persons whom he/she employs or who work for him/her and who are under 18 years of age. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the regulation concerning the registers kept by employers is elaborated and adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide a copy of this regulation, once adopted.

Parts III and V of the report form. Labour inspection and practical application of the Convention. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement that there is a need for further awareness-raising on child labour issues, in addition to a need to build the capacity of governmental staff for the effective application of the Convention. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that there have been no reported cases of child labour through the labour inspection system. The Government's report further states that the information from the public prosecutor's office indicates that there have not been any court cases filed relating to child labour.

However, the Committee notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 23 June 2008, expressed concern regarding widespread child labour, over the lack of comprehensive measures to ensure that children are protected from economic exploitation and due to the lack of data concerning the child labour situation in the country (CRC/C/ERI/CO/3, paragraphs 18 and 74). The Committee expresses its concern over the situation of widespread child labour in the country, as well as the weak enforcement of the Convention, and accordingly urges the Government to redouble its efforts to improve this situation, including through measures to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspection system. It requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this respect, and on the results achieved. The Committee further requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the situation of children involved in economic activity is available and invites the Government to provide such data when it becomes available.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that a new "National Plan of Action for Children 2003–10 and beyond" (NPA) had been drafted in 2004. One of the six main components of the NPA is reducing child labour. The Committee requested the Government to provide more detailed information on the implementation of the NPA and on the results attained. The Committee noted the Government's indication that, based on the priority areas identified by the NPA, it has begun to plan an awareness-raising programme concerning the problems associated with child labour, aimed at governmental and non-governmental bodies, although this programme has not yet been fully implemented. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of the NPA, as well as results achieved in terms of the elimination of child labour.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. The Committee had previously observed that the provisions of the Labour Proclamation No. 377/2003 (Labour Proclamation) do not cover work performed outside an employment relationship. The Committee noted the Government's acknowledgement that the labour legislation does not cover children who work on their own account, and that measures will be taken. The Committee noted the information in National Labour Force Survey of 2004–05 (NFLS), produced by the Central Statistical Agency of Ethiopia (Ministry of Finance and Economic Development), that approximately 1.57 per cent of economically active children (approximately 139,404 children between the ages of 5 and 14) are self employed. The Committee recalled that the Convention applies to all branches of economic activity and that it covers all types of employment or work, whether under a labour relationship or contract of employment or not, and whether it is remunerated or not. It therefore again requests the Government to provide information in their next report on measures taken or envisaged to ensure the application of the Convention to all types of work, including work carried out by persons under 14 years of age who work on their own account.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee noted the information in the Government's National Report on the Development of Education submitted to the International Conference on Education in 2008, that the third five-year Education Sector Development Program was launched in 2005, with the goal of improving educational quality, relevance and efficiency and expanding access to education with special emphasis on primary education in rural areas and the promotion of education for girls, as a step to achieving universal primary education by 2015. The Committee further noted the data in the Government's report submitted under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), that indicated that between 2001 and 2006, drop-out rates for primary school fell from 17.2 per cent to 12.4 per cent. The Committee also noted the information in this report that, over this period, there has been an increase in enrolment at the primary, secondary and higher education levels, as well as for technical and vocational education and training.

Nonetheless, the Committee noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its 1 November 2006 concluding observations, expressed serious concern that primary education in Ethiopia is still not free nor compulsory, and that net enrolment is still very low. While the CRC welcomed the improved enrolment rate in primary school, the increased budgetary allocation for education, and the improved collection of statistics regarding school attendance, it nevertheless expressed concern at the large number of school drop-outs, the charging of fees in primary education, the overcrowding of schools, the limited provisions for vocational training, the low transition rate to secondary school, the insufficient number of trained teachers and available school facilities, the absence of budgetary allocations for pre-primary schools and the poor quality of education (CRC/C/ETH/CO/3, paragraph 63). In addition, the Committee noted the information in the UNESCO report on school attendance and enrolment issued in 2007, that the net primary school enrolment rate in 2006 was 68.2 per cent, and that the secondary net enrolment rate was 32.1 per cent. Finally, the Committee noted the information in the NFLS that 36.3 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 14 engage only in economic activity and do not attend school. The Committee is seriously concerned by the large numbers of children who, in practice, do not attend school, and in view of the fact that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to set the age of completion of compulsory schooling at 14 years in the near future. The Committee also requests the Government to redouble its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system, in particular by increasing school enrolment and attendance rates among children in rural areas and among children under 14 years of age, so as to prevent the engagement of these children in child labour. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 3. Hazardous work. The Committee previously observed that the section 4(1) of the decree issued by the Minister of Labour and Social Affairs of 2 September 1997 concerning the prohibition of work for young workers, contained a list of types of hazardous work prohibited for young workers. The Committee also noted that, pursuant to section 4(2) of this decree, this prohibition did not apply to persons who carry out such activities in the course of professional education in vocational centres. The Committee further noted that the guidelines designed to facilitate the implementation of this decree are only available in Amharic. The Committee had asked the Government to specify what measures ensured that apprentices of 14 years of age and above do not engage in the hazardous work prohibited to young workers.

The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that pursuant to section 3(2)(b) of the Labour Proclamation, apprenticeships are covered by the Labour Proclamation. Section 89(4) of the Labour Proclamation prohibits young workers (which, pursuant to section 89(1), is defined as a person who has attained the age of 14 years, but is not over the age of 18 years) from engaging in work which endangers their life or health. However, the Committee noted that pursuant to section 89(5) of the Labour Proclamation, young workers following courses in vocational schools (that are approved and inspected by the competent authority) are expressly excluded from the prohibition in section 89(4). It therefore appears that workers between the ages of 14 and 18 are not prohibited from engaging in hazardous work while they are following courses in vocational schools which have been approved and inspected by the competent authority. The Committee recalled that, under the terms of Article 3(1) of the Convention, the minimum age of admission to hazardous work shall not be less than 18 years. The Committee further recalled that the exception outlined in Article 3(3) of the Convention provides that national laws or regulations may authorize hazardous work for young persons over the age of 16 following consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, provided that their health, safety and morals are fully protected and that they have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that young persons under 16 years of age following courses in vocational schools will be not be authorized to carry out hazardous work that is prohibited for young workers. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that the health, safety and morals of young persons engaged in vocational training aged 16 and 17 are fully protected, and to specify whether the employers' and workers' organizations have been consulted on the matter. Lastly, the Committee once again requests the Government to supply a copy of the guidelines of the abovementioned decree concerning the prohibition of work for young workers once they have been translated into one of the official languages of the ILO.

Part V of the report form. Practical application of the Convention. The Committee noted the data in the Government's report from the 2001 National Child Labour Survey and the 2006 analysis of this data. The Committee noted that this survey indicated that 15.5 million children (84.5 per cent of the child population) were engaged in economic activities, and 12.6 million of these children (81.2 per cent) were under the age of 15. The Committee also noted the information in the NLFS that 46.4 per cent of boys in rural areas, between the ages of 5 and 14, do not attend school, and are engaged only in economic activity. The Committee noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 1 November 2006, expressed deep concern at the prevalence of child labour among young children including those as young as five and that the Government had not taken comprehensive measures to prevent and combat this large-scale economic exploitation of children (CRC/C/ETH/CO/3, paragraph 71). The Committee expressed its serious concern at the large percentage of children under the age of 14 who are engaged only in economic activity and do not attend school, particularly in rural areas. It therefore urges the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that, in practice, children under the minimum age of 14 do not work. It strongly encourages the Government to take the necessary measures in the very near future to address this issue, including the allocation of additional resources to the child labour component of the NPA. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on the implementation of measures taken in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Gabon

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3(a) of the Convention and Part III of the report form. Sale and trafficking of children and court decisions.

The Committee previously noted that the Government has brought its legislation relating to the sale and trafficking of children into line with the Convention. However, it noted that, according to the information contained in a 2006 UNICEF report entitled "Trafficking in human beings, in particular women and children, in West and Central Africa", a number of children, particularly girls, are victims of internal and cross-border trafficking, for the purposes of work as domestic servants or in the country's markets. Children from Benin, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Guinea, Niger, Nigeria and Togo are victims of trafficking to Gabon. The Committee noted that, despite the statement made by the Government representative in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2007 that there is no internal trafficking of children in the national territory, it emerged from the discussion that took place within this Committee that children are victims of both internal and cross-border trafficking in the country. It also noted that 11 court cases are in progress, most of which have been referred to the Public Prosecutor's Office.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that statistics on convictions and penalties imposed are not available at present. It also notes that the decisions on the 11 court cases will be communicated as soon as possible. The Committee observes that, according to the report of the UNICEF West and Central Africa Regional Office submitted to the United Nations Economic and Social Council during its second regular session of September 2010 (E/ICEF/2010/P/L.17, paragraph 21), even though policies and laws exist to protect children against trafficking and several structures have an operational mandate in this area, legislation is not regularly enforced and coordination is weak, and for this reason trafficking is a major threat to children in the country. It also notes the information regarding Gabon in the 2010 report on human trafficking, published on the website of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) (www.unhcr.org), according to which, despite the fact that more than 30 persons were arrested for human trafficking between 2003 and 2008, no conviction has been recorded with respect to the reporting period. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the thorough investigation and robust prosecution of persons who engage in the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age, in accordance with the national legislation in force. It again requests the Government to supply specific information on the application of the provisions relating to this worst form of child labour, including statistics on the number of convictions and penalties imposed. Finally, it expresses the strong hope that the Government will send in the very near future a copy of court decisions relating to the cases referred to the Public Prosecutor's Office.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. 1. Council to prevent and combat the trafficking of children. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indications that the Council and watchdog committees responsible for preventing and combating the trafficking of children have the task of identifying any situation involving child labour and notifying the administrative and judicial authorities. The Committee once again requests the Government to supply information on the operation of the Council and watchdog committees responsible for preventing and combating the trafficking of children. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information as soon as possible on the number of child victims of trafficking identified by the Council and the watchdog committees.

2. Labour inspection. The Committee previously noted that, under Decree No. 007141/PR/MTE/MEFBP of 22 September 2005 [Decree No. 007141 of 22 September 2005], the labour inspector may immediately draw up a report of any violations relating to the trafficking of children. It noted that the Committee on the Application of Standards, in its conclusions of June 2007, asked the Government to strengthen the authority of the labour inspection services to enforce the law and also asked it to increase its human and financial resources. The Committee on the Application of Standards further asked the Government to ensure that regular inspections were carried out by the labour inspectorate. The Committee noted that a draft text is currently under examination with a view to the effective application of Decree No. 007141 of 22 September 2005. This draft text provides for the establishment of a special inspection unit responsible for combating child labour.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that Decree No. 007141 of 22 September 2005 is directly applicable without any need for the prior adoption of implementing regulations. It also notes that the special inspection unit to deal with child labour has not yet been established. However, the Committee notes with interest that, under section 178 of the Labour Code as amended by Ordinance No. 018/PR/2010 of 25 February 2010, labour inspectors have the power to question, and have the security forces arrest, any child who they have good reason to think is employed in any activity corresponding to the worst forms of child labour, including in the informal sector. In addition, labour inspectors are required to report any evidence of exploitation of children for the purposes of labour. The Committee requests the Government to supply statistics on the number of violations reported by the labour inspectorate involving children under 18 years of age engaged in any of the worst forms of child labour, particularly in the informal sector. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate in order to ensure that regular inspections are carried out.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement to the effect that, in the context of the new national policy on the working of the education system, a major forum was organized by the Government in May 2010 for the purpose of a review, discussion and analysis of the situation in education and making suggestions for the future. It notes that the forum led to a number of recommendations aimed at improving the education system. The Committee observes that, according to the information contained in the report of the UNICEF West and Central Africa Regional Office submitted to the United Nations Economic and Social Council during its second regular session of September 2010 (E/ICEF/2010/P/L.17, paragraph 21), despite the improvements recorded in recent years in terms of the increase in the net school enrolment rate and gender parity in primary education, progress is undermined by high drop-out rates and a high percentage of children repeating classes. In addition, according to UNICEF statistics for 2003–08, the secondary school attendance rate (12–18 years) remains low (about 35 per cent) in comparison with primary education. Considering that education contributes towards preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system by taking measures aimed, inter alia, at reducing the school drop-out and repetition rates and increasing the attendance rate in secondary education. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in the context of the new national policy on the functioning of the education system and to provide a copy of this policy.

Clause (b) Removing children from the worst forms of child labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Reception centres and medical and social assistance for child victims of trafficking. The Committee previously noted that the country has four reception centres, three in Libreville and one in Port-Gentil. Children removed from a situation of exploitation are given an initial medical examination a few days after their placement in a centre. Children who are ill are taken care of by doctors and, if necessary, hospitalized. In addition, with a view to their rehabilitation and social integration, children are supervised by specialist teachers and psychologists and benefit from social and educational activity programmes and administrative and legal support in association with the monitoring committee and watchdog committees. The Committee also noted that children removed from trafficking are, during their stay in the centres, enrolled free of charge according to their age in state schools in which they enjoy the same advantages as other children. Those who are no longer of school age are enrolled in literacy centres. The Committee asked the Government to provide information on the number of children who have been removed from trafficking and on the measures taken to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration.

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any further information on these points. However, it notes that, according to a UNICEF press release dated 13 November 2009, the Government has identified 34 child victims of trafficking (26 girls and eight boys between 11 and 18 years of age), 26 of them originating from Benin and eight from Togo and Mali, who were located on a boat which was boarded and searched in Gabonese territorial waters in October 2009. All the children were taken to reception centres to be given assistance pending repatriation to their countries of origin. Furthermore, according to the 2010 report on human trafficking, the Ministry of Family and Social Affairs has trained 30 groups of trainers and more than 100 social workers in procedures for taking care of the victims of trafficking as part of a six-week programme. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue to take immediate and effective measures to remove children from sale and trafficking and once again requests it to provide information on the number of children who have actually been removed from this worst form of child labour and placed in reception centres. Furthermore, it again requests the Government to supply information on the specific measures taken to ensure the rehabilitation and social integration of these children.

Article 8. International cooperation. The Committee previously noted that, during the discussion which took place within the Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2007, the Government representative indicated that the possibility of taking steps to increase the number of police officers at land, maritime and aerial borders, using joint border patrols and opening transit centres at these borders was being considered. The Committee also noted that the Government signed the Multilateral Regional Cooperation Agreement against the trafficking of children in West and Central Africa in July 2006 [2006 Regional Cooperation Agreement] and that a bilateral agreement relating to the trafficking of children is being negotiated with Benin.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that current measures taken to give effect to the 2006 Regional Cooperation Agreement consist of information and awareness raising for the States parties to this Agreement, the establishment of a joint regional monitoring committee involving the ECOWAS and ECCAS countries, and the adoption of the "national roadmap" drawn up by Gabon for implementation of the regional plan. The Government's report also indicates that negotiations with a view to signing a bilateral agreement with Benin are continuing. The Committee notes that, according to the information contained in the 2010 report on human trafficking relating to the case of the 34 child victims of trafficking identified on a boat which was boarded and searched in Gabonese territorial waters in October 2009, the Gabonese Government has set up a team, including with the support of the Government of Benin and UNICEF, in order to look for the families of the child victims and organize the safe repatriation of the Beninese children. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the steps taken to give effect to the 2006 Regional Cooperation Agreement, particularly concerning the strengthening of the police presence at borders, the establishment of the regional monitoring committee and the adoption of the "national roadmap" drawn up by Gabon to implement the regional plan. In addition, the Committee expresses the hope that the bilateral agreement on the trafficking of children being negotiated with Benin will be signed in the very near future and requests the Government to continue to supply information on any new developments in this respect.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments the Committee noted that the lack of recent statistics on the trafficking of children in the country was emphasized in the discussion which took place within the Committee on the Application of Standards in 2007. In this respect, the Government representative indicated that the Government intended to carry out an analysis of the national situation concerning child trafficking in Gabon and a mapping of the trafficking routes and areas in which forced labour involving children was practised.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the undertaking made with respect to analysing the national situation concerning trafficking will be acted upon when resources are sufficient to allow it. The Committee again expresses the strong hope that the analysis of the situation of the trafficking of children in Gabon will be conducted in the very near future and requests the Government to continue to supply information in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Georgia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1996)

The Committee notes the Government's report and the comments of the Georgian Trade Unions Confederation (GTUC) dated 13 September 2010.

Article 2(1) of the Convention and Part V of the report form. Minimum age for admission to employment and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the comments made by the GTUC that according to UNICEF estimates, 30 per cent of children between the ages of 5–15 years worked in Georgia and that there were reports of children between the ages of 7–12 years working on the streets of Tbilisi, in markets, carrying or loading wares, selling goods in underground carriages, railway stations, etc. Moreover, based on the information provided by the Trade Union of Agricultural Workers, the GTUC alleged that child labour is widespread in the agricultural sector at harvest time in several regions of Georgia.

The Committee had noted the Government's statement that allegations by the GTUC were based on unverified sources and that UNICEF was planning to conduct a study on street children which would help to assess the actual situation of child labour in the country. The Committee, further noting the child labour estimates from the Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey (MICS), UNICEF 2005, indicating an important drop in the percentage of children involved in labour, from 30 per cent in 1999 to 18 per cent in 2005, had requested the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that no child under the age of 15 years performed child labour in any sector of economic activity. It had also requested the Government to provide recent statistical information on the employment of children and young persons, in particular children working on the streets and in the agricultural sector.

The Committee notes the Government's information that education is one of its priorities and that it has taken a number of steps to strengthen the educational system and the school attendance of children. In 2008, the expenditure on general education had doubled from that of 2004, and in 2009 this expenditure increased by 23.1 per cent and by 20.9 per cent in primary education. The major state programmes in the educational sector aimed at the renovation and rehabilitation of the education infrastructure. It notes the Government's indication that in 2009, under the "Public Schools Rehabilitation Programme", more than 300 public schools were renovated. The Committee further notes the Government's information that in order to make primary education accessible for children from the families living below the poverty line, the Government developed the "State Assistance Programme for the First Year Pupils from the Families below Poverty Line".

Under this programme, in 2009–10, one-time assistance to cover the costs related to schooling was provided for children from poor families.

The Committee notes that according to the UNICEF statistics on education, in Georgia, the gross primary school enrolment rate in 2008, was 100 per cent for males and 98 per cent for females. The Committee requests the Government to provide recent statistical information on the employment of children and young persons, in particular children working in the streets and in the agricultural sector.

Scope of application. The Committee had previously noted the Government's indication that self-employment was not regulated by the legislation of Georgia. It had also noted section 4(2) of the Labour Code, which permits the employment of children below 16 years on the condition that such work is not against his/her interests, does not damage his/her moral, physical or mental development or limit their right and ability to obtain elementary, compulsory and basic education and upon the consent from his/her legal representative, tutor or guardian. The Committee had further noted the Government's reference to the data provided by the Department of Statistics of Georgia, that 95 per cent of employees in agriculture were engaged in small-scale farms and household cultivated lands, which did not use hired labour. The Committee reminded the Government that, by virtue of the minimum age specified by it, children under 15 years of age shall not be permitted to work, regardless of the type of work performed, and whether it is paid or not, with the exception of light work, which can only be carried out under the conditions laid down in Article 7 of the Convention.

The Committee notes the comments made by the GTUC that the Labour Code applies only to hired labourers. As such children working on family farms, or in the agricultural sector are not afforded the protection guaranteed under the Convention. Furthermore, with the abolition of the labour inspectorate by the Labour Code of 2006, there exists no public authority to observe the implementation of labour legislation, including child labour provisions.

The Committee notes that the Government refers to Article 5(3) of the Convention which provides for the possibility of limiting the scope of application of the Convention to certain branches of economic activity, "excluding family and small-scale holdings producing for local consumption and not regularly employing hired workers". The Government further states that children's work in the agricultural sector is not hired work and therefore their activities cannot be considered as incompatible with the Convention, as it is excluded under Article 5(3) of the Convention. The Committee reminds the Government that by virtue of Article 5(1) and (2) of the Convention, a Member whose economy and administrative facilities are insufficiently developed may, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, initially limit the scope of application of this Convention, and each Member which avails of this provision shall specify in a declaration appended to its ratification, the branches of economic activity or type of undertakings to which it will apply the provisions of the Convention. The Committee observes that at the time of ratification, Georgia did not avail itself of this provision and therefore the provisions of the Convention apply to all branches of economic activity, including family undertakings and small-scale holdings, and cover all types of employment, whether hired or self-employed. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children working in the agricultural sector, whether paid or unpaid, as well as those working on their own account, are entitled to the protection afforded by the Convention. In this regard, it requests the Government to envisage the possibility of re-establishing the labour inspection services, including in the informal sector, in order to ensure the effective implementation of the provisions giving effect to the Convention.

Article 7(1) and (3). Light work and determination of light work. The Committee had previously noted the comments by the GTUC that the hours of work of young workers are not limited. It had noted that as per section 14 of the Labour Code, if parties do not agree otherwise, a working week shall not exceed 41 hours, which is also applicable to young workers. The Committee had further noted section 18 of the Labour Code which prohibits night work (10 p.m. to 6 a.m.) by young persons and section 4(2) which lays down the conditions of employment of children between 14 and 16 years. Observing that the Labour Code does not contain provisions which prescribe the number of working hours during which young persons may work, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to determine light work activities and to prescribe the number of hours during which light work may be undertaken by young persons of 14 years of age and above, in conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes the comments made by the GTUC that the regulation on the work of young persons under the Labour Code does not guarantee sufficient protection to minors in employment relations. The GTUC further added that it is important to restrict the working hours of young persons and to also include provisions for rest periods, breaks and holidays.

The Committee, while once again noting the Government's reference to section 18 of the Labour Code, observes that this provision only prohibits night work, which makes it possible for young workers to work from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. The Committee also observes that section 18, read with section 4(2) of the Labour Code which lays down the condition that work by children below 16 years of age shall not limit their right and ability to obtain elementary, compulsory and basic education, implies that children may work for about eight hours per day, excluding school hours and night work. In this context, the Committee draws the attention of the Government to Paragraph 13(1)(b) of the Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146), that in giving effect to Article 7(3) of the Convention, special attention should be given to the strict limitation of the hours spent at work in a day and in a week, and the prohibition of overtime, so as to allow enough time for education and training (including the time needed for homework related thereto) for rest during the day and for leisure activities.

With regard to the determination of light work activities, the Committee notes the Government's reference to section 4(3) of the Labour Code that the employment contracts of persons under 14 years of age may be concluded only in the sphere of arts, sports, cultural or for advertisement activities. The Committee observes, however, that the Labour Code allows children between 14 and 16 years of age to perform light work under the conditions specified under section 4(2). In this context, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to determine light work activities permitted for children between 14 and 16 years of age and to prescribe the number of hours during which and the conditions in which light work may be undertaken by such persons.

Article 8. Artistic performances. The Committee had previously noted information contained in the Government's report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC/C/41/Add.4, 1997, paragraph 13) that, under certain conditions, children under 15 years of age may be engaged in artistic activities, such as the circus or the cinema. It had also noted the Government's statement that the working conditions of young persons in all spheres, including artistic performances, are well protected under the Labour Code and therefore no separate method of issuance of permits for artistic performances has been set up. Noting the provisions under section 4(3) of the Labour Code which states that a labour contract can be concluded with a child below 14 years only for work related to sport, art, cultural and advertising activities, the Committee had requested the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that approval for young persons below 15 years of age to take part in artistic activities is granted in individual cases, and that permits so granted shall prescribe the number and hours during which, and the conditions in which, such employment or work is allowed. While noting the Government's reference to section 18 of the Labour Code which prohibits the hiring of minors for night work (10 p.m. to 6 a.m.) and section 14 of the Labour Code which restricts the working hours to 41 hours per week, including for young workers, the Committee observes that these provisions do not limit the number of working hours or set maximum working hours or conditions for employment of young persons who participate in artistic performances. Recalling that Article 8 of the Convention allows exceptions to the specified minimum age of admission to employment or work for such purposes as artistic performances only by permits granted by the competent authority in individual cases and that such permits so granted shall limit the number of hours during which, and prescribe the conditions in which, such employment or work is allowed, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children under 15 years of age who participate in artistic performances benefit from the protection laid down by this provision of the Convention.

Article 9(1) and Part III of the report form. Penalties and labour inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government's statement that the labour inspectorate stands abolished according to the Labour Code of 2006 and had requested the Government to indicate the effective manner in which the provisions giving effect to the Convention are enforced.

The Committee notes the comments made by the GTUC that with the abolition of the labour inspectorate, there exists no public authority to observe the implementation of labour legislation, including child labour provisions.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the police is responsible for the monitoring of infringements related to child labour. While noting that the Government's report contains information on the activities of the police with regard to crime prevention, child abuse and the protection of minors with unusual social behaviour, the Committee observes that these do not relate to infringements of the Labour Code related to child labour. The Committee observes with concern that there exists no public authority to monitor the implementation of the child labour related provisions in the country. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, by virtue of Article 9(1) of the Convention, all necessary measures shall be taken by the competent authority, including the provision of appropriate penalties, to ensure the effective enforcement of the provisions of the Convention. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective monitoring and implementation of the provisions giving effect to the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide information on the types of violations detected by the competent authority with regard to child labour, the number of persons prosecuted and the penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Greece

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1986)

The Committee notes the Government's report and the communication of the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) dated 29 July 2010.

Article 3(3) of the Convention. Authorization to carry out hazardous work from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 7(5) of Presidential Decree No. 62/1998 provides that certain exceptions regarding the authorization to carry out hazardous work of "adolescents" may be made. The Committee noted that section 2(c) of Presidential Decree No. 62/1998 seems to define an "adolescent" as a young person of at least 15 years of age who has ceased to attend compulsory school in accordance with the relevant provisions. The Committee reminded the Government that according to Article 3(3) of the Convention, national laws or regulations or the competent authority may authorize employment or work as from the age of 16 years on condition that the health, safety and morals of the young persons concerned are fully protected and that the young persons have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity.

The Committee notes with concern the Government's statement that no new legislative, administrative or other measures were taken to ensure the application of the Convention, and observes that Presidential Decree No. 62/1998 continues to permit the performance of hazardous work by persons as of the age of 15 under certain conditions, pursuant to sections 2(c) and 7(5). The Committee therefore strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring its national legislation into conformity with Article 3(3) of the Convention by providing in legislation that no person under 16 years of age may be authorized to perform hazardous work under any circumstance. In this regard, it urges the Government to take measures to ensure that section 2(c) of Presidential Decree No. 62/1998 is amended to define a "young person" as a person of at least 16 years of age.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. 1. Labour inspection. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement that, in 2008, the labour inspectorate recorded 15 complaints of illegal employment of under-aged persons, and 31 fines were imposed. The Government indicates that, in 2009, 17 fines were imposed for the illegal employment of under-aged persons. The Government further indicates that 2,775 young persons (between the ages of 15–18) were permitted to work in 2008, pursuant to Act No. 1837/1989, and 1,752 such young persons in 2009. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the manner in which the Convention is applied, including, for example, statistical data on the employment of children and young persons, extracts for the reports of inspection services and information on the number and nature of violations detected and penalties applied involving children and young persons.

2. Conditions of employment. The Committee notes that the Greek Parliament adopted, on 5 May 2010, Act No. 3845/2010 (FEK A'65/6-5-2010) on "Measures to implement a mechanism to support the Greek economy by the Member States of the Euro area and the International Monetary Fund". The Committee also notes the adoption of Act No. 3863 on the "New Social Security System and relevant provisions" (FEK A'115) which is aimed at implementing the time-bound commitments made in the two memorandums with regard to structural policies on strengthening labour markets.

The Committee notes the statement in the communication of the GSEE that Act No. 3845/2010 includes provisions that directly exclude (or serve as a legal authorization for the introduction of further exclusions) groups of workers, including young workers, from the scope of the National General Collective Agreement, and from the generally binding provisions on minimum wages and conditions of work. The GSEE further alleges that, pursuant to Act No. 3863/2010, minor workers of 15 to 18 years will be employed under contracts of "apprenticeship" with extended probationary periods and will receive 70 per cent of the minimum wage established in the national collective agreement. According to the GSEE, these young workers will be excluded from the protective provisions of labour legislation on permissible working hours, the start and end of the working day taking into account course schedules, obligatory periods of rest, obligatory paid annual leave, time off for attending school, studying and sick leave (pursuant to section 74(8) and (9) of Act No. 3863). The GSEE states that the deregulation of the existing minimum protective legislative framework, in addition to the absence of adequate guarantees and deficient inspection mechanisms, will have multiple harmful side effects for young workers.

In this regard, the Committee draws the Government's attention to Part IV, Paragraphs 12 and 13 of the Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146). Paragraph 12 states that measures should be taken to ensure that the conditions in which children and young persons under the age of 18 years are employed or work reach and are maintained at a satisfactory standard. Paragraph 13 states that in connection with paragraph 12, "special attention should be given to: (a) the provision of fair remuneration and its protection, bearing in mind the principle of equal pay for equal work ... and (e) coverage by social security schemes, including employment injury, medical care and sickness benefit schemes, whatever the conditions of employment or work may be". The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the conditions of work for young persons under the age of 18 are maintained at a satisfactory standard and that adequate safeguards are adopted to protect them from hazardous work taking into account Greece's ratification of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182). It also refers to its comments under the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98).

Haiti

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2007)

The Committee notes the Government's first report. With reference to its comments made under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), concerning the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of child domestic workers and inasmuch as Convention No. 182 deals with these worst forms of child labour, the Committee considers that they can be examined more specifically in the context of the present Convention.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. In its observations made under Convention No. 29, the Committee noted that the Act of 2003 concerning the prohibition and elimination of all forms of abuse, violence, ill-treatment or inhuman treatment against children [Act of 2003] cited, among the situations involving ill-treatment, inhuman treatment or exploitation, the sale and trafficking of children and also the offering, procuring, transfer, accommodation, reception or use of children for sexual exploitation, prostitution or pornography. It also noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 18 March 2003, expressed deep concern at the number of cases of trafficking of children from Haiti to the Dominican Republic (CRC/C/15/Add.202, paragraph 60). The Committee also noted the September 2006 report on the fact-finding mission of the General Secretariat of the Organization of American States (OAS) relating to the trafficking of persons in Haiti, this trend stemming from the deterioration of the socio-economic and political situation in recent years, which has prevented an effective response to the primary needs of the population and paved the way for an increase in all forms of human exploitation and illicit economic activities.

The Committee notes that, even though section 2(1) of the Act of 2003 prohibits abuse and violence with regard to children and also such exploitation as the sale and trafficking of children, this law does not establish penalties for violations of its provisions. However, it notes with interest the Government's information concerning the preparation and adoption of preliminary draft legislation concerning the trafficking of persons. It observes that, under this bill, the procuring, enlistment, transfer, transportation, accommodation or reception of a child for the purposes of exploitation are considered as trafficking and constitute a violation of the law. Under section 5, the term "child" means any person under 18 years of age. Moreover, section 13 of the bill states that the trafficking of children constitutes an aggravating circumstance liable to incur the maximum penalty established by the Act (section 14), namely nine years' imprisonment. However, the Committee observes that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), in its concluding observations of 10 February 2009, expressed concern at the fact that, despite the alarmingly high number of women victims of trafficking in Haiti, specific legislation criminalizing trafficking is still in draft form and has not yet been submitted to Parliament (CEDAW/C/HTI/CO/7, paragraph 26). The CEDAW also observed that this situation may result in insufficient investigations into cases of trafficking in women and girls and, consequently, lead to impunity for perpetrators.

The Committee also notes that, according to the report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, its causes and consequences (A/HRC/12/21/Add.1, paragraph 19, 4 September 2009) [report of the Special Rapporteur], a new trend has been observed in recent years with regard to the employment of children as domestic workers (designated by the Creole term restavek), namely the emergence of persons who recruit children from rural areas to work as domestic servants in urban families and outside the home in markets. The Special Rapporteur noted that this new trend has caused many stakeholders to describe the phenomenon as trafficking since parents are now handing their children over to strangers, whereas previously they entrusted the children to relatives. Moreover, the Committee observes that, according to a UNICEF press release of 15 October 2010, the number of child victims of trafficking has increased since the earthquake of January 2010, traffickers having taken advantage of the resulting chaos to prey on children who were lost or separated from their parents. The Committee therefore expresses the hope that the bill on the trafficking of children will be adopted as a matter of urgency and requests the Government to send information on all new developments in this respect. It also requests the Government to take immediate and effective steps to ensure thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of the perpetrators of the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age are carried out.

Clauses (a) and (d). Forced or compulsory labour and hazardous work. Child domestic labour. In its observations under Convention No. 29, the Committee has been commenting for many years on the situation of hundreds of thousands of restavek children who are often exploited under conditions that qualify as forced labour. It noted that in practice many of these children, some of them only 4 or 5 years old, are the victims of exploitation, are obliged to work long hours without pay, face all kinds of discrimination and bullying, receive poor lodging and food and are often subjected to physical, psychological and sexual abuse. In addition, very few of them attend school. The Committee also noted the repeal of Chapter IX of Title V of the Labour Code, relating to children in service, by the Act of 2003. It noted that the prohibition established by section 2(1) of the Act of 2003 covers the exploitation of children, including servitude, forced or compulsory labour, forced service and also work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children. It further noted that the repealed provisions include section 341 of the Labour Code, which allowed a child aged 12 or over to be entrusted to a family for employment in domestic work.

The Committee observes, however, that section 3 of the Act of 2003 states that a child may be entrusted to a host family in the context of a relationship of assistance and solidarity. It notes that the Special Rapporteur expressed deep concern in her report at the vagueness of the concept of assistance and solidarity and considered that the provisions of the Act of 2003 allow the practice of restavek to be perpetuated.

According to the report of the Special Rapporteur, the number of restavek children is between 150,000 and 500,000 (paragraph 17), and this represents about one in ten children in Haiti (paragraph 23). As a result of interviews with restavek children, the Special Rapporteur ascertained that all of them were given heavy workloads by their host families, which was often incompatible with their full physical and mental development (paragraph 25). Moreover, the Special Rapporteur was told that these children are often ill-treated and subjected to physical, psychological and sexual abuse (paragraph 35.) Representatives of the Government and civil society pointed out that cases of children being beaten and burned were routinely reported (paragraph 37). The Committee notes that, in view of these findings, the Special Rapporteur described the restavek system as a contemporary form of slavery. The Committee expresses its deep concern at the exploitation of the domestic work of children under 18 years of age performed under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions. It reminds the Government that, under Article 3(a) and (d) of the Convention, work done by, or the employment of, children under 18 years of age under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions belongs to the worst forms of child labour and, under the terms of Article 1, must be eliminated as a matter of urgency. The Committee requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure, in law and in practice, that children under 18 years of age may not be employed as domestic servants under conditions equivalent to slavery or under hazardous conditions, taking account of the special situation of girls. It requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons who subject children under 18 years of age to forced or hazardous domestic labour are carried out and to ensure the imposition in practice of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties.

Article 6. Programme of action for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a national protection plan was validated in 2006. It notes that the plan targets ten categories of vulnerable children who need protection, including child domestic workers and child victims of trafficking. The Government also indicates that, further to the ratification of the Convention, the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour (MAST) has considered it necessary to review the national protection plan and include thematic time-bound programmes of action in it. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the time-bound measures taken as part of the thematic programmes of action and the national protection plan for the child victims of trafficking and child domestic workers. It also requests the Government to send a copy of the national plan.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Sale and trafficking. The Committee notes that, according to the February 2009 UNODC Global Report on Trafficking in Persons, no system exists for providing the victims of trafficking with care or assistance, nor are there any reception centres for accommodating the victims of trafficking. It also notes that the CEDAW, in its concluding observations of 10 February 2009 (CEDAW/C/HTI/CO/7, paragraph 26), expressed concern at the lack of reception centres for women and girls who are the victims of trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to take effective measures to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from sale and trafficking and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken towards this end.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Restavek children. In its observations of 2009 made under Convention No. 29, the Committee noted the existence of programmes for the rehabilitation of restavek children established by the Social Welfare and Research Institute (IBESR) in cooperation with various international and non-governmental organizations. It noted that these programmes focus on reintegration in the family setting in order to promote the social and psychological development of the children concerned.

The Committee observes that the Government's report does not contain any information in this respect. It notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations, expressed deep concern at the situation of restavek children placed in domestic service and recommended that the Government take urgent steps to ensure that restavek children are provided with services offering physical and psychological rehabilitation and social reintegration (CRC/C/15/Add.202, 18 March 2003, paragraphs 56–57). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that restavek children are provided with services offering physical and psychological rehabilitation and social reintegration as part of rehabilitation programmes designed for them. It requests the Government to supply information on the specific results achieved in terms of the number of children who have benefited from these measures.

Article 8. International cooperation. Sale and trafficking of children. In its observations of 2009 made under Convention No. 29, the Committee noted that the MAST, in cooperation with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, is studying the problem of the exploitation of persons in sugar cane plantations in the Dominican Republic and the involvement of children in begging in the same country, and is due to conduct bilateral negotiations with a view to resolving the situation. It also observed that the CEDAW, in its concluding observations of 10 February 2009 (CEDAW/C/HTI/CO/7, paragraph 27), encouraged the Government "to conduct research on the root causes of trafficking and to enhance bilateral and multilateral cooperation with neighbouring countries, in particular the Dominican Republic, to prevent trafficking and bring perpetrators to justice".

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any information in this regard. It requests the Government to supply information on the progress of negotiations aimed at the adoption of a bilateral agreement with the Dominican Republic.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. 1. Self-employment. The Committee previously noted the indication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that child labour was widespread in Indonesia and that it mostly took place in informal, unregulated activities, such as street vending and in the agricultural and domestic sectors.

The Committee also noted that Act No. 13 of 2003 (Manpower Act) appears to exclude from its application children who are engaged in self-employment or working without a clear wage relationship. The Committee further noted that section 75 of the Manpower Act stipulates that the Government is under an obligation to make efforts to overcome problems concerning children who work outside of an employment relationship, and that these efforts should be specified with a government regulation. In this regard, the Committee noted the Government's indication that a draft government regulation, aiming to protect self-employed children pursuant to section 75 of the Manpower Act, had been elaborated.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the draft government regulation regarding children working outside the framework of an employment contract is still under discussion by the technical unit of the Ministry of Manpower. The Government indicates that it continues to identify issues on this subject, and is seeking further input from experts in this regard. The Committee also notes the information in the Indonesia Child Labour Survey Report released on 11 February 2010 (Indonesia Child Labour Survey (2009)) that 12.7 per cent of all working children between the ages of 5–12 are self-employed. The Survey also indicates that unpaid family workers constitute 82.5 per cent of all working children between the ages of 5–12, and 81.5 of all working children aged 13–14. The Committee observes that only 4.8 per cent of working children between the ages of 5–12 (and only 12.1 per cent of children aged 13–14) were working as "employees", and therefore within the scope of application of the Manpower Act. The Committee therefore expresses its concern that the vast majority of children working under the minimum age do not benefit from the protection of the Manpower Act. Observing that the Manpower Act (obligating the Government, pursuant to section 75, to address the issue of children working outside of an employment relationship) has been in force since 2003, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the completion and adoption of a government regulation regarding children working outside of an employment relationship, in the very near future. It requests the Government to provide a copy of this government regulation as soon as it has been adopted.

2. Domestic work. The Committee previously noted the ITUC's allegation in its communication of 6 September 2005 that domestic workers as young as 12 years routinely work 14–18 hours a day, seven days a week, without a day off. The ITUC indicated that these girls typically entered domestic work between the ages of 12–15, with some beginning even earlier, despite the established minimum age of 15. The ITUC further stated that it appeared that the Government had failed to take meaningful action to protect domestic workers – who numbered at a minimum 688,000 children – from exploitation and abuse. In this regard, the ITUC indicated that national labour laws exclude domestic workers from the minimum protections afforded to workers in the formal sector and that laws enacted to protect children from labour exploitation did not address child domestic labour. The Committee also noted the Government's indication that a draft Act for the Protection of Domestic Workers had been formulated, but had yet to be elaborated. The Committee urged the Government to take measures to ensure that children under 15 do not perform domestic work.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that it has increased its efforts to prevent children under 15 from working as domestic workers. The Government indicates that the Ministry of Women's Empowerment has created guidelines to prevent children under 15 from engaging in domestic work and that these guidelines have been disseminated to various employers, in collaboration with NGOs. The Government also indicates that it has worked with heads of local government to form a joint commitment to prevent children under 15 from engaging in domestic work. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that a workshop on withdrawing child domestic workers was organized for labour inspectors in several areas, including Bakasi, Tangerang and South Tangerang. In addition, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the draft Act for the Protection of Domestic Workers shall be discussed in the Indonesian House of Representatives. In this regard, the Committee notes the information in a report entitled "Recognizing domestic work as work", published by the ILO Country Office in Jakarta in April 2010 (ILO Jakarta report) that this draft Act contains various provisions for the protection of domestic workers. The ILO Jakarta report also indicates that approximately 25 per cent of domestic workers in Indonesia are under the age of 15, but that these children are expected to perform the same amount of work as adult domestic workers. The ILO Jakarta report further indicates that 81 per cent of domestic workers work 11 hours or more a day, and quotes a study where 93 per cent of domestic worker respondents had experienced physical violence at work. The Committee once again expresses its deep concern at the number and situation of children working as domestic workers, and urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Act for the Protection of Domestic Workers is adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide a copy of this legislation, once adopted.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee previously noted that section 69(1) of the Manpower Act allows the employment of children between 13–15 years of age for light work as long as the job does not stunt or disrupt their physical, mental and social development. Section 69(2) of the Manpower Act further provides that entrepreneurs who employ children in light work may not require them to work longer than three hours a day, may only engage children during the day without disturbing their schooling and must meet their occupational safety and health requirements.

The Committee notes the information in Indonesia Child Labour Survey (2009) that approximately 52 per cent of working children aged 13–14 years engaged in work that did not constitute light work. This amounts to approximately 321,200 children of light work age performing non-light work activities. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on any measures, taken or envisaged, to strengthen the enforcement of section 69(2) of the Manpower Act (prescribing the conditions for light work), to ensure that children aged 13–14 are only engaged in light work activities.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that there appeared to be no provisions in the Manpower Act prescribing that a register be kept and made available by the employer. It noted the Government's information that the labour inspectorate ensures that employers keep registers of children employed for developing their talents and interests. The Committee requested the Government to provide a copy of the relevant forms.

The Committee notes that, pursuant to section 6 of Decision No. Kep-115/Men/VII/2004, an entrepreneur who employs children for developing their talents and interests must submit the prescribed report form, and notes the copy of the report form submitted with the Government's report. However, the Committee observes that Decision No. Kep-115/Men/VII/2004 appears to regulate solely the participation of children in artistic activities, such as art shows and television broadcasts, and does not apply to all working children. The Committee also notes the copy of Regulation No. 02/MEN/1981 included in the Government's report, which provides guidelines for a company report, and the attached company report form. However, the Committee observes that this company report form does not appear to comply with the requirements of an employer's register as set forth in Article 9(3) of the Convention. While Part 8 of the company report form requires employers to indicate the number of young persons employed, it does not require them to indicate the names or ages of these young workers. Moreover, the Committee notes that Act No. 7 of 1981 (pursuant to which Regulation No. 02/MEN/1981 was promulgated), specifies that this company report form must only be submitted annually, or when an enterprise is established, moved or liquidated. In this regard, the Committee notes that this company report does not appear to be kept by the employer and made available to labour inspectors. Observing that neither the report forms provided for under Decision No. Kep-115/Men/VII/2004 nor under Regulation No. 02/MEN/1981 meet the requirements set forth in Article 9(3) of the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that every employer, regardless of the type of work performed, keeps a register indicating the name and age or date of birth of persons whom he/she employs who are less than 18 years of age, in the very near future.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the ILO-IPEC project entitled "Enhancing national capacity in child labour data collection, analysis and dissemination through technical assistance to surveys, research and training" which aimed to conduct a nationwide child labour survey and promote more effective national responses to child labourers and at-risk children.

The Committee notes the information in the Indonesia Child Labour Survey (2009) that there are approximately 1.76 million children engaged in prohibited child labour in Indonesia (defined as working children between the ages of 5–12, children aged 13–14 engaged in non-light work activities, and children between 15–18 years engaged in hazardous work). This represents 43.3 per cent of all working persons under 18. Most working children (57 per cent of working children aged 5–17) were employed in agriculture, including forestry, hunting and fishery. The Indonesia Child Labour Survey (2009) further indicates that while most working children still attended school, 20.7 per cent of persons under the age of 18 worked for more than 40 hours a week. The Committee expresses its concern at the high number of children working under the minimum age, and requests the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that, in practice, children under the minimum age of 15 are not engaged in child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures taken, in addition to information on the manner in which the Convention is applied, including extracts from the reports of inspection services, information on the number and nature of contraventions reported and penalties applied. To the extent possible, statistics should be disaggregated by gender.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (d). Hazardous work. Child domestic workers. The Committee previously noted the allegations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that child domestic workers in Indonesia often suffered some form of sexual, physical or psychological abuse. The Committee noted that the second stage of the National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (NAP on WFCL) aimed to prevent 5,000 children, and withdraw 2,000 children, from child domestic labour. The Committee also noted the Government's statement that a draft Act on Domestic Workers' Protection had been formulated, but that the elaboration of the final draft would take time. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Act for the Protection of Domestic Workers was adopted.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that it is making serious efforts to provide physical, psychological, economic and legal protection to domestic workers. The Government indicates that the Ministry of Women's Empowerment has created guidelines regarding the risk to child domestic workers and provides skills training to prevent children from entering domestic work. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that through phase II of the ILO-IPEC project entitled "Support to the Indonesian National Action Plan and the Development of the Time-bound Programme for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour", 1,213 children have been prevented from becoming engaged in child domestic work, and rehabilitation and reintegration services have been provided to 127 former child domestic workers. The Government's report indicates that ILO-IPEC is making efforts to raise awareness among employers and domestic workers about regulations related to the protection of domestic workers. Nonetheless, the Committee notes the information in the ILO-IPEC technical progress report for phase II of the Time-bound Programme (TBP) of 15 August 2010 (ILO-IPEC TPR) that the action programmes working with child domestic workers continuously face difficulties in accessing households and this has impacted the achievement of withdrawing child domestics. The Committee further notes the information in the Government's report that the draft Act for the Protection of Domestic Workers shall be discussed in the Indonesian House of Representatives. In this regard, the Committee notes the information in a report entitled “Recognizing domestic work as work”, published by the ILO Country Office in Jakarta in April 2010 (ILO Jakarta report) that this draft Act contains various provisions for the protection of domestic workers.

However, the Committee notes the information in the ILO Jakarta report that approximately 35 per cent of domestic workers are under the age of 18. This report also indicates that 81 per cent of domestic workers work 11 hours or more a day, and being invisible and hidden from public scrutiny, these workers are prone to becoming victims of exploitation and abuse. The ILO Jakarta report further quotes a study indicating that 68 per cent of domestic worker respondents indicated that they had experienced mental abuse, 93 per cent had experienced physical violence, and 42 per cent had experienced some form of sexual harassment or abuse while at work. Therefore, while taking due note of the steps taken by the Government to combat child domestic work and the results achieved under the TBP, the Committee expresses its serious concern at the exploitation which continues to be experienced by child domestic workers. It reminds the Government that, pursuant to Article 3(d) of the Convention, work or employment in conditions that are hazardous are among the worst forms of child labour and are therefore to be eliminated as a matter of urgency, in accordance with Article 1. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the draft Act for the Protection of Domestic Workers is adopted as a matter of urgency. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons who employ children under 18 years of age in hazardous domestic work are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are applied in practice. It further requests the Government to continue to take measures to address the situation of child domestic workers, and to provide information on the results achieved, particularly in terms of the prevention and withdrawal of children from domestic labour.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Police and immigration officers. The Committee previously noted that law enforcement against traffickers had increased in 2006 and that the Government had taken measures to enhance the capacities of the police and immigration officers. The Government also indicated that in 2007, 123 trafficking cases were filed involving 71 children. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that efforts have been made to strengthen the role of the police in combating the trafficking of children, including the establishment of a Women and Children’s Service Unit within the Republic of Indonesia National Police. The Committee also notes the information in the report on trafficking in persons in Indonesia of 14 June 2010, available on the website of the Office of the High Commissioner of Refugees (www.unhcr.org) (Trafficking report) that 139 suspected trafficking offenders were prosecuted in 2009, an increase from 129 in 2008. The Committee further notes the information from the International Organization for Migration (IOM) that it has collaborated with the Government with a view to building the capacity of law enforcement bodies, including through workshops, curriculum development for police schools and the 2009 revision of the Guidelines on Law Enforcement and Victim Protection (Guidelines). The IOM indicates that jointly with the Government, awareness-raising initiatives have reached 5,000 law enforcement officers, and that 10,000 copies of the Guidelines have been distributed.

The Committee further notes the information from the IOM that there has been a great need to sensitize criminal justice agencies across Indonesia with regard to the content of the Anti-Trafficking Law of 2007. In this regard, the Trafficking report indicates that many police and prosecutors remain unfamiliar with the anti-trafficking legislation, and are reluctant or unsure of how to effectively use this legislation to punish traffickers. The Trafficking report indicates that prosecutors and judges still frequently use other laws to prosecute traffickers and that only 56 per cent of trafficking-related cases were prosecuted using the Anti-Trafficking Law. Moreover, the Trafficking report indicates that corruption continues to hinder anti-trafficking efforts, as members of the security forces continue to be involved in trafficking, and that it is a widespread practice for traffickers to pay police and military officials “protection money”. The Trafficking report further contains reports indicating that some Ministry of Manpower officials provided licences to international labour recruiting agencies involved in human trafficking, despite the officials’ knowledge of the agencies’ involvement, and that some local officials facilitated trafficking by producing national identity cards for children containing false information so that these children could be recruited as adults. The Committee expresses its concern at allegations of complicity and cooperation of law enforcement officials and other government officials with human traffickers. The Committee therefore urges the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that perpetrators of human trafficking, and complicit government officials, are investigated and prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out, including through increasing the awareness among prosecutors and judges of the Anti-Trafficking Law of 2007. It further requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect, and the results achieved, particularly the number of persons investigated, convicted and sentenced for cases of trafficking involving victims under the age of 18.

Article 6. Programmes of action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour. Trafficking. The Committee previously noted that the TBP contained measures to combat child trafficking for sexual and labour exploitation, and that the second stage of the NAP on WFCL (2006–10) aimed to prevent 5,000 children from being trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation and withdraw 300 children. It requested information on the results achieved through these initiatives.

The Committee notes the information in the Government’s report that phase II of the TBP (to support the second stage of the NAP on WFCL) had, between October 2007 and February 2010 succeeded in preventing 528 vulnerable children from becoming victims of trafficking and providing rehabilitation and reintegration services to nine child victims of trafficking. The ILO–IPEC TPR indicates that, as of August 2010, 816 children had been prevented from becoming engaged in trafficking, and 53 had been withdrawn. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that the TBP has contributed to strengthening the network of service providers for trafficking victims. Social workers at the social protection home for children (homes operated by the Ministry of Social Affairs which serve as a shelter for trafficking victims) received training to better equip them to reunite and reintegrate child victims of trafficking with their families. Between 2004 and 2009, the Ministry of Social Affairs recorded 251 victims who received rehabilitation services from the social protection home for children in Jakarta.

The Committee further notes information in a UNICEF report entitled “Children in Indonesia: Child trafficking” of July 2010 (UNICEF report) that the Government has passed the Decree on the National Plan of Action on the Eradication of Trafficking in Persons and Sexual Exploitation of Children 2009–14. The Plan guides governmental ministries and provincial departments, through task forces, to implement programmes to eradicate trafficking in persons and sexual exploitation of children. Nonetheless, the Committee notes the statement in the Trafficking report that efforts to protect victims of trafficking remained uneven and inadequate in comparison with the scope of the country’s trafficking problem. The Committee therefore urges the Government to continue to take measures, within the framework of both the TBP and the National Plan of Action on the Eradication of Trafficking in Persons and Sexual Exploitation of Children 2009–14, to prevent the trafficking of persons under 18, in addition to providing for their removal, rehabilitation and social reintegration. It requests the Government to provide information on the concrete steps taken and the results achieved, particularly the number of children reached through these initiatives.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and assisting the removal of children from these worst forms. 1. Commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee previously noted the implementation of an action programme, within phase I of the TBP to remove child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. It also noted that phase II of the TBP would continue to provide services to girls withdrawn from such situations, and attempt to reach out to more child victims of prostitution. However, the Committee noted that there was an estimated 5,100 sex workers under 18 years of age operating in Jakarta alone.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that it works with ILO–IPEC and the Indonesian Child Welfare Foundation (YKAI) to combat commercial sexual exploitation. The Government indicates that during phase I of the TBP, 177 children were withdrawn from commercial sexual exploitation and an additional 5,210 children were prevented from engaging in this worst form of child labour. However, the Committee notes the information in the ILO–IPEC TPR of August 2010 that phase II of the TBP has not yet recorded the removal of any children from commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee further notes the information in the UNICEF report regarding the adoption of the Decree on the National Plan of Action on the Eradication of Trafficking in Persons and Sexual Exploitation of Children 2009–14, in addition to the information in the ILO–IPEC TPR of August 2010 that the Minister of Culture and Tourism adopted Regulation No. PM.30/HK.201/MKP/2010 on Guidelines on the Prevention of Sexual Exploitation of Children in Tourism, in 2010. The Ministry of Tourism will be working with the ILO Office in Jakarta on concrete activities to implement this regulation.

In this regard, the Committee notes the statement in the Trafficking report that child sex tourism is prevalent in most urban areas and tourist destinations, such as Bali and Riau Island. The Committee also notes the information in the UNICEF report that approximately 30 per cent of the women in prostitution in Indonesia are below the age of 18, with 40,000–70,000 Indonesian children being victims of sexual exploitation. The Committee expresses its serious concern at the significant number of children who are victims of commercial sexual exploitation, including child sex tourism, and accordingly urges the Government to redouble its efforts to protect children under 18 years from this worst form of child labour. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of children who have been removed from commercial sexual exploitation and rehabilitated through the implementation of the TBP, in addition to those reached through the National Plan of Action on the Eradication of Trafficking in Persons and Sexual Exploitation of Children 2009–14. It further requests the Government to pursue its efforts to implement Regulation No. PM.30/HK.201/MKP/2010 on Guidelines on the Prevention of Sexual Exploitation of Children in Tourism, and to provide information on the impact of measures taken.

2. Children engaged in the sale, production and trafficking of drugs. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that 15,000 children were involved in the sale, production and trafficking of drugs in Jakarta in 2003. The Committee noted the removal and prevention of children from this worst form through the TBP, but also noted reports that as many as 20 per cent of drug users were involved in the sale, production or trafficking of drugs, suggesting that between 100,000 and 240,000 young persons might still be involved in the drug trade.

The Committee notes the information in the Government’s report that in the first six months of 2010 there were 5,603 children (mostly boys and street children), undergoing training in penitentiaries, 90 per cent of whom were drug users and/or drug dealers. The Government indicates that these children obtain health care, psychosocial and spiritual education. The Committee also notes that the Ministry of Social Affairs has engaged in cooperation with various governmental agencies to provide services and rehabilitation to children found to be in violation of the law. The Government further indicates that the Ministry of Women’s Empowerment and Children Protection has established an Memorandum of Understanding with various judicial institutions to encourage the use of a restorative justice approach with regard to children in conflict with the law, including those under 18 found to be guilty of selling, producing or trafficking drugs. The Committee also notes the information in the ILO–IPEC final technical progress report for phase I of the TBP of March 2008 (ILO–IPEC FTFR 2008) that 517 children were withdrawn from work involving drugs, and a total of 8,298 children were reached through initiatives to prevent such involvement. The ILO–IPEC FTFR 2008 also indicates that the Jakarta Provincial Narcotics Board began to use community-based approaches in its regular prevention and treatment programmes for children and families to respond to the problems of child drug trafficking and drug abuse. However, the Committee notes the information in the “Report on the implementation of the NAP on WFCL stage I (2002–07) and the NAP on WFCL stage II (2008–12)” (Report on the NAP on WFCL stages I and II) (submitted with the Government’s report) that there has not been any significant progress made with regard to the prosecution of persons employing children in several of the worst forms of child labour, including drug trafficking, and that some cases were not taken to court. The Committee expresses its concern at the lack of progress in prosecuting perpetrators of this worst form of child labour, and accordingly urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect children under 18 years from becoming engaged in the sale, production and trafficking of drugs. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of perpetrators of this worst form of child labour are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the impact of the measures taken, including the number of investigations, prosecutions and sanctions imposed.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Children on fishing platforms. The Committee previously noted that more than 7,000 children were estimated to be engaged in deep-sea fishing in North Sumatra. It also noted several ongoing initiatives being implemented within the TBP, to prevent and remove children from being engaged in this hazardous form of work. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the results achieved through these initiatives.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that, at the end of phase I of the TBP, 457 children had been withdrawn from the offshore fishing sector, and an additional 6,653 children had been prevented from becoming engaged in this sector. The Government also indicates that the North Sumatra Government made efforts to monitor this sector and disseminated information about the dangers of working on fishing platforms through the provincial action committee on child labour. The Government indicates that child labour in this sector shall naturally decline due to the physical conditions of fishing platforms, and the lack of new fishing platform developments. However, the Committee notes that the Report on the NAP on WFCL stages I and II identifies offshore fishing platforms as an area where investigations and prosecutions for persons who employ children in the worst forms of child labour need to be more effective. This report indicates that many cases of violations were closed just after the investigations and never brought to court because of the inadequate capacity of law enforcers. It indicates that an owner of fishing platforms in North Sumatra was investigated for using children, but that this case was not brought to court for trial. The Committee reminds the Government that, pursuant to Article 7(1) of the Convention, ratifying countries are required to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including through the application of appropriate sanctions. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are applied in practice to persons who engage children in hazardous work on fishing platforms. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures taken in this regard, including the number of prosecutions, convictions and sanctions applied to persons who engage children in work on deep-sea fishing platforms.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Jamaica

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that the sale and trafficking of girls below 18 years of age is effectively prohibited.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that sections 4(1) and 4(3) of the Trafficking in Persons (Prevention, Suppression and Punishment) Act, 2007, prohibits both internal and inter-state trafficking of children, and that section 2 defines a child as any person under 18 years of age.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. The Committee previously observed that the provisions in the Offences Against Persons Act relating to the prohibition of procuring or offering a child for prostitution applied only to women and girls. However, the Committee noted that discussions and consultations were being held for the drafting of a Sexual Offences Act, to address all crimes of a sexual nature.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement in its report to the United Nations Human Rights Committee of 21 October 2009 that Parliament took the decision to enact a new act (the Sexual Offences Act) rather than amending the Offences Against Persons Act (CCPR/C/JAM/3, paragraph 23). The Committee also notes the Government’s indication in its report that the Sexual Offences Act, which was adopted on 20 October 2009, addresses sexual offences against children. The Committee further notes that section 18 of the Sexual Offences Act prohibits procuring or attempting to procure a child for the purpose of sexual intercourse (section 18(a)) and prohibits procuring any person, male or female, to become a prostitute (section 18(b)). Pursuant to section 2, a child is defined as any person under 18 years of age. Section 23(1)(a) of the Sexual Offences Act further prohibits living off the proceeds of prostitution, which, pursuant to section 23(1)(i) includes exercising control, direction or influence over the movements of a prostitute in such a manner as to show that the person is aiding, abetting or compelling prostitution. The Committee observes that the Sexual Offences Act does not appear to prohibit the use of a person under the age of 18 for the purpose of prostitution. It therefore requests the Government to provide information on the legislative provisions which prohibit the use of a child for the purpose of prostitution. If no such provisions exist, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of such a prohibition in the near future.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering a child for illicit activities, particularly the production and trafficking of drugs. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Dangerous Drugs Act of 1942, together with its amendment of 1994, prohibits and punishes various drug-related behaviour such as importing, exporting, cultivating, manufacturing, selling, using, dealing, transporting and possessing various types of drugs. However, the Committee observed that the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs, did not appear to be specifically prohibited by the relevant Jamaican legislation. It requested the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

The Committee notes that the draft list of hazardous work prohibited for children (submitted with the Government's report) prohibits involving children in illicit activities and the drug industry, as well as more specific provisions prohibiting children from cultivating ganja and guarding ganja fields. The Committee also notes the information in a report on the worst forms of child labour in Jamaica of 10 September 2009, available on the website of the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org) (WFCL Report), that children are used as drug couriers and for selling drugs. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the provisions (in the list of hazardous work prohibited for children) prohibiting the involvement of children in illicit activities and the drug industry, in the near future.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that a tripartite workshop was held to identify hazardous types of work, and that a list of types of hazardous work would be present in the new Occupational Health and Safety Act (OHS Act).

The Committee notes that the draft list of types of hazardous work prohibited for children, included in the Government's report contains 45 types of prohibited work. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that if the draft list has not been reviewed before the enactment of the OHS Act, it will be included in the regulations of the OHS Act. The Committee observes that the Government has been compiling this list since 2006, and reminds the Government that, in accordance with Article 1 of the Convention, it is under the obligation to take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. It therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures, as a matter of urgency, to ensure that this draft list of types of hazardous work prohibited for children is reviewed and adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide a final copy of the list, once it has been adopted.

Articles 5 and 7(1). Monitoring mechanisms and penalties. Law enforcement agencies. The Committee previously noted the establishment of a Child Labour Unit within the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (MoLSS), and noted that this unit was aiding in the development of a referral system for children. The Committee also noted that over 150 officers of the Jamaica Constabulary Force (JCF) received training from the Child Development Agency (CDA) on the provisions of the Child Care and Protection Act.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Child Labour Unit continues to collaborate with the JCF, particularly the Trafficking in Persons Unit, where the Child Labour Unit assists in referring victims of trafficking to services offered by the MoLSS. Although this cooperation currently occurs on an ad hoc basis, it is envisioned that a more formal system will be put in place following a series of training sessions organized by the JCF's Trafficking in Persons Unit, the National Task Force on Trafficking in Persons and the Ministry of National Security. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that an "Assessment of the Implementation and Enforcement Machinery to Combat Child Labour in Jamaica" was carried out within the framework of the ILO-IPEC "Tackling Child Labour through Education" Project (TACKLE Project). The Government states that the assessment indicated that much more was needed to be done on the ground to facilitate greater cooperation between agencies involved in aspects of child labour regulation.

In this regard, the Committee notes the statement in a report on trafficking in persons in Jamaica of 14 June 2010 (available on the website of the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org)) (Trafficking Report) that the Government has made no discernible progress in prosecuting trafficking offenders during the past year, and that more vigorous investigations of trafficking offences was necessary. The Trafficking Report also indicates that there have been reports of trafficking complicity by police. The Committee expresses its concern at allegations of complicity of law enforcement officials with human traffickers. The Committee therefore urges the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that perpetrators of human trafficking, and complicit government officials, are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out, including by strengthening the coordination between the relevant law enforcement agencies. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect, and the results achieved, particularly the number of persons investigated, convicted and sentenced for cases of trafficking involving victims under the age of 18.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child victims of trafficking and prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted an ILO-IPEC rapid assessment study on child prostitution of November 2001 which indicated that, in all seven locations surveyed, children between the ages of 10 and 18 years were exposed to prostitution, pornographic performances and other activities that adversely affected their health, safety and morals. The study indicated that 70 per cent of children engaged in such activities were girls, some as young as 10 years of age. The study further indicated that one of the causes of prostitution, in addition to poverty and failure of the education system, was the weak monitoring of existing laws.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report indicating that the CDA reported 361 cases of sexual abuse, but that medical assistance and counselling were usually provided to these victims. Moreover, while the matter was under investigation, the victims were allowed to conditionally return to school or were provided with state care. The Committee also notes the information in the Government's report that it is finalizing the National Child Diversion Policy, which emanates from the National Plan of Action for Child Justice. The fourth strategic objective of the National Child Diversion Policy includes the rehabilitation and reintegration of child victims. The Government also indicates that a shelter for victims has been refurbished and is to become operational shortly. In this regard, the Committee further notes the information in the Trafficking Report that the Government began taking measures for the establishment of three shelters for female trafficking victims, the first of which was completed in March 2010. The Trafficking Report also indicates that the Government took measures to return child victims of trafficking to families, or referred them to foster homes, and operated facilities that housed child trafficking victims.

Nonetheless, the Committee notes the indication in the Trafficking Report that Jamaica is a source, transit, and destination country for child victims of trafficking, specifically for the purposes of forced prostitution, and that Jamaican women and girls have been subjected to forced prostitution in other countries such as Canada, United States, United Kingdom, Bahamas, and other Caribbean destinations. The Trafficking Report also indicates that child-sex tourism continues to be a problem in Jamaica's resort areas. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the removal of victims of commercial sexual exploitation, including victims of child sex tourism, from this worst form of child labour. It also requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the provision of appropriate services, including legal, psychological and medical services, to child victims of trafficking, to facilitate their rehabilitation and social reintegration and to provide information on the number of children reached through these initiatives.

Part III of the report form. Court decisions. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that a number of cases pertaining to the Convention were pending and that a copy of these decisions would be transmitted promptly. It also noted that four persons had been charged under the Trafficking in Persons Act, including the case of a 14 year old girl who was pimped by two male traffickers.

The Committee observes that no court cases have been submitted with the Government's report. However, it notes the information in the Government's report that, in December 2009, two persons were successfully convicted under the Trafficking in Persons Act for offering a 14 year old girl for prostitution. The Committee further notes the information in the Trafficking Report that Jamaican authorities initiated the prosecution for carnal abuse of a foreign visitor to Jamaica who allegedly engaged in child-sex tourism. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the prosecutions and convictions related to breaches of national legal provisions relevant to the application of the Convention. It also requests the Government to supply a copy of any court decision issued in this regard.

Part V of the report form. Practical application of the Convention. Trafficking of children and child prostitution. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report concerning the number of reports of child abuse and neglect received by the Office of the Children's Registry, but observes that this data is not disaggregated to indicate the number of these cases which relate to the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee notes the indication in the WFCL Report that commercial sexual exploitation of children is a problem in Jamaica, especially in tourist areas. The Committee notes the indication in the Trafficking Report that the trafficking of children continues to be a significant problem, specifically for the purpose of forced prostitution, and that victims often come from Jamaica's poverty stricken garrison communities. This report indicates that the majority of trafficking victims identified were poor Jamaican women and girls, though boys are increasingly subject to forced prostitution in urban and tourist areas. In this regard, the Committee expresses its deep concern at the situation of persons under the age of 18 who are victims of trafficking and prostitution, and accordingly urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure in practice the protection of children from these worst forms of child labour. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data is available on the worst forms of child labour, particularly on the sale and trafficking of children and child prostitution.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, while section 73 of the Labour Code of 1996 prohibits the employment of minors under 16 years of age, this prohibition did not include persons who perform work outside the framework of an employment contract. It also observed that, by virtue of its section 3, the Labour Code did not apply to members of the family of the employer working in his/her enterprise without remuneration, domestic workers, gardeners, cooks and those of a similar capacity, in addition to agricultural workers, excluding those who shall be covered by the Labour Code pursuant to a decision taken by the Council of Ministers. However, the Committee noted the Government's indication that draft amendments to the Labour Code, providing that workers in the domestic and agricultural sectors shall be governed by the provisions of the Labour Code, had been referred to the Council of Ministers.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that section 3 of the Labour Code was amended by virtue of Act No. 48 of 2008 (published in the Official Gazette No. 4924 of 17 August 2008). The Committee notes with interest that section 3 of Act No. 48 of 2008 repeals and replaces section 3 of the Labour Code, broadening the scope of the Code's application (pursuant to section 3(a)) to cover "all workers", including certain previously excluded groups such as workers in family enterprises and those working outside the framework of an employment contract. Nonetheless, section 3(b) of the Labour Code (as amended in 2008) states that agricultural workers, domestic workers, cooks and gardeners will be governed by regulations issued on this subject, provided that these regulations address labour contracts, hours of work, rest periods, inspection and any other matters related to their employment. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that Regulation No. 90 of 2009, (promulgated in the Official Gazette No. 4989 of 1 October 2009) regulates the work of domestic workers and cooks. However, the Committee observes that the Government does not indicate if the regulations issued pursuant to section 3(b) of the Labour Code (as amended in 2008) will prescribe a minimum age for those working in the agricultural and domestic sectors, or if the new section 3(a) of the Labour Code signifies that the general minimum age prescribed in the Labour Code now applies to this group of workers. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate whether the minimum age specified in the Labour Code (as amended in 2008) applies to agricultural workers, domestic workers, cooks and gardeners. If not, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the regulations adopted pursuant to section 3(b) of the Labour Code (as amended in 2008) prescribe the minimum age of 16 for the admission to employment or work for these categories. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of Regulation No. 90 of 2009 governing domestic workers, in addition to any regulations adopted governing agricultural workers.

Article 9(1) and Part III of the report form. Penalties and labour inspection. The Committee previously noted that section 77 of the Labour Code provides for penalties between 100 and 500 dinars (JOD) for violations of the Code's provisions, including section 73 on the minimum age for employment or work. However, the Committee noted the information in a 2006 ILO-IPEC rapid assessment study that official records suggested a very weak enforcement of the provisions of the Labour Code related to the illegal employment of children.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that, pursuant to Act No. 48 of 2008, the minimum penalty for employing a young person was increased. Section 7 of Act No. 48 of 2008 amends section 77 of the Labour Code to raise the minimum fine for violations of its provisions from JOD100 (approximately US$140) to JOD300 (approximately US$422), and that courts may not reduce the fine below this minimum in any circumstance. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the child labour unit was provided with two more labour inspectors specializing in occupational safety and health and legal issues. The Government also indicates that the number of inspection visits have been increased through field visits made by inspectors to verify compliance with the Labour Code by private sector undertakings, particularly with respect to child labour. The Government further indicates that the necessary legal proceedings were initiated following these inspections. The Committee further notes the information in the Government's report that labour inspectors will be trained on programmes related to the reduction of child labour. In addition, the Committee notes the information in the report on the worst forms of child labour in Jordan of 10 September 2009 (available on the website of the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org)) (WFCL report) that the Labour inspectorate set a target to remove 3,000 children from the labour market in 2008 as part of its long-term strategy to remove 38,000 children from work.

However, the Committee notes the statement in the report of the International Trade Union Confederation, for the World Trade Organization General Council, on the trade policies of Jordan of 10 and 12 November 2008, entitled "Internationally recognized core labour standards in Jordan" (ITUC report) that, with regard to child labour, enforcement and penalties remain insufficient. Moreover, the Committee notes the statement in the WFCL report that inspectors often handle child labour cases informally rather than issuing citations and fines. In this regard, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report, submitted under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), that between 1 July 2009 and 30 June 2010, 1,459 working children were detected through labour inspections. However, the Government indicates that in only 81 of these cases were measures taken pursuant to section 77 of the Labour Code. The Government indicates that warnings were issued in 147 cases and that, in the remaining 1,092 cases, advice and guidance was given. While noting that several cases of violations of child employment were detected by the labour inspectorate, the Committee observes with concern that persons who employ children in breach of the provisions giving effect to the Convention are not prosecuted as a rule. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, by virtue of Article 9(1), of the Convention, all necessary measures shall be taken by the competent authority, including the provision of appropriate penalties, to ensure the effective enforcement of the provisions of the Convention, and accordingly requests the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that persons found to be in breach of the provisions giving effect to the Convention are prosecuted and that adequate penalties are imposed. In this regard, it requests the Government to continue to provide information on the types of violations detected by the labour inspectorate, the number of persons prosecuted and the penalties imposed. Lastly, it encourages the Government to pursue its efforts, through the labour inspectorate, to remove children from the labour market, and to provide information on the number of children removed through this initiative.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the indication in the Committee of the Rights of the Child's concluding observations of 29 September 2006 that "the employment of children has steadily grown in recent years, especially in agriculture" (CRC/C/JOR/CO/3, paragraph 88). The Committee also noted a 2006 rapid assessment survey on child labour (published by the University of Jordan, in collaboration with ILO-IPEC) which indicated that the average age of working children is 15 years. The study also indicated that the working hours of children appeared to be very long (90 per cent of working children work eight to 12 hours a day), and that child workers must often carry heavy objects and can be exposed to dangerous chemicals, heavy shaking or noise. The Committee urged the Government to take measures to improve the situation.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Ministry of Labour is engaged in awareness-raising measures such as newsletters and lectures at schools on the risk of working at an early age. The Government also indicates that 16 liaison officers (within the labour inspectorate) were certified, for the purpose of carrying out activities related to the rehabilitation of children who had dropped out of school to enter the labour market. The Committee also notes the Government's statement (in its report submitted under Convention No. 182) that a national framework to reduce child labour is currently being prepared by the National Council for Family Affairs.

However, the Committee notes the information in a study entitled "Working Children in the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan", issued by the Jordanian Department of Statistics in collaboration with ILO-IPEC in March 2009, which indicates that there are approximately 29,225 child labourers in Jordan (defined as children under the minimum age for light work, children under 16 years not performing light work, and children under 18 engaged in hazardous work). The study indicates that 88.1 per cent of children who are engaged in some form of economic activity are performing work not permitted under the Convention, mostly due to the number of hours during which, and the conditions in which, these children work. The Committee also notes the study's indication that children put in substantial hours of work and that the average work week among all children is 38.6 hours per week. Most of these children combine school work with economic activities. However, the study indicates that children in employment start school later and drop out earlier than non-working children. The Committee further notes the statement in the ITUC report that child labour is prevalent in Jordan and that, despite efforts to reduce child labour including work with the ILO, the number of child workers has increased (pages 9–10). The Committee therefore expresses its concern at reports of the growing number of children working under the minimum age, as well as in hazardous conditions, in Jordan, and requests the Government to redouble its efforts, within the forthcoming national framework to reduce child labour, to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the impact of measures taken in this regard, particularly with respect to reducing the number of children working under the minimum age and in hazardous work.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously requested the Government to take immediate measures to prohibit the sale and trafficking of children for both labour exploitation and commercial sexual exploitation, and to adopt appropriate sanctions as a matter of urgency.

The Committee notes the adoption of the Prevention of the Trafficking in Persons Law (Act No. 9 of 2009), published in the Official Gazette No. 4952 on 1 March 2009. The Committee notes with satisfaction that, pursuant to sections 3(2) and 9, the Prevention of the Trafficking in Persons Law prohibits the trafficking of persons under 18, and sets forth penalties of ten years' hard labour for the commission of this offence and/or a fine of between 5,000 and 20,000 dinars (between approximately US$7,042 and $28,169).

Clause (b). 1. Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Penal Code prohibits certain acts associated with the prostitution of women but does not do so in respect of boys under the age of 18. It noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 29 September 2006, recommended the revision and amendment of the provisions of the Penal Code to provide protection to both boys and girls under the age of 18 against commercial sexual exploitation (CRC/C/JOR/CO/3, paragraph 93).

The Committee notes the Penal Code provisions referenced in the Government's report, but observes that these provisions do not appear to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a boy under 18 for the purpose of prostitution. Therefore, the Committee once again reminds the Government that, pursuant to Article 3(b) of the Convention, this offence constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour, and that, pursuant to Article 1, measures to prohibit this worst form must be taken as a “matter of urgency”. Therefore, the Committee once again strongly requests the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that the use, procuring or offering of both boys and girls under 18 years of age for the purpose of prostitution is prohibited, as a matter of urgency.

2. Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee previously requested the Government to indicate the specific provisions of the Penal Code which prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for pornography.

The Committee notes the reference in the Government’s report to section 306 of the Penal Code, which prohibits subjecting a boy or girl to an act that is contrary to morals, as well as prohibiting the utterance of indecent words to them. However, the Committee observes that section 306 of the Penal Code appears to only provide protection to persons under 15 years of age. Observing that Jordan ratified the Convention over ten years ago, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of all persons under 18 for the production of pornography and pornographic performances, in conformity with Article 3(b) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2004)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted that section 124(1) of the Criminal Code prohibits the trafficking of persons, and section 124(2) specifies that trafficking in persons under 18 is an aggravated offence. However, the Committee noted the Government’s indication to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) in May 2006 that women and children are trafficked to Turkey, China and the United Arab Emirates for sexual exploitation, and that Kyrgyz citizens have been sold in Kazakhstan to work in tobacco (CRC/C/OPSC/KGZ/1, page 10). In light of this, the Committee requested the Government to take immediate and effective measures to apply section 124 of the Criminal Code and to provide statistical information on the practical application of this provision.

The Committee notes the information in the UNODC Global Report on Trafficking in Persons that state authorities recorded six child victims of trafficking in 2005, and nine such victims in 2006. The Committee also notes the information in the 2008 report on human trafficking in Kyrgyzstan, available on the website of the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org) (Trafficking Report) that indicates that the Government conducted 33 investigations relating to trafficking in 2007, and 92 such investigations in 2008. This report indicates that, in 2008, the Government prosecuted eight persons for this offence, of which six were convicted. However, this report also indicates that four out of the six offenders received suspended sentences, with two receiving sentences of 3–8 years’ imprisonment. The Committee also notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations in relation to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (CRC OP-SC) of 2 February 2007, expressed concern that, in a number of cases, investigations and prosecutions had not been initiated (CRC/C/OPSC/KGZ/CO/1, paragraph 17), and that complicity by government officials with traffickers, and corruption, was impeding the effectiveness of prevention measures (paragraph 25). The CRC also expressed regret at the lack of statistical data, and the lack of research on the prevalence of national and cross-border trafficking and the sale of children (paragraph 9).

The Committee expresses its deep concern at allegations of complicity of low-level government officials with human traffickers, and at the lack of complete data on the prevalence of child trafficking in Kyrgyzstan. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures as a matter of urgency to ensure that persons who traffic in children for the purpose of labour or sexual exploitation are in practice prosecuted, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. The Committee also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the sale and trafficking of persons under the age of 18 is made available. In this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for violations of section 124 of the Criminal Code. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 157(1) of the Criminal Code makes it an offence for a person to involve a minor in prostitution. Sections 260 and 261 of the Criminal Code make the enticement into prostitution an offence. Noting the Government’s indication that the number of street children and children in risk groups forced into prostitution was rising, it requested the Government to provide information on the practical application of these provisions of the Criminal Code.

The Committee notes the information in the 2008 report on the worst forms of child labour in Kyrgyzstan (WFCL Report), available on the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees website (www.unhcr.org), that child commercial sexual exploitation continues to be a problem due in part to the lack of legal regulation and oversight. This report indicates that children from rural areas (primarily girls) are trafficked from rural areas to Bishkek and Osh for commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee also notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations in relation to the OP-SC, expressed concern that in a number of cases of child prostitution, investigations and prosecutions had not been initiated (CRC/C/OPSC/KGZ/CO/1, paragraph 17). The CRC also expressed deep concern that child victims are often stigmatized and socially marginalized and may be held responsible, tried and placed in detention (CRC/C/OPSC/KGZ/CO/1, paragraph 21).

The Committee expresses concern that child prostitution continues in part due to the lack of legal oversight, and that children who are the victims of commercial sexual exploitation risk being regarded as criminals. It therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children who are used, procured or offered for commercial sexual exploitation are treated as victims rather than offenders. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to child prostitution, in particular by supplying statistics on the number and nature of violations reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and sanctions applied. Lastly, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether the national legislation contains provisions criminalizing the client who uses children under 18 years of age for prostitution.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. Children working in agriculture. The Committee previously noted that the Government had approved a detailed list of occupations or works prohibited for persons under 18 years, and had adopted regulatory instruments at the sectoral level prohibiting this group from being engaged in work related to the use and storage of pesticides. The Committee also noted that that section 294 of the Labour Code prohibits the employment of persons under the age of 18 years in work with harmful and dangerous conditions, including in the manufacture of tobacco.

Nonetheless, the Committee notes the indication in the WFCL Report that the use of hazardous child labour in the agricultural sector is widespread, particularly in tobacco, rice and cotton fields, and that these children face dangerous working conditions. The Committee also notes the indication in the WFCL Report that, in rural areas, regulations prohibiting children from engaging in such work are not strictly enforced. In this regard, the Committee notes the statement in the report of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (now the International Trade Union Confederation) for the World Trade Organization General Council on the trade policies of Kyrgyzstan of 9 and 11 October 2006, entitled “Internationally recognized core labour standards in Kyrgyzstan” that some schools require children to participate in the tobacco harvest, and that the income from this goes directly to the schools, not the children or their families. This report also indicates that, in some cases, classes are cancelled and children are sent to the fields to pick cotton. Lastly, the Committee notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 3 November 2004, expressed concern regarding the use of children as workers by State institutions, and in particular by State educational establishments (CRC/C/15/Add.244, paragraph 59). The Committee expresses its serious concern at the situation of school children who are required to engage in agricultural work in the cotton and tobacco sectors, often under hazardous conditions, and requests the Government to take the necessary measures, as a matter of urgency, to ensure that persons under 18 years of age are protected against this worst form of child labour, including through the enforcement of regulations prohibiting children’s involvement in hazardous agricultural work.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Trafficking in children. The Committee previously noted that governmental departments, international agencies and the local media, in collaboration with the International Organization for Migration (IOM), conducted a high-profile awareness campaign on violence against women and trafficking in women and girls and its prevention. The Committee also took note of the Sezim Psychological Crisis Centre in Bishkek, which provided rehabilitation and reintegration services to victims of trafficking, including 30 children.

The Committee notes the information on the IOM website that its collaboration with the Government continues through the IOM programme entitled “Combating Trafficking in Persons in Central Asia: Prevention, Protection and Capacity Building”, which includes awareness raising and assistance for victims. The Committee also notes the information in the Trafficking Report that, while the Government provides no direct funding for shelters or medical assistance to victims, it provides space for three NGO-run shelters, and has improved its process for the repatriation of Kyrgyz nationals who are victims of trafficking. The Trafficking Report also indicates that the Government and NGOs identified 331 trafficking victims in 2007, and 161 victims in 2008. This report further indicates that 117 victims of trafficking received NGO assistance in 2008, 20 of whom were referred to these services by the Government. Observing the disparity between the number of trafficking victims identified, and the number of victims receiving assistance, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of child victims of trafficking, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken in this regard, and to supply information on the results achieved, including the number of victims of trafficking under the age of 18 who have participated in the repatriation process, and the number of children receiving rehabilitative assistance, shelter and other services.

2. Children engaged in hazardous work in agriculture. The Committee notes the estimation in the ILO-IPEC Technical Progress Report for the project entitled “Health and rehabilitation of working children in tobacco, rice and cotton fields in Osh and Jalalabat regions” of August 2006 (Agriculture TPR 2006), that child labour in the agricultural sector is quite common in Kyrgyzstan, and that, in the oblast of Jalalabat alone, it is estimated that 125,000 children are involved in agricultural production each year. The Agriculture TPR 2006 indicates that many of these children face work-related risks including injuries resulting from the use of heavy equipment, lack of clean drinking water in the fields, exposure to toxic pesticides, insects and rodents bites, and hazards related to tobacco production (skin irritation and intoxication). However, the Committee notes the statement in the Agriculture TPR 2006 that there is an understanding at the governmental level for the need to develop a comprehensive programme for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour in the agricultural sector. The Committee also notes that various initiatives are being implemented to address this issue, such as the “Elimination of child labour in tobacco growing industry in Kyrgyzstan” project for 2010–12, implemented by the Agricultural Workers’ Union and supported by the ECLT Foundation (within the framework of the PROACT–CAR Phase II) and meetings organized by the ILO Bureau for Employers’ Activities on the role of employers in the elimination of child labour in agriculture in Kyrgyzstan.

Nonetheless, the Committee notes the information in the WFCL Report indicating that, during the cotton and tobacco harvesting season, children in southern Kyrgyzstan frequently miss school to work in the fields, often under hazardous conditions. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to redouble its efforts to remove and rehabilitate children engaged in hazardous agricultural work, particularly in the cotton, tobacco and rice-growing sectors. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken in this regard, and the results achieved, including information on the number of children removed and rehabilitated.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour. The Committee previously noted the Government’s indication that the legislative process for the adoption of the Children’s Protection and Welfare Bill was ongoing. It also noted the Government’s indication that the Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour had been endorsed by the Programme Advisory Committee on Child Labour (PACC), and awaited formal adoption.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that the Children’s Protection and Welfare Bill has not yet been adopted. The Committee also notes the information in the final technical progress report for the ILO–IPEC project entitled “Programme Towards the Elimination of the worst forms of child labour (TECL)” of June 2008 that, following the endorsement of the PACC in June 2008, the Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour was subsequently approved by the labour advisory council (NACOLA), and has been submitted to Cabinet for approval. Observing that the Government has referred to the Children’s Protection and Welfare Bill since 2005, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of this legislation without delay and to ensure the adoption of the Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour by Cabinet, in addition to the implementation of this Action Plan, in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the Children’s Protection and Welfare Bill and the Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour, along with its next report.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. Self-employment and domestic work. The Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children engaged in types of work outside of an employment relationship benefited from the protection of the Convention. The Committee subsequently noted the Government’s indication that the draft revision of the Labour Code contained a provision for the protection of children in the domestic sector as well as self-employed workers. The Government indicated that this proposed provision stated that, for the purposes of sections 124–129 of the Labour Code of 1992 (related to the minimum age for admission to work, hazardous work, light work and related issues), “[a] person is deemed to have employed a child or young person if they employ a child or young person to work or require or permit a child or young person to work in any workplace or establishment under their control, including work as a domestic worker, or for any business that they conduct, irrespective of whether the child or young person is working in terms of a contract of employment or otherwise”. The Committee expressed the hope that the draft revision of the Labour Code would soon be adopted.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the draft revision of the Labour Code has not been adopted by Parliament. The Committee also notes the Government’s statement that efforts are being made towards its adoption, though observes that the Government has been referring to the impending adoption of the draft revision to the Labour Code since 2006. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft revision of the Labour Code is adopted in the near future, so that self-employed children and children engaged in domestic work benefit from the protection of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard and to provide a copy of this legislation, once adopted.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted that primary education is not compulsory and that many children, in particular herd boys, children living in poverty and children in remote rural communities, do not have adequate access to education. The Committee expressed the view that it is desirable to ensure compulsory education up to the minimum age for employment and noted the Government’s indication that a Bill introducing free and compulsory primary education had been prepared and was awaiting clearance from the Attorney-General’s Office.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Bill introducing free and compulsory primary education has yet to be adopted. The Committee notes the information, available on the Government's website (www.lesotho.gov.ls), that, as of October 2009, the Education Bill, which would make primary school free and compulsory (including sanctions for parents if they did not send their children to school) was under discussion in Parliament. The Committee also notes that the parliamentary committee assigned to assess the Education Bill endorsed the Bill's adoption in its presentation on its findings to the National Assembly in May 2009.

The Committee notes the information from UNESCO's 2010 report entitled Education for All: Global Monitoring Report that, as of 2007, the net intake rate in primary education was 49 per cent, and the net enrolment ratio was 72 per cent. This report indicates that there are approximately 101,000 out-of-school children, between the ages of 6–12. The Committee also notes the information in the Government's report that the current age at which a primary school leaving certificate can be obtained is 13 years, two years below the current minimum age for admission to work. In this regard, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the importance of linking the age of admission to employment to the age limit for compulsory education; if compulsory schooling comes to an end before young persons are legally entitled to work, there may be a period of enforced idleness (see ILO: Minimum age, General Survey of the reports relating to Convention No. 138 and Recommendation No. 146 concerning minimum age, and Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, Report III (Part 4(B)), ILC, 67th Session, Geneva, 1981, paragraph 140). Recalling that compulsory education is one of the most effective means to combat child labour, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the Education Bill and to provide a copy of this legislation, once adopted. In addition, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will give due consideration to the Committee's comments concerning the desirability of ensuring compulsory education up to the minimum age of employment of 15 years.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, while section 125(1) of the Labour Code provides that the Minister of Labour or the Labour Commissioner may, by written notice, determine the types of work injurious to the health and morals of children and young persons, there appeared to be no determination made in this respect. However, the Committee noted the Government's indication that the draft revision of the Labour Code contained a proposed section 129A containing a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to young persons. It requested a copy of this list, and expressed the hope that it would soon be adopted.

The Committee notes the extracts of the draft revision of the Labour Code, submitted with the Government's report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), including the proposed section 129A. This proposed section is entitled "worst forms of child labour for children and young persons", and prohibits requiring or permitting a child or young person to engage in exploitative work, and prohibits the worst forms of child labour, as defined in Article 3 of Convention No. 182, including hazardous work.

The Committee observes that, while this proposed provision prohibits hazardous work, it does not contain a list determining types of hazardous work activities, as previously indicated by the Government. Therefore, the Committee invites the Government to consider Paragraph 10(1) of the Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146), which provides that in determining the types of hazardous employment or work, full account should be taken of relevant international labour standards, such as those concerning dangerous substances, agents or processes, the lifting of heavy weights and underground work. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the elaboration and adoption of a list of hazardous types of work prohibited for persons under 18 in the very near future, in accordance with Article 3(2) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the consultations held with organizations of employers and workers concerned on this subject.

Article 6. Minimum age for admission to apprenticeship. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that, during the revision of the Labour Code, due consideration would be given to bringing the Labour Code in to line with the requirements of Article 6 of the Convention. The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that there is currently no regularized system of vocational and technical education and that no consultations have been held on this matter. The Government also indicates that, in practice, the minimum age for admission to vocational school is 13 years (following graduation from primary school), but that there is no minimum age for admission to apprenticeships. The Committee reminds the Government that pursuant to Article 6 of the Convention, the minimum age for admission to work in undertakings in the context of vocational training or an apprenticeship programme is 14 years. It therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures, within the context of the draft revision of the Labour Code, to ensure that no child under 14 years of age is permitted to undertake an apprenticeship in an enterprise, in conformity with Article 6 of the Convention.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee previously noted that section 124(2) of the Labour Code permits the employment of children between the ages of 13 and 15 for light work in technical schools and similar institutions, provided that the work has been approved by the Department of Education. It also noted the information contained in the 2004 Lesotho Child Labour Survey that 38.6 per cent of children, regardless of age, worked between 22 and 28 hours per week. The Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures taken to determine light work activities, and noted the Government's indication that due consideration would be given to Article 7 during the revision of the Labour Code.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the draft revision of the Labour Code includes a provision which defines light work as work which is not likely to be harmful to the health or development of the child and does not affect the child's attendance in, or the child's capacity to benefit from, school (proposed section 124(6)). The Government does not indicate if this amendment will apply concurrently with section 124(2) of the current Labour Code, thereby permitting such light work only in technical schools and similar institutions. In the case that the draft revision of the Labour Code intends to permit light work outside of educational institutions, the Committee reminds the Government that, pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Convention, the competent authority shall determine what is light work and shall prescribe the number of hours during which, and the conditions in which such employment or work may be undertaken. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate if the proposed section 124(6) in the draft revision of the Labour Code permits the performance of light work outside of technical schools and similar institutions. If so, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to determine types of light work activities, in conformity with Article 7(3) of the Convention.

Article 8. Artistic performances. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that, while there is no system of permits for children engaged in artistic activities, consideration would be given to this matter during the process of amending the Labour Code. Noting an absence of information on this point in the Government's report, the Committee once again expresses the hope that, in the process of amending the Labour Code, the Government will take the necessary measures to establish a system of individual permits for children under the age of 15 years who participate in artistic performances. It requests the Government to provide information on any developments made in this regard.

Parts III and V of the report form. Labour inspectorate and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that, according to the 2004 Lesotho Child Labour Survey, 23 per cent of the children in Lesotho are child labourers. The Survey also indicated that children mainly work in agricultural activities followed by those who work as domestic workers. The Committee also noted the Government's indication that the office of the labour commissioner carries out inspections in all commercial enterprises but not in the informal economy and private residences, which is where most child labour occurs. It requested the Government to take measures to improve labour inspection in these sectors, and to provide information on the practical application of the Convention.

The Committee notes an absence of information on these points in the Government's report. However, the Committee notes the comments of the Commissioner of Labour of 2 March 2008, available on the Government's website (www.lesotho.go.ls) indicating that child labour continues to be a problem in Lesotho particularly with under-age domestic workers and herders. The Commissioner of Labour attributed the problem to poverty in Lesotho and the HIV/AIDS pandemic, and stated that the lack of supportive laws to redress the current status exacerbates the problem, and hinders her Ministry's capacity to intervene. The Committee must express its serious concern at the large number of working children under the minimum age in Lesotho, and urges the Government to redouble its efforts to address this problem, within the framework of the Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour. In this regard, the Committee encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of appropriate legislation, to strengthen the labour inspection system (particularly in the informal economy), and to continue its collaboration with ILO-IPEC. It further requests the Government to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, including statistical data on the employment of children and young persons, extracts of inspection reports as well as the number and nature of violations detected and penalties imposed.

The Committee encourages the Government to take into consideration, during the review of the relevant legislation, the Committee's comments on discrepancies between national legislation and the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide any information on progress made in this regard and invites it to consider seeking technical assistance from the ILO.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the legislative process was ongoing for the adoption of the Children's Protection and Welfare Bill, which prohibits the trafficking of persons under 18.

The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report submitted for the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that the Children's Protection and Welfare Bill has not yet been adopted. The Committee observes that this Bill has been in the process of adoption since 2005. However, the Committee also notes the extracts of the draft revision of the Labour Code (submitted with the Government's report) containing a provision (draft section 129A(2)) prohibiting the worst forms of child labour which, pursuant to draft section 129A(3)(a), includes the sale and trafficking of children.

The Committee further notes the information in the 2009 report on the trafficking in persons in Lesotho, available on the web site of the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org) (Trafficking Report), that trafficking exists in Lesotho, and that women and children are trafficked for the purposes of sexual exploitation and forced labour, particularly to South Africa. The Trafficking Report further indicates that no arrests or prosecutions have been made in this regard, and that there are indications that investigations of trafficking-related situations are rare because trafficking is not specifically defined as a crime under existing laws, and law enforcement resources and capacity are limited. The Trafficking Report indicates that the Government's ability to address human trafficking is hindered by the lack of anti-trafficking legislation. The Committee expresses concern at the incidence of child trafficking in Lesotho, and that anti-trafficking efforts are hindered by insufficient legislation. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure the adoption of legislation prohibiting the sale and trafficking of children without delay. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the relevant legislation, once adopted.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that street children were used by adults in illegal activities, such as housebreaking and petty theft. It also noted the Government's indication that there is no legislation that specifically prohibits the use, procuring or offering of a child under the age of 18 for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs, and requested the Government to take measures in this regard.

The Committee notes that an extract of the draft revision of the Labour Code (submitted with the Government's report) contains a provision (draft section 129A(2)) prohibiting the worst forms of child labour and that, pursuant to draft section 129A(3)(c), this includes the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs, as defined in the relevant international treaties. The Committee also notes the Government's statement in its report submitted for Convention No. 138, that the draft revision of the Labour Code has not yet been adopted by Parliament, though efforts are being made in this regard. However, the Committee observes that the Government has been referring to the impending adoption of the draft revision to the Labour Code since 2006. Reminding the Government that, by virtue of Article 3(c) of the Convention, the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1, it is obliged to take immediate measures to prohibit this worst form of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft revision of the Labour Code, prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, is adopted as a matter of urgency.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, while section 125(1) of the Labour Code provides that the Minister of Labour or the Labour Commissioner may, by written notice, determine the types of work injurious to the health and morals of children and young persons, no determination had been made in this regard, either in the Labour Code or in any other legislation. However, the Committee noted the Government's indication that the draft revision of the Labour Code contained a proposed section 129A containing a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to young persons, inserted after consultations with the employers' and workers' organizations. It requested a copy of this list.

The Committee notes that the proposed section 129A (contained in the extracts of the draft revision of the Labour Code, submitted with the Government's report) is entitled "worst forms of child labour for children and young persons", and prohibits requiring or permitting a child or young person to engage in exploitative work, and prohibits the worst forms of child labour, as defined in Article 3 of the Convention, including hazardous work. However, the Committee observes that, while the proposed section 129A prohibits hazardous work, it does not contain a list determining types of hazardous work activities, as previously indicated by the Government. Therefore, the Committee draws the Government's attention to Paragraph 3 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190), which provides that, in determining the types of such hazardous work, consideration should be given, inter alia, to: (i) work which exposes children to physical, psychological or sexual abuse; (ii) work underground, underwater, at dangerous heights or in confined spaces; (iii) work with dangerous machinery, equipment and tools, or which involves the manual handling or transport of heavy loads; (iv) work in an unhealthy environment which may, for example, expose children to hazardous substances, agents or processes, or to temperatures, noise levels or vibrations damaging to their health; and (v) work under particularly difficult conditions, such as work for long hours or during the night or work where the child is unreasonably confined to the premises of the employer. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the elaboration and adoption of a list of hazardous types of work prohibited for persons under 18, in consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (e). Special situation of girls. Child domestic workers. The Committee previously noted that, according to the 2004 Lesotho Child Labour Survey, girls performing domestic work face verbal, physical and, in some cases, sexual abuse from their employers, and that these children generally do not attend school. This survey also indicated that 17.4 per cent of all working children were paid domestic workers. The Committee also noted the Government's reference to the new draft provision inserted in the draft revision of the Labour Code which provides for the protection of children engaged in domestic work. It encouraged the Government to pursue its efforts, including through labour inspection, to accord special attention to girls engaged in domestic work.

The Committee notes the information in the joint document produced by ILO-IPEC and the Ministry of Employment and Labour in 2006 entitled "Implementation Plan of the Programme towards the elimination of the worst forms of child labour in Lesotho" (Implementation Report) that girls as young as 12 years work as domestic workers, and that these children often work long exhausting days for low pay (page 10). The Committee further notes the indication in a report on the worst forms of child labour of 10 September 2009, available on the web site of the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org) that girls are trafficked within Lesotho and to other countries to perform domestic work. The Committee expresses its concern at the situation of girls engaged in domestic work in Lesotho and urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that these children are protected from the worst forms of child labour, particularly trafficking and hazardous work. It requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken in this regard.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes with regret an absence of information in the Government's report on this point. However, the Committee notes the comments of the Commissioner of Labour of 2 March 2008, available on the Government's web site (www.lesotho.go.ls) indicating that child labour continues to be a problem in Lesotho particularly with regard to under-age domestic workers and herders. The Committee also notes the information in the Implementation Report indicating that commercial sexual exploitation, the use of children by adults in illegal activities, the trafficking of children and hazardous street work are all present in Lesotho. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide information on the nature, extent and trends of the worst forms of child labour, the number of children covered by the measures giving effect to the Convention, the number and nature of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

The Committee encourages the Government to take into consideration, during the review of the relevant legislation, the Committee's comments on discrepancies between national legislation and the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide any information on progress made in this regard and invites it to consider seeking technical assistance from the ILO.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Malawi

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and practical application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, while the Malawi Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey, 2006 indicated that the total child labour rate had decreased, the relevant legislation was not strongly enforced and a significant number of persons under 14 continued to work. The Committee also noted the implementation of the ILO-IPEC country programme to combat child labour in Malawi, which featured four action programmes. The Committee further noted the Government's information that a National Action Plan (NAP) on child labour was under development.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that it will work, along with the social partners, to enforce the legislation (particularly Employment Act No. 6 of 2000 (Employment Act)) for the purpose of eliminating the employment of children below 14 years. The Committee also notes the information in the ILO-IPEC Technical Progress Report of 18 March 2010, for the project "Support to the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labour in Malawi" (SNAP project TPR) that the National Child Labour Policy and the NAP on the elimination of child labour were concluded and presented to the Government in December 2009. The SNAP project TPR also indicates that the National Policy would be tabled in Parliament and the NAP was due for adoption in the Principal Secretaries meeting. This document further indicates that the Ministry of Labour continues to set aside specific funds for child labour through the Child Labour Unit, which allocates these funds to district level child labour activities. In addition, a baseline survey on child labour in Malawi was initiated in February 2010 within the framework of the SNAP project, in consultation with the National Statistics Office. The Committee further notes the information in the Government's reply to the list of issues raised by the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) of 9 January 2009, that a law enforcement training manual was developed for police, social welfare officers, child labour officers and magistrates on how deal with cases of child labour (CRC/C/MWI/Q/2/Add.1, paragraph 64).

Nonetheless, the Committee notes the statement in the SNAP project TPR that the Government is moving slowly in the final adoption of the national policy and NAP even though these have been adopted at ministerial level. The Committee also notes that the Malawi Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey, 2006 indicates that approximately 33.6 per cent of all persons between the ages of 5 and 14 (1.4 million children) are involved in economic activity in Malawi. The Committee expresses its concern at the considerable number of children under 14 who are engaged in economic activity. It once again urges the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure the progressive abolition of child labour, and the enforcement of the relevant legislation. In this regard, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption and implementation of the NAP and asks the Government to supply a copy of it as soon as it is adopted. Lastly, the Committee encourages the Government to continue its collaboration with ILO-IPEC in the development of a baseline survey, and to provide the results of this survey when they are available.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Employment Act is applicable only where there is an employment contract or labour relationship and does not cover self-employment. It reminded the Government that the Convention covers all types of employment or work, whether there is a contract of employment or not. Following consultation on this subject, the Government indicated that the social partners were unclear as to how the Employment Act could be applied to self-employed children, particularly those who work on family farms or accompany their parents to work as tenants. The Committee therefore drew the Government's attention to possible alternatives for providing self-employed children the protection of the Convention, including the elaboration of legislation specifically to ensure children's rights or by strengthening the labour inspectorate in sectors where children are often self-employed, such as the commercial agricultural sector. In this regard, the Committee noted the ILO–IPEC information that there had been no progress made in the past ten years in the adoption of the Tenancy Labour Bill, a Bill which establishes a minimum age for employment in the tobacco sector and provides for frequent inspections of tobacco estates. The Committee therefore urged the Government to take measures to ensure that the Tenancy Labour Bill was adopted without delay.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that the applicability of the Employment Act to self-employed persons remains a challenge. The Government indicates that it has taken note of the alternatives that could be pursued, and that it will consider these options. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that the Tenancy Labour Bill has been finalized technically and is awaiting Cabinet approval (prior to submission to Parliament). Nonetheless, the Government indicates that it has a considerable backlog of legislation to deal with. The Committee further notes the information in the SNAP project TPR that the discussion of the Tenancy Labour Bill in Parliament in 2010 will be a positive development for the welfare and protection of children at risk of child labour. In this regard, the Committee notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 27 March 2009, expressed concern that many children between 15–17 are engaged in work that is considered as hazardous, especially in the tobacco and tea estate sector (which continues to be a major source of child labour) (CRC/C/MWI/CO/2, paragraph 66). The Committee therefore expresses its concern that the Tenancy Labour Bill has yet to be adopted and urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the Bill in the very near future. It hopes that, in adopting the Tenancy Labour Bill, the labour inspection component concerning children working in the commercial agricultural sector on their own account will be strengthened. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to adapt and strengthen the labour inspection services, in order to ensure that the protection established by the Convention is applied to all self-employed working children.

Article 3(1). Minimum age for admission to hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted a discrepancy between article 23 of the Constitution, which provides for protection from dangerous work for children below the age of 16 years, and section 22(1) of the Employment Act, which, in accordance with the Convention, lays down a minimum age of 18 years for work that is likely to be harmful to their health, safety, education, morals or development, or prejudicial to their attendance in school. This issue was discussed at a tripartite meeting in 2005, where it was agreed by all social partners that there was a need to harmonize the provisions of the national laws. Subsequently, this issue was presented to the Malawi Law Commission for consideration, and the Commission recommended that the age stipulated under article 23 of the Constitution be raised to 18 years of age. The Committee encouraged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that this Constitutional Amendment was adopted in the near future.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that discussions on the review of the Constitution, including article 23, are still ongoing. Observing that the discrepancy between section 22(1) of the Employment Act and article 23 of the Constitution has been under discussion since 2005, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the recommended amendment to article 23 of the Constitution is adopted in the very near future, in conformity with Article 3(1) of the Convention.

Article 3(2). Determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, in the implementation of section 22(2) of the Employment Act, the Minister can, in consultation with appropriate organizations of employers and employees, specify, by a notice published in the Gazette, occupations or activities which, in his opinion, are likely to be: (a) harmful to the health, safety, education, morals or development of persons between the ages of 14–18 years; or (b) prejudicial to their attendance at school or any other vocational or training programme. In this regard, the Government indicated that it had consulted with the social partners and had conducted consultative workshops in 11 districts in the country. The Committee noted that the final draft list of types of hazardous work was produced and ready for submission to the Ministry of Justice. The Committee urged the Government to adopt this list in the near future.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that the final draft list has been submitted to the Ministry of Justice. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft list of types of hazardous work is adopted without delay. It requests the Government to provide a copy of this list as soon as it is adopted.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers by employers. The Committee previously noted that section 23 of the Employment Act stipulates that every employer is required to maintain a register of persons aged below 18 years employed by, or working for, him/her. However, the Committee also noted the indication of the Malawi Trade Unions Congress (MCTU) that some estates did not have registers, particularly in commercial agriculture. The Committee noted the Government’s indication that labour inspectors have demanded labour registers when inspecting any workplace and, where no such register exists, the owner is advised to purchase one which is available at the government press or any bookshop. The Government indicated that the applicable parliamentary Act still did not have a model register, that the registers available at the government press are general and that employers use different formats. Nonetheless, the Government indicated that following discussions with the social partners, it was resolved to develop standard templates for various legislative prescriptions, including a model for a labour register. The Committee expressed the hope that this model register would be in conformity with Article 9(3) of the Convention.

The Committee notes the information in the Government’s report that the draft model register will be finalized before the end of the year, and that this draft will be submitted to the Tripartite Labour Advisory Council for adoption. In this regard, the Committee reminds the Government that, pursuant to Article 9(3) of the Convention, the registers kept by employers shall contain the names and ages or dates of birth, duly certified wherever possible, of persons whom they employ, or who work for them, and who are less than 18 years of age. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the elaboration and adoption of a model register of employment, in conformity with Article 9(3) of the Convention. It requests the Government to supply a copy of the model register as soon as it is adopted.

Mexico

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation. 1. Federal legislation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) reporting the trafficking of young girls within the country and abroad for the purposes of sexual exploitation, including forced prostitution. It further noted that, according to a study carried out in six Mexican cities with the support of UNICEF, around 16,000 boys and girls were victims of commercial sexual exploitation. A study carried out by ILO-IPEC, the Secretariat for Labour and Social Assistance and the National Social Sciences Institute corroborated the figures referred to above and added that around 5,000 children were the victims of this form of exploitation solely in the Federal District of Mexico. The Committee also noted the adoption of new legislation to penalize the trafficking of persons under 18 years of age for sexual and economic exploitation.

The Committee notes the Government's information on the adoption of the Act of 27 November 2007 "to prevent and punish the trafficking of persons, amend, add and repeal different provisions of the Federal Act to Combat Organized Crimes, the Federal Penal Procedure Code, and the Federal Penal Code" (Act to prevent and punish the trafficking of persons) and its regulation of 27 February 2009. It notes that section 5 of the Act to prevent and punish the trafficking of persons punishes the trafficking of children under 18 years and section 6 increases the maximum penalty for this offence to 18 years' imprisonment. The Committee further notes the Government's information that the Attorney General's Crimes against Women and Trafficking in Persons Unit (FEVIMTRA) was created on 31 January 2008. FEVIMTRA, inter alia, assists trafficking victims in order to get their collaboration in trials and obtain useful information for investigations.

The Committee notes that the 2009 Report on Trafficking in Persons in Mexico (Trafficking Report), available on the website of the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org) indicates that Mexico is a large source, transit, and destination country for persons trafficked for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation and forced labour. The Trafficking Report points out that a significant number of Mexican children are trafficked within the country or into the United States for commercial sexual exploitation or forced labour. Moreover, foreign child victims (especially from Central and South America but also from the Caribbean, Eastern Europe, and Asia) are trafficked into Mexico for sexual or labour exploitation or transit Mexico en route to the United States, Canada and Western Europe. Child sex tourism continues to grow in Mexico, especially in tourist areas. The Trafficking Report points out that Mexico has failed to improve on its limited anti-trafficking law enforcement efforts against offenders in 2008. FEVIMTRA opened 24 investigations into suspected trafficking activity, including 11 cases of labour exploitation and 13 cases of commercial sexual exploitation. No convictions or sentences of trafficking offenders were reported by federal, state, or local authorities in 2008. Moreover, notwithstanding alleged corruption in trafficking crimes among public officials, no convictions or sentences against corrupt officials were handed down in 2008, although some immigration officials, officials from the Mexican Attorney General's Office, and military officials were arrested for their alleged participation in trafficking crimes. The Committee further observes that the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, who visited the country from 4 to 14 May 2007, in his report of 28 January 2008 (A/HRC/7/8/Add.2) indicates that the sexual exploitation of children is related to various forms of organized crime and clandestine circuits of the sex trade, where the vast amount of money generated by such activities, and corrupt connections with various bodies in the State sector, facilitate exploitation and frequently make it impossible to prosecute the perpetrators. The testimonies gathered overwhelmingly point to corruption and police negligence as one of the main causes of exploitation and trafficking. Inefficiency, poor training, corruption and the lack of adequate protocols and monitoring regulations, endemic in various police and municipal agencies responsible for ensuring that no minors are exploited in the "sex trade", is conducive to the activities of speculators and opportunists who wish to offer their "clients" adolescents and children (A/HRC/7/8/Add.2, paragraphs 77 and 78).

The Committee, while observing that various provisions prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the trafficking of children for this purpose, expresses its serious concern at the information concerning the persistence of the problem of trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labour in Mexico as well as at allegations of complicity of law enforcement officials with human traffickers. It urges the Government to take, without delay, the necessary measures to eliminate the commercial sexual exploitation of children under 18 years, as well as the trafficking of children for this purpose. In this regard, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement agencies, in order to ensure that the perpetrators, including official state accomplices, are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. It also requests the Government to provide information on measures taken to implement the new legislation, including the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied.

2. State legislation. The Committee previously noted that, according to the information contained in the report of the ILO–IPEC project “Support for the Prevention and Elimination of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (CSEC) and the Protection of CSEC Victims in Mexico” (ILO–IPEC project against CSEC), draft amendments to the Penal Codes in the states of Baja California, Guerrero and Chihuahua had been approved. It requested the Government to provide information on any progress in the adoption of the draft amendments to the Penal Codes.

The Committee notes with interest the Government’s information that the amendments to the Penal Codes in the states of Baja California, Guerrero and Chihuahua have been adopted. It notes that, by virtue of these amendments, trafficking of children under 18 years, sex tourism involving children under 18 years and child pornography are established as punishable offences. The Committee further notes that, according to the Trafficking Report, 22 Mexican states and the Mexican federal district have enacted legislation to criminalize some forms of human trafficking at the local level. It also notes that, according to the Government’s first report under the Optional Protocol on the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography (CRC/C/OPSC/MEX/1, Annex 6), several Mexican states specifically punish the trafficking of children. The Committee notes that, according to the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) 2009 Global Report on Trafficking in Persons, Chihuahua is the only state that, as of May 2008, reported investigations and prosecutions of human trafficking cases during 2007: 15 cases were reported from 2007 due to the entry into force of the law on human trafficking, which was enacted on 1 January 2007. Chihuahua is also in the process of establishing a specialized police unit comprised of 15 law enforcement officials to investigate cases of trafficking of persons. The Committee welcomes the measures taken by the state of Chihuahua to combat trafficking by implementing its legislation and hopes that this example will be followed by the other Mexican states. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for the violation of the legal prohibitions on the sale and trafficking of children at the state level.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted with interest that the Decree of 27 March 2007 contains provisions penalizing the following crimes: acting as an intermediary for the prostitution of persons under 18 years of age (sections 206 and 206bis); pornography involving persons under 18 years of age (sections 202 and 202bis); and sex tourism involving persons under 18 years of age (sections 203 and 203bis).

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government representative at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards at the 97th Session of the International Labour Conference of June 2008, according to which in the framework of the Permanent Programme for the collection of confidential information on crimes, anonymous complaints can be filed which are directly forwarded to the Attorney General’s Office for analysis with a view to referring them for investigation to the competent services in the local or federal jurisdiction. Since the second half of 2007 and until May 2008, 54 cases related to the sexual exploitation, prostitution and pornography of minors were referred to the crime prevention service of the Attorney General’s Office. With regard to the crime of procuring in relation to the prostitution of minors under 18 years, there were three cases in which the preliminary investigation was completed and in which eight persons were being prosecuted, while two other cases were under investigation. With regard to pornography, there were four cases in which full investigations were completed, three that were being prosecuted and another five that were under investigation. The Committee further notes the Government representative’s information that one of the strategic projects of FEVIMTRA is to create a database of information on the number and nature of the crimes of prostitution, sexual exploitation and sex tourism involving persons under 18 years. The Committee finally notes the information contained in the Government’s report that the results of the investigations of the Internet Police Unit for 2007 regarding crimes against minors include, inter alia, the deactivation of 1,113 sites containing child pornography and the identification of 1,396 internet sites related with child pornography. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to combat child prostitution and child pornography. It requests the Government to continue to provide statistics on the number and nature of the violations reported, investigations undertaken, prosecutions, convictions and the penal sanctions applied.

Article 6. Programmes of action. Trafficking. The Committee notes that according to the Government representative at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, a draft National Programme to prevent, repress and punish trafficking in persons (National Programme against Trafficking) was prepared, pursuant to the Act to prevent and punish the trafficking of persons. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the adoption of the National Programme against Trafficking and results achieved in terms of the elimination of the trafficking of children.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing children from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour. 1. Commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee notes the extensive information contained in the Government’s report on the results achieved at the federal and state levels under the ILO–IPEC project against CSEC, particularly in terms of information and awareness raising to prevent and mitigate the commercial sexual exploitation of children and identify its causes. It notes that, according to the final technical report of this project of April 2007, in total 546 children were prevented from being engaged in commercial sexual exploitation through the provision of educational services or training opportunities, while 106 children were prevented from being engaged in this worst form of child labour through the provision of other non-education related services. It finally notes the extensive information on the activities carried out at the state level to raise awareness on commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to prevent the engagement of children in commercial sexual exploitation and to provide information in this regard.

2. Education. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication by the ITUC that 1.7 million children of school age were unable to receive education as poverty makes it imperative for them to work. The ITUC added that, in the case of indigenous children, access to education was difficult as teaching was normally provided only in Spanish and many indigenous families only spoke their mother tongue. The Committee noted that in 2005 and 2006, over 5,290,000 children benefited from the “Opportunities” programme of Ministry of Social Development, which provides children and young persons living in poverty with full and free access to education and to health services. It noted that the Government projected to increase the number of grants provided at the secondary and higher levels to cover 1.24 million girls and 1.18 million boys for the school year 2006–07.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government representative at the Conference Committee, financial assistance was provided to 5 million families in extreme poverty in 2007 and a total of 5.3 million education grants were provided during the 2007/2008 school year for children in very poor households throughout the country within the framework of the “Opportunities” programme. As a result of this programme, at the national level the school completion rate of children who received education grants in the school year 2007–08 was of 68.98 per cent, which represents 1.79 per cent more than in 2006–07. It further notes the Government’s extensive information on the results of the “Opportunities” programme for the school year 2008/2009, especially regarding the progress in attending school. It also notes that the Government plans to extend the programme to 5,286,000 children for the school year 2009–10, which represents 256,000 children more than in 2008–09. The Committee notes the Government’s information that the Public Education Office, through the Indigenous Education General Unit (DGEI), is in charge of assisting more than 1,200,000 indigenous children. It notes that the DGEI is in charge of 1,111 indigenous educational institutions with more than 40,000 children in 19 federal states. The Committee notes with interest that the ILO–IPEC project “Stop Child Labour in Agriculture – Contribution to the prevention and elimination of child labour in Mexico, in particular the worst forms in the agricultural sector with special focus on indigenous children and child labour as a result of internal migration” (Stop Child Labour in Agriculture) was launched at the end of 2009 for a duration of five years. This project, inter alia, plans to improve the effectiveness of the “Opportunities” programme in indigenous communities. Considering that education contributes to preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts, in particular within the framework of the “Opportunities” programme, to provide access to free basic education to children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labour, particularly those living in rural areas as well as children of indigenous and migrant workers. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of the “Opportunities” programme and results achieved.

Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee notes that the Act to prevent and punish the trafficking of persons and its regulation foresee measures to protect and assist in a concerted and appropriate manner victims of trafficking, especially children and young persons. It notes the Government’s information that FEVIMTRA is, inter alia, in charge of assisting child victims of trafficking through legal counselling, physical and psychological aid. Victims are also assisted for their rehabilitation and reintegration in their families, in order to avoid their re-victimization. The Committee notes the Government’s information that, since its creation, FEVIMTRA has assisted 12 girls and 20 boys, who were probable victims of trafficking. It further notes that, according to the final technical progress report of the ILO–IPEC project against CSEC, 108 children in total were withdrawn from commercial sexual exploitation through the provision of educational services or training opportunities, and 38 children were withdrawn from this worst form of child labour through the provision of other non-education related services. The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking measures to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It also requests the Government to indicate whether reception centres for child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation have been established in the country, with an indication of the number of children actually received by such centres; and whether specific medical and social follow-up programmes have been formulated and implemented for child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. 1. Children in agricultural work and marginal urban activities. The Committee previously noted the ITUC’s indication that the majority of children who work were engaged in agriculture or informal urban activities. It noted the information provided by the Government on the results achieved in the context of the implementation of the programme to prevent and eliminate child labour in the marginal urban sector (programme against child labour in the marginal urban sector) and the programme to promote the rights of girls and boys, daily child workers in the agricultural sector and the prevention of child labour (PROCEDER) in 2005 and 2006. The Committee notes the Government’s information on the results of the programme against child labour in the marginal urban sector between 2007 and the first trimester of 2009. In particular, it notes that the total number of children and adolescents working in the marginal urban sector decreased by 17.2 per cent. Assistance was provided to 156,562 working children and 218,587 children at risk. Moreover, the 95 per cent of children who obtained education grants completed school. The Committee notes the Government's information that the Ministry of Social Development carries out the programme for assisting daily agricultural workers and their families. Since one of the objectives of this programme is reducing child labour, it also provides for cash transfers and other types of assistance to daily agricultural workers which are subject to the condition that their children between 6 and 14 years of age regularly attend basic education. According to the Government, in 2008 the programme had the following results: assistance was provided to a total of 650,277 families; 113,380 girls and 115,355 boys under 14 years benefited from the programme; 10,838 investment projects related to educational grants for 10,378 children were authorized. The Committee notes that the ILO-IPEC project, Stop Child Labour in Agriculture, has among its immediate objectives the implementation of direct action interventions to prevent child labour in agriculture and to withdraw children who work in agriculture. The Committee welcomes the Government's efforts to prevent and combat child labour in the marginal urban sector and in agriculture, especially through education and encourages the Government to continue its efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labour in these sectors. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the results of the programmes adopted to this end, such as the programme against child labour in the marginal urban sector, PROCEDER, the programme for assisting daily agricultural workers and their families and the ILO/IPEC project Stop Child Labour in Agriculture.

2. Street children. The Committee previously noted the study of the System for the Integral Development of the Family (DIF), which showed that 114,497 children under 17 years of age worked and lived in the streets and that, solely in the city of Mexico, which was not covered by the study, there are 140,000 young persons working in the streets. It noted that, between 2001 and 2007 around 189,620 children benefited from the programme of prevention and assistance to girls, boys and young persons living in the streets (programme for street children). However, it noted that, according to the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child in June 2006 (CRC/C/MEX/CO/3, paragraph 68), although the number of street children had fallen in recent years, it remained high and the measures adopted to prevent this phenomenon and protect the children involved were inadequate.

The Committee notes that according to the Government representative at the Conference Committee with a view to ensuring that own account workers under 18 years, such as street children, did not perform hazardous work, 99 projects were carried out and 1,740 education and food grants were provided in 2007, covering a total of 35,514 street children. The Committee notes the Government's information that under the programme against child labour in the marginal urban sector, between 2007 and the first trimester of 2009, assistance was provided to 3,974 street children and 668 street children were reintegrated in their families. It further notes the Government's information that 23,516 children benefited from the programme for street children in 2008. While welcoming these measures and observing that the number of street children has fallen in recent years, the Committee notes, like the Conference Committee, that the number of street children undertaking hazardous work remains high. Therefore, it encourages the Government to redouble its efforts to remove children from the streets and provide for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of children removed from the streets and rehabilitated pursuant to the implementation of programmes and projects such as the programme against child labour in the marginal urban sector and the Programme for street children.

Article 8. International cooperation. 1. "Programme OASIS". The Committee previously noted the Government's information concerning the cooperation between the United States and Mexico in the context of the "Programme OASIS". It noted that a "Programme OASIS" conference was held in San Antonio, Texas, in August 2007 and that the authorities of the two countries agreed to strengthen their cooperation to punish those responsible for the trafficking of persons, particularly children, and to extend the programme to other frontier points. The Committee notes that, according to the Government representative at the Conference Committee, in the context of the "Programme OASIS", three criminal cases were under judicial investigation or the submission of evidence in relation to the crime of trafficking of minors. It further notes that, according to Trafficking Report, in 2008 the Mexican Federal Government continued to provide significant assistance to the US Government on cross-border trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on (1) the number of persons who are charged and found guilty as a result of the implementation of the "Programme OASIS"; and (2) the number of child victims of trafficking intercepted in frontier areas.

2. Border between Mexico and Guatemala. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's information that the National Institute for Migration (INM) in 2006 made over 1,522 complaints concerning the trafficking and smuggling of persons. Between January and March 2007, the INM made over 353 complaints, of which 39 were referred to the courts; of these, 26 have been set aside and 462 are under examination. Noting the absence of information on this point in the Government's report, the Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on convictions and the penalties imposed as a result of the complaints made by the INM against persons working in networks engaged in the trafficking and smuggling of children.

3. Border with El Salvador. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's first report under the Optional Protocol on the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography (CRC/C/OPSC/MEX/1; paragraph 263), in 2005 the Government of Mexico signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with the Government of El Salvador in order to protect women and child victims of sale and trafficking in the border between Mexico and El Salvador. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking who have been removed from trafficking and rehabilitated pursuant to the measures taken under the MOU.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes the Government's report. It also notes the detailed discussion which took place in the Committee on the Application of Standards during the 99th Session (June 2010) of the International Labour Conference.

Article 3 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. Worst forms of child labour and application of the Convention in practice. Clauses (a) and (d). Forced or compulsory labour and hazardous work. Child domestic labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the statement from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) to the effect that child domestic labour, performed under conditions of servitude, is common practice in the country, with parents selling their children, sometimes as young as 6 years of age, to work as domestic servants. The ITUC also indicated that some 50,000 children, mainly girls, are employed in domestic work. Of these, about 13,000 young girls under the age of 15 are employed as servants in Casablanca, with 70 per cent of them under 12 years of age and 25 per cent under 10 years of age. The Committee noted that section 10 of the Labour Code prohibits forced labour and that section 467-2 of the Penal Code prohibits the forced labour of children under 15 years of age. It further noted that a Bill on domestic work had been adopted and was in the process of validation. The Bill sets the minimum age for admission to this type of employment at 15 years, lays down conditions of work and establishes supervisory measures and penalties.

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report to the effect that the Bill regulating the conditions of employment and work of domestic workers is in the process of being adopted. It also notes that this Bill has recently been reinforced by the inclusion of more stringent penalties including imprisonment for persons employing children under 15 years of age. The Committee further notes that a specific list determining hazardous types of work prohibited in the domestic work sector will be drawn up and adopted pursuant to the future law on the conditions of employment and work of domestic workers. This list will coexist with the new list determining hazardous types of work prohibited for young persons under 18 years of age revising the Labour Code promulgated by the Royal Decree of 24 December 2004.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication in its report that an initial qualitative and quantitative survey of girls under 18 years of age engaged in domestic work was undertaken in 2001 in the wilaya of Casablanca. In addition, a second survey was due to be carried out in Greater Casablanca during the second half of 2010, with results and data to be extrapolated at national level. The Committee notes the results of the statistical survey undertaken in 2001 and observes that nearly 23,000 girls under 18 years of age are working in Greater Casablanca as domestic workers, 59.2 per cent of whom are under 15 years of age. The vast majority of these girls (82.2 per cent) are unable to read or write and only 17.8 per cent of them have received school education. The survey also reveals that more than half of the girls engaged in domestic work (55 per cent) are subject to punishment in the course of their work and 10 per cent report being victims of physical assault. As regards the issue of sexual abuse, the report indicates that there is considerable reticence regarding this issue on the part of the girls and that 4.2 per cent of the 529 girls interviewed admitted having been subjected to sexual abuse from their employers. In addition, more than half the girls interviewed (55.4 per cent) said that they suffered from some kind of physical ailment. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee expresses its deep concern at the exploitation of young persons under 18 years of age employed in domestic work under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions. It once again reminds the Government that under Article 3(a) and (d) of the Convention, work done by young persons under 18 years of age under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour and, under the terms of Article 1, should be eliminated as a matter of urgency. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the Bill on domestic work is adopted as a matter of urgency. The Committee expresses the strong hope that the list determining the hazardous types of work which are prohibited in the domestic sector will take account of the domestic work of children under 18 years of age performed under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions. With reference to the conclusions of the Committee on the Applications of Standards, it requests the Government to intensify its efforts and take immediate and effective steps to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons who subject children under 18 years of age to forced or hazardous domestic labour are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to send a copy of the 2010 survey on the situation of young girls engaged in domestic work in Casablanca.

Article 4(3). Periodic examination and revision of the list of hazardous types of work. The Committee notes with interest the Government's communication sent to the Office in April 2010, relating to the imminent adoption of the decree applying the Labour Code promulgated by the Royal Decree of 24 December 2004 determining the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age. The draft decree was validated during a tripartite seminar in April 2010. Moreover, according to information communicated by the Government representative at the Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2010 and also contained in the Government's report, the new list increases the number of hazardous types of work from ten to 30. The Committee requests the Government to send a copy of the draft decree determining the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age once it is adopted.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and removing them from these worst forms, and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Child prostitution and sex tourism. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed concern at the persistence of child prostitution and sex tourism involving young Moroccans and immigrants, particularly boys, despite an amendment to the Penal Code in 2003 making sex tourism a criminal offence. It noted that, as part of the National Plan of Action for Children (PANE) for 2006–16, a preliminary study on the problem of the sexual exploitation of children was carried out in February 2007 with a view to formulating a national strategy to prevent and combat such exploitation. It also noted that child protection units had been set up in Casablanca and Marrakesh to provide better medical, psychological and legal assistance for children who have been the victims of violence or ill-treatment, including children who have suffered from sexual or economic exploitation.

The Committee notes the indications in the Government's report that the scourge of the sexual exploitation of children remains unseen and unrecognized in Morocco, and for this reason the Government is making every effort to tackle it. It notes that a freephone number has been made available by the National Observatory for Children's Rights for use by children who have been subjected to violence. However, the Committee notes with regret that the formulation of the national strategy to prevent and combat the sexual exploitation of children is still at the consultation stage. It also observes that the Government's report does not supply any information on the results of the preliminary study conducted in February 2007 on the problem of the sexual exploitation of children.

The Committee notes that, according to a study on the sexual exploitation of children, with particular reference to Marrakesh, conducted by UNICEF in 2003 and whose results are based on a sample of 100 children in prostitution (62 boys and 38 girls), most children begin to engage in prostitution after breaking off their school education. In addition, only three out of the 100 children interviewed were attending school and 16 of them had never done so. As regards the latter, most of them are girls who were placed in families at a very young age to work as domestic servants. The results of the survey also reveal that 71 per cent of the children claim to have both foreign and Moroccan clients. Furthermore, many of these minors appear to work on an independent basis, even though the use of pimps appears to be more widespread among girls. According to the testimonies of children in prostitution, the police often accept bribes from the children themselves. However, if the children are arrested, they may be placed in charitable institutions. Nevertheless, given that conditions tend to be poor in such establishments, the children often run away. Expressing its deep concern at the lack of specific measures to prevent children under 18 years of age from becoming the victims of prostitution, to remove them from this worst form of child labour and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective steps to ensure that the national strategy to prevent and combat the sexual exploitation of children is implemented as soon as possible. It requests the Government to supply information on progress made in this respect, in terms of the number of children prevented from engaging in prostitution or withdrawn from it as part of the national strategy. It also requests the Government to send a copy of the preliminary study on the problem of the sexual exploitation of children which was conducted in February 2007 with a view to the formulation of the national strategy.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Child domestic labour. The Committee previously noted the adoption of the national programme to combat the use of young girls as housemaids (INQAD) as part of the PANE. It also noted that, as part of its Strategic Plan 2008–12 and following implementation of the INQAD programme, the Ministry of Social Development, Family Affairs and Solidarity was planning to organize a second nationwide awareness-raising campaign to combat the use of young girls as housemaids and to prepare regional action plans. It also noted that, as part of the Multisectoral Programme, implemented in collaboration with UNDP, to combat gender-based violence by empowering women and girls in Morocco. ILO–IPEC launched an action programme to combat the use of young girls in domestic labour in the Marrakesh–Tensift–El Haouz region for the period from 1 January 2009 to 31 December 2010.

While noting the measures taken by the Government to combat child domestic labour, the Committee notes the lack of information on the results actually achieved in the context of the INQAD programme and ILO–IPEC programme in terms of the numbers of children under 18 years of age prevented from engaging in or removed from the worst forms of child labour in the domestic sector. With reference to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee urges the Government to step up its efforts with respect to the identification, withdrawal and reintegration of girls under 18 years of age working as domestic servants who are subjected to economic or sexual exploitation. It also requests the Government to supply information on the results achieved in this respect, particularly in the context of the INQAD programme.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Niger

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1978)

Article 2(3) of the Convention. Compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that, according to the report on basic education statistics for 2005–06 provided by the Government, the net school attendance rates for children between 7–12 years of age was 54.1 per cent for boys and 37.8 per cent for girls, with an average figure of 45.8 per cent. The Committee observed that poverty was one of the prime causes of child labour and when combined with a deficient education system it hampers the development of children. It therefore encouraged the Government to renew its efforts to combat child labour, especially by stepping up measures to increase the school attendance rate and reduce the school drop-out rate.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), according to which the net school attendance rate for children between 7–12 years of age increased to 53.5 per cent (61.3 per cent for boys and 45.6 per cent for girls) in 2008. The Government adds that Koranic schools have been renovated and centres for Koranic awareness established in all the regions of the country. The Committee further notes that, according to the second periodic report submitted by Niger to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) on 20 November 2008 (CRC/C/NER/2, paragraphs 321–325), the Ten-year Educational Development Programme (PDDE), drawn up in 2002, aimed at achieving 80 per cent enrolment rate in primary school by 2012 and 84 per cent by 2015, with special emphasis on narrowing the gap between girls and boys.

The Committee however notes that, in its concluding observations of 18 June 2009 (CRC/C/NER/CO/2, paragraph 66), the CRC, while commending the major efforts made by Niger to expand access to primary education, as well as the increase in the access of girls to education, the building of new educational infrastructures in rural areas and the training programmes for teachers, expressed concern at the poor quality of the education system, the high drop-out rate and weak gender equity in education. The Committee is of the view that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour and that it is important to emphasize the necessity of linking the age of admission to employment or work (14 years in Niger) to the age of completion of compulsory education. If the two do not coincide various problems may arise. If schooling ends before young persons may work legally, there may be an enforced period of idleness (see the General Survey of 1981 on minimum age, ILC, 67th Session, Report III (Part 4B), paragraph 140). The Committee therefore considers it desirable to ensure that schooling is compulsory up to the minimum age of admission to employment, in accordance with Paragraph 4 of the ILO Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146).

The Committee also observes that the low rate of school attendance of children between 7 and 12 years of age shows that a significant number of children drop out of school well before attaining the minimum age for admission to employment and are on the labour market. Considering that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee urges the Government to redouble its efforts to improve the education system in the country, particularly by envisaging increasing the age of completion of compulsory schooling so that it coincides with the age of admission to employment or work (14 years). The Committee also requests the Government to take measures to increase the school attendance rate and reduce the school drop-out rate, particularly for girls, with a view to preventing children under 14 years of age from working. The Committee further requests the Government to continue providing information on the results achieved.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. The Committee had previously observed that the Labour Code did not apply to types of employment or work performed by children outside an enterprise, such as self-employed children. It noted the Government's indication that widening the scope of application of the labour legislation to children engaged in an economic activity on their own account would require formal collaboration between the Ministries of the Civil Service, Labour, Mines, the Interior, Justice and Child Protection. The Committee expressed the hope that discussions on this issue would take place between these ministries. It reminded the Government that the Convention applies to all sectors of economic activity and that it covers all types of employment or work, whether or not a contractual employment relationship exists. Noting the absence of information in the Government's report on this subject, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that discussions are held on this subject between the Ministries of the Civil Service, Labour, Mines, the Interior, Justice and Child Protection, and it requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the protection laid down by the Convention is ensured where there is no employment relationship, especially in cases of children working on their own account or in the informal economy. In this regard, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to envisage the possibility of assigning special powers to labour inspectors with regard to children who work on their own account or in the informal economy.

Article 3(3). Authorization to employ young persons in hazardous work from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that Decree No. 67-126/MFP/T of 7 September 1967 authorizes the employment of young persons over 16 years of age in certain types of hazardous work. It also noted that health and safety committees had been established in enterprises and that they were responsible for training and awareness raising on safety. The Committee observed that these committees did not appear to provide adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. In this respect, the Government indicated that a distinction had to be made between three categories of young persons: those whose activities are performed in the context of a formal school curriculum, namely students in technical and vocational training schools; those who work in the context of an apprenticeship contract, supervised by one or more professional adults with many years of experience in the trade; and those who are trained under the traditional system for learning a trade and whose superior/trainer had also been trained under this system of transmission of practical knowledge. With regard to the latter category, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the manner in which the health and safety committees ensure that the work performed by young persons does not jeopardize their health or safety. Noting once again the lack of information in the Government's report, the Committee recalls that, in addition to the requirement of training, Article 3(3) of the Convention allows employment or work by young persons as from the age of 16 years on condition that their health, safety and morals are fully protected. It therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that enterprise safety and health committees ascertain that the conditions of work of young persons aged between 16–18 years do not jeopardize their health and safety. It requests the Government to provide information in this respect in its next report.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that studies were being conducted in the country, including a national study on child labour in Niger undertaken by the National Institute of Statistics, in collaboration with ILO-IPEC, and in partnership with a consortium of NGOs.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Survey on Child Labour (ENTE) has been undertaken with the support of ILO-IPEC and is currently being processed. In its report provided to the Office under Convention No. 182, the Government indicates that it will provide the findings of the ENTE once they have been published. The Committee trusts that the findings of the ENTE will be published in the very near future and accordingly requests the Government to provide statistical data disaggregated by sex and by age group in its next report concerning the nature, extent and trends of work by children and young persons who are engaged in work below the minimum age specified by the Government when ratifying the Convention.

The Committee previously took due note of the measures taken by the Government to follow up the recommendations of the High-level Fact-finding Mission (the Mission) which visited Niger from 10 to 20 January 2006 pursuant to the request made by the Conference Committee in June 2005.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery and practices similar to slavery. 1. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) alleging the internal trafficking of girls in Niger for domestic work, as well as the trafficking of boys for economic exploitation and of girls for sexual exploitation. It also noted that, according to the information obtained by the Mission, "Niger is certainly a transit country since its geographical location makes it a hub for trade between North Africa and sub-Saharan Africa". The Committee further noted that, according to the information obtained by the Mission, "Niger is both a country of origin and a country of destination for human trafficking, including the trafficking of children". The Committee noted that a Bill for the prevention, repression and punishment of trafficking in Niger had been drafted by the Niger Association for Human Rights, but that the drafting of the Bill on the trafficking of children was still under consideration by the competent authorities.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that a National Plan to Combat Trafficking of Children has been drawn up and validated, and that the Office will be informed once the plan has been adopted. However, it notes that, according to the second periodic report submitted by Niger to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) on 20 November 2008 (CRC/C/NER/2, paragraphs 433–437), the trafficking legislation has still not been adopted by Parliament and that the legal vacuum therefore persists in this area. Nevertheless, the CRC observes that the national survey on trafficking in persons showed that, of the 1,540 households surveyed, 5.8 per cent answered that a member of the household had been a victim of trafficking and 29.4 per cent answered affirmatively that there had been human trafficking in their locality/village/neighbourhood. The Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 18 June 2009 (CRC/C/NER/CO/2, paragraph 76), the CRC notes the drafting of a Bill criminalizing trafficking and the preparation of a National Plan of Action to Combat Child Trafficking, but nevertheless expresses serious concern that, despite the extent of child trafficking within, from and to the State party, the existence of the phenomena is not fully recognized in the State party.

The Committee notes with concern that, despite the findings of the Mission in 2006 that Niger is not only a country of transit, but also a country of origin and destination for the trafficking of children, the Bill for the prevention, repression and punishment of trafficking in Niger has still not been adopted. The Committee therefore reminds the Government that under Article 1 of the Convention immediate and effective measures have to be taken to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the Bill for the prevention, repression and punishment of trafficking in Niger as a matter of urgency. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the Act, together with the National Plan of Action to Combat Child Trafficking, when they have been adopted.

2. Forced or compulsory labour. Begging. The Committee previously noted the comments of the ITUC that children are forced to beg in West Africa, including Niger. For economic or religious reasons, many families entrust their children from the age of 5 or 6 years to a spiritual guide (marabout), with whom they live until they are 15 or 16 years of age. During this period, they are entirely under the responsibility of the marabout, who teaches them religion and in return requires them to carry out certain tasks, including begging.

The Committee noted that there are three different forms of begging in Niger: conventional begging, educational begging and begging that uses children for purely economic ends. Conventional begging is the form practiced by indigent people. Educational begging is the form practiced in Niger in accordance with the Muslim religion as a means of learning humility, for the person practicing it, and compassion, for the alms-giver. Lastly, begging that uses children for purely economic ends makes use of children as a source of labour. The Committee noted that the existence of this latter form of begging was acknowledged by those interviewed by the Mission, including the Government, and that in this form of begging children are especially vulnerable since their parents, even if they are concerned for the children's religious education, are unable to provide for their subsistence. The children are therefore left entirely dependent on the marabouts. The Committee expressed serious concern at the use of children for purely economic ends by certain marabouts, particularly since, as it would appear from the information gathered by the Mission, this form of begging seemed to be very much on the increase.

The Committee noted that a National Observatory to combat begging had been set up. It also noted with interest that Circular No. 006/MJ/DAJ/S/AJS of 27 March 2006 of the Ministry of Justice of Niger, addressed to the various judicial authorities, calls for sections 179, 181 and 182 of the Penal Code, which punish begging and any person, including the parents of minors under 18 years of age, who habitually engage in begging, who cause others to beg or who knowingly make a profit from begging, to be strictly applied through the prosecution without leniency of any person using children for begging for purely economic purposes. The Committee therefore requested the Government to supply information on the effect given in practice to the national legislation on begging, pursuant to Circular No. 006/MJ/DAJ/S/AJS of 27 March 2006 of the Ministry of Justice, with an indication of whether marabouts who use children for purely economic purposes have been convicted.

The Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 18 June 2009 (CRC/C/NER/CO/2, paragraph 72), the CRC expressed serious concern at the situation of child talibés attending Koranic schools who are sent by marabouts to beg in the streets. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indications that there have been some cases of arrest of marabouts presumed to use children for purely economic purposes. However, the Government indicates that in general they are released for lack of legal proof of their guilt. The Committee therefore notes with regret that, even though the legislation is in conformity with the Convention on this matter, the phenomenon of child talibés remains a cause of serious concern in practice. The Committee reminds the Government that, under Article 1 of the Convention, immediate and effective measures have to be taken as a matter of urgency to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour, and that under Article 7(1) of the Convention it is under the obligation to take all necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including the provision and application of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penal sanctions. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the national legislation on begging is applied and that marabouts who use children under 18 years of age for purely economic purposes are punished and are subject to sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the effective and time-bound measures taken to prevent children under 18 years of age from becoming victims of forced or compulsory labour, such as begging, and to remove these children from such situations and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration.

Clause (d). Hazardous types of work. Children working in mines and quarries. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the ITUC's indication that child labour in small-scale mining (trona mining in the Boboye region, salt in Tounouga, gypsum in Madaoua and gold in Liptako-Gourma) is widespread, principally in the informal economy where the work is the most hazardous. It noted that section 152 of Decree No. 67-126/MFP/T of 7 September 1967 prohibits the employment of children in underground work in mines.

The Committee noted previously that, according to the information gathered by the Mission, work by children in hazardous types of work, particularly in mines and quarries, existed in informal locations. It noted the Government's indication to the Mission that, "when parents work at informal sites, they are often accompanied by children who are too young to stay at home alone and, in certain cases, the children carry out small tasks for their parents". The Committee however noted that, according to various interviews carried out by the Mission, the children do more than simply accompany their parents and that they become "involved in the chain of production, whether in gypsum mines or salt quarries, sometimes performing small tasks to facilitate their parents' work or, in some cases, tasks that are physically hazardous for more than eight hours a day, every day of the week, running the risk of accident or disease". The Committee noted with interest that the Minister of the Interior, acting on the instructions of the Prime Minister, issued a circular strictly prohibiting the employment of children in the mines and quarries of the areas concerned, namely Tillabéri, Tahoua and Agadez, and that the Minister for Mining had received directives to take this prohibition into account in drawing up mining agreements. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the effect given to the circular of the Minister of the Interior.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that no conviction has yet been handed down in this respect. It further notes that, according to the technical progress report (TPR) of 15 September 2009 for the ILO-IPEC Project for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour in Artisanal Gold Mining in West Africa (TPR of 15 September 2009), the revision and modification of the list of hazardous types of work were carried out at a workshop held in Ayorou on 2 and 3 July 2009. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the list of hazardous types of work was drawn up under the responsibility of the Ministry of Labour and in collaboration with the technical ministries and the employers' and workers' organizations concerned. The Government indicates that it will provide the Office with full information on the list when it has been adopted. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the amended list of hazardous types of work once it has been adopted. It urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure the application of the national legislation on the protection of children against underground work in mines to informal mining and quarrying sites, and to ensure that those who employ children in mines and quarries are prosecuted and sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions imposed upon them. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. 1. Labour inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication in the report of the Mission that during site visits it had been able to note that "the labour inspectorate, which plays a key role in combating child labour and forced labour, is severely lacking in both the human and material resources needed to perform its duties". The Mission recommended that a labour inspection audit be carried out to ascertain the exact nature and extent of the needs of the labour inspectorate in Niger. The Committee notes that, in the report provided to the Office under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Government indicates that it is making every effort to ensure that this audit is carried out in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to give effect to the Mission's recommendation, and accordingly strengthen the labour inspection services. It requests it to provide information on this subject in its next report.

2. Youth Unit. The Committee had previously noted that a Youth Unit has been established in the national police force. It notes the Government's indication that the Youth Unit is engaged in combating all forms of abuse against children under 18 years of age, including child trafficking, in collaboration with other partners, such as NGOs, United Nations agencies and technical services. The Government further states that there have been 11 recent prosecutions for the abduction of minors and three convictions.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. 1. Improving the operation of the education system. In its previous comments, the Committee noted from the Mission report that underlying the problem of child labour is the problem of the access of children to education and training that meets the needs of the labour market. The Mission also indicated that "parents hesitate to send their children to school when they see that such education affords no guarantee of a job, whereas the Muslim religious schools at least train children to be good Muslims or even teachers of the Koran, which explains why such schools are on the increase in Niger". In this respect, the Committee noted that "the education dispensed by Muslim religious teachers leads to no diploma, which limits the children's potential to enter the labour market in the future". The Committee noted the Mission's recommendation that the operation "of the education system needs to be improved to ensure access for all to high-standard education".

The Committee had previously noted the information provided by the Government in its report concerning the increase in primary school enrolment, particularly among girls. It also noted that, according to the Government's report on statistics for basic education for 2005–06, the net school attendance rates for children between 7 and 12 years of age was 54.1 per cent for boys and 37.8 per cent for girls, with an average of 45.8 per cent. With regard to Muslim religious schools, the Committee duly noted the Government's indication that, in the context of the Franco-Arab education support project, measures have been taken for the restructuring of these schools.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that efforts have been made to increase the school attendance rate and that it will continue its unceasing efforts in this respect. In that regard, the Committee notes the Government's indications that the net school attendance rate for children between 7 and 12 years of age rose to 53.5 per cent (61.3 per cent for boys and 45.6 per cent for girls) in 2008. The Government adds that Muslim schools have been renovated and Muslim awareness centres established in all the regions of the country. The Committee further notes that, according to the second periodic report submitted by Niger to the CRC on 20 November 2008 (CRC/C/NER/2, paragraphs 321–325), the Ten-Year Educational Development Programme (PDDE), drawn up in 2002, aimed at achieving 80 per cent enrolment rate in primary school by 2012 and 84 per cent by 2015, with special emphasis on narrowing the gap between girls and boys. The Committee however notes that, in its concluding observations of 18 June 2009 (CRC/C/NER/CO/2, paragraph 66), the CRC, while commending the major efforts made by Niger to expand access to primary education as well as the increase in the access of girls to education, the building of new educational infrastructures in rural areas and training programmes for teachers, expressed concern at the poor quality of the education system, the high drop-out rate and the weak gender equity in education. Accordingly, considering that education contributes to preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to redouble its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system, taking into account the special situation of girls. It also requests the Government to increase the school enrolment rate and reduce the drop-out rate, as well as to adopt other measures for the integration of Muslim religious schools into the national education system. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the results achieved.

2. Raising awareness and educating the public about the problems of child labour and forced labour. The Committee had previously noted that, in its report, the Mission recommended "specific measures to raise awareness among Koranic teachers and parents to prevent the instrumentalization of begging by certain marabouts". The Committee noted the information provided by the Government concerning the awareness-raising and training activities undertaken for combating child labour, particularly its worst forms, including political decision-makers, employers, community leaders and traditional chiefs, police officers, magistrates, current or potential working children and their parents, teachers, students and the public in general, concerning the problem of child labour. The Committee therefore encouraged the Government to pursue its awareness-raising efforts. It notes the Government's indication that it is committed to pursuing its awareness-raising efforts for traditional chiefs, civil society and local elected officials on the danger represented by child labour in general, and its worst forms in particular. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the awareness-raising activities undertaken by the Government for traditional chiefs, civil society and elected local officials, and on their impact.

3. Project in artisanal gold mines in West Africa. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, according to the TPR of 15 September 2009, the Government, in collaboration with ILO-IPEC, is continuing to implement activities and programmes of action to prevent children from working in artisanal gold mining. For example, according to the Government's indication, a programme of action has been implemented to contribute to the establishment of schools and initiatives to promote school attendance (including support for teachers and the provision of educational materials) on gold mining sites and neighbouring villages, as well as the improvement of school infrastructure on the gold mining sites of M'Banga and Komabangou. The Government indicates that 2,195 children, including 1,515 girls, have been prevented from being exploited in gold mining in M'Banga, Komabangou and the surrounding villages and have been integrated into the traditional school system. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the results achieved in the context of the ILO-IPEC Project for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour in Artisanal Gold Mining in West Africa in terms of the number of children prevented from being engaged in this worst form of child labour.

Clause (b). Necessary direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee had previously noted that, according to the information contained in the ILO-IPEC activity reports for 2007 for the Project for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour in Artisanal Gold Mining in West Africa, over 400 children, of whom 45 per cent were girls, had benefited directly from the project activities. It also noted that several programmes of action on education and vocational training, as well as to remove children working in artisanal gold mines, have been implemented.

In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the social integration of victims of the worst forms of child labour is ensured free of charge by national associations and NGOs, with the support of technical ministries and partners, such as UNICEF. The Committee observes that, according to the TPR of 15 September 2009, 1,853 children have been removed from work in gold mines in Niger and Burkina Faso. The Government adds that, through the implementation of the activities and programmes of action under this ILO-IPEC project, 115 children, including 46 girls, have been removed from exploitation in the gold mines of M'Banga and Komabangou and then reintegrated into socio-occupational life. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of children who are in practice removed from artisanal gold mines and then rehabilitated and socially integrated through the implementation of the ILO-IPEC project and programmes of action on education and vocational training.

Article 8. Regional cooperation. The Committee noted previously that, in addition to the multilateral cooperation agreement to combat child trafficking in West Africa, signed in July 2005, Niger also signed the Abuja Multilateral Cooperation Agreement in 2006 and a bilateral agreement for the establishment of a mixed frontier control brigade between Niger and Nigeria. The Committee previously requested the Government to indicate whether, in the context of these agreements, child victims of trafficking have been detected and intercepted in frontier regions and whether individuals operating in networks engaged in the trafficking of children have been found and arrested.

The Committee notes the Government's indications that, further to the implementation of the various cooperation agreements to combat trafficking in children, Niger has established 30 vigilance committees and has established widespread mixed mobile brigades on all national frontiers. The Government adds that child victims of trafficking have been intercepted in border areas. In the north of the country (the Agadez region), 48 boys were intercepted in 2006, 150 children (including six girls) were intercepted in 2007 and, finally, 39 boys were intercepted in 2009 by vigilance committees in neighbouring countries and repatriated to Niger. Furthermore, 151 child victims of trafficking (72 in Agadez, 44 in Tillabéri, 16 in Makolondi, ten in Niamey and nine in Téra) have been identified and taken into the care of NGOs and associations combating this scourge. However, the Committee notes with deep concern the Government's indication that those presumed guilty were released by the police for lack of legal proof. Recalling that under Article 7(1) of the Convention, the Government is under the obligation to take all the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons involved in the trafficking of children are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed upon them, in the context of the agreements concluded with other signatory countries.

Parts IV and V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that in its report the Mission referred to a lack of reliable data to quantify accurately the extent and characteristics of the problem of child labour. It noted that studies were being carried out and requested the Government to provide information on the findings of these studies.

The Committee notes the information contained in the 2008 study undertaken by the National Commission on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms entitled “The problem of forced labour, child labour and all other forms of slave-like practices in Niger”. It also notes the Government’s indications that the transborder study on child labour in the traditional gold mining sector in Burkina Faso, Mali and Niger has been undertaken and that the report on this survey prepared by the national consultant has already been validated. When Mali and Burkina Faso have also validated their respective reports, a final and consolidated report common to the three countries will then make it possible to identify more effectively the scope of the phenomenon in the informal economy. Furthermore, the Government indicates that the National Survey on Child Labour (ENTE) has already been undertaken by the National Institute of Statistics and it will provide the findings to the Office when they have been published. However, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 18 June 2009 (CRC/C/NER/CO/2, paragraph 19), the Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed concern at the unavailability of quality data and analysis on children’s rights, especially with regard to child victims of violence and sexual abuse, street children, children working as domestic servants and children living in poverty. As soon as the findings of the above studies are available, the Committee urges the Government to provide statistical data and information on the nature, extent and trends of the worst forms of child labour and on the number of children protected by the measures giving effect to the Convention. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age. It hopes that statistics will also be available on child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, children living in the streets and child domestic workers, as well as children living in poverty. It requests the Government to provide information in this respect in its next report.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Nigeria

Minimum Age (Underground Work) Convention, 1965 (No. 123) (ratification: 1974)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee recalled that for a number of years, it had been requesting the Government to indicate measures taken to give effect to the Convention (Article 4(5)), under which the employer shall make available to the workers’ representatives, at their request, lists of the persons who are employed in work underground and who are less than two years older than the minimum age specified by the Government which is 16 years. The lists should contain the dates of birth of persons aged between 16 and 18 years and the dates at which they were employed or worked underground in the undertaking for the first time.

The Committee noted that under section 62 of the Labour Act, every employer is required to keep a register of all young persons in his employment with particulars of their ages, the date of employment and the conditions and nature of their employment and to produce the register for inspection when required by an authorized labour officer. The Committee further noted that under section 91(1) of the same Act, “young person” means a person under the age of 18 years and “industrial undertaking” includes mines, quarries and other works for the extraction of minerals from the earth. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that section 62 of the Labour Act is amended so that such registers may also be made available to workers’ representatives, at their request. The Committee once again asks the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard in its next report.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Pakistan

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2006)

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour. The Committee previously noted that a national Time-bound Programme (TBP) for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour 2008–16 had been drafted in consultation with the stakeholders. It also noted the implementation of several ILO–IPEC projects, including projects entitled “Activating media to combat worst forms of child labour 2006–09” and “Pakistan earthquake – Child labour response”, in addition to the expansion of the national project for the rehabilitation of child labourers. It requested the Government to provide information on the impact of these projects.

The Committee notes the information in the Government’s report that the ILO–IPEC project entitled “Combating abusive child labour II” has been launched. The objective of this project is the elimination of child labour, and two districts have been selected to pilot the project. The main activities of the project include: (i) establishing the Federal Child Labour Unit, and Provincial Child Labour Units, to increase institutional capacity to monitor the implementation of the national child labour programme; (ii) the creation of provincial and district coordination committees on child labour; (iii) withdrawing and rehabilitating child labourers in the districts of implementation; and (iv) sensitizing the community to child labour issues. The Committee also notes the ILO–IPEC information that the project “Activating media to combat worst forms of child labour” has been extended until the end of 2010.

The Committee further notes the information from the ILO–IPEC Technical Progress Report (TPR) of 10 March 2010 for the project entitled “Pakistan earthquake: Child labour response project” that 3,626 children were enrolled in rehabilitation centres through the project, and 632 children received vocational training. This TPR also indicates that between September 2009 and March 2010, ten seminars on child labour were conducted in target union councils. Participants included workers, employers and target community members (particularly the family members of working children). Over 700 individuals participated in these seminars organized in 24 rehabilitation centres of seven union councils (Kaghan, Mohandri, Kewai, Balakot, Ghanool, Shohal Mazullah and Garhi Habib Ullah). The TPR indicates that the project has contributed substantially to sensitizing the local communities on child labour issues. The Committee takes due note of this information, and requests the Government to continue to provide information on the concrete measures taken pursuant to the “Combating abusive child labour II” project, the “Activating media to combat worst forms of child labour” project and the “Pakistan earthquake – Child labour response” project. It also requests the Government to provide information on the status of the implementation of the national TBP 2008–16. Finally, it requests the Government to provide information on the impact of these initiatives, including the number of children reached through these programmes.

Article 2(2). Minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee previously noted that, at the time of ratification, Pakistan specified 14 years as the applicable minimum age. The Committee also noted that a draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009 had been elaborated and that pursuant to section 16(a) of this draft Act, the employment of a child who has not attained 14 years of age is prohibited.

The Committee notes an absence of information in the Government’s report with regard to progress made towards the adoption of the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009, which prohibits the employment of a child below 14 years of age, is adopted in the near future and to provide a copy once adopted.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory education. The Committee previously noted the information provided by the Government in its report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) of 19 March 2009 (CRC/C/PAK/3-4, paragraph 361) that three of the four provinces, Federally Administered Areas (Punjab, North-West Frontier Province and Sindh) and the Islamabad Capital Territory have compulsory primary education laws. It also noted that the Islamabad Capital Territory Compulsory Primary Education Ordinance 2001, and the Punjab Compulsory Primary Education Act 1994, provide that parents shall ensure that their children attend primary school until the completion of their primary education. However, the Committee observed that, due to the definitions of “primary education” and “child”, compulsory education could finish between the ages of 10–14. The Committee underlined the desirability of ensuring compulsory education up to the minimum age for employment, as provided under Paragraph 4 of the Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146), and encouraged the Government to take measures in that regard.

The Committee notes an absence of information on this point in the Government’s report. However, the Committee notes that the CRC, in its concluding observation of 19 October 2009, expressed concern that not all provinces have a compulsory education law and, where this legislation exists, it is often not properly enforced. The CRC further expressed concern that nearly 7 million of the estimated 19 million primary school-age children are out of primary school and about 21 per cent drop out, many of them in the early grades (CRC/C/PAK/CO/3-4, paragraph 78). The Committee expresses its deep concern at the significant number of children under the minimum age who are not attending school. Considering that education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to provide free and compulsory education to all children up to the minimum age for employment (of 14 years), and to ensure that, in practice, children are attending school. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to increase school enrolment rates and reduce school drop-out rates, and on the results achieved.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to, and determination of, hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that pursuant to sections 2, 3 and 7 of the Employment of Children Act of 1991, the employment of children under 14 is prohibited in a variety of occupations. Section 12 of the Employment of Children Rules of 1995 also provides for types of work that shall not be performed by children under 14. The Committee observed that these provisions do not comply with the provisions of Article 3(1) of the Convention which sets 18 years as the minimum age for admission to hazardous work. However, the Committee noted that section 16(c) of the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009 prohibited the employment of persons under 18 in any of the occupations and processes listed in Parts I and II of the Schedule (containing four occupations and 39 processes). The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that this draft legislation was adopted.

The Committee notes the information in the Government’s report that the Road Transport Workers Ordinance prohibits the employment of persons under 18 in road transport work. The Committee also notes that the Shops and Establishments Ordinance prohibits the employment of persons under 18 in night work. However, noting an absence of information from the Government on the status of the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in conformity with Article 3(1) of the Convention, this draft Act, which prohibits the employment of persons under 18 in hazardous types of work, is adopted in the near future.

Article 9(1) and Part III of the report form. Penalties and the labour inspectorate. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the practical application of the penalties provided for in section 14 of the Employment of Children Act 1991. It also requested the Government to indicate any measures adopted to strengthen the labour inspectorate, particularly in the informal sector.

The Committee notes an absence of information on these points in the Government's report. However, the Committee notes the information in a 2008 report on the worst forms of child labour in Pakistan, available on the website of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org), that enforcement of child labour legislation is weak due to the lack of inspectors assigned to child labour, lack of training and resources, in addition to corruption. This report also indicates that, while authorities cite employers for child labour violations, the penalties imposed are generally too minor to act as a deterrent. The Committee also notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 15 October 2009, expressed concern that the ineffectiveness of labour inspection machinery reduces the likelihood of investigations into reports of child labour, and hinders the prosecution, conviction or punishment of those responsible (CRC/C/PAK/CO/3-4, paragraph 88). The Committee expresses its concern at the lack of capacity of the labour inspectorate to effectively monitor the legislation giving effect to the Convention and therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to adapt and strengthen the labour inspectorate in this regard, including through the allocation of additional resources. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who violate the provisions giving effect to the Convention are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are applied in practice. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of violations relating to the employment of children and young people detected by the labour inspectorate, the number of persons prosecuted, and the penalties imposed.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, according to the National Child Labour Survey conducted in 1996, of the 3.3 million children aged between 5–14 years who were economically active on a full-time basis, 46 per cent worked 35 hours per week, while 13 per cent worked for 56 hours or more per week. The Committee requested the Government to provide recent statistical data on the application of the Convention in practice.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that, pursuant to the "Combating abusive child labour II" project, a second national survey on child labour will be undertaken. The Committee also notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 15 October 2009, expressed concern that the prevalence of child labour is extremely high and has increased in recent years due to growing poverty (CRC/C/PAK/CO/3-4, paragraph 88). The Committee expresses its concern at the high number of working children under the minimum age in Pakistan and therefore urges the Government to redouble its efforts to improve this situation, including through continued cooperation with ILO-IPEC. It also requests the Government to provide, in its next report, information from the second national survey on child labour.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes the Government's report and the communication of the Pakistan Workers' Federation (PWF) of 31 August 2010.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. 1. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted the allegations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) indicating that human trafficking is a serious problem in Pakistan, including the trafficking of children. The ITUC also stated that women and children reportedly arrive from various countries in the region, many to be bought and sold in shops and brothels and that, in some rural areas, children are sold into debt bondage. The Committee observed that section 370 of the Penal Code prohibits the sale and trafficking of persons for the purpose of slavery and that, pursuant to sections 2(f) and 3 of the Prevention and Control of Human Trafficking Ordinance of 2002 (PCHTO), human trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation, slavery or forced labour is prohibited. However, the Committee also observed that a legal review of the PCHTO (undertaken within the framework of combating child trafficking for labour and sexual exploitation (TICSA project)) concluded that the definition of "human trafficking" in the PCHTO focuses on interstate trafficking and ignores trafficking within Pakistan, which is prevalent in the country. In this regard, a tripartite regional workshop made recommendations to amend the legislation.

The Committee notes an absence of information in the Government's report on any measures taken pursuant to the legal review. It notes the information in a report of 14 June 2010 on the trafficking of persons in Pakistan available on the website of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org) (Trafficking Report) that the Government secured convictions of 385 persons under the PCHTO in 2009, a substantial increase from 2008. Nonetheless, the Committee notes that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 19 October 2009, expressed concern that Pakistan remains a significant source, destination and transit country for children trafficked for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation and forced and bonded labour. The CRC also expressed concern at the growing number of children trafficked internally (CRC/C/PAK/CO/3-4, paragraph 95). Furthermore, the Committee notes the statement in the Trafficking Report that the lack of comprehensive internal anti-trafficking laws has hindered law enforcement efforts. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that trafficking within the country of persons under 18 is effectively prohibited in national legislation. The Committee also requests the Government to redouble its efforts to combat and eliminate both internal and cross-border trafficking of persons under 18. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved, particularly the number of persons convicted and sentenced for cases involving victims under the age of 18.

2. Debt bondage. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the ITUC's indication that Pakistan has several million bonded labourers, including a large number of children. Debt slavery and bonded labour are mostly reported in agriculture, construction (in particular in rural areas), brick kilns and the carpet-making sector. The Committee also noted that the Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act (BLSA) 1992 abolished bonded labour, and states that no one shall make an advance under, or in pursuance of, the bonded labour system or other forms of forced labour. The Committee further noted the operation of several measures within the national policy and plan of action for the abolition of bonded labour and rehabilitation of freed bonded labourers (National Policy for the Abolition of Bonded Labour), and requested the Government to take measures to ensure the effective implementation of this policy.

The Committee notes the information in the Trafficking Report that, while provincial police in Sindh province freed over 2,000 bonded labourers in 2009 from feudal landlords, few charges were filed against the employers. The Committee also notes that the CRC, in its concluding observation of 19 October 2009, expressed concern that, despite legislation prohibiting bonded labour and the National Policy for the Abolition of Bonded Labour, bonded and forced labour continues to occur in many industries and the informal sector, affecting the poorest and most vulnerable children (CRC/C/PAK/CO/3-4, paragraph 88). The Committee also notes the information in the Trafficking Report that the largest human trafficking problem in Pakistan is bonded labour, concentrated in the Sindh and Punjab provinces, and affects over a million men, women and children. The trafficking report further indicates that Pakistani officials have yet to record a single conviction under the BLSA.

The Committee expresses its deep concern at the persistence of children working in bonded labour, and reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, it is obliged to take immediate measures to prohibit and eliminate this worst form of child labour. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to redouble its efforts to combat and eliminate this worst form of child labour, and to provide information on the measures taken within the framework of the National Policy for the Abolition of Bonded Labour in this regard. It also urges the Government to take the necessary measures, as a matter of urgency, to ensure that perpetrators of bonded labour are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice.

3. Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Committee previously noted that the National Service Ordinance of 1970 prescribes a minimum age of 18 for compulsory enlistment in the armed forces. The Committee noted, however, the Government's indication that children aged 16 and above may begin training prior to regular service if they are willing. The Committee also noted that the CRC expressed its concern that, in spite of legislation prohibiting the involvement of children in hostilities, there were reports of children being recruited forcibly to participate in armed conflicts, especially in Afghanistan and in Jammu and Kashmir. The CRC also expressed its concern about madrasas (Islamic schools) being involved in recruiting children under 18 years of age, including forcibly, to participate in armed conflicts (CRC/C/15/Add.217, 27 October 2003, paragraphs 62, 64(c), 67 and 68). The Committee requested the Government to take immediate measures to combat and eliminate the compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict.

The Committee notes an absence of information on this point in the Government's report. However, the Committee notes that the CRC, in its concluding observation of 19 October 2009 expressed deep concern at reports of madrasas being used for military training, as well as instances of recruitment of children to participate in armed conflict and terrorist activities (CRC/C/PAK/CO/3-4, paragraph 80). The CRC expressed grave concern with regard to reports of forced under-age recruitment and training of children by non-State actors for armed actions and terrorist activities, including suicide attacks, and at the lack of preventive measures, including awareness raising, and physical and psychological recovery for children affected by armed conflict, in particular those who were recruited. Recalling that the forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures to bring an end in practice to the forced recruitment of persons under 18 years of age by armed groups. In this regard, it requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out and sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that article 11(3) of the Constitution states that "no child below the age of 14 years shall be engaged in any factory or mine or any other hazardous employment". Section 12 of the Employment of Children Rules of 1995 also provides for types of work that shall not be performed by children under 14. The Committee also noted that sections 2 and 3 of the Employment of Children Act of 1991 provide that children under 14 years of age shall not be employed in the occupations listed in Parts I and II of the Schedule of the Act, containing a detailed list of hazardous types of work that children shall not perform.

The Committee notes the statement in the communication of the PWF that a large number of children in Pakistan are employed in hazardous work, particularly in the brick kiln, glass and leather industries, and in the informal sector. Referring to its comments made in 2009 under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), the Committee notes that a draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009 has been elaborated. Pursuant to section 16(c) of the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009, the employment of persons under 18 in any of the occupations and processes listed in Parts I and II of the Schedule (containing four occupations and 39 processes) is prohibited. The Committee recalls that under Article 3(d) of the Convention, children under 18 shall not perform work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm their health, safety or morals. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in conformity with Article 3(d) of the Convention, the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009, which prohibits the employment of persons under 18 in hazardous types of work, is adopted in the near future.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. 1. Bonded labour. The Committee previously noted the ITUC's indication that while the BLSA prohibits bonded labour, it remains ineffective in practice. It also noted that District Vigilance Committees (DVCs) were constituted to monitor the implementation of the BLSA but that there were reports of serious corruption within these committees. The Government indicated that efforts were being made to implement the BLSA with an Anti-Corruption Strategy and that within the framework of the National Policy for the Abolition of Bonded Labour, training workshops had been organized for key district government officials and other stakeholders to enhance their capacity and to activate the DVCs.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that DVCs report to the District Magistrate any cases of bonded labour being used in workplaces, and that DVCs engage in information sharing to this end. The Committee also notes the Government's statement in its reply to the list of issues of the CRC of 1 September 2009 that the DVCs have not been functioning properly. The Government indicates that it is in the process of restructuring the DVCs to improve their effectiveness and organizing orientation sessions for committee members. The Government further states that there remain problems in the enforcement of the BLSA (CRC/C/PAK/Q/3-4/Add.1, paragraph 65). The Committee also notes the information in the Trafficking Report that police lack personnel, training and equipment to confront landlords' armed guards when freeing bonded labourers. The Committee therefore urges the Government to redouble its efforts to strengthen the capacity of DVCs and law enforcement officials responsible for the monitoring of bonded labour, to ensure the effective implementation of the BLSA. It requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

2. Labour inspection. The Committee previously noted the ITUC's indications that the number of labour inspectors is insufficient, that they lack training and that they may be open to corruption. The ITUC added that inspections do not take place in undertakings employing less than ten employees, where most child labour occurs. The Committee also noted the PWF's statement that the Government should take more effective measures to monitor the use of child labour in the informal sector with the cooperation of the "Independent labour inspection machinery". The PWF indicated that the governments of the two largest provinces of the country, Sindh and Punjab, apply a policy of not inspecting a business for one year following its establishment and that inspectors may not enter a workplace without prior permission from, or notice to, the employer. The Committee further noted that, according to the technical progress report of March 2007 for the ILO-IPEC project entitled "Combating child labour in the carpet industry", the ILO's external monitoring system was in place in each district of Pakistan for the independent verification of the child labour situation. In the case of the carpet weaving industry, 4,865 monitoring visits had been made to 3,147 workplaces in the project areas.

The Committee notes the statement on the ILO-IPEC summary for the project entitled "Combating child labour in the carpet industry" that the external child labour monitoring system was a significant achievement as the labour inspection system does not extend to rural areas where most of the child labour in the carpet sector takes place. The Committee also notes the Government's statement in its report to the CRC of 19 March 2009 that the Ministry of Labour is working with the Asian Development Bank to devise a comprehensive labour inspection and monitoring mechanism, which will include child labour monitoring (CRC/C/PAK/3-4, paragraph 580). Nonetheless, the Committee notes the statement in a report on the worst forms of child labour in Pakistan available on the web site of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org) (WFCL report) that enforcement of child labour laws is weak due to the lack of inspectors assigned to child labour, lack of training and resources, corruption, and the exclusion of many small workplaces and informal family businesses from the inspectorate's jurisdiction. The Committee further notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 19 October 2009, expressed concern that the ineffectiveness of labour inspection machinery reduced the likelihood of investigations of reports of child labour (CRC/C/PAK/CO/3-4, paragraph 88). Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspection system to enable the labour inspectors to monitor the effective implementation of the provisions giving effect to the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including measures to train labour inspectors and provide them with adequate human and financial resources. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the development of a comprehensive labour inspection mechanism and its impact on the monitoring of the worst forms of child labour.

Article 7(1). Penalties. The Committee previously noted the ITUC's indication that persons found guilty of violating child labour legislation were rarely prosecuted and that when prosecution did occur, the fines imposed are usually insignificant. The Committee noted the All Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions (APFTU) indication that, although child labour is prohibited by national legislation, child labour and its worst forms are still widespread. The Committee recalled that by virtue of Article 7(1) of the Convention, the Government must take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including through the application of dissuasive sanctions.

The Committee notes an absence of information on this point in the Government's report. However, the Committee notes the statement in the WFCL report that the penalties imposed on persons who violate child labour laws are generally too minor to act as a deterrent. The Committee expresses its serious concern at the ineffectiveness of penalties for violations of child labour legislation and, therefore, urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who violate the legal provisions giving effect to the Convention are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Child victims of trafficking. The Committee previously noted that the Child Protection and Rehabilitation Bureau (CPRB) was responsible for housing returned camel jockeys from the United Arab Emirates (UAE) and for facilitating their reintegration within their families and communities. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking effectively withdrawn and rehabilitated by the CPRB or other rehabilitation shelters.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report to the CRC of 19 March 2009 that, through the programme to return and reintegrate under-age camel racers (implemented as a collaboration between the Government, UNICEF and the UAE), a total of 331 former camel jockeys have been repatriated and have been reunited with their families through the CPRB. The Government further indicates that various rehabilitation programmes have been initiated for the rehabilitation of these children and these services were also provided to 361 self-returned former camel jockeys (CRC/C/PAK/3-4, paragraph 677). However, the Committee notes the indication in the Trafficking Report that this collaboration with the UAE and UNICEF came to an end in 2009. The Trafficking Report also indicates that while the CPRB continued to provide services to victims of trafficking, governmental officials continued to lack adequate procedures and resources for proactively identifying victims of trafficking among vulnerable persons with whom they came into contact, especially child labourers, women and children in prostitution, and agricultural and brick kiln workers. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to remove, rehabilitate and provide for the social integration of child victims of trafficking. In this regard, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the procedures for identifying child victims of trafficking and to ensure that these children are referred to the appropriate services. It requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard and the results achieved.

2. Child bonded labourers. The Committee previously noted that the European Union and the ILO were assisting the Government in the setting up of 18 community education and action centres for combating exploitative child labour through prevention, withdrawal and rehabilitation of former child bonded labourers. The Committee also noted that the Government had established a "Fund for the education of working children and rehabilitation of freed bonded labourers". The Committee further noted that the 2007 ILO project to promote the elimination of bonded labour in Pakistan (PEBLIP) aimed to provide social and economic assistance to the families that have been released from bondage to help them re-establish their lives.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the PEBLIB project completed its first phase in 2007. Through this project, the ILO has provided technical assistance to the Ministry of Labour, and helped in capacity building of governmental officials and the judiciary. The Government also indicates that a series of awareness-raising material on bonded labour have been published. The Committee also notes the information in the Government's report that through the "Fund for the education of working children and rehabilitation of bonded labourers", free legal aid services have been established in Lahore, Peshawar, Karachi and Quetta. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the impact of the abovementioned measures on removing children from bonded labour and on providing for their rehabilitation and social integration.

3. Children working in the carpet industry. The Committee previously noted the ITUC's indication that 1.2 million children were reported to work in the carpet industry, which is a hazardous industry. It also noted that, according to a baseline survey on child labour in the carpet weaving industry in the province of Sindh, there are an estimated 33,735 carpet weaving children, out of which 24,023 are estimated to be below 14 years of age. The Committee further noted that the Pakistan Carpet Manufacturers' and Exporters' Association and ILO-IPEC launched a project to combat child labour in the carpet industry in 1998 and that 11,933 children had been withdrawn from carpet weaving and enrolled in non-formal education centres.

The Committee notes the ILO-IPEC information that Phase III of the "Combating child labour in the carpet industry" project began in 2007, and will be completed in 2011. The project will be implemented in the provinces of Punjab, Sindh and the North-West Frontier Province (NWFP), and aims to impact the lives of 50,000 children, 60 per cent of whom are carpet weavers. The Committee also notes the information in the WFCL report that the national project on rehabilitation of child labour, implemented by Pakistan Bait-ul-Mal (an autonomous body established by the Ministry of Social Welfare and Special Education) continues to withdraw children between the ages of 4 and 14 from several sectors, including carpet weaving. Nonetheless, the WFCL report also indicates that a significant number of children continue to work in carpet weaving, and that these children suffer eye and lung diseases due to unsafe working conditions. The Committee therefore requests the Government to strengthen its efforts for the removal, rehabilitation and social reintegration of children working in the carpet-weaving sector. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken within the framework of the “Combating child labour in the carpet industry – Phase III” and the “National project on rehabilitation of child labour” project and on the results achieved.

Clause (d). Reaching out to children at special risk. 1. Child bonded labourers in mines. The Committee previously noted that, according to the rapid assessment studies on bonded labour in different sectors in Pakistan, some miners ask their children as young as 10 years of age to work with them in mines to lighten the burden of peshgi (i.e. any advance whether in cash or in kind made to the labourer). In Punjab and in the NWFP, children are usually assigned the job of taking donkeys underground and bringing them out laden with coal. These children are particularly vulnerable to sexual abuse by miners.

The Committee notes the information in the Government’s report to the CRC of 19 March 2009 that an action programme is being implemented in the coal mines of Shangla, as part of the national Time-bound Programme (TBP) for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour 2008–16. The Committee also notes the information in the final technical progress report for the ILO–IPEC project entitled “Supporting the TBP on the elimination of the worst forms of child labour in Pakistan” of 14 September 2008 (FTPR) that in the context of initiatives in Shangla, 250 children received health screening, 250 children were provided with literacy and numeracy classes and 150 children received technical and vocational skills training. The FTPR also indicates that a district education plan that addressed the educational needs of child labourer was developed, printed and widely disseminated. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary effective and time-bound measures to eliminate child debt bondage in mines as a matter of urgency.

2. Children working in brick kilns. The Committee previously noted that nearly half of children aged 10–14 working in brick kilns work more than ten hours a day without any safeguards and that working in the kilns is a particularly hazardous occupation for children. It also noted that, according to the rapid assessment studies on bonded labour in different sectors in Pakistan of 2004, workers in the brick kiln sector were not aware of the general legislation that applies to bondage. The Committee further noted that an ILO–IPEC project in several sectors resulted in 3,315 children being withdrawn from hazardous work, including in the brick kiln industry. The Committee requested the Government to pursue its efforts to protect children engaged in the brick kiln sector from hazardous work.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement in its reply to the list of issues of the CRC of 1 September 2009 that most of the bonded labourers in Punjab are confined to brick kilns. The Government indicates in this report that it is working to register brick kiln workers and issue them with national identity cards to facilitate their access to benefits (CRC/PAK/Q/3-4/Add.1, paragraph 68). The Committee also notes that the project entitled “Combating child labour through education and training (Support to the TBP: Phase II)” gives priority to children working in six specific sectors, including boys and girls working in brick kilns. The Committee further notes the information in the WFCL report that the national project on rehabilitation of child labour continues to withdraw children in this industry. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to protect children under 18 engaged in the brick kiln sector from hazardous work and forced labour. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard and on the results achieved.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. Regional cooperation. Trafficking. The Committee previously noted the Government’s participation in several regional initiatives to combat trafficking. These included the signing of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation’s convention on preventing and combating trafficking in women and children for prostitution in 2002 (which committed signatories to the development of a regional plan of action and the establishment of a regional task force against trafficking) and a Memorandum of Understanding with both Thailand and Afghanistan to promote bilateral cooperation, including on the issue of human trafficking. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on progress achieved through these initiatives.

The Committee notes the information from the International Organization for Migration (IOM) that it has been working with the Government to combat human trafficking and smuggling. The IOM is currently conducting a counter-trafficking programme to create 18 district taskforces to combat human trafficking in vulnerable districts throughout the country which will identify trafficking victims, create referral mechanisms for support to victims and build a network between stakeholders in the local government, law enforcement and civil society. The Committee also notes the IOM’s indication that its office in Islamabad is supporting the establishment of a trilateral dialogue between Pakistan, Afghanistan and the Islamic Republic of Iran on migration management within South-West Asia, to serve as a forum for discussion on developing comprehensive and compatible national and subregional migration management strategies. Nonetheless, the Committee notes the information in the Trafficking Report that transnational trafficking in the region persists and that persons, including children, are trafficked between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Pakistan, and to Pakistan from Afghanistan and Azerbaijan for the purpose of forced labour and prostitution. The Committee therefore encourages the Government to strengthen its regional cooperation efforts and to continue its collaboration with the IOM to combat the trafficking of persons under 18 years of age. It also once again asks the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in the launching of a regional plan of action and regional task force against trafficking. It also asks the Government to provide information on the impact of the Memoranda of Understanding signed with Afghanistan and Thailand, as well as of any other bilateral agreements on the elimination of child trafficking.

Part V of the report form. Practical application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee pointed out that accurate data on the extent of the worst forms of child labour, including bonded labour, is essential to develop effective programmes to eliminate these worst forms. It encouraged the Government to undertake a nationwide survey to determine the extent of child debt bondage and its characteristics.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that, pursuant to the "Combating abusive child labour II" project, a second national survey on child labour will be undertaken. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that this national survey includes an examination of the worst forms of child labour, including bonded labour, trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation and hazardous work. It also requests the Government to provide information from this national survey, once completed.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Panama

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the Government's report. It also notes the comments of the National Federation of Public Employees and Public Service Enterprises Workers (FENASEP) of 5 October 2009 and the Government's reply thereto of 10 February 2010.

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the statistics contained in the national report concerning the child labour survey undertaken by the Directorate of Statistics and Census and the Statistical Information and Monitoring Programme on Child Labour (SIMPOC) and published by ILO-IPEC in March 2003, the number of children between the ages of 5–17 years engaged in child labour was 47,976. According to the report, 25,273 minors worked in agriculture. It also noted that the Government took a large number of measures to eliminate child labour and its worst forms, such as the National Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour and the Protection of Young Workers 2007–11 (National Plan against Child Labour) and programmes of action in collaboration with ILO-IPEC which target, among others, child domestic work, agricultural work, hazardous types of work and work by indigenous children.

The Committee notes that, in its comments, the FENASEP expresses concern at the fact that, compared with the data of 2000, according to which 47,475 children between 5 and 17 years of age were working in Panama, the 2008 survey on child labour shows that this figure has almost doubled to 89,767. The Committee notes the Government's reply to the FENASEP's comments that: (a) the number of children aged from 5 to 17 increased from 2000 to 2008 (from 755,032 to 829,724); (b) at the moment of carrying out the second survey, society was more aware of the subject of child labour, thus 2008 statistics better reflect the existing reality. The Government also states that notwithstanding the progress achieved as a result of the measures taken, various issues still hamper the elimination of child labour. However, the recently elected Government is taking measures to achieve this goal.

The Committee takes due note of the detailed information provided by the Government in its report. In particular, it notes the results of the implementation of the ILO-IPEC Country Programme to prevent and eliminate child labour and its worst forms in Panama (ILO-IPEC Country Programme) and the results of the action programmes carried out in collaboration with ILO-IPEC in the urban, rural and indigenous areas of the provinces of Panamá and Colón, Chiriquí and Veraguas to prevent children from engaging in child labour or withdrawing them from child labour and its worst forms through the provision of educational services and assistance to their families. The Committee further notes that the Government has taken several measures – such as the programmes "Opportunities", "Educational Promotion", "Solidarity Day", "Eradication of Child Labour Scholarships" and "Prevention and eradication of child labour and protection of adolescent workers in the provinces of Panama and Colón" – to promote education as a means to contribute to the eradication of child labour, especially through the provision of cash transfers often conditioned on school attendance. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's information that in December 2007, the Government and the social partners signed the Decent Work Programme 2008–11, which has amongst its objectives the abolition of child labour. The Committee, while noting the wide range of measures taken by the Government to combat child labour, expresses its concern at the increasing number of children between 5–17 years of age who work in Panama. It strongly encourages the Government to redouble its efforts to combat child labour and requests it to continue to provide information on the implementation of the projects such as those referred to above, as well as the results obtained in terms of the progressive abolition of child labour. It also requests the Government to provide statistical information on the employment of children under 14 years.

Article 2(2). Raising the minimum age for admission to employment or work initially specified. The Committee previously noted that the Bill on children contains a provision raising the minimum age for admission to employment or work from 14 to 15 years. It drew the Government's attention to the fact that Article 2(2) of the Convention envisages the possibility for a State, which decides to raise the minimum age for admission to employment or work initially specified, to notify the Director-General of the International Labour Office by a further declaration. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the raising of the minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee notes the Government's information that the Bill on children has not been adopted yet and that at the moment there is no intention to increase the minimum age initially specified.

Article 3(3). Authorization to employ young persons from the age of 16 years on hazardous types of work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under the terms of section 118 of the Labour Code and section 510 of the Family Code, hazardous work was prohibited for young persons under 18 years of age, in accordance with Article 3(1) of the Convention. However, it also noted that section 118(2) of the Labour Code and section 510(2) of the Family Code provide that this prohibition does not apply to work performed by minors in training establishments when the work is approved and supervised by the competent authority in listed types of hazardous work.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the labour inspectorate monitors the nature and the conditions of work of young persons and establishes whether the work permit for these young persons may be issued. Subsequently, periodic inspections are carried out to ensure compliance with the relevant legislation. The Committee, however, observes that, since the minimum age for admission to work in Panama is 14 years, it appears that, pursuant to section 118(2) of the Labour Code and section 510(2) of the Family Code, a working permit for a young person to perform hazardous work in a training context may be issued at 14 years. The Committee notes that this is not in conformity with Article 3(3) of the Convention, according to which national laws or regulations or the competent authority may, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, authorize employment or work as from the age of 16 years on condition that the health, safety and morals of the young persons concerned are fully protected and that they have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal or amend section 118(2) of the Labour Code and section 510(2) of the Family Code, in order to ensure that only young persons from 16 years who have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training may be allowed to perform types of hazardous work, in conformity with Article 3(3) of the Convention.

Part III of the report form. Labour inspectorate. The Committee notes the Government's information that 1,045 inspections involving children and adolescent workers were carried out between 2006–09. Only seven cases resulted in penalties being imposed in the same period. It also notes that under the ILO–IPEC Country Programme, a guide for the labour inspectorate to eradicate child labour and its worst forms was developed and the Executive Decree “On the eradication of child labour and the protection of the rights of working minors”, which is aimed at establishing an intra-institutional protocol of inspection for child labour and at providing for the protection of working adolescents, is awaiting final adoption. Noting the high number of children between 5–17 years of age who work in Panama, the Committee encourages the Government to continue to take measures to strengthen the labour inspectorate in order to combat child labour more effectively. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the adoption of the Executive Decree “On the eradication of child labour and the protection of the rights of working minors”. It finally asks the Government to continue to provide extracts from the reports of inspection services and information of the number and nature of contraventions reported.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the Bill on the protection of Children and Young Persons (Bill on Children) has not been adopted yet. However, the newly elected Government, through the National Office for Children and Young Persons (SENIAF), is following-up on this issue. The Committee hopes that the Bill on children will be adopted in the near future and hopes that it will take into account the Committee's comments. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on any progress in the adoption of the Bill.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the Government's report. It also notes the comments of the National Federation of Public Employees and Public Service Enterprises Workers (FENASEP) of 5 October 2009 and the Government's reply thereto of 10 February 2010.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a) and Article 7(1). Forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict, and penalties. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to establish penalties for the violation of the prohibition on the forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that the new Penal Code, as amended by Act No. 26 of 21 May 2008, punishes by up to 12 years' imprisonment anyone who recruits children under 18 years or uses them to participate actively in hostilities (section 439).

Clause (b) and Article 7(1). Using, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography and for pornographic performances, and penalties. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to establish penalties for the violation of the prohibition on using, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 176-A of the new Penal Code, as amended by Act No. 26 of 21 May 2008, punishes pimping by penalties of up to ten years' imprisonment when the victim is under 18 years. It further notes that the new Penal Code punishes child pornography (sections 180, 181, 183–185) and sexual tourism involving children (section 186). The Committee also notes the Government's information that the penalties for child pornography and sexual tourism involving minors have been increased. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's information that 53 cases concerning child pornography were investigated between 2006 and 2009. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information of the practical application of the above provisions of the new Penal Code and of Act No. 22 of 2007, including statistics on the number and nature of the violations reported, investigations carried out, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

Articles 5 and 7(1). Monitoring mechanisms and effective application of the Convention. Labour inspectorate. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that labour inspections had increased remarkably during the period 2006–08 where 1,830 violations were detected by the labour inspectorate. However, of the 1,830 cases, only eight resulted in penalties being applied to the offenders, while 31 are pending before the judiciary. According to the Government, this situation shows a lack of coordination between the activities of the labour inspectorate and the judiciary. The Committee notes that while the number of violations detected by the labour inspectorate was quite high between 2006 and 2008 (1,830 cases), the number of cases in which penalties were applied was low (eight cases). The Committee reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 7(1) of the Convention, the Government shall take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions of the Convention, including through the provision and application of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penal sanctions. It requests the Government to redouble its efforts to strengthen the capacity of the law enforcement agencies, in order to ensure that the perpetrators are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Children at special risk. Street children. The Committee notes the FENASEP's comment that, according to the newspaper La Prensa, in Chiriquí there is a network which traffics children to make them beg. By September 2009, 28 child beggars were identified in the urban area of David. The Committee notes the Government's information that the National Office for Children and Young Persons (SENIAF) created the Office for assisting and protecting street children in situation of exploitation, which is in charge of developing programmes to assist these children. It further notes the Government's information that 52 children and adolescents were removed from the street in 2008 and 57 in 2009. In 2009, 24 of the children who were removed from the street in 2008 and 39 of the children who were removed from the street in 2009, were selected for admission to the scholarships provided by the Institute for Training and Better Use of Human Resources (IFARHU) and the Committee for the Eradication of Child Labour and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (CETIPPAT). Moreover, one family was included under the "Opportunities" conditional cash transfer programme, which is aimed at helping families in situations of extreme poverty by providing them with financial allowances subject to the condition that children of beneficiary families attend school. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to remove children from the streets and provide for their rehabilitation and social integration, and to continue to provide information on the number of children removed from the streets and given education pursuant to the implementation of programmes and projects such as the abovementioned ones.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Papua New Guinea

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted that, with respect to trafficking, the Criminal Code only provided protection to girls trafficked for the purpose of sexual exploitation. The Committee observed that there did not appear to be any similar provisions protecting boys or prohibiting the sale and trafficking of children for the purpose of labour exploitation. The Government indicated that Papua New Guinea was embarking on a major legislative review and that the issues of gender and age would be at the forefront of that review.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the legislative review will commence shortly. The Committee also notes the statement by the Government in its report to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) of 22 May 2009 that, although the current legislation provides some protection against the trafficking of women, compliance is partial because penalties are low and corroboration is required placing an unreasonable burden on victims (CEDAW/C/PNG/3, page 54). The Committee further notes the indication in a report on trafficking in persons in Papua New Guinea, available at the website of the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org) (Trafficking Report) that trafficking is a significant problem in the country. The Trafficking Report also indicates that women and children are trafficked within the country for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation and domestic servitude and that women and children from China, Malaysia, the Philippines and Thailand are trafficked to Papua New Guinea for forced prostitution. Men are trafficked to logging and mining camps for the purpose of forced labour. This report further indicates that Government officials facilitate trafficking by accepting bribes to allow illegal migrants to enter the country or by ignoring victims forced into prostitution or labour.

In light of this situation, the Committee expresses its deep concern that comprehensive legislation prohibiting all forms of trafficking of both boys and girls has yet to be adopted. It also expresses its concern regarding allegations of complicity by government officials in the trafficking of children. It urges the Government to take the necessary measures, as matter of urgency, to adopt legislation prohibiting the sale and trafficking of all persons under 18, for the purposes of labour and sexual exploitation. The Committee also urges the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that perpetrators of human trafficking, and complicit government officials, are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on progress made in this regard.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, or for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction that section 229K of the Criminal Code, as amended by the Criminal Code (Sexual Offences and Crimes Against Children Act) of 2003, prohibits inviting, persuading or inducing a child to engage in prostitution, in addition to prohibiting participating as a client in an act of child prostitution. The Committee also notes that pursuant to section 229J of the Criminal Code, a child is defined in this section as a person under the age of 18 years and that child prostitution is defined as the provision of any sexual service by a person under the age of 18 years for financial or other reward, whether paid to the child or some other person.

Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest that section 229R of the Criminal Code prohibits using, procuring or causing a child to be used for the production of child pornography. Section 229S of the Criminal Code also prohibits producing, distributing, publishing, selling, importing or exporting child pornography. Lastly, the Committee notes that section 229J defines child pornography as any photographic, film, video or other visual representation showing a person who is (or who is depicted as being) under the age of 18 years and is engaged in, or is depicted as being engaged in, sexual activity.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. The Committee previously noted that the relevant legislation does not specifically prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs.

The Committee notes the Government's statement the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations undertook, as part of the review process of the Employment Act, a scoping mission of the Employment Act, which concluded that where other legislation does not adequately address the worst forms of child labour, it is appropriate to fill these gaps through the Employment Act. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that the use and procuring of children for illicit activities is slowly rising. Recalling that, pursuant to Article 3(c) of the Convention, the use, procuring or offering of a child for the purpose of illicit activities is one of the worst forms of child labour, and that pursuant to Article 1, member States must take immediate and effective measures to secure the elimination of these worst forms of as a matter of urgency, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that provisions prohibiting this worst form of child labour are adopted in the near future, within the framework of the Employment Act review. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard, and to provide a copy of the relevant legislation, once adopted.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Hazardous work and determination of these types of work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the legislation prohibits hazardous work, night work and work in mines for persons under 16 years of age. It also noted that apart from a definition of "heavy labour", the national legislation did not determine the types of hazardous work that were prohibited for children under 18 years of age. The Government indicated that a National Child Rights Monitoring Committee was established to examine issues affecting children, including the minimum age and working in hazardous environments. The Committee further noted the Government's indication that the review of the occupational safety and health legislation would begin in 2008 and address issues pertaining to hazardous work and determination of hazardous work.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations will be following up with the National Child Rights Monitoring Committee on this topic. The Committee also notes the indication in the Government's report that the conditions of work for young people will be examined through the ongoing Employment Act review. It further notes the Government's statement that the review of the occupational health and safety related legislation has yet to begin, although the Government is in the process of consulting with the Government of Fiji for assistance in the process of the legislative review. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, within the context of the ongoing legislative review, to ensure that provisions which prohibit children under the age of 18 years from performing hazardous work, and which determine these types of hazardous work, are adopted in the near future, after consultation with the social partners. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made to this end and to provide a copy of the new legislation, once it has been adopted.

Article 5 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. Monitoring mechanisms and the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that there were gaps and loopholes in the existing structures and monitoring mechanisms with regard to child trafficking, prostitution and children's involvement in illicit activities. Given this indication, the Committee expressed the hope that the Government would conduct a child labour survey to determine the magnitude of the worst forms of child labour and requested the Government to provide this information when available.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the worst forms of child labour are rising in the country due to, inter alia, growth in the mining and agriculture sectors, the increasing cost of living, the breakdown of basic infrastructure and the increasing difficulties with regard to law and order. The Government identifies several steps necessary to address this growing problem: better collaboration between various decision-making actors, the strengthening of legislation regarding children's issues and the improved enforcement of legislation through inspections. The Committee also notes the statement in the report on the worst forms of child labour in Papua New Guinea available at the website of the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org) that, while the Department of Police and the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations are responsible for implementing and enforcing child labour laws, enforcement by these departments is poor due to a lack of resources and cultural acceptance of child labour. The Committee expresses its concern at the increasing incidence of the worst forms of child labour in the country, and at the weak monitoring mechanisms for the prevention of this phenomenon. It urges the Government to take the necessary measures, including through the allocation of additional resources, to strengthen the capacity of the Department of Police and the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations in terms of monitoring and combating the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect and on the results achieved. Lastly, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the prevalence of the worst forms of child labour in Papua New Guinea is available, by conducting a child labour survey.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (e). Take account of the special situation of girls. Child victims of prostitution. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the number of girls (some as young as 13) engaging in prostitution as a means of survival was rising in urban centres of the country. It also noted the Government's indication that it was not doing enough to protect and safeguard victims of prostitution, and that only churches and civil society organizations were providing rehabilitation programmes.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that prostitution is a growing problem in both urban and rural areas. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that UNICEF conducted studies on this subject, which will be used to develop approaches for removing children from this worst form of child labour. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that measures will be taken within the framework of the ILO-IPEC Time-bound Programme entitled "Tackling child labour through education" (TACKLE project), and that the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations will coordinate with other institutions to provide the necessary assistance to these children, in addition to seeking tougher penalties for perpetrators.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report to CEDAW of 22 May 2009, from a recent study on sex workers, that the median age for highway-based prostitutes was 16 years of age, and the median age for non-highway-based prostitutes was 17 years of age (CEDAW/C/PNG/3, page 52). The Committee also notes the indication in the Trafficking Report that the laws prohibiting prostitution are selectively or rarely enforced, even in cases involving children. The Committee expresses its concern at the prevalence of the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Papua New Guinea and urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures, within the framework of the TACKLE project, to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance to persons under 18 to remove them from this worst form, and provide for their rehabilitation and social integration. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that those responsible for the commercial sexual exploitation of children are prosecuted and punished with sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Paraguay

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted that, according to a 2005 study on the trafficking of persons in Paraguay by the NGO Grupo Luna Nueva referred to by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in its comments, the trafficking of persons, including boys and girls, at both the international and domestic levels, was on the increase in the country. The number of cases of trafficking reported increased from eight in 2002, involving 12 girls under 18 years of age, to 118 in 2005, involving 145 girls under 18 years of age. According to the same study, Paraguay is a country of origin and of destination. Of the 145 girls involved in the cases of trafficking of persons reported in 2005, around 62 per cent were taken to Argentina, approximately 28 per cent were displaced within the country and 10 per cent were removed to other countries, including Brazil. The Committee observed that, although section 129 of the Penal Code prohibits the international trafficking of persons for prostitution, it does not prohibit the international trafficking of persons for economic exploitation or domestic trafficking. Noting the convergent information demonstrating the existence of the international and domestic trafficking of young persons under 18 years of age for both economic and sexual exploitation, the Committee observed that the national legislation applicable to this worst form of child labour displayed shortcomings.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the Inter-institutional Roundtable for Trafficking for the Prevention and Combatting of Trafficking in Persons (Roundtable for Trafficking), which is coordinated by the Ministry of External Affairs, was created in 2005 with the objective of elaborating policies, programmes and projects to prevent, punish and combat trafficking in persons. It notes with satisfaction that, as indicated by the Report for 2004–08 of the Roundtable for Trafficking supplied by the Government (Roundtable for Trafficking Report) new sections 129b and 129c of the Penal Code, as inserted by Act No. 3440/08, punish trafficking for the purposes of prostitution, slavery and forced labour through means of force, threats, deception, or trickery, prescribing penalties of up to 12 years' imprisonment. The same penalty applies to anyone who acts for commercial purposes or as a part of an organized group. Moreover, the consent of the victim does not constitute anymore a mitigating circumstance. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Legislative Committee of the Roundtable for Trafficking at present is reviewing a bill on combating trafficking of persons, which would cover all aspects of trafficking, including prevention, investigation, sanctions, assistance and social rehabilitation of victims. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in adopting the Bill on combating trafficking in persons and to supply a copy of it once adopted.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution. The Committee previously noted the ITUC's comments that the majority of child victims of prostitution were girls; however, also transsexual boys began to work in prostitution from the age of 13 years and were often the victims of trafficking to Italy. It further noted that, according to a study carried out by ILO-IPEC in June 2002 on the commercial sexual exploitation of girls and boys and to the Report of the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography of 9 December 2004 (E/CN.4/2005/78/Add.1), two out of three sex workers were minors. It also noted that, since 2004, as a result of the awareness-raising campaigns undertaken in the various cities of the country on this subject and the adoption of regulations on the closure of bars and brothels, the problem became more clandestine and children engaged in prostitution were more likely to be found in flats and on the outskirts of towns. Finally, the Committee observed that, although the national legislation is in conformity with the Convention, the use, procuring or offering of children under 18 years of age for prostitution still occurred in practice.

The Committee notes the Government's information that in 2009 the National Committee for Childhood and Adolescence (SNNA) reactivated the Inter-institutional Roundtable for the Elimination of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, one of the objectives of which is to be recognized at the national level. It further notes the Government's indication that a study on transsexual child victims of sexual exploitation was carried out in collaboration with the ILO. The Committee notes that, according to the Roundtable for Trafficking Report, the Government of Paraguay jointly with the government members and associates of MERCOSUR, are carrying out the Niño Sur initiative to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region. The initiative aims to raise awareness of commercial sexual exploitation, improve country legal frameworks, and exchange best practices to tackle issues related to victim protection and assistance. The Paraguayan Ministry of Tourism is part of the Joint Group for the Elimination of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children in Tourism, which conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial exploitation of children in Latin America. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any activities carried out by the Inter-institutional Roundtable for the Elimination of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, in the framework of the Niño Sur initiative and by the Joint Group for the Elimination of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children in Tourism, and the results achieved. It also requests the Government to provide information on the results of the study on transsexual child victims of sexual exploitation, and on any action taken following this study. It finally requests the Government to provide information on the application of sanctions in practice, including, for instance, reports on the number of convictions.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted the ITUC's comments that very few controls were carried out at borders, which made it very easy to transport children from Ciudad del Este or from Pedro Juan Caballero to Foz de Iguazú in Brazil, and from Encarnación and Puerto Falcón to Posadas and Clorinda in Argentina. It noted the ITUC's indication that Argentinian customs officers regularly apprehend minors who have crossed the Paraguayan border without being intercepted and either do not have identity documents or have documents belonging to other persons. By way of example, according to a study carried out by the International Organization for Migration (IOM), up to November 2004 Argentinian customs officers on the borders of Puerto and Falcón-Clorinda refused entry to around 9,000 persons, of whom 40 per cent were minors without proper documentation. The ITUC added that several Paraguayan officials in the Department of Migration and Identification and the Department of Immigration believed that they did not have the authority to intervene in cases of trafficking and supposed that the offence of the trafficking of persons could only be committed in the country of destination of the victims. Accordingly, victims of trafficking were unlikely to lodge complaints as they lacked confidence in the judicial system and feared reprisals from the traffickers. The Committee further noted the ITUC's information that few cases of trafficking of persons were reported and there were few prosecutions also due to the lack of awareness of the phenomenon in society, particularly among the police. It finally noted the ITUC's statement that the police did not have personnel specialized in investigations into the commercial sexual exploitation of children and that law enforcement agencies did not clearly understand that children engaged in prostitution may be victims of crime and that, in practice, they were often treated as prostitutes and criminals.

The Committee notes the information contained in the Roundtable for Trafficking Report that a special Unit for Trafficking of Persons has been created within the police. It further notes the information contained in the Government's report that, in the framework of an inter-institutional five-year project to address situations of abuses against children, adolescents and women (2008–13), special units dealing with children, adolescents and women have been created and trained. These units will also intervene in cases of the commercial sexual exploitation of children. It finally notes that one of the objectives of the ILO-IPEC project "Combating the worst forms of child labour through horizontal cooperation in South America 2009–13", is strengthening the labour inspection and other law enforcement agencies, such as labour courts, judges and prosecutors. The Committee requests the Government to redouble its efforts to strengthen the capacity of the law enforcement agencies, particularly the police, the judiciary and custom officers in combating the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children, and to provide information on any further measures taken in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide information on the results of the ILO–IPEC project “Combating the worst forms of child labour through horizontal cooperation in South America” in terms of strengthening law enforcement agencies.

Article 7(1). Penalties. Trafficking. The Committee previously noted the ITUC’s indication that, between 2002 and 2004, penal sanctions were only imposed in 21 cases of trafficking. It notes the information contained in the Roundtable for Trafficking Report that, according to data of the SNNA, the Women Unit, and the Attorney-General’s Office, 84 cases of trafficking persons for sexual and labour exploitation, which involved 103 women and 43 children and adolescents (42 girls and one boy under 18 years of age), were reported between 2004 and 2008. According to the same source, in February 2009, 15 persons were condemned for trafficking of persons, whilst another 50 were being prosecuted by the Attorney-General. However, the Attorney-General’s Office indicate that only 50 per cent of the cases of trafficking occurring between 2004 and 2008 had been brought before the judicial authorities. The Roundtable for Trafficking Report also indicates that, whilst actions taken in 2008 to address trafficking led to an increase in the number of cases reported in the same year compared with previous years, the number of non-reported cases of trafficking is still very relevant. The Committee notes information contained the Government’s report that, according to data provided by the Anti-Trafficking Prosecutorial Unit established by the Paraguayan Attorney-General’s Office in 2008, between 2008 and 2009, 22 trials regarding cases of trafficking were concluded with the punishment of the offenders.

The Committee, however, notes that, according to the 2009 report on trafficking of persons in Paraguay, available on the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees website (www.unhcr.org) (Trafficking Report 2009), during 2008 some government officials, including police, border guards and elected officials reportedly facilitated trafficking crimes by accepting payments from traffickers; other officials reportedly undermined investigations or alerted suspected traffickers of impending arrests. Despite the serious nature of such allegations, Paraguayan authorities took only some limited steps to investigate acts of trafficking-related corruption and there were no prosecutions related to official complicity in trafficking offences. It also notes that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 29 January 2010, while welcoming the measures adopted by Paraguay to combat trafficking, was concerned that Paraguay continued to be a source and destination country for women and children victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation and forced labour and urged the state party, amongst others, to investigate and prosecute all cases of trafficking of children to avoid impunity (CRC/C/PRY/CO/3, paragraphs 72 and 73). The Committee expresses its deep concern at the weakness of the national institutions responsible for enforcing the legislation on trafficking, as well as at allegations of complicity of government officials with human traffickers. The Committee therefore urges the Government to redouble its efforts to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement agencies in order to ensure that persons who traffic in children for the purposes of labour or sexual exploitation are in practice prosecuted, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. It finally requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for violations of the legal prohibitions on the sale and trafficking of children.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing children from becoming engaged in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from these worst forms of child labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted that one of the objectives of the ILO–IPEC project on the prevention and elimination of domestic work by children and the commercial sexual exploitation of children was to prevent the engagement of children in commercial sexual exploitation and to remove children who are already engaged in this activity. It noted that, during the course of 2006, around 150 children were removed from this worst form of child labour and received psychological help and assistance in their schooling. At the beginning of 2007, around 50 children were detected in situations of commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee also noted that shelters for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation were established.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that a trafficking unit has been created within the SNNA, aimed at assisting child victims of trafficking until their social integration. The operational plan of the SNNA for 2009 is also aimed at strengthening this unit with appropriate human resources. Moreover, in order to prevent trafficking of children and assist child victims of trafficking, regional offices of the SNNA were created in the border departments of Alto Paraná, Ciudad del Este and Encarnación. The Committee notes the Government’s information that, according to the data of the trafficking unit of the SNNA, between 2007 and 2008, 20 cases of children or adolescents victims of trafficking were reported and addressed, while 24 cases were reported between January and August 2009.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that two programmes were launched with the support of the EU and in collaboration with ILO–IPEC. The first – Alas Abiertas – is aimed at eliminating the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children in Encarnación and is carried out by the NGOs BECA and CECTEC. The second is aimed at eliminating the internal trafficking of children through the rehabilitation of child victims of trafficking and is implemented by the NGOs Luna Nueva and INECIP. As a result of the second project: (a) the number of child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation decreased; (b) assistance to child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation improved; and (c) enforcement mechanisms were improved. The Committee notes the Government’s information that the SNNA funds NGOs in charge of preventing the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children and protecting and assisting child victims of these worst forms of child labour. In this framework, the Foundation

Arco Iris is carrying out a one-year project (May 2009–May 2010) for assisting, through medical, psychological and legal assistance, children and adolescents victims of trafficking, and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration, while Luna Nueva is in charge of providing a shelter for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation who have been effectively removed, rehabilitated and socially integrated as a result of the measures implemented.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Children working in domestic service – the “criadazgo” system. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the ITUC’s indication that, according to a study carried out between 2000 and 2001, over 38,000 children between the ages of 5 and 17 years worked in domestic service in the houses of others. Moreover, children engaged under the “criadazgo” system, lived and worked in the houses of others in exchange for accommodation, food and basic education. The numbers involved were not known since, as these children were normally considered not to be working, they were not taken into account in statistics. However, the ITUC indicated that a study undertaken in 2002 by the Documentation and Studies Centre showed that nearly 60 per cent of children working in domestic service and those engaged under the “criadazgo” system were aged 13 years and under. According to the ITUC, in so far as these children do not control their conditions of employment, a majority of them work under conditions of forced labour. The Committee noted that section 2(22) of Decree No. 4951 of 22 March 2005, issued under Act No. 1657/2001 and approving the list of hazardous types of work, provides that domestic work by children and work under the “criadazgo” system are considered to be hazardous types of work. It also noted that, according to ILO–IPEC information relating to the implementation of the project on the prevention and elimination of domestic work by children and the commercial sexual exploitation of children, children at risk of being engaged in domestic service and children who worked as domestics were enrolled in school.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that a study on child domestic work in urban and rural areas of Paraguay was carried out in collaboration with ILO–IPEC in 2005. It notes that this study indicates that, according to data of 2002, almost 11 per cent of children between 10 and 17 years work as remunerated domestic workers. Moreover, approximately one third of the child domestic workers are employed as remunerated domestic workers, whilst two-thirds work under the “criadazgo” system. The Committee further notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 29 January 2010, expressed its deep concern on the persistence of the practice of “criadazgo” and recommended the state party to continue to eliminate this practice (CRC/C/PRY/CO/3, paragraphs 66 and 67). Noting the absence of information on this point, the Committee urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect children working as domestic workers or under the “criadazgo” system from the worst forms of child labour. It also requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the enforcement of section 2(22) of Decree No. 4951 of 22 March 2005, which prohibits children under 18 years from performing domestic work and work under the “criadazgo” system as types of hazardous work, is ensured in practice, including information on the number and nature of penalties applied.

Clause (e). Special situation of girls. The Committee previously noted that, according to the ITUC’s comments, activities relating to commercial sexual exploitation are linked to international trafficking networks and particularly affect girls. Noting that no information was provided on this point, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which it intends to pay particular attention to such girls and thereby prevent them from being engaged in commercial sexual exploitation and remove them from this worst form of child labour.

Article 8. Enhanced international cooperation. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest that the Government is carrying out various projects of regional cooperation to combat the trafficking of children for sexual exploitation. It notes the Government’s information that the project “Ciudades gemelas”, which is aimed at establishing a regional strategy for combating trafficking of children and adolescents for sexual exploitation in MERCOSUR and is funded by the Inter-American development Bank (IDB), is at its initial stage. It involves 14 border cities of MERCOSUR (Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay and Paraguay), including Ciudad des Este (Paraguay), Foz de Iguazu (Brazil) and Puerto Iguazú (Argentina). The project is aimed at preventing and addressing trafficking through the mobilization, organization, strengthening and integration of local networks and services. The Committee notes the Government’s information that the project called “Exchange of experiences and legal Argentinian framework on combating trafficking, with special emphasis on children and adolescents” between Paraguay (through the SNNA) and Argentina, is awaiting approval. This is aimed, among others, at: training Paraguayan officials at the National Committee for Childhood, Adolescence and Family in Argentina; elaborating a bill on trafficking in persons for Paraguay; developing protocols for assistance to victims of trafficking; and a procedural manual for assisting victims. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the measures taken to eliminate the cross-border trafficking of children, and on results achieved.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the statistics supplied by the Government on children involved in trafficking between 2008 and 2009. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the nature, extent and trends of the worst forms of child labour, including updated statistics on the number of children under 18 years involved in domestic work, working under the “criadazgo” system, and involved in commercial sexual exploitation.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Senegal

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Government is participating in the ILO–IPEC project entitled “Contribution to the abolition of child labour in French-speaking Africa”. It also noted that the Government is participating in the ILO–IPEC Time-bound Programme (TBP) on the worst forms of child labour. In the context of these two projects, the Government has adopted a strategy for the implementation of national initiatives to combat child labour through education, vocational training and apprenticeship. As a result of the implementation of the abovementioned ILO–IPEC project and the TBP, 6,208 children have been prevented from entering the labour market prematurely. Furthermore, 6,023 children have been prevented from working through the provision of education services. However, the Committee noted that, according to the statistics published in the 2007 analysis report on the national survey of child labour in Senegal carried out in 2005, of an estimated 3,759,074 children aged between 5–17 years, 1,378,724 (36.7 per cent) are involved in some activity or work in Senegal and that in 2005 more than two out of ten (21.4 per cent) children aged between 5–9 years had already worked. The large majority of child workers are found in the agricultural sector (75.4 per cent) followed by the stock breeding and fisheries sectors (8 per cent), handicrafts and work on looms (4 per cent), domestic and household jobs (3.1 per cent), sales and services to private persons (5.5 per cent), construction and public works (2.5 per cent) and other (1.5 per cent).

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that information on the impact of the action programmes under way will be communicated at a later date. It notes that, according to the joint report of the ILO–IPEC, UNICEF and the World Bank entitled “Understanding children’s work and youth employment in Senegal”, dated February 2010, in 2005, the number of children aged between 5–14 years who were economically active was estimated at more than 450,000, that is more than 15 per cent of children in this age group. The percentage is much higher in rural environments (21 per cent) than in urban environments (5 per cent). Agriculture is the sector that employs the largest number of children, that is 80 per cent of working children aged between 5–14 years, and nearly 85 per cent of these children are unpaid family workers. The report also indicates that child domestic labour is common and that nearly 22 per cent of children at work are involved in this activity in urban environments. Furthermore, those children aged between 5–14 years who are working as paid domestic servants devote an average of 52 hours per week to this activity. Taking into account all types of economic activity, children aged between 5–14 years work 27 hours per week on average. The study also shows that more than 160,000 young persons aged between 15–17 years are forced to carry out hazardous work. Expressing its serious concern at the high number of children under 15 years of age working, as well as at the number of hours devoted to these activities, the Committee once again urges the Government to redouble its efforts to combat child labour, paying particular attention to children engaged in hazardous work. Furthermore, it once again requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the number of children prevented from entering the labour market prematurely and the number of children withdrawn from work in the context of the action programmes currently under way.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, although the national legislation excludes all forms of self-employment by children, in practice, poverty has facilitated the development of such activities among children (shoe cleaners, street vendors), who engage in them illegally. It noted the allegations made by the National Confederation of Workers of Senegal (CNTS) on 1 September 2008 that even if children working on their own account can be regarded as traders, the minimum age is not respected in the informal sector. In this regard, a number of activities have been carried out by the Government in collaboration with the ILO–IPEC with a view to withdrawing self-employed children from work.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report concerning the impact of these activities. The Government indicates that under the project to support the social reintegration of children working in refuse scavenging at the Mbeubeuss dump, led by the NGO ENDA–GRAF, 149 children have been removed and enrolled in alternative training. Furthermore, 300 children aged between 12–14 years working in the handicrafts sector in the outlying suburbs of Dakar have benefited from basic training and training in skills in the context of the experimental project to combat child labour through skills development and the elimination of illiteracy, developed in collaboration with the ILO–IPEC. The Committee requests the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that children under 15 years of age who are working on a self-employed basis are removed from work. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved.

Minimum age of admission to employment or work. The Committee previously noted that section L.145 of the Labour Code allows waivers from the minimum age of admission to employment by order of the Minister in charge of labour, taking account of local circumstances and the tasks to be performed.

The Committee notes with regret the Government’s indication that the reform of its legislation is still being considered. It reminds the Government that it specified a minimum age of 15 years upon ratifying the Convention and that the waiver from the minimum age of admission to employment, provided for under section L.145 of the Labour Code, is inconsistent with this provision of the Convention. Noting that the Government has been referring to the reform of its legislation since 2006, the Committee once again urges it to take the necessary steps to ensure the amendment of its legislation as soon as possible to bring it into line with the Convention by allowing waivers from the minimum age for admission to employment or work only in the cases strictly set forth in the Convention. It requests it to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous work from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 1 of Order No. 3748/MFPTEOP/DTSS of 6 June 2003 on child labour provides for a minimum age of 18 years for admission to hazardous work. It noted, however, that, according to Order No. 3750/MFPTEOP/DTSS of 6 June 2003 determining types of hazardous work prohibited for children and young persons (Order No. 3750), certain types of hazardous work could be performed by persons under 16 years of age. For example, under section 7 of Order No. 3750 of 6 June 2003, male children under 16 years of age may carry out the lightest work in underground mines, quarries and other mineral extraction plants, such as the sorting and loading of ore, the handling and haulage of trucks within the weight limits set by section 6 of the same Order, and the overseeing or handling of ventilation equipment. Furthermore, children of 16 years of age are allowed to perform the following types of work: work using circular saws provided that authorization in writing has been obtained from the labour inspector (section 14); operation of vertical wheels, widgets and pulleys (section 15); operation of steam valves (section 18); work on mobile platforms (section 20); and the performance of hazardous feats in public performances in theatres, cinemas, cafes, circuses and cabarets (section 21). It also noted that the Government had undertaken to remedy all the provisions that are inconsistent with the Convention in the context of the legislative revision under way and to take the Committee's comments into account.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that the announced legislative revision is still under way. It also notes that the 13 decrees relating to occupational safety and health adopted on 15 November 2006 do not specifically take into account the situation of children under 18 years of age who are engaged in hazardous work, as authorized under Order No. 3750 of 6 June 2003. The Committee reminds the Government that, under Article 3(3) of the Convention, hazardous work, such as the tasks provided for in Order No. 3750 of 6 June 2003, may be performed by young persons of over 16 years of age provided that their health, safety and morals are fully protected and that they have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. Noting that the Government has been referring to the reform of its legislation since 2006, the Committee urges it to take the necessary measures to ensure that its legislation is amended as soon as possible so as to ensure that children under 16 years of age may not be employed in underground mines and quarries. It also once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, as part of the ongoing legislative revision, the conditions laid down in Article 3(3) of the Convention are fully ensured for young persons aged between 16–18 years engaged in the work provided for in Order No. 3750 of 6 June 2003. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee takes note of the communication of 23 March 2010 from the National Federation of Independent Trade Unions of Senegal (UNSA) and of the Government's report.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. 1. Sale and trafficking of children and penalties. The Committee noted previously that according to section 2 of Act No. 02/2005 of 29 April 2005 on measures to combat the trafficking of persons and similar practices and the protection of victims, the maximum sentence is applied when the offence of trafficking is committed against a minor. The Committee nonetheless observed, that although prohibited by law, in practice the trafficking of children for economic or sexual exploitation remains a cause of concern.

The Committee notes the information from the Government to the effect that prosecution and penalties are established in Act No. 02/2005 of 29 April 2005 and Order No. 3749 of 6 June 2003 defining and prohibiting the worse forms of child labour, and constitute measures to combat child trafficking effectively. However, the Committee notes that although the Act to combat human trafficking has been in force since April 2005, according to the Global Report on Trafficking in Persons published in 2009 by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) the number of persons arrested for trafficking in persons and related offences fell from 37 in 2004 to 15 in 2006. It further notes that according to the report entitled "Trafficking in Persons Report 2010 – Senegal", published on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org), Act No. 02/2005 of 29 April 2005 has primarily been used to combat the smuggling of migrants to Spain. Furthermore, according to the framework document of the National Action Plan to combat the trafficking of persons, particularly women and children, in Senegal of 24 June 2008, Act No. 02/2005 of 29 April 2005 has never been used to prosecute the offence of trafficking. According to the abovementioned document, this is largely because those responsible for its enforcement very often have little or no knowledge of Act No. 02/2005 of 29 April 2005 because the texts of laws are not disseminated.

According to the Trafficking in Persons Report 2010, in March 2009 the Senegalese police dismantled a human trafficking network sending girls from Senegal to Morocco for forced domestic work. However, this report indicates that the traffickers were released a few weeks after their arrest and no charges were brought because they were highly placed and influential members of Senegalese society. The Committee expresses its deep concern at the failure to apply Act No. 02/2005 of 29 April 2005 and the allegations of the impunity of certain traffickers. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and the robust prosecution of persons engaging in the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age are carried out, taking particular care to build the capacity of law enforcement bodies by disseminating Act No. 02/2005 of 29 April 2005. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied to the persons concerned.

2. Forced or compulsory labour and penalties. Begging. In its previous comments the Committee noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations on the second periodic report of Senegal in October 2006 (CRC/C/SEN/CO/2, paragraphs 60 and 61), expressed concern at the large number of working children and in particular at the practices of the Koranic schools run by marabouts who use talibé children on a large scale for economic gain by sending them to agricultural fields or to the streets for begging and other illicit work to earn money, thus preventing them from having access to health, education and good living conditions. It further noted that although section 3(1) of Act No. 02/2005 of 29 April 2005 forbids the organization, for economic gain, of begging by others or the employment, procuring or deceiving of someone with a view to getting that person to beg, or the exertion of pressure on someone to beg or to continue to beg, including where the offence is against a minor, the talibé phenomenon remains a concern in practice.

The Committee takes note of the comments by UNSAS indicating that the situation of street children is more worrying than ever because begging is on the rise, particularly in the country's large urban areas. It notes the Government's statement that the necessary measures are being taken to enforce the national legislation on begging. It notes, however, from the framework document the National Action Plan to combat trafficking in persons, particularly women and children, in Senegal of 24 June 2008, that Act No. 02/2005 of 29 April 2005 has never been used to prosecute the offence of begging. Furthermore, according to the Trafficking in Persons Report 2010, there was evidence of some official tolerance on a local and institutional level for the trafficking of talibé children for forced begging.

The Committee notes that according to recent information (of 26 March 2008) from UNICEF, there are an estimated 100,000 street children in Senegal. Furthermore, according to a joint report of November 2007 by ILO-IPEC, UNICEF and the World Bank entitled "Child begging in the Dakar region", in Dakar alone around 7,600 children are affected by the widespread phenomenon of begging. Talibé account for most of the child beggars (90 per cent). Child beggars are mostly very young, the average age being between 11 and 12, and most of them (95 per cent) come from other regions of Senegal or neighbouring countries such as Guinea-Bissau, Guinea, Mali and the Gambia. The report also reveals that the talibé children spend six hours a day begging on average, which would appear to leave them little time for Koranic study.

The Committee recalls that in its 2006 observation addressed to Niger on the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), it noted that three forms of begging were to be observed: conventional begging, educational begging and begging that uses children for purely economic ends. Conventional begging is the form practiced by indigent people. Educational begging is the form practiced in accordance with the Muslim religion as a means of learning humility for the person practising it and compassion for the alms-giver. Lastly, begging that uses children for purely economic ends makes children a source of business. Expressing its deep concern at the extent to which talibé children are used for purely economic purposes, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that marabouts who use begging by children under 18 years of age for purely economic purposes are, in practice, prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are applied to them pursuant to Act No. 02/2005 of 29 April 2005. In this connection the Committee asks the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions are carried out. It requests the Government to send information on the measures taken and the results obtained, including the number of investigations held and the number of prosecutions and convictions. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

Article 6. Programmes of action. National Action Plan to combat trafficking in persons. The Committee notes with interest the adoption in June 2008 of a National Action Plan to combat trafficking in persons, particularly women and children (2008–13). According to the framework document of the National Action Plan, the plan focuses inter alia on the following goals: (i) reinforcing and adapting the legal framework for the protection of victims; (ii) applying the legislation effectively; (iii) ensuring free compulsory schooling; (iv) strengthening the system of social protection for the most vulnerable children in the areas that are the main sources of trafficking; (v) providing effective protection for witnesses and victims; and (vi) improving the care and rehabilitation of victims of trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the National Action Plan to combat trafficking in persons, particularly women and children, and on the measures taken and the results obtained under the Plan to eliminate the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Children at special risk. Street children and talibé children. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the comments by UNSAS indicating that the measures taken for talibé children, although effective, are still inadequate. It notes in this connection the recommendation made by UNSAS that the social partners should be more closely involved in the search for solutions, particularly as regards fostering, education and social integration. The Committee notes the information from the Government to the effect that a project for education on family life in the daaras (Koranic schools) has been produced by the Ministry of the Family, National Solidarity, Women's Entrepreneurship and Microfinance. According to the Government, the project aims in particular to contribute to combating begging and the phenomenon of street children, to prepare talibé children for social and professional life by developing projects for educational and vocational activities and to promote the development of income-generating activities. It further notes that a partnership for the withdrawal and reintegration of street children (PARRER) was established in February 2007 and is made up of members of the Senegalese administration, NGOs, the private sector, development partners, religious organizations, civil society and the media. The partnership has set itself the objective of encouraging the public authorities to apply the national legislation effectively while engaging in advocacy at the national, subregional and international level in order to abolish the phenomenon of street children. It further notes the information from the Government to the effect that between 2001 and 2009, 1,080 children were removed from begging. The Committee also notes from the “2008 Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labour – Senegal”, a report published on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org), that the Ministry of the Family, National Solidarity, Women’s Entrepreneurship and Microfinance runs a programme of support to 48 Koranic schools that have undertaken not to engage talibé children in begging. The Committee is of the view that street children and talibé children are particularly exposed to the worst forms of child labour, and accordingly encourages the Government to redouble its efforts to identify, withdraw and reintegrate street children, particularly child beggars. It requests the Government to provide additional information on the measures taken and the results obtained under the project for education on family life in the daaras and by the partnership for the withdrawal and reintegration of street children.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age (Industry) Convention (Revised), 1937 (No. 59) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

In its previous comments, the Committee had taken note of the draft Employment Act prepared with the ILO’s technical assistance. The Committee noted the information provided by the Government that section 34(4) of the draft Employment Act provides that “no child under the age of 18 years may work or be employed to perform any work that is likely to jeopardize his/her health, safety, or physical, mental, spiritual, moral or social development, or to interfere with his/her education. No employer shall continue to employ such a child after being notified in writing by a labour officer that the employment or work is injurious to health or dangerous”. The Committee observed that this section 34(4) of the draft Employment Act gives effect to Article 5 of the Convention. It once again expresses the hope that the new Act will be adopted in the very near future in order to ensure complete conformity of the national legislation with the Convention on this point. The Committee requests the Government to communicate the text of the new Employment Act as soon as it is adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Thailand

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act which prohibits the trafficking of children for labour and sexual exploitation. Section 6(2) of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act defines trafficking of children as the procuring, buying, selling, vending, bringing from or sending to, detaining, confining, harbouring of a child for the purpose of exploitation, and section 4 defines a child as all persons under 18 years of age.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee previously requested a copy of section 287 of the Penal Code. In this regard, the Committee notes that section 287 of the Penal Code prohibits, inter alia, producing or making any document, drawing, print, picture, photograph, film or tape which is “obscene”. However, the Committee notes the information in a document entitled “UNICEF urges quick government action on child pornography” of 11 October 2010, available on the UNICEF website (www.unicef.org), that reports indicate the open display and sale in the country of graphic sexual videos involving children. In this document, UNICEF urged the Thai authorities to bring to bear “the full force of the law” on those found to be producing, distributing or selling videos or any other material related to the sexual exploitation of children, and urged the Government to investigate where and how such videos are produced. Therefore, while noting that the production of child pornography appears to be prohibited in law, the Committee notes with concern that this worst form of child labour continues to be a problem in practice. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions are carried out in practice for persons who use, procure or offer persons under 18 years of age for the production of pornography or pornographic performances. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on whether the involvement of children in non-recorded pornographic performances (such as live performances) is prohibited in law.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular, for the production and trafficking of drugs. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that while the production, importation, exportation, possession or consumption of narcotics is prohibited under the Narcotics Act of 1979, the use procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for this purpose did not appear to be prohibited. It also observed that, according to a rapid assessment conducted by ILO–IPEC in 2002, children as young as 10 years of age participate in drug trafficking, and the majority of these are children are between 12 and 16 years and are used to buy or sell drugs.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that, on this point, it is in the process of collecting information from relevant agencies. The Committee reminds the Government that pursuant to Article 3(c) of the Convention, the involvement of a person under 18 in illicit activities constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour, and that pursuant to Article 1 of the Convention member States are required to take “immediate” measures to prohibit these worst forms as a matter of urgency. Observing that Thailand ratified the Convention in 2001, and that the use of children in the production and trafficking of drugs appears to be a problem in practice, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate measures to explicitly prohibit the use of children in the illicit activities in legislation as a matter of urgency.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Trafficking. The Committee previously noted that the Royal Thai Police was in the process of establishing a specific unit responsible for combating trafficking of children and women (Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women), and it requested information on the measures taken by this Division with regard to combating the trafficking of children.

The Committee notes the information in the Government’s report that the Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women has formed teams for the investigation of particular persons and locations suspected to be linked to human trafficking and the use of child labour. It has assigned police officers (at deputy commander or commander levels) to monitor and accelerate the investigation of human trafficking cases, while coordinating with other relevant agencies. The Government indicates that the Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women has formed campaign teams to sensitize communities, villages and factories and has launched a campaign against human trafficking, in conjunction with other government agencies and private sector organizations. The Committee also notes the information in the Government’s report that it has engaged in capacity building for officials to improve their understanding of the phenomenon and to ensure the efficiency of their anti-trafficking efforts. The Committee further notes the information in the ILO–IPEC Technical Progress Report on the second phase of the ILO–IPEC “Project to combat trafficking in children and women in the Mekong subregion” (TICW II Project) of 30 January 2008 (TICW II TPR) that “Operational Guidelines on identification of victims of trafficking in labour cases” have been developed, as a collaboration between the Ministry of Social Development and Human Security (MSDHS) and the Ministry of Labour as a coordinated response to cases of trafficking for the purpose of labour exploitation. The ILO–IPEC Technical Progress Report for the project “Support for national action to combat child labour and its worst forms in Thailand” of 10 September 2010 (ILO–IPEC TPR 2010) indicates that training was provided to labour inspectors and other key stakeholders on these Operational Guidelines in 2009. Nonetheless, the Committee notes the information in the UNODC report entitled “Global Report on Trafficking in Persons” of 2009 (UNODC Report) that the vast majority of foreign victims of trafficking identified between October 2006 and December 2007 were minors (76 per cent of trafficking victims) and that Thailand remains a source country of trafficking victims. The Committee therefore strongly urges the Government to redouble its efforts to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement officials responsible for the monitoring of trafficking in children, including those in the Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women and border control officials, to ensure the effective implementation of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on measures taken in this regard.

Article 6. Programmes of action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour. 1. The ILO–IPEC TICW project and the National Plan on Prevention and Resolution of Domestic and Cross-border Trafficking in Children and Women (NPA on Trafficking in Children and Women 2003–07). The Committee previously noted the launching of the TICW Project in 2000 and noted that within the TICW II Project (2003–08), the National Committee on Combating Trafficking in Children and Women launched the NPA on Trafficking in Children and Women 2003–07. It requested information on the concrete impact of measures taken through these initiatives.

The Committee notes the information in the Government’s report that the implementation of the TICW II Project resulted in interventions in Phayao, Chiang Mai, Chiang Rai, Mukdaharn, and Bangkok. The Government indicates that the Chiang Mai Coordination Centre for the Protection of Children’s and Women’s Rights (Chiang Mai Coordination Centre) (under the MSDHS), developed a database on persons at risk for trafficking, as well the destination sites of vulnerable persons, and that this information was used by partnering agencies in the implementation of initiatives. The Government indicates that 306 community watchdog volunteers were trained in 124 villages in the Phayao Province, and efforts were made to include awareness raising on trafficking in a secondary school curricula. In this regard, the Committee notes the information from ILO–IPEC that within the context of the TICW II Project, the action programmes implemented included “Integrated hill tribe community development project for the prevention of trafficking in children and women (phase II)”, “Programme for the prevention of trafficking in children and women in Chiang Rai province”, “Strengthening the capacity of Ban Mae Chan School to launch a prevention programme on trafficking”, and “Trafficking in children and women for forced labour and sexual exploitation in Chiang Mai”. The Committee further notes the information in the Government’s report that combating the trafficking in persons is a top priority for the Government, and specific policies announced in this regard include capacity building, intelligence exchange between countries and awareness-raising campaigns. Observing that the NPA on Trafficking in Children and Women 2003–07 ended in 2007, and the TICW II Project concluded in 2008, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that comprehensive national efforts are undertaken to combat the sale and trafficking of persons under the age of 18. It requests the Government to provide information on any ongoing or envisaged national plans of action addressing this phenomenon, and on the implementation of these programmes.

2. Child commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted that the Office of the National Commission on Women's Affairs estimated that there were between 22,500 and 40,000 children under 18 years of age in prostitution (representing approximately 15–20 per cent of the overall number of prostitutes) in the country, and that these estimates did not include foreign children in prostitution. The Committee further noted that the National Plan of Action on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (2004–09) included initiatives to address child prostitution, and requested information on the concrete measures taken in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that it is in the process of collecting information from relevant agencies on this point. It also notes the information in the Government's report that a National Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (2009–2014) was adopted in 2008. The Committee observes that although the commercial sexual exploitation of persons under 18 is prohibited by law, it remains an issue of serious concern in practice. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take comprehensive measures, including within the framework of the National Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (2009–2014), to combat this worst form of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the concrete results achieved in combating the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

Article 7(1) of the Convention and Part V of the report form. Penalties and the application of the Convention in practice. Child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted that the enforcement of the existing penalties for the offences of child trafficking and child commercial exploitation were very ineffective. However, it noted the Government's indication that, according to the statistical figures of the Office of the Court of Justice, in the period 2003–04 there were 823 prosecutions concerning the offences of procuring and trafficking children for the purposes of prostitution and sexual abuse under the Penal Code. It welcomed the Government's efforts to develop a more comprehensive system of data collection and analysis of these offences, and requested that the Government provide statistical information on the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.

1. Trafficking. The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women undertakes the collection and management of basic data. The Committee also notes the information in the Government's report that interviews conducted by the police to determine whether foreign children were victims of trafficking revealed 112 suspected child victims of this worst form of child labour. However, the Committee observes that the trafficking of children remains a much broader phenomenon, noting the information in the UNODC Report that between October 2006 and December 2007, 416 child victims of trafficking were detected. Moreover, the Committee notes an absence of information on the number of persons investigated and prosecuted as a result of the identification of child victims of trafficking. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons who traffic in children for the purpose of labour or sexual exploitation are carried out. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied in this regard, as well as any additional information from the Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women on the prevalence of the trafficking of children. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

2. Commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee notes the information in the Government's report from the Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women that in 2006 two child victims of commercial sexual exploitation were reported, in addition to two offenders. The Government also indicates that there were no reported victims or offenders in 2007, and that in 2008, 23 child victims and 16 offenders were recorded. The Committee observes an absence of information on the penalties applied to these offenders, and observes that these figures appear to represent only a fraction of the number of children engaged in prostitution (with previous Government estimates indicating that tens of thousands of persons under 18 are victims of this worst form of child labour). In this regard, the Committee notes the information in the ILO–IPEC TPR 2010 that, within the framework of the ILO Project “Support for national action to combat child labour and its worst forms in Thailand”, a study has been conducted (by the Khon Kaen University) on the commercial sexual exploitation of children in three provinces in the Northeast of Thailand including Nong Khai, Udon Thani and Khon Kaen (which are major source areas for girls and women in prostitution within Thailand). The Committee requests the Government to provide information from the study conducted on the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Nong Khai, Udon Thani and Khon Kaen, with its next report. It also strongly urges the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that persons who engage in the use, procuring or offering of persons under 18 for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are applied in practice. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied with regard to the commercial sexual exploitation of persons under 18 years.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child victims of trafficking. 1. Services for child victims of trafficking. The Committee previously noted the various measures adopted by the MSDHS to assist child victims of trafficking, and noted that 3,062 foreign trafficking victims had been protected in Thai shelters and repatriated to their home countries.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the specific policies to combat trafficking announced include measures to protect victims, such as the provision of assistance to those at risk of trafficking, the establishment of a fund to assist victims of trafficking and campaigns to eliminate discriminatory attitudes against victims of trafficking to facilitate their reintegration into communities. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that the Baan Kred Trakarn Protection and Occupational Development Centre was established, and a learning centre was developed as part of its holistic assistance to victims of trafficking. Services provided to trafficked women and children through these centres include the provision of basic necessities, education, vocational training and assistance with psychological recovery. The Government also indicates that the four Protection and Development Centres in Ranong, Pratumthani, Songkhla and Chaing Rai provide assistance, protection and rehabilitation services to victims. The Government further indicates that the Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women coordinates with agencies involved in the rehabilitation and repatriation of trafficking victims. Lastly, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the National Policy and Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (2009–2014) includes measures to integrate children back into society by preparing their families and communities for their return, to repatriate children in a manner consistent with their needs and safety, and to follow-up on their reintegration, following rehabilitation. The Committee takes due note of the measures implemented by the Government, and requests it to pursue its efforts to provide direct assistance to child victims of trafficking, with a view to ensuring that victims of trafficking under the age of 18 receive appropriate services for their rehabilitation and social reintegration with child participation.

2. Measures aimed at securing compensation for victims of trafficking. The Committee previously noted that the Government had taken a number of measures aimed at securing justice and compensation for victims of trafficking, including children. It noted that the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act provides for the possibility for victims of trafficking to claim compensation from the offenders and the provision of funds amounting to 500 million baht for their rehabilitation, occupational training and development. The Government also indicated that the Accused Act, BE 2544 (2001) states that children who are deceived into trafficking, prostitution, or forced labour, shall receive compensation.

The Committee notes Government's statement that it is in the process of collecting information from relevant agencies on this point. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to indicate in its next report the number of former child victims of trafficking who have received compensation either from the offenders or through funds set up by the Government under the Accused Act BE 2544 (2001) or the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. Regional cooperation and bilateral agreements. The Committee previously noted several measures taken by the Government to combat trafficking at the regional level, including meetings of the Coordinated Mekong Ministerial Initiative against Trafficking (COMMIT). The Committee requested information on measures taken in this regard and on the concrete measures adopted under bilateral MOUs for the elimination of the interstate trafficking of children.

The Committee notes the statement in the Government's report that, pursuant to the MOU of the COMMIT signed in 2004, and following the review of the first Subregional Plan of Action (2005–07), member countries endorsed the Subregional Plan of Action for 2008–10. This subregional action plan focuses on several particular areas, including training and capacity building, multi-sectoral and bilateral partnerships, re-enforcing legal frameworks, law enforcement, victim identification, protection and reintegration and cooperation with the tourism sector. The Committee also notes the information in the Government's report that the Government signed an agreement with the Government of Vietnam on Bilateral cooperation for Eliminating Trafficking in Persons on 24 March 2008, and that pursuant to this agreement, the two governments developed an Action Plan for 2008–09. The Committee further notes that, pursuant to MOUs to combat human trafficking with the governments of Cambodia (signed in 2003) and Laos (signed in 2005), cooperation projects have been formulated and some measures implemented, including a workshop on human trafficking for Laos–Thai border officials. The Government also indicates that it is the process of initiating similar bilateral MOUs with the Governments of Myanmar, China and Japan. The Government further indicates that within the framework of the TICW II Project, technical assistance and support was provided for combating trafficking efforts related to the MOUs between Thailand and its neighbouring countries. Noting that cross-border trafficking remains an issue of concern in practice, the Committee urges the Government to pursue its international cooperation efforts with regard to combating the trafficking of persons under 18. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the concrete measures implemented in this regard, and on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1984)

The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 2006-010 of 13 December 2006 issuing the Labour Code (the Labour Code of 2006) which repeals the Labour Code of 8 May 1974, as well as the adoption of Order No. 1464/MTEFP/DGTLIS of 12 November 2007 determining the types of work prohibited for children, which repeals Order No. 15/MTAS-FP of 6 December 1958.

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government to the effect that a national policy for the protection of children and a five-year strategic plan (2008–13) were prepared in 2008 to serve as a reference framework for the preparation and implementation of child protection programmes. Among the expected results at the halfway stage of the implementation of the five-year strategic plan, the Committee observes that it is envisaged that 25,000 children and their parents in situations of extreme vulnerability will benefit from support and social assistance measures, with the strengthening of the capacities of 40 social centres and 14 education, activation and training centres for underprivileged young persons outside the school system. It is also expected that by 2013 a total of 2,400 children at risk between the ages of 12–17 years will benefit from a national programme of training, integration and assistance for the commencement of occupational activities. The Committee further notes that the Government is currently participating in a project to combat child labour through education implemented with the support of ILO–IPEC. It notes from the information provided by the Government in its report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), that various action programmes have been adopted in the context of this project, including the implementation of measures to prevent the use of children as porters and for the removal and reintegration of 625 child porters from the markets of the city of Lomé and the protection and integration into the school system of 200 children removed from domestic work in the city of Lomé, as well as strengthening the capacities of community structures for the removal and social reintegration of 1,800 children engaged in hazardous agricultural work. According to the technical progress report for the project of September 2010, a total of 3,063 children have been prevented from working through the provision of educational services and 719 children were removed from work between the months of March and August 2010.

While taking due note of the measures adopted by the Government for the abolition of child labour, the Committee notes that, according to UNICEF statistics for the years 1999–2008, 29 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 14 years are engaged in work in Togo. According to the report of the quantitative survey undertaken in four economic regions of the country (Maritime, Plateau, Central and Lomé) in 2009–10 by the General Directorate of National Statistics and Accounting, which was attached to the Government’s report under Convention No. 182, children principally work in the agricultural sector, household work and the urban informal economy. Moreover, the majority of children working in these three sectors are between 5–14 years of age. Expressing its concern at the number of children who work and whose age is lower than the minimum age for admission to employment or work, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to combat child labour, affording particular attention to children engaged in work in agriculture and the informal economy. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of children between the ages of 5–14 years who are prevented from prematurely entering the labour market and on the number of children removed from work in the context of the current action programmes.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction that section 150 of the Labour Code of 2006 provides that children under 15 years of age may not be employed in any enterprise or perform any type of work, even on their own account. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged, including strengthening the capacities of the labour inspection services, with a view to ensuring the protection afforded by the Labour Code of 2006 to children who work on their own account or in the informal sector.

Minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee notes that, under section 150 of the Labour Code of 2006, the minimum age for admission to employment or work is set at 15 years, unless derogations are envisaged by order of the Minister responsible for labour. It notes the Government’s indication that, in accordance with section 150 of the Labour Code, an order derogating from the minimum age for admission to employment has been prepared and is awaiting approval by the National Council for Labour and Labour Laws, which includes membership by employers’ and workers’ organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide additional information on the nature of the exceptions covered by the Order derogating from the application of section 150 of the Labour Code of 2006 and requests it to provide a copy of the Order as soon as possible.

Article 2(2). Raising the minimum age initially specified. The Committee notes that Togo initially specified a minimum age for admission to employment or work of 14 years when it ratified the Convention. It notes with interest that section 150 of the Labour Code of 2006 provides that, “subject to the provisions respecting apprenticeship, children of either sex may not be employed in any enterprise or perform any type of work, even on their own account, before the age of fifteen (15) years”. It draws the Government’s attention to the fact that Article 2(2) of the Convention envisages the possibility for a State which decides to raise the minimum age for admission to employment or work initially specified to notify the Director-General of the International Labour Office by a further declaration with a view to harmonizing the age established in the national legislation with that envisaged at the international level.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that article 35 of the Constitution of 1992 provides that schooling is compulsory up to the age of 15 years, which coincides with the minimum age for admission to employment or work set out in section 150 of the Labour Code of 2006.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to hazardous types of work and determination of such types of work. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that section 151(4) of the Labour Code of 2006 provides that children may not be assigned to types of work which are liable to harm their health, safety or morals. Furthermore, it notes with satisfaction that Order No. 1464/MTEFP/DGTLs of 12 November 2007 (Order No. 1464), adopted following consultation of the National Council for Labour and Labour Laws, determines the nature of the types of work prohibited for children under section 151(4) of the Labour Code of 2006 and that it contains in annex a list of the types of work on which it is prohibited to employ children under 18 years of age.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous work from the age of 16 years. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that certain provisions of Order No. 1464 authorize the employment of children from the age of 16 years on work likely to harm their health, safety or morals. For example, under section 9 of Order No. 1464, children may be engaged to operate vertical wheels, winches and pulleys from the age of 16 years, and section 11 authorizes the employment of young girls of 16 years of age on the external displays of shops and boutiques. The Committee also notes that section 12 authorizes children over 15 years of age to carry, drag or push loads of a weight of up to 140 kgs for boys of 15 years of age employed in transport by wheelbarrow. It also observes that no protection measures are envisaged relating to the performance of these types of work. The Committee reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(3) of the Convention, national laws or regulations may, after consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, authorize the performance of hazardous types of work as from the age 16 years on condition that the health, safety and morals of the young persons concerned are fully protected and that they have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to ensure that the conditions set out in Article 3(3) of the Convention are fully guaranteed for young persons between 16–18 years of age engaged in the types of work covered by Order No. 1464. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation is in conformity with the Convention by guaranteeing that in no case may the performance of hazardous types of work be authorized for children under 16 years of age.

The Committee notes the communication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of 24 August 2010 and the Government's report. It also notes the adoption of Act No. 2006-010 of 13 December 2006, issuing the Labour Code (the Labour Code of 2006), which repeals the Labour Code of 8 May 1974, and the adoption of Act No. 2007-017 of 6 July 2007 issuing the Children's Code (the Children's Code of 2007).

Article 3 of the Convention. The worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that there was no provision in the current legislation prohibiting this worst form of child labour. It noted that Togo had prepared on 23 January 2003 a preliminary draft of a Bill to define the trafficking of children, which was awaiting adoption by the Council of Ministers, and that a draft Children's Code had been forwarded to Parliament in 2002.

The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Act No. 2005-009 on the trafficking of children of 3 August 2005 (the Act on the trafficking of children). It observes that, by virtue of section 3 of this Act, the term "trafficking" is defined as the process by which any child is recruited or abducted, transported, accommodated or hosted, both within and outside the national territory, by one or more persons, for the purposes of her or his exploitation. Under the terms of section 2, the term "child" is defined as any person under the age of 18 years. The Committee also notes that those who engage in or are accomplices to the trafficking of children are liable to a sentence of imprisonment of five years (section 10) and that the penalty is doubled in cases where acts of the trafficking of children result in the death or disappearance of the victim (section 11). Section 11 also envisages the existence of aggravating circumstances which may result in the person committing the offence serving a penal sentence of ten years of imprisonment. This is the case, among others, where the victim of the trafficking is under 15 years of age at the time of the offence or where the child has been subjected to the worst forms of child labour. The Committee also notes that, under the terms of section 264(a) of the Children's Code of 2007, the sale and trafficking of children are considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour.

However, the Committee notes the allegations made by the ITUC to the effect that internal and international trafficking of children for domestic work exists in Togo. The internal trafficking affects children from poor and rural communities who are directed towards domestic work in towns, and particularly Lomé, or in fertile agricultural regions. Trans-border trafficking takes place, both from and towards Togo, from Nigeria, Gabon, Côte d'Ivoire, Burkina Faso, Niger, Benin and Ghana.

The Committee further notes the findings of the qualitative survey of the worst forms of child labour undertaken in 2009–10 by the General Directorate of Statistics and Accounting among 2,500 households in four economic regions of the country (Maritime, Plateau, Centrale and Lomé), which are appended to the Government's report. It observes that, according to the report of the discussion by the central region group, girls who are victims of trafficking are used for prostitution and domestic work, while boys are used as manual workers in plantations and quarries. The Committee notes the information provided in the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) Global Report on Trafficking in Persons of February 2009, indicating that, according to the Ministry of Labour of Togo, 1,758 victims of trafficking were identified in 2003 and 1,301 in 2004, most of whom were children. It notes that, according to the report, the number of investigations for trafficking in persons fell from 21 in 2005 (the year of the adoption of the Act on the trafficking of children) to nine in 2007. It observes that, of the nine persons investigated in 2007, six men were convicted of trafficking in persons, one for trafficking for sexual exploitation and the five others for trafficking for the purpose of slavery. The sentences received by these persons did not however exceed one year of imprisonment. The Committee also observes that, according to the indications contained in the report entitled “Trafficking in Persons Report 2010 – Togo” published on the website of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org), certain traffickers appear to obtain their release through the corruption of state officials. While taking due note of the measures adopted by the Government to combat the trafficking of children, the Committee expresses concern at the fall in the number of investigations conducted following the adoption of the Act on child trafficking, and with regard to the allegations of corruption from which certain traffickers benefit to evade justice. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons engaged in the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations conducted, prosecutions carried out and convictions obtained under Act No. 2005-009 on the trafficking of children.

Clauses (a) and (d). Forced or compulsory labour and hazardous types of work. Child domestic work. The Committee notes the ITUC’s communication reporting conditions of work which are hazardous and/or similar to forced labour encountered by many children engaged as domestic workers. According to the ITUC’s allegations, there are thousands of child domestic workers in Togo, the large majority of whom are girls from poor and rural areas of the country, and who perform various potentially hazardous household tasks in private homes and may also be called upon to sell products in the street or in markets on behalf of their employers. These children work very long days (ten hours or more), frequently have no rest days and receive no or very little remuneration. They live in the house of their employers, are dependent upon the latter, and are isolated from their families, which makes them vulnerable to abuse and forced labour. Child domestic workers are also regularly subjected to verbal and physical violence and to sexual abuse, and are often deprived of education opportunities. The ITUC’s communication also refers to a survey carried out in Togo between 2007 and 2008 of 61 girl domestic workers, which shows that the average age at which they enter into domestic service is nine.

The Committee notes that section 151(1) of the 2006 Labour Code prohibits forced labour, which is defined as one of the worst forms of child labour. It further notes that, in accordance with Order No. 1464/MTEFP/DGTLs of 12 November 2007 (Order No. 1464) determining the types of work prohibited for children, domestic work is considered to be a hazardous type of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age.

The Committee observes that, although the national legislation is in conformity with the Convention on this point, child domestic work performed under conditions similar to forced labour or under hazardous conditions remains a concern in practice. It reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(a) and (d) of the Convention, work or employment of children under 18 years of age under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions are some of the worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, immediate and effective measures shall be taken to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that children under 18 years of age engaged in domestic work under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions benefit from the protection afforded by the national legislation. In this respect, it requests the Government to provide information on the application of the provisions respecting this worst form of child labour, including statistics on the number and nature of the violations reported, investigations conducted, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

Article 6. Programmes of action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour. Trafficking of children and child domestic work. The Committee notes the conclusions of the ITUC which recommends, inter alia, the implementation of measures to assist children engaged in domestic work to leave their work and to facilitate their rehabilitation. The Committee notes the information provided in the Government’s report indicating that, in the context of the ILO–IPEC project to combat child labour through education, two workshops were organized in June 2009 with a view to the preparation of a plan of action on the trafficking of children and a plan of action to combat domestic work. According to the technical progress report of the project of September 2010, these sectoral action plans would have been adopted in December 2009. The Committee also notes that, in the context of this ILO–IPEC project, 126 children were prevented from entering domestic work and 22 were removed from this worst form of child labour between March and August 2010. All of them benefited from rehabilitation measures through education services. The Committee further notes that between June and September 2010, workshops were conducted for the training of labour inspectors on the issue of child domestic work. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and the results achieved in the context of the plan of action on the trafficking of children and the plan of action to combat domestic work in terms of the identification, removal and reintegration of children under 18 years of age. It requests the Government to provide copies of these plans of action.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Removing children from the worst forms of child labour and providing for their rehabilitation and social integration. Sale and trafficking of children. 1. National Commission for the Shelter and Social Reintegration of Child Victims of Trafficking. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indications that a National Commission for the Shelter and Social Reintegration of Child Victims of Trafficking (CNARSEVT) was established in April 2002. The responsibilities of the CNARSEVT include: (i) organizing the repatriation to Togo of child victims of trafficking identified at the borders and in the various destination countries; (ii) coordinating the shelter and care (accommodation and health care) of repatriated child victims of trafficking; (iii) supervising the family and social reintegration of repatriated child victims of trafficking; (iv) centralizing information and statistical data on child victims of trafficking, sheltered and reintegrated at the national level; and (v) mobilizing the necessary resources for the repatriation, shelter and social reintegration of child victims of trafficking. The CNARSEVT has regional committees to discharge its functions. The Committee requests the Government to provide additional information on the activities of the CNARSEVT, including extracts of reports or documents, as well as the results achieved in terms of the number of child victims of trafficking who are repatriated, cared for and reintegrated.

2. Measures adopted in the context of various ILO–IPEC projects. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indications that, in the context of the implementation of the ILO–IPEC–LUTRENA project, the direct action taken for children and their families between 2001 and 2007 resulted in the removal of 4,038 children from trafficking and the reintegration in the school system of 173 children removed from this worst form of child labour. The Committee also notes the information contained in the Government's report indicating that four transitional shelter centres for children removed from trafficking have been established, that a system to shelter and refer children removed from trafficking has been created and that 165 vigilance committees have become operational in village communities. Furthermore, according to the technical progress report of September 2010 of the ILO–IPEC project to combat child labour through education, a total of 87 children, including 63 girls and 24 boys, were removed from trafficking between March and August 2010 and have benefited from educational services and training opportunities. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue to take immediate and effective measures to remove child victims of sale and trafficking and requests it to continue providing information on the number of children who are, in practice, removed from this worst form of child labour and placed in transitory shelter centres.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. Regional cooperation in relation to the sale and trafficking of children. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report indicating that several multilateral agreements have been concluded with neighbouring countries in the context of the measures to combat the trafficking of children. The Committee notes that Togo signed the Cooperation Agreement between Member States' Police Forces on Investigation in Criminal Matters adopted in Accra in 2003 by the Member States of ECOWAS, the Multinational Cooperation Agreement to Combat Child Trafficking of Abidjan (2005) and the Abuja Multilateral Cooperation Agreement to Combat Trafficking in Persons, especially Women and Children (2006). It also notes that Togo has concluded a quadrilateral agreement with Benin, Ghana and Nigeria on border crime. It further notes the Government's indication that discussions are under way with Nigeria for the signature of a bilateral agreement to combat the trafficking of children. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts and to take measures to cooperate with countries that are signatories to the multilateral cooperation agreements referred to above, thereby strengthening security measures on frontiers, with a view to detecting and intercepting child victims of trafficking and apprehending and arresting persons involved in networks engaged in the trafficking of children. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made in the discussions for the adoption of a bilateral agreement with Nigeria.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Turkey

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

The Committee notes the Government's report, in addition to the communication of the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TİSK) dated 1 March 2010, and the communications of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İS) dated 1 September 2009 and 1 March 2010.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication of TÜRK-İS that no national policy was being pursued in Turkey to ensure the effective abolition of child labour and that the number of child workers was increasing. The Committee also noted that one of the objectives of the national Time-bound Policy and Programme Framework (TBPPF) was to establish a coherent policy for the elimination of child labour. It noted that the Child Labour Unit (CLU), established by the Ministry of Labour and Social Security had developed a policy framework for the elimination of child labour in Turkey, which was presented for comment to the various organizations concerned with child labour. The Committee further noted that the Government was implementing programmes in collaboration with ILO–IPEC, and requested it to provide information on the results achieved through these programmes.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that the framework for a national programme and policy for the elimination of child labour has been elaborated by the CLU, in response to feedback received from various parties consulted, to create a wide-ranging and integrated national policy that is participative and time-bound. The Government indicates that, through this framework, it will implement activities aimed at eliminating child labour through awareness raising, poverty reduction and the improvement of the quality and the accessibility of education.

The Committee notes the information in the Government’s report that measures to progressively eliminate child labour have been integrated into a wide variety of governmental initiatives and policies, including the Government’s Ninth Five-Year Development Plan and the Ministry of Labour and Social Security’s strategic programme for the years 2009–13. The Committee also notes that the issue of child labour is included as a priority in the Government’s Joint Inclusion Memorandum with the EU, and that the EU has provided pre-accession assistance to address this phenomenon. The Committee further notes the information in the Government’s report that the programme of collaboration between the Government and UNICEF for the years 2006–10 included activities focused on the reduction of child labour. In addition, the Committee notes that on 10 February 2009, the Government signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the ILO on the implementation of a Decent Work Country Programme, which includes the elimination of child labour as a priority.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the project entitled “Combating child labour through education” was implemented between 2004–08 by the firm IMPAQ under the coordination of the CLU, with support from the ILO, the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Agriculture. The Government’s report indicates that the project reached 4,224 families, directing 118 family members and 108 children towards vocational courses. The Government’s report also indicates that through this project, 838 training programmes were organized for teachers and school directors and 927 children benefited from the distribution of hygiene kits and school materials, in addition to the provision of classroom support and clothing. The Committee also notes the information in the Government’s report that the Ministry of National Education implemented a direct action programme on child labour in seasonal commercial agriculture, with the participation of TÜRK-İS and TİSK, from 2005 to 2007. The Committee further notes the information in the Government’s report that between 2007–08 the CLU implemented a project to raise awareness on child labour through media organizations.

While taking note of these measures, the Committee observes the statement in the UNICEF draft country programme document of 5 April 2010 that, despite progress, child labour continues to be a serious issue in Turkey, particularly in the agricultural sector (E/ICEF/2010/P/L.6, paragraph 4). Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts for the progressive elimination of child labour, particularly with regard to children working in agriculture. It also requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the results achieved through the implementation of the abovementioned initiatives.

Article 8. Artistic performances. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 16 of the Civil Code provides that children under 15 years may appear in artistic performances with the consent of their family or legal representative. It also noted the Government’s indication that activities were being undertaken in collaboration with ILO–IPEC to prepare the necessary regulations to improve national legislation concerning the permits for the participation of children in artistic activities granted by the competent authority, and requested information on progress made in this regard.

The Committee notes the statement by TÜRK-İS that a system regulating children’s involvement in artistic endeavours is necessary, to allow for the monitoring and protection of these children. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that Chapter 19 (entitled “Social Policy and Employment”) of the National Programme of Turkey for the Adoption of the EU Acquis (NPAA) (published in the Official Gazette of the Republic of Turkey on 31 December 2008 (No. 27097)), provides for the adoption of regulations in conformity with EU Council Directive 94/33, concerning the participation of persons under 18 in artistic activities. It also notes the Government’s indication that preparatory technical work was completed in this regard. The Committee further notes that the Schedule of Legislative Alignment (table 19.4.1) of the NPAA indicates that amendments on the employment of children below the age of 18 in the field of fine arts is necessary, and shall be introduced in Turkish legislation by 2010 through the draft law amending Labour Law No. 4857 (page 210). Recalling that, pursuant to Article 8(1) of the Convention, the competent authority may, by permits granted in individual cases, allow exceptions to the prohibition of employment under the general minimum age, for such purposes as participation in artistic performances, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the forthcoming amendments, pursuant to Chapter 19 of the NPAA, are in conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the relevant legislation, once adopted.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that the third Child Labour Study (conducted in 2006 by the Turkish Statistics Institution with ILO–IPEC support) indicated that, while the proportion of working children had dropped significantly, there remained 320,000 working children between the ages of 6 and 14 and 638,000 working children between the ages of 15 and 17 in 2006.

The Committee notes the statement by TÜRK-İS that, while the number of working children has significantly decreased, there are still a number of children between the ages of 6–14 engaged in economic activity. TÜRK-İS indicates that to address this issue, poverty reduction is necessary and education should be encouraged. The Committee also notes the information in the Government's report that the percentage of children between the ages of 6–14 who are working has dropped from 8.8 per cent in 1994, to 5.1 per cent in 1999 and to 2.6 per cent in 2006. Noting the absence of recent statistical data in the Government's report, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that up-to-date information on the number of working children in Turkey is available. The Committee requests the Government to provide this information, particularly on the percentage of children below the age of 15 who are engaged in economic activity, in its next report.

The Committee notes the Government's report, in addition to the communication of the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TISK), dated 1 March 2010 and the communications of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İS) dated 1 September 2009 and 1 March 2010.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that Turkey is a transit and destination country for trafficked children, who are forced into prostitution and debt bondage. The Committee also noted that a national plan of action to combat trafficking in human beings was adopted in 2003. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years is eliminated.

The Committee observes that the Government's report contains few details on anti-trafficking efforts, although the Government does indicate that the Children's Office (in the Commission of the Provinces) organizes a yearly course entitled "combating the trafficking and sexual harassment of children" for workers of this office. The Committee also notes the information in the 2009 UNODC Global Report on Trafficking in Persons that a second national plan of action to combat trafficking in human beings was prepared in 2007, and is awaiting adoption. This report also indicates that eight child victims of trafficking were identified by state authorities in 2005, and 14 were identified in 2006.

The Committee notes the information in a 2009 report on the trafficking in persons in Turkey available at the website of the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org) (Trafficking Report), that in 2008, the Government prosecuted 69 trafficking cases involving 273 suspected traffickers, a significant increase from the 160 suspected traffickers prosecuted in 2007. This report also indicates that the Government reported securing convictions for 58 trafficking offenders in 2008. The Committee also notes the information in the Trafficking Report that the Government is taking measures to prevent complicity by law enforcement agents; in 2008, 25 security officials were investigated for trafficking-related complicity, and one court official was convicted for trafficking-related complicity. The Committee expresses its concern at allegations of complicity by law enforcement officials with human traffickers. The Committee urges the Government to pursue its effort to ensure that perpetrators of human trafficking, and complicit law enforcement officials, are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of persons convicted and sentenced for cases involving victims under the age of 18. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the second national plan of action to combat trafficking in human beings, and if this plan has not yet been adopted, to take the necessary measures to ensure its adoption.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Necessary direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Children working in the agricultural sector. The Committee previously noted that the protection afforded by the Labour Code does not cover children who work in agricultural undertakings employing fewer than 50 workers. It noted that the Labour Inspection Board indicated that 87 per cent of working children were employed in small enterprises with between one and nine workers. The Committee also noted that in 2006, 41 per cent of the 958,000 working children between the ages of 6 and 17 years were employed in agriculture. The Committee further noted the implementation of the Project for Combating Child Labour through Education (2004–08) to increase access to basic and vocational education for children employed in agriculture, particularly children engaged in, or at risk of engaging in, seasonal work as migrant labourers. It requested information on the final results of this programme.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that, within the context of the Project for Combating Child Labour through Education (2004–08), 8,365 children were reached. The Government's report indicates that the Project for Combating Child Labour through Education (2004–08) reached 4,224 families, directing 118 family members and 108 children towards vocational courses. The Government's report also indicates that through this project, 838 training programmes were organized for teachers and school directors and 927 children benefited from the distribution of hygiene kits and school materials, in addition to the provision of classroom support and clothing. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the implementation of an ILO–IPEC project entitled "Guiding working children towards school" in the provinces of Adana and Karatas resulted in visits to over 2,000 children working in agriculture (or at risk of working in this sector), of which 1,620 were directed towards school. The Government indicates that 286 of these children benefited from catch-up courses during the summer, and 73 families received services.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report regarding a project started in 2005 which will continue until 2015, that (in collaboration with relevant institutions and NGOs) aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labour (2005–15 project). The 2005–15 project targets three particular groups of children, including migrant children performing paid agricultural work outside of family enterprises on a temporary basis. In this regard, the Committee also notes the information on the UNICEF website that working children in Turkey travel for much of the year in search of low-paid employment in the agricultural sector, living in squalid conditions without access to health care or education. The Committee therefore urges the Government to pursue its efforts to eliminate the engagement of children in hazardous agricultural work. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved through the 2005–15 project to eliminate the worst forms of child labour, particularly on the number of children removed from work in the agricultural sector and provided with rehabilitation and social reintegration services.

2. Children working in the furniture sector. The Committee previously noted that an action programme for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour in the furniture sector was implemented in the provinces of Ankara, Izmir and Bursa, and ended on 30 June 2007. Noting the results of this project, the Committee encouraged the Government to pursue its efforts in removing children from hazardous work in the furniture sector and reintegrating them in education or vocational training.

The Committee notes the statement by TÜRK-İS in its communication that the worst forms of child labour continue to be seen in the furniture industry. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that the final number of children who received services and educational opportunities through the ILO–IPEC action programme was 5,909, and that 1,767 poor families received educational scholarships, medical services and assistance in finding employment.

The Committee notes that the results of the survey on the worst forms of child labour in the Government's report indicate that while generally the proportion of working children engaged in the furniture industry is relatively low, in some provinces a significant number of children continue to be engaged in this dangerous work; in the province of Çankırı, the survey indicates that 5.1 per cent of the working children surveyed worked in the furniture industry. It also notes the indication in the 2009 report on the worst forms of child labour in Turkey, available at the website of the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org), that Turkish children working in the furniture sector continues to be an issue, and that these children face health and safety risks, including exposure to dangerous chemicals and dangerous machinery. The Committee therefore urges the Government to redouble its efforts to remove, rehabilitate and provide for the social integration of children engaged in hazardous work in the furniture industry, as a matter of urgency. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in its next report.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Children living or working on the streets. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication of the TISK that there were nearly 10,000 children working on the streets of Istanbul and nearly 3,000 in Gaziantep, who were working under dangerous conditions without protection. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on its efforts to protect children living and working on the streets from the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee notes the statement of TÜRK-İS that children engaging in street work was the most dangerous form of child labour in Turkey, and that while accurate estimates of children working in other sectors is available, the total number of street children remains unknown. TÜRK-İS indicates that additional projects are needed to prevent child labour on the streets, and that social and economic measures are necessary to address this phenomenon. The Committee also notes the information in the Government's report on the results of the survey on the worst forms of child labour that, of the nearly 21,000 working children surveyed in the province of Van, 6.7 per cent were working on the streets. Other provinces with high proportions of children working on the streets include Erzurum, where 4 per cent of the nearly 28,000 children surveyed were found to be working on the streets, and Elazığ, where 6.7 per cent of the approximately 10,000 children surveyed were found to be working on the streets.

The Committee further notes the information in the Government's report that since 1997, the General Directorate of Social Services and Child Protection (SHÇEK) has operated 36 centres and six homes in 28 different regions that offer rehabilitative services to children in difficult situations, including children who work in the street. The Government's report indicates that by the end of 2008, in Istanbul, 4,270 children who lived or worked in the street and their families were provided with housing, social services (including educational services) and social protection. The Government's report also indicates that 119 such children in Adana and 542 such children in Diyarbakir also received services in similar centres. In addition, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the 2005–15 project focuses on children working in the street as one of the three main target groups. Finally, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report submitted under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) that, within the context of a multi-sectoral project covering south-east Anatolia (GAP), the "Project for rehabilitation of children working in the streets" was implemented, with UNDP funding. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that persons under 18 years of age who live and work on the streets are not engaged in work which, by its nature, is likely to harm their health, safety or morals, and to provide information on the results achieved. It also requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the "Project for rehabilitation of children working in the streets", specifically the number of street children who benefited from its implementation.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the European Union (EU) had been supporting the Time-bound Policy and Programme Framework to enhance institutional capacities to combat child labour, notably in the context of projects on children working on the streets, in dangerous work or in the agricultural sector. It requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken with the assistance of the EU to combat the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the EU provided funding for a research project on the worst forms of child labour in seven provinces. The Committee also notes the information in the Government's report submitted under Convention No. 138 that the issue of child labour is included as a priority in the Government's Joint Inclusion Memorandum with the EU, and that the EU has provided pre-accession assistance to address this phenomenon. The Committee further notes the information on the website for the Turkish Minister of Foreign Affairs that the preparation of the second national plan of action to combat trafficking in human beings was funded by the EU–Turkey Financial Assistance Programme.

The Committee notes the information in the 2009 UNODC Global Report on Trafficking in Persons that voluntary return is provided to victims of trafficking in Turkey, through the cooperation of law enforcement officials, the IOM and relevant institutions in the source country. The Committee also notes the statement in the 2009 Trafficking Report that while cooperation on combating trafficking between the Government and foreign governments has improved, a lack of cooperation with some source countries continues to hamper the Government's ability to investigate and prosecute some traffickers. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to redouble its international cooperative anti-trafficking efforts to eliminate this worst form of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, and on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Uganda

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee took note of the report of the Technical Advisory Mission (the Mission) on Child Labour Issues that was carried out in Uganda in July 2009.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Abductions and the exaction of forced labour. The Committee had previously noted that article 25:1 of the Constitution of Uganda stipulates that no person shall be held in slavery or servitude and that section 25:2 states that no person shall be required to perform forced labour. It had noted that the Penal Code punishes as offences abduction (section 126); detention with sexual intent (section 134); and abduction for the purpose of reducing to slavery (section 245). Moreover, section 5 of the Employment Act of 2006 states that anyone who uses or assists any other person in using forced or compulsory labour commits an offence. Finally, section 252 of the Penal Code provides that any person who unlawfully compels any other to labour against their will commits a misdemeanour.

However, in its previous comments under Convention No. 29, the Committee had noted that the armed group Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) abducted children of both sexes, forcing them to provide work and services as concubines, these alleged activities being associated with the killings, beatings and rape of these children. The Committee had noted that, according to the report of the United Nations Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in Uganda of 7 May 2007 (Secretary-General's report of 2007) (S/2007/260, paragraph 10), the figures from 2005 suggested that as many as 25,000 children may have been abducted since the onset of the conflict in northern Uganda in Kitgum and Gulu districts. However, the total number of abductions had significantly reduced since its peak in 2004. The total number of abductions in January 2005 was estimated to be approximately 1,500, significantly reducing to 222 over the first six months of 2006. Since September 2006, there had been no confirmed reports on the abduction of children in Uganda by the LRA. Moreover, the peace talks between the Government of Uganda and the LRA had officially opened on 14 July 2006 and the parties had signed a formal cessation of hostilities agreement in August 2006, which was extended until 30 June 2007. It was initially expected that the prospects of the signing of a peace agreement would mean a potentially significant increase in the number of children released by the LRA. However, despite repeated pleas by various stakeholders, the LRA had not released children from its ranks.

The Committee noted that, in its concluding observations for the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict of 17 October 2008, the Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed concern over continued abductions of children living in border regions by the LRA, to be used as child soldiers, sex slaves, spies and to carry goods and weapons (CRC/C/OPAC/UGA/CO/1, paragraph 24). The Committee on the Rights of the Child was further concerned over the inhuman and degrading treatment of the abducted children. Moreover, the Committee noted that, according to the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in Uganda of 15 September 2009 (Secretary-General's report of 2009), the LRA has not knowingly operated in Ugandan territory since the cessation of hostilities in August 2006. Over the past four years, however, the LRA, including a substantial but unknown number of Ugandan children associated with its forces, has increasingly moved into neighbouring countries to establish additional bases; and children and their communities in the Sudan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Central African Republic have been the victims of attacks that have claimed hundreds of lives and resulted in the disappearance of hundreds of children. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, 233 abductions of children by the LRA were documented by child protection partners between 1 December 2008 and 30 June 2009. The Secretary-General further indicates that efforts to sign a Comprehensive Peace Agreement with the LRA failed and, as a result, the LRA has increasingly become a regional actor. Since December 2008, LRA elements, operating in small groups, reportedly conducted attacks against several localities in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, killing civilians, burning houses and abducting children and adults. In total, it is estimated that more than 1,000 civilians have been killed and several hundred abducted by the LRA since it increased its violent activities in 2008.

The Committee therefore once again expressed its deep concern at the situation of children abducted by the LRA and forced to provide work and services as informants, porters, hostages, as well as becoming victims of sexual exploitation and violence. It observed that, although national legislation appears to prohibit abductions and the exaction of forced labour, this remains a serious issue of concern in practice, in particular in the context of renewed violence and conflict. In this regard, the Committee once again recalled that, by virtue of Article 3(a) of the Convention, the exaction of forced labour from children is considered as one of the worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, member States are required to take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee strongly urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to eradicate abductions and the exaction of forced labour from children under 18 years, as a matter of urgency. In this regard, it requests the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed in practice. It also urges the Government to take measures to cooperate with the neighbouring countries and accordingly reinforce security measures, particularly on the common borders with the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Central African Republic and Sudan, with a view to bringing an end to this worst form of child labour.

Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Committee had previously noted that, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2007 (paragraph 5), Uganda is among the countries where parties to armed conflicts – the Ugandan People Defence Force (UPDF), the local defence units and the LRA – recruited or used children and were responsible for other grave violations. According to this report, it was estimated that, notwithstanding various peace agreements, up to 2,000 women and children may still have been held by the LRA within its ranks and had not been released. Regarding children recruited by the national military forces, the Secretary-General's report of 2007 indicated that the UPDF recruited young boys to serve in its armed forces, especially within the local defence units, which are UPDF auxiliary forces. The report of 2007 also indicated that during recruitment, age verification was rarely carried out. After training, many of these children were said to be fighting alongside the UPDF. Although the Government of Uganda incorporated, in 2005, in the Uganda People's Defence Forces Act, a provision prohibiting the recruitment and use of child soldiers, the lack of effective monitoring at the local level led to children continuing to join some elements of the armed forces. However, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2007, the Government had committed itself to strengthening the implementation of the existing legal and policy frameworks on the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict. Moreover, in December 2006, the UPDF agreed to undertake inspection and monitoring, including to verify age during the recruitment process. Furthermore, the Uganda Task Force on Monitoring and Reporting (UTF) had committed itself to working with the UPDF and the local defence units to ensure immediate and appropriate follow-up to remove any person under 18 years of age found within the UPDF and local defence units, including through referral to appropriate child protection agencies.

The Committee noted that, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2009 (paragraphs 3–7), on 16 January 2009, the Government of Uganda and the UTF signed an action plan regarding children associated with armed forces in Uganda, which obligates the Government to prevent and end the association of children under the age of 18 with armed auxiliary forces; appoint focal points at the highest level of the Government on the implementation of the action plan; provide access on a regular and ad hoc basis to the UPDF and auxiliary facilities to the UTF to monitor and verify compliance; and promptly investigate allegations of recruitment and use of children and ensure the prosecution of perpetrators. Furthermore, the action plan identifies time-bound activities relating to children associated with the armed forces in Uganda. Among others, the measures include verification visits to all UPDF facilities and regular access to all relevant UPDF units by the UTF. In compliance with the action plan, the Government of Uganda and the UTF agreed upon a series of visits by the UTF to UPDF facilities in northern Uganda in early 2009, with a view to verifying that no persons under the age of 18 were present within, or recruited into, its ranks.

The Committee noted with satisfaction that no case of recruitment or use of children by the UPDF or its auxiliary forces has come to the attention of the UTF. Throughout its visits, the UPDF extended excellent cooperation to the verification team. Furthermore, the UTF observed the UPDF recruitment process in the northern districts of Uganda from 12 to 14 February 2009. It was noted that age requirements for recruitment into the UPDF, as set forth in existing laws and regulations, were strictly observed and followed by UPDF officers in compliance with the UPDF internal circular of February 2009 containing instructions on recruitment criteria. The Committee noted that, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2009, the UTF will nevertheless continue to monitor compliance of the UPDF within the action plan framework to ensure that continuous efforts are made to prevent the recruitment and use of children and that the implementation of the action plan continues.

However, the Committee noted that the LRA, whose leadership originates in Uganda and a significant number of whose forces are also from Uganda, remains listed on the Secretary-General's annexes to his reports on children and armed conflict because of the continued practice of recruitment of children within its ranks. Although LRA violations against children were originally reported solely under Uganda country situation reporting, the geostrategic situation of that group, which is expanding its armed activities to the wider region, has prompted the request of a strategy for increased regional joint capability to monitor and report on cross-border recruitment and use of children by the LRA. The UTF has therefore been engaged in consultations with the Resident Coordinator of the United Nations Country Team in Uganda, the United Nations Children's Fund headquarters and regional offices, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations missions in Sudan and the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, on appropriate steps to establish a subregional strategy to monitor and report on grave child rights violations committed by the LRA in the region.

The Committee welcomed the measures taken by the Government and the positive results it has registered with regard to the UPDF. However, it expressed its concern at the situation of children who continue to be recruited for armed conflict by the LRA. The Committee refers to the Secretary-General's call upon the Government of Uganda to prioritize the protection of children in its military actions against LRA elements, either on Ugandan territory or in joint operations in neighbouring countries (S/2009/462, 15 September 2009, paragraph 28). The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the situation and to take, as a matter of urgency, immediate and effective measures to put a stop in practice to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by the LRA. In this regard, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a strategy for increased regional joint capability to monitor and report on cross-border recruitment and use of children by the LRA is adopted as soon as possible. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who forcibly recruit children under 18 years for use in armed conflict are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Children who have been affected by armed conflict. The Committee had previously noted that the orphans and vulnerable children policy includes interventions to mitigate the impact of the conflict on vulnerable children, especially by providing them with psychological support and with health-care services. It had also noted that a number of measures had been taken in order to rehabilitate children affected by conflict: (a) the psychological support programme for the care of children in conflict areas; (b) the creation of the National Core Group for Psychological Support, responsible for advocacy against abduction and conflict-related child abuse; and (c) the project implemented by Save the Children from Denmark and Sweden, in collaboration with the UPDF and Gulu Support Children Organization (GUSCO) with the aim of training officers in the UPDF's Child Protection Unit and promoting the observance of rights of children affected by armed conflict. Moreover, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2007 (paragraph 62), interim care centres, known as reception centres, were established in the north of Uganda in order to receive formerly abducted children, including those referred by the UPDF Child Protection Unit.

The Committee noted that, according to the mission report, the Ministry of Education and Sports (MoES) made interventions for child victims of armed conflict, as well as abducted children, and specialized schools have been built in the north of the country to give support and rehabilitate these children. Indeed, the Committee noted that, according to the report on Education Needs Assessment for Northern Uganda of February 2008 (ENA report) prepared by the Education Planning Department, the MoES has, among other things, provided psychosocial back-up support by training 50 trainers in psychosocial training, helped with the demobilization of 53 child soldiers, supported eight reception centres for former child abductees. The MoES has also constructed 27 learning centres with 114 classrooms in Kitgum, Pader and Lira for 6,000 displaced primary school children, as well as a primary boarding school at Laroo in Gulu with a capacity for 1,000 pupils. Furthermore, the ENA report indicates that many education provider organizations have contributed to the interventions of the MoES with a view to provide an interim response to the needs of northern Uganda in terms of education. The Committee also noted that, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2009, the action plan regarding children associated with armed forces in Uganda signed by the Government of Uganda and the UTF on 16 January 2009 covers different areas of activities, including preventing the recruitment of children under 18 years for use in armed conflict and releasing and reintegrating underage recruits. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts and take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from armed conflict and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of children under 18 years of age who have been rehabilitated and reintegrated into their communities through these measures, in particular through the action of the MoES and through the activities undertaken under the action programme regarding children associated with armed forces in Uganda.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2008)

The Committee notes the Government's communication of 25 January 2010 in reply to the 2009 communication of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), and the Government's reports dated 3 February 2010 and 7 June 2010. The Committee also notes the communication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 25 August 2010. The Committee further notes the joint communication dated 22 November 2010 from the ITUC, the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC), the European Trade Union Federation: Textiles, Clothing and Leather (ETUF:TCL), the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Association (IUF) and the European Federation of Food, Agriculture and Tourism Trade Unions (EFFAT), as well as the joint communication dated 22 November 2010 from the European Apparel and Textile Confederation (EURATEX) and the ETUF:TCL. The Committee finally takes note of the detailed discussions that took place at the 99th Session of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2010 concerning the application by Uzbekistan of Convention No. 182.

Article 3, clauses (a) and (d), and Article 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Forced or compulsory labour in cotton production and hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the various legal provisions in Uzbekistan which prohibit forced labour, including article 37 of the Constitution, section 7 of the Labour Code, and section 138 of the Criminal Code. It also noted that section 241 of the Labour Code prohibits the employment of persons under 18 years of age in work in unfavourable conditions or which may harm their health, safety or morals. The Committee further noted that the "List of occupations with unfavourable working conditions in which it is forbidden to employ persons under 18 years of age" prohibited children from watering and gathering cotton by hand and noted the IOE's indication that the Uzbek Prime Minister signed a decree banning child labour in cotton plantations in Uzbekistan in September 2008. However, the Committee also noted the IOE's assertion that, despite the legislative framework against forced labour, schoolchildren (estimates ranging from half a million to 1.5 million schoolchildren) are forced by the Government to work in the national cotton harvest for up to three months each year. Moreover, the Committee noted that the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights expressed its concern at the situation of school-age children obliged to participate in the cotton harvest instead of attending school during this period (24 January 2006, E/C.12/UZB/CO/1, paragraph 20), and that the Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed concern at the serious health problems (such as intestinal and respiratory infections, meningitis and hepatitis) experienced by many schoolchildren as a result of this participation (2 June 2006, CRC/C/UZB/CO/2, paragraphs 64–65).

The Committee notes the statement in the ITUC's allegations that state-sponsored forced child labour continues to underpin Uzbekistan's cotton industry. The ITUC contends that a vast disparity exists between legal commitments made to eradicate forced child labour and the practical implementation, as seen in the forcible involvement of hundreds of thousands of schoolchildren in the autumn 2009 harvest. In this regard, the ITUC asserts that, despite the Government's denial, sources in the country confirm the widespread mobilization of forced labour (particularly of children) in the 2009 cotton harvest in at least 12 of Uzbekistan's 13 regions: Andijan, Bukhara, Jizzakh, Ferghana, Karakalpakstan, Kaskadrya, Khoresm, Navoi, Samarkland, Syrdarya, Surkhandarya and Tashkent. The ITUC communication emphasizes that this involvement is not the result of family poverty, but state-sponsored mobilization which benefits the Government. The ITUC further states that production quotas (originating from the central Government and distributed through district education departments) are supplied to head teachers who then mobilize students, and that this forced labour involves children as young as 9 years old (though the majority of schoolchildren involved are 11 years or older). The ITUC alleges that these children are required to work every day, even on weekends, and that the work involved is hazardous, involving carrying heavy loads, the application of pesticides and harsh weather conditions, with accidents reportedly resulting in injuries and deaths. These children are provided with insufficient drinking water, and often resort to drinking water contaminated with pesticides out of the irrigation system. Moreover, the ITUC underlines that, although forced labour was again part of the harvest in 2010, there was an increase in surveillance operatives in cotton fields to prevent documentation of the issue, and that accurate figures on the issue are impossible to obtain. The ITUC recommends that the Government take urgent action, including measures to publicly renounce the use of forced child labour in the cotton industry, to commit all necessary resources to address this phenomenon, to improve ethical and technical standards in the cotton industry and to strengthen social dialogue in the country.

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the IOE's communication which states that the allegations concerning widespread forced labour in agriculture are an unfounded attempt by foreign actors to undermine the reputation of Uzbek cotton in the global market. The Government states that almost all of the cotton produced in the country is produced on private cotton farms, and that the well-developed education system is an obstacle to the employment of children in forced labour. The Government further indicates that it is traditional for older children to assist in family businesses, and that this practice is not prohibited. With regard to penalties, the Government states that on 21 December 2009 the Act on additions and amendments to the Uzbekistan Code of Administrative Liability was adopted which increased the penalty for violations of labour legislation and compulsory labour of persons under 18 years of age.

The Committee notes the statement in the UNICEF publication entitled "Risks and Realities of Child Trafficking and Exploitation in Central Asia" of 31 March 2010 that the issue of seasonal mobilization of children for the cotton harvest in Uzbekistan is a growing concern internationally and at home (page 49). The Committee also notes that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women, in its concluding observations of 26 January 2010, expressed its concern regarding the educational consequences of girls and boys working during the cotton harvest season, and requested the Government to guarantee that the cotton harvest season does not compromise the right of these children to education (CEDAW/C/UZB/CO/4, paragraphs 30–31). Moreover, the Committee notes that the UN Human Rights Committee, in its concluding observations of 7 April 2010, stated that it remained concerned about reports that children are still employed and subjected to harsh working conditions, in particular for cotton harvesting. The UN Human Rights Committee emphasized that the Government should ensure that its national legislation and international obligations regulating child labour are fully respected in practice (CCPR/C/UZB/CO/3, paragraph 23).

Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards concluded that, although various legal provisions prohibit forced labour and the engagement of children in hazardous work, this remains an issue of grave concern in practice. It accordingly urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of national legislation prohibiting compulsory labour and hazardous work for children.

The Committee notes the convergence of allegations and the broad consensus among the United Nations bodies, the representative organizations of employers and workers and NGOs, regarding the continued practice of mobilizing schoolchildren for work in the cotton harvest. The Committee must therefore echo the serious concern expressed by these bodies at the continued practice whereby a significant number of children under 18 are taken from school each year and made to work in the cottons fields under hazardous conditions. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, by virtue of Article 3(a) and (d) of the Convention, forced labour and hazardous work are considered as worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, member States are required to take immediate and effective measures to secure the elimination of the worst forms of child labour, as a matter of urgency. Furthermore, the Committee recalls that, by virtue of Article 7(1), of the Convention, ratifying countries are required to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including through the provision and application of penal sanctions. The Committee joins the Committee on the Application of Standards in urging the Government to take immediate and effective time-bound measures to eradicate the forced labour of, or hazardous work by, children under 18 years in cotton production, as a matter of urgency. In this regard, it requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed in practice.

Articles 5 and 6. Monitoring mechanisms and programmes of action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour. National Plan of Action for the application of ILO Conventions Nos 138 and 182 (NPA on Convention No. 138 and Convention No. 182). The Committee previously noted that the NPA on Convention No. 138 and Convention No. 182 (approved in 2008) included measures to address the forced labour of children, in particular in the agricultural sector, including: monitoring of the prohibition of the use of school pupils in forced labour; public control of the prohibition of the use of forced child labour in territories of self-governing bodies of citizens; the establishment of a working group to locally monitor the prohibition of the use of forced labour in cotton picking of school pupils; and initiatives to inform farmers on matters related to the prohibition of violating legislation on the engagement of children in agricultural work. However, the Committee also noted the IOE's allegation that it remained uncertain as to whether the implementation of these adopted measures would be sufficient to address the deeply rooted practice of forced child labour in the cotton fields.

The Committee notes the ITUC's statement that the NPA on Convention No. 138 and Convention No. 182 requires improvement. For the NPA on Convention No. 138 and Convention No. 182 to be credible and effective, forced child labour needs to be eradicated, and the monitoring of this phenomenon must be completely independent. The ITUC recommends that a comprehensive national action plan which recognizes and addresses the root causes of this practice must be put in place.

The Committee notes the detailed report submitted by the Government dated 3 February 2010 on the implementation of the NPA on Convention No. 138 and Convention No. 182. The Government indicates in this report that on 3 November 2009, the Ministry of Public Education and the Ministry of Higher and Secondary Special Education adopted and implemented a joint resolution on "Measures to apply the Minimum Age Convention and the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention in the education system" (No.1-04/340, No. 43 and No. 322). Pursuant to this resolution, heads of educational institutions have personal responsibility for the protection of students and their attendance at school and that monitoring will be carried out concerning the prohibited use of compulsory labour of students in schools. The Committee also notes that, by February 2010, information seminars were held in 11 provinces to explain the prohibition on employing children in agricultural work to farmers. The Committee further notes the information in the Government's report of 7 June 2010, that an interdepartmental working group was established, and a programme approved, for on-the-ground monitoring to prevent the use of forced labour by schoolchildren during the cotton harvest. The Government indicates that the supervision of labour legislation and regulations (including the prohibition on employing children in adverse working conditions) is carried out by the specifically authorized stated legal and technical inspections of the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection and trade union workers, pursuant to section 9 of the Labour Code and Government Resolution No. 29 of 19 February 2010. In addition, the Committee notes the Government's indication in this report that it is collaborating with UNICEF, which is carrying out a subproject entitled "Support for the implementation of the NPA on child labour" within the framework of the UNICEF Child Protection Programme for the country. In this regard, the Committee notes that the 2009 UNICEF factsheet entitled "Uzbekistan Fast Facts" (available on the UNICEF website: www.unicef.org) states that ensuring all children stay in school throughout the entire academic year and are not forced to harvest cotton is a priority for the Child Protection Programme. Another document on the UNICEF website entitled "The situation of women and children in Uzbekistan" states that the issue of child labour in the cotton sector remains to be fully addressed.

While noting the Government's information on the numerous measures taken to monitor the involvement of schoolchildren in the cotton harvest, including measures taken within the framework of the NPA on Convention No. 138 and Convention No. 182, the Committee notes an absence of information from the Government on the concrete results of this monitoring, particularly information on the number of children, if any, detected by the labour inspectorate (or any other national monitoring mechanism) engaged to work in the cotton harvest. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to provide information on the concrete impact of the various measures taken to monitor the prohibition of the use of forced child labour in the agricultural sector. Furthermore, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate in enforcing the laws giving effect to the Convention to ensure that school-age children in rural and disadvantaged areas are not removed from school for the purpose of cotton production and harvesting. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the results achieved in this regard, particularly the number and nature of violations detected with regard to children under 18 working in the cotton harvest, and the penalties imposed.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. Forced or compulsory labour in cotton production and hazardous work. The Committee notes that, while the Government provides information on the application of labour legislation and the employment of children in general, the Government does not provide any information on the engagement of children in the autumn 2010 cotton harvest, including their use in situations of forced labour or hazardous work. Nonetheless, it appears to the Committee that this practice remains prevalent in the country, especially in view of the ongoing project carried out with the assistance of UNICEF to address the situation of child labour in the cotton sector. In light of the Government's assertion that children are not involved in the cotton harvest, the Committee considers it essential that independent monitors be granted unrestricted access to document the situation during the cotton harvest. In this regard, the Committee observes that the ITUC, ETUC, IUF, EFFAT, ETUF:TCL and EURATEX believe that a mission must be carried out as soon as possible in order to address the practice of child labour in the cotton sector and to initiate steps towards its eradication. The Committee further observes that the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards urged the Government to accept a high-level ILO tripartite observer mission that would have full freedom of movement and timely access to all situations and relevant parties, including in the cotton fields, in order to assess the implementation of Convention No. 182. Noting that the Government has yet to respond positively to this recommendation, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to accept a high-level ILO tripartite observer mission, and expresses the firm hope that such an ILO mission can take place in the very near future.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 100th Session and to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1987)

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour. The Committee previously noted that the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela cooperates with ILO–IPEC and launched several projects for the elimination of child labour and the protection of young workers. It noted that a Pilot Action Plan for Street Children was adopted and that social programmes to eliminate child labour had been implemented. The Committee further noted that the Government launched a programme for the protection of boys, girls and young people (PRONAT) which was aimed at supervising the working conditions of boys, girls and young workers in the formal and the informal sector, thus securing better protection of their health and their personal and social development.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the Ministry for Participation and Social Protection, jointly with the National Committee for the Rights of Children and Adolescents (IDENA), launched the programme Neighbourhood Children Mission, which is aimed at guaranteeing the rights of children and adolescents, especially those in situations of extreme poverty, in the framework of the goals of the National Economic and Social Development Plan 2007–13. Among the programmes implementing the mission, the Programme for decent work of boys, girls and adolescents (PRODINAT) has been launched in 2008 and is aimed at ensuring the young workers' labour rights (working time, wages, social security, etc.) in order to progressively abolish child labour and protect the work of adolescents. In 2009, PRODINAT was implemented through five projects in five states, respectively, and benefited in total 427 young workers. The Committee also notes the Government's information that in 2008 the Ministry of Environment and the Ministry of Participation and Social Protection jointly participated in a project for ensuring decent conditions to people who live and work in the garbage dumps in the outskirts. In this framework, IDENA carried out a rapid assessment on children and adolescents who worked in the garbage dumps in conditions harmful for their health. Following the results of this assessment, the Neighbourhood Children Mission, through its programme Integral Protection Community Centres, took action to address the situation of children and adolescents working in San Vicente. The Committee notes that, according to the 2008 Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labour in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, Phase I of the Neighborhood Children Mission is planned to offer services to 3,600 vulnerable children, including street children, working children and children at risk of working. Phase II of the programme plans to provide educational, sports and cultural activities to poor children. The Committee appreciates the steps taken by the Government to combat child labour and requests it to continue to provide information on the implementation of the projects referred to above and the results obtained in terms of the progressive abolition of child labour.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted that, according to UNESCO statistics for 2005, 92 per cent of girls and 91 per cent of boys attended primary school whereas only 67 per cent of girls and 59 per cent of boys attended secondary school. It noted that, in its concluding observations on the Government's second periodic report in October 2007 (CRC/C/VEN/CO/2, paragraphs 66–67), the Committee on the Rights of the Child, while welcoming the progress made particularly with regard to enrolment rates and school attendance by disadvantaged children, expressed concern at the low secondary-school enrolment rate of indigenous children, children of African descent and children living in rural areas, and at the high school drop-out rate.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the increased school attendance rates are the result of policies implemented by the Government in the last ten years, such as the elimination of tuition fees and construction and rehabilitation of school infrastructures. It notes that, according to the statistics from the Ministry of Education provided by the Government, the number of children enrolled in basic education increased from 4,885,779 in 2005–06 to 4,984,453 in 2006–07. The number of children enrolled in secondary education also increased from 671,140 in 2005–06 to 711,305 in 2006–07. Moreover, drop-outs rates in primary education decreased from 191,454 in 2004–05 to 128,423 in 2005–06. Drop-out rates in the first year of secondary education also slightly decreased from 35,375 in 2004–05 to 35,231 in 2005–06. It also notes that, according to UNESCO statistics for 2007, secondary-school attendance rates increased from 67 per cent for girls and 59 per cent for boys in 2005 to 73 per cent for girls and 64 per cent for boys in 2007. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that between 2002 and 2007 the percentage of the population living in conditions of extreme poverty decreased from 20.1 per cent to 9.7 per cent. It also notes the Government's indication that it is developing a policy for social inclusion addressed in particular at vulnerable children and adolescents. This policy aims, inter alia, at increasing school attendance rates and decreasing school drop-out rates. This policy is implemented through various missions, projects and programmes, which have the objective of ensuring the right of all children and adolescents, including indigenous children, to a full education, as well as improving school infrastructures, training teachers and addressing child nutritional issues. These programmes include: the Bolivarian School project; the Bolivarian Secondary Schools project (which especially targets youth living in rural or border areas and indigenous youth); and the Programme of Bilingual Intercultural Education (aimed at training indigenous teachers). The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the Neighbourhood Children Mission through its implementation programmes also addresses the right to education of vulnerable children and adolescents. Furthermore, PRODINAT ensures the rights of child and adolescent workers by integrating in schools those who do not attend school and ensuring time for education to those who attend school.

The Committee notes the measures taken by the Government to increase school enrolment rates and reduce drop-out rates, including through reducing poverty and addressing the situation of vulnerable children such as indigenous children and those living in rural areas. However, it is still concerned at the net school attendance rate, which is lower in secondary education. In view of the fact that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system in the country, especially in secondary education, with special attention to the situation of vulnerable children such as indigenous children, children of African descent and children living in rural areas. In this regard, it requests the Government to supply information on the effective and time-bound measures taken in the context of the abovementioned programmes, to further increase school attendance rates and reduce school drop-out rates. It finally requests the Government to continue to provide updated statistical information on school attendance rates and drop-out rates.

Article 3(1) and (3). Age of admission to hazardous work and authorization to work from the age of 16. The Committee noted previously that section 96(1) of the 1998 Act on the protection of children and young people prohibits the employment of young persons aged between 14–18 years in the types of work expressly prohibited by the law. It nonetheless noted that, under the terms of section 96, the national executive authority may, by decree, determine minimum ages that are higher than 14 years for types of work that are hazardous or harmful to the health of young persons. It also noted the Government's indication in this connection that the National Institute for Prevention, Safety and Health at Work (INPSASEL) was exploring whether it was necessary to adopt a decree determining minimum ages higher than 14 years and that, once the list of hazardous types of work was adopted, minimum ages would be recommended taking into account the overarching interests and the health of young people. It finally noted the Government's information that in its research INPSASEL would take account of the provisions of Article 3(1) and (3) of the Convention.

The Committee notes that no information on the results of the INPSASEL's study is contained in the Government's report. The Committee understands that no decree fixing an age higher than 14 years for performing types of hazardous work has been adopted so far.

The Committee reminds the Government that, in accordance with Article 3(1) of the Convention, the minimum age for admission to any type of employment or work which by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out is likely to jeopardize the health, safety or morals of young persons shall not be less than 18 years. It also reminds the Government that Article 3(3) of the Convention authorizes, under strict conditions respecting protection and prior training, the employment or work of young persons between the ages of 16–18. It also recalls that this provision of the Convention constitutes a limited exception to the general rule of the prohibition on young persons under 18 years of age from performing hazardous types of work, and does not constitute an overall authorization to undertake hazardous work from the age of 16 years. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that its legislation is amended so that hazardous work may only be authorized for young persons over 16 years of age, provided that the requirements set forth by Article 3(3) of the Convention are met.

Article 3(2). Determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the Government's information that INPSASEL completed its study on the classification of types of work that are hazardous for children and young persons and that a multidisciplinary team would conduct further studies to determine, on a scientific basis and using test cases, what exactly is to be understood by hazardous work.

The Committee notes the Government's information that IDENA is studying and elaborating a proposal for a Guide for Prevention for the Classification of types of hazardous work for child and adolescent workers. However, it notes with deep concern that no list of the types of hazardous work appears to have been established. Noting that the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela ratified this Convention more than 20 years ago, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to adopt the list of types of hazardous work to be prohibited for children under 18 years at the earliest possible date and requests it to provide information on any progress made in this respect in its next report. The Government is also asked to send information on the consultations held with employers' and workers' organizations to determine these types of work.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the statement of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) to the effect that child labour was widespread in the informal sector and in non-regulated activities in the country. According to certain estimates, some 1.2 million children were working, particularly in agriculture, the domestic service and as street vendors, and more than 300,000 were working in the informal economy. It noted the Government's indication that the INPSASEL, together with the inspection service of the Ministry of Labour, were carrying out inspections in the area of child labour both in the formal and in the informal sectors. It also noted that, according to the Government, the implementation of the PRONAT programme showed that there were boys, girls and young people working in the streets or in the agricultural sector and that their activities increased during holiday periods. It further noted the Government's statement that, notwithstanding the lack of official statistics on the number of children and young people who work, it doubted the accuracy of the ITUC's estimates on the number of working children.

However, the Committee notes that the Government itself provides no updated statistical information on the global number of children working in the formal and informal economy in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela. It further observes that, in its concluding observations on the Government's second periodic report in October 2007 (CRC/C/VEN/CO/2, paragraph 70), the Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed its concern at the lack of information on the reality and scope of child labour as well as at the number of cases reported on children working in slavery-like conditions. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the number of children and young persons who are engaged in economic activity is made available. It also asks the Government to supply updated statistical information, disaggregated by sex and age, relating to the employment of children and young persons throughout the national territory, including extracts from the reports of the inspections of the Ministry of Labour and the INPSASEL and information on the number and nature of contraventions reported.

Article 3(a) and (b) and Article 7(1) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children, the use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, and penalties. The Committee previously noted, in its comments under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in which it referred to the "widely reported" trafficking of women and children for prostitution. It further noted that the national legislation contains various provisions penalizing the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age or their use, procuring or offering for prostitution. It noted that, in its concluding observations on the Government's combined fourth, fifth and sixth periodic reports of January 2006 (CEDAW/C/VEN/CO/6, paragraphs 27 and 28), the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), while noting the preventive efforts in place aimed at addressing the root causes of prostitution, expressed concern that insufficient steps had been taken to curtail the exploitation of prostitution and to discourage demand. The Committee finally noted that, according to the information contained in the Government's second periodic report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) in December 2006 (CRC/C/VEN/2, paragraph 187), child prostitution is one of the most serious problems confronting the country.

The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government in its report on the measures taken to prevent and combat the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. As part of these measures, government officials were trained on trafficking of persons, including illicit trafficking of migrant workers. It also notes the Government's information that, in the framework of the anti-trafficking collaboration with UNICEF, a bill on trafficking of persons is pending. The Committee notes that the 2009 Report on Trafficking in Persons in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, available on the website of the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org), indicates that the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela is a source, transit and destination country for men, women and children trafficked for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation and forced labour. Venezuelan women and girls are trafficked within the country for commercial sexual exploitation, lured from poor interior regions to urban and tourist areas such as Caracas and Margarita Island. Some Venezuelan children are forced to work as street beggars or as domestic servants. Venezuelan women and girls are trafficked transnationally for commercial sexual exploitation to Mexico, in addition to Caribbean destinations such as Trinidad and Tobago, Netherlands Antilles and the Dominican Republic. Furthermore, men, women and children from Colombia, Peru, Ecuador, Brazil, Dominican Republic and Asian nations such as the People's Republic of China are trafficked to and through the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, and may be subjected to commercial sexual exploitation and forced labour. A more recent trend appears to be increased human trafficking activity in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela's Orinoco River Basin area and border regions of Tachira state, where political violence and infiltration by armed rebel groups are common.

The Committee further notes that, according to the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) 2009 Global Report on Trafficking in Persons, which contains information for the period 2004–07, the number of persons prosecuted for the offence of trafficking of persons and other related offences decreased from 18 in 2005 to four in 2007 (12 persons were convicted for these offences in 2005 and only one in 2007). Moreover, the Committee notes that the 2009 Report on Trafficking in Persons in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela indicates that the Government did not show evidence of progress in convicting and sentencing trafficking offenders and providing adequate assistance to victims. In particular, the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela made limited anti-trafficking law enforcement efforts over 2008: despite existing legal tools for punishing many forms of human trafficking, the Venezuelan Government did not report any convictions or sentences of trafficking offenders in 2008. However, the Government opened six investigations of transnational sex trafficking, one investigation of transnational labour trafficking, and one investigation of suspected internal trafficking. There were no confirmed reports of government complicity with human trafficking in 2008, though corruption among public officials, particularly related to the issuance of false identity documents, appeared to be widespread. Moreover, many Venezuelan law enforcement officials reportedly did not distinguish between human trafficking and alien smuggling offences.

The Committee expresses its concern at the information concerning the persistence of the problem of trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labour in the country as well as at the limited anti-trafficking law enforcement efforts to address the issue. The Committee therefore urges the Government to redouble its efforts to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement agencies in order to ensure that persons who traffic in children for the purposes of sexual or labour exploitation are in practice prosecuted, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for violations of the legal prohibitions on the sale and trafficking of children. It finally requests the Government to provide information on any developments in adopting the bill on trafficking of persons.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted that the Government adopted a National Plan of Action against Abuse and Commercial Sexual Exploitation (PANAESC), the objectives of which include the prevention and protection of children under 18 years of age from sexual exploitation and their rehabilitation. It further noted that, in its concluding observations of January 2006 (CEDAW/C/VEN/CO/6, paragraphs 27 and 28), CEDAW, while noting the socio-economic and preventive measures in place to address the root causes of prostitution, expressed concern that insufficient steps had been taken for rehabilitation.

The Committee notes the Government's information that it has adopted, especially through the National Committee for the Rights of Children and Adolescents (IDENA) and the Ministry for Internal Affairs and Justice, various measures to prevent the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. The more recent measures include: the adoption of the National Plan to prevent, combat and sanction trafficking of persons as well as assist its victims (National Plan to combat trafficking); and the development and publication of guidelines for the protection of child and adolescent victims of pornography as a form of commercial sexual exploitation. Various public awareness campaigns were also carried out against the dangers of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to prevent the engagement of children in trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and to provide information in this regard.

Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee notes the Government's information that, in the framework of the anti-trafficking collaboration with UNICEF, a guide for protecting and assisting victims of trafficking of persons, especially women, children and adolescents, was elaborated. It also notes that the National Plan to combat trafficking also targets assistance to victims of trafficking. It finally notes that one of the objectives of the PANAESC is rehabilitating child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Noting the absence of information on any effective and time-bound measures taken in the context of the National Plan to combat trafficking and the PANAESC with a view to providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and for their rehabilitation and social integration, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted in this regard. In this respect, it requests the Government to indicate whether reception centres for child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation have been established in the country, with an indication of the number of children actually received by such centres; and whether specific medical and social follow-up programmes have been formulated and implemented for child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.

Article 8. International cooperation. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that since 2006 the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela is cooperating with various international organizations, such as the International Organization for Migration (IOM), UNICEF and the Organization of American States (OAS), as well as at the regional level in the framework of MERCOSUR, in order to eliminate the sale and trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. It also notes that, according to the Trafficking Report, the Venezuelan Ministry of Tourism is part of the Joint Group for the Elimination of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children in Tourism, which conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial exploitation of children in Latin America. Moreover, the Government of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, jointly with the government members and associates of MERCOSUR, is carrying out the Niño Sur initiative to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region. The initiative aims to raise awareness of commercial sexual exploitation, improve country legal frameworks, and exchange best practices to tackle issues related to victim protection and assistance. The Committee notes the Government's information that, in the framework of the Niño Sur initiative, a regional legislative database on the prevention and fight against the sale, trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children has been created. It also notes the Government's indication that proposals of cooperation with the Governments of Brazil and Uruguay on the elimination of the sale and trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children are being carried out. The Committee finally notes that, according to the information available at the Office, in 2007 the Bi-national Forum between the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and Brazil on trafficking of persons was carried out with the objective of exchanging information and cases of good practice on the subject. In this framework, the two governments committed to develop actions against the crime of trafficking of persons, especially in the border areas, and to sign a bilateral agreement against trafficking of persons. Furthermore, in January 2007, the forum "Latin American experiences in assisting victims of trafficking of persons" was carried out, in which the Governments of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, Panama and Peru participated. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to cooperate with countries with which it shares frontiers in order to eliminate the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. It also requests it to provide information on further measures taken in this regard and results achieved.

Parts IV and V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that, in its conclusions on the Government's second periodic report of October 2007, the CRC regretted the lack of information and data on the sexual exploitation and sale of children. It further noted that, in its concluding observations of January 2006 (CEDAW/C/VEN/CO/6, paragraph 28), the CEDAW requested the Government to include in its next periodic report a comprehensive assessment, based on appropriate studies, on the causes and extent of prostitution, as well as the trafficking of women and girls, with information disaggregated by age and geographical area, and to provide details of the results achieved. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to conduct a global evaluation of the causes and extent of the trafficking and prostitution of children under 18 years of age.

The Committee notes the Government's information that it will take the necessary measures in this regard and provide the relative information. It also notes the Government's information that, in the framework of the annual work plan of the National Statistical Office in collaboration with UNICEF, and in the context of the implementation of the PANAESC, various activities were carried out to ensure the visibility of children and adolescents within national statistics. Moreover, a central national system is planned for reporting the violations of the rights of children and adolescents. The Committee hopes that the Government will carry out in the very near future a global evaluation of the causes and extent of the trafficking and prostitution of children under 18 years of age, and requests it to provide information on its results, once undertaken. Noting the measures taken by the Government to ensure the visibility of children and adolescents within national statistics and to improve the system for reporting the violations of their rights, the Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the nature, extent and trends of the worst forms of child labour, including updated statistics on the number of children under 18 years involved in trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, as well as information on the number of infringements reported regarding the violation of the provisions giving effect to the Convention. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Zimbabwe

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the communication of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) dated 21 September 2009, as well as the Government's brief report.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Labour Act of 2002 and the Labour Relation Regulations of 1997 do not apply to self-employed workers. The Committee noted, however, the Government's indication that it planned to undertake consultations with the social partners with a view to amending the legislation in order to explicitly cover all types of employment or work, within the framework of the ongoing labour law reform.

The Committee notes the ZCTU's contention that the informal economy is among the sectors where child labour is the most common. The Committee also notes with regret an absence of information in the Government's report on any ongoing labour legislation reform, or on any other measures taken to protect children engaged in work on their own account. However, the Committee notes the information in the ILO-IPEC Draft Rapid Assessment Survey on the worst forms of child labour in Zimbabwe (ILO-IPEC Rapid Assessment Survey), conducted in September 2008, that, of the working children surveyed, a full 87 per cent were self-employed. Therefore, the Committee reminds the Government that the Convention applies to all branches of economic activity, including the informal sector, and that it covers any type of employment or work, whether or not it is performed on the basis of an employment relationship and whether or not it is remunerated. In this regard, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children working outside an employment relationship, particularly in the informal economy or on a self-employed basis, benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide information any other measures taken or envisaged in this respect, in addition to up-to-date information on the status of the proposed labour law reform.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, while section 5 of the Education Act of 1996 states that it is the objective for primary education to be compulsory for every child of school-going age, in practice, primary education is neither free nor compulsory and that the quality of education is low. The Committee also noted that, according to the 2004 labour force survey, out of a significant number of children between the ages of 5–14 years involved in economic activities, 4 per cent had never attended school and 14 per cent had left school. Among children between the ages of 5–14 years performing non-economic labour, such as household chores, 6 per cent had never attended school and 35 per cent had left school. The Committee further noted the ZCTU's contention that very young children engaged in work to pay for their school fees. The ZCTU stated that the Government should reintroduce free education at the primary level in order to contribute to eradicating child labour. In addition, the Committee noted the Government's indication that it had launched various programmes, such as the Basic Education Assistance Module (BEAM) and the National Action Plan for orphans and other vulnerable children (OVC NPA), aimed at ensuring that children attend school. The Government also indicated that consultations would be held with the Ministry of Education, Sports and Culture concerning legislation fixing a specific age for the completion of compulsory schooling.

The Committee notes that the ZCTU, in its more recent allegations of 2009, contends that school drop-outs are a common phenomenon, with children below the age of 13 seeking employment. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the review of legislation with respect to fixing a specific age for the completion of compulsory schooling will be pursued in the context of phase II of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Project (WFCL Project). The Committee further notes the statement in the draft Five-Year National Programme for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour of April 2009, from the Ministry of Labour and Social Services (draft WFCL document) that the number of school drop-outs has been constantly increasing in recent years, affecting girls disproportionately, and that children are not attending school to save on educational expenses and increase the labour supply. In addition, the Committee notes the information in the ILO-IPEC Rapid Assessment Survey that the cost of education was a major obstacle in access to education: of the children surveyed who had dropped out of school, 48 per cent had done so because their parents could not pay for school fees and, of the children who had never attended school, 59 per cent said that this was due to financial reasons. Recalling that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts, within the framework of the WFCL Project, to provide for compulsory education up to the minimum age of admission to employment of 14 years. The Committee also requests the Government to redouble its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system, and to take measures to address the financial barriers that prevent children from attending school. Furthermore, noting an absence of information in the Government's report on the BEAM and the OVC NPA, it once again requests the Government to provide information on the impact of these programmes on increasing school attendance and reducing school drop-out rates, so as to prevent the engagement of children in child labour

Article 6. Apprenticeship. The Committee previously noted that section 11(1)(a) and (3)(b) of the Labour Act of 2002 permits the employment of apprentices from the age of 13 years, while Chapter 4, Part IV, subsection 1(a), of the Manpower Planning and Development Act prescribes that the minimum age for apprenticeship is 16 years. The Committee observed that permitting the employment of apprentices from the age of 13 years, pursuant to the Labour Act, was not in conformity with Article 6 of the Convention. The Committee further noted the Government's statement that it recognized the need for harmonized legislation in the area of apprenticeships, and indicated that this would be addressed in the ongoing labour law reform, in consultation with the social partners. Noting an absence of information on this point in the Government's report, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, within the framework of the ongoing labour law reform, to harmonize the relevant legislation, in particular section 11(1)(a) and (3)(b) of the Labour Act, and Chapter 4, Part IV, subsection 1(a), of the Manpower Planning and Development Act, in order to ensure conformity with Article 6 of the Convention.

Article 7(1) and (4). Minimum age for admission to, and determination of, light work. The Committee previously noted that section 3(4) of the Labour Relations Regulations establishes that children over 13 years of age may perform light work where such work is an integral part of a course of education or training and does not prejudice their education, health and safety. The Committee also noted that quite a number of children below 13 years of age were economically active; the 2004 labour force survey indicated that 406,958 children aged 5–14 were engaged in work at least three hours per day. The Committee further noted the Government's statement that it intended to consult with the social partners with a view to amending its legislation so as to detail the types of light work, which may be undertaken by children from the age of 13 years and the conditions in which such work may be undertaken. The Government indicated that this would be conducted within the framework of the WFCL Project.

The Committee notes the ZCTU's contention, that children in Zimbabwe often start work below the age of 13. The Committee also notes, once again, the Government's statement that the detailing of light work will be pursued in the context of phase II of the WFCL Project, though notes that this objective is not included in the draft WFCL document. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, within the framework of the implementation of phase II of the WFCL Project, to ensure the determination of types of light work which may be performed by children from the age of 13 years and the conditions in which such work may be undertaken.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that the 2004 labour force survey indicated that 42 per cent of children between the ages of 5–14 years were involved in economic child labour (defined as engaging in economic activities for at least three hours a day and that 2 per cent of these children were involved in non-economic child labour (defined as non-economic work for at least five hours a day). The Committee encouraged the Government to take measures to improve this situation, and requested the Government to provide statistical data on the employment of children and young persons, especially regarding the agricultural and domestic sectors.

The Committee notes the ZCTU's allegations that, despite legislation applying the Convention, there is lack of enforcement of these regulations, due to the incapacity of labour inspectors. The ZCTU contends that legislative protection has become irrelevant due to poverty in the country, stemming from poor governance and ill-conceived economic policies. In addition, when breaches of the relevant legislation are detected, the cases take more than a year to be processed, both at the Department of Labour, and in the courts of law.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that comprehensive data on child labour will be collected in 2010, within the framework of the Zimbabwe labour force survey. The Committee further notes the Government's statement that the agricultural and domestic sectors will be prioritized in the implementation of phase II of the WFCL Project. Finally, the Committee notes the information in the ILO-IPEC Rapid Assessment Survey that 68 per cent of child agricultural workers surveyed and 53 per cent of child domestic workers surveyed were 14 years old and younger.

The Committee expresses its deep concern at the allegations of weak enforcement of child labour legislation, and at the large number of children under the age of 14 who are found to be working, especially in the agricultural sector and in household activities. The Committee strongly urges the Government to redouble its efforts, within phase II of the WFCL Project, to improve this situation. It also requests the Government to provide detailed information on measures taken in this regard, especially with respect to children working in the agricultural sector and domestic services. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information from the Zimbabwe labour force survey on the number of children below the minimum age who are engaged in economic activities when it becomes available, as well as extracts from the reports of inspection services, information on the number and nature of contraventions reported and penalties applied.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the communication of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) dated 21 September 2009, as well as the Government's brief report.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 11 of the Sexual Offences Act No. 8 of 2001 prohibits procuring any person to leave Zimbabwe for purposes of sexual exploitation. It also noted the Government's statement that the Children's Protection and Adoption Act (Children's Act) would be amended in order to deal explicitly with the sale and trafficking of children. The Committee further noted that Zimbabwean children were trafficked both internally and to other countries, for forced agricultural labour, domestic servitude and sexual exploitation, though observed that the existing legislation only covered trafficking for purposes of sexual exploitation.

The Committee notes the ZCTU'S statement of the existence of trafficking of children to other countries in the region, such as Botswana and South Africa. The Committee notes the Government's statement that it is in the process of enacting legislation to address trafficking in persons, for the purposes of both sexual and labour exploitation. However, the Committee observes that the Government has referred to forthcoming amendments prohibiting the trafficking of children since 2005. It also notes the information in the 2009 Report on the Trafficking in Persons, available on the website of the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org) (Trafficking Report) that, although the Government indicated that it was drafting comprehensive trafficking legislation, such a draft was neither publicly available nor introduced into Parliament.

The Committee notes the statement in the 2009 UNODC Global Report on Trafficking in Persons that, due to the absence of a specific provision on human trafficking, no prosecutions or convictions were recorded for trafficking in persons during the recent years. The Committee notes that the Trafficking Report indicates that internal trafficking had increased during the previous year (largely due to the closure of schools, worsening political violence and a faltering economy). The Trafficking Report further indicates that children in rural areas were trafficked within Zimbabwe, to farms for agricultural labour and to cities for forced domestic labour and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee observes that the current legislation does not appear to prohibit this internal trafficking, nor the trafficking of children to other countries for the purpose of labour exploitation. Therefore, recalling that Article 1 of the Convention requires member States to take immediate measures to prohibit the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that legislation prohibiting the sale and trafficking of children (including internal trafficking) for both labour and sexual exploitation is adopted in the very near future. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard, and to provide a copy of the relevant legislation, once adopted.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted the information contained in the report for the Project on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour in Zimbabwe (WFCL Project report) that Zimbabwe, while making significant progress towards the achievement of universal primary education in the 1990s, faced a decline in its net enrolment and completion rates of primary education, due to ongoing socio-economic challenges. It noted that the resources allocated to education by the Government were largely inadequate and, as a result, the number of school drop-outs had been constantly increasing in recent years, affecting girls disproportionately. The Committee also noted the information in the 2004 labour force survey that, out of the 3 million children aged 5–17 years, 8.2 per cent had never attended school, while 10.6 per cent had left school. However, the Committee noted that the Government had embarked, in 2001, upon the Basic Education Assistance Module (BEAM) with the primary objective of reducing the number of children dropping out of school, and to reach those who had never been to school due to economic hardship. It requested the Government to provide updated statistical information on the primary education enrolment and drop-out rates.

The Committee notes the ZCTU's contention that school drop-outs are a common phenomenon in Zimbabwe. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the statistical information requested by the Committee will be compiled and supplied in due course. The Committee further notes the information in a UNICEF report of 26 May 2010 entitled "UNICEF Humanitarian Action Update: Zimbabwe" that the BEAM was revitalized in 2009 with strong support from several donors, and has supported over 550,000 children across 5,400 primary schools. However, the Committee notes the information in the Rapid Assessment Survey identifying the worst forms of child labour in Zimbabwe, conducted in September 2008 (Rapid Assessment Survey), that, of the children surveyed, 70 per cent had dropped out or never attended school (the Survey focused on children working in the worst forms of child labour). This Survey further indicates that, for these children, the cost of education was a major obstacle in their access to education: of the children surveyed who had dropped out of school, 48 per cent had done so because their parents could not pay for school fees, and of the children who had never attended school, 59 per cent said that this was due to financial reasons. Considering that education contributes to preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure access to free basic education to all children in Zimbabwe. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken in this regard, particularly with respect to addressing the financial barriers to education, with a view to increasing attendance rates and reducing drop-out rates. It also requests the Government to provide information, in its next report, on the number of children who have received free basic education under the BEAM.

Clause (d). Identify and reach out to children at special risk. 1. Child victims and orphans of HIV/AIDS. The Committee previously noted that Zimbabwe is one of the countries worst affected by HIV/AIDS; many children are orphaned due to the HIV/AIDS pandemic and most of these children find themselves involved in the worst forms of child labour. The Committee noted the ZCTU's allegation that the HIV/AIDS pandemic had contributed to the phenomenon of child labour, as the number of child-headed families increased. The Committee noted the Government's indication that in 2004 it had implemented the Orphans and other Vulnerable Children National Action Plan (OVC NAP), which seeks to ensure that orphans and other vulnerable children have access to education, food, health services, and that they are protected from abuse and exploitation. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the impact of the OVC NAP.

The Committee notes the ZCTU's contention, in its more recent allegations of 2009, that HIV/AIDS is a major contributor to child poverty. The Committee notes an absence of information on this point in the Government's report. However, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report, submitted to the UN General Assembly as a follow up to the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS in January 2008, that the OVC NAP, spearheaded by the Ministry of Public Service, Labour and Social Welfare, had been implemented in 68 out of 83 districts. This report also indicates that, as of 2008, the OVC NAP had reached 147,012 beneficiaries through various interventions, including educational, medical, legal and psychosocial assistance. This report further indicates that, while there has been a continued decline in the prevalence of HIV/AIDS in the population, there are approximately 1,000,000 orphans under the age of 18 due to HIV/AIDS in Zimbabwe.

The Committee expresses its concern at the high number of children orphaned in Zimbabwe as a result of HIV/AIDS. Recalling that children orphaned by HIV/AIDS, and other vulnerable children, are at an increased risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts, within the framework of the OVC NAP, to protect such children from these worst forms. It requests the Government to provide information on the effective and time-bound measures taken in this regard, and on the results achieved.

2. Street children. The Committee previously noted that, according to official estimates, there were approximately 5,000 street children in Harare, the majority of whom were boys between the ages of 14 and 18. The Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures taken within the WFCL Project with regard to this group.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the objective of phase I of the WFCL Project was to ascertain the nature of the worst forms of child labour in Zimbabwe, and that there has not, as of yet, been action to deal with these worst forms. The Government indicates that it will implement remedial measures in the context of phase II of the project. The Committee also notes the information in a report on the worst forms of child labour, available on the website of the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org) (WFCL Report) that, in recent years, the number of street children has increased. The Committee further notes that street children were examined in the Rapid Assessment Survey, revealing that 63 per cent of the street children surveyed were orphans, and the average age that these children began living on the streets was 10 years. The Rapid Assessment Survey indicated that begging was the source of livelihood for 45 per cent of these children. The Committee expresses its serious concern at reports that the number of street children is increasing, and requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children under 18 years living and working on the streets are protected from the worst forms of child labour. It further requests the Government to provide information on measures taken in this regard, within the framework of phase II of the WFCL Project, and on the results achieved.

3. Children engaged in mining activities. The Committee notes the ZCTU's statement that the worst forms of child labour most common in Zimbabwe is in the mining sector, where children scavenge for minerals to survive. The Committee also notes the information available in the WFCL Report that children engage in the mining of diamonds, gold, chrome and tin, in addition to illegal gold panning with their families. The Committee further notes the indication in the Rapid Assessment Survey that it is mostly boys between the ages of 15 and 17 (though most had started below the age of 14), who are engaged in mining, and that these children are generally self-employed (11.6 per cent of the children surveyed in the Rapid Assessment Survey were engaged in mining work). The Rapid Assessment Survey further indicates that 67 per cent of children working in this sector use chemicals (including mercury, cyanide and explosives), and approximately 24 per cent of these children work for more than nine hours a day. The Committee expresses its serious concern at the situation of children working in hazardous conditions in mines, and requests the Government to take immediate measures, within the framework of the WFCL Project, to remove and provide rehabilitative services to children engaged in these hazardous mining activities. It requests the Government to provide information on effective and time-bound measures taken in this regard and the results achieved.

Article 5 and Part V of the report form. Monitoring mechanisms and the application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the ZCTU's contention that land invasions have caused the displacement of farm workers and their families, causing children to engage in illicit activities, including prostitution. The ZCTU further indicates that the relevant enforcement mechanisms need to be enhanced, and that there is a strong need to address the underlying causes of the worst forms of child labour, particularly poverty and to provide a comprehensive social system.

The Committee notes that the Government refers to the Rapid Assessment Survey, which indicates that, of the children interviewed, 18 per cent were engaged in prostitution and 23 per cent were engaged in illicit activities. The Rapid Assessment Survey also indicates that, while many factors contribute to the worsening of children's situations, poverty is the major push factor for the worst forms of child labour. The Survey further indicates that children were engaged in these forms of work because there were no immediately viable alternatives through which to support themselves and, in some cases, their households. Households mainly used the children's income for basic needs that included rent and clothing. The Survey concludes that, while many of the legal provisions on the worst forms of child labour are sufficiently up to date, this legislation lacked enforcement. The Survey emphasized that law enforcement agencies/officers dealing with children's issues must be adequately resourced to be able to protect the needs of children and that relevant Government ministries and departments who oversee the implementation of and compliance with the relevant legal provisions should receive the necessary fiscal support.

The Committee expresses its deep concern at reports of the weak enforcement of provisions giving effect to the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to redouble its efforts, within the implementation of phase II of the WFCL Project, to combat the worst forms of child labour, including through strengthened enforcement of the relevant legislative provisions and measures to address the roots causes of this phenomenon. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken, and the results achieved. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the nature, extent and trends of the worst forms of child labour, the number of children covered by the measures giving effect to the Convention, the number and nature of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed, as soon as this information becomes available. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 59 (United Kingdom: British Virgin Islands, United Kingdom: Falkland Islands (Malvinas), United Kingdom: Gibraltar); Convention Nos 77, 78, 79 (Kyrgyzstan); Convention No. 90 (Guinea); Convention No. 123 (Uganda); Convention No. 124 (Plurinational State of Bolivia, Kyrgyzstan); Convention No. 138 (Angola, Armenia, Bahamas, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Chad, Chile, China, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, Estonia, Fiji, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Grenada, Guinea, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Nigeria, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda); Convention No. 182 (Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Islamic Republic of Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi, Mexico, Morocco, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Slovakia, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Uganda, Uzbekistan, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, Zimbabwe).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 138 (China: Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, Japan); Convention No. 182 (Malta).

Equality of opportunity and treatment

Afghanistan

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1969)

Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that while some of the provisions of the Labour Code (namely sections 8, 9(1), 59(4) and 93) read together provided some protection against discrimination based on sex with respect to remuneration, they did not reflect fully the principle of the Convention. The Committee wishes to point out that the concept of “work of equal value” in the Convention is essential to address discrimination between men and women with respect to remuneration, as it permits a broad scope of comparison between jobs performed by men and women that may be different but nonetheless of equal value. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any steps taken to amend the Labour Code, so as to include a provision that would explicitly provide for the right of men and women to receive equal remuneration for work of equal value.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Remuneration. The Committee notes from the Government’s report that the prohibition of discrimination between men and women with respect to the payment of wages and allowances covers “salary supplements” mentioned in the Labour Code.

With regard to the determination of remuneration in the public service, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that the new Civil Servants Law adopted in 2008, regulates remuneration and recruitment of public service employees on the basis of the principle of the Convention. The Committee would appreciate if the Government would provide more details on the method used to establish the salary scales in the public service, as well as a copy of the Civil Servants Law.

Raising awareness of the principle of the Convention. Referring to its comments under the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), regarding awareness-raising activities, the Committee notes that advertising material, such as posters, on equal remuneration for women has been developed and disseminated in the capital and the provinces and that training seminars were organized for government officials, workers, employers, judges and non-governmental organizations on the rights of women, including their right to equal remuneration. It further notes that, in its concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights urges the Government to ensure equal remuneration for work of equal value and reduce the gender wage gap, and recommends that a mechanism be established to monitor, inter alia, the implementation of the rights of workers to equal pay for work of equal value (E/C.12/AFG/CO/2-4, 21 May 2010, paragraph 24). The Committee encourages the Government to pursue and intensify its efforts to promote the application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value both in the public and the private sectors, and invites the Government to collaborate with workers’ and employers’ organizations in this respect.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1969)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislation. The Committee notes from the National Action Plan for the Women of Afghanistan (NAPWA) adopted for 2007–17, that the amendment or repeal of all discriminatory laws that impair women’s potential to fulfil their social and economic rights and duties will be undertaken, including the revision of the Labour Code. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that it is envisaged that a definition of discrimination be included in the legislation in the near future. The Committee recalls that the prohibition of discrimination should cover all the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, namely race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin, as well as any other grounds that the Government may determine after consultation with employers’ and workers’ organizations, in accordance with Article 1(1)(b). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Labour Code so as to include a definition of both direct and indirect discrimination, covering at least all the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, as well as any other grounds determined in accordance with Article 1(1)(b). The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to report progress in this respect in the near future.

The Committee further notes from the Government’s report that a new Civil Servants Law was adopted in July 2008, which prohibits discrimination based on “gender, tribe, religion and physical disability” with respect to recruitment of government employees and contracted workers (section 10(2)). In addition, section 16(8) provides for the right to bring a complaint against a superior or a colleague in case of discrimination at work on the basis of “sex, tribe, social status, religion, political and marital status”. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that civil servants are protected against discrimination on at least all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention with respect to access to employment, vocational training, promotions as well as terms and conditions of employment. The Government is requested to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and a copy of the 2008 Civil Servants Law.

Noting that the new legislation on persons with disabilities was passed by the National Assembly, but has not yet been approved by the President, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the anti-discrimination provisions in such legislation and any measures taken to implement them. Please also provide a copy of the law as soon as it is approved.

Special measures of protection. Work prohibited for women. The Committee notes that the list of physically arduous or harmful work prohibited for women as envisaged under section 120 of the Labour Code has still not been established and that the Government requests the assistance of the ILO in developing such a list. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that, in the list to be established under section 120 of the Labour Code, prohibitions are limited to protecting maternity and not aimed at protecting women because of their sex or gender on the basis of stereotyped assumptions. Noting the Government's intention to seek ILO assistance concerning this matter, the Committee asks the Government to consider sending a copy of the list to the Office for its comments prior to its adoption.

Equal access to vocational training and education. The Committee notes that one of the goals of the NAPWA and the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) adopted for 2010–15 is to increase training opportunities for women and men. Welcoming this information, the Committee wishes to emphasize that access to a wide range of vocational training courses is of paramount importance for achieving equality in the labour market in that it is a key factor in determining the actual possibilities of gaining access to a wide range of paid occupations and employment, especially those with opportunities for advancement and promotion. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue and intensify its efforts to increase vocational training opportunities for women and men, including through the implementation of the National Action Plan for the Women of Afghanistan and the Decent Work Country Programme. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to enhance the participation of women in such programmes, including measures to inform girls and women of the range of training courses and occupations open to them. The Government is requested to provide information on the progress made in this respect.

The Committee notes from the NAPWA that the status of girls and women in education remains a matter of concern. The gross enrolment rate for girls at the primary-school level was 54 per cent in 2004, while the total gross enrolment rate was 94 per cent. The NAPWA further states that boys are twice as likely as girls to complete primary school, and this difference widens at secondary-school level, and widens further in higher education. The Committee considers that limited access to education impairs women's future employment opportunities and makes them more susceptible to unemployment and poverty. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on measures taken to promote girls' and women's access to education at all levels, including in the design and implementation of the affirmative action policy in education envisaged in the NAPWA.

Articles 2 and 3. Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. The Committee notes from the Government's report that gender units have been established in all the ministries and that the Civil Service Commission, in all its vacancy announcements, invites women to apply and gives priority to women. The Government also indicates in very broad terms that in all the ministries women hold high-ranking positions.

With respect to the private sector, the Committee observes that very little information is available on the participation of men and women in the labour market. It also notes from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR), that women continue to face discrimination in many domains due to the persistence of stereotypes and customary practices that marginalize them and that there is a discrepancy between the legal framework and the inequality in practice in various sectors including employment (E/C.12/AFG/CO/2-4, 21 May 2010, paragraph 18).

The Committee notes however that promoting the access of women to employment, including self-employment, is one of the main objectives set in the NAPWA and the DWCP and it hopes that, in cooperation with the social partners, the ILO and other relevant UN agencies, the programmes and measures to this end will be implemented in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to promote equal opportunities for men and women in employment and occupation both in the private and public sectors, and on their impact on the employment of women. Please also provide further information with respect to the "priority given to women in recruitment" by the Civil Service Commission, including in management positions.

Awareness raising. The Committee notes from the Government's report that a project on awareness raising of the Labour Code and international labour standards is being implemented among government officials, workers, employers, judges and non-governmental organizations and that, within this framework, training programmes are being organized on the rights of women workers and non-discrimination. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to intensify its awareness-raising activities on gender equality and non-discrimination in employment and occupation to effectively address assumptions and stereotypes on the capacity of women and their role in society. Please continue to provide information on awareness-raising activities undertaken, specifying the role of employers' and workers' organizations in this respect.

Statistics. Noting that one of the outcomes of the Decent Work Country Programme is the establishment of labour market information systems providing detailed and disaggregated information on key labour market indicators, the Committee would appreciate it if the Government could provide any recent data available on the employment of men and women both in the private and public sectors.

Algeria

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1962)

Statistical data on levels of remuneration for men and women. In its previous observation, the Committee expressed the hope of receiving the results of the survey which had commenced in March 2007 concerning levels of remuneration disaggregated by sex and asked the Government to supply any additional information on this subject. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any information in this regard. It reiterates once again the importance of having data concerning the remuneration of men and women, according to the posts occupied, in all categories of employment, both within the same branch of activity and between different branches, in order to be in a position to deal effectively with gender remuneration gaps. These data are essential for enabling an adequate evaluation of the nature, extent and causes of remuneration gaps between men and women and also an evaluation of the application of the Convention. The Committee notes that the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights expressed concern at the fact that women's wages are approximately one third of those of men's and recommended the adoption of measures to reduce the gender wage gap (E/C.12/DZA/CO/4, 7 June 2010, paragraph 8). The Committee urges the Government to compile and communicate statistical data in its next report on the distribution of men and women in the various sectors of economic activity, various occupational categories and different posts, and to supply all available statistics on their respective levels of remuneration in the public and private sectors.

Objective job evaluation. Collective agreements. The Committee notes that the collective agreement concluded on 30 September 2006 between the General Union of Algerian Workers (UGTA) and five employers' organizations contains provisions relating to the classification of jobs which must be established by enterprise agreements on the basis of job descriptions and analysis, evaluation and rating of their content and their classification according to the results of the evaluation (sections 95 and 100). This collective agreement also states that job evaluation is based in particular on qualifications, responsibility, physical or intellectual effort, working conditions, and any particular constraints or requirements (section 101). However, the Committee notes that this collective agreement does not contain any provision which explicitly requires the application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the practical application of section 101 of the collective agreement of 30 September 2006, particularly clarifying whether this section is used for comparing different jobs, with a view to implementing equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on the manner in which collective agreements are used to promote objective job evaluation so that levels of remuneration for women and men are established without gender bias. Finally, the Committee requests the Government once again to send a copy of any collective agreements reflecting the principle of equal remuneration for men and women.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which raised the following matters:

Legislative developments. The Committee notes that section 27 of the general conditions of service of the public service, enacted in 2006, prohibits any discrimination among public employees on the grounds of their opinions, sex, origin and any other personal or social condition. The Committee also notes that section 17 of Act No. 90-11 on labour relations prohibits any provision in an agreement, collective agreement or employment contract which gives rise to discrimination in employment, remuneration or working conditions on grounds of age, sex, social or marital situation, family relations, political convictions and membership or not of a trade union. The Committee is aware that the labour legislation is under revision. The Committee urges the Government to seize the opportunity of the formulation of the new Labour Code to ensure that the new provisions of the Code prohibit discrimination at all stages of employment and occupation on all the grounds set out in the Convention, including those not covered by the 1990 labour legislation, namely race, colour, religion and national extraction. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in the revision of the labour legislation. The Committee invites the Government to provide a copy of the draft Labour Code to the International Labour Office before the adoption of the final text so that it can assist the Government in its efforts to guarantee the application of the principles of the Convention in the new legislation.

Article 1 of the Convention. Sexual harassment. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 341bis of the Penal Code only appears to cover quid pro quo sexual harassment. The Committee recalls that there are two types of sexual harassment that need to be addressed by legislation, quid pro quo sexual harassment and sexual harassment due to a hostile working environment, which takes the form of an intimidating, hostile or humiliating work environment. For further guidance, the Committee draws the Government's attention to its 2002 general observation on this subject. The Committee reminds the Government that sexual harassment at work undermines the dignity and well-being of workers, as well as enterprise productivity and the basis of the working relationship. In view of the serious consequences of these practices, the Committee hopes the new Labour Code will ensure complete protection against sexual harassment by prohibiting quid pro quo sexual harassment and harassment due to a hostile work environment, and it requests the Government to provide information in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted with a view to preventing sexual harassment and protecting workers against it in employment and occupation, including information on any education and awareness raising campaigns and the organization of activities in collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations.

Articles 2 and 3. National policy. Discrimination based on sex. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed concern at the low participation of women in employment and the persistence of strongly stereotyped attitudes with respect to the roles and responsibilities of women and men in society and in the family. The Committee also emphasized the negative impact of these attitudes on the access of women to employment and training. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the applicable training and qualification programmes are not restrictive or discriminatory on the ground of sex and that the choice of subjects for training is an individual matter. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that in practice there are two forms of discrimination in access to training. Discrimination may be a result of laws or regulations which give rise to direct discrimination or, more frequently, practices based on stereotypes mainly related to the role of women in society. As a consequence, and in order to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention, it is necessary, firstly, to adopt legislation that is in conformity with the principle of equality and, secondly, to accompany this legislation with proactive measures through which de facto inequalities affecting women can be corrected. The Committee once again requests the Government to take urgent and proactive measures to further its national policy to promote equality of opportunity and treatment for women in respect of employment and occupation, including efforts to address stereotyped attitudes, and to provide information any progress in this respect. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to facilitate and encourage the access of women and girls to more diversified vocational training opportunities, including those leading to traditionally male occupations, so as to afford them greater opportunities to enter the labour market.

Article 5. Special protection measures. For a number of years, the Committee has been urging the Government to give its attention to the importance of reviewing the provisions prohibiting night work for women, as well as the assignment of women to work that is dangerous, insalubrious or harmful to their health. The Committee considers that, when reviewing these provisions, a distinction should be made between special measures to protect maternity and measures based on stereotyped perceptions of the capacity and role of women in society. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that all other measures intended to protect women on the sole grounds of their sex may seriously undermine the principle of equality of treatment and opportunity. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the revision of the labour legislation with regard to night work by women and their assignment to hazardous, insalubrious or harmful types of work. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that, in the context of the new Labour Code, the restrictions relating to the access of women to certain types of work are limited to maternity protection and it requests the Government to keep it informed on this point.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Argentina

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1968)

The Committee notes the comments of the Confederation of Argentinean Workers (CTA) of 31 August 2009 referring to matters examined below.

Equality between men and women. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in February 2009, in the context of the Tripartite Committee on Equality of Opportunity and Treatment (CTIO), a framework agreement was drawn up on "Social dialogue for equality of treatment and opportunities for women and men in the working environment", which establishes the priorities, among others, of eliminating gender inequality and promoting good practices. The Government adds that the CTIO has been established at the provincial level and that in 2007 the Coordination Unit for Gender Equality and Equality of Opportunity at Work (CEGIOT) was established within the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, with the mission of mainstreaming the gender perspective throughout the work of the Ministry, developing tools to monitor policies and organizing interaction with other government fields and institutions. The Government indicates that priority is given to evaluating policies and establishing monitoring indicators to raise the alert concerning possible situations of discrimination, for which purpose the Secretariat of Employment is proposing policies in light of their potential impact, taking into account the needs of individuals and social contexts. The Government also refers to 11 collective agreements which include equality of opportunity and non-discrimination clauses. The Committee notes the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) of 30 July 2010 in which the CEDAW urges the Government to take measures to address pay gaps; encourage women to take up employment in non-traditional fields; enact legislation on sexual harassment in the public and private workplaces; and provide comprehensive protection to domestic workers. The CEDAW also encourages the Government to take measures in order to provide affordable and accessible childcare services to enable women to balance their work and family responsibilities (CEDAW/C/ARG/CO/6). The Committee hopes that in its next report the Government will provide information on the impact of the measures implemented and will report on the progress achieved in reducing existing gaps between men and women in relation to wages and career opportunities, as well as progress in terms of improving job opportunities for women, including in non-traditional fields.

Domestic workers. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it requested the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to ensure that domestic workers are not discriminated against in employment and occupation, the legal provisions applicable to domestic workers and the number of domestic workers regularized under the Plan Patria Grande. The Committee also recalls that in previous comments it noted the CTA's indications that 92.7 per cent of domestic workers are undocumented and that the legal regime applicable to them involves discriminatory treatment in the areas of working hours, the termination of the employment relationship, holidays and occupational risks. The Committee notes that in its present comment the CTA adds that the wages of these workers are below the minimum living wage, which places this group of workers in a situation of vulnerability. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, according to the Domestic Work Tribunal, 370,000 domestic workers have been registered, which implies that the percentage of undocumented domestic workers has now been reduced to 67.8 per cent. Furthermore, the Domestic Work Tribunal has taken on new functions, providing advice to domestic workers and employers and undertaking awareness-raising campaigns to promote a cultural change with a view to paid domestic work being considered within the framework of the employment relationship. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the legislation applicable to domestic workers and on any measures adopted for the protection of such workers against acts of discrimination in employment, including through the documentation process, and the number of workers benefiting from such measures.

Undocumented workers. The Committee notes the CTA's comments that, in the first quarter 2009, 36.4 per cent of employed persons were not registered, and do not therefore benefit from the protection of the social security system in such areas as retirement benefits and family allowances. The Committee notes in this respect the Government's indication that the principal objective of the National Plan for Labour Regularization is the inclusion of all workers in the social security system through inspection and action to combat undeclared work, as well as dissemination and awareness-raising campaigns. According to the Government, since the beginning of the National Plan for Labour Regularization in 2003, it has been possible to reduce the rate of undocumented workers by 12.7 percentage points and, in January 2009, undocumented workers accounted for 25.32 per cent of the workforce. The Government also refers to new Act No. 26476 of December 2008 establishing procedures for the regularization of employment relations and the promotion and protection of registered employment. The Act offers incentives to employers, through reductions in social security contributions, for the regularization of workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact in practice of this Act, the National Plan for Labour Regularization and the other measures adopted by the Government to encourage the regularization of undocumented workers with a view to reducing their vulnerability and improving their conditions of work.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Australia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1974)

Article 1 of the Convention. Legislative developments. The Committee recalls its previous comments raising a range of concerns regarding the impact of legislative reforms on equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, including the adoption of the Workplace Relations Amendment (Work Choices) Act, 2005, and the move away from award regulation to workplace-based regulation (Australian Workplace Agreements – AWAs) in the setting of wages. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Fair Work Act, 2009, which became fully operational in January 2010, substantially repealing the Workplace Relations Act, 1996. The Committee notes in particular that as a result of the adoption of the Fair Work Act, AWAs can no longer be made and, in determining “modern awards” (legal instruments setting minimum terms and conditions for national system employees in particular industries or occupations), a key objective is “the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal or comparable value” (section 134(1)(e)). Modern awards are to be reviewed every four years and can be varied for “work value reasons” at that time (section 156(3) and (4)) or outside the four-year period if one of the objectives of the modern award is not met (sections 157 and 158). The Committee further notes that in determining minimum wages, Fair Work Australia, which replaces the Australian Industrial Relations Commission, must take into account “the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal or comparable value” (section 284(1)(d)). Fair Work Australia is also empowered to make orders to ensure that there will be equal remuneration for work of equal or comparable value (an equal remuneration order) (Part 2-7 of the Act), and the term of any modern award, enterprise agreement or Fair Work Australia order has no effect to the extent that it is less beneficial to the employee than a term of the equal remuneration order (section 306). The Committee also notes the communication of the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) highlighting the improved equal remuneration provisions in the Fair Work Act. Welcoming the focus given to equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value in the wage-setting process through the Fair Work Act, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the implementation of the Act in practice with respect to applying the principle of the Convention, in particular through awards, enterprise agreements, low-paid authorizations, minimum wages and equal remuneration orders. Please also provide information on the progress of the acceptance by states of the jurisdiction of the Fair Work Act.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1973)

Legislative developments. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Fair Work Act, 2009, which became fully operational in January 2010, substantially repealing the Workplace Relations Act, 1996. The Committee also notes the communication of the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU), stating that the Fair Work Act contains significant improvements in protection from discrimination at work, and also noting the adoption of the Paid Parental Leave Act, 2010, which will provide Australia's first statutory paid parental leave scheme as of 1 January 2011. The Committee notes in particular that one of the objectives of the Fair Work Act set out in section 3 is “assisting employees to balance their work and family responsibilities by providing for flexible working arrangements; and ... protecting against unfair treatment and discrimination ...”. Pursuant to section 134, an objective of the “modern awards” (legal instruments setting minimum terms and conditions for national system employees in particular industries or occupations) includes “the need to promote social inclusion through increased workforce participation ...”, and modern awards and enterprise agreements must not include terms that discriminate against an employee “because of, or for reasons including, the employee’s race, colour, sex, sexual preference, age, physical or mental disability, marital status, family or carer’s responsibilities, pregnancy, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin” (sections 153(1), 194(a) and 195(1)). The Act further provides a general prohibition of an employer taking any “adverse action” against an employee or prospective employee on these same grounds (section 351). The Committee notes in this regard that all the prohibited grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention have been included, as well as a range of additional grounds, as foreseen in Article 1(1)(b), and provides improved protection for prospective employees from discrimination in access to employment, as well as covering aspects of employment and occupation beyond dismissal. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the following points:

- (i) the implementation of the Fair Work Act and the Paid Parental Leave Act in practice, including any measurable impact with respect to promoting equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, with a view to eliminating any discrimination in respect thereof;
- (ii) any legal or administrative decisions regarding the non-discrimination provisions of the Fair Work Act, including any determinations of what is not considered discrimination pursuant to sections 153(2), 195(2) and 351(2);
- (iii) the progress of the States’ acceptance of the jurisdiction of the Fair Work Act.

Indigenous peoples. The Committee had raised concerns in its previous observation in relation to the education and employment opportunities of indigenous peoples, including the lack of sufficiently targeted measures to address inequality and discrimination, and the lack of appropriate mechanisms. The Committee notes with interest the Government’s expression of support in April 2009 for the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, as well as the national apology for past negative government policies issued on 13 February 2008 to indigenous peoples, and in particular to the Stolen Generations – the generations of indigenous peoples taken away from their families and communities. The Committee also notes with interest the wide range of initiatives at the federal and state levels that have been undertaken to address inequality and discrimination that have been experienced by indigenous peoples. The Committee notes in particular the National Indigenous Reform Agreement between the federal, state and territory governments of Australia (the Council of Australian Governments) of November 2008, committing all jurisdictions to achieve the “Closing the Gap” targets, to address disadvantage-facing indigenous peoples, one of the aims of which is to halve the gap in employment outcomes between indigenous and non-indigenous peoples within a decade. The Agreement refers specifically to the reformed Indigenous Employment Programme (IEP) which is to make employment and training services more responsive to the specific needs of indigenous jobseekers, indigenous businesses and employers. It also refers to the development of a Commonwealth Indigenous Economic Development Strategy (IEDS), with the aim of contributing to the achievement of long-term economic independence for indigenous Australians by promoting economic participation and wealth creation by indigenous communities and individuals, and through the strengthening of partnerships with the corporate sector. The Committee also notes that the Government refers to a new Community Support Programme. The Committee notes, however, the Government’s indication that, in 2008–09, Job Network members placed 23 per cent fewer indigenous jobseekers into jobs than in the previous year.

At the state level, the Committee notes in particular the following initiatives: in Victoria, the New Workforce Partnerships, the Indigenous Youth Employment Programme, the Wur-cum barra to increase indigenous employment across the public sector, and the Koori Business Network; and in Queensland – the Skilling Queenslanders for Work initiative, the Indigenous Economic Participation National Partnership with the aim of reforming government procurement, service delivery arrangements and increase public sector employment to improve indigenous participation in the labour market, the Department of Education and Training’s Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Employment Framework for Action 2007–10, and the Positive Dreaming Solid Futures – Indigenous Employment and Training Strategy 2008–11. Initiatives in South Australia include an updated Strategic Plan, which establishes targets to increase aboriginal workforce participation, and the South Australian Works initiative, delivering specific programmes aimed at improving employment and vocational training outcomes for aboriginal peoples; and in New South Wales (NSW), the strategy entitled “Making it our Business Improving Aboriginal Employment in NSW public sector” was being reviewed with a view to strengthening support in the recruitment, employment and development of aboriginal and Torres Strait islanders in the NSW public sector.

Welcoming the range of statements and initiatives at the federal and state levels that indicate a commitment to promoting and protecting the rights of indigenous peoples, including in education, employment and occupation, the Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts in this regard. It also asks the Government to continue monitoring the impact of these measures, and to provide information on the role of indigenous peoples in developing and implementing these initiatives, and the actual outcomes achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 1 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value and gender remuneration gap. For many years, the Committee has been stressing that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is not fully reflected in the legislation or in collective agreements. In its observation of 2008, the Committee had pointed out that the Act on Ensuring Gender Equality, adopted in 2006, limited the application of the principle of equal wage for men and women to performance of work under equal conditions, in the same enterprise and with the same skills. The Committee had emphasized that this did not allow any comparison between different jobs or between work performed in different enterprises that could, nonetheless, be of equal value. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not reply to its request to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to bring the legislation into full conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes that the statistics of 2006, published by the State Statistical Committee and communicated in the report, show the existence of significant horizontal gender occupational segregation within the labour market. Women work predominantly in medical and social services and education, where they represent more than 70 per cent of the workers: men predominantly work in manufacturing, agriculture, fishing, mining, construction, transport, energy production and distribution, where they represent more than 70 per cent of the workers; men represent more than 60 per cent of the workers in finance, services to hotels and restaurants and wholesale and retail trade. With respect to their average wages, according to the statistics for October 2006 provided by the Government, women were earning significantly less than men in many sectors of the economy: 60 per cent less than men in construction; 50 per cent less in oil and gas production; 35 per cent less in chemical industries and aviation; 30 per cent less in finance. Furthermore, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) expressed concern at the persistence of such gender segregation within the labour market – both vertical and horizontal – the concentration of women in lower-paying sectors, and the persistence of the wage gap, which remains very wide in certain industries (CEDAW/C/AZE/CO/4, 7 August 2009, paragraph 31).

The Committee recalls that, particularly in a context where men and women perform different work, in different sectors of the economy and, as a consequence, in different enterprises, the concept of “work of equal value” is essential to give full effect to the principle of equal remuneration between men and women in practice and to address effectively the gender remuneration gap. The Committee therefore asks the Government to take the necessary measures to incorporate in its legislation the principle of equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value and to ensure that measures are taken to implement this principle in practice, including through collective agreements, and address effectively the wide gender remuneration gap.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1992)

Gender equality in employment and occupation. The Committee notes the adoption of the “Gender programme on transforming into reality the Employment Strategy for 2007–10” setting out the strategy to address issues regarding the employment of women and provide gender equality in employment. The Government's report contains general information that indicates that measures are being implemented under this programme in order to: monitor the employment quotas for citizens in need of protection established pursuant to Decree No. 213 of 22 November 2005; improve the competitiveness of women in the labour market through vocational training; and investigate the reasons for women's unemployment. The Committee notes, however, that the Government does not provide any indication with respect to the type and the coverage of the measures implemented during the reporting period and their impact on gender equality. The Committee further notes that the “Integrated programme of Azerbaijan on combating day-to-day violence in a democratic society” was approved in 2007. According to the Government's report, this programme provides for the development of strategic plans aiming at prohibiting discrimination based on gender and other characteristics. Furthermore, the Government indicates that, within the framework of the Decent Work Country Programme, measures are being taken to develop women's entrepreneurship and pilot projects are being conducted on women's self employment. The Committee welcomes the adoption of various programmes to promote gender equality and address sex discrimination and requests the Government to provide specific information on progress made regarding the following:

- (i) the implementation of measures taken to promote gender equality under the Gender Programme to implement the Employment Strategy;
- (ii) any strategic plan adopted with a view to prohibiting discrimination; and
- (iii) measures implemented within the framework of the Decent Work Country Programme.

Please include indications of the time frame for such measures and action and their impact on achieving equality between men and women in employment and occupation. The Committee further requests the Government to communicate the results of the study concerning the reasons for women's unemployment.

The Committee welcomes the statistical data provided by the Government on the situation of women in the labour market. This data for 2008 shows that women were basically concentrated in education – they represented 72.5 per cent of the workers employed in this sector – health and social services (71.3 per cent) and manufacturing (60 per cent), thereby demonstrating significant horizontal gender segregation in the labour market. There also appears to be vertical gender segregation as according to the report submitted by Azerbaijan to the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), only 2 per cent of the women employed in state bodies are in decision-making positions (CEDAW/C/AZE/Q/4/Add.1, paragraph 16). The Committee further notes that the CEDAW in its concluding observations expressed regret at the lack of correlation between women’s education levels and economic opportunities and noted with concern that women continue to be concentrated in traditional female education subjects (CEDAW/C/AZE/CO/4, 7 August 2009, paragraphs 29 and 32). The Committee requests the Government to take concrete action to address the horizontal and vertical gender segregation in the labour market and to adopt concrete measures to improve the participation rates of women in those economic sectors and occupations in which they are under-represented, including through their participation in a wider range of vocational training courses leading to employment with opportunities for advancement and promotion. It further requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to address the stereotypes and assumptions regarding women’s aspirations and capabilities, as well as regarding their suitability for certain jobs, and to promote equal sharing of family responsibilities.

The Committee further notes that the Government affirms once again its intention to develop and submit to the relevant bodies for review a proposal to improve the labour legislation with a view to prohibiting discrimination in employment on the basis of gender and other characteristics and notes with interest that it has recently ratified the Workers With Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156). The Committee also notes that the Government is considering ratifying the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183), and is taking measures to improve the enforcement of labour legislation by the State Labour Inspection. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the progress made in the examination of the national legislation with a view to ensuring compliance with international labour standards on gender equality and the examination of the possibility of ratifying the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183).

Equal opportunity and treatment of ethnic minorities. For a number of years, the Committee has raised concerns regarding discrimination faced by members of ethnic minorities in the fields of employment and education. The Government has provided very little information in reply to the Committee’s specific requests, especially as regards the implementation of the Convention’s principles in practice through concrete measures. The Government indicates that the “Integrated programme of Azerbaijan on combating day-to-day violence in a democratic society” provides for the development of strategic plans aiming at prohibiting discrimination based on gender and other characteristics and it reiterates that the national legislation prohibits discrimination against ethnic minorities. The Committee recalls that it is not sufficient to prohibit all kinds of discrimination, either by national legislation or by any other means in order to apply the Convention. Specific action must also be taken at the national level to help promote the essential conditions for all workers to benefit in practice from equality in employment and occupation, and special measures may be needed to compensate for imbalances resulting from discrimination (Special survey on equality in employment and occupation, 1996, paragraphs 135–137, 279). The Committee notes further that in its concluding observations the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) expressed concern about significant disparities in the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights that persist in Azerbaijan and particularly affect ethnic groups in rural and mountainous and remote areas (CERD/C/AZE/CO/6, 7 September 2009, paragraph 6). The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on any concrete measures taken and action undertaken to promote equality of opportunity and treatment of members of different ethnic minorities in education, training and employment, within the framework of any strategic plan aimed at prohibiting discrimination based on gender and other characteristics or under the Employment Strategy (2006–15). It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect, including the implementation of the employment quota system with respect to members of ethnic minorities, as well as statistical information, disaggregated by sex, on the economic activities of the different ethnic groups, based on the data from the census which was to be conducted in April 2009.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1998)

Assessment of the gender pay gap. The Committee recalls its previous observation noting the findings of the 2007 wage survey carried out by the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics among non-farm production workers that the average daily income of women amounted to 69.7 per cent of that of men. It had also noted that according to a World Bank report of 2008 women in rural areas earned 59.7 per cent of men’s wages (nominal), that the ratio for urban areas was 56 per cent (data for 2002–03), and that gender pay differentials were often explained by the lower levels of skills and qualifications of women workers. The report also found a tendency to set lower wages in sectors predominantly employing women, in part as a result of wage discrimination. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that there is no visible pay gap between men and women in the formal economy, the public sector or in non-governmental bodies, without however, providing further information, including statistics on the earnings of men and women in the public and private sectors. The Government also states that it has been raising awareness through a public-private partnership approach to address the wide gender pay gap, if any, in the informal economy. The Committee notes from the Bangladesh Decent Work Country Programme (2006–09) that nearly 80 per cent of the country's employment is in the informal economy, and that unlike for men, informal employment, which is low paying, low skill-intensive and less secure, has increased sharply for women over time. The Committee asks the Government to take appropriate steps to assess the nature and extent of the gender pay gap, and to provide detailed and up-to-date information on the earnings of men and women in both the formal and informal economy. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information demonstrating that the necessary measures are being taken to address and reduce the gender pay gap in the formal and informal economy.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. With respect to its previous observation requesting detailed information on the measures taken to ensure the effective application of section 345 of the Labour Act (concerning the principle of equal wages for male and female workers for work of equal nature or value) the Committee notes the Government's statement that no cases or complaints have been received from workers regarding equal pay. The Government also states that training and awareness-raising programmes have been conducted throughout the country by the Industrial Relations Institute and Labour Welfare Centre on industrial relations, labour law, equal remuneration and ILO Conventions for workers' and employers' representatives and government officials. The Committee must point out that the very general information provided does not indicate whether appropriate measures are being taken to ensure the effective implementation of section 345 of the Labour Act of 2006. The Committee, therefore, asks the Government to provide full details on the results achieved by the training and awareness raising for workers' and employers' representatives, and government officials on the issues of equal remuneration. Please also indicate the specific measures taken to enhance the capacity of the responsible authorities, including judges, labour inspectors and other public officials, to identify and address cases concerning section 345 of the Labour Act of 2006, as the Committee had previously requested.

Article 1(a). Definition of remuneration. The Committee recalls that section 345 of the Labour Act only applies to "wages" which, under the terms of section 2(xlv), do not include the following aspects of remuneration: (1) the value of any house accommodation, supply of light, water, medical attendance or other amenity or of any service excluded by general or special order of the Government; (2) contributions by the employer to any pension fund or provident fund; (3) travelling allowances; (4) reimbursements of special expenses incurred by the worker. The Committee notes the Government's statement that in law and in practice both male and female workers receive equal wages and other allowances as per eligibility and entitlement, and that no complaints regarding discrimination were received. The Committee recalls that the absence of complaints regarding differences in payment of allowances to men and women does not necessarily mean that no discrimination exists. In the absence of further practical information on this matter, the Committee asks the Government to examine the extent to which the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is applied in relation to those aspects of remuneration which are excluded from the definition of "wages" contained in section 2(xlv) of the Labour Act, and to report on the progress made.

Article 2(2)(b). Minimum wages. The Committee notes that according to the Government, minimum wages are determined on the basis of the nature of the work, the workers' skills, and the standard of living. The Government further reiterates that the Minimum Wages Board applies the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee notes from the Bangladesh Decent Work Country Programme (2006–09) that the wages are very low in the readymade garments industry (RMG) which employs some 2.1 million persons, approximately 90 per cent of whom are women. Noting the tendency to set lower wages for sectors predominantly employing women, the Committee once again asks the Government to indicate how, in practical terms, it is ensured that minimum wage rates fixed for female-dominated occupations or sectors are not set below the rates applying to male-dominated occupations or sectors involving work of equal value. Noting further the recent increase in minimum wages for the ready-made garments industry, the Committee asks the Government to provide the texts of the RMG minimum wage order, as well as of other minimum wages orders in force.

Article 4. Cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee notes that the Government's report continues to include very general indications regarding cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations with respect to labour-related decisions and training programmes. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the specific measures taken to seek actively the cooperation of workers' and employers' organizations for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of the Convention, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention, and in particular with regard to training and awareness-raising measures on the Convention's principle and the related provisions of the Labour Act of 2006.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1972)

The Committee recalls that in its previous observations it has been raising issues relating to the importance of including a prohibition of discrimination in the Labour Act in conformity with the Convention; the need for full information on the specific action taken to eliminate discrimination against women and promote equality with respect to their access to employment, and to education and vocational training; and the urgent need to take active measures to address the issue of sexual harassment at work through appropriate laws, policies and mechanisms. The Committee recalls that these issues had also been discussed by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards on the application of the Convention by Bangladesh in June 2007.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Prohibition of discrimination. The Committee recalls that the Labour Act of 2006 does not contain a prohibition of discrimination in employment and occupation based on all the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention and with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation as defined in Article 1(3), that is access to vocational training, access to employment and to particular occupations, and terms and conditions of employment, including advancement and promotion. Also, the Labour Act does not apply to a number of categories of workers, including domestic workers. The Committee notes that a tripartite committee was to review the Labour Act of 2006 during 2009 and 2010 with a view to ensuring better compliance with international labour standards. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the outcome of the review of the Labour Act. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the amendments to the Labour Act will include a prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination, on at least all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, with respect to all aspects of employment, and cover all categories of workers, including domestic workers, and it requests the Government to report on the progress made in this regard. The Committee reiterates its request to the Government to indicate how the protection of men and women against discrimination in employment and occupation is ensured in practice, including for those categories of workers excluded from the scope of the Labour Act.

Gender equality in employment and occupation. The Committee recalls the serious gender-based inequalities in the labour market. It also recalls the need to ensure that women have a real choice of a wider range of jobs and occupations, including through broadening their educational and employment opportunities and addressing the root causes of gender inequality in the labour market. These root causes would include gender-based discrimination in hiring and stereotypical views and behaviour that confine women to training and work which are considered “suitable” for them. The Committee notes with regret that once again the Government’s report only includes very broad statements about action taken to enhance women’s participation in employment and vocational training, and that, since the discussion by the Conference Committee in 2007, no information has been provided demonstrating that the Government is actively addressing the seriously disadvantaged position of women in employment and occupation. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate steps to:

- (i) address the root causes of gender inequality in the labour market, including gender-based discrimination in hiring and stereotypical views, and behaviour that confines women to employment and training which are considered “suitable”;
- (ii) take effective measures to ensure that women have access, on an equal footing with men, to jobs in the public sector;
- (iii) take specific action to eliminate discrimination against women and to promote equality in respect of their access to education, including vocational training, as well as their equal access to employment and the widest range of occupations; and
- (iv) provide full statistical information on the situation of men and women in the labour market, including on women’s employment at all levels of the public service, and in education and training, and full information on the results secured by any action taken referred to in points (i)–(iii).

Sexual harassment. The Committee recalls the legal uncertainty as to what constitutes prohibited conduct under section 332 of the Labour Act of 2006, which prohibits behaviour in establishments that employ female workers “which may seem to be indecent or repugnant to the modesty and honour of the female worker”. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that the review and amendment of the Labour Act will consider including an appropriate definition of sexual harassment at work.

The Committee notes with interest the landmark judgment of the Bangladesh High Court of 14 May 2009 in Bangladesh National Women Lawyers Association v Government of Bangladesh and Others, issuing guidelines on sexual harassment. The High Court considered that equality in employment can be seriously impaired when women are subjected to sexual harassment at the workplace and in educational institutions, and that protection from sexual harassment and the right to education and work with dignity are universally recognized human rights, and the common minimum requirement of these rights has received global acceptance. It considered that the international Conventions and norms are, therefore, of great significance in the formulation of the guidelines to achieve its purpose. The Court’s guidelines on sexual harassment, which shall be observed in all workplaces and educational institutions in the public and private sectors (paragraph 1), provide a detailed definition of sexual harassment covering both quid pro quo and hostile environment harassment (paragraph 4). The guidelines identify the steps required of employers and educational institutions to prevent sexual harassment, including awareness raising about and widely publicizing of the guidelines and the legislative provisions regarding gender equality and sexual offences (paragraphs 3, 5 and 6). They also cover disciplinary action (paragraphs 7 and 11), a complaints mechanism, including the establishment of a complaints committee in all workplaces and educational institutions (paragraphs 8–10), and criminal proceedings (paragraph 11). In view of the inadequacy of safeguards against sexual abuse and harassment of women at workplaces and educational institutions, the High Court felt compelled to issue guidelines on sexual harassment, which will have the force of law until adequate and effective legislation is in place. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the implementation of the High Court's guidelines on sexual harassment in the private and public sectors. Understanding that a draft law on sexual harassment based on the High Court Judgement of 2009 is being discussed, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in enacting specific legislation on sexual harassment and in amending section 332 of the Labour Act of 2006.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1969)

Article 1 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. In its previous comments the Committee emphasized that the Labour Code, 2004, did not clearly reflect the principle of the Convention even though it explicitly established the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, since it also provided for equal wages for workers regardless of their sex “given equal conditions of work, vocational qualifications and output” (section 175). This led the Committee to recall the importance of ensuring that the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value also applies to situations in which men and women work under different conditions or, have different qualifications, and nevertheless perform work of equal value. In its previous observation the Committee had noted that the Labour Code was being revised. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 028-2008/AN of 13 May 2008 issuing the Labour Code, section 182 of which retains the same provisions as the former Labour Code with regard to equal remuneration for men and women. It therefore notes with regret that the Government has not taken the opportunity afforded by the elaboration of a new the Labour Code to bring these provisions fully into conformity with the principle of the Convention.

The Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the fact that experience has shown that the requirement of “equal conditions of work, skill and output” can provide a pretext for paying women lower wages than men (General Survey of 1986 on equal remuneration, paragraph 54) and that the emphasis should rather be placed on the nature and value of work, which necessitates a comparison of tasks on the basis of objective and non-discriminatory criteria. Referring to its general observation of 2006, in which it spells out the meaning of the concept of “work of equal value”, the Committee emphasizes that it is essential to compare the value of the work done in different occupations, which may involve different qualifications and skills, responsibilities or working conditions but which are nevertheless of equal value. The Committee considers that the coexistence in the Labour Code of 2008, of provisions on the one hand establishing equal remuneration for all workers irrespective of their sex “given equal conditions of work, vocational qualifications and output” and provisions on the other hand stating that “the determination of wages and the fixing of rates of pay must respect the principle of equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value” may lead to confusion or conflict in the application of the principle of the Convention in practice, in view of the different criteria adopted. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary steps to bring section 182 of the Labour Code of 2008, into full conformity with the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value established by the Convention and to supply information on any measures taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee recalls that both article 57 of the Constitution and section 73 of the Labour Code provide for equal remuneration for equal work, which falls short of fully reflecting the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value as set out in Article 1 of the Convention. In its report, the Government states that there is no obstacle to reflecting the principle of the Convention in the national legislation. Noting the Government's willingness to bring article 57 of the Constitution and section 73 of the Labour Code into conformity with the Convention, the Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures as soon as possible and to indicate in its next report the progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the comments on the application of the Convention made by the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU) dated 30 August 2008, to which the Government has not as yet replied. It requests the Government to provide its comments regarding the issues raised by COSYBU.

Discrimination based on race, colour or national extraction. In its previous comments the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to address discrimination in employment between different ethnic groups. In reply, the Government once again refers to the 2005 Constitution, and to the Arusha Agreement. As previously noted by the Committee, article 122 of the Constitution prohibits discrimination based, inter alia, on an individual's origin, race, ethnicity, sex, colour and language. The Committee also notes that, pursuant to article 129(1) of the Constitution, 60 per cent and 40 per cent of the seats in Parliament are reserved for Hutus and Tutsis, respectively. Similar provisions also exist for government positions. In its report, the Government also asserts that ethnic discrimination in employment and occupation no longer exists. As the elimination of discrimination and the promotion of equality is a continual process, and cannot be achieved solely through legislation, the Committee finds it difficult to accept statements to the effect that discrimination is inexistent in a given country. It stresses the need for the Government to take continuing action with a view to promoting and ensuring non-discrimination and equality in employment and occupation. The Committee therefore reiterates its request for information on any specific measures taken to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment, irrespective of ethnic origin, in respect of employment in the private and public sectors, including awareness-raising activities and measures to promote respect and tolerance between the different groups. It also reiterates its request for information on the activities of the newly established public service recruitment commission with a view to promoting equal access to public service employment of different ethnic groups.

The Committee notes that, despite the provisions of article 7 of Protocol I to the Arusha Agreement which provides for the promotion of disadvantaged groups, notably the Batwa, the Working Group of Expats on Indigenous Populations/Communities of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights (Report of the Research and Information Visit to the Republic of Burundi, March–April 2005, page 31) reports that this particular group continues to suffer from strong negative stereotypes and racial harassment by other segments of the population. While taking note of the Government's very general statement that measures have been taken in the field of education, the Committee observes that, according to the African Commission's Working Group, the Batwa's access to education is well below the national average. The illiteracy rate among the Batwa is estimated to be over 78 per cent. The Committee urges the Government to take all measures necessary to ensure equal access of the Batwa to education, vocational training and employment, including reviewing and strengthening relevant national laws and policies and ensuring their full implementation. The Committee also requests the Government to take measures to combat stereotypes and prejudice against this group. The Government is requested to provide detailed information with regard to these matters in its next report.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Canada

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1972)

Legislative developments. Federal. The Committee notes that the Public Sector Equitable Compensation Act (PSECA) was adopted in March 2009, and is expected to enter into force in 2011, following the development of regulations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Act sets out a proactive approach to ensure compensation is equitable at the time compensation decisions are made. The Committee also notes the communication of the Canadian Labour Congress (CLC) stating that the PSECA represents a very significant setback for pay equity.

The Committee notes that the PSECA provides for an equitable compensation assessment of female predominant job groups or classes (defined as composed of at least 70 per cent female employees) to assess the value of the work performed, without gender bias, which is to lead to a plan to address any equitable compensation matters. The Committee notes that concerns have been raised by the Parliamentary Standing Committee on the Status of Women in its June 2009 report, and a recommendation was made to repeal the Act and replace it with a proactive federal pay equity law, as recommended by the Pay Equity Task Force. The CLC makes a similar recommendation. Though acknowledging that problems existed with the complaints-based approach to pay equity under the Canadian Human Rights Act, the Standing Committee raised concerns regarding the PSECA due to the high threshold of defining a "female predominant group", the difficulty for individual women to bring a complaint, and the move from a rights-based approach to pay equity as set out in the Canadian Human Rights Act, to an issue of negotiation. The Committee also notes that, while the criteria to assess the value of the work performed are linked to skill, effort, responsibility and conditions, this assessment can then be limited by factors such as market forces. The Committee recalls in this regard that pursuant to the Convention, the Government is required to ensure the application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, which refers to rates of remuneration established without discrimination based on sex. The Committee is concerned that the assessment under the Act may not adequately ensure a non-discriminatory assessment, since factors such as market forces may themselves be inherently gender-biased. Given the concerns noted above, including by the CLC and the Parliamentary Standing Committee, the Committee asks the Government to take steps to assess further the potential impact of the Public Sector Equitable Compensation Act in ensuring equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, before it enters into force, and to take any necessary steps to address any deficiencies in this regard. It also asks the Government to provide specific information on the ability of individuals to bring a claim for non-compliance with the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, and the possible role of their union in that process. Noting the Government's indication that the Act ensures equitable compensation at the time compensation decisions are made, the Committee asks the Government to clarify whether there is the possibility of periodically reviewing compensation based on the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, after compensation has been determined.

Legislative developments. Provincial. The Committee notes that new legislation on pay equity has been adopted in New Brunswick (Pay Equity Act 2009), and that the Quebec Pay Equity Act was amended in 2009. The Committee notes with interest that, pursuant to the recent amendments of the Quebec Pay Equity Act, pay equity audits need to be undertaken every five years and a joint advisory committee with an equal number of employers' and employees' representatives is established to advise the Equal Pay Commission, regarding making regulations, developing tools to facilitate the achievement or maintenance of pay equity, and addressing any problems in carrying out the Act. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of the New Brunswick Pay Equity Act and the revised Quebec Pay Equity Act.

Work of equal value. The Committee recalls its previous observation regarding the fact that in a number of Canadian jurisdictions, full legislative expression had not been given to the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, as the legislation limited comparisons to the same work, similar work or substantially similar work. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there has been no change in this regard with respect to Alberta, British Columbia, Newfoundland and Labrador, Saskatchewan, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. In the jurisdictions with pay equity legislation applicable in the public sector, notably, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, there does not appear to be any progress in adopting similar legislation for the private sector. Regarding Nunavut, the Government indicates that a number of aspects of the labour and human rights legislation and practices are currently under review. Noting from the information provided in the Government's report that very little progress has been made in closing the gender wage gap, the Committee urges the Government to take steps to ensure that the legislation in all the jurisdictions gives full expression to the concept of "work of equal value", so that the principle of the Convention is applied in both the public and private sectors. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information of steps taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1964)

Discrimination on the grounds of political opinion and social origin. Recalling the importance of prohibiting discrimination on all the grounds enumerated in the Convention, the Committee had previously urged the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act and the relevant legislation of the provinces and the territories, to include the grounds of political opinion and social origin. The Committee notes the communication of the Canadian Labour Congress (CLC) expressing concern at the visible rise in social inequalities in Canada, and supporting the inclusion of social origin and political opinion as prohibited grounds of discrimination in Canadian and provincial law. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Canadian Human Rights Commission (CHRC) in 2009 released a research paper on the issue of adding "social condition" to the Canadian Human Rights Act. This paper concludes that "social condition" should be added as a ground of discrimination for a number of reasons, including because it would extend protection to one of the most marginalized and vulnerable groups in society, and provide them a more accessible avenue for legal recourse. The Government indicates that no research or consultations have been undertaken regarding the addition of "political opinion".

The Committee notes that there has been no change at the provincial and territorial levels in terms of adding social origin or political opinion as grounds of discrimination. In relation to the legislation of Ontario, the Government refers to the grounds of race, ancestry, citizenship, ethnic origin and place of origin as sufficient to encompass "social origin". The Committee recalls that discrimination based on "social origin" occurs when an individual's membership in a class or socio-occupational category determines his or her occupational future, either because he or she is denied certain jobs or activities, or assigned certain jobs; it is thus distinct from discrimination based on the grounds of race, ancestry, citizenship, ethnic origin and place of origin. The Committee had noted previously the concerns of the CHRC, which are reiterated by the CLC, regarding the visible rise in social inequalities in Canada, which in the view of the Committee, highlights the importance of addressing discrimination based on class and socio-occupational categories. The Committee notes from the 2009 CHRC research paper, that "social condition" is used in Canadian legislation and jurisprudence in a manner consistent with the term "social origin" under the Convention.

Noting that the ground of "social condition" or "social origin" is only covered as a ground of discrimination in the legislation of Quebec, Northwest Territories, New Brunswick and Newfoundland, and that "political opinion" is absent in the federal legislation, as well as in the legislation of Alberta, Ontario, Saskatchewan and Nunavut, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, without further delay, with a view to the amendment of the Canadian Human Rights Act and the legislation of the relevant provinces and territories, to include social origin or condition and political opinion as prohibited grounds of discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will be able to report progress in this regard.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1971)

Legislative developments. Work of equal value. The Committee invited the Government on several occasions to give expression in its legislation to the principle set out in the Convention of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. It also noted draft legislation proposing to amend the Labour Code with a view to ensuring the right to equal remuneration by introducing in section 2 the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 20348 of 2 June 2009 protecting the right to equal remuneration and adding section 62bis to the Labour Code, which requires employers to comply with the principle of equal remuneration for men and women who perform the same work, with objective wage differences based, among other grounds, on capacity, competence, qualities, responsibility and productivity, not being considered arbitrary. The Committee also notes that the Government has not provided any further information concerning the draft amendment to section 2 of the Labour Code.

With reference to its general observation of 2006, the Committee emphasizes that the concept of equal remuneration for “work of equal value” includes but goes beyond equal remuneration for “equal”, the “same” or “similar” work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, but which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted or envisaged to reflect fully in the legislation the principle of the Convention and to guarantee equal remuneration for men and women not only in situations in which men and women perform equal or similar work, but also where they perform work that is different but nevertheless of equal value.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1971)

Application in practice of the procedure for the protection of fundamental rights. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that, as yet, no court decisions have been handed down pursuant to Act No. 20087 of 3 January 2006, which establishes a special procedure for the protection of the fundamental workers’ rights set out in article 19 of the Political Constitution of the Republic and section 2 of the Labour Code, but that it will provide relevant information concerning any court decisions handed down on this matter in future reports. The Government adds that Decision No. 2210/03, issued in June 2009, is designed to increase the effectiveness of the above Act and support public officials when examining administrative complaints relating to the violation of fundamental rights by standardizing procedures. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any court decisions handed down pursuant to the special procedure to guarantee the right to equality in employment.

Discrimination based on sex. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it requested the Government, with a view to granting spouses equal rights, to take steps to amend section 349 of the Code of Commerce, which provides that, unless at the time of the marriage, the couple made an agreement choosing the separate property regime, a married woman may not enter into a commercial partnership agreement without special permission from her husband. The Government indicates that the Bill amending the marriage regime (Bulletin No. 1707-18) is undergoing its second constitutional reading in the Constitution, Legislation, Justice and Regulations Commission of the Congress and that in view of the difficulties encountered in approving the Bill, a technical committee has been set up comprising representatives of the opposition, the National Service for Women and the Ministry of Justice and is currently working to achieve consensus on this matter. The Government indicates that it is hoped that the Committee will submit a proposal during the second half of 2010. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made in adopting the Bill amending the marriage regime to ensure that women who did not marry under the separate property regime may enter into a commercial partnership agreement without special permission from their husbands.

Discrimination on the ground of political opinion. The Committee recalls that it has been asking the Government for many years to explicitly repeal Legislative Decrees Nos 112 and 139 of 1973, 473 and 762 of 1974, 1321 and 1412 of 1976, as well as the provisions of certain rules in the statutes of various universities which allow the rectors of Chilean universities broad discretion to abolish academic and administrative posts. The Government once again points out that these Decrees have been tacitly repealed and superseded by certain legal texts which were enacted and published more recently, namely the Political Constitution of the Republic, Act No. 18875 establishing the general basis of the administration of the State and Act No. 18834 on the Administrative Statute. The Committee notes with interest that, for the first time, Legislative Decree No. 3 of 10 March 2006 of the Ministry of Education, published in the Official Journal of 2 October 2007, which establishes the by-laws of the University of Chile, does not include the possibility of expelling or refusing admission to teachers, students or administrative staff on grounds of their political activities. The Committee also notes that the statutes of the University of Santiago de Chile are currently being revised. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to expressly repeal Legislative Decrees Nos 112 and 139 of 1973, 473 and 762 of 1974, 1321 and 1412 of 1976 to ensure greater legislative coherence and requests the Government to include texts of the statutes of the country’s universities in its next report.

Indigenous peoples. The Committee notes that, on 15 September 2008, the Government of Chile ratified the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169). The Committee will, therefore, continue to examine the matters relating to indigenous peoples in the context of its regular examination of the application of Convention No. 169.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1990)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Laws and regulations. The Committee recalls that section 46 of the Labour Law 1994 provides that the “distribution of wages shall follow the principle of distribution according to work and equal pay for equal work”. The Labour Contract Law, 2007, also provides that, where no collective contract providing specifications regarding remuneration exists, the principle regarding equal pay for equal work should be followed. The Committee takes note of the Government’s reply that the Labour Contract Law, 2007, represents significant progress with respect to the effective protection of the right of workers, including dispatched workers, to equal remuneration for equal work, and as such provides a powerful means to eliminate gender-based discrimination. The Committee recalls its 2006 general observation which emphasizes the crucial importance of the concept of “work of equal value” when applying the Convention. Recalling that the Committee in its 2006 general observation urged governments of countries which have not done so to adopt legislation giving full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, the Committee asks the Government to examine ways and means of reflecting fully the Convention’s principle in the legislation and to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes that, according to the Government’s report, in the context of the draft revision of the Labour Code, particularly section 97, the draft section on equal remuneration states that all employers must ensure equal remuneration for the same work or for work of equal value. The Committee also notes the communication from the Comoros Employers’ Organization (OPACO) dated 1 September 2009, which states that the revision of section 97 of the Labour Code has not yet been carried out. It notes the Government’s reply referring the OPACO to its report. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the progress of the legislative work relating to the revision of the Labour Code and hopes that the new Labour Code, giving full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, will be adopted in the near future. The Committee asks the Government to supply information on the role of the social partners in the process of the revision of the Labour Code and to send a copy of the new Code once it has been adopted.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

Access to the public service. Legislation. For a number of years the Committee has been asking the Government to take the necessary steps to revise section 14(2) of Act No 92-570 of 11 September 1992 issuing the General Public Service Regulations in order to bring it into conformity with the Convention. This section states that specific arrangements may be made, on account of physical fitness or constraints inherent in certain functions, to reserve access to the public service for candidates of either sex. While noting that it was not the Government’s intention at the outset to create gender discrimination, the Committee considers that this provision, which constitutes an exemption from section 14(1) of the Regulations prohibiting any distinction between the sexes, enables access to certain posts to be reserved for either men or women. It also considers that the criterion of “physical fitness” expressed in general terms runs the risk of limiting access to the public service for women, who account for only 27 per cent of staff numbers, according to the data supplied by the Government. The Committee recalls that, in order to be non-discriminatory within the meaning of Article 1(2) of the Convention, exceptions must be strictly limited to certain particular jobs and based on the inherent requirements thereof. Noting the Government’s indication that the removal of section 14(2) of the General Public Service Regulations might form part of a possible overall revision of those Regulations, the Committee again requests the Government to take the necessary steps to amend this provision in order to bring it into conformity with the Convention. Pending such a revision, it requests the Government to provide information on the application of section 14(2) in practice, stating the posts and duties concerned and also its impact on the employment of women in the public service.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1991)

Article 1(1)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Anti-discrimination legislation. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Anti-Discrimination Act on 9 July 2008 (Official Gazette 85/08), which defines and prohibits direct and indirect discrimination “in all its manifestations” (sections 2 and 9(1)), both in the private and in the public sectors. The Act provides protection against discrimination on the grounds of race or ethnic affiliation or colour, gender, language, religion, political or other belief, national or social origin, property, trade union membership, education, social status, marital or family status, age, health condition, disability, genetic heritage, native identity, expression or sexual orientation (section 1), thus covering all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention as well as a number of additional grounds pursuant to Article 1(1)(b). With regard to the grounds of pregnancy and maternity, the Committee notes that the new Labour Act, adopted in December 2009, prohibits an employer from refusing to employ and from dismissing a pregnant woman (section 67(1)) and the Gender Equality Act of 15 July 2008 (Official Gazette 82/08) provides that “less favourable treatment of women for reasons of pregnancy and maternity shall be deemed to be discrimination”. The Gender Equality Act also prohibits discrimination in relation to “balance between professional and private life” (section 13(1)(6)).

The Committee notes that the Anti-Discrimination Act creates a category of “more serious forms of discrimination” which includes multiple discrimination and repeated and continued discrimination, and provides that such elements should be taken into account by the courts when determining the compensation for the victim and the fine for the perpetrator. The Committee notes further that this Act covers, inter alia, work and working conditions; access to self-employment and occupation, including selection criteria, recruitment and promotion conditions; access to all types of vocational guidance, vocational training, professional improvement and retraining; education; and social security, including social welfare, pension and health insurance and unemployment insurance (section 8). The Labour Act also prohibits explicitly direct and indirect discrimination “in the field of labour and labour conditions, which includes selection criteria, employment and promotion requirements, vocational guidance and training, additional training and retraining” (section 5(4)).

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the legal and practical measures taken or envisaged to implement the relevant anti-discrimination provisions of the Labour Act, the Anti-Discrimination Act and the Gender Equality Act with regard to equal opportunities and treatment in employment and occupation. It further asks the Government to indicate the manner in which the provisions regarding the most serious forms of discrimination are being applied in practice.

Articles 2 and 3. Gender equality in employment and occupation. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the new Gender Equality Act on 15 July 2008. The Act provides for sanctions – fines from 1,000 to 1 million Croatian kuna (HRK) – in case of violation of its substantive anti-discrimination provisions (sections 31–38). It also provides for the adoption of action plans for promoting and ensuring gender equality on the basis of an analysis of the status of men and women every four years (section 11(2)) and specifies that all employers, whether public or private, shall “incorporate anti-discrimination provisions and measures with a view to achieving gender equality in their acts” (section 11(5)). Furthermore, according to this Act, social partners shall, in the course of collective bargaining and in collective agreements, comply with the provisions of the Act and measures aimed at ensuring gender equality (section 11(6)). The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the implementation of section 11 of the Gender Equality Act, including on any action plans adopted and implemented and on measures taken by public and private employers to ensure gender equality and their impact on the employment of men and women.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the measures taken with a view to strengthening women’s entrepreneurship within the framework of the National Policy for the Promotion of Gender Equality 2006–10. It further notes that statistics published by the Central Bureau of Statistics in 2010 show that the Croatian labour market is highly gender segregated. In 2008, men represented more than 70 per cent of the workers in agriculture, forestry and fishing, mining and quarrying, manufacturing, energy and supply, construction, transportation, and more than 55 per cent in public administration, whereas women represented more of 70 per cent of the workers in education, health and social services, and financial and insurance activities. In this respect the Committee welcomes the repeal of the Ordinance on jobs not permitted for women (Official Gazette 44/96) further to the entry into force of the new Labour Act on 1 January 2010 and the absence in this new Act of a general provision on jobs which women must not perform, unlike in the former Labour Act in its section 63(1). As regards the nature of jobs performed by women, the Committee notes that, according to the Government’s report, despite the lack of official statistics, unofficial data show that there are only 6 per cent of women in managerial positions in the private sector. While encouraging the Government to pursue and strengthen its efforts to support women’s entrepreneurship, the Committee asks the Government to take measures to address effectively the horizontal and vertical occupational segregation between men and women in the labour market, including measures aimed at promoting women’s access to a wider range of jobs and providing them with a wider choice of educational and vocational opportunities. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to that end, including measures taken to improve the access of women to posts of responsibility and management positions, both in the private and the public sectors, and their impact. As regards the public sector, the Committee requests the Government to provide more specific information on the number and proportion of female civil servants and civil service employees in posts of responsibility.

Equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of the Roma. The Committee notes the measures taken in 2007 and 2008, pursuant to the National Programme for the Roma/Action Plan for the Decade of Roma Inclusion, relating to the employment and training of persons belonging to the Roma national minority. The Committee welcomes in particular the production and dissemination of a leaflet, both in Croatian and in Roma language, explaining the rights and obligations of unemployed persons and providing guidelines on job search. The Committee notes that the Croatian Employment Service implemented special programmes, which included an education component, in which 436 persons participated (2007–08). The Committee further notes that according to the data provided in the Government's report at the end of 2008, 4,390 members of the Roma community were registered with the Employment Service. The Committee estimates that this number does not reflect the total number of unemployed persons of the Roma minority – the total Roma population being estimated by the authorities to be between 30,000 and 40,000 persons. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the main obstacle for the members of the Roma minority to access employment is their low level of education. In this respect, in its report following his visit to Croatia in April 2010 (CommDH(2010)20, 17 June 2010), the Commissioner for Human Rights of the Council of Europe called upon the authorities to eliminate any tendency of segregation of Roma pupils and to reinforce their pre-school education in order to increase the currently extremely low percentage of Roma pupils who have completed elementary school education. He also encouraged the adoption of targeted professional training measures. The Committee can only but emphasize the importance of education and vocational training to improve future access to the labour market and asks the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure equal access to education, including pre-school education, for Roma children, without discrimination. The Committee further asks the Government to strengthen its efforts to promote employment opportunities and to ensure equal treatment of the Roma in employment and occupation, including by adopting specific measures concerning the employment of Roma women. Please also provide specific information on the work of the Commission for the Monitoring of the Implementation of the National Programme for Roma with respect to non-discrimination in employment and occupation, as well as any available recent statistics on the number of men and women from the Roma community in the labour market, in particular the estimated levels of employment, unemployment and self-employment.

Article 3(d). Access of minorities to employment under the control of a national authority. In the absence of a reply by the Government on this matter, the Committee reiterates its requests for information on the following:

- (i) the efforts made by the Government to promote and ensure access by members of national minorities to public employment in the framework of the Civil Service Employment Plan;*
- (ii) the progress made in achieving recruitment targets concerning minorities; and*
- (iii) the current ethnic and gender composition of the civil service.*

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1987)

Legislative developments. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 38(I) of 2009 (Amendment) regarding equal remuneration between men and women for the same work and for work of equal value, amending Act No. 177(I) of 2002 and Act No. 193(I) of 2004 (Basic Acts) concerning equal remuneration between men and women. These laws were adopted with a view to harmonizing the national legislation with the Directive 2006/54/EC of the European Parliament and the Council of 5 July 2006 on the implementation of the principle of equal opportunities and equal treatment of men and women in matters of employment and occupation (recast). The Committee notes that Act No. 38(I) of 2009 strengthens the definitions of direct and indirect discrimination based on sex, and of remuneration, and inserts provisions regarding the promotion of equal remuneration through social dialogue and dialogue with concerned non-governmental organizations. The Act also provides for out-of-court protection of victims of discrimination (complaints can be submitted to the Ombudsman's Office), enhances the accessibility of legal proceedings and the provision of legal aid by the Gender Equality Committee in Employment and Vocational Training, and clarifies the shifting of the burden of proof to the respondent. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of the Acts of 2002 to 2009 concerning equal remuneration between men and women for the same work and for work of equal value, including relevant judicial and administrative decisions, as well as complaints handled by the labour inspection services.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning section 86 of the Labour Code which provides that with equal conditions of work, vocational qualifications and output, the salary is equal for all workers, irrespective of origin, sex or age. The Committee noted that this provision is not in conformity with the Convention which requires measures to promote and ensure equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. In accordance with the Convention, women and men should have the right to equal remuneration not only where they have the same working conditions, vocational qualifications and output, but also where they have different vocational qualifications and when they work in different working conditions, so long as the work performed is of equal value. The Committee draws the Government's attention to its 2006 general observation which further elaborates on this matter and calls on States which have not yet done so to ensure that their legislation fully reflects the principle of the Convention.

Application of the principle to all aspects of remuneration. The Committee notes that section 86 provides for equality with respect to the "salary", which is one of the elements of "remuneration" as defined in section 7(h) of the Labour Code. In addition, the term "remuneration" as defined in section 7(h) includes additional payments, such as commissions, payments in kind, bonuses, etc., whereas it is provided that transport allowances, family allowances, accommodation and accommodation allowances and health care are not considered part of the remuneration. Section 138 of the Labour Code specifies that the right to accommodation and accommodation allowance also applies to women workers, and according to the Government this applies irrespective of marital status. Recalling that under the Convention it must be ensured that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is applied to all aspects of remuneration, as broadly defined in Article 1(a), the Committee is concerned that the Labour Code currently provides for equality only in respect of the salary (section 86) and accommodation and accommodation allowances (section 138).

Based on the above, the Committee asks the Government to take the necessary steps to bring the legislation into line with the Convention with a view to ensuring that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women is fully reflected in the legislation and that it applies to all the elements of remuneration, as defined in Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the steps taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Prohibition of discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee previously noted that the Labour Code contains no provisions prohibiting and defining discrimination in employment and occupation, although section 1 provides that the Labour Code applies to all employers and all workers, with the exception of state public services, regardless of race, sex, civil status, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin. Act No. 81/003 of 17 July 1981, which promulgates the conditions of service of career members of the state public service, also lacks anti-discrimination provisions. Recalling its previous comments concerning the need to include in legislation provisions prohibiting and defining indirect and direct discrimination in employment and occupation, including in respect of recruitment, the Committee welcomes the Government's statement that it will examine the matter and take the Committee's comments into account. The Government is requested to indicate the steps taken with a view to including such provisions in the Labour Code and Act No. 81/003 and any progress made in this regard.

Discrimination based on sex. The Committee previously noted that a reading of sections 448 and 497 of Act No. 87/010 of 1 August 1987, issuing the Family Code, appears to indicate that, in certain cases, a woman has to obtain the authorization of her husband to take up salaried employment, whereas no such obligation is imposed upon the husband. Furthermore, in relation to jobs in the public service, the Committee notes that section 8 of Act No. 81/003 of 17 July 1981, issuing the conditions of service of career members of the state public services, and section 1(7) of Legislative Ordinance No. 88-056 of 29 September 1988, respecting the activities of magistrates, provide that a married woman must have obtained the permission of her spouse to be recruited as a career member of the public service or appointed as a magistrate. The Committee considers that the above provisions constitute discrimination on grounds of sex which are contrary to the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women workers in employment and occupation, as set out in the Convention. In this regard, the Committee welcomes the Government's statement that these provisions, being contrary to the Constitution, are null and void and that the modification of these texts was under way. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken to bring the abovementioned provisions into conformity with the Convention and to provide the amended texts, as soon as possible.

Discrimination based on race or ethnic origin. In response to the Committee's comments regarding the socio-economic situation of the Batwa, a minority indigenous group, and discrimination faced by the Batwa in employment and occupation, the Government refers to article 51 of the Constitution under which the State has the obligation to ensure and promote the peaceful and harmonious coexistence of all ethnic groups of the country. In addition, article 51 requires the State to ensure the protection and promotion of vulnerable groups and minorities. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, in its concluding observations of 17 August 2007, expressed concern that pygmies (Bambuti, Batwa and Bacwa) are subjected to marginalization and discrimination with regard to the enjoyment of their economic, social and cultural rights, in particular their access to education, health and the labour market, and also that the rights of pygmies to own, exploit, control and use their lands, their resources and communal territories – which are the basis for the exercise of their traditional occupations and livelihood activities – are not guaranteed (CERD/C/COD/CO/15, 17 August 2007, paragraphs 18 and 19). The Committee urges the Government to take measures with a view to ensuring equality of opportunity and treatment of the Bambuti, Batwa and Bacwa in employment and occupation, and to indicate the steps taken in this regard. In this context, the Government is also requested to indicate the measures taken to ensure that these indigenous groups enjoy their right to engage in their traditional occupations and livelihoods without discrimination.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislative developments. ... The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the implementation and enforcement of section 137 of the new Labour Code, including information on the measures taken or envisaged to raise awareness of these provisions among workers and employers and their representatives and public officials responsible for the enforcement of the labour legislation. In this regard, the Committee also asks the Government to provide information on whether any cases concerning section 137 have been dealt with by the responsible authorities and the manner in which they have been resolved, including any remedies provided or sanctions imposed.

Article 2(c). Collective bargaining. The Committee notes from the Government's report that salaries in the private sector are determined by way of collective agreements. Section 258 of the new Labour Code provides that collective agreements may determine the salary applicable to each occupational category. Section 259(4) provides that collective agreements cannot change the modalities of the application of the principle of "equal salary for equal work", irrespective of the origin, sex or age of the worker. The Committee notes that section 259 is not in conformity with the Convention as it refers to equal salary for equal work rather than to equal salary for work of equal value, and is also at variance with section 137 of the Labour Code. The Committee asks the Government to take the steps necessary to amend section 259(4) to bring it into alignment with the provisions of section 137 and to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee also asks the Government to provide examples of collective agreements, as well as indications as to how the agreements implement the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Dominican Republic

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1953)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the tripartite committee appointed by the Labour Advisory Council in July 2007 had drafted an amendment to section 194 of the Labour Code with a view to including in the legislation the concept of equal remuneration for men and women for "work of equal value". The Committee notes that the Government's report does not provide any information on the progress made with this draft text. It recalls that it has been commenting on this subject for many years and that section 194 in its current wording does not give full effect to the Convention as it does not include the concept of "work of equal value".

The Committee also notes that, in the same way as section 194, section 3(4) of Act No. 41-08 of 16 January 2008 on the public service provides for: "equal wages for equal work, in terms of capacity, performance and seniority, irrespective of the person performing the work". Similarly, article 62(9) in fine, of the new Constitution, adopted on 26 January 2010, lays down that "the payment of equal wages for work of equal value is guaranteed, without discrimination based on sex or other grounds and under identical conditions of capacity, effectiveness and seniority". The Committee notes that by defining the concept of "work of equal value" in terms of "identical conditions of capacity, effectiveness and seniority", the constitutional definition of the concept appears to be narrower than the term used in the Convention, as it should be possible to compare jobs carried out under different conditions, but which are nevertheless of the same value. The Committee notes with regret that the Government did not take the opportunity of these legislative and constitutional reforms to reflect the principle of the Convention fully.

The Committee wishes to refer in this respect to its 2006 general observation in which it emphasizes that the concept of equal remuneration for "work of equal value" includes but goes beyond equal remuneration for "equal", the "same" or "similar" work, and urges governments to take the necessary steps to amend their legislation to provide not only for equal remuneration for equal, the same or similar work, but also to prohibit pay discrimination that occurs in situations where men and women perform different work that is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the amendment of section 194 fully reflects the principle of the Convention and is adopted by the National Congress in the very near future, and to provide a copy once it has been adopted. The Committee also requests the Government to provide fuller information on wage inequalities in the public sector and on the measures taken to bring section 3(4) of Act No. 41-08, the wording of which is identical to that of section 194 of the Labour Code, into full conformity with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1964)

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee recalls the discussion of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards which took place in June 2008. The Committee notes with regret that the report of the Government contains no information on the specific points raised by the Conference Committee. The Committee is, therefore, obliged to repeat these points below.

The Committee also notes that a new Constitution was adopted on 26 January 2010, article 39 of which establishes the right to equality without discrimination based on gender, colour, age, disability, nationality, family ties, language, religion, political and philosophical opinion, social and personal situation. The Committee asks the Government to provide information regarding the implementation of the new Constitution as it relates to non-discrimination in employment and occupation.

Discrimination on the grounds of colour, race and national extraction. The Committee recalls that it has been raising concerns for a number of years regarding discrimination against Haitians and dark-skinned Dominicans. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee called on the Government to address the intersection between migration and discrimination, and in particular to ensure that migration laws and policies and their implementation did not result in discrimination based on race, colour or national extraction. It noted in this respect that all migrant workers, including those in an irregular situation, must be protected from discrimination in employment and occupation. The Conference Committee also noted the Government's intention to establish a tripartite committee to follow up the recommendations made jointly by the United Nations Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and the Independent Expert on minority issues. The Committee notes the wide range of recommendations of the Special Rapporteur and the Independent Expert, including in particular with respect to developing a national action plan against racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia; establishing an independent institution with authority to combat all forms of discrimination; adopting comprehensive legislation to combat racial discrimination; collecting relevant socio-economic data; ensuring that migration laws and their implementation protect the right to non-discrimination; monitoring sectors such as agriculture and construction, where many Haitians and Dominicans of Haitian descent are employed; targeting multiple discrimination facing minority women, particularly those who are black or of Haitian heritage (A/HRC/7/19/Add.5; A/HRC/7/23/Add.3, 18 March 2008, paragraphs 118–121, 126–128 and 131–132). The Committee urges the Government to take concrete measures without further delay to ensure the effective application of the Convention, in law and in practice, with respect to the grounds of race, colour and national extraction, and in this context to ensure that all migrant workers, including those in an irregular situation, are protected from discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the tripartite committee to follow up the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur and the Independent Expert has been established, and the progress achieved in implementing the recommendations, in particular those noted above.

Discrimination based on sex. The Committee has been raising concerns regarding the persistence of cases of discrimination based on sex, including pregnancy testing and sexual harassment, and the lack of effective application of the legislation in force, and has raised the issue of pregnancy testing as a requirement to obtain or keep a job in export processing zones. It notes in this regard the Government's indication to the Conference Committee that the Secretary of State for Labour had created an office responsible for monitoring gender policies in the field of employment, and the Gender Office had submitted a draft amendment to the Labour Code to the Advisory Labour Council with a view to improving labour legislation regarding medical examinations prior to or during employment. Regarding sexual harassment, the Government indicated that the Labour Code was being amended to make sexual harassment a criminal offence carrying a severe penalty. The Conference Committee, while noting this information, questioned the adequacy of the legislation and the complaints mechanisms to address such discrimination, and called on the Government, in collaboration with the workers' and employers' organizations, to take additional steps to strengthen protection against discrimination in law and in practice, and in particular to ensure that complaints mechanisms were effective and accessible for men and women working in enterprises where no unions existed. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the existing anti-discrimination legislation is effectively applied, and in this context to take proactive measures, in collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations, to prevent and investigate both sexual harassment, and the requirement of pregnancy testing as a condition for obtaining or maintaining employment. The Committee also asks the Government to take the necessary measures to reinforce the sanctions for sexual harassment and mandatory pregnancy testing as well as the dispute resolution machinery related to discrimination in employment and occupation, to ensure that it is effective and accessible in practice to all workers, including those in export processing zones. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the following:

- (i) the status of the adoption of the proposed amendments to the Labour Code regarding sexual harassment and pregnancy testing;
- (ii) measures taken to support and protect victims of sexual harassment and pregnancy testing, including facilitating access to complaints procedures;

- (iii) awareness raising regarding discrimination, including sexual harassment and pregnancy testing, and building the capacity of labour inspectors, relevant government authorities, and the judiciary to detect and address violations in this regard;
- (iv) any specific measures taken to improve the detection of sexual harassment and pregnancy testing in export processing zones; and
- (v) any cases of sexual harassment or pregnancy testing reported to or detected by the labour inspectorate and any relevant administrative or judicial decisions, including the remedies provided and the sanctions imposed.

HIV testing. Regarding its previous comments relating to HIV testing as a condition to be hired or keep a job, and the lack of enforcement of the prohibition of such testing, the Committee notes the Government's indication to the Conference Committee that involuntary HIV testing is prohibited in all enterprises, there is an HIV/AIDS technical unit within the labour inspectorate, and regular inspections are carried out but no cases concerning discrimination have been reported. The Committee requests the Government to reinforce its efforts to address HIV testing as a condition to be hired or to keep a job in practice, including taking measures to protect workers who lodge complaints, stepping up enforcement by labour inspectors, and building their capacity to detect and address such violations. Please provide detailed information of measures taken in this regard, as well as with respect to any cases of involuntary HIV testing reported to or detected by the labour inspectorate, and any relevant court or administrative decisions.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1960)

Article 1 of the Convention. Work of equal value. For a number of years, the Committee has been pursuing a dialogue with the Government regarding the concept of "work of equal value". In its previous comments, the Committee noted that sections 35 and 88 of the Labour Law, 2003, prohibited sex discrimination in wages but only referred to "analogous working conditions". The Committee pointed out that the Labour Law did not fully reflect the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value and had therefore urged the Government to take the necessary measures to give full legislative expression to this principle. The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no information with respect to any envisaged legislative change. It recalls that the equal remuneration provisions of the Labour Law are narrower than the principle as laid down by the Convention, and thus may hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination. The Committee, however, notes the Government's indication that training sessions on the concept of "work of equal value" for the persons concerned, such as the members of the National Wages Council, are envisaged in collaboration with the ILO. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the relevant provisions of the Labour Law, 2003, so as to provide not only for equal remuneration for men and women for equal, the same or similar work but also to prohibit remuneration discrimination that occurs in situations where men and women perform different work, using different skills and involving different working conditions, that is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on any training sessions organized on the principle of the Convention for the persons in charge of determining wages as well as any action taken following such training to ensure the full application of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1995)

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Application in practice of the Convention in the Maquila (export processing zones). With regard to cases of violations of section 627 of the Labour Code respecting penalties for pregnancy testing and the dismissal of disabled women, as noted by the Special Unit for Gender Issues and the Prevention of Discrimination in Employment, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the majority of the cases consisted of women in the textile industry sector (Maquila), although there were also cases in the industrial, services and trade sectors. The Government indicates that during 2008 another ten cases were identified of dismissals of pregnant women, of whom nine were reinstated. During the first six months of 2009, the Special Unit identified 16 such cases, of which 15 resulted in reinstatement. With regard to the inspections carried out by the Special Unit in export processing zones and their results, during the course of 2008 a total of 276 scheduled inspections were carried out, during the course of which cases were initiated in 51 establishments for various violations of the labour legislation. During the first six months of 2009, fines were imposed on 23 establishments for violations of the labour legislation and for not having remedied infringements identified during the inspection. According to the Government, training activities in enterprises in the textile sector have been reinforced to ensure compliance with the labour legislation. The Committee notes that various legislative texts are being publicized in the textile industry, including Ministerial Circular No. 001/05 on the prohibition of employers to require HIV and pregnancy tests. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the inspections carried out by the Special Unit for Gender Issues and the Prevention of Discrimination in Employment and their results, and particularly any other measures adopted or envisaged with a view to reinforcing the protection of women workers and preventing discrimination in the Maquila sector.

Article 1(1)(b). Discrimination against workers on grounds of HIV/AIDS status. The Committee notes that the Government will undertake a review of the legislation with a view to ensuring protection against any discrimination related to HIV/AIDS status in the public sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments relating to the adoption of the relevant legislation and on the application in practice of the provisions that are in force in the private sector.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. According to the Government, since June 2009 a new policy of gender equity has been implemented through which the active participation of women is being promoted in education, employment, the economy and political, social and cultural life, particularly for women in rural areas. The Government indicates that a change of attitude is also being promoted in State institutions with a view to institutionalizing an approach that guarantees decent treatment for women. The Government indicates that support will be provided for the 262 municipal authorities in the country for the application of their gender equality policies, with a view to promoting the active participation and representation of women in decision-making processes in the political, economic and social spheres. According to the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), the participation rate of men in economic activity is 81.4 per cent, while that of women is 44.2 per cent. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the new policy of equality between men and women that is being implemented in both the public and private sectors. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted with a view to promoting the participation of women in the labour market and their access to managerial positions.

Indigenous peoples. With reference to the participation of indigenous communities in the land allocation programmes undertaken by the Salvadorian Institute for Agrarian Reform (ISTA), the Government indicates that the programmes do not envisage the specific allocation of lands to indigenous communities, but are intended for the rural sector in general, with some programmes benefiting the indigenous population, including the Salvadorian National Indigenous Association (ANIS), the United Association of Salvadorian Indigenous Workers (AUTIS) and the Coordinated Association of Indigenous Communities of El Salvador (ACCIES). According to the Government, the indigenous communities which have gained access to ISTA programmes have seen improvements in their living standards through the allocation of lands in accordance with the applications made. Through the ISTA a land title programme has been implemented, with 4,455 ownership titles being granted. Technical assistance has also been provided to producers so that they can benefit from the allocation of ownership in the agricultural and stock-raising sectors. According to the Government, the country does not have updated census data or data on the geographical location of the indigenous population. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to achieve progress in the effective equality of indigenous peoples in employment and occupation.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Ethiopia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee urges the Government to provide full information on the matters raised in the comments below.

Legislation. The Committee recalls that section 14(1)(f) of Labour Proclamation No. 377/2003 provides that it shall be unlawful for an employer to discriminate between workers on the basis of nationality, sex, religion, political outlook or any other conditions. The Committee requested the Government to clarify whether section 14(1)(f) protects workers from discrimination in the selection and recruitment process and whether the employment service is bound by the principle of non-discrimination. In its report, the Government states that article 41 of the Constitution provides that every Ethiopian has the right to engage freely in economic activities and to pursue a livelihood of his or her choice. According to the Government this provision requires all public bodies, including the employment service, as well as employers to abstain from discrimination. The Committee nevertheless considers it important that the non-discrimination provisions contained in the Labour Proclamation are amended with a view to explicitly providing that workers and candidates for employment, including non-citizens, are protected from discrimination and to include all the prohibited grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, including social origin and national extraction. In the meantime, the Committee urges the Government to provide information on any cases concerning discrimination in employment and occupation identified and addressed by the competent authorities, including the labour inspectors and the courts.

Recalling that the non-discrimination clause of the Federal Civil Service Proclamation No. 262/2002 does not include the grounds of social origin and national extraction (section 13(1)), the Government previously indicated that the question of amending section 13(1) to include these grounds had been placed on the agenda of the task force responsible for amending the Proclamation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Equality of opportunity and treatment in the public sector, irrespective of sex and ethnicity. The Committee recalls that section 13(3) of the Federal Civil Service Proclamation No. 262/2002 authorizes preferential recruitment of women and members of ethnic groups underrepresented in the civil service. However, the Committee regrets that no information has been provided in response to the Committee's comments regarding the promotion of gender equality and ethnic diversity in the public sector. Consequently, the Committee urges the Government to:

- (i) provide information on the measures taken to promote equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women in the civil service, including in respect to recruitment, training and promotion;
- (ii) provide information on any measures taken to promote access to the civil service of all ethnic groups;
- (iii) provide statistical information on civil service employment by type of service and grade, disaggregated by sex, and to provide information on the ethnic composition of the civil service; and
- (iv) provide an indication as to how the Convention is applied with respect to state-owned enterprises.

Education and training. The Committee notes from the Government's report that in 2006–07 the gross enrolment rate of girls increased to 85 per cent in secondary education, 51 per cent in technical and vocational education and training and to 25 per cent in higher education. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the progress made in ensuring equal access of men and women to education and training at all levels. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure equal access of women to employment and income-generating activities.

Indigenous communities. The Committee notes from the 2003 report of the African Commission's Working Group of Experts on Indigenous Populations/Communities that a number of pastoralist communities live in Ethiopia who depended on their ancestral lands to engage in their traditional occupations and livelihood activities. The report indicates that the adoption of a new strategy on pastoral development by the federal Government constituted a positive step in addressing the problems faced by pastoralist communities, particularly evictions from their land. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the strategy on pastoral development and information on its implementation.

Follow-up to the recommendations made by the Tripartite Committee (representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution) The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no new information concerning this matter. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any further decisions reached by the Ethiopia–Eritrea Claims Commission and on measures taken, in line with such decisions, to indemnify as fully as possible the workers displaced following the outbreak of the 1998 border conflict, and to grant appropriate relief in accordance with Conventions Nos 111 and 158.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Fiji

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2002)

Legislation. In its previous observation, the Committee noted that the application of section 78 of the Employment Relations Promulgation, 2007, on unlawful discrimination in rates of remuneration would restrict the comparison of remuneration to men and women holding the "same or substantially similar qualifications" employed in the "same or substantially similar circumstances". It pointed out that this may unduly limit the scope of comparison of remuneration received by men and women, since jobs might involve different "circumstances", but may nevertheless be of equal value. The Committee notes the Government's reply that this issue will be referred to the tripartite Employment Relations Advisory Board for consideration. The Committee therefore asks the Government once again to take the necessary measures to amend section 78 of the Employment Relations Promulgation, 2007, to give full effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, in accordance with the Convention, and to provide information on the progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2002)

National policy to promote equality of opportunity and treatment. The Committee notes with interest the adoption on 15 December 2008 by the National Council for Building a Better Fiji (NCBBF) of the Peoples Charter for Change, Peace and Progress, which aims to build a society based on equality of opportunity for all Fiji citizens and on peace. The Charter, which was drafted on the basis of the findings and recommendations contained in the Report on the State of the Nation and the Economy (SNE Report) and after consultations held throughout the country, proclaims that equality and dignity of all citizens, respect for the diverse cultural, religious and philosophical beliefs, social and economic justice, equitable access to the benefits of development, and merit-based equality of opportunities for all shall be leading principles and aspirations. The Charter also sets out key measures and actions to be taken, such as the promulgation of an Anti-Discrimination Act, the development of education, vocational training and job placement, the promotion of multicultural education and the gradual phasing out of institutional names that denote racial affiliations, and the elimination of racial and inappropriate categorization and profiling in government records and registers. Other measures also include the increase of the participation of women at all levels of decision-making, the enactment of a code of conduct for public servants and persons who hold statutory appointments, the reform of the public sector, including the removal of any political interference and the compulsory training of civil servants, the development of cooperation between the Government and the private sector, and the introduction of a national minimum wage. The Charter also contains specific measures concerning indigenous peoples and their institutions. In this respect, the Committee notes that the NCBBF made a number of recommendations in the SNE Report, such as the need to promulgate legislation prohibiting discrimination based on race, religion and sexual orientation, as well as legislation protecting the rights of minority ethnic groups (Indians, Pacific Islanders, Chinese, European and landless Fijians), especially with the view to improving access to land. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the measures envisaged in the Peoples Charter for Change, Peace and Progress to prohibit and eliminate discrimination, in particular racial discrimination, and to promote equal opportunities for all in relation to access to education, vocational training and employment in both the private and the public sectors.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes with interest the adoption by the Government of the 2008 National Policy on Sexual Harassment in the Workplace, which was developed in consultation with the tripartite social partners. It notes in particular that the Policy provides for a definition of sexual harassment and a list of acts that constitute sexual harassment, and establishes the employer's responsibilities: every employer must have an internal written policy and a grievance procedure on sexual harassment at the workplace, which are to be developed by both staff and managers (paragraph 5.1). The Committee further notes that the Policy highlights the consequences of sexual harassment not only for the victim but also for the entire staff and the enterprise itself and describes the complaint mechanisms available under the Human Rights Commission Act 1999, section 154 of the Penal Code and Part 13 of the Employment Relations Promulgation 2007. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the 2008 National Policy on Sexual Harassment is implemented at the workplace level, indicating in particular any internal written policies adopted and grievance procedures put in place and any preventive measures taken by employers. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on cases of sexual harassment identified by or referred to the labour inspectorate or any disputes concerning sexual harassment brought before the competent bodies, either under the Human Rights Commission Act 1999, section 154 of the Penal Code or Part 13 of the Employment Relations Promulgation 2007.

Equal access to education and training. The Committee notes that the Peoples Charter for Change, Peace and Progress contains numerous proposed measures to ensure access to education for all, including the establishment of a statutory body for community and non-formal learning, the strengthening of early childhood education – especially in rural areas – the enhancement of skills and vocational training and the promotion of entrepreneurship training, the facilitation of job placement in partnership with the private sector and the introduction of a grant system. The Committee further notes that the SNE Report emphasizes the need for the education system to include the teaching and understanding of various cultural groups in order to foster unity and to develop an inclusive based education system.

The Committee understands from the information in the SNE Report and the provisions of the Peoples Charter that the education system will undergo an extensive reform. As a consequence, the Committee requests the Government to clarify whether the system established under the Education (Establishment and Registration of Schools) Regulations, 1966, providing that in the admission process preference may be given to pupils of a particular race or creed, will still be in force. If so, the Committee reiterates its previous request for information on the application of these provisions in practice and for statistical information on the number of schools applying race or creed as an admission requirement as well as the number of pupils enrolled in these schools. Please also provide information on the implementation of the reform of the educational system, in particular on the measures taken to ensure the equal access of boys and girls, men and women from all ethnic groups to education and vocational training and their results.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Finland

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee notes the Government's report and the comments of the Central Organization of Finnish Trade Unions (SAK), the Confederation of Unions for Professionals and Managerial Staff in Finland (AKAVA), the Confederation of Finnish Industries (EK) and the Commission for Local Authority Employers (KT) included therein. It also notes the report on the Final Evaluation on the Framework of Actions on Gender Equality in Finland (2009), sent by the Government.

Gender pay gap. The Committee recalls that the tripartite equal pay programme has the objective of narrowing the gender pay gap to 15 per cent by the year 2015. The Committee notes from the Government's report that over the past five years the gender pay gap has been reduced by one percentage point and that the difference in pay between men and women was at 18.83 per cent in 2008. With respect to average gross hourly earnings, Eurostat figures for 2008 indicate that the unadjusted gender pay gap remains unchanged at 20 per cent. The Committee further notes the Government's statement that due to the economic recession, action to reduce the gender pay gap will encounter additional challenges. The report of the Final Evaluation on the Framework of Actions on Gender Equality in Finland (2009) indicates disappointment by some of the social partners at the concrete achievements of the programme and the fact that some of the structural problems of the labour market, such as occupational segregation, have not been sufficiently addressed. Nonetheless, the Committee notes the overall strong support by all parties to continue the equal pay programme. The Committee asks the Government to take appropriate measures to address the challenges encountered in the implementation of the equal pay programme with a view to enhancing its impact at national, sectoral and workplace level, and to provide detailed information on its implementation and the results achieved. Please also indicate the measures taken to address more effectively some of the structural causes of the gender pay gap, such as occupational gender segregation, and provide the fullest possible statistical data on differences in men's and women's earnings with a view to assessing progress made since 2008.

Article 2 of the Convention. Application in practice. Equality plans and equal pay surveys. The Committee notes from the Government's report that surveys conducted in 2008 and 2009 for the purpose of assessing the functionality of the Equality Act (Act on Equality between Men and Women (609/1986)) indicate that a total of 62 per cent of the workplaces obliged to prepare an equality plan had done so, with the majority of the plans made in the government and municipal sectors. While 60 per cent of the workplaces undertook an equal pay review, employee representatives in the public sector had expressed criticism at the manner in which equality plans had promoted equal pay. Despite the requirement in the Equality Act, in only one third of the workplaces employee representatives had participated in equal pay reviews. The EK states that 75 per cent of its member companies prepared equality plans together with employee representatives. The Committee notes that SAK raises concerns about the manner in which equal pay reviews are able to address unexplained pay inequalities. According to SAK, the surveys on equal pay reviews indicated that reviews did not result in any action in 45 per cent of the workplaces. A survey conducted by SAK indicated that corrective measures had been undertaken in only 14 per cent of the cases in which pay discrimination was found. According to AKAVA, clarity of the legislation on pay reviews, the preparation of pay reviews and access to pay information remain problematic, especially in the private sector. The EK states, in this regard, that making gender equality plans more accessible at the workplace level and the drafting process more transparent have been identified by all social partners as priorities in making gender equality planning more efficient. The Committee notes that, according to the Ministry of Social Affairs and Health, a procedure in the workplace granting employee representatives direct access to information on pay could clarify the situation and reduce the administrative burden on businesses. The Committee welcomes the continued efforts made by the Government and the social partners to promote equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value through equal pay reviews under the Equality Act. The Committee asks the Government to take measures, in cooperation with the social partners, to address the implementation gaps of equal pay reviews, including considering granting employee representatives direct access to pay information at the workplace level, taking measures aimed at identifying unexplained and discriminatory gender pay differentials and at improving participation of employees and their organizations in the development of equality plans and implementation of pay reviews. The Committee also asks the Government to provide further information on the actual impact of the pay reviews on reducing gender pay differentials in the private and public sectors, including relevant statistical data, and information on the number of equal pay reviews that have resulted in specific follow-up action, including corrective action where pay discrimination was found. Noting that the report on the functionality of the Equality Act was to be submitted to Parliament in 2009, the Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the report, including a summary of its findings.

Indirect discrimination with respect to remuneration. The Committee notes the concerns expressed by AKAVA that young educated women are more often than men employed on fixed-term contracts, particularly in the state sector. As employees on fixed-term contracts often receive lower pay and career progress for highly educated women is as much as ten years behind than that of men with corresponding levels of education, AKAVA considers that the fixed-term employment contracts of young women may constitute an attempt by employers to avoid employment security and the costs incurred due to parental leave. According to AKAVA, the current legislation is unable to address such indirect discrimination against women with respect to remuneration. The Committee asks the Government to provide statistical data, disaggregated by sex and age, on the employment of men and women on fixed-term contracts in the state sector, and their corresponding levels of remuneration. The Committee also asks the Government to examine the following:

- (i) the extent to which the more frequent employment of young educated women on fixed-term employment contracts results in indirect discrimination with respect to remuneration; and
- (ii) any gaps in the legislation on equal remuneration with a view to addressing such indirect discrimination.

France

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1981)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Tripartite Committee (representation made under article 24 of the Constitution). The Committee notes with interest the repeal by Act No. 2008-596 of 25 June 2008 of the "contract of new employment" (CNE) scheme, which was the subject of a representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution alleging non-observance by France of the Convention and of the Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158). It also notes, according to the information provided by the Government, that all current CNEs have been re-categorized as contracts for an indefinite period.

Non-discrimination and equality of opportunity and treatment. Legislative developments. The Committee notes with interest the amendment of article 1 of the Constitution by an Act of 23 July 2008 and the adoption of Act No. 2008-496 of 27 May 2008 issuing various provisions adapting the national legislation to community law in the field of combating discrimination, which implements and completes the transposition of five European Directives and amends the Labour Code, among other texts. Article 1 of the Constitution now explicitly provides that “the law shall promote the equal access of women and men to electoral mandates and elected functions, as well as to professional and social responsibilities”. Furthermore, following the adoption of Act No. 2008-496 of 27 May 2008, the Labour Code refers to the definition of direct and indirect discrimination in employment given in that Act (see below L.1132-1 and L.1134-1) and includes provisions specifying the conditions in which differences of treatment are possible without infringing the principle of the prohibition on discrimination (sections L.1133-2 and L.1142-2). The Act, which applies to all public or private persons, including those engaged in a self-employed activity, also provides that the instruction to discriminate constitutes discrimination and contains provisions on the protection of victims and the witnesses of discriminatory acts against any retaliatory measures, the burden of proof and moral or sexual harassment. Noting this information, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of article 1 of the Constitution and the provisions of Act No. 2008-496 of 27 May 2008 in practice.

Discrimination on the basis of race and national extraction. The Committee notes that in 2009, “origin” was the ground of discrimination referred to most often in complaints concerning employment received by the High Authority to Combat Discrimination and Promote Equality (HALDE) and that a high percentage of the deliberations of this body also concern this ground. It also notes that, according to a report published in November 2010 by the National Institute of Statistics and Economic Studies entitled “France – Social portrait 2010”, during the period between 2005 and 2008, on average 86 per cent of French men aged between 16 and 65 years and 74 per cent of women had a job when both of their parents were of French birth, whereas the employment rate was 65 per cent among men and 56 per cent among women where at least one of their parents was an immigrant originally from a Maghreb country. The study emphasizes that these disparities are not entirely due to discrimination, but recalls that recent surveys have shown the existence of discrimination on the basis of “origin” during recruitment.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning awareness raising and the training of public and private actors on the prevention of discrimination, particularly in the public employment service, temporary employment agencies, consular chambers managing training, enterprises which have signed partnerships and trade union organizations. In its report, the Government also mentions preventive activities carried out by the commissions for the promotion of equal opportunities and citizenship at the departmental level and mentions the existence of town contracts which include measures to combat racial discrimination. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that ownership by local actors of measures to combat discrimination still needs to be broadly established. With regard to measures to combat discrimination in recruitment faced by young persons with immigrant parents, the Government indicates that activities have been carried out focusing on three areas: measures to support young persons in their search for employment, particularly through sponsorship, support for the creation of enterprises or skills development; raising the awareness of enterprises of the need to diversify their recruitment; and combating professional down-grading by seeking a better match between qualifications and employment levels for higher education graduates.

Emphasizing the particularly important role of workers’ and employers’ organizations in promoting equality in employment and occupation, the Committee notes that the Inter-Occupational Agreement on Diversity in Enterprises, which was signed in 2006 by the social partners and made obligatory in 2008, provides for the implementation of action focusing on the commitment of managers of enterprises, awareness raising and combating stereotypes. The Committee also notes that in May 2009, an action programme and recommendations on diversity and equal opportunities were drawn up by the Commissioner for Diversity and Equal Opportunities and that it contains a list of measures to be taken to promote equal opportunities in education and employment. Finally, it notes from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) that France is drawing up a national plan to combat racism (CERD/C/FRA/CO/17-19, 27 August 2010, paragraph 9). The Committee hopes that the national plan to combat racism will include a section on employment and occupation, including education and vocational training, developed in collaboration with employers’ and workers’ organizations, and asks the Government to provide information in this regard.

The Committee also notes the report of the United Nations independent expert on minority issues following her visit to France in September 2007. Noting that members of minority communities are confronted with serious racial discrimination, she issued a number of recommendations, such as the need to establish more severe penalties so that they are sufficiently dissuasive in cases of discriminatory practices and the importance of putting in place robust affirmative action policies to counter the effects of long-term discrimination (A/HRC/7/23/Add.2, 4 March 2008, paragraphs 78 and 79). Furthermore, the CERD noted with regret in its concluding observations that “notwithstanding recent policies to combat racial discrimination in housing and employment, persons of immigrant origin or from ethnic groups ... continue to be the target of stereotyping and discrimination of all kinds, which impede the integration and advancement at all levels of French society” (CERD/C/FRA/CO/17-19, 27 August 2010, paragraph 13).

Noting this information and the numerous measures and schemes established at both the national and local levels to combat discrimination on the basis of race, national extraction or ethnic origin, the Committee expresses concern at the fact that these measures do not appear to be producing sufficient results and requests the Government to strengthen its action to combat effectively discrimination on the basis of race or national extraction and to actively promote equality in employment and occupation. The Committee requests the Government to provide statistics allowing the Committee to assess the impact of the measures to promote equal opportunities and treatment in employment, including in education and vocational training, irrespective of race or national extraction. The Government is also requested to provide information on the following points:

- (i) any measures taken to promote tolerance and respect among all members of the population and to combat the persistent stereotypes and prejudices suffered by persons from an immigrant background or members of ethnic groups, including in the overseas departments and regions;*
- (ii) the follow-up to the action programme and recommendations of the Commissioner for Diversity and Equal Opportunities in Employment and Occupation;*
- (iii) the measures taken to combat discrimination on the basis of race, national extraction and ethnic origin in employment in the context of the future national plan to combat racism; and*
- (iv) the action taken by the social partners to implement the Inter-Occupational Agreement on Diversity in Enterprises made obligatory in 2008 and to promote collective bargaining on this issue.*

Promotion of equality of opportunity and treatment in the public service. The Committee notes that a Charter for the promotion of equality in the three branches of the public service was signed in December 2008 by the Minister responsible for the public service and the President of HALDE. The aim of the Charter is to establish recruitment conditions that are tailored to needs without discrimination, make career paths more dynamic, raise the awareness of and train employees of the administration and disseminate good practices. The Committee notes that the first assessment of the implementation of the Charter, given in the annual report on the state of the public service (Policies and practices 2009–10), shows progress in the mobilization of Ministries and the start of social dialogue, the opening up of the public service following the establishment of various integrated preparatory classes (CPI) and the development of mentoring mechanisms, and several good practices to encourage professional development. The assessment also shows a poorer mobilization with regard to human resources management and access to training, as well as weaknesses relating to the establishment of diagnostic assessments on existing inequalities and alert mechanisms. The Committee notes that, according to the recommendations made by HALDE on this matter, there is a need to continue and intensify the efforts made, particularly with regard to training and informing staff to help them to identify potentially discriminatory situations and for the identification of sources of discrimination, the necessary procedures to verify the objectiveness of decisions, support for the victims of discrimination and overall follow-up of the measures taken. The Government also indicates that it has implemented a system of allowances for diversity aimed at persons preparing for a competitive entrance examination (categories A and B) and a scheme (“the Pact”) providing poorly qualified young persons with alternative training with a view to obtaining employment in category C. The Committee also notes that, in its report, the United Nations independent expert on minority issues considers that the public sector must lead by example in promoting and ensuring equality and that the Government should undertake more aggressive strategies to increase the number of people with immigrant background in the public service, particularly the police, civil service and the judiciary, and that these efforts should be evaluated on the basis of results or outcomes (A/HRC/7/23/Add.2, 4 March 2008, paragraph 86). Noting the efforts made not only to combat discrimination in the public service, but also to promote equal opportunities and treatment, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of these measures and schemes, including the Charter of 2008, as well as of any action plan adopted to promote equality in employment and occupation, the obstacles encountered and the evaluation of the overall results of these measures, including appropriate statistics, on access by all to the public service without discrimination on the basis of any of the grounds prohibited by the national legislation and the Convention.

Furthermore, the Committee notes the comments communicated in May 2010 by the National Union of Scientific Researchers and the National Autonomous Union of Sciences concerning the career reorientation programme following a restructuring established under Act No. 2009-972 of 3 August 2009 on mobility and career paths in the public service. The trade union organizations emphasize the potentially discriminatory nature of the programme which would allow changes of jobs and even of employer within the public service without competitive entrance examinations. Noting the Government’s reply received in November 2010, according to which the career reorientation programme is based on ongoing dialogue between the administration and the employee concerned, the Committee requests it to ensure that the implementation of this programme in the event of a restructuring of the public service does not give rise to discriminatory practices prohibited by the legislation and the Convention.

Discrimination on the basis of religion. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to provide information on the application of Act No. 65 of 17 March 2004 and its implementing circular of 18 May 2004 concerning the prohibition of wearing in public schools any conspicuous religious signs or apparel on pain of disciplinary measures including expulsion. In the absence of a reply from the Government on this point, the Committee is bound to repeat its request to provide information on the following points:

- (i) any court ruling or administrative decision concerning the application of the above legislation;*
- (ii) the numbers of boys and girls who have been expelled from school on the basis of the Act; and*

(iii) the measures taken to ensure that the pupils who have been expelled nonetheless have adequate opportunities to acquire education and training.

The Committee also requests the Government to ensure that the application of this Act does not have the effect of reducing the opportunities of girls to find employment in the future.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2000)

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination in employment and occupation. Legislation. In its previous comments, the Committee pointed out that the provisions of the Constitution regarding discrimination did not include any reference to the prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation and concerned only discriminatory treatment by public officials (section 33(3)). It also noted that the Labour Act of 1990 did not contain any provisions on discrimination, or reference to grounds of discrimination, but that it was in the process of being amended. The Committee notes that a new Labour Act (No. 5 of 2007) was adopted on 17 October 2007. While noting the Government's statement that the issue of discrimination has been adequately dealt with in the Labour Act 2007, the Committee notes that the new Act neither defines nor prohibits discrimination in employment and occupation on the basis of any of the grounds enumerated in the Convention, except in the case of dismissal and disciplinary action (section 83(2)). The Committee wishes to recall that it considers that, although general constitutional provisions regarding equality are important, they are not generally sufficient to address specific cases of discrimination in employment and occupation. It further considers that comprehensive anti-discrimination legislation is needed to ensure the effective application of the Convention and that, as a minimum, all the prohibited grounds of discrimination listed in Article 1(1)(a) should be addressed. The Committee therefore asks the Government to consider including in the Labour Act a comprehensive definition and a general prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination at all stages of employment and occupation based on, as a minimum, all of the seven enumerated grounds, namely, race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin, as well as dissuasive sanctions and appropriate remedies. The Government is requested to provide information on the concrete steps taken to that end.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report received on 18 November 2009 concerning developments which had taken place until 31 May 2009.

The Committee refers to its comments under the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), with regard to the observations communicated by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) with the support of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC) on the impact of the measures introduced in the framework of the mechanism to support the Greek economy. The Committee notes that in the view of the GSEE the reforms introduced by the abovementioned measures have a direct impact on the application of Convention No. 100 as they entail a far-reaching reform in the area of wages and the related system of collective bargaining, social security and security of employment, which could result in increasing discrimination in pay. According to the GSEE the national general collective agreements provided a fundamental institutional guarantee of equality between men and women as regards minimum standards of wages and conditions of work, and contributed significantly to restraining the gender pay gap in Greece. The GSEE is particularly concerned that the combined effect of the financial crisis, the growing informal economy and the implementation of austerity measures may have adverse or spillover effects on the negotiating power of women, particularly older and migrant women with respect to their terms of employment and type of work contract, and the over-representation of women and workers with family responsibilities in precarious low-paid jobs. Finally, the GSEE draws attention to the possible deterioration of wages of other categories of workers that are (wholly or partly) excluded from the scope of the labour law protection, such as domestic workers and persons working in agricultural undertakings.

The Committee recalls its observation and direct request of 2008 addressing issues relating to the assessment of the gender pay gap, its underlying reasons relating to occupational segregation and different educational choices of men and women, the promotion of objective job evaluation methods in the public and private sectors, general measures to address the gender pay gap in cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations and the General Secretariat for Gender Equality, the promotion of social dialogue, including collective bargaining, as a means to improve remuneration in occupations and sectors primarily employing women, and enforcement of the legislation applying the Convention.

The Committee will examine the issues raised by the GSEE and the Government's response thereto, together with the Government's next report which is due in 2011.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1984)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report received on 18 November 2009 concerning the developments which had taken place until 31 May 2009.

The Committee refers to its comments under the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), with regard to the observations communicated by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) with the support of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC) on the impact of the measures introduced in the framework of the mechanism to support the Greek economy.

Further to its comments on the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), the Committee notes that in the view of the GSEE, the reforms introduced by the abovementioned measures have a direct impact on the application of Convention No. 111 and are likely to lead to an increase in multiple discrimination on the grounds of gender, ethnic or racial origin, age, family responsibilities or disability.

The Committee recalls its observation and direct request of 2008 addressing issues relating to the position of women in the various sectors and occupations in the public and private sectors, measures to address vertical and horizontal occupational segregation based on sex, women's equal opportunity and treatment in respect of admission to the police service, measures aimed at fostering equality of opportunity and treatment of vulnerable groups, in particular the Roma and Greek Muslims, measures to promote the application of the Convention through tripartite cooperation, and the effective enforcement of the equality legislation.

The Committee will examine the issues raised by the GSEE, and the Government's response thereto, together with the Government's next report which is due in 2011.

Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156) (ratification: 1988)

The Committee refers to its comments under the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), with regard to the observations communicated by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) with the support of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC) on the impact of the measures introduced in the framework of the mechanism to support the Greek economy.

Further to the issues raised under the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), the Committee notes that GSEE is particularly concerned at the effect of the austerity measures on the situation of workers with family responsibilities, such as the increasing burden of family responsibilities on women due to gender stereotypes and as a result of uneven sharing between men and women of child and family care responsibilities. With respect to Act No. 3863/2010 on the "New Social Security System and relevant provisions", the GSEE raises concerns at the drastic increase in the retirement age of women, and particularly working mothers of minors, which should be assessed against the effect of the other measures taken, as well as against the inadequate and inefficient public social care support for mothers and working parents.

The Committee will examine the issues raised by the GSEE and the Government's response thereto, together with the Government's next report which is due in 2011. The latter should also address the issues raised in its previous observation and direct request of 2007.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Prohibition of discrimination. The Committee recalls its previous comments regarding section 20 of the Order of 5 March 1987 on the general principles of the public service, which prohibits discrimination only on the basis of philosophical or religious views and sex. Recalling that where provisions are adopted to give effect to the principle of non-discrimination contained in the Convention, they should include all of the grounds set forth in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, the Committee asks the Government to amend section 20 and to indicate the steps taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guyana

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Legislation. The Committee recalls that section 9 of the Prevention of Discrimination Act No. 26 of 1997 imposes the obligation on every employer to pay equal remuneration to men and women performing work of equal value, while section 2(3) of Equal Rights Act No. 19 of 1990 provides for “equal remuneration for the same work or work of the same nature”, which is a narrower concept than that required by the Convention. Further, the Committee recalls that section 28 of the 1997 Act stipulates that the Act shall not derogate from the provisions of the Equal Rights Act of 1990 but that the Government previously stated that the 1997 Act takes precedence over the 1990 Act. In light of the fact that section 2(3) of the 1990 Act falls short of the requirements of the Convention, the Committee remains concerned about the inconsistency between the above provisions concerning equal remuneration. Noting that no progress has been made concerning this matter for a number of years, the Committee asks the Government once again to amend the legislation in question with a view to ensuring that it is in accordance with the Convention and to avoid any uncertainties as to the interpretation of the provisions concerned, for instance, through expressly providing that the 1997 Act, in case of conflict, takes precedence over the 1990 Act. The Committee asks the Government to indicate any measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Application in practice. The Committee recalls its previous comments asking the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to promote and supervise the application of the equal remuneration provisions of the Prevention of Discrimination Act. The Committee also recalls the communication received from the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU, now International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC)), of 30 October 2003 which was forwarded to the Government on 13 January 2004 and again on 1 June 2006, and to which the Government has not yet replied. The ICFTU raises concerns regarding the promotion and effective enforcement of equal pay legislation. In this context, the Committee notes the Government’s statement that there were no cases of male and female workers receiving different pay for the same work and that it was a long established fact that men and women received equal remuneration both in the public and private sectors. The Committee draws to the Government’s attention the fact that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value does not merely require equal pay for the same or equal work but also equal pay for different work that is nevertheless of equal value, as established on the basis of an objective evaluation of the content of the work performed. The absence of differential wage rates for men and women, while necessary in order to apply the Convention, is not sufficient to ensure its full application. Concerned that the Government’s report indicates misunderstandings as to the scope and meaning of the Convention’s principle, the Committee considers that training concerning the principle of equal remuneration for labour inspectors and judges, as well as workers’ and employers’ representatives is essential to effectively ensure the application of the Convention. It asks the Government to indicate in its next report any measures envisaged or taken to ensure the application of the equal pay legislation and the Convention through training and awareness raising and to indicate any steps taken to seek the cooperation of workers’ and employers’ organizations in this regard. Further, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide information on any judicial or administrative decisions relating to the equal pay provisions of the Equal Rights Act No. 19 of 1990 and the Prevention of Discrimination Act of 1997.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it noted the communication from the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU, now International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC)) pointing to the low representation of women in traditionally male-dominated areas of work, the weak labour force participation of Amerindian women, and the lack of effective procedures dealing with complaints of discrimination. The Committee notes the Government’s reply that more and more women are undergoing training and are entering areas of work that had previously been dominated by men. Women are now engaged in technical fields including working as electricians, mechanics and masons, and they make up a large percentage of employees of security firms. Women also represent the largest portion of graduates of the University of Guyana. The Government refers in this regard to statistics showing the number of women in areas of study that were traditionally male. However, these statistics were not attached to the Government’s report. The Government concludes that persons are free to choose whatever field of occupation they desire and that the various branches of education are accessible to all.

The Committee notes the developments on women’s employment and training mentioned by the Government but wishes to point out that without reliable statistics disaggregated by sex or any other information on the participation of women, as compared to men, in a wide range of occupations and vocational training courses, it is difficult for the Committee to assess whether progress has been made in achieving the objectives of the Convention. The Committee recalls that while some women may in theory be free to choose the occupations or training courses they desire, discrimination often flows from social stereotypes that deem certain types of work as suitable for men or for women. As a result, persons may apply for jobs based on work deemed to be suitable for them, rather than on actual ability and interest. Such stereotypes channel women and men into different education and training and subsequently into different jobs and career tracks which may not be in keeping with their ability or interest. Lastly, the Committee recalls the importance of effective complaints procedures to enforce legislation on non-discrimination and equality in employment and occupation. The Committee, therefore, requests the Government to provide in its next report information on the following points:

- (a) statistical data disaggregated by sex on the participation of men and women, including Amerindian women, in the various occupations and sectors of the economy as well as their participation in vocational training courses;
- (b) the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that policies and plans under its control are not reinforcing stereotypes on the roles of men and women in employment and occupation;
- (c) the measures taken or envisaged, including in the area of vocational training and education, to encourage women to consider a wider choice of trades and occupations; and
- (d) the measures taken to ensure that the existing complaints procedures allow for effective implementation of the legislation prohibiting discrimination in employment, including on the measures taken or envisaged to prevent delays in litigating complaints. Please also indicate whether any cases alleging discrimination on the grounds set out in the Convention have been brought to the courts, and the outcome thereof.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1958)

Article 2 of the Convention. Implementation of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee recalls that it has been asking the Government to improve the application of the Convention, including by reviewing and revising the current legislation, in particular the Manpower Act (No. 13/2003) with a view to giving explicit legal expression to the principle of the Convention. The Committee notes, however, with regret that the Government merely makes renewed references in its report to the existing instruments without supplying information on the progress made and problems encountered in the application of legislative and administrative instruments or without replying to the specific requests made in the previous observation. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take steps to give explicit legal expression to the principle of equal remuneration for women and men for work of equal value, including an analysis in consultation with the social partners of the effect given to the Convention through the Manpower Act (No. 13/2003).

The Committee has been drawing attention to specific provisions of the national legislation which are considered discriminatory. Government Decree No. 37 of 1967 and Decree of the Minister of Agriculture No. 418/KPTS/EKKU/5/1981 contain disparate treatment between men and women in relation to payment of employment-related benefits and the Committee has been asking the Government to clarify whether and how these instruments have been revised. In addition, it has been expressing its concern over the possible discriminatory impact on women's employment-related benefits and allowances of section 31(3) of the Marriage Act (No. 1/1974), which provides that the husband is the head of the household. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to:

- (i) revise or repeal the abovementioned provisions; and
- (ii) ensure that no direct or indirect discrimination against women exists in practice with respect to family allowances and employment-related benefits.

It also asks the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1999)

Discrimination on the grounds of race, colour and national extraction – Transmigration programmes. In previous observations, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take steps to examine the situation of alleged racial discrimination against indigenous peoples in Papua and Kalimantan, and to indicate the measures taken to ensure that there is no discrimination in employment and occupation on the basis of race, colour or national extraction, particularly in the implementation of transmigration programmes. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 40 of 2008 concerning the Elimination of Racial and Ethnic Discrimination which defines and aims to eliminate racial and ethnic discriminatory action with respect to civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, and imposes a number of obligations on national and regional governments regarding the effective protection and elimination of racial and ethnic discrimination. Under the Act, the National Human Rights Commission (Komnas HAM) is responsible for supervising efforts aimed at eliminating all forms of racial and ethnic discrimination. Such supervision may include, among others, the monitoring and assessment of government policies considered a potential cause of racial and ethnic discrimination, the fact-finding and evaluation of alleged racial or ethnic discriminatory actions by individuals, communities or government, and the monitoring and assessment of government and community action in eliminating such discrimination. With regard to the alleged discriminatory impact of transmigration programmes on certain groups of the local population in Papua and Kalimantan, the Committee notes the Government's general statement that the integration of transmigrants into the local population is carried out through equal treatment, services, rights and obligations in the field of arts, religion and social and economic institutions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of Act No. 40 of 2008, including any relevant administrative and judicial decisions. In this regard, please also indicate the action taken by the Komnas HAM to monitor the effectiveness of government policies aimed at eliminating racial and ethnic discrimination or to examine any alleged discriminatory impact of government assisted or independent transmigration on indigenous peoples in Papua and Kalimantan. The Committee further requests the Government to indicate any other action taken or envisaged, at national and regional level, to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of all ethnic groups of the population, including indigenous peoples, irrespective of race, colour and national extraction, and on the results secured by such action, in accordance with Article 3(f) of the Convention.

Discrimination based on political opinion. For a number of years the Committee has sought clarification from the Government regarding section 18(i) of the Recruitment of Civil Servants, Government Regulation No. 98/2000 dated 10 November 2000 which provides that civil servants are to be dismissed upon becoming members and/or leaders of political parties, and section 8 of the Civil Servants who are Members of Political Parties, Government Regulation

No. 5/1999 dated 26 January 1999, which provides for dismissal of civil servants on the same basis. The Committee notes that in its latest report the Government explains that the prohibition for civil servants to become or to be members of a political party is justified due to the need for public servants to remain neutral and fair and independent from politics. The Committee notes that the new Act on Political Parties No. 2 of 2008 provides that citizens of Indonesia who are 17 years of age or over can become a member of a political party, and that membership of a political party is voluntary, open and non-discriminatory to Indonesian citizens (section 14). The Committee recalls that under the Convention, protection against discrimination based on political opinion also extends to membership in political organizations or parties (see paragraph 57 of the 1988 General Survey on equality of opportunity and treatment). While it may be admissible for the responsible authorities to bear in mind the political opinions of individuals in the case of certain limited higher level posts which are concerned directly with implementing government policy, it is not compatible with Article 1(2) of the Convention for such conditions to be laid down generally for all civil service employment. In this regard, the Committee draws the attention of the Government to paragraph 122 of the Special Survey of 1996 on equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, and requests the Government to amend Regulation No. 98/2000 and Regulation No. 37/2004 to ensure workers are not discriminated against based on their political opinion.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Islamic Republic of Iran

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2010 and the resulting conclusions of the Conference Committee. The Committee also notes the observations of Education International (EI) of 31 August 2010, which have been forwarded to the Government, regarding discrimination against regional ethnic groups, religious minorities and women with respect to access to employment and education, and the persecution and prosecution of teachers, students and unionists advocating for social justice and for equal rights. The Committee asks the Government to respond to the issues raised in EI's communication.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee, while acknowledging that certain advances appeared to have been made, expressed its continued concern that, despite the commitment that had been made by the Government in 2006 to bring all the relevant legislation and practice into line with the Convention by 2010, many outstanding issues raised by the Committee of Experts remained unanswered. The Conference Committee urged the Government to amend the discriminatory laws and regulations, to bring the practice into line with the Convention, and to promote public awareness of the right of women to pursue freely any job or profession, promoting the inclusion of women in the labour market and decent work for women. It also called on the Government to take decisive action to combat discrimination against ethnic and unrecognized religious minorities, in particular the Baha'i. The Committee notes that, although a report was provided by the Government in May 2010, no additional information has been received as specifically requested by the Conference Committee.

Legislative developments

The Committee notes the English translation of the Bill on Non-discrimination in Employment and Education, which was provided by the Government. The Government indicates that this Bill has been submitted to the Commission of Social Affairs of the Cabinet of Ministers for further consideration. The Committee notes that, pursuant to section 1 of the Bill, all subjects of the Islamic Republic of Iran are to enjoy equal rights, and "colour, race, language, political or religious belief and the like, do not bestow or deprive them of any rights". The provision goes on to provide more specifically for equal protection of the law in terms of access to jobs, employment and training opportunities, and to equal opportunities and treatment for all subjects, both men and women, given the prevailing circumstances and the national customs. It is then stated that any form of distinction, preference, differences and discrimination shall be forbidden in the following: access to education; access to technical and vocational training; access to jobs and employment opportunities, and similar working conditions for all nationals; and payment of wages, benefits, allowances and determination of working conditions. A definition of "discrimination" is provided in note 1 to the Bill, indicating that it "encompasses any unjustified exercise of distinction, exclusion, limitation, preference or privilege, which shall adversely affect or nullify equality of opportunity or treatment in occupation, employment, training or education".

While recognizing the steps taken to adopt a specific law on non-discrimination in employment and education, the Committee notes with concern that the Bill in its present form does not provide effective and comprehensive legal protection for all workers against discrimination in employment and occupation on the grounds enumerated in the Convention. The Committee notes that section 1 of the Bill summarizes general principles set out in the Constitution related to equal rights and equal protection of the law, and it is not clear whether the grounds enumerated in that context relate directly to the sentences that follow, which deal specifically with discrimination in occupation and employment. In addition, even if the grounds set out in section 1 of the Bill are intended to relate to non-discrimination in employment and occupation, the grounds of national extraction and social origin set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention are not included. It is also not clear whether the law would apply only to nationals. The Committee notes further that the protection provided is subject to “prevailing circumstances and national customs”, which the Committee considers could allow a very broad scope for exemptions, which is not compatible with ensuring the fundamental right to equality and non-discrimination. The Committee also notes that note 3 of the Bill indicates that it is not to be deemed discrimination to define and categorize special jobs and occupations, to require conditions inherent to the job or special requirements for specified jobs, which appears to go beyond Article 1(2) of the Convention regarding inherent requirements of a particular job. The reference to legal and special measures or decisions regarding those in need of special support in note 5, should also be reconsidered in the light of Article 5 of the Convention, to ensure that special measures of protection and assistance are determined in consultation with representative employers’ and workers’ organizations, and do not reinforce discrimination and stereotypes, for example by limiting jobs women can do for reasons unrelated to maternity protection. The Committee notes that section 2 of the Bill provides for penalties, but does not indicate the avenue for obtaining effective redress for a violation of the right to non-discrimination. The Committee also notes that the Labour Law of 1990 is currently under review, and a specific objective of the review according to the Government is to bring the Law into conformity with international labour standards, including the Convention.

Noting that the Bill on Non-discrimination in Employment and Education has been submitted to the Commission of Social Affairs of the Cabinet of Ministers for further consideration, and that the Labour Law is also under review, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that effective and comprehensive legal protection for all workers, whether nationals or foreigners, against direct and indirect discrimination on all the grounds enumerated in the Convention is ensured, with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation. The Committee also requests the Government to review the procedures that would be available to bring a claim for a violation of the provisions related to discrimination, to ensure that they provide effective and accessible avenues for redress. Recalling its 2002 general observation, the Committee also asks the Government to consider including a specific provision in the Bill or the revised labour law aimed at preventing and addressing sexual harassment at work, both quid pro quo and hostile environment harassment. Noting that the information provided by the Government on complaints to the police seems to be limited to sexual assault, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on measures taken or envisaged to prevent and prohibit sexual harassment in employment and occupation, which may or may not amount to sexual assault.

National equality policy

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Minister of Labour and Social Affairs has presented a proposal to the Council of Ministers for the establishment of a national committee in order to guarantee the monitoring of the application of international labour standards, including this Convention. The Committee also notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the measures adopted by the judiciary to implement article 130 of the Fourth Economic, Social and Cultural Development Plan (Development Plan) empowering the judiciary to take measures towards the elimination of discrimination in the legal and judicial field. The Committee notes in particular the preparation of a range of bills, the public awareness raising, the courses for judges and lawyers, the joint project with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) on advancing human rights and social justice development, the establishment of a Committee for Women’s Legal Studies in the Judicial Branch, and the establishment of a commission to remove discrimination. The Government also provides information on the role of the judiciary in implementing the Charter of Citizenry Rights, including abolishing six circulars which were in conflict with citizens’ rights and establishing a committee to monitor the observance of citizens’ rights and to take any necessary measures to ensure the maintenance of such rights. With respect to article 101 of the Development Plan, the Government states that the national plan referred to has been developed, and includes taking steps to amend the Labour Law to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the progress in establishing the national committee on monitoring the application of international labour standards, and any reports or recommendations that have been issued by that committee, and any follow-up thereto. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken by the judiciary with a view to the elimination of discrimination in the legal and judicial fields, including specific reference to any impact of these measures on non-discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee again requests the Government to provide translated summaries of the evaluation reports prepared pursuant to article 157 of the Development Plan, and any other information on the implementation of the Development Plan in practice, and the results achieved with respect to furthering equality in employment and occupation. The Committee also requests the following:

- (i) information on whether any of the circulars abolished or any of the cases addressed by the Central Monitoring Board on Maintaining Citizens’ Rights related to discrimination in employment and occupation and, if so, the details thereof;*
- (ii) a copy of the Charter of Citizenry Rights;*
- (iii) a copy of the national plan adopted pursuant to article 101 of the Development Plan;*
- (iv) a copy of the sample labour contracts prepared pursuant to the national plan;*
- (v) as the period covered by the Fourth Economic, Social and Cultural Development Plan ends in 2010, information on any new development plan that has been adopted or is envisaged;*

- (vi) a copy of the Family Support Bill which has replaced the Charter of Women's Rights; and
- (vii) copies of relevant judicial decisions.

Equal opportunity and treatment of men and women

The Committee notes that measures continue to be taken to improve women's access to university and technical and vocational training and, in particular, welcomes the information provided by the Government on the number of women and men in the different fields of study and training, with women making up the majority of those in a number of training courses in non-traditional fields, such as auto mechanics, electronics, welding, metallurgy, management and industries, and civil engineering. With respect to the quota system in universities in 39 fields of study, the Committee notes the Government's explanation that the quota was introduced to ensure gender balance in those fields. The Committee notes, however, from official statistics provided to the Office, that women's labour market participation in 2008 was 14.9 per cent for those over 15 years, which was a decrease from 2007 (17.3 per cent), and even lower than the level in 2005 (19.2 per cent). The Committee therefore continues to be concerned that progress achieved in women's education and training is not being translated into increased women's economic participation. The Committee requests the Government to reinforce its efforts to ensure that increased educational and technical qualifications translate into decent jobs for women, and to provide information on measures taken in this regard. Please also provide specific information on the quota system in universities and how it is applied in practice, including the specific fields targeted. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide detailed statistics, disaggregated by sex, regarding participation in education, vocational training, and in the various sectors and occupations in employment.

The Committee notes the establishment in 2009 of the Socio-Cultural Council of Women with a mandate to make policy and to coordinate among various government institutions to promote women in education, law, public culture, social affairs, the economy, employment, international affairs and health. The Government also provides detailed information on women's empowerment projects, the activities of the Women's Entrepreneurship Association, the Association of Women Managers, and of the Centre for Women and Family Affairs. The Committee also notes that the Centre for Women's Affairs of the President's Office submitted a proposal to the Cabinet of Ministers in 2009 to amend the Labour Law with respect to family leave and to reduce the working hours of women. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on women's empowerment projects, the activities of the Women's Entrepreneurship Association, the Association of Women Managers, and of the Centre for Women and Family Affairs and also to provide information on the following:

- (i) the progress achieved by the Socio-Cultural Council of Women to promote women in education and employment, including specific measures taken in this context;
- (ii) details of the contents of the bills on family leave and decreasing women's working hours, as well as the bill on home-based jobs which was referred to by the Government in the Conference Committee;
- (iii) any follow-up to the recommendations of the study undertaken for the development of women and family affairs, including for the development of plans for women's empowerment.

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the concerns raised regarding the increasing number of women working in temporary jobs and contract employment where they are not covered by legal entitlements and conditions, including maternity protection. The Government acknowledges that there is a regulation exempting companies employing less than ten people from certain provisions of the Labour Law, including the section requiring pregnant women to be given light work, but that these companies are not exempted from the section providing for maternity leave. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that women in temporary and contract employment benefit from all the legal entitlements and facilities. The Committee requests the Government to provide a full list of the provisions of the Labour Law from which companies with less than ten employees are exempted, and a copy of the regulation.

On the issue of reconciling work and family responsibilities, and the measures that had been aimed solely at women, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the law on the payment of stipends for those with large families has been amended to provide such payment to both men and women. The Committee requests the Government to provide more information on the amendment to the law on the payment of stipends, and to indicate whether it has been adopted. The Committee also requests information on any further measures taken to assist both men and women workers to balance work and family responsibilities, and to improve awareness of and access to protection and benefits aimed at balancing work and family responsibilities.

With respect to the concern raised in previous comments regarding the prevalence of discriminatory job advertisements, the Committee notes that the Government has undertaken an examination of job advertisements, which clearly indicates that a large number of advertisements call for only men or only women applicants. The Committee recalls that, unless being a man or a woman is an inherent requirement of the particular job, in the strict sense of the term, such a requirement is indeed discriminatory, and may be based on stereotyped assumptions of which jobs are considered "suitable" for women or men. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to prohibit discriminatory job advertisements and to ensure such prohibition is effectively enforced. Please provide detailed information on steps taken in this regard.

Discriminatory laws and regulations

The Committee, as well as the Conference Committee, has raised over a number of years the need to repeal or amend discriminatory laws and regulations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a committee was established in April 2010, consisting of representatives of the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs, the Ministry of Justice and the President's Office, mandated to identify all legal regulations that could be in conflict with the Convention, and to present them to the Council of Ministers within six months. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the findings and recommendations of the committee reviewing the legal regulations that could be in conflict with the Convention and any steps taken by the Council of Ministers as a result.

With respect to section 1117 of the Civil Code, pursuant to which a husband can prevent his wife from taking up a job or profession, the Government once again states that, due to the existence of section 18 of the Family Protection Law, section 1117 is automatically repealed and courts are not authorized to hear complaints regarding section 1117. The Government clarifies that this is not related to the Family Support Bill. The Government provides information on proposals in 2006 and 2008 to amend the section, which were rejected by the Judicial Commission of Parliament as such amendment was not considered necessary. Recalling the concerns raised previously by this Committee and the Conference Committee that in the absence of an express repeal of section 1117, it would continue to have a negative impact on women's employment opportunities, the Committee again urges the Government to take steps to repeal the provision and to promote public awareness of the right of women to pursue freely any job or profession, and indicate the concrete measures taken in this regard.

Regarding the discriminatory provisions in social security regulations that favour the husband over the wife in terms of pension and child benefits, the Committee notes the Government's general indication that some proposals have been made by the Centre for Women and Family Affairs, and that an agreement has been approved between the Rehabilitation Organization and the Ministry of Welfare and Social Security covering 34,000 female heads of household. With respect to women in the judiciary, the Committee notes that a proposal has been put forward by the Centre for Women and Family Affairs to amend the 1982 law on the selection of judges, so that women could be appointed to positions as judges qualified to hand down judgements. On the obligatory dress code, the Government states that there is no specific regulation, but that observing the dress code is a national norm and, if determinations of administrative violations are made, they can be taken to a review board. The Government also states that no cases of complaints of dismissal for non-observance of the dress code have been received by the judicial or administrative bodies. Regarding the age limit for hiring women, the Government again states that the maximum age for employment is 40 years and a five-year extension is possible exceptionally in the civil service. The Government states that the age limit is due to some capabilities and conditions and is a necessity. The Committee again urges the Government to take measures to address any barriers, in law or in practice, to women being hired after the age of 30 or 40. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the status of the various proposals concerning amendments to the laws and regulations raised previously by the Committee, including regarding social security and the role of women in the judiciary, as well as details on the agreement covering 34,000 female heads of household, and on any cases of dismissal or discipline due to non-observance of the dress code.

Discrimination on the basis of religion and ethnicity

The Committee notes that this Committee and the Conference Committee have on a number of occasions highlighted the seriousness of the situation of unrecognized religious minorities, in particular the Baha'i, and the urgency of taking decisive action to combat discrimination against them. The Committee notes that the information provided by the Government is again limited to providing examples of companies owned by Baha'i, some cases addressed by the Human Rights Commission, and one specific case regarding the land rights of a Baha'i community. The Committee also notes that EI has expressed concern regarding the religious-based discrimination against the Baha'i in terms of access to education, universities, and to particular occupations in the public sector.

With respect to the practice of gozinesh, a selection procedure requiring prospective state officials and employees to demonstrate allegiance to the state religion, the Government states that two positions have been put forward regarding the Selection Law based on Religious and Ethical Standards, 1995: one group proposed that it be abolished, with selection decisions being solely based on qualifications; the second group proposed the amendment of some of the provisions of the Law. Both proposals were rejected, the first by a majority of members of Parliament, and the second by the Guardian Council. The Government states that the Law recognizes not only Islam but also the religions officially recognized in the Constitution. The Committee notes, however, that unrecognized religious minorities remain subject to the practice of gozinesh.

The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has not taken action along the lines called for by this Committee and the Conference Committee over a number of years to address the very serious situation of discrimination against religious minorities, in particular the Baha'i. The Committee, therefore, urges the Government to take decisive action to combat discrimination and stereotypical attitudes, through actively promoting respect and tolerance for religious minorities, including the Baha'i, to repeal all discriminatory legal provisions, including regarding gozinesh, and withdraw all discriminatory circulars and other government communications. The Government should also ensure that authorities and the public are informed that discrimination against religious minorities, in particular the Baha'i, is unacceptable, including in education, training, employment and occupation, and provide specific information on the concrete measures taken in this respect.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding the number of management positions filled by those belonging to ethnic minorities in selected provinces. The Committee also notes the concerns raised by the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) regarding the double discrimination faced by women of minority origin, and the discrimination faced by, among others, Arab, Azeri, Balochi and Kurdish communities in a number of areas, including employment (CERD/C/IRN/CO/18–19, 27 August 2010, paragraphs 9 and 15). The Committee notes further that EI indicates that regional ethnic groups are poorer, less educated, less represented in decision-making, and have less employment, and that the failure to provide all ethnic groups with access to quality education results in discrimination in accessing decent jobs. EI refers specifically to the Balochs, southern Azerbaijanis, Ahwaz, Turkmen and Kurds. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on the education and employment situation of ethnic minority groups, disaggregated by sex, in both the public and private sectors, and at the various levels of responsibility. The Committee requests the Government to take concrete measures to ensure equal access and opportunities to education, vocational training, employment and occupation for members of these groups.

Dispute settlement and human rights mechanisms

The Committee notes that some information has been provided on the number of cases dealt with by the Islamic Human Rights Commission and the general nature of those cases. However, the information on cases addressed by other bodies is too general for the Committee to assess whether the dispute settlement mechanisms to address discrimination in employment and occupation is effective. The Committee also notes the information provided on the measures adopted by the secretariat of the Central Monitoring Board to maintain citizen rights, including awareness raising, inspection processes and educational programmes. The Committee notes further the concerns raised by EI regarding discrimination in access to justice. The Committee requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the nature and number of complaints lodged with the various dispute settlement and human rights bodies and the courts which relate to discrimination in education, training, employment and occupation, including any sanctions imposed and remedies provided. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to raise awareness of the existence and mandate of the various dispute settlement and human rights bodies, and to ensure the accessibility of the procedures to all groups. Please also provide information on any progress made in the establishment of specific courts to address religious discrimination and councils of dispute settlement for religious minorities, which are referred to in the Government's report.

Social dialogue

The Committee previously raised concerns that, in the context of the freedom of association crisis in the country, meaningful national-level social dialogue regarding issues related to the implementation of the Convention would not be possible. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to accept a high-level mission which would address freedom of association principles as well as the implementation of the Convention. The Committee once again urges the Government to make every effort to establish constructive dialogue with the social partners to address the continuing gaps in law and practice in the implementation of the Convention. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on any developments regarding the mission referred to by the Conference Committee.

Ireland

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning article 41.2 of the Constitution of Ireland which provides that "the State recognises that by her life within the home, woman gives to the State a support without which the common good cannot be achieved" and that "the State shall, therefore, endeavour to ensure that mothers shall not be obliged by economic necessity to engage in labour to the neglect of their duties in the home". The Committee expressed concern that these provisions might encourage stereotypical treatment of women in the context of employment, contrary to the Convention and requested the Government to consider reviewing them. In this regard, the Committee notes that the All-Party Oireachtas Committee on the Constitution revisited the issue of article 41.2 of the Constitution in its Tenth Progress Report of 2006, concluding that a change of these provisions was desirable and recommending amendments. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the progress made with regard to the recommended revision of article 41.2 of the Constitution with a view to eliminating any tension between this provision and the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women in employment and occupation.

Article 1(2). Inherent requirements of the job. The Committee recalls that section 2 of the Employment Equality Act provides that "persons employed in another person's home for the provision of personal services for persons residing in that home where the services affect the private or family life of such persons" are not considered employees under the Act as far as access to employment is concerned. The term "personal services" includes "but is not limited to services that are in the nature of services in loco parentis or involve caring for those residing in the home" (section 2). The Committee notes that these provisions deprive certain domestic workers from protection against discrimination in respect of access to employment. Noting from the Government's report that this exception is meant to balance the competing rights to respect of one's private and family life and to equal treatment, the Committee notes that these provisions, in practice, would appear to have the effect of allowing employers of domestic workers to make recruitment decisions on the basis of the grounds listed in section 6(2) of the Act, without such decisions being considered discriminatory.

The Committee recalls that the Convention is intended to promote and protect the fundamental right to equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation and that it only allows for exceptions from the principle of equal treatment as far as they are based on the inherent requirements of the particular job. It therefore considers that the right to respect for one's private and family life should not be construed as protecting conduct that infringes on this fundamental right (including conduct consisting of differential treatment of candidates for employment on the basis of any grounds covered by Article 1 of the Convention where this is not justified by the inherent requirements of the particular job in question). The Committee also notes that the definition of personal services affecting private or family life contained in section 2 of the Act appears to be broad and non-exhaustive, and open for extensive interpretation. The Committee considers that the exclusion of domestic workers from the protection against discrimination in respect to access to employment, as currently provided for in section 2, may lead to discrimination against these workers contrary to the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of these provisions, including information on any relevant administrative or judicial decisions. It also requests the Government to indicate whether it is considering amending the relevant parts of section 2 of the Employment Equality Act to ensure that decisions concerning the recruitment of all domestic workers cannot be based on any of the grounds contained in section 6(2) of the Act except where this is justified on the basis of inherent job requirements.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Israel

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1959)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race, national extraction or religion. The Committee notes from the Government's report that, among the Arab Israeli population, the labour force participation rate for 2007 was 21.7 per cent for women and 64.8 for men. The unemployment rates for Arab Israeli men and women for 2007 were 9.6 per cent and 15.2 per cent, respectively, slightly less than the year before. However, the Committee remains concerned at the considerably higher levels of unemployment rates of the Arab Israeli population as compared to the Jewish population (6.8 per cent in 2007), the very low rate of labour force participation of Arab Israeli women and the concentration of members of the Arab, Druze and Circassian population in a few sectors characterized by low wages, such as agriculture and hotels and restaurants. The Committee notes that, according to the 2008 Annual Report of the Bank of Israel, various studies examining employment and wages of Arab Israelis found that, among other reasons, discrimination in the labour market affects the participation patterns of this group. The Equal Employment Opportunities Commission reported that many Arab citizens consider themselves as victims of direct or indirect discrimination, although only a limited percentage of the 391 complaints received by the Commission since its establishment in September 2008 related to discrimination on the grounds of nationality or ethnic origin.

The Committee notes with interest the measures taken by the Government with a view to ensuring that by 2012 at least 10 per cent of all civil servants come from the Arab, Druze and Circassian population groups, including through the establishment of "designated posts", adjustments to the recruitment procedures, public information and support to successful candidates in the form of coaching and rental subsidies. In 2008, Arabs and Druze represented 6.67 per cent of all civil servants, up from 6.17 in 2007. Among newly employed civil servants in 2008, 11.66 per cent belonged to these groups (up from 8.7 per cent in 2007). Among newly recruited women, 9.2 per cent were Arab or Druze, compared to a rate of 15.5 per cent for men. The Committee further notes the information provided regarding the various projects carried out by the Authority for the Economic Development of the Arab, Druze and the Circassian Sector, including training programmes targeting women from these groups and the establishment of employment guidance centres and support for women entrepreneurs.

The Committee requests the Government to provide the following:

- (i) updated information, disaggregated by sex, on labour force participation, unemployment and employment rates of Arab Israelis and the corresponding rates for other Israelis;
- (ii) detailed information on the specific measures taken to promote equal access to employment of Arab Israelis, particularly women, and to promote their access to a wider range of occupations and industries, as well as information on the results achieved in this regard, including related statistical information;
- (iii) updated and detailed information on the progress made in promoting and ensuring equal access of the Arab, Druze and Circassian population to employment in the civil service, including statistical information, disaggregated by sex, and the outcomes of the employment-related projects under the responsibility of the Authority for the Economic Development of the Arab, Druze and the Circassian Sector; and
- (iv) information on the specific measures taken to prevent and address instances of direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation against Arab Israelis, including awareness-raising campaigns, handling of complaints, as well as information on any cases of such discrimination addressed by the courts or the labour inspection service.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1975)

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Legislation. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. For several years, the Committee has been asking the Government to take steps to revise section 2 of the Employment (Equal Pay for Equal Work) Act 1975 since this section refers to “similar” or “substantially similar” job requirements and therefore does not give full legislative expression to the concept of “work of equal value” set out in the Convention. “Equal remuneration for work of equal value” includes but goes beyond equal remuneration for “equal”, the “same” or “similar” work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value. Noting the Government’s statement that a review of the Employment (Equal Pay for Equal Work) Act 1975 is currently under way, the Committee urges the Government to take this opportunity to revise section 2 of the Act, in order to incorporate in the legislation the concept of “work of equal value” and give full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to report progress in this respect in the near future.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Japan

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes the Government’s report, and the comments dated 2 October 2009 of the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC–RENGO), which were annexed thereto. It also notes the following communications, which had been forwarded to the Government: (i) Japan Federation of Prefectural and Municipal Workers’ Unions (JICHIREN) dated 13 October 2008; (ii) the Working Women’s Network, dated 8 June 2009; and (iii) the National Confederation of Trade Unions (ZENROREN), dated 28 September 2009. The Committee also notes the representation alleging non-observance by the Government of Japan of the Convention, made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution by the Zensekiyu Showa-Shell Labour Union. The representation concerns section 4 of the Labour Standards Act, and will be addressed by the tripartite committee established by the Governing Body.

Assessment of the gender pay gap. The Committee notes the statistical information provided by the Government concerning the evolution between 1989 and 2008 of the disparity in hourly scheduled cash earnings between male and female workers, and concerning the same disparity by industry and by occupational group based on the results of the Basic Survey on Wage Structure of 2006 and 2008. It indicates that the overall pay gap, while having decreased in that period, remains high. The survey shows that the average scheduled cash earnings of female workers as of 2008 was 69 per cent of that of male workers (a pay gap of 31 per cent), and that there are considerable differences between industries and occupational groups. ZENROREN asserts that the actual gender pay gap is in fact higher, since if part-time workers are included in the statistics, the gap increases to approximately 47 per cent, and has stagnated at that level since 1985. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that one of the factors contributing to the gender pay gap is the difference in average length of service which is normally shorter for women due to their resignation upon childbirth. The Committee also notes various measures indicated by the Government with a view to addressing issues leading to the gender pay gap, such as promoting the implementation of positive action measures, including through the Positive Action Promotion Council. The Government also refers to measures being taken to support work–life balance, including the amendment in 2009 of the Child and Family Care Leave Law promoting paternity leave and a shorter working-hour system. The Committee also notes the publication of the “Guidelines for Reducing the Gender Pay Gap: Measures to be taken by Labour and Management”, by the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare in August 2010.

The Committee hopes that targeted and concrete action will be taken in the near future to address the gender pay gap, and asks the Government to provide specific information in this regard. Noting the Government’s indication that research and statistical analysis is being undertaken by the Japan Institute for Labour Policy and Training (JILPT) of the factors underlying the gender wage gap, the results of which are to be examined by the Study Group on the Issues of Wage Disparity between Men and Women, the Committee asks the Government to provide the results of this analysis, including any recommendations made, and any measures taken as a result thereof. The Committee would also appreciate receiving the following:

- (i) statistical information on the earnings of male and female workers, in the public sector, including local government, and the private sector;
- (ii) a summary of the main provisions of the “Guidelines for Reducing the Gender Pay Gap”, and information on their application in practice, as well as a sample copy of a report on wage disparity between men and women; and

- (iii) a copy of the outcome report of the Study Group on Fixed-Term Employment Contracts, organized by the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare in February 2009 to discuss, among other issues, equal pay for work of equal value or equal treatment among fixed-term workers and regular workers.

Part-time work. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning activities to promote the implementation of the revised Part-Time Workers Law, 2007, including making available experts on personnel matters and providing subsidies to enterprises. The Equal Employment Office in each prefecture provided guidance in 2008 with respect to 8,900 breaches of conduct. It also notes that these offices received numerous inquiries (12,052 in 2007 and 13,647 in 2008) concerning the interpretation of the revised Law and possible measures to be taken in accordance with its provisions. The Committee notes that JICHIREN indicates that the wage gap between regular and non-regular workers is one of the major causes of wage disparities between men and women. Referring to section 8 of the revised Part-Time Workers Law, which prohibits discriminatory treatment as regards the determination of wages, the implementation of education and training, the use of welfare facilities and other treatments for part-time workers if certain criteria are met, JICHIREN states that, as the requirements are so strict, the law excludes almost all non-regular workers from its protection. ZENROREN provides a similar analysis, and indicates further that employers infringing the law are not sanctioned. JTUC-RENGO calls for further amendments to the Part-Time Workers Law to extend the prohibition of discrimination to all part-time workers. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of the revised Part-Time Workers Law as well as the Basic Policy on Measures for Part-Time Workers (Notification of the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare No. 280 of 14 April 2008). Please provide, in particular, information on the activities of, and results achieved through, the equal treatment promotion consultants assigned to equal employment offices and part-time work assistance centres (section 2(3)(1) of the Basic Policy), as well as the results achieved in promoting transfers to full-time jobs (section 2(3)(3) of the Basic Policy). While noting the difficulty indicated by the Government in identifying the effect of the revised Law in narrowing the gender pay gap, the Committee would appreciate receiving information showing the evolution since the adoption of the revised Part-Time Workers Law of the proportion of non-regular workers covered by the revised Law, disaggregated by sex, as well as an indication of whether consideration is being given to revising the Law to extend the coverage. The Government is also requested to provide a copy of the guidelines on the employment management of contract workers, and any information on their implementation.

With respect to part-time and temporary workers in local governments, the Committee notes that the statistics provided by the Government indicate a high proportion of women part-time and temporary workers, with the highest proportion in medical and caretaking staff (medical technicians, nurses, child care, meal service), with women constituting approximately 90 to 98 per cent of those categories. The Committee also notes the information provided by JICHIREN regarding the exclusion of public sector workers from the protection provided to part-time workers. The Committee asks the Government to provide any information on measures taken or envisaged in order to address the gap in the treatment between regular and non-regular workers in local governments, including the following:

- (i) whether consideration is being given to the extension of protection provided to private sector part-time workers to part-time workers in local governments;
- (ii) steps taken towards the implementation of the notification of the Secretary General of the National Personnel Authority concerning wages of part-time staff regulated under section 22(2) of the Act on wages of the general service staff (Kyu-Jitsu-Ko No. 1064 of 26 August 2008);
- (iii) a copy of a report of 23 January 2009 of the Committee on Study Council on Short-Time Service of Local Public Servants; and
- (iv) the implementation of the instruction of 24 April 2009 by the central Government issued to local governments concerning the treatment of temporary and part-time employees.

Indirect discrimination. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the number of queries and complaints made in relation to section 7 of the Equal Employment Opportunity Law (EEOL) and relevant court decisions. It also notes that the Enforcement Ordinance under the EEOL will be reviewed before the next review of the EEOL, which is to take place in 2012. The Committee hopes that the Enforcement Ordinance under the EEOL will be reviewed at the earliest opportunity, in consultation with the workers' and employers' organizations, with a view to ensuring that there is effective protection against all forms of indirect discrimination regarding remuneration, and requests information on progress made in this regard. Please also continue to provide information on the application of section 7 of the EEOL and section 2 of its Enforcement Ordinance, including any complaints received and relevant court decisions, including those addressing measures beyond the three provided for in the Ordinance.

Career tracking systems. The Committee has been raising concerns for a number of years regarding the impact of the career-tracking system on the wage disparity between women and men, due to the low representation of women in the main track. ZENROREN asserts that the system effectively excludes women from promotion to managerial posts. The Committee notes that the Government has provided a copy of the "Guidelines on ways for employers to take appropriate measures with regard to matters provided for under the provisions concerning the prohibition, etc. of discrimination against workers on the basis of sex" (Public Notice No. 614 of MHLW of 2006) (EEO guidelines). Chapter II of the EEO guidelines prohibits direct discrimination based on sex "for each employment category", with respect to the following:

recruitment and employment (section 2), assignment (section 3), promotion (section 4), demotion (section 5), training (section 6), fringe benefits (section 7), change in job type (section 8), change in employment status (section 9), encouragement of retirement (section 10), mandatory retirement age (section 11), dismissal (section 12), and renewal of a labour contract (section 13). It also provides for positive action measures (section 14). Section 1 of chapter II of the EEO guidelines defines “employment management category” to include various categories of workers, based on “job type, qualification, employment status, working pattern, etc.”. The Committee notes the Government’s confirmation that comparisons are made between men and women within the same employment management category to determine if there has been discrimination based on sex, and that it considers that the career-tracking system is not in itself discriminatory, as long as it is applied in a gender-neutral manner. In this regard, the Government also indicates that the Labour Bureau in each prefecture provides guidance to those companies which employ the career-tracking system to ensure that it does not become an apparatus of sex segregation by assigning only men or women to a particular career course. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on measures taken to increase the proportion of women in the main track, and ensure that the career-tracking system is not applied in a discriminatory manner. In this context, the Committee requests information on the general content of the guidance provided to enterprises utilizing the career-tracking systems and on whether such guidance has resulted in an increase in women in the main track. Please also provide any information on complaints or cases in this regard, and the outcome thereof, as well as updated statistical information on the distribution of men and women on the different tracks.

Objective job evaluation. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a competency-based performance appraisal system has traditionally been the measure to determine wages, though research by the JILPT found that more emphasis was being placed on individual achievement, results-oriented or job-oriented components in the determination of wages, and less weight on age- or tenure-based components. Against this background, the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare is currently collecting information on wage systems of various companies, and plans to make available the findings for use by those companies attempting to adopt objective job evaluation methods for gender-neutral wage determination. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the progress made in the survey of wage systems and the findings thereof, and to provide details of how the survey results are being used to promote objective job evaluation methods. Please provide information on any other measures taken to promote objective job evaluation methods.

Enforcement. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that the labour standards inspection authority conducted 126,499 regular inspections, nine of which were identified as cases of violation of section 4 of the Labour Standard Law, and for which guidance was provided. Further to its previous comments on this point, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government that the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare holds workshops to train labour standards inspectors to interpret the relevant legislation, and that senior inspectors provide on-the-job training to other inspectors. The Committee asks the Government to provide particulars on the nine cases of violation of section 4 of the Labour Standards Act, including the nature of the violations and the content of guidance provided. The Committee would also appreciate if the Government would continue to provide information on the conduct of labour inspection, especially the concrete methodologies and the guidance provided to labour standards inspectors to identify instances of wage discrimination where men and women are engaged in work of a different nature, which is nonetheless of equal value. The Committee also asks the Government to continue to provide information on court decisions pursuant to section 4 of the Labour Standards Law that are relevant to the principle of the Convention.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1966)

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Work of equal value. The Committee recalls that article 23(ii)(a) of the Constitution provides that all workers shall receive wages appropriate to the quantity and quality of the work, which is more restrictive than the principle contained in Article 1(b) of the Convention. It also recalls that the Labour Code, while defining the terms “wages” and “worker”, does not include a provision expressly providing for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee notes that the Labour Code was amended in 2008 (Act No. 48/2008) but that no provisions were included concerning equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the attention of the Government to the fact that the provisions in the Constitution and the Labour Code are inadequate to ensure the full application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and may hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination. Moreover, while criteria such as quality and quantity may be used to determine the level of earnings, the use of only these criteria may have the effect of impeding an objective evaluation of the work performed by men and women on the basis of a wider range of criteria, free from gender bias. This is crucial in order to eliminate effectively the discriminatory undervaluation of jobs traditionally performed by women. The Committee once again refers to its general observation of 2006 and urges the Government to take immediate steps to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Such provisions should cover situations where men and women are performing the same or similar work as well as situations where they carry out work that is of an entirely different nature but is nevertheless of equal value.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Access of women to the civil service. For a number of years, the Committee has been pointing to the persistent occupational segregation of women in the lower categories of the civil service and the slow progress in achieving an equitable balance between men and women, particularly in higher level posts. It has questioned the effectiveness of some of the measures indicated by the Government to address this phenomenon, and has pointed out that where seniority is a determining factor for purposes of promotion into higher level posts, the equitable application of this criterion should not lead to indirect discrimination against female civil servants. Consequently, the Government had been requested to review whether the weight given to the criterion of accumulated knowledge and years of experience to access higher level posts in the civil service has had a discriminatory impact on women's possibilities to access such posts, and to take more proactive measures to address the occupational gender segregation within the civil service. The Committee notes with regret that the Government continues to affirm that the Civil Service Statute provides women and men with equal opportunities to access all posts without restrictions, without providing further details on any measures taken to review whether the application of the criterion of accumulated years of experience and knowledge is not leading, in practice, to indirect discrimination against women. The Committee wishes to point out that, under the Convention, the Government has the obligation to address both direct and indirect discrimination based on sex, with respect to employment and occupation in the public service. The Committee, therefore, urges the Government to take effective steps to address the occupational gender segregation within the civil service, including the taking of measures to overcome the problem of women having an insufficient number of accumulated years of experience and knowledge, and to promote women to higher level posts. Please also provide detailed and up-to-date statistics on the distribution of male and female employees in all posts of the civil service.

National policy on equality of opportunity and treatment with respect to other grounds. The Committee notes with regret that the Government once again fails to provide information on the measures taken to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation with respect to grounds other than sex, and to address de facto inequalities which may exist based on race, colour, national extraction, religion, political opinion or social origin with respect to training, employment and conditions of work. The Committee urges the Government to take concrete measures, in accordance with Article 3(a)–(e) of the Convention, to guarantee the effective application of the Convention, in law and in practice, with respect to the grounds of race, colour, national extraction, religion, political opinion and social origin.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Kazakhstan

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. In its previous comments, the Committee drew the Government's attention to the fact that the right to equal remuneration set out in section 7(2) of the 1999 Labour Act was narrower than the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value set out in the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes that the new Labour Code of 2007 contains the same provision in section 22(15) providing that the employee shall have the right to "equal payment for equal labour without any discrimination". In addition, section 7(1) prohibits sex discrimination in the exercise of labour rights.

The Committee recalls its general observation of 2006 in which it emphasized that the concept of "work of equal value" includes but goes beyond equal remuneration for "equal", the "same" or "similar" work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee urged countries still retaining legal provisions that are narrower than the principle of the Convention to amend their legislation to ensure that it not only provides for equal remuneration for equal, the same or similar work, but also prohibits pay discrimination that occurs in situations where men and women perform different work that is nevertheless of equal value.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has failed to take these comments into account when adopting the Labour Code of 2007. It also notes that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women had similarly called on Kazakhstan to introduce legislative provisions on equal pay for work of equal value (CEDAW/C/KAZ/CO, 2 February 2007, paragraph 24). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention, providing for the right of men and women to equal remuneration for work of equal value. It asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to this end.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislative developments. Prohibition of discrimination. The Committee notes that the new Labour Code, which was adopted on 15 May 2007, includes a number of provisions which give effect to the Convention. Section 4 declares the prohibition of discrimination to be the principle of the labour legislation of the Republic of Kazakhstan, while section 7 sets out this prohibition in more detail:

- section 7(1) provides that everyone shall have equal opportunities to exercise their rights and freedoms in the sphere of labour;
- section 7(2) provides that no one may be subjected to any discrimination in exercising their labour rights based on sex, age, physical disabilities, race, nationality, language, material, social or official position, place of residence, attitude to religion, political convictions, tribe or social stratum or membership of public associations; and
- section 7(3) provides that differences, exceptions, preferences and restrictions determined by requirements inherent in the nature of the work or dictated by the state's concern for people in need of increased social and legal protection, do not constitute discrimination.

The Committee notes that these provisions cover all prohibited grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a), of the Convention, except the ground of colour. It also notes that section 7(2) also includes a number of additional grounds, as envisaged in Article 1(1)(b) of the Convention (namely age, physical disability, tribe and membership in a public association). The Committee regrets that the ground of citizenship, which was included as a prohibited ground in the previous Labour Code has been removed. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the above provisions, including information on any activities undertaken to make these known and information on the number, nature and outcome of discrimination cases dealt with by the courts or the labour inspectorate. In the absence of such information, the Committee requests the Government to take the measures necessary to collect such data, and to indicate the measures taken to that end. The Committee recommends that the prohibited ground of colour is added to section 7(2).

Equality of men and women in employment and occupation. The Committee notes with interest that the new Labour Code grants paid leave to adoptive parents (either the mother or the father) to care for a newly born adopted child (section 194) and unpaid childcare leave until the child reaches the age of three at the parents' choice, either for the father or the mother (section 195). The Committee welcomes these measures, in particular those that are available to women and men on an equal footing, and requests the Government to provide information on the extent to which this entitlement is being used by men and women.

However, the Committee notes that under section 187 of the Labour Code the employer is prevented from either engaging in night work or overtime work women with children under the age of 7 years and other persons bringing up children under the age of 7 years without a mother, or sending them on business trips or to perform rotational work, without their written consent. Under sections 188 and 189, fathers have the right to child-feeding breaks and to part-time work only in respect of children without a mother. The Committee notes that, in accordance with the principle of gender equality, measures aimed at facilitating the reconciliation of work and family responsibilities should be available on an equal footing for women and men. Provisions which reflect an assumption that caring for a child is the primary role of women prolong and reinforce gender inequality in society and the labour market. The Committee therefore requests the Government to amend these provisions accordingly.

Special measures of protection. The Committee notes that, under section 186(1) of the Labour Code, it is prohibited to engage women to perform heavy work or work under harmful and hazardous working conditions. Under section 186(2), it is prohibited for women to lift and move manually weights in excess of the maximum standards established for them. The list of jobs for which it is prohibited to engage women and the maximum weights for women to lift and move manually shall be determined by the state labour authority in agreement with the health authorities. The Committee recalls that special protective measures for women should be limited to safeguarding maternity, and should be proportional to the nature and scope of the protection needed. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the list referred in section 186 of the Labour Code for examination by the Committee.

Practical application. The Committee notes that the Government has not yet replied to a number of requests for information made by the Committee with regard to the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide the following:

- (i) detailed information on the specific measures taken to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment of women and men in employment and occupation, including measures to promote women's access to occupations and employment in areas where they are currently under-represented, including within the civil service;
- (ii) statistical information on the participation of men and women in the labour market (private and public sectors), branch of economic activity, occupational group and status of employment;
- (iii) information indicating how the principle of gender equality has been integrated into the programmes and measures to promote employment, including statistical information on the number of women who have benefited from employment promotion measures;
- (iv) statistical information on the position in the labour market of men and women belonging to ethnic or religious minorities, including information on their participation in employment in the civil service; and
- (v) information on the measures taken to plan and implement activities to raise awareness of the principles of equality, in cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations as envisaged under Article 3(a) and (b) of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Kuwait

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1966)

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. The Committee recalls its previous observation noting the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2009, and its resulting conclusions, and which addressed the following issues: the absence of effective measures to ensure, in law and in practice, protection against discrimination in employment and occupation and the absence of measures addressing sexual harassment, protective measures for women unrelated to maternity protection, practical barriers to women's access to particular occupations, and the need to ensure effective protection of migrant workers, in particular domestic workers, against discrimination on the grounds set out in the Convention. The observation also addressed the need for proactive measures in the context of a national equality policy, a component of which would be the revision of the Labour Code. The Committee notes the ILO technical assistance mission in February 2010, during which a tripartite workshop was held on report writing on international labour standards and issues relating to the application of the Convention were discussed. The Committee notes in this regard the Government's acceptance of further ILO technical assistance with a view to more effectively addressing issues relating to the Convention.

Legislative development. Prohibition of discrimination. The Committee recalls the Government's express commitment to address effectively discrimination in the new Labour Law, and notes the entry into force of the New Private Sector Labour Law of Kuwait No. 6 of 2010, which applies to workers in the private sector, including foreign workers. While noting that important progress has been made with regard to terms and conditions of employment of workers, the Committee also notes the continued absence in the new legislation of provisions expressly prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination on the basis of all the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention with respect to all the areas of employment and occupation, and of provisions prohibiting both quid pro quo and hostile environment sexual harassment, along with effective remedies. Law No. 6 of 2010 also continues to include protective measures for women which appear not to be strictly limited to maternity: section 22 prohibits employment of women at night, with some exceptions; section 23 prohibits employment of women in dangerous, hard or harmful to health trades or works, and "such jobs which are violating their morals and based on the utilization of their femininity in a manner which is not in line with the public morals", and in institutions which provide services exclusively to men. The Committee further notes that Law No. 6 of 2010 continues to exclude domestic workers from its scope, and authorizes the competent minister to issue a decision specifying the rules governing the relationship between domestic workers and their employers (section 5). While welcoming the progress made with respect to the protection of workers' rights in the private sector generally, the Committee urges the Government to take further steps to prohibit explicitly direct and indirect discrimination based on race, sex, colour, religion, national extraction, political opinion and social origin, with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation, covering all workers, and to adopt specific legislative provisions on both quid pro quo and hostile environment sexual harassment. The Government is also requested to provide information on any measures taken to prevent sexual harassment through practical and promotional means at the workplace. The Committee further requests the Government to ensure that the ministerial decision specifying the occupations and establishments regarding which women's employment is prohibited pursuant to section 23 of Law No. 6 of 2010, will not reinforce discrimination and stereotypes of women's abilities and role and will be limited to protecting maternity. The Government is encouraged to review sections 22 and 23 of Law No. 6 of 2010 with a view to bringing them into conformity with the Convention.

Access of women to particular occupations. The Committee recalls its concerns regarding the practical and legal obstacles to women's access to a number of posts and occupations under the Government's control, including due to stereotyped assumptions regarding what is "suitable to their nature", and the need to take proactive measures to address barriers to their access to education and training opportunities and to certain posts and careers, including in the judiciary. The Committee notes from the Government's report that 50 female students graduated from the Institute for Police Officers, including 15 officers, 15 corporals and 20 sergeants, and that 85 male officers graduated at the second lieutenant grade. With respect to the Public Fire Department, the Government indicates that for the first time 25 women will be joining an inspection monitoring course, while four courses are being designed for men. Applicants are selected on the basis of voting or lot casting, after passing tests and fully meeting the public and private conditions. The Committee further notes the Government's brief statement that no decisions have been taken with respect to women's access to the judiciary and that no discrimination exists with respect to access to education and recruitment to the civil service. While noting the action by the Government concerning female officers in the police force, the Committee asks the Government to take even more proactive measures to ensure that women have equal opportunities with men to access all positions under the control of the Government, as well as to promote the equal access of women to positions at all levels in the private sector. Please indicate in this context any measures taken or envisaged to address gender stereotypes and the need to balance work and family responsibilities for both men and women. With respect to women's access to the police department and the Public Fire Department, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the number of women and men who applied to the Institute for Police Officers and the inspection monitoring course, and those that, after having completed their training as police officers and firefighters, obtained positions in these departments as a result, and at what level. Please also indicate in more detail the "public and private conditions" that have to be met by applicants, and the measures taken to ensure that the selection procedures are free from discrimination.

Migrant workers. The Committee recalls the very high number of men and women of foreign nationality and different ethnic and racial backgrounds working in Kuwait and the particular vulnerability to discrimination based on multiple grounds of migrant domestic workers, the majority of whom are women. The Committee also recalls the apparent absence of practical measures to ensure that foreign workers, including foreign domestic workers, are not subjected to discrimination based on the grounds set out in the Convention, and in particular sex, race, colour or national extraction, as well as the Government's expression of commitment to address such discrimination. The Committee had already noted in the past some measures taken by the Government aimed at protecting migrant domestic workers, including Legislative Decree No. 40 of 1992 on the regulation of employment agencies for domestic workers, and workers in a similar position, Ministerial Decision No. 617/1992 on organizing rules and procedures for obtaining licences for the agencies supplying domestic workers, and the mandatory model contract for recruiting domestic workers. However, explicit protection against discrimination is not addressed in these texts, nor is it clear how these workers are protected against discrimination in practice. The Committee had also welcomed the steps taken by the Government to provide assistance to migrant domestic workers and to review the sponsorship system, which appears to find its basis in the Foreign Residency Law No. 17 of 1959, and a number of accompanying orders and regulations. The Committee notes that the situation of foreign workers, especially domestic workers, and their effective protection against discrimination was discussed during the ILO technical assistance mission in February 2010, and that following the discussion by the United Nations Human Rights Council of the Universal Periodic Review of Kuwait in September 2010, the Government reiterated its acceptance “to revoke the sponsorship system and replace it with regulations in accordance with international standards” (A/HRC/15/15/Add.1, 13 September 2010). The Committee notes that Law No. 6 of 2010 does not abolish the sponsorship system, but that section 9 of the Law provides for the establishment under the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour of the Public Authority for Labour Force which shall be responsible for recruiting and employing foreign labour following requests of employers. With regard to rules governing migrant domestic workers pursuant to section 5 of Law No. 6 of 2010, the Committee notes the adoption of the Minister of Interior Resolution No. 1182 of 2010, amending some aspects of Ministerial Decision No. 617/1992 (A/HRC/15/15/Add.1, 13 September 2010). The Committee further understands that steps are being taken to draft a domestic workers bill, which, in addition to the mandatory model contract and other measures taken to support migrant domestic workers, could further improve domestic workers’ rights. Finally, the Committee notes that the Government plans to establish a joint-venture company called the “Kuwait Home Helper Operating Company”, which would have among its objectives the recruitment and employment of domestic workers, and in which the Government would be one of the major shareholders (report of the International Organization for Migration (IOM) on “Labour Migration from Indonesia. An overview of Indonesian Migration to Selected Destinations in Asia and the Middle East” (2010)). The Committee underlines the importance of taking effective action to ensure that the system of employment of migrant workers, including migrant domestic workers, does not place the workers concerned in a situation of increased vulnerability to discrimination and abuse, as a result of disproportionate power exercised by the employer over the worker.

While noting the various steps taken by the Government to improve the system of employment of foreign workers, including domestic workers, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that, in the context of these and other measures taken to protect foreign workers, especially domestic workers, effective measures are taken to prevent discrimination against these workers on the basis of race, sex, colour and national extraction with regard to employment and occupation. In this regard, the Committee hopes that measures will be taken to ensure the observance of the principle of non-discrimination on all the grounds set out in the Convention by the future Public Authority for Labour Force, and the planned “Kuwait Home Helper Operating Company”, and requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on all measures taken or envisaged to ensure the full application of the Convention in respect of all migrant workers, including information on the following:

- (i) the measures taken to eliminate and prevent discriminatory practices and treatment against migrant workers, especially migrant domestic workers, on all the grounds set out in the Convention, including through providing accessible and effective complaints procedures and means of redress and remedies, and providing adequate information, counselling and legal assistance. Please continue to provide information on the number, nature and outcome of complaints received from migrant domestic workers, the sanctions imposed on employers and remedies provided; and
- (ii) the measures taken to review the system of employment of foreign workers, including the sponsorship system, with a view to decreasing the level of dependency and vulnerability to discrimination of migrant workers, and in particular migrant domestic workers, in relation to their employers. Please provide copies of Minister of Interior Resolution No. 1182 of 2010, the draft bill on migrant domestic workers, and of the legal texts establishing the Public Authority of Labour Force and the planned “Kuwait Home Helper Operating Company”, including information on their mandate and activities.

Stateless persons. With regard to the situation of stateless persons or residents without nationality in Kuwait, the Committee notes that the Government intends to provide information on the participation of residents without nationality (“Bidoons”) in the labour market as soon as it is available. The Committee hopes that such information will be included in the Government’s next report, and asks the Government to include information on the sectors or branches of work in which stateless persons (“Bidoons”) are concentrated.

National equality policy. The Committee recalls the importance of adopting proactive measures in the context of a national equality policy, including with respect to the areas set out in Article 3 of the Convention, and draws the Government’s attention also to Paragraphs 2–4 of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Recommendation, 1958 (No. 111), in this regard. The Committee notes the information in the Government’s report regarding the human rights education in school curricula offered by the Ministry of Education. While such human rights education is certainly of great value in general, the information provided neither indicates that any awareness-raising activities have been undertaken relating to the principles of the Convention, nor that any other measures have been taken with a view to declaring and pursuing a national equality policy. The Committee asks the Government, with ILO assistance, to take more proactive measures to develop and implement a coherent national policy on equal opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation with respect to all the grounds set out in the Convention, and to report on the progress made.

Latvia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1992)

Discrimination on the basis of national extraction. For a number of years the Committee has expressed concern over certain provisions of the State Language Act, 1999, which might have a discriminatory effect on the employment or work of minority groups, including the large Russian-speaking minority in the country. The Committee notes from the Government's report that the two state agencies dealing with language were merged to form the new Latvian Language Agency (LLA) which has as its main objective to promote the strengthening of the status and sustainable development of the Latvian language. The Government indicates that the official language policy defined in the Guidelines for Official Language Policy for the Time Period 2005–14 and the Official Language Policy Programme for the Time Period 2006–10 are implemented by the LLA. The Committee notes the conclusions of the LLA study entitled "Impact of migration on the language environment in Latvia" (2009) indicating the difficulties faced by immigrants, in particular in integrating in the labour market. The Committee furthermore notes from the information provided by the Government concerning the application of the State Language Act that the provision regarding failure to use the official language to the extent required for the performance of duties is the most predominant issue related to that Law before the courts. While noting the participation of minority groups including Russian-speaking minority groups in language training courses conducted by the State Employment Agency, the Committee asks the Government to provide more detailed information on the situation of minority groups in the labour market, including statistical data on the proportion of those attending such courses that have subsequently obtained employment. The Committee also asks the Government to continue to provide information on activities undertaken by the LLA, and the results achieved to improve access to employment and occupation for all ethnic and linguistic minority groups. Please also continue to provide information on the percentage of men and women belonging to minority groups that have participated in the language training courses, as well as information on relevant administrative and judicial decisions concerning the application of the State Language Act.

Discrimination on the basis of political opinion. The Committee recalls its previous comments regarding the provisions of the State Civil Service Act, 2000, which sets out as mandatory requirements in order to qualify as a candidate for any civil service position that the person concerned "is not or has not been in a permanent staff position in the state security service, intelligence or counter-intelligence service of the USSR, the Latvian Soviet Socialist Republic (SSR) or some foreign State" (section 7(8)), or "who are not or have not been the members of organizations banned by laws or court rulings" (section 7(9)). The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Supreme Court has not dealt with these provisions, but that it has upheld similar provisions, in particular section 5(3) of the Law on Corruption Prevention and Combating Bureau of 2002. The Committee, however, considers that such broad exclusions from being a candidate for any civil service position are not sufficiently well defined and delimited, and could result in discrimination in employment and occupation based on political opinion. The Committee asks the Government to revise section 7 of the State Civil Service Act to ensure that any requirements for positions in the public service are based on the inherent requirements of the particular job, as strictly defined. The Committee once again asks the Government to provide a list of the prohibited organizations under section 7(9) of the State Civil Service Act.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Malawi

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Application of the principle in the civil service. The Committee recalls its previous observation pointing out that the current occupational segregation of women in the civil service may result in remuneration gaps between men and women, and that the collection of statistical data on the distribution of men and women in the various grades of the public service and on their corresponding salary levels is crucial both in order to evaluate the nature, extent and causes of gender pay differentials and to assess the application of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's statement that no gender wage gap exists in the civil service since the same "remuneration package" is applied to women and men. The Committee also notes the Government's acknowledgement that few women hold managerial positions as their short-lived employment prevents them from progressing in the job hierarchy. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that efforts are being made to promote women's longer term employment and to enable them to gain access to the educational careers and jobs which have traditionally been predominantly held by men. Moreover, the Committee notes that the statistical information requested will be provided as soon as it becomes available. Referring to its 2006 general observation on the Convention, the Committee asks the Government to ensure that equal remuneration is recognized not only for women and men performing the same job, but also for men and women performing jobs of a different nature but which are, nonetheless, of equal value. The Committee also asks the Government to provide more complete information on the measures taken or envisaged to retain women in the public service with a view to encouraging their advancement towards decision-making positions. It also requests information on the measures taken to promote women's access to a wider range of educational and job opportunities, including information on the impact of such measures on the application of the principle of the Convention.

Wage disparities between men and women in rural areas. Further to its previous observation, regarding the discrimination faced by women in rural areas, the Committee notes from the Government's report that the minimum wage established in the country following consultations with the social partners applies to all economic sectors, including agriculture. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that awareness-raising campaigns on the principle of the Convention and strengthened inspection are needed and that, in the districts where discrimination cases have been reported, labour inspection has already been intensified. With regard to the promotion of measures aimed at facilitating the reconciliation of work and family responsibilities and the equal sharing of family responsibilities between men and women rural workers, the Committee notes the Government's statement that gender roles are deeply rooted in the cultural texture of society and they can only be changed in the long run with the involvement of all stakeholders. The Committee encourages the Government to promote, in cooperation with the social partners, the adoption of adequate measures to assist rural women to reconcile their work and family responsibilities and to have a more equitable sharing of family responsibilities between men and women workers. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to strengthen the labour inspection services with respect to the application of the principle of the Convention to the agricultural sector, including the supply of specific training, as well as information on any violations detected and the remedies provided or the sanctions imposed in this regard. Please also provide information on the sensitization and awareness-raising campaigns carried out with regard to men's and women's right to equal remuneration for work of equal value in the rural areas.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

While noting the Government's indication that the President is committed to promoting the participation of women in higher positions, that women have been appointed to some ministerial positions and high-ranking posts in the public service, the Committee notes that the report does not contain replies to the specific issues raised in the Committee's previous observation. The Committee therefore again requests the Government to provide information on the following:

- (i) the measures taken to address unequal access of women to training and education at all levels, together with statistical information on the participation of women in training and education;
- (ii) the measures taken or envisaged, especially with regard to the recruitment policy and further training policy, to achieve an overall increase in the participation of women in higher-level posts in the public service. In this regard, please also provide updated statistical information, disaggregated by sex, showing the progress made in ensuring equal access of women to public service employment at all levels; and
- (iii) the measures taken or envisaged to facilitate access to soft loans for rural women as a means of assisting them to run small businesses, thereby reducing unemployment and poverty. The Committee also requests information on the number of rural women who have benefited from credit facilities.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

Application of the Convention in practice in export processing zones. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the mechanisms to monitor discrimination in practice in export processing zones to allow an assessment to be made of the impact of the measures adopted, as well as on the complaints of discrimination based on sex presented to local and federal conciliation and arbitration boards or to tribunals. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has no information on systematic discriminatory practices against women in export processing zones (maquiladoras) or on complaints of discrimination based on sex in export processing enterprises. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that meetings on equality at work have been held aimed at local authorities, representatives of employers' and workers' organizations, institutions and civil society for the purpose of raising awareness of occupational segregation. The actors involved in these meetings undertake in writing to include a clause prohibiting violence in the workplace in collective agreements or in general conditions of employment and to promote the removal of the requirement for pregnancy tests to obtain or maintain employment. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not sent any relevant information concerning the monitoring of the situation relating to discrimination in export processing zones or the complaints of discrimination based on sex. The Committee recalls that these matters have been pending for many years and were examined by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in 2006, particularly the matter of the requirement of pregnancy tests to obtain or maintain employment and the practice of subjecting pregnant women to difficult or hazardous working conditions to force them to resign from their jobs. The Committee notes with concern these discriminatory practices and requests the Government to take the necessary measures to investigate the existence of the discriminatory practices mentioned and effectively address the issue of discrimination against women in export processing zones and to provide information on any developments in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the mechanisms available to address complaints of this nature and the penalties applicable.

Legislation requiring women to certify that they are not pregnant. The Committee notes that, on 18 March 2010, the draft decree amending various provisions of the Federal Labour Act and prohibiting employers from requiring female workers to certify that they are not pregnant in order to gain access to and remain in employment or obtain a promotion or from dismissing female workers on the grounds that they are pregnant, have changed their marital status or have children in their care was submitted to Congress for consideration. The reform is being examined by the Labour and Social Insurance Commission of the Chamber of Deputies. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in amending the Federal Labour Act to ensure compliance with the obligations of the Convention.

Discrimination on the basis of race and colour. The Committee recalls that one of the issues addressed during the discussion in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2006 was concerning vacancy announcements that discriminate on grounds of race and colour. The Committee notes with regret that even though it has been commenting on this matter for many years, the Government indicates that it does not have sufficient information concerning concrete cases. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to investigate the existence of this discriminatory practice and to address it effectively with a view to eradicating it. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information in this regard.

Sexual harassment. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to: (i) ensure that complaints of sexual harassment made under the Federal Labour Act do not result in the termination of the victim's employment and that appropriate sanctions and remedies are available; (ii) provide information on the number and nature of cases of sexual harassment filed pursuant to the Federal Labour Act; and (iii) provide information on the procedures in place for lodging complaints of sexual harassment and their application in practice, as well as any other procedures that have been established to address cases of sexual harassment in the public sector. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that the labour reform initiative submitted to Congress in March 2010 includes provisions prohibiting sexual harassment in the workplace but that it has no information available concerning the application of the current Federal Labour Act in cases relating to sexual harassment. The Government also indicates that the General Act on the right of women to a life free of violence and the Federal Penal Code provide for penalties to punish sexual harassment. Furthermore, the National Institute of Women (INMUJERES) and the Ministry of Labour and Social Insurance (STPS) have adopted measures such as the Protocol on intervention in cases of sexual harassment within the public administration, the Labour Justice Programme and the campaign to prevent, address, sanction and eradicate sexual harassment in schools and the workplace. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures in the context of the labour reform under way to ensure that complaints of sexual harassment made under the Federal Labour Act do not result in the termination of the victim's employment. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of complaints of sexual harassment, how long the procedure has taken and the results thereof, as well as on the application of the Protocol on intervention in cases of sexual harassment in practice.

Cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations. The Government indicates that, following the dialogue between the social partners and the Government, the STPS is promoting the insertion of a standard clause on the inclusion of persons with disabilities in the labour market to encourage the creation of high-quality jobs in the formal sector for persons with disabilities. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on these activities and on any other activities being developed by the Government with employers' and workers' organizations to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation and to eliminate any type of discrimination.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1996)

Discrimination on the basis of colour. In reply to its previous comments regarding the absence of any reference to the ground of "colour" in the anti-discrimination provisions of the Labour Code, the Committee welcomes the draft law amending the Labour Code which completes the list of grounds of discrimination set out in section 8 of the Labour Code, particularly by adding "skin colour" and "HIV/AIDS infection". The Committee, furthermore, underlines the Government's indication that the elimination of discrimination in employment and occupation represents a "permanent priority" in elaborating and implementing legal standards; and in this regard, recalls the importance of including explicit references to at least all grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention in national legislation to promote the effective application of the Convention. With regard to the ground of discrimination based on HIV/AIDS infection, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the importance of prohibiting discrimination based on real or perceived HIV/AIDS status, as foreseen in the HIV and AIDS Recommendation, 2010 (No. 200). Noting that the draft law has been submitted to Parliament for consideration, the Committee asks the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure there is an explicit prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination covering at least all grounds enumerated in the Convention, including colour, and hopes that the final text will include a prohibition of discrimination based on real or perceived HIV/AIDS status, in keeping with the HIV and AIDS Recommendation, 2010 (No. 200). Please also supply a copy of the amendment of the Labour Code once it has been adopted.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1977)

Article 1 of the Convention. Legislation. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take all necessary steps to amend section 108 of Labour Act No. 23/2007, which establishes only the right to equal pay for the same work, so that it fully reflects the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee notes that in its report the Government mentions no developments in this area. The Committee recalls that, in its general observation of 2006, it stressed that the concept of “work of equal value” includes but goes beyond equal remuneration for “equal”, the “same” or “similar” work and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee therefore once again asks the Government to take all necessary steps to amend section 108 of Labour Act No. 23/2007, so that this provision fully reflects the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee encourages the Government, should it deem appropriate, to seek technical assistance from the ILO on this matter.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Discrimination based on sex with regard to employment in the police force. The Committee previously considered that sections 118–128 of the Nigeria Police Regulations, which provide special recruitment requirements and conditions of service applying to women, are discriminatory on the basis of sex and thus incompatible with the Convention. Accordingly, the Committee urged the Government to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention. The provisions in question provide the following:

- Section 118 excludes women who are pregnant or married from being eligible for seeking for enlistment in the police force. It also provides for a minimum age for enlistment of 19 years, while men can apply as of 17 years (section 72(2)(b)). The minimum height requirement of 1.67 metres applies to men and women.
- Section 119 provides that a specified form shall be used for the fingerprinting of women candidates and that the medical examination of women candidates shall take place at the Police College immediately prior to enlistment.
- Section 120 provides that women candidates shall be interviewed in the presence of a woman police officer and that interviewing officers shall bring to the attention of the women candidates the provisions of these Police Regulations governing the duties of women police, and the miscellaneous conditions of service attaching to women police (as laid down in section 123–128).
- Section 121 lists the duties that women police officers are permitted to perform, such as investigation of sexual offences against women and children, attendance when women and children are being interviewed by male police officers, searching, escorting and guarding women prisoners; school crossing duties; and crowd control, where women and children are present.
- Section 122 provides that women police officers may, in order to relieve male police officers from these duties, be employed in clerical duties, telephone duties and “office orderly duties”.
- Section 123 provides that women police officers shall not be called upon to drill under arms or take part in any baton or riot exercise.
- Section 124 requires women police officers wishing to marry to make a written request for permission to the police commissioner, providing the name, address and occupation of the person she intends to marry. Permission will be granted for the marriage if the intended husband is of good character and the woman police officer has served in the force for a period of not less than three years.
- Section 125 provides that a married woman police officer shall not be granted any special privileges by reason of the fact that she is married, and shall be subject to posting and transfer as if she were unmarried.
- Section 126 provides that a married woman police officer who is pregnant may be granted maternity leave, while section 127 provides that an unmarried women police officer who becomes pregnant shall be discharged from the force.
- Section 128 regulates the wearing of make-up as well as jewellery and hairstyles.

In its report, the Government expresses the view that sections 118–128 are not discriminatory. The Committee recalls that the Convention defines as discriminatory any distinction, exclusion or preference made on the basis of sex or other prohibited grounds which have the effect of nullifying and impairing equality of opportunity in employment and occupation. The Committee considers that sections 118–128, taken together, reflect an outdated and gender-biased approach as regards the role of women in general, and as members of the police force, in particular. The criteria and provisions relating to pregnancy and marital status contained in sections 118, 124 and 127 constitute direct discrimination. As regards the limitation of the duties that women police officers are permitted to perform, the Committee recalls that Article 1(2) provides that any distinction, exclusion or preference in respect of a particular job based on the inherent requirements thereof is not deemed to be discrimination. Whether or not a distinction is based on inherent job requirements and is thus acceptable has to be determined on an objective basis, free from gender bias. The Committee considers that sections 121, 122 and 123 are likely to go beyond what is permitted under Article 1(2). A common height requirement for men and women is also likely to constitute indirect discrimination against women.

Recalling that each Member for which this Convention is in force, in accordance with Article 3(c), is under the obligation to repeal any statutory provisions which are contrary to equality of opportunity and treatment, the Committee once again urges the Government to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention, and to indicate the measures taken to this end in its next report.

The Committee trusts that the Government, in collaboration with workers' and employers' organizations, will take the necessary measures to ensure equality of opportunity and treatment of women in the police force. It encourages the Government to have regard to the guidance concerning equality issues set out in the Guidelines on social dialogue in public emergency services in a changing environment, adopted by the ILO Joint Meeting on Public Emergency Services: Social Dialogue in a Changing Environment in January 2003.

Noting that the Government's report does not reply adequately to most of the Committee's previous comments, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that full information on all the pending issues is provided in its next report.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Pakistan

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes the communication from the Pakistan Workers' Federation, received 31 August 2010 stressing the need to amend the relevant legislation with a view to protecting workers against wage discrimination based on sex, and to ensure the effective enforcement of the legislation by the labour inspection services. The Committee asks the Government to reply to the communication from the Pakistan Workers' Federation.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislation. The Committee recalls that since the Convention's ratification by Pakistan, it has been commenting on the importance of enacting legislation to ensure the effective application of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that a draft "Employment and Service Conditions Act" has been prepared which includes provisions on equal remuneration for men and women. The Committee stresses that provisions intended to give effect to the Convention should give full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. In particular, the provisions should not be limited to providing equal remuneration for "equal", the "same" or "similar" work, but should also provide for equal remuneration for men and women for work that is of an entirely different nature, but which is nevertheless of equal value. In addition, the legislation should ensure that this equal remuneration principle applies to all aspects of remuneration, as broadly defined in Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to continue its efforts to put in place legislation giving effect to the Convention and to ensure that this legislation is in full conformity with the Convention.

Minimum wages. In its previous observation, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the specific and practical measures taken to ensure that minimum wages are set in accordance with the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. In reply, the Government states that in view of the presence of employers, workers and government representatives on the provincial minimum wages boards, care has been taken to ensure that no bias is shown as regards jobs predominately performed by women. The Committee considers that the tripartite nature of the Provincial Minimum Wages Board, while important, does not in itself ensure, that wage rates for categories of work predominately performed by women are not set at lower levels than the rates for male-dominated work where the work performed by men and women is, in fact, of equal value. The Committee therefore encourages the Government, in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations to examine the functioning of the mechanisms for the setting of minimum wages in the light of the need to promote and ensure the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and to indicate any steps taken in this regard. The Committee also asks the Government to provide copies of the minimum wage notifications currently in force, and to indicate which of the occupational groups covered tend to be female dominated.

Awareness raising and training. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Directorate of Workers' Education under the Ministry of Labour, Manpower and Overseas Pakistanis, the National Institute of Labour Administration and Training and the Industrial Relations Institute are undertaking education and training activities for workers through seminars, workshops and training courses, including activities relating to the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide more detailed information on these training activities, including the number of courses and participants, as well as examples of the training materials used as regards the principles of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Further, please indicate any activities specifically implemented for employers, and whether any of these activities have addressed the issue of objective job evaluation.

Cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee recalls that the Government has closely cooperated with the employers' and workers' organizations in the preparation of the Labour Protection Policy (2006). It notes the comments received from the Pakistan Workers' Federation on the dialogue held with the Government and the Employers' Federation of Pakistan on strengthening the labour inspection machinery. The Committee also notes that, as a follow-up to the labour protection policy, the Government has started studies on a number of important issues, including the links between working and living conditions and productivity, labour protection in the informal economy, and the effectiveness of the labour administration. Trusting that these studies will provide an opportunity to examine issues relating to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and identify measures to strengthen its application, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken with a view to examining the issue of equal remuneration in the context of the abovementioned studies, and the results of these studies, once available.

Statistical information. The Committee notes that the Government has not yet provided statistical information on the earnings of men and women. Recalling that statistical information on the levels of remuneration of men and women working in the different sectors of the economy is an important means to monitor progress with regard to promoting and ensuring respect for the principle of equal remuneration, the Committee asks the Government to indicate to what extent such data are being collected and published.

Enforcement. The Committee notes the Government's indication that under the Payment of Wages Act, 1936, provincial governments have appointed inspectors who can examine documents relating to the calculation of wages and payment of wages. Further, the provincial payment of wages authorities can hear and decide any matter relating to the payment of wages. The Committee concludes from the indications given in the Government's report, that the labour inspectorate and the labour courts have apparently not yet addressed any cases concerning violations of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee asks the Government to indicate whether the provincial wages inspectors and payment of wages authorities have dealt with any cases involving equal remuneration for work of equal value, and to continue to provide information on any such cases that might have been dealt with by other competent bodies, including the labour courts. The Committee encourages the Government, in addition to including equal remuneration provisions in the legislation, to take appropriate measures with a view to strengthening the mechanisms to enforce the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and to indicate the measures taken in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes the adoption on 11 March 2010 of the Protection against Harassment of Women at the Workplace Act and that the definition of sexual harassment under the Act includes both quid pro quo and hostile environment harassment. The Committee notes however that in its comments dated 30 July 2010, the Pakistan Workers Federation refers to some shortcomings in the implementation of this law. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the effective implementation of the Protection against Harassment of Women at the Workplace Act.

The Committee further notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Legislation. Prohibition of discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's statement that under the Constitution of Pakistan, all citizens have equal opportunities in private and public employment and that the labour legislation was being applied equally to all workers, without discrimination. The Government adds that no complaints of discrimination in any industrial or commercial undertaking had been recorded. The Committee notes that the Convention aims at the protection against discrimination in employment and occupation of all workers, both citizens and non-citizens. The Committee also recalls that constitutional protection alone, while being important, may not be sufficient in terms of granting effective protection from discrimination in employment and occupation, and that the mere absence of discriminatory provisions in the legislation does not amount to a prohibition of discrimination, nor does it generally provide an appropriate legal basis for discrimination complaints to be brought.

The Committee recalls that the Convention aims at the elimination of discrimination as defined in Article 1 of the Convention through the adoption and implementation of a national policy to promote equality of opportunity and treatment (Article 2). Under Article 3(b), Pakistan has undertaken to enact such legislation as may be calculated to secure the acceptance and observance of such national policy. The Committee also recalls that, in its 2008 General Report, it stressed the importance of adopting non-discrimination and equality legislation in order to give effect to the Convention. In this context, the Committee refers to its comments under the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), in which it notes that the Government has prepared a draft Employment and Service Conditions Act which contains a provision on equal remuneration for men and women. The Committee trusts that the Government will give due consideration to introducing into the legislation non-discrimination provisions prohibiting discrimination in employment and occupation based on race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin, and any other ground determined after consultations with workers' and employers' organizations, as provided for under Articles 1(1)(a) and 1(1)(b) of the Convention. The Committee recalls that where provisions are being adopted to give effect to the Convention, they should, as a minimum, cover discrimination on all the seven grounds explicitly listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. It is equally required by the Convention that equality of opportunity and treatment is ensured with respect to selection and recruitment, all terms and conditions of employment, as well as termination. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken with a view to including provisions on non-discrimination and equality in employment and occupation in the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act and to provide a copy of the Act as soon as it is adopted.

Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. The Committee notes that according to the Labour Force Survey 2007/2008, the labour force participation rate (refined) was 69.5 per cent for men and 19.6 per cent for women, whereas the corresponding figures for 2001–02 were 70.3 per cent for men and 14.4 per cent for women. While welcoming the progress made with regard to women's participation in the labour force, the Committee observes that the gender differential, as regards labour force participation, continues to be high. The Committee also notes that women's participation rate increased in rural areas, whereas it actually decreased in urban areas. With regard to the employment status of men and women, the Committee notes from data established for 2001–02 and 2007–08, that the percentages of women being employees and own-account workers significantly decreased, combined with a gradual increase of women in the category of unpaid family workers (from 46.9 to 65 per cent). Women remain concentrated in unskilled elementary occupations or skilled agricultural work. In this context, the Committee notes the observations made by the Pakistan Workers Federation (PWF) in their communication dated 21 September 2008, stressing the need for measures to enable women to move from the informal to the formal economy, including through extending social security and minimum wages, and training and education for rural women.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in reply to the Committee's comments regarding gender equality in employment and occupation. The Government indicates that the Ministry of Women's Development is implementing a National Gender Reform Plan (GRAP) which provides for measures to increase women's employment in the public sector, including through improvements of office facilities to provide for restrooms and day care facilities. The Government also continued to implement a 10 per cent quota for women in government employment at the federal level; efforts are under way to increase the quota to 20 per cent. The Committee requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the implementation of the public sector quota system, including statistical information on the current distribution of men and women in the different government departments, jobs and positions. The Committee further requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to promote and ensure women's equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation beyond the public sector, as well as statistical information indicating the progress made in enhancing their participation in the labour market, both in rural and urban areas. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the specific measures taken:

- (i) to promote gender equality in the private sector; and
- (ii) to enable women to move from the informal to the formal economy.

As regards the access of women and girls to education and training, the Government states that emphasis is presently placed on increasing participation of girls in secondary school education. The measures taken in this area include scholarships and subsidies for low-income households, revision of the curricula and textbooks to avoid gender stereotypical views and media campaigns to change social attitudes towards girls' education. The new draft National Education Policy sets the target of achieving gender parity among teachers at all levels of education by 2015. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to promote equal access of girls to education and training at all levels, as well as updated statistical information in this regard.

Equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of minorities. The Committee notes with interest that by a Cabinet decision of 20 May 2009, the Government introduced a 5 per cent quota for the employment of minorities in federal government employment. The modalities of implementation of the quota have been notified in Office Memorandum No. 4/15/94-R-2, dated 26 May 2009, of the Cabinet Secretariat's Establishment Division. The Committee notes that the quota is to apply to any person who is "a non-Muslim" as defined in article 260(3)(b) of the Constitution ("a person belonging to the Christian, Hindu, Sikh, Buddhist or Parsi community, a person of the Qadiani Group or the Lahori Group who call themselves 'Ahmadis' or by any other name, or a Bahai, and a person belonging to any of the Scheduled Castes"). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in implementing the 5 per cent quota for employment of minorities in the federal government employment, including statistical information on the number of minority members employed, disaggregated by sex and minority group, and according to government department, jobs and positions.

The Committee further notes that, as indicated by the Government, the National Commission for Minorities, which was formally established in 1993, is non-functional at present, although a proposal to reconstitute it was before the Prime Minister for approval. Chaired by the Minister for Minorities, the Commission is mandated, inter alia, to examine laws and administrative practices alleged to be discriminatory against minorities, to recommend to the Government steps to ensure full and effective participation by minorities in all aspects of national life, and to look into grievances of minority communities. The Committee notes that the Government also implements a development scheme and offers scholarships to minority students. The Committee trusts that the National Commission for Minorities will be reconstituted in the near future and requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard. It also asks the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of schemes and programmes to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment for minorities in training and education, and also to provide information on any other measures taken to promote access of minorities to employment and occupation, including self-employment.

Discrimination based on social origin. The Committee notes that the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, in its concluding observations of 4 March 2009, has expressed concern about the persisting de facto segregation and discrimination against Dalits regarding their enjoyment of economic, civil, political and social rights, and the fact that no specific legislation prohibiting discrimination based on caste has been adopted (CERD/C/PAK/CO/20, 4 March 2009, paragraph 21). Recalling that discrimination based on caste is a form of discrimination based on social origin covered by the Convention, the Committee stresses that ratifying States have an obligation to take effective measures towards the elimination of such discrimination in employment and occupation. In this regard, the Committee recommends that a prohibition of discrimination based on social origin, including caste, be included in the legislation. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, irrespective of caste, through legislation and other appropriate measures.

Discrimination based on religion. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning certain provisions of the Penal Code relating to offences relating to religion ("blasphemy laws"). Some of these offences single out the members of the Ahmadi minority. For instance, section 298C establishes sentences of imprisonment for up to three years for members of this group who, inter alia, preach or propagate their faith, whether by spoken or written words, or by visible representations. The Committee also recalls that Pakistani passports include a mention of religion and that Muslims applying for a passport must sign a declaration to the effect that the founder of the Ahmadi movement is an impostor, which is designed to prevent members of this movement from obtaining passports identifying them as Muslims. The Committee recalls that the ILO supervisory bodies have expressed concern for many years over the impact of these measures on the enjoyment of equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of the religious minority concerned. The Committee also recalls that the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the question of religious intolerance concluded in 1996 that provisions specifically applying to the Ahmadi minority were questionable, stressing that blasphemy legislation should not be discriminatory and should not give rise to abuse. The Special Rapporteur also recommended that no mention of religion should be included in passports and that the declaration mentioned above be deleted (E/CN.4/1996/95/Add.1, paragraphs 82 and 85). More recently, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination expressed concern about the risk that blasphemy laws may be used in a discriminatory manner against minority groups (CERD/C/PAK/CO/20, paragraph 19). The Committee also notes that during the Universal Periodic Review of Pakistan under the auspices of the UN Human Rights Council, the Government announced that "specific steps are being considered to strengthen laws and procedures to reduce incidence of their abuse" (A/HRC/8/42/Add.1, 28 August 2008, paragraph 8). While noting the general explanations provided by the Government in its report regarding the protection of freedom of religion available under the Constitution, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to review the abovementioned measures, and to provide information on any steps taken in this regard, as announced during the Universal Periodic Review.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Panama

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1958)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the communication of the National Federation of Public Employees and Public Service Enterprise Workers (FENASEP), dated 23 July 2009, sent to the Government on 31 August 2009. The Committee notes that the communication refers to the violation of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value in the public sector and, specifically to the absence of rates of remuneration established without discrimination based on sex. The Committee notes that it has not yet received the Government's observations in reply to the comments made by FENASEP. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the application of the Convention in the public sector, including statistics on the wage levels of public servants disaggregated by sex, occupational category and post, and any other information that it considers appropriate in reply to the comments submitted by FENASEP.

Article 1 of the Convention. Work of equal value. The Committee refers to its previous comments in which it asked the Government to amend section 10 of the Labour Code, which is limited to guaranteeing equal remuneration for "equal work", in order to give full legislative expression to the concept of equal remuneration for men and women for "work of equal value", as provided for under the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no progress has been made in this regard given that a consensus has not been reached among the social partners to amend the Labour Code. The Committee also notes that the Government reiterates the arguments put forward by the Legal Advisory Department of the Ministry of Labour and Employment Development (MITRADEL) that there is no inconsistency between section 10 of the Labour Code and the Convention. The Committee notes, in particular, that the Government indicates in its report that the Convention takes legal precedence over Panama's national law and must therefore be applied in all labour relations and employment contracts.

However, the Committee notes the jurisprudence of the Supreme Court of Justice of Panama, referred to by FENASEP in its communication, that international conventions normally lack constitutional hierarchy and that the State therefore has an obligation to adapt its domestic legislation to the provisions of such conventions (Legal Registry of May 1991). The Committee also notes the difficulties which continue to be encountered in applying the Convention in practice, which are reflected in a significant and persistent wage gap between men and women. The Committee considers that there is a lack of understanding concerning the scope of the principle of the Convention and that incorporating this principle into the national legislation in accordance with the Convention would help to clarify the situation.

The Committee therefore draws the Government's attention once again to its general observation of 2006. The Committee emphasizes that the concept of equal remuneration for "work of equal value", although encompassing equal remuneration for "equal", "the same" or "similar" work, is broader than that because it requires that equal remuneration also be given to workers carrying out work that is of an entirely different nature, but which is nevertheless of equal value. This comparison between different jobs is essential due to the gender segregation which exists in the labour market, which results in certain jobs being performed mainly or exclusively by men or women. The Committee also reminds the Government that provisions that are expressed more narrowly than the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination. The Committee therefore asks the Government to:

- (i) promote dialogue with the social partners on the need to expressly prohibit pay discrimination in situations in which men and women perform different jobs which are nonetheless of equal value with a view to amending section 10 of the Labour Code;
- (ii) expressly establish in its legislation the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value;
- (iii) provide information on any progress made in these respects; and
- (iv) provide information on the steps taken or envisaged to promote understanding of the principle of the Convention by the authorities and organizations of workers and employers.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the communication sent by the National Federation of Public Employees and Public Service Enterprise Workers (FENASEP), dated 23 July 2009, sent to the Government on 31 August 2009. The Committee notes that the communication refers to the risk of public servants being dismissed because of their political opinions in connection with elections. The Committee notes that it has not yet received the Government's observations in reply to these comments. However, the Committee recalls that FENASEP had already raised the problem of discrimination on political grounds in its previous communications and the Committee addressed that matter in its previous observations.

Discrimination based on political opinion. In its previous comments, the Committee noted a communication from FENASEP in 2001, in which it indicated that the Government had dismissed more than 19,000 public servants without just cause and without following the procedures established by law. FENASEP pointed out that 80 per cent of those dismissed were registered members of the political party called the Democratic Revolutionary Party (PRD) and that the dismissals constituted discrimination on political grounds in breach of Article 1 of the Convention. In its 2008 observation, the Committee noted another communication sent by FENASEP, received on 7 October 2008 and sent to the Government on 13 October 2008, which pointed out the lack of progress made in the work of the bipartite commission comprising officials of the Ministry of Labour (MITRADEL) and FENASEP aimed at reinstating the persons concerned. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the majority of leaders dismissed were reinstated in their posts or appointed to the various state bodies. The Committee also notes that in May 2008, the Government issued the necessary instructions for all public servants working under a contract with government bodies to be made permanent so that they would be able to enter the administrative career system. The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to prevent the recurrence of similar cases of discrimination based on political opinion and requests it to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to that end. The Committee also requests the Government to continue its efforts through the above bipartite commission, to solve the cases of dismissal based on political opinion which are still pending.

Administrative career system. The Committee recalls that the Government re-established the administrative career system to integrate public servants into the system in order to protect them from political pressure. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, Act No. 9 of 20 June 1994 which establishes and regulates the administrative career system was amended by Act No. 24 of 2 July 2007 and Act No. 14 of 28 January 2008 with the result that from 30 April 2008, the special procedure for entry into the administrative career system could no longer be used and the only way of entering the public administration was the regular procedure by means of competitive examination. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the aim of this amendment was to eliminate the possibility of appointing political officials to administrative career posts on a discretionary basis. The Committee also notes that according to the provisions of section 136 of Act No. 9, as amended by the above Acts, the stability of employment of career public servants is dependent, inter alia, on their effective, productive, honest, efficient and responsible performance. The Committee also notes that section 5 of Executive Decree No. 44 of 11 April 2008 stipulates that the administrative career system shall promote the occupation of all public posts by public servants who stand out for their suitability, competence, loyalty, morals and honesty. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 136 of Act No. 9 and section 5 of Executive Decree No. 44, particularly concerning the interpretation of the requirement of loyalty from public servants, including information on any court decisions handed down in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the percentage of public servants who have been integrated into the administrative career system through the special entry procedure in accordance with section 67 of Act No. 9.

Gender-based discrimination. The Committee refers to its previous comments in which it considered communications received from FENASEP concerning cases of the dismissal of women on the grounds of maternity or pregnancy. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the women were employed under fixed-term contracts and that they were removed from their posts simply because the period for which they had been recruited came to an end. The Committee notes that in its 2008 communication, FENASEP refers to new cases of the dismissal of women who were pregnant or on maternity leave by the National Bank of Panama. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed concern at the practice of requiring pregnancy tests as a condition for access to employment (CCPR/C/PAN/CO/3, 17 April 2008, paragraph 16). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent discrimination on the ground of pregnancy, especially with regard to access to employment and job security and to ensure that temporary contracts are not used as a means to discriminate against women based on pregnancy. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in the context of its equality policy to ensure that women on temporary contracts do not find themselves in situations where they are vulnerable to discrimination on the basis of pregnancy.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Peru

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the Coordinator of Trade Union Federations composed of the Single Confederation of Workers of Peru (CUT), the General Confederation of Workers of Peru (CGTP), the Autonomous Confederation of Workers of Peru (CATP) and the Confederation of Workers of Peru (CTP) on 13 August 2010, sent by the Government, as well as the additional comments submitted by the CGTP on 31 August 2010. The comments refer to the significant wage gap between men and women and the participation of women in lower-paid sectors of the labour market. The Committee also notes the comments of the National Confederation of Private Employers' Institutions (CONFIEP) and the Chamber of Commerce of Lima of 12 November 2010, reiterating their previous comments. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the issues raised in these communications.

Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Wage gap. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to apply section 6(f) of Act No. 28983 to implement the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government refers to the adoption of the "Building Peru" plan, which has benefited 93,722 women, the Pro-Youth programme and the "Revalue Peru" programme. Under the Revalue Peru programme, 19,221 persons have been provided with training, including 7,363 women. The Government adds that women account for 34 per cent of the placements made by the National Employment Service. Furthermore, the Ministry for Women and Social Development has created the label "made by Peruvian women" in recognition of quality products made by women entrepreneurs, which gives their product a stronger market position. The Committee notes that the Government also refers to the study carried out by the Labour Studies and Statistics Programme of the Ministry of Labour entitled "Women in the Peruvian labour market" covering the period 2004–08. The Committee notes that according to this study, men earn more than women in all occupational groups except in the driver sector, where nearly 100 per cent of the workers are men. The widest wage gap is found among managers, administrators and public servants, professionals, technicians and related occupations and miners and quarry workers, while the weekly wage gap is narrowest in basic occupations requiring a lower level of training or qualifications. According to the study, discrimination largely accounts for the difference in wages between men and women in nearly all occupations. It also notes that the wage gaps are wider in private enterprises which require their staff to have more qualifications, in enterprises with 50 or more workers and among professional self-employed workers. During the period 2004–08, men’s wages increased more than women’s. According to the study, this can be explained by the skills gap that exists between men and women. Although the informal economy has shrunk, it continues to be significant; women also represent the majority of workers in the informal economy. Furthermore, the study concludes that unemployment also affects mainly women. Although the study shows that the wage gap increased in 2006, the Government’s report indicates that the programmes implemented have contributed to narrowing the wage gap between men and women and that whereas in 2008, women earned a wage equivalent to 63 per cent of men’s wages, they currently receive a wage equivalent to 66.8 per cent of men’s wages. The Government also indicates that the number of women receiving a wage lower than the national minimum wage has also fallen. The Committee notes that the Government refers to the persons who have benefited under the various programmes it has implemented. However, the information provided does not allow a proper assessment of the impact of these programmes in promoting equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value or in narrowing the wage gap. Furthermore, the Committee recalls the importance of taking proactive measures to provide education and training opportunities for women as a means of facilitating the application of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the programmes and measures undertaken or envisaged, in particular those designed to improve the access of women to a wider range of jobs, especially high-level jobs. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact that these programmes and measures have had in terms of ensuring equal remuneration for men and women and narrowing the wage gap.

Objective job evaluation. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Directorate-General of Fundamental Rights and Occupational Health and Safety will develop, with assistance from the Directorate for Socio-Economic and Labour Research, a method for objective job evaluation to compare different jobs and determine whether they have the same value. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the development of the job evaluation system.

Labour inspection. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Government of Canada has financed training for labour inspectors in Peru on fundamental labour rights, which has benefited 240 inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the training measures for the labour inspectorate relating to the implementation of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1970)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the Single Confederation of Workers of Peru (CUT) of 25 August 2010, which refer in particular to the adoption of various legal provisions which could result in indirect discrimination, namely: the Act on the promotion of the competitiveness, formalization and development of micro and small enterprises and access to decent work (Legislative Decree No. 1086); the Act approving the standards for the promotion of the agricultural sector (Act No. 27360); the Act establishing the new administrative services contract (Legislative Decree No. 1057); and the Domestic Workers Act No. 27986 which excludes the workers covered by that Act from certain benefits. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that not all inequalities necessarily constitute discrimination and that the schemes mentioned can be justified objectively and reasonably by the need to improve the regulatory framework, modernize the State and promote employment in small and medium-sized enterprises and that, in the case of domestic workers, the Act concerned aims to integrate these workers into the market. In order to assess the legal provisions mentioned in light of the provisions of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of these provisions and their impact in practice.

Equality between men and women at work. Policies, plans, programmes and application. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the implementation of the measures adopted, in particular on indicators and statistics, and on any new measures adopted under the Act on equal opportunities between men and women (Act No. 28983 of 2007), as well as on the participation of the social partners in the development and implementation of those measures. In this regard, the Committee notes the comments of the Chamber of Commerce of Lima (CCL) of 12 November 2010, transmitted by the Government, referring to the limited implementation of the Act on equal opportunities between men and women, which means that an assessment cannot be made of compliance with that Act. The Committee notes that the Government provides information on ministerial resolutions establishing compulsory indicators and targets in areas such as equality between men and women. In this regard, it indicates that 60 per cent of sectors have adopted or planned action in this area, including in particular: (1) action to strengthen the presence of women in managerial and decision-making positions; (2) measures relating to sexual harassment; and (3) measures on gender quotas. To date, 11 regional plans on equal opportunities between men and women have been adopted. In addition, Deputy Ministerial resolution No. 003-2009-IN-0103 was adopted by the Ministry of the Interior establishing the Observatory for Equal Opportunities between Men and Women and Ministerial resolution No. 052-2009-MIMDES was adopted by the Ministry for Women and Social Development issuing guidelines on the use of inclusive language. The Ministry of Economy and Finance, the Ministry of the Interior and contain bodies in the agricultural sector have drawn up plans and adopted measures on gender. In accordance with Directive No. 001-2008-IN-0908 of the Ministry of the Interior, which provides that women shall occupy no less than 25 per cent of managerial posts in the non-police state sector, the Government indicates that 41 of the 111 managerial posts are occupied by women, 19 per cent of the workforce of the police is composed of women and three women are in charge of police stations. The Government also includes statistics from the ministries and offices of the State. In the private sector, the “Building Peru” programme of the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion, has helped 100,000 women to gain access to temporary employment and training, projects involving women have been funded and enterprises managed by women have been established. The Government adds that the Working Group with Civil Society established on 31 May 2006 constitutes a forum for dialogue and collaboration between the State and civil society for the purposes of implementing and monitoring the National Plan on Equal Opportunities between Women and Men 2006–10, as well as the Act on equal opportunities. In this regard, the Committee notes from the information provided by the Government that, although some progress has been made, the participation of women in the public sector continues to be considerably lower than that of men. The Committee notes that the Government provides no information on the system of monitoring and following up on the Plan on Equal Opportunities between Men and Women or the Statistics Plan 2008–12 and the gender-based indicators established by the National Institute of Statistics and Computing, which were noted by the Committee in its previous observation and which would give a clearer picture of developments relating to gender equality in the country. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation and results of the system to follow up and monitor the Plan on Equal Opportunities and on the gender-based indicators, as well as on the reports prepared by the Observatory for Equal Opportunities between Women and Men of the Ministry of the Interior. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the National Plan and the regional plans on equal opportunities and their impact in practice in both the public and private sectors. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide its response to the comments of the Chamber of Commerce of Lima (CCL) and to continue taking the necessary measures to increase the participation of women in employment in both the public and private sectors.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1953)

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Work of equal value. The Committee recalls that it has for a number of years urged the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the legislation to guarantee equal remuneration for men and women not only for equal, the same or similar work, but also for work that is of a different nature but nevertheless of equal value. Such amendment is necessary given the restrictive interpretation given to section 135 of the Labor Code through the 1990 Rules implementing the Republic Act No. 6725, defining “work of equal value” to mean “activities, jobs, tasks, duties or services ... which are identical or substantially identical”. The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report does not provide any information in this regard. The Committee strongly urges the Government to take steps, without further delay, to amend section 135(a) of the Labor Code or section 5(a) of the 1990 Rules implementing the Republic Act No. 6725, in order to bring the legislation into full conformity with the Convention.

Article 2. Pay inequality in the public sector. The Committee notes the concerns raised by the Public Services Labor Independent Confederation (PSLINK) regarding the large pay gap between women and men in the public sector, a large proportion of which, according to PSLINK, can be attributed to discriminatory factors in the wage-setting process. PSLINK points particularly to occupational segregation, with women being concentrated in lower paid and undervalued jobs, and to inequalities in the Salary Standardization Law. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the causes and extent of the gender pay gap in the public sector, including any research, as well as statistics on the earnings of men and women in the public sector. Please indicate the steps taken or envisaged to address the pay gap in the public sector, including with regard to occupational segregation, and inequalities in the Salary Standardization Law.

Article 2(2)(b). Minimum wages. The Committee recalls its previous comments regarding the establishment of minimum wages, and noting that several establishments were reported for non-compliance with the general labour standard, including underpayment of minimum wages. The Committee also notes the communication from the Kilusang Mayo Uno Labor Center, dated 15 September 2008, which was forwarded to the Government, stating that many companies have been found to be violating the minimum wage law, particularly in industries where women predominate, such as garments, electronics and food manufacturing. The Committee notes further that the Kilusang Mayo Uno Labor Center indicates that mandatory wage orders are not being implemented and that the overtime rate actually paid is not based on the mandatory minimum wage. Moreover, the Committee refers to the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR) expressing concern that the minimum wage legislation does not apply to some important sectors, including government employment and export-oriented and labour-intensive manufacturing. The CESCR also notes that enforcement of the minimum wage legislation has been made difficult especially by the shortage of labour inspectors (E/C.12/PHL/CO/4, 1 December 2008, paragraph 22). The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the following:

- (i) the steps taken or envisaged to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is taken into account in the minimum wage-setting process;

- (ii) any steps taken or envisaged to extend the minimum wage legislation to cover other sectors, in particular sectors predominantly employing women;
- (iii) the detected violations of the national legislation on minimum wages and section 135(a) of the Labour Code by the labor inspectorate, including any remedies provided or sanctions imposed, and any relevant judicial decisions;
- (iv) the number of men and women respectively affected by the violation of the minimum wage legislation;
- (v) practical measures taken or envisaged to improve the enforcement of minimum wage legislation; and
- (vi) any measures taken to assist workers to enforce their rights to receive minimum wages.

Article 3. Objective job evaluation. The Committee notes with regret that for many years, the Government has not provided the information requested regarding the methods available to promote an objective evaluation of jobs, free from gender bias. The Committee must, therefore, once again, urge the Government to take measures to promote an objective evaluation of jobs, in order to be able to compare the value of different jobs, and to cooperate with employers' and workers' organizations in this regard. Please provide specific information in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1960)

Article 1 of the Convention. Equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Magna Carta of Women (Republic Act No. 9710), which came into force in 2009. The Magna Carta provides that the State shall: “refrain from discriminating against women and violating their rights; ... protect women against discrimination and from violations of their rights by private corporations, entities, and individuals; and ... promote and fulfil the rights of women in all spheres, including the rights to substantive equality and non-discrimination. The State shall fulfil these duties through law, policy, regulatory instruments, administrative guidelines, and other appropriate measures, including special temporary measures” (section 5). With respect to employment and opportunity, in section 2 of the Magna Carta, the State is to provide opportunities for women to enhance and develop their skills and acquire productive employment. Pursuant to section 11(f), the State is required to take measures to encourage women’s leadership in the private sector. Section 22 provides further that: “the State shall progressively realize and ensure decent work standards for women that involve the creation of jobs of acceptable quality in conditions of freedom, equity, security, and human dignity”. As the Magna Carta of Women is a framework law requiring specific laws, regulations and guidelines for the full implementation of many of the principles set out therein, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on any implementing measures taken or envisaged with respect to promoting equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, with a view to eliminating any discrimination against women in respect thereof, including by the newly established Philippine Commission of Women. Recalling its previous observation regarding the need to amend the Labour Code to ensure that women are protected against discrimination in all aspects of employment, including hiring, the Committee urges the Government to take the opportunity of the adoption of the Magna Carta to adopt the necessary legislation or amendments. Please also provide information on any measures taken in practice to prevent and address discrimination against women in access to employment, and the results achieved.

Application in the public sector. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that vacancies in the public sector are published in accordance with the Act requiring publication of existing vacant positions in government offices (Republic Act No. 7041 of 1991), to ensure transparency and equal opportunities in hiring. The Government also refers to item 2(2) of Memorandum Circular No. 3, series 2001, issued by the Civil Service Commission (CSC) which provides that “[t]here shall be no discrimination in the selection of employees on account of gender, civil status, disability, religion, ethnicity or political affiliation”. The Committee further notes from the Government’s report that, pursuant to Memorandum Circular No. 40, series 1998, a number of high-level positions are exempted from the publication requirement, including primarily confidential positions, positions which are policy determining, highly technical positions, other non-career positions and third-level positions. The Committee asks the Government to indicate how Republic Act No. 7041 and Memorandum Circular No. 3, as well as Resolution No. 98-463, to which the Committee referred in previous comments, are applied in practice, and their impact with respect to ensuring equal access to employment in the public sector, irrespective of race, colour, sex, religion, national extraction, political opinion and social origin. The Committee also requests information on the application of the principle of the Convention to the positions exempted from the publication requirement. As the Government provides very general information regarding the Merit Promotion Plans, the Committee also asks the Government to provide more specific information on how the Plans address discrimination and promote equality. Please also supply an illustrative sample of procedures and criteria provided in the Merit Promotion Plans, as well as a copy of the Omnibus Implementing Book V (Executive Order No. 292).

Gender equality in the public service. The Committee notes from the Government’s report that women represent 48.75 per cent of those employed in the public service, and are concentrated in second-level positions (78 per cent in 2007), while men are likely to be in executive or managerial positions. The Committee, furthermore, notes that a draft of the Memorandum Circular implementing the provisions of the Magna Carta of Women is under review by the CSC. In this connection, the Committee notes that section 11(a) of the Magna Carta of Women provides that the Government shall institute affirmative action mechanisms in order to increase incrementally the number of women in third-level positions in Government, to achieve a “50–50 gender balance” within the next five years. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the Magna Carta of Women in the public service, and particularly the measures taken to implement section 11(a). In this regard, the Committee recalls the importance of collecting statistical data disaggregated by sex in order to assess the impact of measures to advance gender equality in the public service, and it urges the Government to provide such information. Please also supply a copy of the draft of the Memorandum implementing the Magna Carta of Women. The Committee once again urges the Government to provide full details on the impact of Civil Service Resolution No. 99-0684 on the promotion of gender equality.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee recalls its previous observation which addressed the following issues: (1) Resolution No. 162 adopted by the Government on 25 February 2000 which contains a list of industries, occupations and work from which women are excluded; (2) the enforcement of the Labour Code’s non-discrimination provisions; (3) equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women; and (4) equality of opportunity and treatment of ethnic minorities and indigenous peoples.

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2010. In its conclusions, the Conference Committee raised concerns regarding Resolution No. 162 of 25 February 2000 which excludes women from being employed in 456 occupations and 38 branches of industry, and section 253 of the Labour Code, which provides that the employment of women in arduous work and work in harmful or dangerous conditions shall be limited. The Conference Committee noted that Resolution No. 162 and section 253 of the Labour Code went beyond protecting women’s reproductive health and broadly restricted their access to occupations and sectors that involve equal health and safety risks to men and women, and it urged the Government to take steps to revise section 253 of the Labour Code and Resolution No. 162 to ensure that any limitations on the work that can be undertaken by women are not based on stereotyped perceptions regarding their capacity and role in society and are strictly limited to measures to protect maternity. The Conference Committee asked the Government to ensure that the planned review of the existing system of health and safety protection addressed the need to provide a safe and healthy working environment for both men and women, and one that would not lead to measures hindering women’s participation in the labour market. The Conference Committee also asked the Government to take measures to address the legal and practical barriers to women’s access to the broadest possible range of sectors and industries, as well as at all levels of responsibility, and it urged the Government to take measures, through tripartite consultation, to ensure non-discrimination and promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation for all groups protected under the Convention, including ethnic minorities. Such measures should include strengthening the legal framework, which should address direct and indirect discrimination and the burden of proof, and provide for effective remedies in discrimination cases. The strengthening and establishment of appropriate mechanisms to promote, analyse and monitor equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation should also be part of these measures.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received, despite the fact that the Conference Committee expressly requested the Government to include in its report to the Committee of Experts complete information replying to all the matters raised by the Conference Committee and the Committee of Experts, including relevant statistical information disaggregated by sex. In these circumstances, the Committee urges the Government to make every effort to reply to its previous comments, as well as to the conclusions of the Conference Committee.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1980)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 13/2009 of 27 May 2009 regulating labour in Rwanda. It notes that the new Act refers to the present Convention in its Preamble and that it contains a definition of the expression “work of equal value” (section 1.9). However, it notes that this definition is too narrow to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention since it refers to “similar work”, and further, that the new Act contains no substantial provisions prescribing “equal remuneration for work of equal value”. Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Government mentions in its report article 11 of the Constitution which prohibits any discrimination in general, and notes that article 37 of the Constitution specifies that “every person having equal competence and capacity shall have the right, without any discrimination, to equal pay for equal work”.

Referring to its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has not taken the opportunity to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value within the meaning of the Convention.

While it is important to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex in employment, this is not sufficient to ensure the full application of the principle of equal remuneration pursuant to the Convention. Referring to its general observation of 2006, in which it clarifies the meaning of the concept of “work of equal value” under the Convention, the Committee would like to stress that, whilst this concept encompasses the concept of “equal”, “the same” and “similar” work it also goes beyond that because it encompasses work which is of an entirely different nature but which is nevertheless of equal value. The concept of “work of equal value” therefore allows for a much broader comparison to be made between jobs performed by men and women in different places or sectors, or between different employers. It therefore allows pay discrimination to be combated more effectively where men and women traditionally perform work that is of an entirely different nature but which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value as set out in the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1981)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Legislative developments. Scope of protection of workers against discrimination. The Committee notes that section 12 of Act No. 13/2009 of 27 May 2009 regulating labour in Rwanda extends the protection afforded to workers covered from all the grounds of discrimination prohibited under Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention as well as from other grounds (Article 1(1)(b)). Section 12 of that Act prohibits any discrimination, either directly or indirectly, in the course of employment intended to deprive workers of equality of opportunity and treatment where such discrimination is based on: (1) race, colour, origin; (2) sex, marital status or family responsibilities; (3) religion, beliefs or political opinions; (4) social or economic conditions; (5) national extraction; (6) handicap; (7) previous, current or prospective pregnancy; and (8) any other form of discrimination. The Committee also notes that the new Act establishes general penalties in the case of the violation of its provisions (section 169), namely two months’ imprisonment and/or a fine of 50,000 to 300,000 Rwandan francs. It notes, however, that, in the French version of the Act at least, direct or indirect discrimination is prohibited only “during the course of employment” and that this prohibition does not therefore cover all stages of employment and occupation, particularly recruitment. The Committee also notes that section 12 appears to prohibit acts done with an intention to deny equality of opportunity and treatment, which would be more restrictive than the definition of discrimination set out in Article 1 of the Convention under which intent is not required. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to prohibit discrimination during access to employment or to an occupation. It also requests the Government to clarify whether intent is required for an act to constitute discrimination under section 12 of Act No. 13/2009. The Government is also requested to provide information on the application of section 12 of the Act, in practice and to specify, in particular, whether any appeals have been lodged on the basis of any one of the prohibited grounds of discrimination and whether penalties have been imposed under section 169 of that Act.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 59/2008 of 10 September 2008 on the prevention and punishment of gender-based violence, section 24 of which establishes punitive measures in the case of “sexual harassment of a subordinate” imposed on “any employer or any other person who uses his or her position to harass a subordinate by way of orders, intimidation and terror for the purpose of sexual pleasure”. It also notes the inclusion in Act No. 13/2009, of provisions prohibiting “gender-based violence” in employment (section 9), that is “any act of a physical, psychological or sexual nature directed at a person or likely to damage their property on the grounds of their sex” which “infringes their rights and affects their integrity”. Section 9 of Act No. 13/2009 also prohibits moral harassment at work, either directly or indirectly, which is defined as “any act of harassment at work of any origin, either external or internal to the enterprise, which manifests itself in particular through behaviour, words, intimidation or anonymous written communications designed to have an adverse effect on the dignity of a worker in the workplace, endanger his or her job and constitute an obstacle to his or her work”. The Committee welcomes the adoption of these new legislative provisions which, when combined, appear to cover the two essential elements of sexual harassment at work as defined in its 2002 general observation, namely: (1) any physical, verbal or non-verbal conduct of a sexual nature and other conduct based on sex affecting the dignity of women and men, which is unwelcome, unreasonable and offensive to the recipient; and a person’s rejection of, or submission to, such conduct is used explicitly or implicitly as a basis for a decision which affects that person’s job (quid pro quo); and (2) conduct that creates an intimidating, hostile or humiliating working environment for the recipient (hostile work environment). However, in order to ensure adequate protection for men and women workers and to clarify the legal regime applicable to this discriminatory practice, the Committee requests the Government to consider taking the necessary measures to adopt a clear and precise definition of sexual harassment in the workplace, ensuring that this definition covers both quid pro quo and the creation of a hostile working environment. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to prevent this form of gender-based discrimination in the workplace, particularly in the context of the national gender policy adopted in 2004 (education programmes, awareness-raising campaigns on preventive measures and appeal mechanisms, etc.).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report contains no reply to its previous comments. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its previous observation, which read as follows:

Definition of remuneration. The Committee recalls the absence of a definition of the term “remuneration” in the Equality of Opportunity and Treatment in Employment and Occupation Act, 2000, which provides for equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee notes the Government’s reply that the new Labour Code, which was the subject of final consultations with the social partners in 2008, will contain a broader definition of remuneration in accordance with Article 1(a) of the Convention. Noting the Government’s statement that it is moving forward to giving effect to the new Labour Code, the Committee asks the Government to confirm that the new Labour Code has been adopted and has entered into force, and that it defines “remuneration” in accordance with the Convention. Please also provide a copy of the Labour Code. The Committee also asks the Government to confirm that the term “remuneration” as used in the Equality of Opportunity and Treatment in Employment and Occupation Act is to be understood as defined in the new Labour Code.

Different wages and benefits for women and men. The Committee recalls that the Contracts of Service Act provides for different ages for men and women with respect to entitlement to severance pay. It also recalls its previous comments regarding the existence of certain laws and regulations establishing differential wage rates for men and women, contrary to the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that the differences in ages between men and women with regard to severance pay have been corrected in the new Labour Code. Recalling the Government’s previous statements that the Contracts of Service Act would be revoked with the adoption of the new Labour Code, the Committee asks the Government to confirm that all legislation containing wage differentials for men and women, including the Contracts of Service Act, has been revoked.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1978)

Article 1 of the Convention. Work of equal value. For a number of years, the Committee has expressed the hope that full legislative expression would be given to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee noted in previous comments that the new Labour Code, 2006, contained no reference to equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee therefore notes with satisfaction the adoption on 18 September 2010 of Ministerial Order No. 2370/1, providing that “any discrimination in wages shall be prohibited between male and female workers for work of equal value”. The Order is made pursuant to section 243 of the Labour Code which provides for the issuing of implementing decisions and regulations, and makes specific reference to the ratification of Convention No. 100 and to the pursuit of social justice. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the application in practice of Ministerial Order No. 2370/1.

Sierra Leone

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Lack of national policy. The Committee regrets that the Government does not provide any new information in respect to the Convention’s application. Since Sierra Leone has ratified the Convention, the Government has consistently reported that no legislative or administrative regulation or other measures existed to give effect to the provisions of the Convention and the Government has failed to provide information on any measures taken in this regard. In its latest report the Government repeats the general statement that it had a broad-based policy which ensured jobs for all who apply and are willing to work, regardless of sex, religion, ethnicity or political opinion. The Committee is therefore bound to recall that under the Convention, Sierra Leone has the obligation to declare and pursue a national policy designed to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of employment and occupation, with a view to eliminating discrimination regarding vocational training, access to employment and particular occupations, as well as terms and conditions of employment.

In connection with the above, the Committee recalls that articles 7 to 9 of the 1991 Constitution establish economic, social and educational objectives for the State that potentially promote the application of the Convention. Article 15 guarantees the right to equal protection of the law irrespective of race, tribe, place of origin, political opinion, colour, creed or sex, and article 27 of the Constitution provides constitutional protection from discrimination. The Committee considers that these provisions may be an important element of a national equality policy in line with the Convention, but recalls that provisions affirming the principles of equality and non-discrimination in itself cannot constitute such a policy. As stated in the Committee’s 1988 General Survey on the Convention, the national policy on equality of opportunity and treatment should be clearly stated and should be applied in practice, presupposing state implementation measures in line with the principles set out in Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention and Paragraph 2 of the accompanying Recommendation No. 111.

While being aware of the many challenges the Government is facing in the process of consolidating peace, the Committee encourages the Government to give serious consideration to the application of the Convention in law and practice as an integral part of its efforts to promote peace and social and economic stability. The Government is requested to provide information on measures taken or envisaged to promote and ensure equal access to technical and vocational training, public and private employment, as well as equal terms and conditions of employment, including through educational programmes and cooperation with employers’ and workers’ organizations. The Committee also reiterates its previous requests to the Government to provide information in particular on the measures taken to ensure equality in employment and occupation between women and men and among members of the different ethnic groups.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Slovakia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Work of equal value. The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it noted that section 119(3) of the Labour Code, which provided for equal wages for work of an equal level of complexity, responsibility and difficulty, performed under the "same working conditions and upon achievement of the same efficiency and work results", had been amended in 2007 to guarantee "equal wages for men and women for equal work or work of equal value". The Committee notes that section 119(2) of the Labour Code, as amended in 2007 by Act No. 348/2007 Coll., now states that women and men have the right to equal pay for like work or work of equal value, which is considered as work of the same or comparable complexity, responsibility and arduousness, performed in the same or comparable working conditions, producing the same or comparable productivity and results for the same employer. Furthermore, section 119(3) states that if a system of job evaluation is being used, this must be based on the same criteria for men and women without sex discrimination; the employer may use other objectively measurable criteria in addition to those given in paragraph 2 if they can be applied to all employees without regard to sex. The Committee asks the Government to confirm that the wording "comparable working conditions, productivity and results" permit a comparison between jobs performed by men and women that are of an entirely different nature but nevertheless of equal value. It also asks the Government to provide copies of judicial decisions concerning the application of section 119 of the Labour Code, and in particular those decisions which show how the courts have interpreted the wording "comparable working conditions, productivity and results".

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Sudan

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1970)

Absence of conditions to ensure protection against discrimination in employment and occupation. For a number of years, the Committee has been expressing serious concern at the human rights situation in the country, in particular in Darfur. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed its profound regret at the Government's persistent general statements that no discrimination exists in Sudan. It urged the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that all population groups in Darfur, including the Fur, Maasaalit and Zaghawa tribes, could exercise their occupations free from discrimination, irrespective of ethnic origin or political opinion, and that the right to non-discrimination for all population groups, including the establishment of adequate and effective dispute resolution and complaints mechanisms, was effectively enforced.

The Committee notes the Government's acknowledgement in its report that there is no society without discrimination and therefore continued measures are required to eliminate it. The Government further indicates that it is planning to undertake consultations with the social partners and other parties concerned in order to determine whether discrimination in employment and occupation exists in Darfur and, if so, how to eliminate it, including through the establishment of a conflict resolution mechanism, a national human rights commissioner and a human rights commissioner in southern Sudan.

The Committee however is deeply concerned that, according to the report of the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in the Sudan for the period May–August 2010, the general human rights situation in the country has deteriorated, including due to a pattern of political repression with severe restrictions on political and civil rights. Furthermore, in Darfur, inter-communal conflicts intensified, resulting in large numbers of casualties and significant population displacement, and women and young girls continued to experience gender and sexual-based violence. The Independent Expert also pointed out the existence of widespread human rights abuses, inter-communal conflicts and the weakness of the judicial system, resulting in widespread impunity in southern Sudan (A/HRC/15/CRP.1). The Committee notes that in southern Sudan, according to the Independent Expert's statement following his first visit in 2010, human rights commissioners have been appointed and the Human Rights Commission is fully functional. In November 2010, the Southern Sudan Human Rights Commission emphasized the need to put in place effective mechanisms to address human rights issues, particularly those associated with gender rights, and urged the relevant institutions, civil society and the media to assist the Commission in educating the public to defend human rights and to monitor compliance thereof.

Deeply concerned by the worsening of the human rights situation throughout the country, particularly in Darfur, the Committee once again urges the Government to take immediate measures to create the necessary conditions to ensure effective protection against discrimination for all members of the population, including the Fur, Maasaalit and Zaghawa tribes, with respect to the exercise of their occupations without distinction based on any of the grounds set out in the Convention, as well as measures to reinforce the capacities of the judicial and supervisory authorities. In this respect, the Committee further urges the Government to ensure the establishment and effective functioning of the National Commission of Human Rights, and to provide information on its action and on the measures taken by the Southern Sudan Human Rights Commission that give effect to the provisions of the Convention. Finally, the Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on the consultations to be held with workers' and employers' organizations to assess the extent to which discrimination occurs in employment and occupation and on any conclusions reached and follow-up action taken.

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Prohibited grounds of discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee recalled that article 31 of the Interim Constitution of the Republic of Sudan 2005 provided for equal protection under the law for all persons without discrimination based on the grounds set out in the Convention, except social origin. It also recalled the absence of a provision in the 1997 Labour Code of the Republic of Sudan explicitly prohibiting discrimination on the grounds set out in the Convention with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation, whereas such a provision was included in the Southern Sudan draft Labour Act (section 10(1) and (2)). Noting that the Government reiterates its statement that it will take into account the Committee's comments when revising the Interim Constitution 2005 and the Labour Code of 1997, the Committee once again requests that concrete steps be taken to insert provisions in the final Constitution and the Labour Code in order to ensure that all workers are protected against discrimination based on all the grounds set out in the Convention and with respect to all aspects of employment, including vocational training, access to employment and to particular occupations, and terms and conditions of employment. Please also provide information with respect to the adoption of the Southern Sudan draft Labour Act.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Syrian Arab Republic

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1957)

Legislative developments. The Committee notes the adoption of a new Labour Law (No. 17/2010), section 75(a) of which provides that the employer shall apply the principle of “equal pay for work of equal value” to all workers without any discrimination, including discrimination based on gender. Section 75(b) then defines “work of equal value” as “work that requires equal scientific qualifications and professional skills, as attested by a work experience certificate”. While welcoming the specific reference to “work of equal value” in the new Labour Law, the Committee is concerned that the definition in section 75(b) may unduly restrict the application of section 75(a), as it does not appear to allow a comparison of jobs requiring different qualifications and skills, which are nonetheless of equal value. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of section 75 of the new Labour Law, including any administrative or judicial decisions. Please also provide specific information regarding the scope of comparison permitted under section 75(b), and in particular whether it is possible to compare jobs of an entirely different nature, requiring different qualifications and skills, to determine whether they are of equal value under section 75(a).

Application in practice. The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no information in response to its previous observations regarding concrete measures taken to determine the nature, extent and causes of inequalities in remuneration that exist in practice, in order to identify specific measures to address these inequalities. The Committee once again urges the Government to undertake studies to determine the nature, extent and causes of inequalities in remuneration existing in practice between men and women for work of equal value in the public and private sectors, and to identify specific measures to address these inequalities. Please also provide full information on the occupational classification system referred to in the previous report, including information on the criteria used to ensure that this classification system is free from gender bias.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1960)

Legislative developments. The Committee notes with interest that the new Labour Law (No. 17/2010), unlike the Labour Code of 1959 which it repeals, contains specific provisions addressing equality of opportunity and treatment, and protection against discrimination including, in keeping with Article 1(1)(b) of the Convention, grounds going beyond Article 1(1)(a). In particular, section 2(a) of the Law provides that it is prohibited to breach or infringe the principle of equal opportunity or equal treatment, for any reason whatsoever, “in particular, to discriminate against workers on the basis of race, colour, gender, marital status, belief, political opinion, trade union membership, nationality, extraction, clothing or dress style, in employment, work organization, vocational training, wages, promotion, entitlement to social benefits, disciplinary measures and actions, or dismissal”. Section 95 further provides that workers have the “right to equal opportunity, equal treatment and non-discrimination”. The Committee welcomes the adoption of the equality and non-discrimination provisions of Labour Law No. 17/2010, and asks the Government to provide information on the application of the relevant provisions in practice, including any relevant administrative or judicial decisions. Please provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to promote the implementation of the new non-discrimination provisions, as well as any relevant follow-up under the five-year plan and the Decent Work Country Programme, and their impact on promoting the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation.

Restricting women's access to employment. The Committee notes the Government's reference to a special order relating to women's employment, which lists the tasks, industries and occupations in which women may be employed and those prohibited for women, which was not annexed to the report as indicated. The Committee notes that, pursuant to section 120 of the new Labour Law, "the Minister shall determine, by ministerial decision, such activities, instances and circumstances where women shall be allowed to perform night work, as well as harmful, immoral and other activities prohibited for women". In this connection, the Committee recalls its previous comments stressing the need to repeal protective measures for women which are based on stereotyped perceptions regarding their capacity and role in society. With regard to section 139 of the Personal Status Act respecting child custody and limiting the right of female custodians to work, the Committee notes the Government's indication that no statistical information exists on the number of women who have left work to have custody of their children. The Committee asks the Government to take steps to ensure that protective measures for women which exclude women from certain tasks, jobs or occupations, or limit their access thereto, are limited to maternity protection. It requests the Government to supply a copy of the special order to which it refers in its report, as well as any ministerial decisions taken pursuant to section 120 of the new Labour Law. Recalling its previous comments on employment restrictions imposed on female custodians, the Committee also requests the Government to take steps to amend section 139 of the Personal Status Act.

Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women in employment and occupation. The Committee recalls its previous comments noting the various measures taken to address traditional stereotypes concerning women's role in society hindering their participation in the labour market. Noting that the Government's report contains no information regarding its previous observation on this matter and having regard to the importance of effectively addressing occupational gender segregation in the public and private sectors to ensure equal opportunities for women and men in employment and occupation, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the following:

- (i) the measures taken or envisaged, and the results achieved, to address the obstacles to women's access to the labour market and the persistent occupational gender segregation, including promoting women's access to a wider range of occupations and increasing their chances of career advancement in both the public and private sectors;
- (ii) specific measures to address traditional views and stereotypical assumptions that may exist regarding women's aspirations, preferences, capabilities and "suitability" for certain jobs;
- (iii) how the National Strategy for Women (2006–10) and the measures taken or envisaged to implement it have addressed occupational gender segregation; and
- (iv) detailed statistical information on the distribution of men and women in the different economic sectors, occupational categories and positions in order to have an appreciation of the progress made in applying the Convention.

Access of women to education and vocational training. Noting that the Government's report provides no new information regarding the access of women to education and vocational training courses traditionally dominated by men, the Committee recalls the importance of collecting and analysing relevant data in order to allow the Government and the Committee to assess the progress made over time in achieving a balanced representation of men and women in education and vocational training. The Committee requests the Government to provide specific information on the following:

- (i) measures taken to promote women's access to a broader range of educational and vocational training courses, including those traditionally dominated by men;
- (ii) the extent to which women undertaking vocational training and attending university are able to find appropriate employment;
- (iii) statistical data, disaggregated by sex, on participation in training courses and vocational training centres, and in the various university programmes.

Enforcement. The Committee notes that the non-discrimination provision in section 2 of the new Labour Law provides that workers have the right to claim compensation for material and moral damage sustained before the competent court. Pursuant to section 204 of the new Labour Law, a worker or employer may bring a dispute regarding the application of the Law to the competent court. It also notes that section 249 provides that every inspector shall monitor the enforcement of the Law "in connection with working conditions and protection of workers at work", and that they have the authority to take action against employers who violate the law, including referring the matter to the court. The Committee recalls its concerns regarding the vulnerability of certain groups, particularly ethnic minority Kurds and Bedouins, despite the existence of legislative protection, and notes that in response to its previous comments concerning difficulties encountered by some groups of the population in lodging complaints, the Government indicates that natural persons have the right to institute legal proceedings against any public official or private person if their rights are jeopardized. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to increase knowledge and understanding of the objectives of the Convention and of the relevant legal provisions of the new Labour Law providing for equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation and non-discrimination, including among ethnic minority Kurds and Bedouins, and to provide specific information in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information regarding the following:

- (i) the measures taken or envisaged to raise awareness of the labour inspectorate and judges regarding discrimination in employment and occupation against ethnic minorities;
- (ii) the measures taken, through surveys or otherwise, to undertake an evaluation of the effectiveness of the complaints procedures, including any difficulties encountered by women or men, including from minority groups, in seeking judicial remedies with regard to cases of discrimination on the basis of all the grounds covered by the Convention;
- (iii) the activities of the labour inspectorate relevant to equality of opportunity and treatment and non-discrimination, including any complaints received or violations detected, the sanctions imposed and the remedies provided.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

Equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women. Legislative developments. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Framework Law on State Guarantees of Equal Rights for Men and Women and Equal Opportunities in the Exercise of such Rights, No. 89 of 1 March 2005. It notes that the Law defines and prohibits discrimination based on sex in any sphere (sections 1 and 3), and provides for the obligation of public authorities to ensure gender equality (section 4). The Law further includes provisions concerning state guarantees regarding equal opportunities between men and women in the sphere of education and science (section 6) and in the state service (Chapter 3). Equal opportunities in the socio-economic sphere (Chapter 4) include measures aimed at advancing gender equality in labour relations (section 13), provisions placing on the employer the burden of proof to demonstrate the lack of intent to discriminate (section 14), measures aimed at ensuring gender equality in the mass termination of employees (section 15) and measures ensuring equal opportunities of men and women in collective contracts and agreements (section 16). Finally, the Law includes certain provisions aimed at assisting workers with family responsibilities (section 7). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation in practice of the Framework Law on State Guarantees of Equal Rights for Men and Women and Equal Opportunities in the Exercise of such Rights, No. 89 of 1 March 2005, including on the manner in which violations of its provisions are being addressed.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Assessment of the gender pay gap. The Committee notes from the statistical data provided by the Government that in 2007 women earned 80.3 per cent of men's monthly income (average and median), which amounts to a gender pay gap of 19.7 per cent. It is concerned that this gap was considerably higher than in 2006, where it was 14.8 per cent (2005 – 15.8 per cent; 2004 – 16.4 per cent). In 2007, the gender wage gap was highest in the occupational group of service and sales workers (47 per cent) and legislators, senior officials and managers (39.4 per cent). The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to address the apparently widening gender pay gap. It also asks the Government to continue to provide detailed statistical information on the earnings of men and women according to occupational group and industry, as well as on an hourly basis, if possible.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislation. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning the Equal Opportunity Act, 2000, which prohibits discrimination in employment, including in respect of remuneration. However, the Act contains no specific provisions regarding equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Recalling its previous comments on this matter, as well as its 2006 general observation, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on any measures taken to give full legislative expression to the Convention's principle.

Collective agreements. The Committee previously asked the Government to provide information on the progress made in removing sex discriminatory provisions from collective agreements. Noting that the Government has not yet replied to this request, the Committee asks the Government to provide this information in its next report. It also asks the Government to provide the report of the Joint Working Party on Reclassification regarding all the jobs in the bargaining unit represented by the National Union of Government and Federated Workers, which has still not been received by the ILO.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1970)

Legislation. The Committee recalls that the Equal Opportunity Act which set up an Equal Opportunity Commission and an Equal Opportunities Tribunal was declared unconstitutional by the High Court of Trinidad and Tobago in May 2004. In its report, the Government indicates that the decision of the High Court was appealed and that the Court of Appeal delivered its judgement on 26 January 2006, upholding the decision of the High Court. A further appeal was made to the Privy Council (No. 84 of 2006) which delivered its judgement on 15 October 2007. The Privy Council overturned the decision of the Court of Appeal, ruling that the creation of the Equal Opportunity Tribunal by the Act is not unconstitutional. The Committee notes that the members of the Equal Opportunity Commission were appointed in April 2008 and that the Government is preparing for the setting up of the Equal Opportunity Tribunal. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on further developments with regard to the establishment and functioning of the Equal Opportunity Commission and Tribunal, and the implementation and enforcement of the Equal Opportunity Act.

The Committee recalls its longstanding comments expressing concern about the discriminatory nature of the provisions of several government regulations, which provide that married female officers may have their employment terminated if family obligations affect their efficient performance of duties (section 57 of the Public Service Commission Regulations; section 52 of the Police Commission Regulations; and section 58 of the Statutory Authorities' Service Commission Regulation). It also noted that a female officer who marries must report the fact of her marriage to the Public Service Commission (section 14(2) of the Civil Service Regulations). With respect to section 14(2) of the Civil Service Regulations, the Committee had taken note of the Government's view that this provision is not considered discriminatory in Trinidad and Tobago, as it is an administrative matter related to the practice of women changing their names upon marriage. However, in order to avoid the potential discriminatory impact of such a provision on women, the Committee had suggested that the Civil Service Regulations be amended to require notification of name change of both men and women. The Committee notes the Government's statement that steps are being taken to have the relevant regulations amended in accordance with the Committee's comments. Noting the statement of the Government and given the serious nature of the matter, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary action to bring the regulations concerned into conformity with the Convention, and to indicate in its next report the specific steps taken, the progress, if any, made or any difficulties encountered in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tunisia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. National policy relating to discrimination on grounds other than sex. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has once again failed to provide any details on the measures adopted to combat discrimination on grounds of race, colour, national extraction, religion, political opinion and social origin in the context of a national policy of equality of opportunity and treatment. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its indication that under article 6 of the Constitution all Tunisians have the same rights and the same duties and are equal before the law. It also notes the Government's indication that the competent services of the Ministry of Employment and the Vocational Integration of Youth have not reported any case of discrimination based on race, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin in relation to employment and occupation, and that no complaints have been registered by the administrative services or the courts.

The Committee once again reminds the Government that constitutional provisions providing for equal protection under law are not sufficient in themselves to ensure the full application of the Convention. Similarly, the fact that the authorities have not received any complaints does not mean that there is no discrimination in the country. The Committee considers that this may on the other hand indicate that the victims either have an inadequate knowledge of the relevant legal provisions and dispute resolution procedures available, or fear possible reprisals by the employer. The Committee also wishes to emphasize once again that Article 2 of the Convention requires the Government to declare and pursue a national policy designed to promote equality of opportunity and treatment with a view to eliminating any discrimination in employment and occupation on the basis of the criteria set out in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to:

- (i) consider in the context of a national policy of equality of opportunity and treatment adopting legislation explicitly prohibiting discrimination based on race, colour, national extraction, religion, political opinion or social origin, and to take concrete measures to eliminate such discrimination in practice;
- (ii) take measures to raise awareness in the public and among the social partners of the principles set out in the Convention and the legal provisions relating to equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation;
- (iii) take measures, for example in the form of studies, to evaluate the effectiveness of dispute resolution procedures, including any difficulties of a practical nature encountered by men or women workers in obtaining legal redress for discrimination based on any of the grounds set out in the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to taken the necessary action in the near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Training and awareness raising. In its previous observation, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on any measures taken to promote awareness and understanding of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value as set out in the Convention and section 5(4) of the Labour Act, among relevant target groups, including labour inspectors. In its report, the Government provides information on a number of activities and projects aimed at the promotion of gender equality more generally and greater access to employment for women. However, the information does not indicate whether any specific activities were undertaken to promote understanding and awareness of the principles of the Convention. In this context, the Committee notes that according to the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İS), inadequate supervision by the labour administration is one of the reasons for unequal pay between men and women. The Committee hopes that the Government, in consultation with the workers' and employers' organizations, will carry out training and awareness-raising activities specifically addressing equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value among relevant target groups, including labour inspectors, and asks it to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

Labour inspection. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there is currently no system for classifying infringements identified by the labour inspectorate according to the related provisions of the labour legislation. However, it indicates that a new system is to be established allowing for such a classification. The Committee welcomes this information and hopes that the new system will allow the labour inspectors to establish data on the number, nature and outcome of infringements of section 5(4) with regard to equal remuneration of men and women for work of equal value. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the number, nature and outcomes of the cases addressed by the labour inspectorate under section 5(4) of the Labour Code, as soon as possible.

Article 3 of the Convention. Objective job evaluation. The Committee notes that the Government has provided no information in reply to its previous comments on the issue of objective job evaluation. However, it welcomes the information provided by the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TISK) on the use of objective job evaluation systems by its affiliates. For instance, the Metal Industry Job Classification System (MIDS) examines jobs on the basis of twelve factors which are classified under four main factors, namely dexterity, responsibility, effort and working conditions. In 2007, the Union of Turkish Metal Industrialists organized seminars for heads of human resources departments in four cities with a view to making the MIDS known, and assessing problems in its application and possible solutions to them. The Committee asks the Government once again to provide information on any steps it is taking to promote objective job evaluation as envisaged in Article 3 of the Convention, both in the private and public sectors, including information on any measures taken to ensure that equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is made an explicit objective of job evaluation.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's report, as well as the comments made by the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TISK) and the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ), which were attached to the report.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Discrimination based on political opinion. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning the application of the Anti-Terrorism Act or the Penal Code in cases involving journalists, writers and publishers expressing their political opinions. Noting that the Government has provided no information, the Committee requests the Government once again to provide information on the number and outcomes of cases against journalists, writers and publishers, including a brief summary of the facts and specific charges brought. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken, including legislative measures, to ensure that no journalist, writer or publisher is restricted in the exercise of their employment or occupation because of political opinions expressed by them.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment for women and men. The Committee notes from ILO statistical data that the rate of economically active women (15 years of age and more) further declined to 24.5 per cent in 2008 (24.8 per cent in 2005). By comparison the activity rate for men was 70.1 per cent in 2008 (72.2 per cent in 2005). The Committee notes that between 2001 and 2008 there was a decline of economic activity of women younger than 20 years of age and of women older than 45 years of age. The decline of economic activity of younger women, which coincides with their increasing participation in education, has translated into some increases of economic activity of women between 20 and 45 years of age. The Committee notes that according to the Government's report the enrolment rate of girls in secondary school was 55.8 per cent in 2007–08, compared to 61.1 per cent for boys for the same period.

The Committee welcomes progress towards equal opportunities of men and women in education, but notes with concern the continuing overall low level of participation of women in the labour market, and particularly the decline of the activity rate of women older than 45 years of age. In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to promote equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women in employment and occupation. The Committee notes that the Government's report refers to the equal treatment provisions of the Constitution, the Labour Code and the regulations governing active labour market programmes; that 13,123 unemployed women and 30,418 unemployed men have participated in training courses and integration programs organized by the Turkish National Employment Agency; the preparation of legislative amendments regarding paternity leave which the Committee already noted in 2007; and efforts to analyse the situation of women in the labour market in the context of the European Employment Strategy. The Committee notes that the Government has provided very little information on practical and promotional measures to promote women's equality of opportunity and treatment in practice and that no information was provided on the follow-up to the Women's Employment Summit held in Istanbul in 2006, or any related collaboration with workers' and employers' organizations. The TISK refers to 24 projects to assist unemployed women and youth to acquire vocational skills and experience submitted in April 2008 under a scheme financed by the European Union. The TISK also states that as a corollary to the National Employment Strategy the National Employment Policy for Women needs to be implemented. TÜRK-İŞ considers that the vocational training institutions at the provincial level did not function satisfactorily. Noting that overcoming the persisting inequality between men and women in the labour market will require proactive policies and measures, the Committee requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the practical measures or projects implemented to promote women's equal opportunities and treatment in employment and occupation, including specific measures targeting women in rural areas and women over 45 years of age. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken to follow up on the 2006 Women's Employment Summit, including the steps taken to cooperate with the social partners. Further, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide detailed statistical information on the situation of men and women in the labour market, including their participation in the various sectors and occupations.

In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide an assessment of the impact of the current prohibition for university students to wear head coverings on the participation in higher education of women wishing to wear headscarves out of religious obligation or conviction. In this regard, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the number of female students expelled from universities for wearing headscarves on university premises. In reply to these comments, the Government indicates that it was not in a position to provide such information. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it has pointed out that, while the existing prohibition of head coverings includes all forms of coverings and applies to men and women, this measure may have a discriminatory effect on women with regard to their access to university education. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to obtain and provide information on the number of female students expelled from universities for wearing headscarves on university premises, and to report on the measures taken to assess and review this matter.

Articles 1, 2 and 3. Legal protection from discrimination in respect of recruitment and selection. The Committee recalls that section 5(1) of the Labour Code prohibits any discrimination based on language, race, sex, political opinion, philosophical belief, religion and sect or similar reasons in the employment relationship. In its previous comments the Committee has concluded that this provision does not prohibit discrimination at the recruitment stage. However, the Committee has noted that section 122 of the Turkish Penal Code, which entered into force in 2005, provides that a person, practising discrimination on grounds of language, race, colour, sex, disability, political opinion, philosophical beliefs, religion, creed or other grounds, who makes the employment of a person contingent on one of these grounds or who prevents a person from carrying out an ordinary economic activity shall be sentenced to imprisonment for a term of six months to one year or a judicial fine. The Committee notes that as indicated by the Government there has been one case invoking section 122 of the Penal Code. Recalling that under the Convention, there is an obligation to address discrimination in respect of access to employment, including recruitment and selection, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number, nature and outcome of criminal proceedings under section 122 of the Penal Code to allow the Committee to ascertain whether effective protection from discrimination at the recruitment stage is available under the existing legislation. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether persons considering themselves victims of discrimination in recruitment can bring complaints under section 122 of the Penal Code and whether they can obtain compensation or other remedies.

Enforcement of section 5 of the Labour Code. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that according to trade union comments it had received, discrimination continues to occur in practice, despite the equal treatment clause set out in section 5 of the Labour Code. In reply to the Committee's request for information on the measures taken by the labour inspectorate to monitor compliance with these provisions, the Government generally states that compliance with section 5 is being considered in the context of inspections and that an individual application can trigger an inspection. However, the data provided do not indicate whether any of the inspections carried out or fines imposed involved issues under section 5 of the Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on whether the labour inspectorate has dealt with any cases under section 5 of the Labour Code and it reiterates its request to the Government to indicate whether the courts have decided any such cases. Please indicate the number, nature and outcome of such cases.

Articles 1, 2 and 3(d). Application of the Convention in the civil service. The Committee recalls the concerns expressed by the Confederation of Public Employees Trade Unions (KESK) that the legislation covering public employees was lacking non-discrimination provisions, indicating that the general protection against discrimination based on sex available under article 10 of the Constitution was insufficient. The KESK referred to instances of discriminatory job announcements and unequal access of women to managerial positions in the civil service. In reply to the Committee's previous comments regarding this matter, the Government states that civil servants are nominated according to the result of a centralized examination throughout the country. Interviews are only conducted for a limited number of positions, which, in the Government's view, reduce the possibility of discrimination. Further, the Government asserts that there is no gender discrimination as regards appointment to higher level positions. While noting this information, the Committee trusts that the Government will take swift action to address any allegations of discrimination in the civil service. It also requests the Government to provide detailed statistical information on the participation of men and women in the examinations for different branches and positions in the civil service, the actual number of appointments made after interviews and the measures taken to promote equal opportunities for men and women, including measures to allow men and women to reconcile work and family responsibilities.

The Committee further recalls its previous comments in which it expressed concern that security investigations may lead to exclusions from civil service employment contrary to the requirements of the Convention, for instance due to having peacefully expressed political opinions. Noting that the Government failed to provide the information requested by the Committee in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to assess the extent to which security investigations have led to exclusions from public employment, and indicate the outcome of such assessment. In this context, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the number of administrative appeals filed by persons excluded from public employment on the basis of security investigations and the outcomes of these proceedings.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1956)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee recalls its previous observation noting that section 17 of the Law on Ensuring Equal Rights and Equal Opportunities of Women and Men, 2006, requiring the employer to ensure equal pay for men and women for work involving equal skills and working conditions is more restrictive than the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value as set out in the Convention. Furthermore, by linking the right to equal remuneration for men and women to two specific factors of comparison (skills, working conditions), the Committee considered that section 17 may have the effect of discouraging or even excluding objective job evaluation on the basis of a wider range of criteria, which is crucial in order to eliminate effectively the discriminatory undervaluation of jobs traditionally performed by women. The Committee consequently urged the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the legislation to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

The Committee notes that the Parliamentary Committee on Social Policy and Labour, with the support of the Project “Gender Equality in the World of Work in Ukraine”, co-funded by the European Union (EU) and the International Labour Office (ILO), organized on 27 May 2010, a high-level round-table discussion on the implementation of Convention No. 100 and of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), which included a discussion on the Committee’s comments regarding the application of the Convention. The Committee notes that this event resulted in the adoption of specific recommendations intended to serve as a roadmap for the authorities and the social partners in bringing the national gender equality legislation into compliance with international labour standards. The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary steps to follow-up on the recommendations approved by the Parliamentary Committee on Social Policy and Labour with a view to giving full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee further asks the Government to provide information on the implementation and enforcement of the current equal remuneration provisions of section 17 of the Law on Ensuring Equal Rights and Equal Opportunities of Women and Men, 2006, including information on the number and outcome of any relevant cases dealt with by the competent administrative authorities or the courts.

Articles 2(2)(c) and 4. Collective agreements. The Committee recalls that section 18 of the Law on Ensuring Equal Rights and Equal Opportunities of Women and Men, 2006, provides that collective agreements at the different levels should include provisions which ensure equal rights and opportunities for women and men and that agreements should, inter alia, envisage the elimination of inequality in the remuneration of the labour of men and women, wherever it exists. The Committee notes that one of the recommendations adopted by the Parliamentary Committee on Social Policy and Labour was for the parties to the General Agreement to reproduce the gender equality principle in the Agreement pursuant to section 18 of the Law of 2006. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the follow-up by the social partners to the insertion of a gender equality provision in the General Agreement, including on equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, as well as any other steps taken by the Government to cooperate with the social partners to ensure that collective agreements promote equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, as well as examples of relevant provisions of collective agreements.

Article 3. Objective job evaluation. The Committee notes the Government’s description of the manner in which wages are being established, notably that official salary rates are established based on the complexity of the work, the organizational and legal level of a position, the functions and working conditions, and that wages in sectoral agreements are broken down by occupation and occupational qualifications without making distinctions between men and women. The Government adds that wage and salary levels are therefore established irrespective of gender. The Committee notes that it continues to remain unclear whether the methods used to evaluate the work performed in the different jobs and occupations are appropriate to eliminate gender bias in determining wage rates, including the undervaluation of jobs and occupations that are predominantly carried out by women, resulting in lower wages compared to those applying for jobs and occupations predominantly carried out by men. The Committee asks the Government to take specific measures to promote the use of objective job evaluation methods free from gender bias with a view to promoting and ensuring the establishment of wages and salary scales in accordance with the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Statistical information. The Committee notes from the Government’s report that, according to data from the State Statistics Committee, monthly wages in 2009 were 1,677 Ukrainian Hryvnia (UAH) for women and UAH2,173 for men, reflecting a monthly wage gap of 23 per cent (compared to 27.3 per cent in 2007). While noting that the gender wage gap with respect to average monthly wages appears to be decreasing, the Committee notes that the gender wage gap is still very high. The Committee further notes that one of the recommendations adopted by the Parliamentary Committee on Social Policy and Labour is to ensure the collection and analysis of statistical data, particularly on the wages of men and women at the various grades and levels of the civil service, by occupational groups, and in the private and public sectors in accordance with the general observation on this Convention of 1998. The Committee asks the Government to make every effort to collect, analyse and supply statistical data on the earnings of men and women, in as much detail as possible, including data on the earnings in the different economic sectors and occupations in the private and public sectors.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes the communication of the National Forum of Trade Unions of Ukraine (NFTU), received on 30 April 2010, submitting comments on the draft Labour Code, and the Government’s reply received on 1 October 2010.

Discrimination on the basis of race, colour or national extraction. The Committee notes with regret that, despite the Committee’s repeated requests, the Government’s report includes no information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure and promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation on the grounds of race, colour and national extraction, and particularly the measures taken in respect of the Crimean Tartars and the Roma. The Committee reminds the Government of its obligation to adopt and implement a policy to promote equality in employment and occupation with a view to eliminating discrimination on all the grounds referred to in the Convention, including any discrimination on grounds of race, colour or national extraction in employment faced by groups and communities such as the Crimean Tartars and the Roma. In this context, the Committee recalls that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) in its concluding observations of 17 August 2006 expressed concerns over reports indicating that many Roma are deprived of their right to equal access to employment and education. The Crimean Tartars reportedly remain under-represented in the public service of the Autonomous Republic of Crimea and many of them have been excluded from the agrarian land privatization process (CERD/C/UKR/CO/18, paragraphs 11, 14 and 15). Similar issues were raised more recently by the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance in its third report on the Ukraine (CRI(2008)4, of 12 February 2008). The Committee urges the Government to provide full information on the measures taken to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of the Crimean Tartars and the Roma. It also requests the Government to provide statistical data indicating the extent to which members of both communities participate in vocational training, as well as in public and private employment.

Discrimination based on sex. In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the progress made in implementing the Law on Ensuring Equal Rights and Equal Opportunities of Women and Men, including information on any examples of positive action taken by employers, and the activities carried out by the different components of the national machinery to promote gender equality at work. The Committee also requested information on the number, nature and outcome of any appeals concerning employment discrimination filed under section 22 of the Law. Noting that the Government's report, although containing general explanations regarding the applicable legislation, does not reply to these requests for information, the Committee urges the Government to provide this information in its next report. While noting the information provided regarding the rates of economic activity of men and women and regarding the number of women who have benefited from the services provided by the State Employment Service, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide detailed statistical information on the participation of men and women in the different jobs, occupations and sectors of the economy, including data on women's employment in managerial and decision-making positions (private and public sectors).

Sexual harassment. The Committee recalls its previous comments regarding section 17 of the Law on Ensuring Equal Rights and Equal Opportunities of Women and Men under which the employer must take measures to prevent sexual harassment, which is defined as “actions of a sexual nature, expressed verbally (threats, intimidation, indecent remarks) or physically (touching, slapping), which humiliate or insult persons who are in a position of subordination in terms of their employment, official, material or other status” (section 1). As noted previously, this definition would not appear to cover situations where conduct of a sexual nature creates a hostile working environment, irrespective of whether there is a relationship of subordination between the harasser and the victim. The Committee notes that following a high-level round table discussion organized in May 2010 by the Parliamentary Committee on Social Policy and Labour with the support of the project “Gender Equality in the World of Work in Ukraine”, co-funded by the European Union (EU) and the International Labour Office (ILO), a tripartite working group was established to elaborate amendments to the equality legislation, including provisions expanding the definition of sexual harassment and provisions relating to its prevention, including at the workplace. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary steps to expand the definition of sexual harassment to extend beyond relationships of subordination and to cover hostile environment sexual harassment, and to indicate the progress made in this regard. The Committee further reiterates its request to the Government to provide information on any complaints of sexual harassment received and addressed by the competent authorities.

Cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee recalls that section 18 of the Law on Ensuring Equal Rights and Equal Opportunities of Women and Men recognizes that collective bargaining should contribute to the promotion of gender equality at work by providing that collective agreements and contracts should contain provisions promoting gender equality, including time lines for the implementation of such provisions. In this context, the Committee notes that the EU–ILO technical cooperation project on gender equality in Ukraine seeks, among other things, to enable the social partners to promote, implement and monitor relevant international commitments and national laws and policies. Noting that the Government's report does not reply to the previous comments regarding this matter, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of section 18 of the Law on Ensuring Equal Rights and Equal Opportunities of Women and Men, including examples of collective agreements that promote and ensure gender equality in accordance with the Law. Please indicate any measures taken to seek the collaboration of employers' and workers' organizations on this matter, and any measures taken to support the social partners in relation to gender equality matters.

National policy on gender equality. The Committee notes that the round table organized by the Parliamentary Committee on Social Policy and Labour in May 2010 resulted in the adoption of a series of recommendations, including providing a clearer definition of gender-based discrimination covering both direct and indirect discrimination, collecting and analysing appropriate data disaggregated by sex on employment and occupation, developing a National Programme on Gender Equality, conducting large-scale public awareness-raising activities on gender equality and the need to eliminate gender-based stereotypes, and taking measures to strengthen the capacity of the enforcement bodies to identify and eliminate gender discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to follow up the recommendations of the Parliamentary Committee on Social Policy and Labour.

Draft Labour Code. The Committee notes that the NFTU refers to the need to include the grounds of gender and conditions of birth in the draft provisions prohibiting discrimination, the need for provisions prohibiting workplace discrimination by companies, as well as procedures of investigation and sanctions for companies allowing such discrimination; and the prohibition of HIV/AIDS testing in compulsory medical examinations. The NFTU also considers restrictions on women's rights to work in hard and dangerous working conditions, if they are physically fit to do so, as being unfair. The Committee notes the Government's reply, received on 1 October 2010, which cites section 4 of the draft Labour Code. The Committee asks the Government to take into account the concerns raised by the NFTU in the context of the drafting process and to ensure that the new Labour Code provides effective protection against direct and indirect discrimination on all the grounds covered by the Convention and with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation. The Government is also requested to ensure that restrictions on women's employment are strictly related to maternity, and not based on stereotyped presumptions regarding the type of employment suitable for women, and to provide information on any developments with respect to the status of the adoption of the draft Labour Code.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100)

Gender remuneration gap. The Committee notes from the Employment Survey Report published by the Statistics Office that the gender remuneration gap for 2009, based on average monthly earnings for full-time jobs was 27 per cent. Based on average weekly earnings for full-time employees, the gap increases to 33 per cent. The Committee notes that in some industries the gap is particularly high (based on average monthly earnings for full-time jobs), including in financial intermediation (46.4 per cent) and health and social work (40 per cent), and in occupations such as managers and senior officials (29 per cent). Noting the wide gender remuneration gap, and that the Government provides no information in this regard in response to its previous request, the Committee urges the Government to take measures to analyse and address the causes of the gender remuneration gap, including studies and surveys, and to provide detailed information in this regard. Please also continue to provide information on the earnings of men and women in the various industries and occupations, in both the public and private sectors.

Article 1 of the Convention. The Committee noted previously the provisions of the Equal Opportunities Act, 2006, related to equal remuneration for work of equal value, and asked for information on the implementation and enforcement thereof. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there have been no relevant court cases or violations detected regarding the principle of the Convention. The Committee once again asks the Government to provide specific information regarding the practical implementation and enforcement of section 31 of the Equal Opportunities Act. Noting the absence of cases and violations detected or reported, the Committee asks the Government to take specific measures to promote awareness of the equal remuneration provisions and the dispute resolution procedures available, among workers, employers and their representatives, as well as government officials. Please provide specific information on the measures taken to enhance the capacity of the responsible authorities, including judges, labour inspectors and other public officials, to identify and address issues concerning section 31 of the Equal Opportunities Act.

Article 2. Collective agreements, minimum wages. The Committee recalls that, pursuant to section 63(2)(a) and (b) of the Equal Opportunities Act, terms contained in a collective agreement or any rule made by an employer are void where "the making of the collective agreement is, by reason of the inclusion of the term, unlawful by virtue of this Act" or "the term or rule is included or made in furtherance of an act which is unlawful by virtue of this Act". Noting that the Government provides no information in response to its previous request, the Committee once again asks the Government to indicate whether section 63 renders void terms of collective agreements or terms or rules of undertakings that violate the right to equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee would also welcome receiving copies of collective agreements that contain specific clauses regarding equal remuneration for work of equal value. Noting that the Conditions of Employment (Standard Minimum Wage) Order, 2001, as amended in 2008, excludes domestic workers, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the number of men and women employed as domestic workers, and how it is ensured that the work of these workers is not undervalued.

Article 3. Objective job evaluation. The Committee notes that the Government has provided no information regarding the promotion and use of methods for the objective evaluation of jobs, as previously requested. Noting that the Equal Opportunities Act refers to notions of "work rated as equivalent" and "work of equal value", the Committee asks the Government to take measures to promote the development and use of objective job evaluation methods, and draws the Government's attention to its 2006 general observation in this regard.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

National policy on equality of opportunity with respect to political opinion, national extraction and social origin. The Committee regrets to note the Government's failure to reply to the Committee's repeated requests for information on the measures taken to adopt and implement a national policy with respect to all the grounds set out in the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate steps to collect and provide detailed information on all the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that no discrimination on the basis of political opinion, national extraction and social origin occurs in employment and occupation in accordance with Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 100 (Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Australia: Norfolk Island, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Belarus, Belgium, Benin, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Canada, Chile, China, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Comoros, Congo, Croatia, Cyprus, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, France: French Polynesia, France: New Caledonia, Gambia, Germany, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Islamic Republic of Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lesotho, Malawi, Mali, Malta, Republic of Moldova, Montenegro, Mozambique, New Zealand: Tokelau, Nigeria, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Philippines, Poland, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, United Kingdom, Uzbekistan, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe); Convention No. 111 (Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Benin, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Canada, Chile, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, France: French Polynesia, France: French Southern and Antarctic Territories, France: New Caledonia, Gambia, Germany, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jordan, Latvia, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Mali, Malta, Mexico, Republic of Moldova, Mongolia, Montenegro, Mozambique, New Zealand: Tokelau, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, United Kingdom, Uzbekistan, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe); Convention No. 156 (Albania, Belize, Plurinational State of Bolivia, Ethiopia, Guinea, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia).

Tripartite consultation

Burundi

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2007 observation which read as follows:

Article 5(1) of the Convention. Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Government stated in a brief report received in November 2007 that it has prepared a note on Conventions to ratify or denunciate. This note has been transmitted to the Burundi Employers Association (AEB) and the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU). The result of these consultations will be communicated to the ILO. Referring to its 2006 observation, the Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide detailed information on the content and results of tripartite consultations held during the period covered by the report, on questions concerning international labour standards, and in particular on the reports to be made to the ILO as well as the re-examination of unratified Conventions and of Recommendations (Article 5(1)(c) and (d)).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Congo

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2008 observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. In its report received in January 2008, the Government indicates that in compliance with the Convention an Advisory Technical Committee on International Labour Standards, composed of representatives of the administration, unions and employers, was established by Order No. 788 of 6 September 1999. The Committee refers to its previous comments in which it noted the Government's statement that, due to a lack of adequate financial resources, the Advisory Technical Committee was still not operational. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken to establish the Advisory Technical Committee on International Labour Standards, with a description of the consultation procedures established within the Committee in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention.

Article 4(2). Training. The Government indicates that the necessary training for participants in the consultation procedures is provided by the State. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on training for persons participating in consultation procedures, with an indication of whether arrangements have been made or are envisaged to finance the necessary training for such participants.

Article 5(1). Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Government indicates that the consultations cover general conditions of labour and government replies to questionnaires concerning items on the agenda of the Conference. The Committee recalls that, under the terms of Article 5(1), tripartite consultations also have to be held on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference, the re-examination at appropriate intervals of unratified Conventions and of Recommendations, reports on ratified Conventions and the denunciation of ratified Conventions. The Committee refers to its comments on the constitutional obligation of submission and requests the Government to provide detailed information on the tripartite consultations held, including those in the Advisory Technical Committee on International Labour Standards, on each of the issues covered by Article 5(1) during the period covered by the next report.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2000)

Effective tripartite consultations. Questions arising out of article 22 reports. In its previous comments, the Committee invited the Government and social partners to promote effective consultation in relation to the preparation of the reports required on the application of the ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d) of the Convention). In the report received in October 2010, the Czech-Moravian Confederation of Trade Unions (CMKOS) indicated that, while appreciating the consultation on the draft reports on the application of international labour standards, it would prefer to have more time to consider these draft reports and submit its comments. The Government confirms its willingness to provide more time to social partners to consider the draft reports and recognizes that it is important to identify critical issues raised by the social partners in the reports as soon as possible and if necessary, to discuss such issues with them. In this way, issues could be clarified and where appropriate, effective and immediate measures could be taken to fully comply with Convention requirements. The Government believes that such an approach, which gives additional space for opinions of workers and employers to be heard, strengthens social dialogue at the national level on the application of ILO Conventions and helps produce more relevant reports on ratified Conventions. The Government further states that it will work towards improving time management of the whole reporting system. The Committee welcomes this approach in promoting effective consultations required by the Convention on this matter and invites the Government to continue to report on measures taken to promote tripartite consultations on international labour standards and on any follow-up to recommendations derived from such consultations.

Re-examination of unratified Conventions and denunciation of Conventions. The Committee notes with interest that, following consultations with the social partners, the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187), was submitted in 2007 and was ratified in October 2008, and further recalls that the denunciation of the Underground Work (Women) Convention, 1935 (No. 45), was registered in April 2008. The Committee recalls that the ratification of the Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176), was registered in October 2000. The Government indicates in its report that, as regards the last governance Conventions to be ratified – the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) – following a re-assessment of national legislation and practice in the area of labour inspection, proposals for ratification of Conventions Nos 81 and 129 were submitted to the social partners for comments and subsequently to the Cabinet for approval. The Cabinet agreed on both proposals in June 2010 and the proposals were submitted to Parliament and are currently under discussion. Regarding the Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151), and the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), CMKOS reiterates that while the legal conditions for ratification of Conventions Nos 151 and 154 are met, the Government has taken no further action in this regard. The Government indicates that it is prepared to discuss this issue through the Council of the Economic and Social Agreement Working Group on cooperation with the ILO. The Committee invites the Government to include information in its next report on the consultations held to re-examine the prospects of ratification of unratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(c) of the Convention).

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2001)

Articles 2 and 5(1) of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the Government's report received in June 2010. In its previous comments the Committee expressed concern at the fact that the Government had not provided information on the application of the Convention since July 2004 and had emphasized that technical assistance might be useful to rectify the situation. The ILO undertook a mission to Kinshasa in May 2010 precisely for this purpose. The Committee notes with interest the ministerial orders adopted after consultation with the National Labour Council in order to apply the Labour Code, and the reports of extraordinary meetings of the National Labour Council held in July 2005 and March 2008. The Government also indicates that the Standing Committee on Social Dialogue, which was established in September 2007, has provided the social partners with a new forum for discussing key economic and social issues, particularly with regard to the revision of minimum wages. The Committee also notes the fact that the Government forwards to the workers' and employers' organizations the documents sent by the ILO for preparing items on the agenda of the International Labour Conference and also the reports on the application of Conventions and Recommendations. The Committee hopes that in its next report the Government will be in a position to announce further progress on tripartite consultations held on each of the matters relating to international labour standards covered by the Convention.

Article 3. Choice of employers' and workers' representatives. The Committee notes that the Government organized trade union elections for the fifth time, between October 2008 and July 2009. It requests the Government to indicate in its next report who were the employers' and workers' representatives chosen for the purpose of tripartite consultations covered by the Convention and to state the manner in which it was ensured that they were freely chosen by their representative organizations.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

Tripartite consultations required under the Convention. The Committee notes that the brief statement contained in the report submitted by the Government in November 2009 does not provide any information on the consultations required on the Convention. It must invite again the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure effective tripartite consultations within the meaning of the Convention, including detailed information on the consultations held by the Labour Advisory Board on each of the subjects concerning international labour standards listed in Article 5(1) of the Convention.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1995)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observations which read as follows:

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. In a report received in May 2005, the Government recalled that, with a view to holding tripartite consultations on matters relating to ILO activities, it established an Advisory Committee on Labour and Social Legislation (CCTLS) in 1995. However, the Government recognized that this body has met rarely since its establishment and that there has been no tripartite dialogue on the items on the agenda of the Conference. The Government indicated that this situation is due, among other factors, to the lack of reaction of the social partners. Furthermore, the Government reported that, following a tripartite workshop on international labour standards held in October 2004, the Department of Employment and the Public Service renewed the officers of the CCTLS and relaunched legislative activities. The Committee expresses again the firm hope that the Government will be in a position to provide information in its next report on the measures adopted to ensure effective tripartite consultations on the matters covered by the Convention. It requests the Government to provide reports regularly containing detailed information on the consultations held on all the subjects covered by Article 5(1), including precise information on the activities of the Advisory Committee on Labour and Social Legislation.

Article 4. Financing of training. The Government indicated that there are no specific arrangements for the training of participants. However, when training is initiated at the national level by the competent authority in the context of social consultations, it is generally tripartite in nature. In this respect, the Committee recalls that, where training for participants in the consultations proves to be necessary to enable them to perform their functions effectively, its financing should be covered by appropriate arrangements between the Government and the representative organizations (see the General Survey of 2000 on tripartite consultation, paragraphs 125 and 126). It requests the Government to take measures for this purpose and to describe in its next report, where appropriate, the content of these arrangements (Article 4(2)). Finally, the Government indicated that a training programme was envisaged in the context of the Regional Programme for the Promotion of Social Dialogue in French-speaking Africa (PRODIAF), but that, in the absence of any reaction by the social partners, it was limited to activities initiated by the Ministry of Employment and the Public Service and carried out at the national level. The Committee requests the Government to describe in its next report the training activities undertaken in relation to international labour standards. It also requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in the implementation of the PRODIAF programme in relation to the necessary training for participants in the consultation procedures, as required by the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its previous comments:

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the brief replies supplied by the Government in May 2006 to its 2003 direct request. It refers to its previous comments and recalls again that certain subjects covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention (replies to subparagraphs (a), submissions to the National Assembly (b), reports to be made to the ILO (d)) involve annual consultation, while others (re-examination of unratified Conventions and of Recommendations (c), proposals for the denunciation of ratified Conventions (e)) call for less frequent examination. The Committee recalls its interest in any consultations concerning unratified Conventions. Please also supply information on the frequency of consultations and the nature of any reports or recommendations resulting therefrom (Article 5(2)).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1990)

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report received in September 2010. The Committee notes with interest that the National Labour Board was constituted in November 2008 and had its first meeting in April 2009. The International Labour Standards Committee is one of the committees of the Board. The Government indicates that the Board discussed the unratified ILO Conventions in its third meeting held on 30 March 2010. The Conventions presented for discussion were: the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), the Employment Promotion and Protection against Unemployment Convention, 1988 (No. 168), the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183), the Safety and Health in Agriculture Convention, 2001 (No. 184), the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185), the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187), and the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188). The Board referred the matter to the International Labour Standards Committee to study and make appropriate recommendations before presentation to the Board in its next meeting. The Committee invites the Government to include information on any follow-up to the recommendations of the International Labour Standards Committee of the National Labour Board concerning the prospects of ratification of the abovementioned Conventions (Article 5(1)(c)).

The Committee further notes that the protocols adopted at the 82nd and 84th Sessions and all the other instruments adopted by the Conference from 2000 to 2007 were submitted to the National Assembly on 13 September 2010. The Government also intends to forward the instruments referenced in the preceding sentence to the National Labour Board. The Committee also invites the Government to communicate any proposals which may have been made by the National Labour Board regarding these instruments (Article 5(1)(b)).

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2000)

Effective tripartite consultations required by the Conventions. The Committee notes the reply supplied by the Government to its previous observation in the report received in August 2010. It further notes with interest that, following the adoption in February 2010 of new labour legislation for the private sector, a Consultative Committee for Labour Affairs was established by Ministerial Order No. 132/a of 2010. The Committee is presided over by the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs and is composed of Government representatives, as well as representatives of employers and of workers. The Government also states that it intends to communicate to the Committee all decisions and recommendations formulated by the new Consultative Committee after it holds its first meeting. The Committee welcomes the Government's intention to provide information on these developments and hopes that the Government will provide in its next report detailed information on the consultations held by the Consultative Committee for Labour Affairs on the matters relating to international labour standards covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2003)

Consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government's report received in May 2010 does not reply to its 2009 direct request. The Committee recalls that consultations required under the Convention are conducted in the context of the National Tripartite Committee which was established in June 2008 following the conclusion of a Memorandum of Understanding among the social partners for the implementation of the Convention. It invites the Government to provide detailed information on the content and outcome of the tripartite consultations held on each of the matters relating to international labour standards covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention, including information as to the frequency of such consultations and the nature of any reports or recommendations made as a result of the consultations.

Representatives of employers and workers. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the manner in which it ensures that the representatives of the Liberia Labour Congress and the Liberia Chamber of Commerce are freely chosen by their representative organizations, and how it ensures that employers and workers are represented on an equal footing on the National Tripartite Committee.

Financing of training. The Committee recalls that the National Tripartite Committee was in dire need of training to improve the capacity-building needs of the social partners. The Committee invites the Government to report on the arrangements made, possibly with ILO assistance, for the financing of any necessary training of participants in the consultation procedures on international labour standards covered by the Convention (Article 4(2)).

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1997)

Articles 2 and 5(1) of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the indications provided by the Government in a report received in October 2010. The Government indicates that considerable efforts have been made in the context of tripartite consultation and that the role of the social partners in the implementation of economic and social policies is now beginning to increase but that, as the crisis situation in the country has not yet been resolved, it is not possible to provide further information. Under these conditions, the Committee invites the Government and the social partners to promote and strengthen tripartism and social dialogue on the issues relating to international labour standards covered by the Convention. In this respect, it recalls that, in accordance with the 2008 Social Justice Declaration, Convention No. 144 is one of the instruments that is most significant from the viewpoint of governance. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated and detailed information in its next report on the manner in which the representatives of employers and workers are selected for the purposes of the procedures covered by the Convention (Article 3 of the Convention) and on the content and outcome of the tripartite consultations undertaken on each of the matters covered by Article 5(1).

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1986)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2008 observation which read as follows:

Article 5(1) of the Convention. Tripartite consultations required under the Convention. The Committee notes a brief report received in May 2008 reiterating that the Government carries out consultations with the social partners as stipulated in the Labour Relations Act of 2000. It asks the Government to include in its next report particulars of the tripartite consultations held on each of the matters covered by the Convention, including information on the nature of any reports or recommendations made as a result of such consultations.

Article 5(1)(c) and (e). In its previous comments, the Committee recalled that the ILO Governing Body recommended the denunciation of Conventions Nos 50, 64, 65, 86, 104 and 107 concerning indigenous workers and the ratification of the most updated instrument, the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169). In the Committee's 2005 direct request on the Underground Work (Women) Convention, 1935 (No. 45), the Government was invited to give favourable consideration to the ratification of the Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176), which shifts the emphasis from a specific category of workers to the safety and health protection of all mineworkers, and in turn to denounce Convention No. 45. The Committee again invites the stakeholders concerned to hold consultations to re-examine unratified Conventions – such as Conventions Nos 169 and 176 – in order to promote, as appropriate, their implementation, ratification or denunciation.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1995)

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2010. It notes that this report adds no new details or additional information to what was said in 2008. The Government states that it maintains its firm belief in the principle and value of tripartite consultation for maintaining harmonious labour relations in the country. It also refers to a draft law regarding a Labour Commission prepared in 2008. The Committee also notes that the new legislation will incorporate the mechanisms for tripartite consultation. The three social partners are still represented in tripartite committees formed under previous legislation. The Government also recalls that the representatives of the employers and workers are consulted at various levels while preparing different reports or proposals for submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference to the National Assembly. The Committee refers to its previous comments and invites the Government to report on the adoption and operation of any new procedure that ensures effective consultations with respect to matters concerning the activities of the ILO set out in the Convention (Article 2(1) of the Convention). It also invites the Government to include in its next report specific information on the content of the consultations held regarding international labour standards, as required by Article 5(1) of the Convention, and especially on questionnaires concerning items on the agenda of the Conference, submission of instruments adopted by the Conference to the National Assembly, and reports to be made on the application of ratified Conventions.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1981)

Article 5(1) of the Convention. Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's report received in August 2010 in reply to the observation of 2009, including information on the consultations held on the matters covered by the Convention. The Government also indicates that, on 18 March 2010, the National Labour Council was set up, with the focus on strengthening social dialogue and real tripartism. The Committee recalls that the powers and duties of the Plenary of the National Labour Council included serving as an entity and means of consultation for the purposes of compliance with the Convention (section 5(j) of Act No. 547 of August 2005). The Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information in its next report on the consultations held on matters relating to international labour standards provided for in Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to specify the activities of the National Labour Council relating to the tripartite consultations required by the Convention.

Article 5(1)(d). Transmission of draft reports. The Committee again observes the Government's indication that copies of the reports have been transmitted to the employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it stated that the obligation to consult the representative organizations on the reports to be made concerning the application of ratified conventions, under the terms of Article 5(1)(d) of the Convention, must be distinguished from the obligation to communicate reports under article 23(2) of the ILO Constitution. The tripartite consultations required by the Convention must be held during the process of preparing reports. Where consultations are held in writing, the Government should transmit a draft report to the representative organizations in order to gather their opinions before preparing its definitive report (paragraph 92, General Survey of 2000 on tripartite consultation). The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the manner in which its practice has developed with regard to the consultations required when preparing draft reports on the application of ratified Conventions.

Nigeria

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last replies in August 2004. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a report including information in reply to the points raised in the previous observations, which set forth the following matters:

Consultations with representative organizations. The Committee noted that the Nigeria Employers Consultative Association (NECA) and the Nigeria Labour Congress (NLC) are consulted at the National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC) level with regard to some matters covered by the Convention. The Government further indicated that the National Labour Institutions Bill, which makes provision for the NLAC, was before the National Assembly. The Committee reminds the Government that it is important for employers' and workers' organizations to enjoy the right to freedom of association, without which there could be no effective system of tripartite consultation. It asks the Government to report on the results of the legislative reform and its impact on the improvement of consultations with representative organizations that enjoy freedom of association, as required under this Convention.

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee recalls that the tripartite consultations covered by the Convention are essentially intended to promote the implementation of international labour standards and concern, in particular, the matters enumerated in Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide full and detailed information on the tripartite consultations dealing with:

- (a) the Government's replies to questionnaires concerning items on the agenda of the International Labour Conference and the Government's comments on proposed texts to be discussed by the Conference; and
- (b) questions arising out of reports to be made to the International Labour Office under article 22 of the Constitution of the Organization.

Prior tripartite consultation on proposals made to the National Assembly. The Committee notes that the instruments adopted at the 95th Session of the Conference were submitted to the National Assembly for noting on 21 August 2006. The Government further stated that there was no tripartite consultation as there was no request for their ratification. The Committee points out that, for those States which have already ratified Convention No. 144, effective prior consultations have to be held on the proposals made to the competent authorities when submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference (Article 5(1)(b)). Even if the Government does not intend proposing the ratification of a Convention, the social partners must be consulted sufficiently in advance for them to reach their opinions before the Government finalizes its decision. The Committee trusts that the Government and the social partners will examine the measures to be taken with a view to holding effective consultations on the proposals made to the National Assembly when submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference, as required by the Convention.

Operation of the consultative procedures. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether, in accordance with Article 6, the representative organizations have been consulted in the preparation of an annual report on the working of the consultation procedures provided for in the Convention and, if so, to indicate the outcome of these consultations.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Norway

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1977)

Effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's report received in October 2010, which includes comments by the Norwegian Confederation of Trade Unions (LO). The Committee notes with interest that means to improve the reporting procedures were discussed in the Norwegian Tripartite ILO Committee in February 2010. As a result, the Government has completed a thorough review of the reporting procedures to ensure that social partners receive the reports in a timely manner and to present satisfactory comments. Measures taken have been communicated to the social partners in the Norwegian Tripartite ILO Committee. In this regard, LO states that it is satisfied with the improved practice in the reporting procedures which were applied during 2010 and will follow the positive approach embarked upon very closely. LO also indicates that, notwithstanding the formal difficulties expressed by the Government with regard to the ratification of the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183), the Government should put more strength and emphasis on solving these difficulties and proceed with ratification of the Convention. In this regard, the Government replies that currently there have been no changes in legislation or other measures that could warrant a re-examination of the prospects for ratification of Convention No. 183. The Committee notes that 90 international labour Conventions are in force for Norway and that the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, was ratified in February 2009. The Committee invites the Government to continue to report on measures taken to promote effective tripartite consultations including information on the consultations held to re-examine the prospects of ratification for unratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(c) of the Convention).

Pakistan

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in June 2010 which contained some replies to the matters raised in its 2008 observation.

Selection of employer and worker representatives. The Committee recalls the comments submitted by the Pakistan Workers Federation (PWF) in July 2009. The PWF referred to the principle set out in the Convention which provides that tripartite consultations are carried out with the most representative organizations of workers and employers. The PWF indicated that it has the largest membership of workers in the country and is duly registered and certified by the National Industrial Relations Commission. The PWF also maintained that the most representative organization of workers in terms of membership may not be excluded from tripartite consultations and its views should be taken into consideration. In its reply, the Government recognizes that there are a number of representative organizations of the employers and workers which are registered with the National Industrial Relations Commission and the Directorate of Labour Welfare in the provinces. The Government indicates that the most prominent organizations of employers and workers working at the national and provincial level are the Employers Federation of Pakistan (EFP), the All Pakistan Textile Manufacturing Association, the Pakistan Workers Confederation and the All Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions (APFTU). The Government also provided a list of different tripartite consultation bodies established under different labour laws. The Committee notes the Government's statement indicating that the Federal Government and Provincial Governments do convene meetings, seminars and workshops on different labour issues. Representatives of employers and workers participate in brainstorming sessions on labour issues and forward their viewpoint and recommendations to the Government for policy decisions. The Committee asks the Government to provide further specific information on the manner in which the representatives of employers and workers are nominated and chosen for the purposes of tripartite consultations, indicating the representative organizations of employers and workers for the application of the Convention in Pakistan (Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention).

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided information on effective tripartite consultations held on matters expressly set forth in the Convention. The Committee further recalls that Article 2 provides that each Member which ratifies the Convention must undertake to operate procedures which ensure effective consultations with respect to the matters set forth in Article 5(1) between representatives of the Government, employers and workers. The nature and the form of procedures are to be determined by each country in accordance with national practice, following consultations with representative organizations, where such procedures have not yet been established. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on how it gives effect to Article 2 and on the content and outcome of tripartite consultations held on each of the matters related to international labour standards listed in Article 5(1) of the Convention.

Peru

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2004)

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's report for the period ending in September 2010 and the comments added by four trade union organizations (Single Confederation of Workers of Peru (CUT), General Confederation of Workers of Peru (CGTP), Autonomous Confederation of Workers of Peru and Confederation of Workers of Peru (CTP)). The Government provides information on action taken in May 2008 by the National Labour Council in relation to the tripartite examination of the instruments adopted by the Conference for submission to the Congress of the Republic (Article 5(1)(b) of the Convention). Furthermore, the Government supplies information on the procedure for the drawing up of reports: (1) the comments of the Committee of Experts are sent to the most representative workers' and employers' organizations for their information and to enable them to issue an opinion in this regard; (2) the comments from the organizations are taken into account when drawing up the first draft of the report; (3) after the first draft report has been drawn up, this is sent again to the most representative workers' and employers' organizations so that they can issue their final comments in this respect; (4) the comments are taken into account for preparing the final version of the report, and (5) the final version of the report is sent to the most representative workers' and employers' organizations as well as to the ILO. The four trade union organizations participating in the National Labour Council claim that the consultation processes are insufficient and do not help to ensure compliance with the Convention, and they refer to the provisions of the Tripartite Consultation (Activities of the International Labour Organisation) Recommendation, 1976 (No. 152). In particular, the four trade union organizations state that requests from the Legal Affairs Office of the Ministry of Labour for commenting on the draft reports do not tally with the schedule for the presentation of reports, with variable deadlines given (in some cases, three days). Nor is there adequate access to the texts of the reports presented by the Government to the ILO. According to the four trade union organizations, there is no training programme either.

The Committee understands the concerns expressed by the four trade union organizations. Under the terms of Article 5(1)(d) of the Convention, consultations must be held on questions arising out of reports to be made to the ILO in connection with the application of ratified Conventions. In such cases, consultations must deal with the content of replies to the comments made by the supervisory bodies. Before adopting a decision, the Government should consult the representative employers' and workers' organizations with regard to the problems encountered and the measures to be taken to solve them. This is essential when both employers' organizations and trade union organizations may hold different positions from that of the Government. As regards the results of the consultations, even though these are not binding on the Government, the latter is still obliged to ensure effective tripartite consultations, in conformity with Article 2(1) of the Convention. In the 2000 General Survey on tripartite consultation, the Committee emphasized that, in order to be "effective", consultations must take place before final decisions are taken, irrespective of the nature or form of the procedures adopted. The important factor here is that the persons consulted should be able to put forward their opinions before the Government takes its final decision. The effectiveness of consultations thus presupposes in practice that employers' and workers' representatives have all the necessary information far enough in advance to formulate their own opinions (paragraph 31 of the 2000 General Survey). The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the consultations held on each of the matters referred to in Article 5(1) of the Convention. In particular, in order to ensure that the views of the representative organizations are taken into account, the Committee requests the Government to consider the possibility with the social partners of establishing a schedule for the drawing up of reports (Article 5(1)(d)). The Committee also hopes that suitable agreements will be reached for the financing of any necessary training of participants in the consultation procedures (Article 4(2)).

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1991)

Article 5(1) of the Convention. Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes with interest the detailed replies to the 2009 observation provided in the Government's report received in September 2010. The Government indicates that continued consultations for the possible ratification of Conventions enrolled in the Decent Work Agenda are being undertaken. The Government reports specifically on the measures taken by the Tripartite Industrial Peace Council (TIPC) in order to examine the Home Work Convention, 1996 (No. 177), the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185), and the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006). The Government indicates that in August 2009, the TIPC decided to recommend ratification of Convention No. 185. The TIPC ratification proposal of Convention No. 185 is currently being carried out in accordance with the established process of consultation and documentation decided. On Convention No. 177, the TIPC also endorsed its ratification. The Government is now gathering relevant information regarding compliance with the provisions of the Convention. On Convention No. 181, a task force was created in order to review existing policies and review the provisions of the Convention. In July 2010, as part of the review process of Convention No. 181, salient features of the Convention were presented for better understanding and to address the need to review existing policies and the value of consultation of the stakeholders in preparation for ratification. On the MLC, 2006, the Government indicates that a Maritime Industry Tripartite Council in the domestic seafaring industry is being institutionalized as an advocacy and consultation venue to facilitate reforms for the eventual ratification of the MLC, 2006. The Committee wishes to receive in the Government's next report information on the developments that might occur regarding the ratification of Conventions Nos 177, 181, 185 and the MLC, 2006. It invites the Government to also include information regarding the other matters covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention.

Article 3. Selection of representatives of employers and workers. In its previous observation, the Committee requested specific information on the manner in which the representatives of employers and workers are nominated, for the purposes of the Convention, specifically on how it is ensured that they have been freely chosen by their representative organizations. The Government indicates that the criteria and process of nomination is generally left to the sound discretion of the nominating sectoral organization, with "most representative status". The Government reports that the organization submits their nominees to the Secretary of the Department of Labour, who in turn endorses the same for appointment by the President through an executive issuance, to the tripartite bodies. The "most representative status" criteria for organizational representation in the tripartite bodies is determined based on the scope and coverage of organizational membership. The Committee notes that the process of appointment is embodied in an Executive Order issued in 1998 which provides that there shall be a maximum of 20 regular representatives each from workers' and employers' organizations, to be designated by the President upon nomination by their respective sectors. The Committee also notes that the new administration is preparing invitations to participate in the TIPC for groups that in the past refused to participate or engage in tripartite dialogues. The tripartite partners are currently formulating a standard criteria and process of selection and nomination of representatives of sectoral organizations with "most representative status". The Committee welcomes this approach and would appreciate receiving updates on this matter as soon as they are available.

Portugal

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1981)

Consultations required by the Convention. Consultations on unratified Conventions. In its previous comments, the Committee invited the social partners to hold consultations to re-examine unratified Conventions and Recommendations to which effect could be given (Article 5(1)(c) of the Convention). The Committee notes the detailed reply provided by the Government in the report received in July 2010 and the further substantive comments made by the Confederation of Trade and Services of Portugal (CCP) and the General Union of Workers (UGT). The CCP recognizes that consultation mechanisms exist, operate and are well established in Portugal. Nevertheless, it indicates that the comments made during consultations in some cases have little impact. In this respect, the Government reiterates that all the views put forward by the organizations are transmitted with the Government's reports and replies to the ILO, and that it is not responsible for such comments being reflected in the Organization's documents. The UGT agrees that consultation procedures on ratified Conventions and denunciations are given effect. Nevertheless, the UGT contends that the procedures for the ratification of Conventions are excessively long and lack transparency. In the view of UGT, it is essential to be informed of the procedures followed for the ratification of Conventions so as to determine responsibilities and remedy the situation. The UGT advocates simpler procedures so that the information on the ratification or non-ratification of a Convention are clearer and known in advance to the social partners. The UGT emphasizes that three Conventions are still to be ratified: the Employment Promotion and Protection Against Unemployment Convention, 1988 (No. 168), the Protection of Workers' Claims (Employer's Insolvency) Convention, 1992 (No. 173), and the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183). The UGT welcomes the fact that the Government has provided information to the Standing Committee for Social Dialogue (CPCS) on the process of ratifying two Conventions (the Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161), and the Home Work Convention, 1996 (No. 177)). The Government recalls that the process of ratification involves consultation with various ministerial departments, as well as with the ILO concerning the meaning of certain provisions of Conventions. An assessment also has to be made of whether it is appropriate to introduce legislative amendments when they are identified as being necessary by studies on the feasibility of ratification. On many occasions, the public administration lacks the human resources to carry out feasibility studies rapidly. The Government understands that further use can be made of the CPCS to provide information on ratifications. In the case of Conventions which lie within the competence of the legislative authority or when it wishes to hold a parliamentary debate, the Government proposes ratification for approval by the Assembly of the Republic. It notes that the Assembly of the Republic may also take the initiative of deciding upon the ratification of Conventions. The representative organizations of employers and workers are assured the right to express their views on the approval of new Conventions, in accordance with the Labour Code. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on the tripartite consultations required by Article 5(1) of the Convention, and hopes that information will be provided in the next report on the progress achieved in relation to the matters raised in this observation, including information related to continuing examination of unratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(c)).

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2000)

Tripartite consultations required under the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's reports received in November 2009 and October 2010. It notes the Government's information indicating that the National Tripartite Committee on International Standards was previously expected to be institutionalized by the end of 2009 but is now expected to be institutionalized by the end of 2010. The Government reports that it and the social partners participated in a two-day session in May 2010 on the Decent Work Country Programmes, at which strengthening tripartism and social dialogue was discussed. It further indicates that the Department of Labour has submitted the instruments adopted at various sessions of the Conference to the tripartite members and to the Ministry of Labour (Article 5(1)(b) of the Convention). The Committee invites the Government to supply further information on the tripartite consultations held, especially within the National Tripartite Committee on International Labour Standards, on the matters regarding international labour standards covered by the Convention. It further requests the Government to provide examples of any reports or recommendations made as a result of the consultations held under the established procedures. The Committee requests specific information on the tripartite consultations held on questionnaires concerning items of the agenda of the Conference and on the preparation of reports on the application of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(a) and (d)).

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observations which read as follows:

Mechanisms for tripartite consultations and the consultations required by the Convention. In a brief report received in March 2007, the Government refers to the tripartite consultations carried out through the National Council for Social Dialogue. The Government also indicates that the National Council meets regularly. The Committee refers to its previous observations and once again invites the Government to indicate in its next report the manner in which the National Council is involved in the consultations required by the Convention and to provide particulars of the consultations held on each of the matters on international labour standards referred to in Article 5(1) of the Convention, including information on the reports or recommendations made on international labour standards as a result of such consultations.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observations which read as follows:

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the Government's report supplied in June 2004 indicating its commitment to promote tripartite consultation throughout the country as well as supporting the tripartite delegation to the International Labour Conference. The Committee hopes that the Government and the social partners will examine how the Convention is applied and that the Government's next report will contain indications on any measures taken in order to implement effective tripartite consultation in the sense of the Convention (Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention).

The Committee recalls that the Office has the technical capacity to help strengthen social dialogue and support the activities that governments and employers' and workers' organizations undertake for the consultations required by the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. In its 2009 observation, the Committee noted the social partners' proposals and the steps taken by the Government to achieve ratifications of Conventions. The Committee notes that the proposals to ratify were the subject of consultation with the social partners in the Economic and Social Councils and notes with interest the registration of the ratification of Conventions Nos 81, 129, 135 and 154 in September 2009, and of Conventions Nos 151, 158, 181 and 187 in February 2010. The Committee welcomes this progress and invites the

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1983)

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the detailed information sent by the Government in May 2010 in reply to the previous observations. The Committee notes with interest the setting up, by Order No. 018/MTESS of 28 October 2008, of the National Unit on Standards, one of the tasks of which is to prepare the necessary technical files for tripartite consultations on international labour standards required by the Convention. It also notes with interest that the Government requested and obtained technical and financial assistance from the ILO in November 2009 for training for the members of the national unit with respect to reporting obligations in connection with ratified Conventions. Activity was also planned for the 2010–11 period with regard to strengthening the capacities of the members of the national unit in relation to the content of fundamental Conventions and Conventions on governance which might be submitted for ratification in the near future (Conventions Nos 81 and 122). The Committee hopes that the Government will supply up-to-date information in its next report on the progress made with the social partners to ensure effective tripartite consultations on the matters relating to international labour standards (Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention).

Uganda

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since June 2004. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a report, including information in reply to the following points raised in 2004:

The Government indicated that the application of this Convention continues to depend on active tripartite participation, and that consultations were undertaken particularly at the time of revision of the national labour legislation. It also stated that training on the procedures and content of international labour standards might increase the effectiveness of tripartite consultation. The Government stated that it has received technical and financial assistance from the ILO to hold seminars and workshops on consultative procedures. The Committee invites the Government to report on any progress achieved in the field covered by the Convention, following the assistance received from the Office.

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide details on the consultations regarding international labour standards covered by the Convention (Article 5(1)).

Article 5(1)(c) and (e). The Committee recalls that the ILO Governing Body has invited States which are parties to certain Conventions that Uganda has ratified to contemplate ratifying the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169), and denouncing Conventions Nos 50, 64, 65 and 86. States parties to the Underground Work (Women) Convention, 1935 (No. 45), were invited to contemplate ratifying the Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176). Please indicate if tripartite consultations are envisaged on this matter.

Article 6. The Committee again requests the Government to indicate whether the representative organizations were consulted with regard to the production of an annual report on the operation of the procedures covered by the Convention and, if so, to state the outcome of these consultations.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

United Kingdom

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1977)

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the Government's detailed report received in August 2010 including replies to its 2008 observation. The Government indicates that it holds regular tripartite meetings and also arranges for separate tripartite consultations on particular subjects. The Government further indicates that it continues to provide comprehensive information, beyond the minimum necessary, so that the Committee of Experts, the Trades Union Congress (TUC) and the Confederation of British Industry (CBI) can have more context to scrutinize and understand action taken, to allow for fuller dialogue, including with the ILO, and for the sharing of good practice. The Government also regrets that not every report is completed in time to include comments of the social partners when reports are sent to the ILO. The Government intends to continue to update social partners on progress of reports and is open to, and encourages discussion with, social partners on all ILO matters. The Committee invites the Government to continue to report on measures taken to promote tripartite consultations on international labour standards, as required under the Convention, and on any follow-up to recommendations derived from such consultations.

United States

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1988)

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee had requested information on the outcome of consultations held to re-examine the prospects of ratification of unratified Conventions and any follow-up thereto (Article 5(1)(c) of the Convention). In this regard, the Committee welcomes this progress and notes with interest the reinvigoration of the President's Committee on the ILO (PC-ILO) and the Tripartite Advisory Panel on International Labour Standards (TAPILS), as reported by the Government in the report for the period ending July 2010. The Committee further notes that on 4 May 2010, the PC-ILO Committee called upon TAPILS to resume its work of reviewing the legal feasibility of the ratification of selected Conventions, such as the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185), and the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006). TAPILS was further asked to work toward the successful completion of the ratification process for the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), and to submit to PC-ILO a shortlist of other Conventions that appear to be suitable for legal review and possible ratification in the near future. The Government further reported that TAPILS was convened on 20 May 2010 for the first time since 2005 and has started to work on the review of United States law and practice with regard to Convention No. 111; TAPILS also decided on the expedited review of Convention No. 185 and the MLC, 2006, in conjunction with the Coast Guard and other relevant agencies. TAPILS further intends to develop a shortlist of Conventions suitable for legal review. The Committee invites the Government to continue regularly to supply information on the outcome of and the follow-up to tripartite consultations relating to the PC-ILO mechanism, including, in particular, its function of reviewing selected Conventions for possible ratification.

Uruguay

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1987)

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the Government's report for the period ending May 2010. The Committee notes Decree No. 558/008 of 21 November 2008 establishing the Tripartite Advisory Commission, which will operate under the auspices of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. The mandate of the Tripartite Advisory Commission reflects the provisions of Article 5(1) of the Convention. The operation of the Tripartite Advisory Commission is governed by the following rules: (1) the Tripartite Advisory Commission holds ordinary monthly meetings and extraordinary meetings when so required by the subjects or matters to be addressed; (2) meetings shall be convened five days in advance, with the exception of extraordinary meetings, which may be convened, upon request by the parties giving their reasons, 72 hours in advance; (3) the agenda shall be determined in advance and new items may only be included with the unanimous agreement of the parties; (4) items shall be addressed in a double discussion, unless it is unanimously decided otherwise: during the first discussion, the subject shall be presented and debated, and in the second discussion, following further debate, a decision shall be adopted; (5) if one sector is not present, the agenda will still be followed, with the Government delegates being under the obligation to forward a copy of the minutes with the items addressed to the absent sector: where such absence occurs in the meeting at which a decision has to be adopted, the decision shall not be prevented by such absence; (6) both the government sector and the social partners shall attend the meetings with their positions decided upon when the matter has previously been addressed in an earlier meeting; and (7) unless consensus or unanimity is achieved, decisions shall be adopted by a simple majority, with those voting against or abstaining having the opportunity to express their views. The Committee notes with interest that these rules consolidate the rules for the operation at the national level of a Tripartite Advisory Commission. Taking into account the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), the Chamber of Industries of Uruguay (CIU) and the National Chamber of Commerce and Services of Uruguay (CNCS), and the Government's reply received in November 2010, the Committee hopes that the next report will include detailed information on the operation of the Tripartite Advisory Commission and indicate how account has been taken of the views expressed by the representative organizations consulted on each of the subjects enumerated in Article 5(1) of the Convention.

Article 5(1)(c). Re-examination of unratified Conventions. With regard to the proposals made for the ratification of new Conventions, the Committee notes that, following tripartite consultations, the National Parliament approved in October 2009 the ratification of the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), and Workers' Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135). The Committee notes with interest that the ratification of Convention No. 102 was registered in October 2010.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1983)

Strengthening social dialogue and tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the observations made by the Federation of Chambers and Associations of Commerce and Production of Venezuela (FEDECAMARAS) received in August 2009 and 2010. Observations were also received from the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV) in August 2009 and from the Independent Trade Union Alliance (ASI) in August 2010. The Government forwarded its own comments in December 2009 and November 2010 in relation to the observations made by the social partners. The Committee notes the Government's report on the application of the Convention for the period ending September 2010. FEDECAMARAS reiterated its concern for the establishment of social dialogue and tripartite consultations as a genuine and sure path towards the socio-economic development of the country. The CTV and ASI also reported the lack of social dialogue between the national Government and trade union organizations. The matters raised by FEDECAMARAS include the approval of the Act of May 2009 reserving for the State the goods and services of primary hydrocarbon activities, the increases in minimum wages and the amendment of the new Act respecting the National Cooperation and Education Institute, some of which are also referred to in the Committee's comments on the application of the Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26), and the Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142). The Committee also notes the record of the proceedings of the meeting on 12 May 2009, of nine employers' organizations with the Standing Committee on Integral Social Development of the National Assembly on possible reforms to the Basic Labour Act, which was transmitted by FEDECAMARAS. The Committee refers once again to its previous comments and reiterates its conviction that the Government and the social partners should undertake to promote and strengthen tripartism and social dialogue on the matters covered by the Convention. The Committee therefore invites the Government and the social partners to provide information in the next report on the "effective consultations" on international labour standards required by Convention No. 144, which is a major Convention from the viewpoint of governance.

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes with interest that the President of the National Assembly was provided with information on 30 August 2010 on 41 international labour Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference between 1992 and 2007 (Article 5(1)(b) of the Convention). The ASI indicated that the Government failed to apply Convention No. 144 because it has not brought the information supplied to the Committee of Experts to the attention of the workers' organizations. The Government indicated in the reply received in November 2010 that it fully complies with its obligation to communicate to the representative organizations of workers and employers regarding copies of the reports sent to the ILO, in conformity with article 23(2) of the ILO Constitution and in accordance with the requirements of Convention No. 144. The Committee recalls that the obligation to consult representative organizations with regard to the reports to be made on the application of ratified Conventions, under the terms of Article 5(1)(d) of the Convention, must be distinguished from the obligation to communicate reports under article 23(2) of the Constitution. The tripartite consultations required by the Convention must be held during the process of preparing reports. Where consultations are held in writing, the Government should transmit a draft report to the representative organizations in order to gather their opinions before preparing its definitive report (paragraphs 92–93 of the General Survey of 2000 on tripartite consultation). The effectiveness of consultations thus presupposed that the representative organizations have all the necessary information far enough in advance to formulate their own opinions and then to be in a position to put forward those opinions before the Government takes its final decision (paragraph 31 of the General Survey of 2000). The Committee once again invites the Government to indicate in its next report the manner in which the opinions expressed by the representative organizations consulted on each of the matters covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention have been taken into account, with particular reference to the manner in which its practice has developed with regard to tripartite consultation on draft reports on the application of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d)).

Zimbabwe

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1989)

Strengthening social dialogue. Support of the Office. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in November 2010 indicating that it intends to prepare a bill to legislate the Tripartite Negotiating Forum (TNF). The Government reports on the TNF full meeting, held on 16 September 2010, during which its members were informed about the progress made to finalize the principles of the TNF legislation and to make the appropriate arrangements for an independent TNF secretariat. TNF members were also invited to note the adoption of the National Employment Policy by the Cabinet on 1 June 2010. Prospects for ratification of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), will also be discussed in the TNF. The Government further reports that at a meeting on 16 October 2010, the social partners deliberated on the agreed upon priority areas of employment creation; social protection and HIV and AIDS at the workplace; social dialogue; and gender equality and women empowerment. The Committee welcomes this approach in achieving solutions and building up social cohesion and the rule of law through effective tripartite consultations. It therefore invites the Government to include in its next report further information on the progress made to institutionalize the Tripartite National Forum and its contribution to the tripartite consultations on international labour standards required under Convention No. 144, a Convention that is to be regarded as most significant from the viewpoint of governance.

Effective tripartite consultations. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the operation of the procedures which ensure tripartite consultations in respect of each of the matters listed in Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Government is also requested to indicate the frequency of consultations held in this regard and to indicate the nature of any reports or recommendations made as a result thereof (Article 5(2) of the Convention).

Article 5(1)(d). Reports on ratified Conventions. In the comments forwarded to the Government in November 2009, the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) indicated that it did not receive a copy of the Government's reports on ratified ILO Conventions and thus submitted its own comments without reference to the Government's reports. The Committee again recalls that "the obligation to consult the representative organizations on the reports to be made concerning the application of ratified Conventions must be clearly distinguished from the obligation to communicate these reports under article 23(2) of the ILO Constitution. To fulfil their obligations under this provision of the Convention, it is not sufficient for governments to communicate to employers' and workers' organizations copies of the reports that they send to the Office, since any comments that these organizations may subsequently transmit to the Office on these reports cannot replace the consultations which have to be held during the preparation of the reports" (paragraph 92 of the 2000 General Survey on tripartite consultation, bearing in mind the discussion of "effective consultations" in paragraphs 29–31 of the General Survey). The Committee invites the Government to examine the measures to be undertaken to hold "effective consultations" on questions arising out of reports to be made to the ILO under article 22 of the ILO Constitution.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 144 (Algeria, Benin, Burkina Faso, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Djibouti, Ecuador, France: French Polynesia, France: New Caledonia, Kazakhstan, Republic of Korea, Lesotho, Malaysia, Mali, Republic of Moldova, Mongolia, Montenegro, Mozambique, Namibia, Netherlands: Aruba, Romania, Serbia, Seychelles, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, United Republic of Tanzania, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Ukraine, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia).

Labour administration and inspection

General observation

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81)

Articles 20 and 21 of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81). Publication and content of an annual report on the functioning of labour inspection services. The Committee notes that the general discussion at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (2011) will be on labour administration and labour inspection, and particularly on the measures to be taken to improve the collection and standardization of data and information from labour inspectorates (GB.308/5(Add.3) and GB.309/ESP/3). The Committee has constantly placed emphasis on the essential importance that it attaches to the publication and communication to the ILO within the prescribed time limits of an annual labour inspection report.

When well prepared, the annual report offers an indispensable basis for the evaluation of the results in practice of the activities of the labour inspection services and, subsequently, the determination of the means necessary to improve their effectiveness. The ILO's supervisory bodies, including the Committee of Experts, based on all the information contained in the annual report, are able to provide support to governments in the most relevant manner possible in the implementation of the commitments deriving from the ratification of the Convention, as well as other ratified ILO standards addressing conditions of work and the protection of workers. This support may take various forms with a view to the achievement of the socio-economic objectives of the Convention, namely the continued improvement of conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work and, by the same token, as is now widely recognized, the improvement of the economic performance of enterprises.

The publication of the annual inspection report, particularly through modern technological means, can also facilitate the development of exchanges in the fields of the conditions of work and the protection of workers at the regional and international levels, including through technical and financial cooperation. In addition, the protection of migrant workers through international labour policies and agreements could be reinforced through the information made available in this way.

If the national and international objectives of the Convention in relation to the annual report are to be achieved, the report has to be published and communicated to the ILO within a reasonable time and contain, at the very least, up-to-date information on the following subjects:

- the field of the legal and material competence of the labour inspection services (legal provisions defining their organization and powers);
- the human resources and institutional, logistical and material means available to the institution;
- its field of personal competence (enterprises, establishments and other workplaces liable to inspection, as well as the workers occupied therein);
- its means of operation (inspections, notifications of violations or non-compliance, technical advice and information, observations, warnings, the initiation or recommendation of prosecutions, the imposition of penalties);
- finally, occupational risks (through data on industrial accidents and cases of occupational diseases).

In this respect, the Committee recalls that extremely valuable guidance on the presentation and analysis of this information are provided in the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81). It underlines once again, in particular, the need for the inclusion in the annual report of data on the scope of the national labour inspection system (workplaces and persons covered) so as to be able to assess the coverage rate in practice, if necessary, through the appropriate inter-institutional cooperation

The Committee encourages governments to continue making efforts to ensure the publication in due time of the annual report stipulated in Article 20 and the inclusion in this report of the information required by Article 21. The Committee recalls that the technical assistance of the Office can be requested to facilitate the implementation of Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention.

Further to the campaign for the ratification and implementation of the governance Conventions launched by the Director-General of the ILO in the context of the follow-up to the ILO Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization (ILC, 97th Session, June 2008), the Committee wishes to encourage member States which have not yet ratified the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), to examine the possibility of engaging in tripartite consultations on the benefits of ratifying this instrument and requests governments to keep the ILO informed of any developments in this respect.

Albania

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes with interest that, according to the Government Law No. 7995 “On the promotion of employment” of 20 September 1995 has been amended to improve the definition of employment, introduce the concept of employment services, counselling and orientation for the profession, and develop new employment programmes, such as professional practice for recent high school graduates. It also notes with interest that the Government carried out 2008 different programmes in this context to promote employment, which provided financial support to employers participating in these programmes, such as: 15 projects promoting employment of unemployed women jobseekers, as a result of which 456 women were employed; 44 projects promoting employment through training at work, as a result of which 1,180 unemployed jobseekers were trained; 29 projects promoting employment of unemployed jobseekers in difficulties, as a result of which 250 unemployed jobseekers were employed within a 12-month term; 69 projects offering professional practice to recent high school graduates, as a result of which 302 unemployed jobseekers took professional practice at public and private institutions. The Government also reports on the implementation of other programmes promoting training and employment of women, with priority given to particular groups of women such as victims of trafficking, women with disabilities, Roma women, women over the age of 35, young mothers and divorced women, as well as about the programmes providing vocational training for free or reduced rates for the Roma community.

The Government also supports capacity building through the development of a public vocational training system. At present there are ten regional directorates of public professional training and a mobile regional directorate centre for professional training in the north-east of the country where unemployment is high, the latter being funded by the Swiss Government under the AlbVET project. These centres offer courses of occupations mainly for those who want to take up a profession or keep their workplace by getting new skills. In this context, the EU assists the Government under the CARDS programme, “Support for the VET reform”, as a result of which the National Agency for Vocational Education and Training was established. At the same time, the German Government assists to improve the VET system by solving and equipping the centres with materials, assisting in curricula development, offering training and coaching through the project “Learning during life”. So, in 2008, as a result of the activity of ten regional directorates 7,577 trainees were certified, of whom 1,857 were unemployed jobseekers. Moreover, in order to integrate jobseekers into the labour market, the Government organized few employment fairs in cities like Durres, Fies, Berat and Tirana in 2008, where up to 70 per cent of the vacancies offered by the employers were filled.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the organization of the preparation, administration, coordination, checking and review of the national employment policy, and on the functions and existing policies of the entrusted bodies with respect to the national employment policy. The Government is also requested to provide information on the implementation of the abovementioned National Strategy of Employment and Professional Training, transformation of the national employment service, as well as on the measures taken to ensure a positive impact of the existing policies aimed at reducing the level of unemployment and the programmes carried out in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes with interest the Government’s detailed report as well as the half-yearly inspection report published in December 2009 which completes the report covering the period from January to June of the same year.

Articles 5 and 9 of the Convention. Cooperation between the inspection services and other government services and collaboration with employers and workers. The Committee notes with interest the information provided concerning a number of instructions essentially designed, according to the Government, to increase the effectiveness of the technical assistance given to the social partners, strengthen social dialogue at the local level, encourage effective practices and raise awareness of those practices and establish structures relating to the prevention of occupational hazards by promoting the widespread use of new technological communication processes to disseminate information relating to conditions of work and employment, strengthening the monitoring of illegal employment practices and working conditions and coordinating efforts to combat and prevent child labour with other ministerial departments. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of the above instructions in its next report and indicate the measures actually implemented to give effect to those instructions in practice. It requests the Government to inform the ILO of the results achieved by means of institutional collaboration and collaboration with the social partners in the specific areas of the prevention of occupational hazards, illegal practices relating to working conditions and child labour.

Article 7. Training of labour inspectors. The Committee notes with interest that the training of labour inspectors has continued and has covered investigation and survey methods, methods of analysing occupational hazards and their prevention, and information technology. According to the Government, the training provided has improved the level of technical knowledge of inspection staff and increased the effectiveness of their work. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue providing detailed information on the training provided for inspection staff and its impact on inspection activities and their results.

Articles 8, 10 and 16. Number of labour inspectors. Inspections carried out. The Committee notes that while the number of public servants providing administrative support for labour inspectors was increased significantly during the period covered by the Government's report (83 new members of staff), the number of labour inspectors of all grades fell from 900 to 874. Furthermore, the number of inspectors working in the field fell from 697 to 659. According to the Government, this continuous fall in the number of inspectors over several years is the result of staff retiring or being promoted. It considers the ratio of one inspector for every 9,000 workers to be satisfactory and as a result, has not announced any measures to halt this trend. Furthermore, it indicates that each inspection section operates with two inspectors.

The Committee further notes that women account for only one tenth of the number of inspection staff (91 out of 874) and that this proportion should be increased by means of recruitment programmes. However, the Government does not provide details of the measures implemented to that end.

With regard to the inspections carried out by labour inspectors, the Committee notes with interest that the number of inspections carried out rose from 108,372 in 2008 to 126,326 in 2009, representing an increase of 16.56 per cent. In this regard, it notes with interest the implementation in practice of the instructions laying down how often inspections of enterprises should be carried out: at least twice a year for workplaces in which workers are most exposed to occupational hazards, enterprises included in the chart for the prevention of collective disputes and small and medium-sized enterprises, and at least once a year for workplaces in which workers are not exposed to major safety and health risks. However, given that the total number of workplaces liable to inspection is not available, it is virtually impossible to assess the rate of coverage of the labour inspectorate. It once again reminds the Government of the importance of ensuring the availability of such information not only for that purpose but also to enable the central authority to give sufficient grounds in requests for budgetary allocations with a view to ensuring optimum coverage with regard to labour inspections.

The Committee requests the Government to ensure that, in future, the report on the work of the labour inspectorate contains figures relating to the workplaces liable to inspection, as well as the number of workers employed therein, and to indicate in its next report the manner in which it is ensured that the annual objectives relating to the minimum number of inspections of workplaces liable to inspection are achieved. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures envisaged or taken to compensate for separations from service due to retirement or personal promotion so that the number of inspectors in the field remains sufficient in relation to the number of workplaces to be covered and the complexity of labour inspection duties, to increase the number of female inspectors taking into account the composition of the workforce and to keep the ILO informed of the results achieved.

Article 11. Material means available to labour inspectors. The Committee notes that five new wilaya labour inspection headquarters have been completed in the context of the project to build 43 regional and wilaya inspection headquarters during the period 2005–08 (Skikda, El Tarf, Béchar, Souk Ahras and Tlemcen) and that 21 additional headquarters are in the process of being built. It also notes that new vehicles have been acquired since the Government's last report on the application of the Convention and that a fleet of 131 vehicles is now available to labour inspectors. The Committee notes with interest this information which shows the Government's efforts to improve the means of action of the labour inspectorate and would be grateful if the Government would continue keeping the Office informed of any developments in this regard.

Articles 14 and 21(g). Industrial accidents and occupational diseases. The Committee notes that, under section 13(c) of Act No. 83-13 of 2 July 1983, any industrial accident shall be reported by the social security body to the labour inspector covering the enterprise concerned. According to the Government, in the event of a serious industrial accident, the labour inspection services carry out thorough investigations based on a standardized framework.

With regard to occupational diseases, under section 71 of the same Act, a copy of the document reporting the case shall be transmitted to the labour inspectorate. The Government adds that, in general, the labour inspectorate receives information on industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease by means of investigations carried out by the employer, workers, the prevention body or by the services of the National Social Insurance Fund for Salaried Employees. However, the Committee notes that the reports on the work of the labour inspectorate do not contain relevant information. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the methods actually used to provide the labour inspectorate with information relating to industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease, as well as a copy of any relevant document, such as the text implementing sections 68 and 69 of Act No. 83-13 of 2 July 1983, instructions, report forms, etc. It would be grateful if the Government would also provide information on the role of labour inspectors in the context of the investigations carried out following serious industrial accidents, as well as the measures to be taken to avoid the occurrence of new accidents or cases of occupational disease.

Articles 5(a), 13, 17, 18 and 21(e). Action taken in response to reports of violations or occupational safety and health risks. Cooperation with judicial bodies. The Committee notes the general information contained in the reports of the labour inspectorate concerning its activities (routine, special and follow-up inspections) and the measures taken by labour inspectors (written comments, formal warnings and reports of violations). In its previous comments, it requested the Government to provide a copy of any court decisions handed down concerning violations reported by the labour inspectorate and to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to develop effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the judicial bodies. It notes that in 2009, inspectors issued 57,666 formal warnings, 37,782 reports of violations and 14,796 written comments and that the actions mainly concerned the failure to declare the employment of workers and occupational safety and health. However, no information is provided concerning the action taken by the courts in order to follow up on the reports of violations issued during the periods covered by the previous government reports or concerning any measures taken to promote effective cooperation between the labour inspectorate and the judicial bodies. In this regard, the Committee refers to its general observation of 2007 and requests the Government to take measures to promote effective cooperation between the labour inspectorate and the judicial bodies and to ensure that, in future, the report on the work of the labour inspectorate contains the most detailed information possible concerning the violations noted by labour inspectors during their inspections, as well as the administrative measures (cessation of work, for example), administrative fines and judicial decisions handed down against those responsible for violating the legal provisions on working conditions and the protection of workers.

Article 21. Content of annual reports. Noting the efforts made by the central labour inspection authority to publish and transmit to the ILO half-yearly reports on inspection activities, the Committee draws its attention to the guidance provided in paragraph 9 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), concerning the ideal level of detail for the information which should be included in the annual inspection report. It emphasizes the importance of this report as a tool for evaluating the operation of the labour inspectorate and determining measures to ensure its gradual improvement. The presentation of the information required is not an end in itself. It should be processed and analysed by the central labour inspection authority with a view to achieving the socio-economic objective inherent in the eminently important function of the labour inspectorate. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would take measures to give full effect to the provisions of Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention, so that the annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate constitutes, each year, a reliable basis for assessing the budgetary resources required to improve its operation.

Labour inspection and child labour. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government has not provided the information required on inspection activities in the area of combating child labour. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken by the labour inspectorate to enforce the legislation relating to child labour and, if necessary, punish those responsible, as well as on the impact of these measures on developments relating to the phenomenon.

Angola

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes with interest the annual inspection report for 2009, containing figures on the staff of the labour inspection services, estimated data of workplaces liable to inspection, statistics of inspection visits, violations and penalties imposed and of industrial accidents as well as other instructive information on the activities of the General Labour Inspectorate (IGT), such as on preventive measures in the area of occupational safety and health.

The Committee notes an ongoing reform of the labour inspection system and a relevant plan for 2010–14. Further, it notes with interest that, following a request by the Government for technical assistance and an assessment of the situation of labour inspection in the country by a multidisciplinary team of the ILO in March and April 2010 in response to this request, various recommendations were made. These recommendations relate to the need for legislative reforms, particularly as regards safety and health, the conditions of service (remuneration, career prospects) and powers of labour inspectors (with a view to relieving them of additional functions, such as mediation or conciliation), classification of breaches of labour law according to their gravity and determination of appropriate sanctions, as well as the obligation of notification to the labour inspectorate of cases of occupational accidents and diseases, and the need to ensure the application in practice of the relevant legal provisions. In addition, the Committee notes recommendations for improved initial and regular training of labour inspectors; initiation of proactive inspection visits through check-lists and computerized registers of workplaces and other useful data; the promotion of collaboration with the social partners and other bodies, such as the National Institute for Social Security (INSS), as well as the strengthening of coercive enforcement mechanisms. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would keep the ILO informed of the steps taken in the framework of the ongoing reform, particularly in relation to the recommendations made by the ILO, and communicate a copy of any relevant texts or document.

Antigua and Barbuda

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1983)

Articles 3(2) and 16 of the Convention. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors and frequency of inspection visits. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement that labour inspectors only carry out labour inspection functions. The Committee recalls however, that according to the job description communicated by the Government, labour inspectors may be required from time to time to function in other areas of the Labour Department and may be assigned other duties by their immediate supervisor, the Labour

Commissioner or the Deputy Labour Commissioner. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the numbers and frequency of inspections in industrial and commercial workplaces achieved as a result of the main focus of labour inspectors on the effective discharge of their primary functions and to give details as to additional functions that may be entrusted to them.

Article 5. Cooperation between the labour inspection services and other Government services or public institutions and collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee notes that according to the Government there has been no change on the question of promoting cooperation between the labour inspectorate and the Ministry of Health despite the Committee's longstanding comments on this question and a previous commitment to this effect by the Government. The Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information on the difficulties which prevent the adoption of practical measures to develop cooperation between the labour inspectorate and the Ministry of Health (for instance, the regular exchange of information and data, common training seminars or conferences, etc.). It also asks the Government once again to provide details on the content and modalities of any existing cooperation.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that according to the Government, there has been no change on the issue of collaboration with trade unions. Recalling once again that the existing collaboration is very limited, merely consisting of the trade unions informing the Labour Department of violations of legal provisions in workplaces, the Committee refers the Government once again to Part II of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), on examples of measures that might be taken to encourage collaboration between labour inspectors and both workers and employers, such as the organization of conferences or joint committees, or similar bodies to provide a space for discussions on safety and health issues. The Committee once again urges the Government to take measures to encourage collaboration between the labour inspectorate and the social partners, and to keep the ILO informed of the results achieved. With regard to occupational safety and health in particular, noting that the tripartite National Labour Board is responsible for the revision of the Labour Code which relates to safety and health issues in the private sector, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the labour inspectorate is associated in the work of this Board in any way.

Articles 6, 7 and 10. Number, status and qualifications of labour inspectors. The Committee notes that according to the Government's report the inspectorate is comprised of nine "non-established" labour inspectors and one "established" civil servant (or two such civil servants according to the annual labour inspection report). All labour inspectors conduct general inspections with reference to Article 3(1) of the Convention. Only one labour inspector specializes in the area of occupational safety and health. There is no requirement as to the qualifications and level of competence required of the other labour inspectors who are not labour inspectors in the strict sense of the word. Labour inspectors are remunerated according to the scale of the department in which they are placed. They received training during the reporting period in various areas including modern inspection techniques, basic inspections, the Labour Code, ILO Conventions and occupational hygiene.

The Committee recalls that according to Article 10, the number of labour inspectors should be sufficient to secure the effective discharge of their duties. Moreover, under Article 6, the inspection staff should be composed of public officials whose status and conditions of service are such that they are assured of stability of employment and are independent of changes of government and improper external influences. Finally, under Article 7, labour inspectors should be recruited with sole regard to their qualifications and should be adequately trained for the performance of their duties.

The Committee requests the Government to indicate the steps taken or envisaged to ensure that:

- the labour inspectorate is staffed with adequate numbers of labour inspectors, especially in the area of occupational safety and health;
- all labour inspectors are recruited with sole regard to their qualifications;
- all labour inspectors are assured of the status, notably stability of employment and adequate wages, which is necessary to ensure their independence vis-à-vis changes of government and improper external influences. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to specify the scale of remuneration of labour inspectors by comparison to the remuneration of comparable categories of public officers such as tax inspectors.

Moreover, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide details on the training programmes provided to labour inspectors, in particular the subjects, duration, attendance, evaluation and impact and to communicate copies of any relevant documents.

Articles 17 and 18. Necessary balance between warnings and the prosecution of employers in violation. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement that labour inspectors are free to decide whether to prosecute those found in breach of the law. The Committee recalls once again that while advice and information can only encourage and lead to compliance with legal provisions, it should nonetheless be accompanied by an enforcement mechanism allowing for prosecution where needed. The functions of enforcement and advice are inseparable in practice and the credibility of the labour inspectorate depends to a large extent on the existence and implementation of a sufficiently dissuasive enforcement mechanism (see 2006 General Survey on labour inspection, paragraphs 279 and 280). The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of warnings issued by labour inspectors and the number of prosecutions initiated, as well as their outcome in practice.

Articles 19, 20 and 21. Annual report on labour inspection activities. The Committee notes with interest that for the first time since 1995, an annual labour inspection report on the year 2009 was communicated to the ILO. The Committee invites the Government to take all necessary measures so as to ensure that the annual report is published as required by Article 20, and draws attention to Part IV of Recommendation No. 81 which provides guidance on how the information and statistics requested under Article 21 can be disaggregated to give a reliable basis for the assessment of the work of the labour inspection system.

Armenia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 2004)

The Committee notes the Government's report accompanied by the comments made by the Union of Manufacturers and Entrepreneurs of Armenia (UMEA) and the Confederation of Trade Unions of Armenia (CTUA) received by the ILO on 23 December 2009.

Articles 16 and 18 of the Convention. Obstructions to the performance of inspection duties. The Committee notes with concern the Government's indication that 137 inspections of enterprises were prevented from being carried out. The Committee requests the Government to indicate why it was not possible to carry out the inspections mentioned and to specify the measures taken to overcome the obstacles identified, if necessary through the application of penalties in the case of obstructions.

Article 5(b). Collaboration between labour inspectorate officials and employers and workers or their organizations. In its comments, the UMEA reports a lack of collaboration between the labour inspectorate and the social partners and expresses the hope for periodic exchanges on problems faced. The Committee requests the Government to refer to paragraphs 163–172 of its General Survey of 2006 concerning the role of the social partners in the operation of the labour inspectorate, in which it emphasizes that the labour inspectorate can attain its objectives only if appropriate measures are adopted by the competent authority to promote effective collaboration with employers and workers in its operations and activities. Such collaboration may take place within a tripartite advisory body with a general mandate for labour issues. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to promote collaboration between the labour inspectorate and organizations of workers and employers and to keep the Office informed of the results achieved in that regard.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual reports on the work of the labour inspectorate. The UMEA emphasizes that although section 12 of the Act on the conditions of service of the labour inspectorate provides for the preparation and publication of an annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate, such reports are not published (2008 report), are incomplete or are published late. The Committee reminds the Government that a report on the work of the labour inspectorate should be published and transmitted to the ILO each year. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to publish and transmit an annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate as soon as possible. It draws the Government's attention to the guidance provided in paragraph 9 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81) on the presentation of the information required.

Communication of legal texts. The Committee notes that the Government has not yet provided the ILO with the documents requested by the Committee in its previous comments. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide the ILO with the following texts as soon as possible:

- the Administrative Infringements Code of 6 December 1985;
- the Act of 17 May 2000 on the Organization and Conduct of Inspections;
- the Act of 13 December 2004 on Administrative Conduct and Principles;
- Government Decision No. 1146-N of 29 August 2004 establishing the State Labour Inspectorate within the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs, confirming the statutes of the State Labour Inspectorate and amending previous Government Decision (14 November 2002) No. 1821-N;
- Government Decision No. 1893-N of 6 October 2005 on the provision of information to the State Labour Inspectorate;
- Government Decision No. 2301-N of 6 October 2005 adopting the procedure for the submission of quarterly reports by employers to the State Labour Inspectorate;
- Government Decision No. N876 of 16 June 2006 establishing the form, use and procedure for issuing a copy of a workbook;
- Government Decision No. N1882-N of 20 October 2005 on the procedure for publication, accounting, conservation and archiving of the employer's internal and private legal documents;
- The Public Service Act.

Australia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes the comments made by the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) in a communication dated 31 August 2010 as well as the Government's response thereto. It finally notes the observations by the ACTU dated 25 October 2010 and requests the Government to communicate any comment it deems relevant in this regard.

Articles 3(1), 16, 17 and 18 of the Convention. Impact of legislative developments on the functioning of the system of labour inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that following the replacement of the Workplace Relations Act (WR Act) by the Fair Work Act 2009 (FW Act), the Workplace Ombudsman, i.e., the inspection body which had been previously criticized by the ACTU for using aggressive methods of investigation in order to determine whether trade unions and workers had been in breach of the workplace legislation, had ceased operations on 30 June 2009, all of its functions having been assumed by the Office of the Fair Work Ombudsman (FWO).

The Committee notes with interest from the Government's report that the FWO is committed to encouraging and enforcing compliance with the provisions of the FW Act and other specified legislation through procedural fairness and that the FWO's authority has expanded to include oversight of almost all workplaces in New South Wales, Queensland, South Australia and Tasmania as a consequence of the referral to the Commonwealth of the industrial relations power of these states on 1 January 2010. In this framework, contracts for services were signed with the New South Wales, Queensland and South Australian industrial relations agencies, as a result of which, 203 inspectors from these provinces have been appointed as fair work inspectors and will carry out investigations under the direction of the FWO. In addition, the FWO has appointed 12 inspectors from the Western Australian labour inspection agency to investigate federal matters that have some relevance to the Western Australian state system. Fair work inspector numbers have therefore increased by approximately 74 per cent.

The Committee also notes that the FWO implements a compliance model that combines complaints, investigations, targeted education and compliance campaigns (undertaken upon the basis of evidence of systemic non-compliance, or in the presence of a higher percentage of vulnerable workers within a given industry), and prosecutions deemed to be in the public interest. The Committee notes in particular with interest from the annual report of the FWO the increased use of civil litigation as a form of insistence on compliance and the significant penalties awarded by the courts which confirms according to the FWO that "the light-handed approach to industrial regulation is a thing of the past". From 1 July 2009 to 30 June 2010, the FWO had: finalized over 21,070 investigations; recovered AU$21,312,749 on behalf of employees; and had 66 proceedings commenced and enforceable undertakings received for breaches of the FW Act.

Furthermore, the Government indicates that extensive education efforts are continually being applied to allow employers and employees to understand their rights and obligations through a range of guides, tools and educational material, the Fair Work Infoline, the Transition Assist Service (aimed at unions and industry groups), the National Employer Branch (to assist large national enterprises) and media campaigns.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the activities of the FWO, and to indicate in particular the matters in relation to which most violations were found, prosecutions initiated and penalties imposed.

Furthermore, the Committee notes from the Government's report that the FWO has tried a new compliance technique, termed assisted voluntary resolution (AVR), which is typically applied in the first 30 days of a complaint, and involves fair work inspectors facilitating communication between complainants and the other party to reach mutually acceptable outcomes; the FWO will roll out this method more widely during 2010–11. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide detailed information on the scope of activities carried out by the FWO and the range of subjects addressed in the framework of the AVR and also indicate the percentage of labour inspection activities dedicated to AVR and their outcomes.

Article 5(b). Collaboration between officials of the labour inspectorate and employers and workers or their organizations. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the FW Act maintained certain restrictions initially imposed by the WR Act on the wide powers traditionally conferred upon trade unions to ensure enforcement of awards and agreements and transferred most of this power to a public authority, namely, the FWO. The Committee notes that according to the latest comments by the ACTU, despite some improvements in relation to the former statutory regime (the WR Act), the FW Act has retained much of the WR Act architecture on the right of entry, i.e., a permit system, the prohibition of obtaining, through collective bargaining, entry rights that are superior to those in the statutory regime and the possibility for a party (e.g., employer) to apply for a "representation order" which may have the effect of preventing a trade union from representing certain classes of employees (including with regard to the access to workplaces to investigate suspected breaches of workplace laws). According to the ACTU, it is very important for the application of the new statutory provisions to be closely monitored so as to ensure that these provisions do not unduly limit trade union access to workplaces. The ACTU indicates certain improvements in relation to regular consultations taking place with the social partners on issues such as targeted education and compliance campaigns and best practice guides available on the FWO website.

According to the Government, collaboration and consultation with employer and employee organizations is an integral part of the FWO's activities in respect of development and implementation of framework policies as well as in the conduct of complaints, investigations and targeted education and compliance campaigns. The Government refers to the example of the development of the FWO's education and advice material such as best practice guides, and guidance notes, including the interpretation of transitional arrangements created by the national workplace tribunal, Fair Work Australia. However, the Government acknowledges that the coverage of the system of the FWO has considerably expanded so that inspections of all businesses within its jurisdiction is not possible.

In this respect, the Committee is of the view that the establishment of a mechanism of collaboration between the FWO, and the organizations of workers could help maximize the effectiveness of the labour inspection system, notably through information exchange, the submission of complaints etc. Moreover, tripartite bodies and cooperation agreements at various levels could play an important role to this end (see General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, paragraphs 163–171).

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would furnish information in its next report on arrangements made or envisaged in order to promote collaboration between the Fair Work Ombudsman and employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee would also appreciate statistical data on the exercise by trade unions of the right of entry to workplaces for compliance purposes.

Article 3(1) and (2). Building and construction industry. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it took note of the serious concerns expressed by the ACTU on the conduct of the Australian Building and Construction Commission (ABCC), established on the basis of the Building and Construction Industry Improvement (BCII) Act, 2005, mainly in relation to an unbalanced approach of the ABCC in favour of employers and wide-ranging coercive powers bestowed upon it by the BCII Act. In particular, the ACTU had criticized the fact that the ABCC can carry out interrogations in private and the interviewees are generally not allowed to disclose to anyone else what happened during the interrogation on penalty of six months' imprisonment.

The Committee takes note of the comments by the ACTU dated 31 August 2010 according to which despite electoral commitments to abolish the ABCC and replace it by a specialist division of the general labour inspectorate, in June 2009 the Government introduced legislation to Parliament to amend the BCII Act by replacing the ABCC with a separate and autonomous statutory agency working in parallel with, but independently of, the FWO. The Bill proposes to retain the power of coercive interview for this specialist statutory agency, but in an amended form with some procedural safeguards. Although the Building and Construction Industry Improvement Amendment (Transition to Fair Work) Bill 2009 was introduced into the Parliament in June 2009, it has not passed through the Senate. Consequently, the BCII Act remains unamended and the ABCC continues to operate as it has done since September 2005. The ACTU believes that the retention of such a separate labour inspectorate runs counter to the principle of a single central system of labour inspection which is embodied in Article 1 of the Convention. It notes in this regard that Australia is moving rapidly towards a single national system of labour law as all but one state have referred their industrial powers to the Commonwealth Government. The ACTU also notes that the ABCC does not operate in such a way as to enforce the legal provisions that are designed to protect workers in their employment. Rather, workers themselves are the subject of ABCC investigation, interrogation and prosecution for alleged breaches of industrial relations law (which includes wages and hours of work) and the BCII Act while only 4.5 per cent of the ABCC's investigations in 2008–09 were directed at employers. The ACTU provides detailed data to support this view:

- the ABCC has adopted an “understanding” with the former Workplace Ombudsman (now the FWO) that the ABCC will not deal with allegations of non-payment of wages and entitlements in accordance with applicable awards and agreements, despite the fact that the construction industry has been recently ranked as the fourth highest for employer non-compliance with legally binding awards and agreements that set employee rates of pay and conditions of employment;
- in its most recent annual report, the ABCC disclosed that 63 per cent of all its investigations were directed at trade unions and a further 8.5 per cent concerned the conduct of workers in 2008–09. In 2006–07, the corresponding figures were 73 and 11 per cent respectively. Unions or employees were the subject of on average 76.5 per cent or more than three-quarters of all ABCC investigations between 1 July 2006 and 30 June 2009;
- the ABCC's report on the exercise of compliance powers for the period 1 October 2005 to 31 March 2010, shows that out of 197 “examinations” conducted in the period, 135 were directed at employees and ten at union officials; only 50 examinees were management/employer representatives. One worker is presently on trial for allegedly refusing to attend a coercive interview facing a possible penalty of six months' imprisonment. An earlier criminal prosecution against a union official had been withdrawn in November 2008;
- as of 8 July 2010 there had been 37 ABCC prosecutions before the courts. Of these, 36 identified a trade union, trade union official or employee as respondents to the proceedings. Only one of the 37 matters has been taken by the ABCC against an employer. The number of ABCC prosecutions against unions and workers has dramatically increased in the last 18 months.

The ACTU therefore considers that the ABCC disregards the functions which should be the primary responsibility of any labour inspectorate under the Convention and exercises unwarranted powers which should not be bestowed on a body dealing with contraventions of the civil law and potentially minor breaches of industrial instruments. According to the ACTU, this situation also undermines a key element of the Convention, namely, the impartiality of inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. Finally, the ACTU observes that the ABCC remains extensively resourced, with a total workforce of 156 people, and a recent addition of AU$33,342,000 to its annual funding.

The Government replies that the Building and Construction Industry Improvement (Transition to Fair Work) Bill 2009 has been based on the recommendations of a former Federal Court Judge and Chief Justice of the Industrial Relations Court of Australia (Transition to Fair Work Australia for the building and construction industry, March 2009). The Bill gave effect to the Government's commitment to abolish the ABCC and replace it with a new independent regulator, the Fair Work Building Industry Inspectorate (the Inspectorate) which was designed to ensure compliance with relevant workplace relations laws by actively pursuing the unlawful or inappropriate conduct of all building industry participants including, importantly, the underpayment of employee entitlements, such as wages.

However, the coercive interrogation powers currently given to the ABCC were retained since according to the abovementioned report: "there is still such a level of industrial unlawfulness in the building and construction industry, especially in Victoria and Western Australia, that it would be inadvisable not to empower the [Inspectorate] to undertake compulsory examination. The reality is that, without such a power, some types of contravention would be almost impossible to prove" (op. cit., paragraph 1.23). However, the Bill also included a number of safeguards to ensure that these coercive interrogation powers vis-à-vis workers and their organizations are used in a fair and balanced manner. The Bill passed the lower house on 13 August 2009 and was introduced into the Senate on 17 August 2009 but lapsed when, on 19 July 2010, Parliament was prorogued for General Election for the House of Representatives and half the Senate. The re-elected Australian Government is committed to reintroducing this legislation as a matter of priority. A ministerial direction which had been issued on 17 June 2009 to circumvent the application of coercive powers and the conduct of compulsory interviews by the ABCC, was finally overturned in full by the Senate on 25 June 2009.

The Committee notes with concern that the enforcement of legal provisions on the protection of workers constitutes a very small percentage of the ABCC's activities; this body has according to the ACTU declared that it will refrain from its primary functions under the Convention, i.e., investigating allegations of non-payment of wages and entitlements, directing instead the main bulk of its activities at the investigation, examination and prosecution of workers and trade union officials, notably for industrial action. The Committee cannot emphasize enough that under Article 3 of the Convention, the prosecution of workers does not constitute part of the primary duties of inspectors and may not only seriously interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties – which should be centred on the protection of workers under Article 3(1) – but also prejudice the authority and impartiality necessary in the relations between inspectors and employers and workers as provided for in Article 3(2). With regard to the "unlawfulness" which justifies according to the report on "Transition to Fair Work Australia for the building and construction industry" the exercise of such functions by the labour inspection system, the Committee notes that it essentially relates to industrial action (strikes) (op. cit., paragraph 1.17) and refers in this regard to its comments under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

Noting with concern that the manner in which the ABCC carries out its activities seems to have led to the exclusion of workers in the building and construction industry from the protection that the labour inspection system ought to secure for these workers under the applicable laws, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that the priorities of the ABCC (or the Fair Work Building Industry Inspectorate) are effectively reoriented so that labour inspectors in the building and construction industry may focus on their main functions in full conformity with Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide detailed information in this regard.

Noting the steps taken so far to introduce safeguards in the way in which the ABCC exercises its activities the Committee requests the Government to indicate the progress made in reintroducing and promoting the adoption of the Building and Construction Industry Improvement (Transition to Fair Work) Bill as a matter of priority.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Austria

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1949)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report replying to its previous comments and to the points raised by the Federal Chamber of Labour (BAK) in October 2008. It notes the amendment of the Labour Inspection Act, No. 27/1993 of 2009, under which data collected via the computer system of the Ministry of Finance (temporary secondment of workers) and that of the Social Security are now available to labour inspectors. The Committee also notes that the BAK has sent comments which largely concern the points raised previously.

The Committee also notes with interest the detailed information published on the Labour Inspectorate's website (www.arbeitsinspektion.gv.at/AI/default.htm), including the annual inspection reports for 2007, 2008 and 2009, information on the National Occupational Safety and Health Strategy for 2007–12 (various preventive measures, particularly to prevent psychosocial disorders caused by work), and instances of good practices, including the establishment of an annual prize awarded by the Minister of Labour, Social Welfare and Consumer Protection to the three most deserving enterprises for services rendered in the field of workers' safety and health.

Article 5(a) of the Convention. Effective cooperation between labour inspectors and law enforcement bodies. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that there are two systems for processing and prosecuting offences against the legislation on working conditions and worker protection (an administrative system and a penal system). In reply to the BAK's assertion that the courts must inform the inspection services when penal proceedings are concluded but need not notify the rulings, the Government states that the inspection services are nonetheless informed of decisions that concern employers responsible for training apprentices (treated by the law as particularly vulnerable). Furthermore, according to the Government, the labour inspectorate is, as a rule, informed of the decisions in penal cases in which it is represented as a witness or expert at hearings. The Committee likewise notes with interest that in certain specific cases, such as those involving industrial accidents, the labour inspectorate is authorized by the Code of Penal Procedure to apply for access to the dossiers or to a copy of the relevant decision.

As to the BAK's request for enhanced cooperation through joint action by the Federal Ministry of Labour and Economic Affairs and the Federal Ministry of Justice, the Government states that with the right to consult the files and the administrative support lent by the Federal Ministry of Justice to the Federal Ministry of Labour and Economic Affairs pursuant to the Federal Constitution, article 22 (mutual assistance between institutions), nothing more is needed.

As regards the matter of restrictions in the context of cross-border assistance in the enforcement of administrative sanctions, raised by the BAK, the Government refers to the provisions of the Council Act of 2000, establishing the Convention on Mutual Assistance on Criminal Matters between the Member States of the European Union, and to the provisions published in the Official Journal of the Federal Republic of Austria No. 65/2005 appointing the competent authorities, which likewise apply to the activities of the administrative and penal authorities and which allow the prosecution of employers that have their head offices in another member State.

With regard to Article 21(e) of the Convention, which provides for the inclusion in the annual report of statistics of violations and the penalties imposed, the Committee notes that according to the Government, this provision refers only to administrative, and not penal sanctions. The Committee points out in this connection that Article 18 of the Convention applies to penalties for violations of the provisions of the law that are enforceable by labour inspectors, without any exceptions and regardless of the authority that imposes the penalty.

In its General Observation of 2007, the Committee observed that it is important for the labour inspectorate to have information about relevant judicial decisions. The Committee would be grateful if, in the light of the foregoing, the Government would consider the possibility of extending cooperation so that judicial decisions on violations of the provisions of the law referred to in the Convention, are made available, without restriction, to the labour inspectorate and included in an annual report, as required by Article 21(e).

Article 18. Adequate penalties. According to the BAK, administrative fines imposed on employers pursuant to section 19 of the Act on the Penal Liability of Legal Entities (VbVG), are tax deductible. The Government states that according to consistent precedent, judicial fines, like administrative ones, are tax deductible only for minor infractions. The Government is asked to provide examples of tax-deductible pecuniary sanctions.

Articles 10 and 16. Adapting the resources of the inspectorate to the duties to be performed. Having pointed out previously that the human resources of the inspection services are inadequate and that the numbers of labour inspectors need to be increased to cope with the new tasks they have to perform, the BAK refers to a government project to reassign former employees from the postal administration and elsewhere to the inspection services. The Committee requests the Government to make any comments it may deem relevant on the BAK's views concerning the need to strengthen the human resources of the inspection services and the measures needed.

Bangladesh

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1972)

The Committee notes the Government's reports for 2008 and 2010. According to the Government, the latest report incorporates the comments of the Bangladesh Employers' Federation (BEF). The Committee also notes the observations of the National Coordination Committee for Workers' Education (NCCWE) transmitted with the Government's report, as well as the communications of the Bangladesh Free Trade Union Congress (BFTUC) dated 31 August 2008 and 26 August 2010, which are based on the 2010 report of the Bangladesh Occupational Safety, Health and Environment Foundation (OSHE).

Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction that the level of penalties to be imposed for violations of labour legislation has significantly increased (see below, Article 18): The Bangladesh Labour Act (BLA) now provides for a maximum fine of 25,000 taka (approximately US$356) whereas the repealed 1965 Factories Act only provided for a maximum fine of 1,000 taka (approximately US$14).

Articles 1, 2 and 4 of the Convention. Safety and health legislation and functioning of the system of labour inspection. The Committee notes with interest that the BLA came into force in October 2006 and replaced 26 Acts, 14 Ordinances and about 35 rules and regulations, repealing among others, the 1965 Factories Act. The Act has considerably enlarged the scope of the Factories Act 1965, which applied only to factories. The new Act applies to all “establishments” defined very widely to include “shops, commercial establishments, industrial establishments or premises in which workers are employed for the purpose of carrying on any industry” (section 2(31)); “industry” is defined as meaning “[a]ny business, trade, manufacturer, calling service employment or occupation” (section 2(69)); the Act also applies to the construction industry (section 6(61)(i)). In particular, the Committee notes with interest that section 2(7) extends the scope of labour inspection to factories employing more than five workers (in contrast with the previous Act, which only covered factories employing more than ten workers).

According to the BFTUC’s comments in 2008 and 2010, while the wider scope of application of the BLA, which is currently under revision, has considerable additional impact in terms of other obligations relating to payment of wages and trade union rights, it does not represent a reform in terms of safety and health obligations. In the view of the BFTUC, the safety and health obligations in the BLA are not relevant to the conditions of workplaces other than factories (construction sites, shops, offices, etc.), due to the fact that these obligations are worded in terms almost identical to those of the Factories Act and no additional provisions which take into account the specific safety and health requirements in the various sectors now covered by the BLA have been included in the Act. The Committee requests the Government to make any observations it considers relevant in relation to the comments of the BFTUC and NCCWE and to indicate the impact of the BLA in terms of the labour inspection activities by economic sector, in particular, numbers of visits and their outcomes, as well as statistics of the violations detected, sanctions imposed and occupational accidents and diseases recorded. The Committee also requests the Government to forward any legal text adopted in the process of reviewing the BLA.

Construction sector. According to the 2010 communication of the BFTUC, at the same time as the BLA was enacted, the Government also “gazetted” the Bangladesh National Building Code (BNBC), which was drafted as early as 1993. The BNBC became law in November 2006. It contains specific health and safety provisions for the construction sector and provides for the establishment of an agency responsible for the enforcement of the code, which does not come under the responsibility of the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments at the Ministry for Labour and Employment (DIFE). However, the BFTUC indicates that such an inspectorate or agency has not been established so far despite the high number of fatal casualties in the sector (106 registered deaths in 2009). The Committee requests the Government to make any comments it deems appropriate in relation to the allegations of the BFTUC. It also requests the Government to furnish a copy of the BNBC and to specify its relationship to the BLA. Please also indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the construction sector is effectively inspected, and provide relevant statistical data regarding inspection visits and their outcomes, as well as occupational accidents and diseases in this sector.

Labour inspection in export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee notes that, according to the NCCWE, EPZs are totally excluded from the labour law and there is a separate Act for workers in EPZs, which includes limitations for inspection. The Committee requests the Government to make any observations it considers relevant to the comments of the BFTUC and NCCWE, to specify the body responsible for inspection in EPZs, to give an overview of its activities (inspection visits, violations reported, legal provisions concerned, types of sanctions imposed) and to provide relevant statistical data.

Article 3(1)(b) and (c). Provision of technical advice to workers and employers. The Committee notes that the BFTUC continues to deplore that labour inspectors fail to provide sufficient advice and guidance to employers and indicates that no advice or guidance literature for workers and employers has been produced by the Government. It points out that the BLA – in the same way as the repealed Factories Act 1965 – does not explicitly entrust labour inspectors with the function of providing advice and guidance to employers and workers. However, the Committee notes from an annotated version of the BLA available at the ILO that, as a result of case law, inspectors are expected to give advice and guidance in the course of the discharge of their enforcement duties. Recalling that enforcement and the provision of information and advice are two inseparable functions of a labour inspection system, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the activities of the labour inspectorate in relation to the provision of information and advice and to indicate the legislative and practical measures taken or envisaged to promote a more active role of labour inspectors in guiding and advising workers and employers, especially on the recently adopted labour legislation.

In this context, and further to its previous comments (in 2006), the Committee once again asks the Government to provide copies of the basic texts of the project “Improvement of the working environment, health and safety in factories” carried out in collaboration with the World Health Organization, together with information on the progress made in the framework of this project in terms of cooperation with the social partners to improve health and safety conditions at work and in terms of reducing the number of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease.

Article 3(2). Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors. The Committee notes that, according to Chapter XX, section 317(3)(e) of the BLA, labour inspectors are entrusted with the function of conciliation in industrial disputes. As indicated in paragraphs 72–74 of the General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, the Committee would like to stress that conciliation is not among the duties of the labour inspectorate as defined in Article 3(1) of the Convention. It recalls the importance of avoiding overburdening inspectorates with tasks which by their nature may be understood as incompatible with their primary function of enforcing legal provisions, as provided for in Article 3(2). The assignment of the conciliation of industrial disputes to any other body or officials would enable labour inspectors to carry out their supervisory function more consistently, resulting in better enforcement of labour legislation and hence a lower incidence of labour disputes. In this regard, the Committee draws the Government's attention to Paragraph 8 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), according to which "the functions of labour inspectors should not include that of acting as conciliator or arbitrator in proceedings concerning labour disputes". The Committee thus requests the Government to take all the necessary legislative and practical measures to relieve labour inspection staff of all conciliation duties and to enable labour inspectors to devote themselves more fully to supervising the legislation on working conditions and the protection of workers, in conformity with Article 3(2).

Article 5(b) Collaboration with workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee notes that section 323 of the BLA provides for the establishment of a tripartite national council for industrial health and safety and that section 323(2)(j) provides that the current labour chief inspector will be a member and secretary of this council. It further notes with interest that, according to the communication of the BFTUC in 2010, the Tripartite National Industrial Health and Safety Council has been set up and has elaborated a national policy for occupational safety and health in industrial establishments. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of any document relating to the national policy for occupational safety and health, together with information on its application in practice. It asks the Government to provide information on any other activities of the Council in relation to labour inspection and a copy of any relevant documentation.

Article 14. Notification of industrial accidents and occupational diseases. Further to its previous comments, in which it asked the Government to take steps to secure the adoption of legal provisions setting forth the instances and the manner in which the labour inspectorate must be informed of cases of occupational diseases, the Committee notes with interest that the BLA contains, in sections 80 and 82, a reporting obligation for employers with regard to both occupational accidents and occupational diseases and provides in section 290 for a penalty for the failure of employers to give notice of an occupational accident. It further notes that, whereas section 80 provides for the period in which the labour inspectorate must be informed of industrial accidents, as far as the reporting of occupational diseases is concerned, section 82 provides that the form and time limits for the notification of occupational diseases shall be regulated by rules. The Committee notes, however that, according to information communicated by the BFTUC in 2008, the reporting of occupational accidents does not function well in practice and that the registered numbers do not seem to correspond with actual fatalities. The Committee requests the Government to make any comment it considers relevant on the points raised by the BFTUC. It asks the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged, including the rules to be issued under section 82 of the BLA, for the notification of occupational diseases, and to provide information on any progress in the development of a relevant system and its implementation in practice. The Committee would like to draw the Government's attention in this regard to the ILO code of practice on the recording and notification of occupational accidents and diseases, published in 1996, which contains useful recommendations intended for those responsible for the reporting, recording and notification of occupational accidents and diseases and which can be found at: www.ilo.org/safework/normative/codes/lang--en/docName--WCMS\_107800/index.htm.

Articles 6 and 15(c). Probity of labour inspectors and duty of confidentiality in relation to complaints. Further to their previous comments, the BFTUC and the NCCWE continue to question the probity of inspectors who, after the reform of the BLA, are still under no legal obligation to refrain from disclosing the identity of the author of a complaint or from indicating that an inspection took place as a result of a complaint. While the Government states that, in practice, inspectors do not disclose the identity of the complainant, the trade unions indicate that workers prefer not to report breaches of the law by employers for fear of reprisals. The Committee recalls that the granting of the appropriate status and conditions of service to labour inspectors, including appropriate wages and career prospects, in accordance with Article 6, and the obligation for labour inspectors to comply with the duty of confidentiality, under Article 15(c), are essential safeguards against improper behaviour. It notes that, although under the terms of section 334 of the BLA inspectors shall be deemed to be public servants, there has been no apparent progress with regard to the issues raised previously by the BFTUC concerning the level of their salary and the absence of career prospects. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the conditions of service of inspectors are such that they are assured of stability of employment and independence from any improper external influence, especially through appropriate wage levels and career prospects. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to take, without delay, appropriate steps aimed at supplementing the law to ensure that the duty of confidentiality regarding the existence of a complaint and its source is duly respected by labour inspectors. It asks the Government to keep the ILO informed of the progress made and to provide any text governing the conditions of service of labour inspectors.

Articles 7, 10, 11 and 16. Human and material resources of the labour inspectorate. Training of labour inspectors. According to the BFTUC, while the budget allocation to labour inspection has further increased, it represents a mere 0.004 per cent of total government expenditure. The BFTUC is of the view that the lack of financing of the labour inspectorate has less to do with the lack of resources and more with the lack of interest and commitment over the years to improving workers' safety. The NCCWE also refers to the lack of authority and accountability of the labour inspection department. While a table included in the observations made by the BTFUC shows that the number of labour inspectors has risen from 78 in 2006 to 93 in 2010, the trade union regrets the absence of significant progress in giving effect to the repeated commitments of the Government to increase labour inspection staff, and especially the staff of the occupational safety and health inspectorate where numbers have remained the same over the last 26 years. The Committee notes that the Government, in its 2010 report, acknowledges that the number of labour inspectors is insufficient in relation to the number of workplaces liable to inspection which, according to the 2010 communication by the BTFUC, has further increased, without providing information concerning its indication in its 2008 report that 48 new labour inspectors would be recruited.

Moreover, according to the comments made by the BFTUC and the NCCWE in 2010, the Government has failed to take any visible steps to modernize the infrastructure of the labour inspectorate. Despite the acquisition of some new sound and light equipment through an international donor, there continues to be a lack of logistical support (transport facilities, training materials, necessary equipments for examinations or testing). With regard to the allegations previously made by the BFTUC, the Government acknowledges the lack of proper vehicles, but refers, in a general manner, to the provision of travelling allowances to labour inspectors and denies that employers cover any travelling expenses of labour inspectors.

Finally, the Committee notes that the BFTUC again refers to the inadequacy of training in the light of the rapid changes in technology and methods of work in all sectors of the economy. It notes in this regard the information provided by the Government in 2008 and 2010 that, in addition to the initial one-month training at the Industrial Relations Institute (IRI) and the 15 days' in-house training offered by the senior officials of the DIFE, labour inspectors are provided with regular training courses by the IRI and other government training institutions, as well as training financed by organizations such as the German Society for Technical Cooperation (GTZ) or the ILO. It, however, acknowledges that inspectors are not sufficiently trained for the discharge of their duties. The Committee encourages the Government to do its utmost to furnish the labour inspectorate with the resources that it needs to operate effectively, if necessary within the framework of international financial cooperation, in order to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is adequate in relation to the number of workplaces liable for inspection (Article 10 of the Convention), that they are provided with the material means and transport facilities necessary for the performance of their duties (Article 11) and that they receive adequate training for the performance of their duties (Article 7(3)). The Government is requested to provide information on:

- the total number of labour inspectors and their distribution at headquarters and in the various field, regional and branch offices, in relation to the number of workplaces liable to inspection and the workers employed therein, as provided for in Article 10(a)(i) and (ii);
- the amounts and conditions for the reimbursement of travel costs and allowances to labour inspectors, including a copy of a reimbursement form; and
- the frequency, content and duration of training, as well as the number of participants and the practical impact of such training.

Article 12(1). Right of inspectors to enter workplaces freely. The Committee notes the repeated indications by the BFTUC that employers are informed of the date of intended inspection visits. The Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to the fact that it is important that there should be no prior notification of inspection visits to the employer or her or his representative, unless the labour inspector deems such notification necessary for the effectiveness of the control to be performed. The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary steps to secure the full effect in law and in practice of Article 12(1) of the Convention and to provide a copy of any relevant legal or administrative text adopted to this end.

Article 17. Prompt legal proceedings. Modifications in the procedure for the prosecution of violations of national labour provisions. The Committee notes that there have been some modifications in the procedure for the prosecution of violations of national labour provisions. Whereas, under section 107(2) of the 1965 Factories Act, only the magistrate's court had jurisdiction over an offence under this Act or any rules or orders made thereunder, section 313(1) of the BLA now establishes the jurisdiction of labour courts for offences under the BLA. Further, whereas under section 107(1) of the Factories Act, prosecutions could only be initiated by labour inspectors, under section 313(2) of the BLA, aggrieved workers and trade unions can now also initiate court proceedings. The Committee notes the suggestions made by the BFTUC with regard to the prosecution of breaches of labour law, namely: (i) the creation of more labour courts, in addition to the seven labour courts already existing in the country, which might be far away from the main office; and (ii) the recruitment of lawyers to represent inspectors in the filing and prosecuting of cases which, according to the BFTUC, is a function that is extremely time consuming. The Committee further notes that the trade union regrets that no prosecutions involving breaches of health and safety duties have been filed under the BLA in three of the seven labour courts. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the total number of cases filed by labour inspectors, and to provide particulars of the classification of such infringements according to the legal provisions to which they relate, and to ensure that this information is included in the annual report sent to the ILO. Further, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would send any information or comments in reply to the suggestions made by the BFTUC.

Article 18. Adequate penalties. With regard to the increase of the level of penalties noted at the beginning of this comment, the Committee further notes that the BLA also introduces new offences for violations, for example as regards the causing of fatalities and serious bodily injuries by employers through the breach of an obligation under the BLA, or the failure by employers to report an occupational accident. The Committee asks the Government once again to provide available information on the number and level of the penalties imposed for offences reported by labour inspectors and to ensure that this information is included in the annual report sent to the ILO. Please also indicate the impact of the increased penalties on the observance of labour law.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication of an annual report. According to the Government, the collection of comprehensive data for the publication of regular annual reports is hampered by the low number of labour inspectors and inspection visits. Noting, however, that the Government is aware of the importance of keeping registers containing useful data, the Committee would like to stress that one of the aims of Articles 20 and 21 is to allow the central inspection authority to gather the information needed to determine, in the light of the social and economic objectives of labour inspection, the resources required to operate the services efficiently and to submit appropriate budgetary proposals for the attainment of these objectives. Referring to its comment under Articles 7, 10, 11 and 16, the Committee once again emphasizes the importance of increasing the budget allocated to the labour inspectorate. It again asks the Government to take the necessary measures for the establishment of a register of workplaces liable to inspection and of the workers employed therein (particularly through inter-institutional cooperation as recommended in its 2009 general observation), and to provide information on any measures taken for this purpose, with a view to the fulfilment by the central inspection authority of its obligation to publish and transmit to the International Labour Office an annual report in accordance with Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention.

Benin

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes the Government's report received at the ILO on 20 October 2009, and also the annual report of the Directorate-General of Labour (DGT) of the Ministry of Labour and Public Service (MTFP) for 2008 and 2009, as well as copies of the legislative texts sent as attachments to the report. It also notes the observations of the General Confederation of Workers of Benin (CGTB), dated 14 January 2010, concerning the inadequacy of the human and material resources of the labour administration.

The Committee notes with interest the communication of documents from the MTFP concerning the situation of the labour administration and the obstacles to its efficient functioning and also the objectives established with a view to overcoming them. It notes in particular the documents on national labour policy, occupational safety and health policy and the paper relating to the strategic plan for strengthening the labour administration for the 2007–16 period. The Committee notes with interest that the 2008 document on national labour policy was drawn up following wide-ranging consultations, including with the social partners.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government, notably with regard to the issues raised by the CGTB and also various aspects of the labour administration raised in the Government's report and the attached documentation.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1973)

Further to the information available to the ILO according to which the multilateral regional technical cooperation project ILO/FORSAT, financed by the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs of Spain, was to be launched with the objective of strengthening the labour administration, the Committee addressed an observation to the Government in 2004, repeated in 2006, 2007, 2008 and 2009, requesting it to provide information on the measures taken in the context of that project and on the results achieved, particularly in the area of labour inspection.

Despite the Committee's repeated requests, the Government has stopped providing reports on the application of this Convention. The Committee notes with regret that, according to the Government's indications in its report received on 1 August 2010, the project has never been launched and no relevant information could therefore be provided.

The Committee reminds the Government of its obligation under article 22 of the ILO Constitution to provide a report every two years on the measures taken to give effect to the Convention and of the fact that, in fulfilling this obligation, it could have reported the difficulties preventing the launch of the project and requested ILO support to overcome them. In any case, the suspension of this project did not prevent the Government from providing information on the application of the provisions of the Convention in both law and practice or from ensuring that an annual report on inspection activities is published and transmitted to the ILO in accordance with Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention. The Committee considers that this constitutes serious failure on the part of the Government to fulfil the commitments it made when ratifying the Convention and that it has therefore prevented the Committee from carrying out its duty to oversee its application. The Government is therefore urged to provide a detailed report containing replies to the questions raised under the Articles of the Convention in the report form relating to this Convention and to ensure that an annual report on inspection activities is published and transmitted to the ILO as soon as possible. If a report has not yet been prepared, the Committee requests it to refer to paragraphs 320 et seq. of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, take all necessary measures as a matter of urgency to ensure that full effect is given to Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention and keep the ILO informed in that regard.

[The Government is asked to report in detail in 2011.]

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Referring to its observation under Convention No. 81, the Committee notes that, owing to the economic crisis, the Government is encountering economic and financial restrictions which affect in particular the implementation of monitoring functions relating to the application of labour legislation and occupational safety standards in the agricultural sector. The Committee notes, however, that despite these difficulties a pilot project has been implemented by the Ministry of Labour in the regions of Bermejo, Yacuiba, Villamontes and Riberalta and that the officials operating in these regions are doing their utmost to perform their duties in accordance with the provisions of the General Labour Act, its implementing decree and other connected standards.

The Committee also notes that the Government hopes that, when the labour inspection system is reorganized as a result of the ILO/FORSAT multilateral cooperation project, of regional scope, to strengthen the labour administrations, the functioning of this system will be able to be extended to the agricultural sector. The Committee recalls that the ratification of the present Convention implies de jure obligations whose aim is the coverage of needs specific to agricultural undertakings by the inspection services with respect to monitoring of the legislation concerning conditions of work and worker protection. The Government is therefore requested to take measures promptly to ensure the implementation of such obligations, without prejudice to any improvement expected from the overall reorganization of the inspection system which is under way, and to communicate to the ILO all available information requested in the report form according to the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee also requests the Government to provide further information on the activities undertaken and the results obtained by the inspection services involved in the implementation of the abovementioned pilot project.

Part V of the report form and article 23(2) of the ILO Constitution. Recalling the obligation to communicate to representative organizations of employers and workers, under the abovementioned article of the Constitution, copies of reports and information transmitted to the ILO Director-General, particularly under article 22 of the ILO Constitution, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the precise reasons which might explain the failure to implement these provisions in relation to the present Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee takes note of the text of the Work Protection Act, 2008 provided by the Government and will examine this text as soon as a translation is available.

Follow-up to the recommendation of the Tripartite Committee (representation made under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO)

Articles 12(1)(a) and (b), and 18 of the Convention. Right of entry of labour inspectors. Penalties for obstructing labour inspectors in the performance of their duties. The Committee recalls that a representation submitted to the ILO on 9 October 1998 pursuant to article 24 of the ILO Constitution by the Union of Autonomous Trade Unions (USIBH) and the Union of Metalworkers (SM) alleging violation of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), stated that the federal labour inspectorate and the cantonal labour inspectorate had never been able to obtain the authorization of the cantonal minister responsible for labour to conduct an inspection visit in the factories concerned (Aluminij dd Mostar and Soko dd Mostar) in order to verify the allegations of the abovementioned trade unions. The tripartite committee of the ILO Governing Body responsible for examining the representation noted, in particular, that the fact that the cantonal labour inspector was obliged to request the authorization of the cantonal Minister before being able to conduct an inspection visit was not in conformity with Article 12(1), of Convention No. 81 and requested that the follow-up to the case be entrusted to the Committee of Experts. In the framework of the follow-up, the Committee had addressed an observation to the Government from 2000 until 2005 requesting that all appropriate steps be taken as soon as possible to remove the requirement in the legislation whereby labour inspectors must seek authorization from the supervisory authority to exercise their right of entry to workplaces and premises liable to inspection. The Government's report sent in 2006 appeared to indicate that none of the laws on inspections contained any provision obliging labour inspectors to obtain authorization to be able to enter an enterprise and the Committee thereby concluded that, if such an authorization were required in practice, this was contrary to the law. In its 2006 report, the Government had also indicated that random inspections had been carried out in the specific enterprises in question in March 2000 and that measures had been ordered by the chief federal inspector; however, the Government had not specified whether measures had been taken to abandon the practice of having to request authorization or to penalize the officials responsible for it.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its latest report in relation to the legal provisions which prohibit obstruction of inspectors' access to workplaces and the penalties established in the law in case of violation of this prohibition (section 67(3) of the Act on Inspections of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina which provides that inspectors are entitled to inspect all workplaces and section 85 of the Act on Inspections of the Republika Srpska which provides for a fine of 2,000 up to 20,000 convertible marka (BAM) if an enterprise fails to allow smooth access to the inspector for supervision purposes). The Committee notes that the Government is not aware of any cases involving obstruction of the work of labour inspectors in the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina or the Republika Srpska in the reporting period. The Government adds that the powers of inspectors laid down in the Act on Inspections of the Brcko District of Bosnia and Herzegovina are compatible with the powers stated in Article 12 of the Convention. While noting this information, the Committee is bound to observe that it does not address the issue of whether labour inspectors are required to seek authorization from the supervisory authority to exercise their right of entry to workplaces and premises liable to inspection.

The Committee requests the Government once again to indicate in its next report the steps taken or envisaged to abandon the practice of having to seek authorization from the supervisory authority in order for labour inspectors to be able to exercise their right of entry to workplaces and premises liable to inspection in the Federation of BiH. The Government is requested in particular to: (i) indicate the legal provisions which guarantee the right of labour inspectors, provided with proper credentials, to enter any workplace under their supervision without having to obtain authorization from the supervisory authority; and (ii) to furnish any relevant administrative decision or circular containing instructions ensuring the exercise of inspectors' free right of entry to workplaces under their supervision. The Committee also requests the Government to specify the state of law and practice in this regard in the Republika Srpska and the Brcko District.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1989)

The Committee notes the communications from the Government received on 13 May 2009 in reply to the comments from the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT), on 27 August 2009 in reply to the comments from the Gaúcha Association of Labour Inspectors (AGITRA), on 8 December 2009 in reply to the comments from the Union of Workers for the Road Transport of Liquids and Gases, Oil Derivatives and Chemical Products of the State of Rio Grande Do Sul (SINDILÍQUIDA/RS), and on 8 November 2010 in reply to the comment from the National Union of Labour Inspectors (SINAIT).

The Committee also notes the communication from the Health, Labour and Social Welfare Workers' Union of the State of Rio de Janeiro (SINDISPREV/RJ) received by the ILO on 14 April 2009 and communicated to the Government on 11 May 2009; and also that of the Union of Workers in the Lumber, Civil Construction and Furniture Industries Altamira and Surrounding Region (SINTICMA) received at the ILO on 9 February 2010 and communicated to the Government on 12 April 2010. These comments largely relate to the lack of labour inspection staff and the inadequacy of the system of enforcement, particularly in cases of forced labour, in breach of Articles 17 and 18 of the Convention.

As the Government's report received in September 2010 and its reply to the points raised by SINAIT are being translated at the ILO, they will be examined at the next meeting of the Committee. The Committee will also examine any comment that the Government may wish to make in relation to the points raised by SINDISPREV/RJ.

The Committee also refers to the Government's previous report for the period from June 2006 to June 2008 and to the attached documentation, and draws the Government's attention to the following points.

Articles 5 and 14 of the Convention. Cooperation between the labour inspectorate and other public institutions. Prevention of occupational accidents and diseases. The Committee notes with interest the setting up of a tripartite occupational safety and health committee pursuant to Inter-Ministerial Order MPS/MS/MTE No. 152 of 13 May 2008. It also notes with interest the planned signature of a draft agreement providing for the exchange of information between the Ministry of Social Welfare and the Ministry of Labour and Employment with regard to occupational accidents and diseases. The Committee hopes that the Government will continue to promote the establishment of inter-institutional cooperation with a view to preventing occupational accidents and diseases. It requests the Government to indicate whether the agreement providing for the exchange of information between the above ministries has been signed and, if so, to keep the Office informed of any developments in this sphere and also of any other measures taken for the same purpose.

Articles 10 and 16. Labour inspection staff. Planning of inspections. The Committee notes with interest that the labour inspection secretariat draws up a three-stage plan for inspection visits: analysis of the employment market, planning of lines of action designed to tackle fields of irregularities in the labour sphere and monitoring of implementation of the plan. It notes that, according to the Government, the increase of the number of labour auditors/controllers from 2,911 in June 2006 to 3,153 in June 2008 is still inadequate in view of the number of workers employed in workplaces liable to inspection. The Committee therefore urges the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen the labour inspection staff in order to fully implement the plan of inspections and requests it to continue to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Articles 17 and 18. Action taken further to reports of violations. In its comments, AGITRA refers to the small number of prosecutions instituted against employers who have committed violations, the statute of limitations on legal action having resulted in the lapse of a large number of cases of violations for various reasons (between 2003 and 2008 a total of 34,829 cases of violations were declared out of time by the regional labour directorate of Rio Grande do Sul alone). The Government rejects this allegation, declaring that these cases have been processed, and also points out that numerous measures have been taken to strengthen the system of legal prosecution, including through improved supervision of the inspection programmes of the regional directorates. Moreover, it announces measures aimed at the gathering of information on the operation of units responsible for the imposition of fines and the processing of appeals. The Committee also notes the adoption of Decree No. 809 of 20 March 2009 providing for the participation of the staff of directorates in the collective effort to speed up procedures for the prosecution of employers who have committed violations. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the progress made in the prosecution of violations during the next reporting period and in particular to provide statistics on violations reported, penalties imposed and the number of penalties enforced, referring to the legal provisions concerned.

Physical safety of labour inspectors. The Committee notes with satisfaction the Government's rapid reaction to the murder of four members of the labour inspection staff on 28 January 2004 in issuing Circular No. 04/SIT/MTE of 3 February 2004 providing for coordination of labour inspection in rural areas with the assistance of the trade unions of the workers involved in the inspections with respect to evaluation of the risks faced by labour inspectors. Measures were also taken to ensure the systematic presence of the police authorities during inspections, including routine inspections, in cases that required it. The Committee hopes that the Government will continue to take all relevant measures relevant to the safe conduct of labour inspections. It wishes to emphasize that these measures should, however, enable labour inspectors to continue to fully discharge their educational and preventive role with regard to employers and workers so as to enlist the support of the latter for the economic and social objective of labour inspection. In this regard, the Committee wishes to express its reservations regarding whether inspectors should be given the right to carry weapons during inspection missions, even if this right is made subordinate to the requisite technical skill and psychological aptitude. The application of such a measure must be considered with extreme caution in order to ensure that the task of inspection is not confused with the duties of the police. While supporting the measures aimed at reinforcing the authority and security of inspectors, the Committee considers that the carrying of weapons should be limited only to those exceptional cases and circumstances in which other means are not available. The Committee requests the Government to clarify the circumstances in which labour auditors/controllers are authorized to carry weapons and to send in support of its reply relevant statistics such as the number of labour auditors concerned and the cases in which they have been obliged to make use of their weapons. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures taken to enhance the credibility of the labour inspectorate and also on the court action taken in relation to the perpetrators of the murders of January 2004.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1974)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain a reply to its previous comments. It notes that the report is confined to indicating that the agricultural sector is largely made up of family undertakings which are not covered by the labour legislation applicable to the sector and that it refers to the report on the application of Convention No. 81. Reminding the Government of the commitments deriving from the ratification of the present Convention and observing once again the absence of specific information on the operation in practice of the labour inspectorate in agriculture, the Committee is therefore bound to reiterate its previous observation on the following matters:

Further to its previous comments, in which it drew the Government's attention to the need to adapt the activities of the inspection services to the specific features of the agricultural sector, even if these services cover other economic sectors, the Committee notes that nothing appears to have been done in this respect. Moreover, the Government has not been able to provide information, as requested, on the geographical distribution of agricultural undertakings and the workers employed therein. In the absence of such data, no assessment of the extent to which the Convention is applied is possible, either by the national authorities with a view to improving its coverage, or by the ILO supervisory bodies with a view to fulfilling their function in this respect. As the Committee emphasized in its previous observation, an appreciation of the effectiveness of the labour inspection system in agriculture is necessarily based on knowledge of the needs in this area and on the periodical updating of the relevant information. The obligation for inspection units to provide periodical reports on their activities in agricultural undertakings (Article 25 of the Convention) is designed specifically to enable the central inspection authority to follow, supervise and adjust their activities, as well as to allow information on the items listed in Article 27, which are specific to the agricultural sector, to be included in the annual general report on inspection activities required by Article 26. For more than ten years, no report of this nature has been transmitted to the ILO and no data on the number of agricultural undertakings liable to inspection has ever been provided.

With reference to the Government's indication of the predominance of child labour in agriculture and stock-raising, and that projects to combat this phenomenon mean that labour inspectors are taking on an important role in this field, the Committee suggests that it should take advantage of the implementation of these projects to set in motion measures to revitalize the activities of the labour inspection services in agricultural undertakings. It notes that no information has been provided by the Government in this respect.

The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to ensure that the labour inspection services have access to data on the number and geographical distribution of agricultural undertakings and the workers employed therein, and to specify the geographical distribution of labour inspectors who in practice discharge their duties in agricultural undertakings.

Once again reminding the Government that, when the economic situation of a member State does not allow it to fulfil adequately the requirements of a ratified Convention, it may have recourse to international financial cooperation and the technical assistance of the Office, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which effect is given in law and practice to each of the provisions of the Convention and to keep the ILO informed of the difficulties encountered and the measures adopted to resolve them.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee takes note of the little information contained in the Government's report and further clarifications received in the ILO on 4 September 2006.

Primary duties of labour inspectorates. In its previous comments the Committee had observed that labour inspectorates' activities focused mainly on dispute resolution issues, instead of activities aiming at the enforcement function provided for by Article 3(1) of the Convention. Its appreciation was based on the reports on 2000 and 2001 first-quarter labour inspection activities, showing also the performing of a huge amount of administrative tasks. The Committee notes that five out of the nine inspectors are entrusted with collective dispute resolution issues, only three others dealing with control of conditions of work, though all of them have participated in a seminar organized by the Programme for promoting social dialogue in African French-speaking countries (PRÓDIAF) on proceedings relating to labour dispute resolution, during the first quarter of 2006. This information confirms that labour inspection continues to be taken off its main role to be put on labour dispute resolution missions.

According to the Government, the absence of a special status, the lack of means of transport, of qualifications and of technical equipment seem to have led to a lack of confidence from the employers towards labour inspectors.

The Committee once again stresses that it is necessary for labour inspectors to focus on the enforcement of legal provisions on labour conditions and protection of workers while engaged in their work (Article 3(1)) and that any further duties entrusted to them should not interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary in their relations with employers and workers (paragraph 2). It also recalls the Government's obligation of the competent authority to take measures to make available to labour inspectors the necessary means, such as transport facilities where no appropriate public transport facilities exist and reimbursement of any travelling and incidental expenses which may be necessary for the performance of their duties (Article 11). It expresses the hope that appropriate financial support will soon be granted through international cooperation to this end. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate any steps taken and any progress achieved in this regard and communicate in the nearest future any available report on labour inspection activities in industrial and commercial workplaces, concerning the application of legal provisions on conditions of work and protection of workers.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Cameroon

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes the Government's report and its replies to the comments made by the General Confederation of Labour – Liberty of Cameroon (CGT–Liberté) in 2007 and 2008 and by the General Union of Workers of Cameroon (UGTC) in October 2008 concerning various shortcomings of the labour inspection system in relation to the requirements of the Convention.

Article 3(1)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Duties of labour inspectors. Based on the information contained in the annual inspection report for 2008, the Committee notes that, instead of ensuring the presence of labour inspectors at the workplace with a view to enforcing the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers, most of the working time of labour inspectors is devoted to resolving labour disputes through conciliation activities. In such conditions, these activities are clearly detrimental to the discharge of their primary duties as defined in Article 3(1) of the Convention. The Committee is bound to draw the Government's attention to paragraph 2 of the same Article which stipulates that any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors shall not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or to prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. Furthermore, Paragraph 8 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), specifically advises against entrusting inspectors with the duty to act as conciliator or arbitrator in proceedings concerning labour disputes. In a previous report (2004), the Government had justified the allocation of these duties to inspectors by a need to relieve the pressure on the courts. However, the Committee considers that the volume of work created by these duties results in a disproportionate mobilization of the labour inspectorate's resources to the detriment of its activities relating to enforcement, advice and improvement of the legislation referred to in the Convention. Given that labour disputes are often caused by a lack of understanding of the legal provisions or failure to comply with them, inspectors can make a major contribution to reducing labour disputes through educational activities and, if necessary, repressive action. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that the conciliation or mediation duties undertaken by labour inspectors in the event of a labour dispute do not interfere with the discharge of their primary duties and to provide information on any progress made in that regard, as well as any relevant document.

With regard to the specific matter of the supervisory powers of labour inspectors, raised by the CGT–Liberté, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, this matter should be examined in the context of the overall revision of the Labour Code under way. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made with regard to the draft reform of the Labour Code, including in particular the developments affecting the nature and scope of the powers of labour inspectors in relation to Articles 12, 13 and 17 of the Convention. It would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of any relevant draft or final text.

Articles 6, 9 and 10. Labour inspection staff (composition, status and conditions of service). According to the Government, the inspection staff is composed of 106 inspectors (77 men and 29 women). Noting with interest that the National School of Administration and Magistracy (ENAM) reopened in 2006, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the developments relating to the number and qualifications of labour inspectors during the period covered by the next report, including their geographical distribution.

The Committee understands, based on the information contained in the Government's report received in 2008, that the remuneration of labour inspectors was increased by 15 per cent under Decree No. 2008/099 of 7 March 2009 applicable to both civilian and military staff, with retroactive effect from 1 April 2008. In response to the allegation made by the CGT–Liberté that the remuneration, working conditions and benefits of other administrators graduating from the ENAM are more favourable than those granted to labour inspectors, the Government emphasizes in its communication received in 2009 that “the Head of State has raised the salaries of public servants, including labour inspectors, in full fairness and without discrimination”. Noting that the annual inspection report for 2008 mentions various categories of inspection staff (inspectors, controllers, assistant controllers, clerks, contract public servants, decision-makers and other staff), the Committee requests the Government to indicate those who have the status of labour inspector under section 105 of the Labour Code and to provide further information on the status and conditions of service of each category of staff carrying out inspection activities.

Article 11. Means of action of inspectors. In reply to the point raised by the UGTC concerning the lack of means of action (computer equipment and means of transport) of the labour inspectorate, the Government pointed out in a communication sent to the ILO dated 5 December 2007 that, under the three-year budgetary programme for the period 2008–10, departmental labour offices were to be equipped with rolling stock. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the developments relating to the number of vehicles in the labour inspectorate's fleet, to ensure, in any case and if necessary with the help of international financial cooperation, that labour inspectors are provided with the means essential for the performance of their duties (computerized office equipment, transport facilities, consumables etc.) and to keep the Office informed of any progress made in that regard.

Article 5(b). Collaboration between labour inspection officials and the social partners. In reply to the UGTC's allegations concerning the lack of collaboration between the labour inspectorate and the social partners, the Government indicated in its 2008 report that such collaboration took place at both the national level within the National Labour Advisory Commission, the National Occupational Safety and Health Commission and the Synergy Committee and at the regional level within the decentralized services through inspections by labour inspectors, occupational safety and health committees, committees organizing labour day celebrations and various commissions. Drawing the Government's attention to the guidance provided in Part II of Recommendation No. 81 on the types of collaboration possible between the labour inspectorate and organizations of employers and workers, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide details, as well as any documents available, on the content of the collaboration that takes place within or with the above bodies taking into account the objective of the Convention.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual report of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes with interest that, following efforts lasting many years, a report on the work of the labour inspectorate for 2008 has been provided and contains information and statistics on inspections by branch of activity, industrial accidents, the workplaces and workers covered and the violations noted and penalties imposed. However, it notes that the Government once again expresses a need for technical assistance from the ILO to overcome various practical obstacles (inconsistent compliance with periodic reporting obligations across the various bodies and shortcomings in the methods of collecting and processing data) to the preparation of an annual report in accordance with the provisions of Articles 20 and 21.

Further to its general observation of 2009, the Committee also notes with interest the Government's indication that studies have been launched with a view to creating a register of workplaces liable to inspection. It emphasizes the importance of creating and regularly updating a register (containing, in accordance with paragraph (c) of Article 21, information on the workplaces liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein) to assess the rate of coverage of the inspectorate in relation to its area of competence and determine measures to improve it. The Committee trusts that the technical assistance from the Office requested by the Government for the purposes of preparing and publishing an annual inspection report as required by the Convention will therefore also concern the measures to be implemented to create and then update a register of workplaces. It would be grateful if the Government would keep the ILO informed of the steps taken in that regard, including the implementation of inter-institutional cooperation, as well as any difficulties encountered.

Finally, noting in the magazine of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (MTSS) dated 1 January 2010 that the number of diseases included on the list of occupational diseases covered under the social security system has increased from 44 to 49 under Order No. 051/MINTSS/SG/DSST, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that the labour inspectorate is informed of cases of occupational disease, so that the relevant information is also included in the abovementioned annual report, in accordance with paragraph (g) of Article 21.

Cape Verde

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1979)

Article 10 of the Convention. Structure and human and material sources of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the labour inspection system is to be strengthened by the opening of a third branch, located on Sal, to cover the islands of Sal and Boa Vista. The inspectorate staff is composed of seven labour inspectors. The Committee notes with interest that they have received special training, particularly in the area of civil construction, and that their numbers should shortly be increased by a further 13 inspectors, five of whom are already in initial training. Furthermore, the acquisition of a third vehicle in 2010 should facilitate visits to the establishments and workplaces liable to inspection.

However, in the absence of any information on inspection activities and their results, the Committee is not in a position to ascertain the extent to which the Convention is applied. It reminds the Government that the effectiveness of labour inspection depends largely on the commitment of the public authorities to the effective implementation of measures to attract and retain a sufficient number of qualified and motivated staff (General Survey of 2006, paragraph 173), but also on the availability of the resources inspectors need in order to perform their duties (General Survey of 2006, paragraph 238). The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on developments in the size and qualifications of the labour inspectorate staff, the resources and transport facilities made available to them and also on progress in the project to open up a third branch of the labour inspectorate, and on the practical impact of the structural and material measures implemented to strengthen the inspection system.

The Government is asked to provide information on the specific impact that the training of inspectors has had on the construction sector in terms of reducing the number of industrial accidents and instances of occupational disease.

Article 3(2). Additional duties of labour inspectors. The Government states that the Labour Code adopted in 2007 makes no change to the duties of labour inspection and does not expressly assign conciliation and mediation duties to labour inspectors. However, the Committee notes that, in accordance with section 387(1) of the Labour Code, in the event of a dispute between an employer and a worker, the labour inspectorate attempts conciliation between the parties. The Committee points out that, under Paragraph 8 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), the functions of labour inspectors should not include that of acting as conciliator or arbitrator in labour disputes, and emphasizes that the primary role of labour inspection is to ensure observance of the legal provisions governing working conditions and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, and that, under the terms of Article 3(2) of the Convention, any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors shall not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or to prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that any conciliation or mediation duties undertaken by labour inspectors in the event of a dispute between an employer and a worker do not interfere with the discharge of their primary duties. In support of its reply, the Government is asked to provide information showing the ratio of conciliation and mediation activities to the duties of inspection and of informing workers and employers, during the period covered by the next report.

Article 14. Notification of cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes that pursuant to section 7(2) of Decree No. 90/97 of 31 December 1997, labour inspectors are notified of industrial accidents involving leave from work of more than three days but that, contrary to Article 14 of the Convention, they are not informed of cases of occupational disease. In replying in its previous report to comments made by the Commercial, Industrial and Agricultural Association of Barlavento (ACIAB) to the effect that cases of occupational disease should, like industrial accidents, be notified to the labour inspectorate, the Government indicated in its previous report that the legislation would be supplemented to this end in the context of the adoption of the new Labour Code. However, according to the information supplied in its latest report, there has been no change in the rules on the notification of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease to the labour inspectorate, but that the matter is under examination. The Committee asks the Government to ensure that legislative or regulatory measures are taken promptly to ensure that, in accordance with Article 14, information on cases of occupational disease, like that on industrial accidents, is sent to the labour inspectorate. The Government is asked to report on this matter, providing any relevant documents.

Article 15(a). Professional secrecy. The Committee notes that an amendment is being prepared to the provisions binding labour inspectors to professional secrecy both while they are serving and after they have left the service. It requests the Government to state in its next report whether the planned amendment has been adopted and, if so, to provide a copy of it. If not, the Government is asked to take measures promptly to secure such an amendment and to keep the Office informed.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication and communication to the ILO of an annual report. The Committee once again notes that, despite the Government's undertaking to ensure that an annual inspection report is published shortly, no such report has been received by the Office. The Committee invites the Government to refer, in this connection, to paragraphs 320–328 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, and asks the Government to take the necessary steps to produce such a report, to seek technical assistance from the Office if necessary, and to provide information on any progress made or any difficulties encountered.

Central African Republic

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Scope of the ILO/ADMITRA project for the modernization of the labour administration and inspectorate. With reference to its previous comments focusing on the inadequacy of labour inspectors' conditions of work, particularly the lack of reimbursement of their travelling expenses, the Committee notes that the Government has not supplied the information requested on the measures taken to seek, in the context of bilateral or international financial cooperation, the funds needed to improve the practical situation of the labour inspectorate. In response to this specific request from the Committee, the Government refers to the launching of the ILO/ADMITRA project. However, the Committee observes that the objective of this project, which covers seven French-speaking African countries, is not to assist in the search for the resources required for the functioning of labour administration structures, but to provide technical support for governments, mainly in the following three areas:

1. Initial and further training for managers and employees in the administration and the labour inspectorate.
2. Modernization of labour tools and organizational methods.
3. Strengthening cooperation between the structures comprising the labour administration system (labour, employment, social security, vocational training), on the one hand, and between the labour administration and other administrations operating in related areas (justice, finance, health, etc.), on the other.

With reference to its general observation of 2007 inviting member States which have ratified Conventions on labour inspection to take measures enabling effective cooperation between the labour inspection system and the judicial authorities, the Committee notes with interest that an official from the Directorate-General of Labour and a member of the labour tribunal participated in the subregional workshop on the relations between the labour administration and the labour courts, held in the context of the above project from 8 to 10 May 2008 in Dakar. While noting that cooperation between the labour administration and the judicial system was already advocated in an ILO technical memorandum of 2004 to the Government concerning the reinforcement of labour administration, the Committee hopes that the information provided at this workshop and the fruitful exchanges it produced between participants representing the countries of the subregion will give rise to action and that information on the implementation of the recommended measures will soon be sent to the Office.

Deficiencies in the labour inspection system. Need for urgent financial and organizational measures for improvements relating to the inspection of conditions of work. The Committee notes that, although the labour legislation referred to by the Government under each of the Articles of the Convention may appear to a large extent compatible with the requirements of the Convention, its first report to the ILO on the application of the Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150), shows that the operation of labour inspection suffers from serious deficiencies. The Government states that the Directorate of Labour and Social Security – which is responsible for the enforcement of labour legislation though its labour inspection structures – does not have its own budget line and the special status of officials and employees of the labour administration was repealed by Act No. 99/016 of 19 July 1999 issuing the general public service regulations. Moreover, no labour administrator has been recruited since. This information is a cause for concern. It seems to imply that, for nearly ten years, labour inspectors have no longer enjoyed the guarantees provided for by Article 6 of the Convention with regard to conditions of service. Furthermore, information available to the ILO shows that successive measures have been adopted to reduce the salaries of all officials pursuant to the financial legislation in force in recent years. As regards the conditions for the performance of their duties, the Committee notes that there has been no improvement, as inspectors are still obliged to pay for their travelling expenses “out of their own pockets”, the expression used by the Government itself. Even though, in legal terms, no enterprise is exempt from inspection, inspection visits are rare and inspection reports non-existent, as indicated by the Government in its report on the application of Convention No. 150. Inspectors are therefore far removed from the establishments liable to inspection and their role remains restricted to the amicable resolution of disputes, which is however considered to be a subsidiary role by the Government.

The Committee reiterates that the technical memorandum of 2004, which recommended speeding up the process for the adoption of the new Labour Code and the decrees necessary for its implementation, also provided for thorough restructuring with technical support from the ILO for strengthening the capacities of all labour administration staff, particularly labour inspectors, in cooperation with the ILO and the African Regional Centre for Labour Administration (CRADAT). The memorandum also considered that it was necessary to draw up files on enterprises backed up by statistical documentation made available to the inspectorate so that inspection staff could enter the required information. It also recommended that inspection methods should be defined for labour inspectors using standardized documentation so as to facilitate and ensure uniformity of investigation techniques, and in particular to gather all information likely to be of interest to all labour administration bodies. The specialization of certain employees in a number of areas and the ongoing redeployment of other employees were considered necessary to cope with rapid change in the world of work and with the emergence of certain epidemics in workplaces. The establishment of a database referring in particular to industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease was also highly recommended.

Noting that the new Labour Code has not yet been adopted, but that it is planned to include provisions establishing heavier penalties for persons obstructing inspectors in the performance of their duties, the Committee can only encourage such an initiative and hope that the definitive text will soon be adopted.

The Committee also notes the Government's announcement of the preparation of draft conditions of service for labour inspectors and hopes that information on progress made on this draft will soon be sent to the Office. However, it considers that such legislative measures can only have an impact in practice if inspectors can ensure the effective discharge of all the duties defined by Article 3 of the Convention by inspecting the workplaces under their supervision as often as is necessary to ensure the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. However, such coverage cannot be ensured if workplaces liable to inspection have not been identified by the inspection services. The allocation of resources to this end is essential, with funding being sought not only from national financial authorities, but also through international cooperation. The above memorandum, together with up to date information on the actual situation and the difficulties facing labour inspection, might constitute effective arguments in this respect.

The Committee therefore urges the Government to promote, in accordance with Article 5(a), effective cooperation between the labour inspectorate and other competent government bodies (including the tax authorities and social insurance funds) for drawing up a list of workplaces liable to inspection, with an entry in a register indicating at least their geographical location, the branch of activity, the number and categories of workers employed there, and also disaggregation of the latter information by gender.

The availability of a register of enterprises that is regularly updated should allow the central inspection authority to fix priorities for action to ensure, as a minimum, the protection of the most vulnerable workers or those most exposed to occupational hazards and to defend its requirements in human, material and logistical resources on the basis of relevant data from national and international financial authorities, so that an adequate budget can be allocated to them, in so far as national conditions permit. A programme of inspections could be drawn up according to the available resources for each labour inspection structure, and periodic reports on inspections, as provided for by Article 19, could be sent to the central authority for the production of the annual report required by Articles 20 and 21. Such a report would inform the social partners, the other government bodies concerned and the ILO supervisory bodies of the progress made and the shortcomings of the labour inspection system so they can provide their opinions for its improvements.

The Committee hopes that the Government will be able to provide information in its next report on specific measures taken to reinforce the resources, organization and working of the labour inspection system. It trusts that, in the first place, it will be able to provide information on targeted measures for promoting effective cooperation between the inspection services and other government services or public and private institutions for the purpose of the application of the Convention, particularly for the establishment of a register of workplaces liable to inspection under the present Convention (Article 2, paragraphs 1 and 10(a)(i) and (ii)), and on measures taken to increase the number of men and women labour inspectors and to reinforce their training during employment (Articles 7 and 10), particularly within the labour section of the National School of Administration and Magistracy, the establishment of which has been announced by the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will not fail to indicate the steps taken at the national level and in the framework of international financial cooperation to obtain resources for these purposes, and also the results thereof.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Further to its previous comments, the Committee once again notes with concern that the information sent by the Government is the same as that already received in April 2005 and 2006, and that the reports on the work of the inspectorate and the local inspection offices announced time and again in the Government's reports as being attached have still not been sent. Consequently, while noting that between 2005 and 2009 the number of labour inspectors rose from 15 to 23, the Committee is bound to draw the Government's attention once again to the commitments it made when it ratified the Convention, and accordingly to urge it to provide the Office with up to date information on the legislative and practical measures taken or envisaged to apply the Convention, and on any difficulties encountered.

Legislation. The Committee once again asks the Government to take steps for the adoption of texts giving effect to the provisions of the Labour Code on the powers and duties of labour inspectors and controllers and for the enactment of the draft decree issuing regulations governing labour inspectors and controllers to which the Government has been referring for many years. Please report any progress made in this regard.

Article 10 of the Convention. Increasing the numbers and qualifications of the labour inspectorate. The Committee requests the Government to specify the context in which the number of labour inspectors was increased and to indicate whether measures have been taken or are envisaged for the training of the staff of the inspectorate, either to update their skills or to give them further training to enable them to perform their duties effectively. Please describe any such measures and indicate their impact in terms of the achievement of the objectives of labour inspection.

Articles 11 and 16. Material resources and transport facilities made available to labour inspectors for the performance of their duties. Noting the information contained in an earlier report about possible financial support in the context of international cooperation, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on any developments in this matter in recent years and on any progress made in providing the labour inspection services with material resources for their work, particularly transport facilities, so that they are able to implement workplace inspection programmes. If the Government has been unable to obtain financial support, the Committee asks it to indicate the obstacles encountered and the measures envisaged for this purpose.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication and communication to the International Labour Office of an annual report on labour inspection activities. Further to its previous comments, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the central labour inspection authority publishes and sends to the ILO an annual report, in accordance with these provisions of the Convention and with section 469 of the Labour Code, and to provide information in this respect.

While aware of the financial difficulties that are preventing the strict application of the relevant provisions of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to provide all the information and documentation that is currently available on the legislation covered by the Convention (Articles 2, 3(1)(a) and 21(a)) and on the work of the inspectorate and the results achieved (Article 21(c)–(g)), to enable the Committee to assess the situation and provide useful recommendations for the progressive application of the requirements of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report which was received on 8 September 2009, as well as the documentation annexed thereto. It notes with interest the adoption of several Acts relevant to the functioning of the labour administration system, notably, the Labour Contract Act and the Employment Promotion Act in 2007, as well as the Labour Dispute Mediation and Arbitration Act in 2008.

Article 5 of the Convention. Consultation, cooperation and negotiation between the public authorities and organizations of employers and workers. The Committee notes with interest that according to the Government, the National Tripartite Conference on Coordination of Labour Relations has played a crucial role in the process of labour legislation, especially in developing the Labour Contract Act, the Employment Promotion Act and the Labour Dispute Mediation and Arbitration Act. At the same time, there has been extensive involvement of the tripartite partners in the formulation of employment policies and regulations as well as their enforcement, especially the implementation of the Labour Contract Act by establishing and improving the collective bargaining system, facilitating payment of wage arrears, and conducting activities for building harmonious labour relations. Since 1 June 2007, the National Tripartite Conference had held two sessions focusing, among other things, on the establishment and improvement of the collective consultation system and devising solutions to delayed wage payment.

The Committee notes from the Government's report that at the 13th Session (December 2008) of the National Tripartite Conference on Coordination of Labour Relations a decision was taken to modify this tripartite mechanism by specifying its composition, functions, agenda for coordination, working principles and meeting system. The Committee notes that according to the documentation provided by the Government, these functions will include among other things the establishment and improvement of a working system of labour relations and the promotion of: local-level tripartite labour relations coordination mechanisms; labour contracts; collective contracts; democratic management systems; and labour dispute settlement mechanisms; within this framework, subjects for coordination shall include "the promotion and improvement of the labour contract system and the system of collective contract" as well as the "prevention and settlement of labour disputes" and the "establishment of unions and federations of enterprises". According to the Government, at present, more than 10,000 organizations within the tripartite mechanism have been set up at various levels across the country. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide information on the activities of the National Tripartite Conference and their impact, including in relation to the promotion of collective contracts, the establishment of local-level tripartite labour relations coordination mechanisms and the creation of labour dispute settlement mechanisms.

The Committee also notes with interest from the Government's report that, to address the impact of the financial and economic crisis on the country, the three parties of the National Tripartite Conference jointly issued on 23 January 2009, the Guiding Opinions on Addressing the Current Economic Situation and Stabilizing Labour Relations (HRSS[2009]18), which encourages and promotes consultations and negotiations on adjustment of wages, elastic working hours, on-the-job training and other measures to stabilize employment and minimize job cuts. In this context, the National Tripartite Conference has undertaken to continue to play a central role in promoting the "Rainbow Project" for the all-out implementation of the collective contract system and to intensify the coordination of labour relations including through the promotion of negotiation mechanisms at enterprise level as an institutional guarantee that binds together workers and enterprises to help them share the risks, overcome difficulties and grow together. The National Tripartite Conference has moreover undertaken to address the issues of layoffs and non-payment of wages through among other things, the extension of the system of wage guarantee funds, the establishment of early warning mechanisms and the creation of a labour relations emergency response mechanism (Minutes of the 13th Session of the National Tripartite Conference and text of the Guiding Opinions on Addressing the Current Economic Situation and Stabilizing Labour Relations). The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide further information on the activities carried out for the implementation of the Guiding Opinions on Addressing the Current Economic Situation and Stabilizing Labour Relations and specify the impact of these activities in devising responses to the current economic situation and promoting stability in labour relations.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Hong Kong Special Administrative Region

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (notification: 1997)

The Committee notes the annual report of the Labour Department for 2008 which contains detailed information and figures on labour inspection activities and results.

Articles 3 and 17 of the Convention. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors. The Committee's previous comments concerned the need to ensure that labour inspectors are no longer involved in joint operations which, by granting the police and immigration authorities access to workplaces, allow them to arrest workers on the grounds of their illegal residence situation.

The Committee notes the Government's response to the effect that the primary duty of the labour inspectors in the Hong Kong SAR has been and will continue to be the enforcement of legislative provisions relating to the conditions of work and protection of workers; the number of joint operations between labour inspectors, the police and the immigration department was relatively small compared to the total number of workplace inspections for 2008 and 2009: 186 and 217 joint operations compared to 132,525 and 139,718 inspections in 2008 and 2009 respectively. The Committee notes from the 2008 Labour Department Annual Report, however, that in addition to the collaboration of the labour inspectors in joint operations, most workplace inspections (131,835 out of 132,525 in 2008) include a control of employees' proof of identity and employee records to deter irregular employment. It also notes that there is no information in the Annual Report on the results of the workplace inspections or the joint operations in terms of possible arrests and imprisonment of foreign workers who did not possess the necessary residence authorization. According to the Government, the participation of labour inspectors in enforcement actions against irregular employment serves to safeguard the rights and benefits of all workers, given that undocumented workers are often provided with less favourable working conditions due to their vulnerable status, and their recruitment could therefore lead to a generalized lowering of terms and conditions of work if not combated. The principal role of labour inspectors in the joint operations is to collect sufficient evidence on the irregular employment activities for the ultimate purpose of securing the successful prosecution of the unscrupulous employers. Labour inspectors have no power of arrest; the arrest of the undocumented workers and their employers during joint operations and the subsequent investigation for the suspected offences of irregular employment are carried out by the police force or the immigration department.

The Committee recalls that the role of the labour inspectorate, pursuant to the provisions of the Convention, is in principle to monitor not the legality of the employment relationship but the conditions in which the work is performed. In paragraph 77 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, the Committee recalled that neither Convention No. 81 nor the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), contain any provision suggesting that any worker be excluded from the protection afforded by labour inspection on account of their irregular employment status. In paragraph 161 of the abovementioned General Survey, the Committee observed that, in view of the growing numbers of foreign and migrant workers in many countries, the labour inspectorate is often asked to cooperate with the immigration authorities and that such cooperation should be carried out cautiously, keeping in mind that the main objective of the labour inspection system is to protect the rights and interests of all workers and to improve their working conditions. In this respect, it should be emphasized that the expression "while engaged in their work" used in Article 3(1)(a), of the Convention indicates that the protection afforded by the labour inspection must be provided to all workers for the period of their employment relationship; in order to remain in conformity with the purpose of their duties, the action taken by inspectors should enable the implementation of legal proceedings against employers guilty of contraventions, entailing not only the imposition of adequate penalties in accordance with the various categories of contraventions, but also the requirement to pay any outstanding sums owed to the workers concerned for the actual duration of their period of employment. The Committee considers that the financial consequences (fines and settlement of outstanding wages) resulting from the actions of the labour inspectorate, can constitute an effective deterrent against the employment of persons in an irregular situation with regard to labour legislation. In any case, a role for the labour inspectorate consisting of assisting the police and immigration authorities to target workers suspected of being "illegal" is in total contradiction with the protective function entrusted to labour inspectors by the Convention.

The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures as soon as possible to ensure that labour inspectors are no longer involved in joint operations which, by granting the police and immigration authorities access to workplaces, allows them to arrest workers on the grounds of their irregular residence situation. The Government is also asked to ensure that the collaboration of labour inspection officers with the said authorities is limited to legal proceedings against employers found to be in violation of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work, and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, and to inform the ILO of the action taken to this end and the results achieved.

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (notification: 1997)

The Committee notes the Government's report, which was received on 1 September 2009 and contains detailed information on the application of the Convention.

Article 6 of the Convention. Functions of competent bodies within the system of labour administration. The Committee notes with interest, the adoption of the Construction Workers' Registration Ordinance, Chapter 583, which aims at ensuring that all workers in the construction industry are registered with the Construction Workers' Registration Authority, on condition that they possess, among other things, a certificate of attendance of training courses relative to construction work. The employment of unregistered workers is prohibited and power is given to authorized officers of the Registration Authority to verify the application of the Ordinance in construction sites and quarries.

The Committee also notes with interest the adoption of the Construction Industry Council (CIC) Ordinance, Chapter 587. The CIC is a participatory body composed of public officers, as well as representatives of employers, trade unions, professionals of the construction industry, contractors, subcontractors, materials suppliers, training institutes, or academic or research institutions, etc. The CIC aims at promoting good practices in the construction industry in relation to dispute resolution, environmental protection, multi-layer subcontracting, occupational safety and health, procurement methods, project management and supervision, sustainable construction and other areas conducive to improving construction quality. It is empowered to carry out research, recommend standards for application in the construction industry, promulgate codes of conduct for personnel and good practice in the construction industry, investigate complaints concerning any code of conduct, etc. It is also responsible for providing training of skilled/semi-skilled workers in the construction industry, conduct certification tests for operations of construction plants and trade tests for skilled/semi-skilled workers of various principal construction trades. It finally aims at enhancing the cohesiveness of the construction industry by promoting harmonious labour relations and the observance of statutory requirements relating to employment, as well as facilitating communication among various sectors of the industry.

The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the results obtained through the practical implementation of the two Ordinances on the construction industry, especially in terms of the training and employment of construction workers and the protection of their safety and health.

In accordance with Part IV of the report form, the Committee would also be grateful if the Government would communicate extracts of any reports or other periodic information provided by the principal labour administration services. Please also give information on any practical difficulties encountered in the application of the Convention.

Macau Special Administrative Region

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (notification: 2003)

Functioning of the labour administration system in practice. The Committee notes the Government's detailed report received by the ILO in September 2009. It notes, in particular, with interest: (i) the attached detailed reports for 2003–07 containing information on the numerous activities carried out by the different subsidiary organs of the Department of Labour and Employment, especially its Labour Inspection Division; and (ii) the information that a constant auto-evaluation of the efficiency of service of the Department of Labour and Employment is made based on the assessment of citizens and contained in the activity reports abovementioned.

The Committee further notes that Decree No. 52/98/M has been repealed by Decree No 24/2004 which provides for the organization and operation of the Department of Labour and Employment and its six subsidiary organs, respectively (research and information technology division, labour inspection division, occupational safety and health division, employment division, vocational training division and administration and finance division). In addition, the career of public servants is now governed by Law No. 14/2009 on the career of public servants. The Committee requests the Government to provide regular information on any legal or practical developments in relation to the requirements under the present Convention, especially to keep communicating extracts of any reports or other periodic information (Part IV of the report form) reflecting the nature and volume of the activities of the Department of Labour and Employment.

Colombia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes the Government's report and the various documents attached or subsequently sent to the ILO. The Committee further notes the joint comments on the application of the Convention by the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) and the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC), transmitted to the Government on 6 September 2010, reiterating partly their previous comments and those previously made by other trade unions.

Adoption of a new approach to labour inspection and implementation of corresponding measures. The Government refers in its report to the implementation of a number of measures taken or envisaged in the framework of the USAID–Midas (More Investment for Alternative Sustainable Development) programme to establish a comprehensive and coherent approach of labour inspection (Sistema Integral de Inspeccion de Trabajo (SIIT)). These measures include: (i) the increase of preventive visits promoting so-called improvement agreements; (ii) the consolidation of data through the establishment of Excel registers at district level and the implementation and design of an information system on national level through financial and technical cooperation with the Canadian Government; (iii) the risk assessment to identify high-risk areas based on these databases at the national and local levels; (iv) the organizational restructuring of the Ministry for Social Protection (MPS), including the establishments of two new municipal labour inspection offices (EL Bagre and Jagua de Ibirico) in the directorates of Antioquia and Cesar; (v) the appropriate adaptations within the structures of the labour inspectorates (including the establishment of new working groups), the reassignment of functions of labour inspectors; (vi) the strengthening of the number of labour inspection and technical staff and their geographical distribution; (vii) the provision of additional office space; (viii) the purchase of additional technical equipment (computers, etc.); (ix) the envisaged involvement of representatives of different sectors and public and private institutions; as well as (x) the simplification of administrative procedures and the improvement of the academic profile of labour inspectors with a view to improving the effectiveness of service. The Committee notes that the Government refers to a national inspection plan focusing on the health-care sector. It also notes the increased inspections in associated work cooperatives (CTAs) and the information that the risk-assessment in the framework of the SIIT should allow inspections to be focused on high-risk sectors.

For their part, as concerns the implementation of the recently adopted measures, the CUT and CTC deplore the absence of appropriate consultations with trade unions. In relation to the new preventive approach, they observe that: (i) an increasing number of inspectors are appointed on a provisional basis, have no career prospects, are not provided with adequate and regular training and their competences are not evaluated in the course of service; (ii) labour inspectors are entrusted with a multiplicity of additional tasks; (iii) the labour inspection staff is insufficient (despite recent recruitments) in view of the number of workplaces liable to inspection; (iv) the number of inspections is low, especially in high-risk sectors, such as coal mines; (v) complaint procedures are slow; (vi) the collaboration of technical experts in occupational safety and health is not adequate; (vii) the resources allocated to the labour inspectorate, office equipment and transport facilities are scarce and the reimbursement of travel costs is inadequate and lengthy; (viii) cooperation between labour inspection services and other governmental services or public or private institutions does not operate in practice, particularly between labour inspectors and employers and workers and between the labour inspectorate and the judicial authorities; (ix) labour inspectors are not empowered to initiate judicial, or in particular penal procedures in case of violations of labour rights; (x) the labour inspectorate is informed only of cases of grave or mortal accidents; and (xi) the annual report merely contains information on the number of inspection visits and sanctions imposed. Further, according to the trade unions, the mandate of the labour inspectorate should be extended to cover commercial establishments (particularly as the number of informal workplaces in this sector has increased), and the exclusion of Part II of the Convention (commercial establishments) from its ratification should be lifted accordingly.

Article 3(1)(b). Implementation of a preventive approach to labour inspection. The Committee notes that the SIIT particularly recommends the adoption of a preventive approach to labour inspection based on risk assessment in order to identify high-risk sectors and aimed at promoting so-called “improvement agreements” between employers and workers on the occasion of preventive inspections. The Committee notes the information on the number of preventive inspections and of improvement agreements concluded in 2008 and 2009, as well as the organization of various information sessions, the publication and distribution of information material and press coverage. The Committee notes, however, that no information is provided by the Government on the measures taken or envisaged to strengthen the mechanism for notification to the labour inspectorate of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease with a view to achieving the objectives of the preventive approach. According to the CUT and CTC, preventive inspection visits: (i) are only carried out in the formal sector; (ii) are subject to previous authorization by employers which in most cases is not granted; (iii) in the case of the detection of violations of labour law, labour inspectors are not able to impose sanctions or initiate investigations; (iv) a written commitment by an employer to remedy defects is non-binding; and (v) remedial activities of employers are merely followed-up by telephone due to the heavy workload of labour inspectors (although in theory follow-up visits have to be carried out after six months).

Articles 3(2), 10 and 16. Multiplicity of tasks entrusted to labour inspectors. Human resources in relation to the workplaces liable to inspection. The Committee notes the restructuring of the Ministry for Social Protection (MPS) and the reassignment of functions entrusted to labour inspectors in the General Labour Inspection Directorate (GLID) and its local offices by Decree No. 1293 (amending Decree No. 205 of 2003), as well as the corresponding assignment of functions by resolution No. 2605 of 2009 to the newly created working groups in the GLID and in its local offices. The Committee notes that, under the terms of the above provisions, labour inspectors are still entrusted with too many additional tasks, including conciliation of individual and collective labour disputes. According to the CUT and CTC: (i) Decree No. 1293, which enumerates the functions of the labour inspectorate at the national and local levels, and entrusts further new functions to labour inspectors; (ii) resolution No. 2605 of 2009 confines itself to redistributing functions; and (iii) in practice, labour inspectors are also required, in addition to the heavy workload imposed by law, to assume secretarial tasks due to the lack of clerical staff. The Committee requests the Government to refer to paragraph 69 of its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection in this regard and emphasizes once again that the primary duties of labour inspectors are complex and require time, resources, training and considerable freedom of action and movement and that any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors shall not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or to prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. With reference to the conciliation of labour disputes, the Committee also requests the Government to refer to Paragraph 8 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), in accordance with which the functions of labour inspectors should not include that of acting as conciliator or arbitrator in proceedings concerning labour disputes.

Articles 5(a) and (b) and 17. Cooperation with government services and the judicial authorities and collaboration with employers and workers. The CUT and CTC continue to deplore the lack of cooperation between labour inspectors and other government services and the lack of collaboration with employers and workers. With regard to cooperation with other government services, they point out that no cooperation exists between the Superintendence of Economic Solidarity and the National Directorate for the Prevention of Accidents despite a relevant cooperation agreement. The Committee notes in this regard the brief indication by the Government that cooperation with representatives of different sectors and public and private institutions is envisaged under the SIIT.

With regard to collaboration with employers, workers and their respective organizations, the Government refers to the conclusion of 219 improvement agreements in 2008 and 238 in 2009 between employers and workers during preventive inspections in different sectors.

The trade unions call for the involvement of the most representative unions in the design, implementation and evaluation of the system of preventive inspections, collaboration with judicial authorities and the establishment of a register of judicial decisions, as well as the conclusion of cooperation agreements between the various government services.

Article 11. Material working conditions and transport facilities necessary for labour inspectors. The CTC and CUT continue to deplore a lack of material resources allocated to the labour inspectorates and the lack of necessary equipment, such as computers, Internet access, filing cabinets, equipment for technical investigations and adequate transport facilities. In this regard, the trade unions point out that travel expenses of labour inspectors are only reimbursed up to an amount of 4,000 pesos, that the procedure of reimbursement is very slow and that higher or unexpected costs have to be borne by labour inspectors themselves. In addition, the unions allege that in practice, travel expenses are not reimbursed when inspections are carried out without prior notice and the authorization of the director of the local directorate, which can take up to one week or more despite the emergency of certain situations.

Associated work cooperatives (CTAs). The Committee noted in its previous comment that both trade unions and the Government had reported the existence of fraudulent strategies in CTAs to circumvent the obligations arising out of a salaried employment relationship. In this regard, the Committee notes with interest that Act No. 1233 of 2008 establishes the obligation of associated work cooperatives and pre-cooperatives to make contributions to the Colombian Institute for Family Welfare (ICBF), the National Apprenticeship Service (SENA) and family benefit funds. It further notes with interest that this Act explicitly prohibits such cooperatives and pre-cooperatives from acting as employment mediation enterprises or from providing temporary labour, and provides in the case of violation for the withdrawal of the legal personality of the CTA. The Government mentions in addition the intensification of inspections in cooperatives (1,632 inspections and 1,022 investigations in 2009) to control the evasion of social security contributions, the exercise of their approved activity and to detect cooperatives acting as employment mediation enterprises or providing temporary labour, contrary to the law. However, according to the CUT and CTC, inspections in CTAs are not effective, for inspections are only carried out at the registered offices of the CTA, merely resulting in the control of documents, while for the control of the prohibition of employment mediation, inspectors would also have to control other workplaces. The Committee finally notes that the trade unions request information on the violations of legal provisions that have led to the imposition of fines or the withdrawal of the legal personalities of CTAs.

The Committee asks the Government to submit any comments it deems relevant in response to the observations made by the CUT and CTC and to provide information on the progress made through the implementation of the programme to establish a comprehensive and coherent approach of labour inspection (Sistema Integral de Inspeccion de Trabajo (SIIT)) in the establishment and operation of a labour inspection system consistent with the principles laid down in the Convention, and the guidance provided in the accompanying Recommendation No. 81.

It requests the Government to provide information in particular on the measures adopted to secure effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the other public or private institutions and bodies engaged in similar work, including judicial bodies (Article 5(a)); the measures for effective collaboration between labour inspectors and employers and workers (Article 5(b) and Part II of Recommendation No. 81); the status of the current labour inspection staff and their conditions of service (Article 6); the strengthening of initial training and subsequent training during employment for inspectors, including on risk assessment (Article 7(3)); the determination of the number of labour inspectors in relation to the number of workplaces liable to inspection, and the association of qualified technical experts and specialists (Articles 9 and 10); the reimbursement of inspectors' professional travel expenses and the granting of advances for that purpose (conditions, amount, time required for reimbursement, etc.) (Article 11(1)(b) and (2)); the application in practice of the right of free entry, without previous authorization, to workplaces (Article 12(1)(a)); the application in practice of the power to make or have made orders requiring measures to remedy situations harming the safety and health of the workers (Article 13); the measures taken to improve the mechanism of notification to the labour inspectorate of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease (Article 14); the available means for the performance of planned inspections and inspections made in consequence of the receipt of a complaint, with a view to covering as many workplaces as possible while taking into account priority sectors (Articles 11 and 16); the role of labour inspectors in legal proceedings against employers in breach of the labour law, including in CTAs (Article 17); the dissuasive nature of the sanctions applied (Article 18); and the reinforcement of the reporting obligation of labour inspectors and local inspection offices with a view to the publication by the central authority of an annual report (Article 19); and the issue of the eventual extension of the scope of labour inspection to commercial workplaces (Article 22 and Part II of the Convention).

In addition, noting that the Government did not reply to the requests under the following points, the Committee is bound to repeat the relevant comments which read as follows.

The Committee draws the Government's attention to paragraph 133 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection concerning the meaning and scope of Article 3, paragraph 1(c), of the Convention, which provides that labour inspectors shall bring to the notice of the competent authority defects or abuses not specifically covered by existing legal provisions. In the Committee's view, the deterioration in the working conditions of a large number of workers, many of whom are women, would be ample reason for entrusting to inspectors the task of conducting an inquiry into the employment relationships that exist between those giving instructions or receiving goods and services produced by the CTAs and the workers of the CTAs. Any defects or abuse affecting these workers could thus be identified and improvements introduced in the legislation on conditions of work and the protection of workers in the performance of their work. The Committee hopes that labour inspectors will shortly be entrusted with such an investigation to enable the law to keep pace with new situations in the world of work such as the relationship in which CTAs are subordinate to the enterprises for which they produce goods and services outside any form of work contract. The Government is asked to provide information, together with copies of any texts giving effect to Article 3, paragraph 1(c), of the Convention.

The Committee also asks the Government to inform the ILO of its views on the unions' proposals on this matter.

Principle of the confidentiality of the source of Article 15(c). Complaints. The Committee notes once again that the Government has not sent the information requested on the existence of a legal basis ensuring that labour inspectors comply with the principle of the confidentiality of the source of complaints. It once again urges the Government to take steps rapidly to supplement the legislation to ensure the confidentiality of complaints so as to protect workers from reprisals, to keep the ILO informed and to provide any relevant laws or bills.

Annual inspection report. Articles 20 and 21. The Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the obligation on the central inspection authority to publish and communicate to the ILO, in accordance with Article 20 of the Convention, an annual report on the work of the inspection services containing the information required by clauses (a) to (g) of Article 21. The Committee firmly hopes that, with the international cooperation currently under way to reinforce the labour inspectorate, the Government will not fail to take the necessary steps to ensure that full effect is given to these Articles of the Convention. It would be grateful if the Government would in any event provide information on all developments in this area, including any problems encountered.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes the joint communication by the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) and the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC) of comments on the application of the Convention, on 30 August 2010, transmitted to the Government on 6 September 2010.

The Committee draws the Government's attention to its observation under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), as it concerns issues also related to the application of this Convention, and to the following points as concerns more specifically labour inspection in agriculture.

Inadequacy of structures, means and logistics of the labour inspection service in agriculture. Following the comments of the CUT in 2007, which related to the ineffectiveness of the labour inspection system in agriculture due to the inappropriate geographical distribution of offices and lack of resources, the Committee notes that the new observations of the CUT and CTC still raise the same issue and attribute such weakness to the absence of specific arrangements for labour inspection in agriculture. In addition to the observations raised with regard to the Convention, No. 81, the trade unions deplore: (i) the location in urban areas of the generally competent territorial directorates and the lack of subordinate municipal offices in rural areas; (ii) the absence of labour inspectors specifically qualified in agriculture and the lack of specific training of labour inspectors in agriculture; (iii) the lack of technical and logistical means and of transport facilities to attain agricultural enterprises in areas of difficult access; (iv) the lack of preventive control of agricultural establishments, activities, production procedures and use of new products and substances; and (v) the insufficiency of inspection visits (control and prevention) in agriculture. The Committee notes that, while the Government refers to the establishment of the additional territorial directorate Orinoquia-Amazonia, it does not respond to the questions previously raised by the Committee as regards measures to strengthen the labour inspection system in agriculture (budget allocated, specific training provided, association of labour inspectors in the preventive control of agricultural establishments, etc.).

The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the structures and means of action available to labour inspectors in charge of agricultural enterprises (accessibility of offices, human resources and material resources, training, taking into account the specific needs in agriculture, etc.) and to keep the ILO informed of such measures and their results.

Article 6(1)(a) and (c) and (3), of the Convention. Working conditions and role of labour inspectors with regard to associated work cooperatives (CTAs). The Committee has previously pointed out, with reference to paragraph 133 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, that the precarious working conditions of a large number of workers in CTAs, which were acknowledged by the Government in its report, would largely justify entrusting labour inspectors with carrying out a survey on the actual working relations between those giving instructions or receiving goods and services produced by the CTAs, and the workers in the CTAs. While observing that the Government did not provide any relevant information, the Committee notes with interest with reference to its observations under Convention No. 81, the adoption of Law No. 1233 of 2008 which establishes the obligation of cooperatives and pre-cooperatives for contributions to the Colombian Institute for Family Welfare (ICBF), to the National Apprenticeship Service (SENA) and to family benefit funds.

Regarding, more particularly, the conditions of workers working in CTAs producing sugar canes, it notes that, according to the Government, following a big strike by sugar cane harvesters who had been recruited through CTAs from the department of Valle del Cauca, which had paralyzed the whole sugar cane production in the region from 14 July to 15 September 2008, agreements were concluded by CTAs with several refineries, granting, for example increased wages, more equipment and work clothes, loans without interest for one year, support with the family benefit fund for the financing of social plans, education allowances for workers and their families, etc. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether it is envisaged to entrust labour inspectors with carrying out a survey on the actual working relations between those giving instructions or receiving goods and services produced by the CTAs and the workers in the CTAs, (Article 6(1)(c) of the Convention. It further requests the Government to indicate the role of labour inspectors as regards the control of legal obligations of cooperatives in the agricultural sector and to provide information on the cooperation between the labour inspectorate and the superintendence of economic solidarity and other special superintendences in the framework of the implementation of circular No. 001 of 2009, which the Government referred to in this regard but did not transmit to the ILO.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

According to the information sent by the Government, a special appropriation for labour inspection will not be introduced in the budget until after the meetings to prepare the budget for the 2009 financial year. The Committee nonetheless notes that the labour administration has embarked on a diagnosis of the labour inspection services with a view to determining their budget and its inclusions in the 2009 national budget. It asks the Government to provide information on the results of this evaluation as soon as they are available.

The Committee notes that the Government has submitted a request for the inclusion in the Decent Work Country Programme, currently under preparation, of an application for technical assistance to gradually train enough labour inspectors to cover the entire territory. ILO support has also been sought to train two labour inspectors at the National School of Administration (ENA) of Madagascar. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of results of these steps. It trusts that it will take all necessary steps to obtain, particularly in the context of the future DWCP, support and assistance from the ILO for the development of an efficient labour inspection service.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 11 of the Convention. Working conditions of labour inspectors. The Committee notes that the staff of the labour inspectorate has been strengthened during the period since the report sent by the Government in 2004. However, it notes that no measures have been taken to improve the working conditions of inspectors and that they do not benefit from the transport facilities necessary for the discharge of their duties, nor the full reimbursement of their travelling and incidental expenses. The Government is requested to take the necessary measures to ensure that effect is given to the provisions of the above Article of the Convention and to provide information in its next report on any progress achieved in this respect, on the difficulties encountered and the solutions envisaged to overcome them.

Articles 19, 20 and 21. Reporting obligations on the inspection activities. With reference to its previous comments concerning information relating to the application in practice of the legal provisions giving effect to the Convention, the Committee notes that, contrary to the Government's indication in its report received in 2004, no regional inspection report has been provided to the ILO. Furthermore, no annual report, as required by Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention, has been transmitted to the ILO. The Committee does not therefore have available the information that is essential on the operation of the labour inspection system in practice to allow it to monitor developments and provide support to the Government for its improvement in relation to the requirements of the Convention. The material and logistical situation described by the Government gives grounds for fearing, despite legislation that is in conformity on many points with the provisions of the Convention, that there is a significant gap between the extent of the needs for the supervision of conditions of work and the level of coverage that the inspection services are able to ensure. The Committee hopes that, so that it can fulfil its responsibilities, the Government will provide in its next report all the information available allowing it to assess the level of application of the Convention more than a decade after its ratification. This information should cover, among other matters: (i) the geographical distribution of the public officials responsible for inspection functions as defined in Article 3(1) of the Convention (the schedule announced by the Government in its report was not attached); (ii) the geographical distribution of workplaces liable to inspection or, at the least, those for which the Government considers that the conditions of work require specific protection from the labour inspection services and the judiciary on the basis of the violations reported by the labour inspectorate; (iii) the frequency, content and number of participants at the training courses provided for labour inspectors during their career; (iv) the level of remuneration and conditions for career progression in relation to other public officials with comparable responsibilities; (v) the proportion of the national budget allocated to the public labour inspection services; (vi) a description of the cases in which inspectors travel to enterprises, the procedure followed and the transport facilities that they use for this purpose, the activities that they carry out and their outcome; and (vii) the proportion of supervisory activities carried out by inspectors in relation to their conciliation duties.

The Government is also requested to indicate the nature of the obstacles or difficulties (of a financial, structural, political or other nature) encountered in the implementation in practice of its legislation respecting labour inspection and to describe the measures adopted or envisaged to resolve them (for example, seeking international financial cooperation, inter-institutional cooperation within the country, collaboration with the social partners; the adoption of specific conditions of service for labour inspectors, rationalization of the way in which the resources of the labour administration are used).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 1986)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the Government's report. It notes Decree No. 2003-219 of 21 August 2003 to organize the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security, and Decree No. 2000-29 of 17 March 2000 on the composition of the National Technical Committee on occupational safety and health and occupational risk prevention.

1. Financial obstacles to the implementation of the Convention. The Committee notes that, although financial constraints have prevented adoption of special regulations for the management and staff of the labour administration and any meetings of the abovementioned Technical Committee, the Government welcomes the benefits drawn from the technical seminars organized with support from the ILO and the African Regional Centre for Labour Administration (CRADAT), and would like this type of training to be continued.

2. Organization and working of the administration system. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide further information on the current working of the labour administration system; provide a copy of the Decree setting out the powers of the new Ministry; indicate the number, types and terms of reference of any tripartite consultative bodies reporting to the Ministry; describe the bodies comprising the Ministry both at central level and in external departments; indicate any other bodies accountable to the Ministry; provide copies of any legal texts, reports or other documents pertaining to the composition, terms of reference and working of the bodies comprising the labour administration system (Articles 1, 4, 5 and 6).

The Government is requested also to provide information on the composition of the Technical Advisory Committee on international labour standards and all the matters on which consultations were held in the Technical Committee (Article 8).

3. Financial resources for meeting the obligations of the Convention. Noting with concern that the working of the labour administration is still severely affected by a lack of resources and that, despite technical assistance from the ILO, no new resources have been assigned to it, the Committee requests the Government to consider seeking further financial assistance through international cooperation with a view gradually to covering the human, material and logistical resources the labour administration needs in order to carry out its functions, as defined in Article 6. It would be grateful if the Government would keep the Office informed of any steps taken to this end and on any measures taken or envisaged to apply the provisions of the Convention in law and in practice, and to provide copies of any relevant texts.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

The Committee notes that the Government was requested by the ILO to send copies of the comments by the Confederation of the Movement of Costarican Workers (CMTC), the Central General de Trabajadores (CGT) and the Central Social Juanito Mora Porras, which it indicated as enclosed to its report. It notes that, in September 2010, the Government communicated additional information to its report as well as other documents, but not the abovementioned organizations' comments.

The Committee equally notes the communication by the Rerum Novarum Workers' Confederation (CTRN) to the ILO of comments on the application of the Convention. The ILO transmitted the latter to the Government on 17 September 2010.

The Government is requested to communicate, without delay, the trade unions' observations referred to in its report to allow their examination together with the Government's report and the CTRN comments, as well as any comments the Government might wish to submit on the points raised in these observations.

Côte d'Ivoire

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1987)

Articles 7 and 10 of the Convention. Suitable training for labour inspectors. The Committee notes with interest the content of the training provided for labour inspectors both as initial training and on-the-job training, and the Government's information regarding further training for labour inspectors so as to match their skills to the realities of the world of work. The Committee notes, however, that the Government does not, as the Committee asked in its previous comments, specify the number and status of participants or the impact of such training on the volume and quality of inspection activities. The Committee requests the Government to provide in its future reports detailed information on the various types of training provided for labour inspectors (purpose, participation, frequency, duration) and the impact of the training on inspection activities (volume and quality) and on relations between labour inspectors and employers or their organizations and between labour inspectors and workers or their organizations.

Article 11. Material resources of labour inspectors. The Committee notes the information sent by the Government to the effect that the lack of resources is the greatest obstacle to the efficient running of the inspection system. It also notes that the Government intends to seek international financial cooperation to reinforce the means of action of labour inspectors (computers, internet connection, transport facilities, etc.). The Committee requests the Government to indicate the steps taken to this end and the results obtained.

Articles 16 and 21(c). Register of industrial and commercial workplaces liable to inspection with a view to scheduling inspection visits. The Committee notes, in connection with its general observation of 2009 on the need for the labour inspection service to have statistics of the industrial and commercial establishments liable to inspection and the workers they employ, that because cooperation between institutions failed, it has not been possible to draw up a register of establishments. The Government indicates that the institutions that keep data refuse to forward them to the labour inspectorate. However, pending the establishment of a nation-wide database to be set up by the National Institute of Statistics, instructions have been given to all branches of the labour inspectorate to compile a list of the workplaces under their responsibility that make requests to the labour inspectorate. The list is to be appended to the annual report drawn up by each branch and sent to the central inspection authority. The Government has also said that it needs technical assistance from the Office in compiling a register of workplaces. The Committee notes with interest the Government's efforts gradually to draw up a chart of establishments liable to labour inspection and hopes that it will nonetheless be able to take steps at the earliest possible date to set up and maintain cooperation between institutions, which is essential to the establishment of a reliable register of workplaces. The Committee asks the Government to keep the ILO informed of progress made in compiling information on workplaces liable to inspection and the workers they employ, and to send any relevant documents (circulars or instructions, list of workplaces, payrolls, etc.).

Nevertheless, the Government is also asked to take measures to establish and maintain cooperation between all public and/or private bodies and institutions holding relevant data so that a reliable register of workplaces liable to inspection can be established and serve as a basis for assessing the operation of the inspection system and determining the measures to be taken to improve it.

Articles 20 and 21. Further to its previous comments and in connection with the process referred to by the Government to draw up a chart of workplaces liable to inspection, the Committee asks the Government to ensure that the central inspection authority publishes and communicates to the ILO as soon as possible an annual report containing all the information available on the subjects listed at Article 21.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1987)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report makes no reference to any progress on the matters raised in its previous comments.

Articles 14 and 15 of the Convention. Material resources essential to the performance of labour inspection duties. According to the Government, the lack of progress in applying the Convention is due to the inadequate material resources available to the labour inspectorate, and in particular the absence of suitable transport facilities for visits to agricultural undertakings in remote rural areas. The Committee reminds the Government that in ratifying the Convention, it undertook to adopt the necessary measures to apply the Convention in law and in practice. Since transport facilities are essential to the performance of inspection duties in agricultural undertakings, it is up to the Government to do its utmost to provide such facilities for the inspection services working in rural areas with no public transport. The Committee requests the Government to take all necessary measures (under the national budget and, if necessary, by seeking international financial cooperation) to provide labour inspectors visiting agricultural undertakings with the means of action and the vehicles and/or transport facilities they need to perform their duties, in accordance with the abovementioned provisions of the Convention. The Government is asked to keep the Office informed of any such measures and of progress made in the period covered by its next report.

Article 9. Training a sufficient number of suitably qualified labour inspection staff for the agricultural sector, particularly in the area of the safety and health risks facing agricultural workers. In its previous observation the Committee stressed the need to train sufficient numbers of qualified inspection staff particularly in the area of the occupational safety and health risks facing agricultural workers. The Government indicates that the duties of the inspectorate are comprehensive in scope, so the training provided for labour inspectors is multi-sectoral. Every inspector is therefore expected to work in all sectors of activity. In the Government's view, an inspection system organized in this way is on no account at odds with the Convention. The Committee is bound to point out that although the Convention does not require a specific body of inspectors to be created solely for the agricultural sector, it does provide, in Article 9(3), that labour inspectors in agriculture shall be adequately trained for the performance of their duties. Furthermore, measures must be taken to give them appropriate further training in the course of their employment. Accordingly, even where the coverage of a labour inspectorate is comprehensive, specific training is necessary for inspectors who work or who will work in the agricultural sector. There are activities specific to the agricultural sector – for example those involving the use of pesticides and other chemicals – for which technical knowledge must be acquired. The Committee draws the Government's attention to Paragraphs 4–7 of the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Recommendation, 1969 (No. 133), on the minimum qualifications needed by labour inspectors called upon to work in the agricultural sector, and again urges it to take the necessary steps to ensure that inspectors who work or will be called upon to work in agricultural undertakings receive suitable training, and to provide information on these measures and their results.

Articles 3, 14, 16, 18, 21, 25, 26 and 27. Inspection work in agricultural undertakings and the requirement to submit reports. Further to its previous comments and to its general observation of 2009, the Committee notes the Government's acknowledgement that in a country which is essentially agricultural, statistics on agricultural undertakings and the workers they employ are an absolute necessity. It notes that, unfortunately, an attempt to record the workplaces liable to inspection was unsuccessful. Noting that the Government has expressed a need for ILO technical assistance in compiling a register of agricultural undertakings, the Committee can only commend the Government on its initiation of such an operation and points out that it is essential to examine why it did not succeed and to look for other approaches. The Committee requests the Government to provide full information and any documentation relevant to the measures set in motion to compile a chart of agricultural undertakings (instructions, circulars, forms, inspection reports, etc.), together with a detailed explanation of why the project was not completed.

The Committee requests the Government to take decisive steps to promote cooperation between the institutions and public and semi-public bodies that have data relevant to the labour inspectorate with a view to gradually recording agricultural undertakings, as a first step listing at least plantations and other intensive farming enterprises (national, multi-national or combined), and to provide information on these measures and the results obtained during the period covered by the next report on the application of this Convention.

Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that pending the establishment, with ILO technical assistance, of a register of agricultural undertakings, the central inspection authority publishes and sends to the ILO at the earliest possible date and on an annual basis, all available information on inspection activities and their outcome (applicable legislation, inspection staff involved, number of undertakings and workers covered, control of legislation, raising awareness of occupational risks, warnings, penalties imposed and actually applied, etc.) in agricultural undertakings in the period covered by the next report.

Cuba

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1954)

Article 12(1) and (2) of the Convention. Restrictions on the freedom of action of labour inspectors in relation to the inspection of workplaces. In its previous comment, the Committee noted that the Regulations on the System of National Labour Inspection of 2007 maintain the requirement of the communication to the employer of a written inspection order specifying the purpose of any inspection (sections 11 and 12), which is contrary to Article 12(1) and (2). In its report, the Government refers to section 10 of the Regulations, which provides that information on inspections, as a general rule, is not communicated to the entities to be inspected before starting to carry out the inspection visit. It also reports that labour inspectors may, after having presented their identity papers and handed in the order for inspection, enter at any time of the day or night any establishment subject to inspection. While taking due note of section 10 of Resolution No. 20/2007 referred to by the Government, according to which in general the inspections are not notified in advance to the bodies concerned or the body they depend on in case of unexpected inspections, the Committee notes with concern that labour inspectors are still required, once at the workplace, to present to the employer not only proper credentials as provided by Article 12(1), but also, an order for inspection, which is in total contradiction with the Convention, as it makes it impossible to guarantee the confidentiality relating to the complaints and their authors (Article 15(c)).

The Committee also draws the Government's attention once again to Article 12(2), pursuant to which labour inspectors should be even authorized to refrain from notifying the employer or his representative of their presence on the occasion of an inspection if they consider that such a notification may be prejudicial to the performance of their duties.

Referring the Government to its previous request on this issue, the Committee once again requests the Government to take measures rapidly to bring the legislation into full conformity with the provisions of Article 12 in connection with Article 15(c) and keep the ILO duly informed of the progress made.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1968)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes that notwithstanding the difficult times the country is going through, the General Labour Inspectorate has managed to produce a report for 2007 on the work of the services under its control containing detailed information and statistics on the subjects listed at Article 21 of the Convention for four of the country's 11 provinces. It hopes that the central authority will pursue its efforts to gather and analyse data and information on the work of the inspectorate so that the annual report will gradually cover the entire country.

Articles 4, 5, 7, 10, 11, 20 and 21. Decentralized administration and the labour inspectorate. In its previous comments, the Committee took note of the provisions of the Constitution in force since 18 February 2006 providing that with the decentralization of the administration, the central authority would still have sole responsibility for the national public service, the public finances of the Republic and the labour legislation. These provisions being general in nature, the Committee was unable to assess their scope as compared to that of the provisions determining the responsibilities of the provincial authorities. While emphasizing the importance of the social and economic role played by the labour inspectorate, it reminded the Government of the need to ensure that labour inspectors have a status and conditions of service that take due account of the importance and the specific nature of their duties, including remuneration scales based on criteria related to personal merit. To enable it to keep track of the situation, the Committee asked the Government to indicate how powers were distributed between the central authority and the provincial authorities in terms of the organization and functioning of the labour inspectorate and the appointment of labour inspection staff, and for budgetary decisions on the distribution of the resources needed to carry out this function of the public labour administration. In its report, the Government indicates that it has submitted a Bill on decentralization to Parliament, but states that it is unable to provide the information requested. The Committee notes, however, that Decree No. 08/06 of 26 March 2008 establishes a National Council (CNDM) to implement and monitor the decentralization process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It notes that section 12(4) of the Decree provides for a technical unit to assist with decentralization, with responsibility for monitoring the transfer of the financial and human resources allocated to the areas that are of the exclusive competence of the provinces and for the functions of the decentralized territorial entities. Pursuant to Act No. 07/009 of 31 December 2007 establishing the state budget for the 2008 financial year, the Government has undertaken to re-establish state authority over the entire national territory and to back it up with a stringent reform of the public administration with a view to improving the qualitative and quantitative performance of public officials. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate precisely whether, by virtue of the Constitution, labour inspection is considered to be an integral part of the national public service, and asks it to provide a copy of any text or document that would enable the Committee to assess the manner in which effect is given throughout the national territory to the provisions of Articles 4, 5, 7, 10, 11, 20 and 21 of the Convention.

Articles 3(2), 6 and 15(a). Integrity, independence and impartiality of labour inspectors. In its previous comments the Committee noted, in connection with allegations by the Confederation of Trade Unions of Congo (CSC) of corruption among labour inspectors, that the Government had provided no information on the fact that some inspectors have a second occupation and on the lack of transport facilities. However, it notes the Government's commitment to restructuring the inspection services so as to make them operational and ensure that labour inspectors enjoy a status and conditions of service commensurate with their responsibilities, thereby removing them from any improper external influence, such as might result from a subordinate position in parallel job. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide details as to the possibility for labour inspectors to have a second job and the conditions governing such a possibility. The Government is also asked to indicate how it applies in law and in practice its undertaking to improve the status and conditions of service of labour inspectors, and to provide copies of any relevant legislation or document.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 1987)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Re-establishment of the exercise of the right to organize. The Committee notes that the work of the National Labour Council in 2004 gave rise to the adoption, among other regulatory texts on workers' right of representation, of Ministerial Order No. 12/CAB/MIN/TPS/VTB/053/2004 of 12 October 2004 lifting the suspension of trade union elections in enterprises and establishments of all types. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the impact of this Order on industrial relations.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's report received at the ILO on 29 May 2008. It also notes Act No. 75/AN/00/4e to organize the Ministry of Employment and National Solidarity, the organizational chart of the Ministry and the summary table of statistics on the work of the labour inspection services and social legislation in the period 2003–07 and the constitutional provisions providing that international standards and commitments prevail over national provisions.

In its previous comments, the Committee referred to comments made by the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD) in 2007 calling for an urgent review of the labour inspection system and the strengthening of its resources. In the absence of any recent statistics on the working of the labour inspectorate, the Committee also asked the Government to report in as much detail as possible on the following matters: (i) the supervision of working conditions and the protection of workers in enterprises in export processing zones excluded from the scope of the new Labour Code by section 1 of the Code; (ii) the impact of the conciliation work carried out by labour inspectors on the volume and quality of their inspection duties (Article 3(2) of the Convention); (iii) human resources and means of action of the labour inspectorate in relation to the requirement of Article 16 that workplaces shall be visited as often and as thoroughly as necessary; and (iv) the need to give effect to Articles 20 and 21 concerning the requirement that the central inspection authority shall publish and communicate to the ILO an annual general report on the work of the inspection services.

On the basis of the information sent by the Government, the Committee wishes to draw attention to the following points.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Supervision of working conditions and protection of workers in industrial and commercial establishments in export processing zones. The Committee noted in its previous comments that, under section 1 of the Labour Code, the Code applies throughout the national territory except in export processing zones (EPZs) which are governed by special legislation. According to the Government, not only are the EPZs beyond the competence of the labour inspectorate but the legislation applying to them, which has prompted objections in the country, grants excessive privileges to employers at the expense of the workers. The Government explains that supervision of the enterprises allowed to operate in EPZs is the responsibility of the ports and EPZs authorities, which also issue visas for foreign workers and deal with any disputes regarding the election of staff delegates in the zones. The Committee notes, however, that pursuant to section 31 of the EPZ Code issued by Act No. 53/AN/04 of 17 May 2004, "the Djibouti Labour Code governs labour relations in the export processing zones", and that the legislation on EPZs available at the ILO contains no provisions on this subject. The Government is asked to indicate whether section 31 of the EPZ Code has been repealed and if so, to provide the relevant text, and in any event to provide copies of the texts governing the working conditions and protection of the workers occupied in establishments in the EPZs together with the legal provisions respecting their enforcement.

Articles 3(1)(a) and (b), and 17. Need to ensure a balance between the enforcement and advisory functions of labour inspection. According to the Government, the work of inspection services pertaining to labour legislation focuses largely on persuasion and information. The Committee nonetheless notes that the national legislation contains, as the Convention requires, a whole set of legal provisions that also enable inspectors to prosecute those who are in breach of the law on working conditions. In paragraph 279 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, the Committee pointed out in this connection that although advice and information can only encourage compliance with legal provisions, it should nonetheless be accompanied by an enforcement mechanism enabling those guilty of violations reported by labour inspectors to be prosecuted. In keeping with its assertion that no labour legislation, however developed it may be, can exist for long without an effective labour inspection system, the Government should ensure that the inspection system is able to make use of all means of action available to it under the law to attain its objectives. A balance between the advisory and enforcement roles of the inspection services would, without doubt, contribute to reducing the number and scale of labour disputes. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to take the appropriate steps to ensure that, where necessary, inspectors exercise in practice the authority conferred by Article 17 of the Convention, to which section 196 of the Labour Code gives effect, themselves to initiate legal action before the competent jurisdiction against those who breach labour laws and regulations, on the basis of the provisions of Title IX of the Code which defines offences and establishes the penalties applying to them.

Article 3(2). Accumulation of tasks assigned to labour inspectors and its impact on the volume and quality of their inspection duties. In its observations of 2007, the UGTD expressed the view that in future the duties of the inspectorate should encompass conciliation and prevention. The Committee drew the Government's attention in this connection to Article 3(2), which places restrictions on the additional duties that may be required of labour inspectors, and asked the Government to send the Office information on the manner in which observance of this provision is ensured. The Government acknowledges that workplace inspection has its shortcomings. Furthermore, the data the Government provided on the work of the inspectorate in the area of occupational safety and health are slight in comparison with those pertaining to the settlement of individual and collective labour disputes. The Government nonetheless hopes that in future, the labour inspection service will be able to conduct three visits a week. The Committee notes this information with concern, observing that it bears out the UGTD's assertion that the labour inspection system needs to be reviewed and strengthened so that it can perform its duties fully. It furthermore regrets that it has not been informed of the number of workplaces subject to inspection and is therefore unable to assess the extent to which the needs for inspection are covered. Observing that the time and energy that labour inspectors spend in attempting to settle collective labour disputes interfere with the performance of their primary duties, the Committee suggests, in paragraph 74 of its General Survey mentioned above, that conciliation or mediation in collective labour disputes be entrusted to a specialized body or officials. It notes in this connection that section 181 of the new Labour Code in fact provides for the establishment of an arbitration council to hear collective labour disputes that conciliation has failed to settle. It notes, however, that the Council will hear the dispute only after the labour inspector or labour director has attempted conciliation and referred the matter to it within eight full days (section 180 of the Code). The Committee reminds the Government of the specific warning in Paragraph 8 of Recommendation No. 81 that "the functions of labour inspectors should not include that of acting as conciliator or arbitrator in proceedings concerning labour disputes” and it urges the Government to envisage taking steps to relieve inspectors of their role as preliminary conciliators in labour disputes. It would be grateful if the Government would also take measures to ensure, as required by Article 16 of the Convention, that the strength of the inspectorate is sufficient to cover the workplaces liable to inspection and send the Office information with as much supporting documentation as possible on all progress made in this matter and on any difficulties encountered.

Articles 10, 11 and 16. Reinforcement of the labour inspection system. The Committee notes that in order to reinforce the labour inspection system, the Government plans to create four new sections of the inspectorate, two in the capital and two in the interior of the country, and to take advantage of technical support from the ILO Subregional Office in Addis Ababa to organize a training course for labour controllers and the single labour inspector at the ILO International Training Centre in Turin. It also notes that the Government is examining possibilities for cooperation between the labour inspectorate and the competent medical and technical institutions, and that a tripartite workshop on Convention No. 81 was to be organized by the ILO subregional office in 2008. The Committee hopes that the Government will not fail to keep the ILO informed of any developments relative to any of these matters.

Further to its previous comments, the Committee once again asks the Government to provide the most recent data available on the number and geographical distribution of the workplaces liable to inspection (including mines and quarries), the number of workers employed therein and the transport facilities available to the labour inspector and labour controllers for duty travel.

Such information is essential to the central inspection authority in evaluating the human and material resources needed in order to attain the objectives of labour inspection and hence to estimating the funding of the inspectorate in the national budget.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication, communication and content of the annual inspection report. While taking note of the table of statistics attached to the Government’s report on the work of the inspection services, the Committee observes that it covers a period of five years and that, in terms of activities and results, it is not sufficiently specific or relevant to be of use in evaluating the operation and efficiency of the labour inspection system. The Committee is therefore once again bound to ask the Government to take the necessary measures for the publication of an annual inspection report, as provided in section 192 of the Labour Code, within the time limits prescribed in Article 20 and containing the information required by Article 21. Emphasizing that such a report is an essential tool in evaluating the efficiency of the inspection system and in identifying the resources required for its improvement, in particular through appropriate budgetary estimates, the Committee requests the Government to pay due attention to the indications in Part IV of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81) as to the level of detail that would be appropriate in the information required by clauses (a) to (g) of Article 21 of the Convention. It recalls that it may request ILO technical assistance for this purpose.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the Government’s report received in March 2009 contains no information in reply to its direct request formulated in 2007 and repeated in 2008. It notes that, despite the reminder sent to it by the ILO in May 2009, the Government has not supplied the required information.

Given that for many years the Government has not supplied a detailed report on the manner in which effect is given in law and in practice to the Convention and that the most recent annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate transmitted to the ILO concerns 1996, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would take all the necessary steps to ensure that the next report pursuant to article 22 of the ILO Constitution contains the level of detail required by the report form. It requests the Government to ensure that the information available on each of the subjects listed in Article 21 are included in its report pending the publication of the next annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate.

Articles 3, 6, 10, 12, 13, 15, 17 and 19 of the Convention. Duties, status, numbers, rights, obligations and powers of labour inspectors. In reply to the Committee’s previous comments, the Government indicates that the staff of the Labour Department consists of four officials, namely the Labour Commissioner, his deputy, and two agents. According to the Government, these officials perform all the duties allocated by the Labour Department. Although they possess the necessary qualifications for providing high-quality advice to employers and workers, the staff of the Labour Department are, however, insufficient in number and also faced with a lack of equipment aggravated by the austerity measures imposed by the International Monetary Fund, making it difficult to undertake advisory activities. Nevertheless, the Government expresses the hope that recommendations resulting from a study of the situation undertaken by a former ILO expert may be implemented. The Committee, however, notes that a copy of the report on this study has not been transmitted to the ILO, despite a written request dated 19 March 2007.

In reply to the Committee’s requests concerning the way in which it is ensured that labour inspectors abide by the code of ethics relevant to their duties, as defined by Article 15(a), (b) and (c) of the Convention, the Government has supplied information on the legal provisions concerning the general obligations of all officials. The Committee would like to emphasize that these provisions are insufficient in relation to the requirements of the Convention. There has to be the strictest possible observance of ethical principles by inspectors to counterbalance the extensive powers and prerogatives which, in accordance with the Convention, have to be accorded exclusively to labour inspection officials in the performance of their duties. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would refer to its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection with regard to: (i) the prohibition on labour inspectors to have “any direct or indirect interest” in enterprises liable to inspection (paragraph 227); (ii) the scope of the obligation of professional secrecy (paragraphs 229–232); and (iii) the obligation of confidentiality with respect to the source of any complaint and the connection that may exist between an inspection visit and a complaint (paragraphs 235–237). The Committee requests the Government to take steps to ensure that the legislation is supplemented in the light of these clarifications with regard to the duties and obligations of labour inspection officials. It further requests the Government to keep the Office informed of all progress in this respect and to send copies of any relevant draft or final texts.

Necessity for adequate penalties. Article 18. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the amount of fines which can be imposed on persons who contravene the legislation enforceable by the labour inspection officials has not been revised since 1990 and section 32 of the Act on labour standards provides that anyone contravening the provisions of sections 28 and 29 (concerning the powers and prerogatives of labour inspectors) is liable to a fine, the amount of which is fixed at 75 dollars and multiplied by the number of days for which the contravention continues. However, the Committee notes that section 13 of the Act of 1983 on occupational safety (Chapter 90:08) provides that the amount of the fine applicable for a violation of its provisions is 5,000 dollars, with the possible addition of imprisonment for one year. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would clarify whether the staff responsible for monitoring enforcement of the Act on occupational safety are the same as the staff of the Labour Department, who are also responsible for monitoring the legislation concerning other conditions of work and protection of workers, and to supply a list of the provisions establishing penalties for violations of the provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers and the contraventions to which they apply. The Committee also requests the Government to send a copy of any document describing specific cases of convictions of employers involving the imposition of a fine and/or imprisonment.

In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the study carried out in 2007 on the situation of the labour administration system, together with information on the follow-up measures taken by the Government in relation to the recommendations contained in the study.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee takes note of the brief reports sent by the Government, received on 8 September 2009 and 19 October 2010, and the information on occupational safety and health inspection activities. It also notes with interest the reports produced in the context of bilateral cooperation with the Ministry of Labour and Immigration of Spain on the one hand, and on the other, the Ministry of Labour of Argentina in November 2008 on the operation of the labour inspection system in the country, which contain recommendations for improvement.

Article 3(1)(b) of the Convention. Educational activities conducted by the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes the various training courses on rights at work and on safety and health run for workers, employers, representatives of trade unions and chambers of commerce and technical specialists, which involved visits to plantations and workplaces, and the compilation of a handbook of all existing labour standards subject to supervision by the labour inspectorate. Furthermore, it notes with interest the "SIUDEL" website (www.derechosdeltrabajo.net) provided by the Government which contains a lot of information on labour law, illustrated to make it readily accessible to persons with limited reading ability or poor sight.

Evaluation of the labour inspection system. The Committee notes that the Government provides no information replying to the matters raised in the previous comments concerning the need to supplement the labour legislation in order to strengthen the labour inspection system, and the action taken on the recommendations of the ILO/FORSAT multilateral technical cooperation project, and the Pilot Inspection Plan for Guayaquil produced in the context of this project, which ended in April 2007. The Government merely indicates that action will be taken on the recommendations made in the context of the abovementioned bilateral technical cooperation and on the Committee of Experts' observations, in the course of the process to reform the labour inspection system now under way.

The Committee observes that the recent diagnosis of the situation and the resulting recommendations largely reflect the findings of the report evaluating the ILO/FORSAT multilateral technical cooperation project of 2005 as concerns the situation of labour inspection in Quito, Guayaquil and Cuenca, namely: the absence of a national labour authority; insufficient human resources and material means; the absence of a body of rules governing the structure, organization, duties and functions of the labour inspection system, the status, powers and obligations of inspectors, and the absence of legal provisions defining offences against the legislation on working conditions and the protection of workers and setting penalties therefor; the absence of any planning and scheduling of inspection visits, and inadequate oversight of occupational safety and health obligations. Attention was also drawn to shortcomings such as the lack of a central labour inspection authority, the disparities between regional and provincial bodies, the absence of any regional safety and health bodies other than the Regional Directorate in Quito, a lack of cooperation between the inspectors of the Ecuadorian Social Security Institute (IESS) and labour inspectors, and overlap in the duties performed by the various categories of inspectors (inspector-controllers, IESS inspectors, inspectors responsible for supervising various projects, labour inspectors, child labour inspectors, only the last two of these categories having public servant status).

The Committee observes that the improvement – noted in its previous comments – in the system of labour registers resulting from the ILO/FORSAT multilateral technical cooperation project enabled the Government of Argentina to make a recommendation for the establishment of an integrated national system for labour statistics to include the various administrative registers, and for reactivation of the Special Committee on Labour Statistics.

To remedy the disadvantages of having several categories of labour inspectors of varying status and of creating a single category of general "integrales" inspectors, the Government states that pursuant to mandato constituyente No. 008, there is to be an integrated labour inspectorate and the administrative, operational and financial organization of the Ministry of Labour and Employment is to be strengthened.

Further to its observation of 2008, the Committee asks the Government once again to take measures to bring the legislation into line with the Convention as regards: determining the workplaces covered (Articles 2 and 23); the functions and organization of the system (Articles 3, 4, 5 and 9); the status and conditions of service of inspection staff (Article 6), its training (Article 7), eligibility of both sexes (Article 8), prerogatives and powers (Articles 12, 13 and 17), ethical (Article 15) and functional (Articles 16 and 19) obligations; the publication of an annual inspection report (Articles 20 and 21). The Government is also asked to supplement the legislation with provisions defining offences enforceable by labour inspectors and setting penalties therefor. Please also send information on any progress made and copies of any texts adopted for the abovementioned purposes.

The Government is again asked to provide the information that is now available thanks to the system for recording labour data such as the number, activities and geographical distribution of the industrial and commercial establishments that are under the supervision of the labour inspectorate; the number and categories of workers employed therein (men, women, young workers in particular) and any other information necessary for an evaluation by the competent authority of the labour inspectorate's needs in human resources, material means and transport facilities, and to determining priorities for action in the light of Ecuador's economic circumstances.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

El Salvador

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1995)

International cooperation and ILO technical assistance. The Committee notes with interest that a labour inspection reform has been undertaken as a result of recommendations made following a diagnosis that the Office carried out as part of regional cooperation project RLA/07/04M/USA for the strengthening of labour administration systems.

The Committee notes with interest: (a) the adoption of the General Act on the Prevention of Risks in the Workplace (LPRT) issued by Decree No. 254 of 21 January 2010, published in the Official Journal of 5 May 2010; (b) the current revision of the Act on the Organization and Running of the Labour and Social Welfare Sector (LOFT); (c) the current preparation of a code of ethics for labour inspectors; (d) the restructuring of the labour inspectorate involving the merger, within the Directorate General of Inspection, of the two bodies responsible for the supervision of conditions of work in general and occupational safety and health; and (e) a pilot project to standardize labour inspection procedures in these areas, scheduled for implementation between July 2010 and February 2011.

The Committee notes with interest that the LPRT meets the Convention's requirements on the following points: (i) establishment of an obligation to notify the labour inspectorate within 72 hours of any industrial accident and, immediately and without delay, of any serious or lethal accident (Article 14 of the Convention); (ii) classification of offences (minor, serious, very serious) and establishment of penalties calculated on the basis of the minimum wage for the various categories of offence (Article 18); and (iii) establishment of an occupational safety and health committee (composed of workers' and employers' representatives) in enterprises employing 15 or more workers and enterprises engaging in activities of a kind requiring such a body (Article 5 of the Convention and Part II of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81). The Committee would be grateful if the Government would take the necessary steps to ensure that the legislation is likewise brought into conformity with Article 14 of the Convention as concerns notification to the labour inspectorate of cases of occupational disease. It asks the Government to keep the Office informed of developments in this matter, to provide a copy of any texts adopted and to send a detailed description, with supporting documentation, of the procedures for declaring relevant industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease and notifying them to the labour inspectorate.

According to the Government, besides the progress consisting in the establishment, in the LPRT, of sanctions that are proportionate to the nature and seriousness of the offence (Article 18), the revision of the LOFT should likewise bring the legislation into line with the Convention as requested by the Committee by: (i) giving labour inspectors public official status and assuring them of stability of employment, as well as career prospects (category I inspectors, category II inspectors, supervisors) (Article 6); (ii) providing for the recruitment of labour inspectors by competition (Article 7); (iii) empowering inspectors to enter at any hour of the day or night workplaces liable to inspection (Article 12(1)(a)); (iv) abolishing the requirement for the employer, the workers or their representatives to be present during the inspection (Article 12(c)(i)); and (v) allowing labour inspectors the discretion to give warning and advice to offenders before envisaging the initiation of proceedings (Article 17(2)). The Committee requests the Government to take all necessary steps to bring the law and practice into line with the abovementioned provisions and with Article 12(2), which allows inspectors not to notify the employer or his representative of their presence if they consider that such notification may be prejudicial to the performance of their duties.

In addition, the Committee requests the Government to ensure both in law and in practice that labour inspectors are not assigned any further duties – for example tasks relating to dispute settlement – that are liable to interfere with or obstruct the effective discharge of their primary duties (Article 3(2) and Part III of Recommendation No. 81).

The Government is requested to keep the ILO informed of any progress in the above areas and to provide copies of any texts or relevant documents, including a copy of the code of ethics referred to in the Government's report on the application of the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129).

Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention. Publication and communication to the ILO of an annual inspection report. The Committee notes the information sent by the Government including on the number of labour inspectors, the number of workplaces visited between 2006 and 2009, the number of offences reported during the same period and the penalties imposed. It reminds the Government that such information, along with data on the other subjects set forth in Article 21, should be published in the form of an annual report a copy of which should be sent to the ILO. The Committee requests the Government once again to ensure that the central labour inspection authority publishes and sends to the Office within the deadline set in Article 20, an annual report containing the information required by Article 21(a)–(g).

Labour inspection and child labour. The Committee notes that according to the Government, the supervision of child labour is an integral part of the inspections carried out in all economic sectors. The Committee again asks the Government to send detailed information on the supervision of the application of the legal provisions on child labour in industrial and commercial establishments, and to ensure that such information is included regularly, and separately, in the annual inspection report.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1995)

The Committee refers the Government to its comments on the application of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and takes note of the information supplied by the Government in its report in response to the Committee's previous comments. It wishes to draw the Government's attention to the following points:

Articles 9(3), 11, 14 and 15 of the Convention. Human and material resources for labour inspection in agriculture. The Committee notes that according to the Government, the number and geographical distribution of the vehicles available to the labour inspection services performing duties in agricultural undertakings have not changed since the last report. It observes that the Government gives no criteria for such distribution. As regards the training needs of inspectors responsible for the agricultural sector, the Committee notes that the Government is committed to providing specific training. The Committee again requests the Government to send its assessment of how far the transport resources and facilities for labour inspectors meet the specific needs that arise because agricultural enterprises are geographically remote and scattered.

It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the frequency, content and duration of, and the number of participants in, the specific training organized for labour inspectors working in the agricultural sector, for the period covered by the next report.

Furthermore, it again requests the Government to take steps to ensure that labour inspectors in the agricultural sector can count on cooperation from properly qualified experts and technicians (doctors, chemists, safety engineers) in solving problems that demand technical knowledge beyond the scope of inspectors' qualifications, and to keep the ILO informed on this matter.

Physical safety of labour inspectors in visits to agricultural undertakings. Further to its previous request on this matter, and noting the Government's reply that labour inspectors may call upon law enforcement officers in the event of danger, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on incidents in which the safety of inspectors has been ensured thanks to police intervention, and to describe the procedure followed.

Articles 6(1)(b) and 13. Collaboration between officials of the labour inspectorate in agriculture and employers and workers or their organizations. Further to its previous request and noting that the Higher Labour Council (forum for cooperation between officials of the labour inspectorate and employers and workers or their organizations) has still not been informed of matters relating to labour inspection in agriculture, the Committee again asks the Government to indicate whether measures have been taken or are envisaged to expand the duties of the Higher Labour Council to enable it to issue advice for improving working conditions and living conditions in agricultural undertakings, particularly in plantations and other intensive farming enterprises. If so, it would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the topics dealt with and the outcome of the Council's proceedings.

France

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1950)

The Committee notes the Government's reply to its previous comments. It notes with interest that, following repeated requests from the Committee, the Government is planning to take measures to have separate information on inspection work and its results supplied in its future reports and in the annual labour inspection report in relation to French Guyana, Guadeloupe, Martinique, Réunion and St Pierre and Miquelon, which are now treated as metropolitan France for the purposes of the ILO Constitution pursuant to the registration of a declaration to this effect dated 31 August 2009.

With reference to its 2004 observation, the Committee notes with satisfaction the publication in February 2010, after validation by the National Council of Labour Inspection, of a collective work on "Principles of Deontology for Labour Inspection” the preparation of which had been initiated in 2004 under the direction of the Central Support and Coordination Mission for the External Labour and Employment Services (MICAPCOR) and had continued with ILO technical support. The working group which elaborated this tool was mainly composed of representatives of the labour inspection at various levels, as well as other structures of the Ministry of Labour. The ILO and the National Centre of Scientific Research (CNRS) were also represented. The Committee notes with interest the statement made in the book’s preface by the Minister of Labour, Social Relations, Family, Solidarity and Cities, that “deontology reinforces the coherent action of the labour inspection agents at all hierarchical levels ... as it protects the citizens themselves from the risks of arbitrariness”. The Committee also notes that, according to the Minister, “the principle of independence of labour inspection does not signify only a right for the agents concerned, but also a guarantee for the citizens who are able to benefit from an organized public service which is not subject to any undue external influence”.

The Committee also notes the comments from the Single National Union – Work, Employment, Training – Professional Integration (SNU–TEF(FSU)) received at the International Labour Office on 6 July 2010, concerning the involvement of labour inspectors in joint operations to combat illegal work pursuant to “Inter-ministerial Circular No. NOR-IMIM1000102NC of 2 June 2010 to combat illegal work concerning foreign nationals – implementation of joint operations in 2010”. The circular provides for reinforcement of the inter-institutional cooperation measures to combat illegal work on which the Committee commented previously. On 15 November 2010 the Government sent information to the Office concerning the matters raised by the SNU–TEF(FSU).

The Committee also notes a communication of 29 June 2010 from the Inter-Union Association (CGT–SUD–UNSA), expressing concern at the establishment of a labour inspection office on the premises of the Porto Vecchio (Corsica) Chamber of Trades because of the implications for the principle of independence that ought to govern the performance of inspection duties and the principle that access to inspectorate premises should be ensured for employees. The Committee notes the Government’s replies to the points raised.

Articles 3(1) and (2), 5(a), 6, 12, 15(c) and 17 of the Convention. Further duties entrusted to labour inspectors. Mobilization of resources and incompatibility of inspection methods and the objectives pursued. In its replies to the Committee’s previous comments on the involvement of labour inspectors in operations carried out in workplaces jointly with officials whose job is to implement the policy to combat illegal immigration, the Government indicates that the allegations of the SNU–TEF(FSU) consist in a conflation of press articles, communications from trade unions and the relevant legislation. The Committee points out that it had undertaken a thorough analysis of the legislation and had found that the joint operations to combat illegal work by foreign workers in irregular status were not in accordance with the provisions of the Convention, and stressed the need for measures to remedy the situation and to enable labour inspectors to carry out their functions as defined by the Convention. The Committee observes that the Government has, on the contrary, adopted the circular of 2 June 2010.

The Committee notes that the circulars of 20 December 2006 and 7 July 2007 focus on preserving and respecting the professional identities in determining the role to be played by each administration in the joint operations to combat illegal work. This implies that labour inspectors should keep the responsibility of enforcing the legal provisions on working conditions and the protection of workers, namely sections L.341-6-2, L.8258-1 and L.8252-2 of the Labour Code, which treat unlawfully employed foreign workers in the same way as lawfully employed workers in terms of the obligations incumbent on employers under labour regulations (pay, allowances, severance compensation). The circumstances and results of the joint operations show that the labour inspectors’ cooperation in many cases has the exact opposite effect and ends up exposing workers to a procedure of removal from France and the attendant withdrawal de facto of any right of challenge against the employers who broke the law by hiring them. This is established by Circular No. NOR-IMIM0800047C of 24 December 2008 and the abovementioned circular of 2 June 2010 concerning the results of the joint operations conducted in 2007 (out of 992 persons in an unlawful situation, 295 were expelled) and in 2009 (out of 1,116 workers taken in for questioning, 680 were issued with prefectural expulsion orders and 159 were actually expelled). The Committee notes the terms of the circular of 24 December 2008 according to which, even before a joint operation is launched, “it is important that all steps be taken at each of the levels involved (internal security service, prefectural aliens offices) to ensure that, where foreigners in an unlawful situation are apprehended, this leads to effective removal”. The Committee regrets that the circular of 2 June 2010 reproduces word for word these provisions which may negatively impact on “preserving and respecting” the professional identity of labour inspectors. The circular also emphasizes the logistical arrangements to be made upstream, such as pre-reservation in administrative detention centres when an operation is likely to lead to multiple arrests. The Committee notes that although this circular prescribes measures to ensure speedy procedures for the prosecution of offending employers, it contains no reference to the provisions of sections L8258-1 and L8252-2 of the Labour Code, which safeguard the rights of foreign workers in an irregular situation who are victims of the offence of illegal employment. The Committee recalls that, under both the Convention and the national legislation, labour inspectors are to use their powers of injunction to get employers to fulfil their obligations towards workers. It also notes that the circulars make no reference to the rights of the workers affected by joint operations. This may lead to the denial of the right of these workers to apply to the labour courts and give rise to discrimination against them.

The Committee notes that in its report, in connection with this aspect of the offending circulars, the Government mentions Directive 2009/52/EC of the European Parliament and of the European Council of 18 June 2009, which provides that member States must ensure the availability of effective procedures allowing workers in an irregular situation who have been returned, to introduce a claim seeking their entitlements or to enforce a judgement to that effect. In replying to the comments of the SNU-TEF(FSU), the Government specifies that the bill to transpose the European Directive makes the French Immigration and Integration Office (OFII) responsible for recovering and conveying to foreign nationals who have been illegally employed any amounts outstanding from their occupational activity. Since the bill has not been adopted, the Committee can only hope that it will become law shortly so as to strengthen those provisions of the legislation that already afford protection and non-discriminatory treatment to the foreign workers concerned (workers in the construction and public workers (BTP) sector, the hotels, café and restaurants (HCR) sector, the agricultural sector and the apparel sector).

According to the Government, labour inspectors are called on to cooperate in the joint operations in the interest of creating synergy between supervisory bodies responsible for the same type of offence defined in the Labour Code, and such cooperation is therefore fully consistent with Article 5 of the Convention. As to the impact of this activity on other inspection functions, the Government states that violation reports relating to the employment of foreigners with no work permit account for less than 4 per cent of all violation reports. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information on the level of the penalties imposed on employers, in order to enable it to assess how dissuasive they are. The Committee recalls that the aim of the cooperation referred to in Article 5(a) is to strengthen the means available to inspectors to enforce the legal provisions on working conditions and the protection of workers (Articles 2 and 3(1)), and that according to Article 12(1)(c)(i), labour inspectors should be empowered to carry out examinations alone or in the presence of witnesses (implied appointed freely by them). The Committee considers that they are not in a position to exercise this prerogative in joint operations, and their freedom to enter workplaces (with no need for a court authorization or an order from the public prosecutor) is used for purposes that are contrary to their functions.

The Committee is also of the view that the association of the police in labour inspection is not conducive to the relationship of trust needed to create the climate of confidence that is essential to enlisting the cooperation of employers and workers with labour inspectors. It must be possible for inspectors to be feared for their authority to report offences, and at the same time to be respected and approachable as preventers and advisers.

The Committee therefore once again asks the Government to provide information so that it can assess the manner in which it is ensured, in accordance with section L.341-6-1 of the Labour Code, that foreign workers in an irregular status benefit from the same protection by the labour inspectorate as other workers, and to provide in so far as possible relevant statistics (number of complaints filed and convictions of employers to regularize their situation with regard to the workers' rights, as well as the status of procedures for the enforcement of such decisions).

The Committee also, once again, urges the Government to take measures to ensure that the powers of inspectors to enter workplaces liable to inspection are not misused for the implementation of joint operations to combat illegal immigration.

The Committee also requests the Government to take measures to ensure that labour inspectors are notified of cases of immigrants in an irregular status, who are apprehended outside a workplace and are engaged in a labour relationship covered by the Convention.

The Committee notes the creation on 1 December 2008 in French Guiana of a service to combat illegal work (SLTI). It notes with concern that despite the small size of the inspection staff (4.5 for the whole department), two of its members (one inspector and one controller) and an administrative secretary are assigned on a full-time basis to implement the local policy to combat illegal work formulated by the Select Committee to Combat Illegal Work (CORELTI) and the provision of secretariat services for CORELTI, whose membership comprises the police, gendarmerie, customs and fiscal authorities.

Although the Government asserts that the SLTI's work in combating illegal work is focused on the inspection duties defined in the Labour Code, the figures supplied are insufficient to show what proportion of supervisory duties (547 inspection visits) accounted for enforcement of the legal provisions on working conditions and the protection of workers: the information that there were 28 decisions to close down sites, 295 written observations and 36 violation reports does not allow a distinction to be drawn between action linked to the reporting of offences of illegal employment and action linked to the reporting of offences against the provisions covered by the Convention. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to take the necessary steps to enable all the labour inspection staff of French Guyana to carry out their inspection functions that relate to enforcement of the legal provisions on conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. It would be grateful if, in support of the relevant information, the Government would provide detailed statistics of the activities of the labour inspectorate in the department.

Article 10. Strength and composition of the labour inspectorate staff in relation to development functions and the complexity of the legislation. The Committee notes with interest that between 2006 and 2009, 452 student inspectors were promoted and 923 probationary controllers were trained. It also notes that of the 60 posts for labour inspectors and the 100 posts for labour controllers created in 2009, most are controller posts.

Articles 5(a) and 7(3). Effective cooperation between the inspection services and other government services and public or private institutions, and training for inspectors in the prevention of occupational risks. The Committee refers to its previous comments concerning Réunion in which it asked the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to reduce the frequency of industrial accidents and instances of occupational disease, particularly in work noted as having a high risk potential. The Committee notes in this connection that in September 2007 ten inspectors received training in the field of chemical risks and that pursuant to a partnership agreement signed in 2005, the Directorate of Labour, Employment and Vocational Training (DTEFP) of Réunion belongs to a prevention network (whose membership includes the National Agency for the Improvement of Working Conditions – ANACT –, the General Fund for social security, the occupational health services). Furthermore, it notes with interest that improving occupational safety and health, particularly in the construction and public works sector and in the area of chemical risks, was one of the main objectives set for the labour inspectorate for 2008 and that a regional occupational health plan has been in preparation since October 2007.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on progress made by virtue of cooperation between the abovementioned players in the area of occupational risk prevention and the labour inspection sections of Réunion. In particular, the Government is asked to provide information on the training that labour inspectors received in the area of occupational safety and health, on progress in the regional occupational health project and the missions and activities conducted by labour inspectors in this connection and their impact on the frequency of industrial accidents and occurrences of occupational disease.

Articles 6, 11 and 15(c). Independence of labour inspectors, accessibility of their premises to all concerned. With regard to the concern expressed by the Inter-Union Association (CGT–SUD–UNSA) that the labour inspectorate has its office on the premises of the Chamber of Trade of Porto Vecchio (Corsica), the Committee notes that according to the above organization, the premises are so designed that fear of being seen by their employers could dissuade workers from going to the labour inspectorate. The Government, for its part, states that the establishment of a labour inspection section in Porto Vecchio is recent and that it was because there were no other options that the inspectorate was housed in the premises of the Chamber of Trades, which is a public establishment. The Government adds that the questions raised about this location are being thoroughly investigated by the Directorate General of Labour, and a decision will be taken when inquiries are completed. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the results of the abovementioned investigation, and asks it in any event to take the necessary steps to ensure that labour inspectors are independent of any improper external influences and that workers are able to enter the Porto Vecchio section freely.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1972)

With reference to its 2004 observation, the Committee notes with satisfaction the publication in February 2010, after validation by the National Council of Labour Inspection, of a collective work on “Principles of Deontology for Labour Inspection” the preparation of which had been initiated in 2004 under the direction of the Central Support and Coordination Mission for the External Labour and Employment Services (MICAPCOR) and had continued with ILO technical support. The working group which elaborated this tool was mainly composed of representatives of the labour inspection at various levels, as well as other structures of the Ministry of Labour. The ILO and the National Centre of Scientific Research (CNRS) were also represented. The Committee notes with interest the statement made in the book’s preface by the Minister of Labour, social relations, family, solidarity and cities, that “deontology reinforces the coherent action of the labour inspection agents at all hierarchical levels ... as it protects the citizens themselves from the risks of arbitrariness”. The Committee also notes that according to the Minister, “the principle of independence of labour inspection does not signify only a right for the agents concerned, but also a guarantee for the citizens who are able to benefit from an organized public service which is not subject to any undue external influence”.

Article 6(3) of the Convention. Duties additional to the supervision of working conditions and the protection of workers. Involvement of the labour inspectorate in combating illegal work. The Committee notes that a series of communications from the Single National Union-work, employment, training and professional integration SNU-TEF (FSU), including one received at the ILO on 6 July 2010 about the involvement of labour inspectors in joint operations to combat illegal work pursuant to the interministerial circular of 2 June 2010 No. NOR IMIM1000102NC concerning the combat as it affects foreign nationals, concern the application of the Convention. Furthermore, it notes the information sent by the Government in reply to the Committee’s previous comments and to the matters raised by the abovementioned organization regarding the circular, the provisions of which likewise concern workers with no residence permit employed in agricultural undertakings. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to refer to its observation under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and asks it to take the measures requested and to provide, in so far as it concerns the application of this Convention, relevant information on the reshaping of interinstitutional cooperation on the policy to combat the illegal employment of foreigners without residence permits and the role of labour inspectors in agricultural undertakings.

Article 7(3). Integration of the system of labour inspection in agriculture into a common labour inspection system. The Committee notes that the process to merge labour inspectorates (agriculture, maritime, transport, labour) has been speeded up since 1 January 2009. It notes that one of the Recommendations made as a result of the merger experiment conducted in two departments, was to maintain or create an inspection sector for agriculture in each department. According to the Government, the number of visits to agriculture undertakings should be maintained.

The Committee notes, however, that according to section R8122-9 of the Labour Code, one section in each department is responsible for supervision of agricultural occupations unless an order or the ministers responsible for agriculture and labour provides otherwise. The Government states that such an order was issued on 23 July 2009 allowing a waiver from the obligation to create or maintain an agriculture section in 14 departments (Alpes de Hautes Provence, Hautes-Aples, Ariège, Corse-du-Sud, Creuse, Haute-Loire, Lozère, Nièvre, Hautes-Pyrénées, Territoire de Belfor, Val d'Oise, Guyane, Martinique, La Réunion.).

The report on the activities of labour inspection in agriculture shows that the total number of interventions in the sector dropped in 2008 to 23,368, as compared to 24,342 previously. A drop was noted in particular in the regions where the departments exempted from the obligation are located (Rhône-Alpes: -130 inventions, Pays de la Loire: -126 interventions). No information has been provided on non-metropolitan territories (overseas departments and St Pierre and Miquelon). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that interventions in agricultural undertakings are maintained at a level at least equal to that prevailing prior to the merger, particularly in departments where an agricultural inspection section has not been maintained or created. The Government is asked to include figures showing the activities of the labour inspectorate for the period covered by the next report, including figures for the overseas regions covered by the Convention. The Committee furthermore asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that the labour inspection services remain visible and accessible to employers and workers in the agriculture sector, particularly in departments where an agricultural section of the inspectorate has not been maintained or set up.

Articles 11 and 19. Associating experts in the work of labour inspection in agriculture. In its previous observation concerning Guadeloupe, the Committee requested the Government to provide details of the reasons underlying the enquiries into the use of pesticides in banana plantations. It notes that according to the Government, there were 61 interventions in Guadeloupe, of which 54 were controls. Furthermore, nine controls targeted sales outlets for phytosanitary products. It does not, however, indicate either the reasons for the enquiries into pesticides, or the results of the enquiries or the content of the 97 observations on safety and health to which the Government refers. The Committee requests the Government to send in its next report the results of the enquiries and research conducted on the use of pesticides. The Government is also asked to specify the measures taken for the safety and health of all workers particularly for the purpose of eliminating all risks to the safety and health of workers in banana plantations.

Article 19. Occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes with interest the campaigns carried out in Réunion to alert farmers to phytosanitary risks, and the controls carried out in the use of phytosanitary products in the overseas territories. The Government refers to the particular risk facing agriculture workers in Réunion but also all workers in the overseas territories, which are wet zones, where exposure to leptospirosis is high. The Committee notes that occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease are clearly under reported in Guyana. The Government is asked to provide information on:

- the impact of the information campaigns and controls carried out on the use of phytosanitary products in the agricultural undertakings of the overseas departments covered by the Convention;
- the measures taken to alert employers, workers and members of health professions to the need to observe procedures for reporting occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease;
- the follow up to the controls of sales outlets for phytosanitary products.

The Government is also asked to take specific measures for preventing the risk of leptospirosis infection for agricultural workers and to provide information on these measures and on the activities of the labour inspectorate in this area.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1972)

Articles 3(1)(a), 20 and 21 of the Convention. Labour inspection activities and reporting obligations on these activities for the purpose of assessment of the level of application of the Convention. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the scarce information provided by the Government according to which no violations of articles 227, 228 and 249 of the Labour Code have been detected by labour inspectors, no judicial decision has been issued in this area and no acts involving any resistance or obstruction of the labour inspectors in the course of their duties has been reported. With reference to child labour and the measures implemented for the control of the relevant legal provisions, the Government declares to spare no effort to combat this phenomenon and refers in this regard to a number of more or less recent legal texts.

The Committee notes however that, contrary to the indication in the Government's report, the annual report of the General Workforce and Labour Directorate has not been communicated to the ILO and no annual report as prescribed by Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention has been received. The Committee therefore cannot assess the functioning of labour inspection systems as regards the provisions of the Convention, and is bound to repeat its previous observation in this respect.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual report on the work of the inspection services. In reference to the Government's commitment to do its utmost to attenuate the difficulties in applying the Convention, the Committee once again emphasizes that in order to do this, measures must be taken to centralize the information required under Article 21 with a view to preparing an annual labour inspection report, the main purpose of which is to serve as a basis for the periodical assessment by the central inspection authority of the adequacy of the available resources in relation to needs and, consequently, to determine priority areas of action. The Committee once again reminds the Government of the possibility of requesting technical assistance from the ILO, as well as international financial aid, with a view to establishing the material and institutional conditions necessary for the publication of such a report. In its 2004 direct request, the Committee urged the Government to make the necessary efforts to implement measures designed to enable the central inspection authority to discharge its obligation in this respect and pointed out that the annual inspection report should be as detailed as possible and contain precise information on human, logistical, practical or other difficulties explaining deficiencies in the services. Since the Government has not reported any progress in this area, the Committee requests that it quickly takes the necessary measures and keeps the Office duly informed in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1973)

Article 6(1)(b) of the Convention. Preventive measures targeting types of recurrent occupational disease and industrial accidents. Prevention of occupational accidents. The Committee notes with interest the preventive measures targeting most of the more frequent occupational diseases. Besides intensive advice provided for the purpose of reducing the risks of all occupational diseases, these information campaigns focus on respiratory diseases and diseases transmissible from animals to humans. The Committee notes in particular: (i) the implementation of a system of information (Schwarz-Weiß-Systeme) on hygiene prescriptions to prevent outside pathogenic agents from entering buildings and facilities housing animals; (ii) incentives to employers to use the new tests for rapid evaluation of the quantity of allergenic factors in cattle sheds and to provide respiratory protection equipment to persons affected whose work necessarily brings them into contact with animals; and (iii) campaigns targeting skin diseases, for the periods 2007–08 and 2008–12. The Committee also notes with interest that one of the occupational safety objectives for the period 2008–12 is to reduce the number and seriousness of musculoskeletal disorders, and that prevention of spinal lesions is an objective for the period 2013–14.

Prevention of occupational accidents. The Committee notes, in connection with the 2008–12 objective of reducing the number and seriousness of occupational accidents, that the National Federation of the fund for the insurance and prevention of occupational accidents and diseases in agriculture (Spitzenverband der landwirtschaftlichen Berufsgenossenschaften) is now responsible, pursuant to section 143e of SGB VII (Social Code), for recording occupational accidents (number and seriousness) in detail and for devising, from the database, special preventive measures to apply in the agricultural sector.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide information on any developments in the policy for the prevention of occupational risks specific to agricultural work, and on the impact of the measures implemented.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's report covering the period ending in September 2008 and the attached statistical data on the number of inspections conducted in 2007 and the first quarter of 2008, and of workers covered by these inspections.

Article 12, paragraph 1(a), of the Convention. Right of labour inspectors to enter freely workplaces liable to inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee pointed out that section 124(1)(a) of the 2003 Labour Act, which limits the timing of workplace inspections to "working hours", is not compatible with Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention. It notes the Government's indication that the above provision of the Labour Act is sufficient to uncover clandestine moves by employers. Referring to its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection (paragraphs 268–271), the Committee wishes to recall that the conditions for the exercise of the right of free entry to workplaces laid down by the Convention are intended to allow inspectors to carry out inspections, where necessary and possible, to enforce the application of legal provisions relating to conditions of work. The protection of workers and the technical requirements of inspection should be the primordial criteria for determining the appropriate timing of visits, for example to check for violations such as abusive night work conditions in a workplace officially operating during the daytime, or to carry out technical inspections requiring machinery or production processes to be stopped. It should be for the inspector to decide whether a visit is reasonable and inspections should only be carried out at night or outside working hours where this is warranted. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to remove the restriction on the right of labour inspectors to enter freely workplaces from section 124(1)(a) of the Labour Act of 2003 and to keep the ILO informed.

Article 3, paragraph 1, and Articles 17 and 18. Inspection duties. Enforcement of legal provisions relating to the conditions of work and the protection of workers. Legal proceedings and provision of adequate penalties for violation of legislation. In its previous report, the Government indicated that it wishes to encourage compliance with legal provisions through the promotion of a social partnership attentive to the mutual interests of employers and workers, rather than through legal proceedings against employers who have committed a violation. The Committee requested the Government to provide practical information on any mechanisms established to that effect and to specify the role of labour inspectors in this regard. It notes that, in its report of 2008, the Government only reaffirms that it wishes to promote partnership and compromise between employers and workers. The report provides no information on the findings of the labour inspectors during the visits that they conducted in workplaces throughout the country in 2007, nor on any actions undertaken following such inspections. The Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to paragraph 280 of its General Survey, in which it emphasizes that, even if the credibility of any inspectorate depends to a large extent on its ability to advise employers and workers on the most effective means of complying with the legal provisions within its remit, it also depends on the existence and implementation of a sufficiently dissuasive enforcement mechanism, the functions of enforcement and advice being inseparable in practice.

The Committee requests the Government to take appropriate measures to ensure that legal provisions relating to the conditions of work and the protection of workers are effectively enforced through legal proceedings where necessary. It further requests the Government to provide information on the violations reported by labour inspectors and the fines imposed to employers in accordance with section 38 of the Labour Regulations adopted in 2007, during the reporting period, and to specify the value of a "penalty unit" and the manner in which such value may be revised to remain dissuasive in the event of monetary inflation. The Government is also requested to indicate the measures taken to ensure that such penalties were effectively enforced.

Articles 19, 20 and 21. Periodical reports and annual report on the work of the labour inspection services. While noting the information on the number of inspections carried out in 2007 and during the first quarter of 2008, the Committee emphasizes that, by virtue of the ratification of the Convention, the Government undertook to ensure that practical measures would be taken to centralize information required under Article 21, with a view to preparing an annual labour inspection report, the main purpose of which is to serve as a basis for the periodical assessment by the central inspection authority of the adequacy of the available resources in relation to needs and, consequently, to determine priority areas of action. The Committee requests the Government take measures rapidly to establish the conditions in which the central labour inspection authority can collect data on the activities of the services under its control with a view to publish an annual report on the work of the inspection system containing information on the following subjects:

- (a) relevant laws and regulations;
- (b) staff of the labour inspection services (including the number, geographical location and distribution of inspectors by gender and by category);
- (c) statistics of workplaces liable to inspection (number and geographical distribution) and the number of workers employed therein (men, women, young persons);
- (d) statistics of inspection visits (unannounced, scheduled and follow-up visits, visits following a complaint, etc.);
- (e) statistics of violations and penalties imposed (number of violations reported, legal provisions concerned, types of sanctions imposed, etc.);
- (f) statistics of industrial accidents (number of fatal and non-fatal accidents); and
- (g) statistics of cases of occupational disease (number and causes by industry and occupation).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 1986)

Reporting obligations relating to the application of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government's report for the period 2005–09 is virtually identical with the Government's last report, except the additional information on training of labour administration staff. The Committee further notes the scarce information as to the renaming of the former Ministry of Manpower Development and Employment to the Ministry of Employment and Social welfare with the same structure and functions. In addition, the committee notes the adoption of Legislative Instrument LI 1833 of 31 July 2007, Part II, which gives effect to Section IV of the Labour Act, 2003 and provides for, among other things, the possibility to link jobseekers and employers through private employment agencies, whose conditions of establishment are regulated by section 3 of the new instrument. The Committee urges the Government to provide the ILO with detailed and up-to-date information on the application in law and in practice of each Article of the Convention, according to the requests in the report form of the Convention, to enable the Committee to fully appreciate the effect given of the requirements contained therein.

In its 2009 comments under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), the Committee noted the recent developments in the Labour Department and the Department of Factories and Inspectorate of the abovementioned Ministry, namely the development of human resources, an ongoing needs assessment and organizational rearrangement and the enhanced commitment of the Government to enable the departmental staff to undertake some of the training courses run by the ILO–ARLAC (African Regional Labour Administration Centre). The Committee asks the Government to provide further details on the training activities carried out during the period covered by its next report and, if applicable, to keep the ILO informed of any difficulties encountered.

The Committee asks the Government to provide, if applicable, and as requested under Part III of the report form, information on judiciary decisions involving questions of principle relating to the application of the Convention and supply the text of these decisions.

In connection to Part IV of the report form, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would also provide any reports, extracts of reports or other periodic information concerning the work of the principal labour administration services, for instance, the Ministry of Employment and Social welfare, the Public Employment Centres, the Tripartite National Labour Commission, the National Employment Council, the National Labour Market Authority, the Management Development and Productivity Institute or the National Advisory Committee on Labour, or any other national or local bodies involved in the formulation and implementation of labour policies or programmes.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1955)

The Committee refers to its comments under the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), with regard to the observations communicated by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) with the support of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC) on the impact of the measures introduced in the framework of the mechanism to support the Greek economy. It notes in particular that the GSEE refers to the lack of human, material and budgetary resources needed to enhance the operational capability of the labour inspectorate (SEPE) in the framework of the sweeping changes introduced in industrial relations legislation.

The Committee will examine the comments by the GSEE along with the Government's reply thereto, as well as the Government's report which was received on 8 November 2010, at its next session.

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report received on 18 November 2009 concerning developments which had taken place until 31 May 2009 (notably the reorganization of the employment services of the Manpower Employment Organization (OAED) through the creation of 121 one-stop-shops at local level (Act No. 3144/2003, Act No. 3518/2006 and Ministerial Decision No. 80030/2007), as well as the reorganization of the Labour Inspectorate (SEPE) (Act No. 3762/O.G.75A/15.05.2009).

The Committee refers to its comments under the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), with regard to the observations communicated by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) with the support of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC) on the impact of the measures introduced in the framework of the mechanism to support the Greek economy.

The Committee notes in this regard that the abovementioned measures involve drastic wage cuts in the public sector including parastatal agencies and enterprises, freezes in the recruitment of public servants for the year 2010 and restrictions in this regard for the years 2011–13, as well as commitments to reduce the number of public employees, and introduce reforms in human resource management in the public administration (Act No. 3833/2010 on the "Protection of the national economy – Emergency measures to tackle the fiscal crisis" and updated report on the Memorandum of Understanding and the Memorandum of Economic and Financial Policy published on 6 August 2010).

The Committee will examine the comments by the GSEE along with the Government's reply thereto, and the Government's report at its next session. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would specify the impact of the public sector reform on the status, material means and resources of the staff of the labour administration with regard to the requirements established in Article 10 of the Convention.

Labour Statistics Convention, 1985 (No. 160) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes the Government's report received on 21 September 2009 and the documentation attached. It also notes the observations by the representatives of seven confederations and workers' organizations, the Indigenous and Rural Workers Trade Union Movement of Guatemala for the Defence of Workers' Rights (MSICG) dated 28 August 2009, stating that the Government did not inform them of its report and that the application of the Convention is partial and outdated.

The Committee notes the indication by the MSICG that the Movement has called on the President of the Republic for the executive authorities, through the National Statistical Institute and with support from the Technical Institute for Training and Productivity (INTECAP) and the Agricultural Sciences and Technology Institute (ICTA), to produce statistics related to workers and employers on a biennial (semester) basis, as from October 2009; taking into consideration the latest ILO standards and workers' recommendations. According to the MSICG, this process has not yet been implemented. The Committee requests the Government to transmit any comment it deems relevant with regard to the above.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's report received in June 2006 and observes that, despite the Office's reminder of 20 June 2006, the annual inspection report which was due to be sent has not been received by the ILO. While noting the information on the legal provisions giving effect in law to the Convention, the Committee would point out that the Government has not supplied the information called for in its previous observation regarding the practical functioning of the labour inspection system. It is therefore bound to repeat the same observation:

Resources of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes with concern that the information provided by the Government in its report for the period ending June 2005 reveals that the labour inspectorate suffers from a persistent shortage of resources. It notes, in particular, that retired labour inspectors are no longer being replaced and that the inspection services as a whole suffer from a lack of computer equipment and transport facilities. It notes, moreover, that labour inspectors have not received any training since 2000. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to furnish the labour inspectorate with the resources it needs to operate effectively, in particular in order to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient (Article 10 of the Convention), that they are furnished with the material means and transport facilities necessary for the performance of their duties (Article 11) and that they receive adequate training for the performance of their duties (Article 7(3)). The Government is requested to transmit information on any progress made in this regard in its next report.

Publication of an annual report. The Committee notes that no annual inspection report has been transmitted since that covering the period of 15 October 1994 to 15 October 1995. Referring to its previous requests, it once again requests the Government to take any appropriate measures with a view to the fulfilment by the central inspection authority of its obligation to publish and transmit to the International Labour Office an annual report in accordance with Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Obligation to report pursuant to article 22 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee notes the communication by the Government, in reply to its previous request, of the circulars (notices) of 18 March 2005 designating the authorities which must be notified of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease, in relation to Article 19 of the Convention. It also notes the communication of the annual report for 2004 from the Industrial Relations Department of the Ministry of Labour, containing brief information on labour inspection activities in the agricultural sector. However, the Committee notes that no detailed report on the application of the Convention has been sent for more than ten years. The Committee therefore requests the Government to supply, in its next report under article 22 of the ILO Constitution, all the information required by each part of the Convention report form.

Articles 26 and 27 of the Convention. Objectives and content of the annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes that, despite the high number of strikes in sugar plantations and agriculture in 2004 and their socio-economic impact (227 strikes resulting in the loss of 82,880 workdays and wages amounting to 129,061,000 dollars) the labour inspectorate only performed six inspections for the whole sector. The Committee considers that these figures testify both to poor conditions of work and lack of vigilance on the part of the inspection authorities responsible for monitoring conditions of work in agricultural undertakings. In any event, they call for the adoption of measures to curb the deterioration of the social climate, particularly by means of inspection activities and initiatives to provide employers and workers with information. However, the Committee notes that the Government has not supplied any information indicating that such measures have been taken or are envisaged. It also notes that the content of the report does not allow any assessment to be made of the level of coverage of the labour inspection system in relation to worker protection requirements in the sector, these needs not being defined, particularly with regard to occupational safety and health. The significant lack of statistics relating to inspection visits (Article 27(d)) and violations (clause (e)) and the total lack of information regarding the laws and regulations giving effect to the provisions of the Convention (clause (a)), the number of staff of the labour inspection service (clause (b)), the number of agricultural undertakings liable to inspection and the number of persons working therein (clause (c)), and also the lack of statistics with respect to penalties imposed (clause (e)), occupational accidents, including their causes (clause (f)) and occupational diseases, including their causes (clause (g)), make it impossible for the Committee to perform its role of monitoring the practical application of the Convention. The Committee reminds the Government that the requirement to publish an annual report on inspection activities and send it to the ILO serves an important purpose at both the national and international level. It is an essential tool for evaluating the operation of the labour inspection system and for making improvements to it, with the participation of employers and workers and their respective organizations (Articles 26 and 27). The Committee invites the Government to refer to paragraphs 320–328 of its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection and requests it to take the necessary measures, if need be with technical assistance from the Office, to enable the central labour inspection authority to include all the information required by each of clauses (a) to (g) of Article 27 in the annual report on its work.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Haiti

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

In earlier comments the Committee referred to an observation of 2002 by the Trade Union Federation of Haiti (CSH) asserting that the national legislation was satisfactory in terms of conformity with the Convention, but that the political will to apply it was lacking. In 2005, the Committee noted that the Government had announced a series of measures to re-establish inspection services throughout the country and had undertaken to send a detailed report of the application of the Convention. The Committee notes, however, that the Government's report received in August 2008 contains only very general information on the work of the labour inspectorate showing that, although measures have been taken since September 2004 to reinforce the inspection services, in particular by appointing labour inspectors in the departments (with no indication of their number, much remains to be done to make the inspection services fully operational. The Government refers to a lack of resources indicating that it is virtually impossible for labour inspectors to carry out regular and routine visits and that they intervene in the workplace on a stopgap basis at the request of workers or employers to deal with specific problems and provide legal advice on the labour legislation. The Committee further notes that, according to the Government, the inspection system suffers from a lack of training and support in the field for technical management staff.

Measures needed for the establishment and operation of a labour inspection system. The Committee is aware of the difficulties facing the Government and the efforts that are needed to create the necessary conditions for applying the Convention and enabling the labour inspection system to perform effectively its primary duty, as set out in Article 3, paragraph 1, of the Convention, namely enforcing the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. It nonetheless reminds the Government that for this task to be fulfilled, it must be possible for workplaces to be visited as often and as thoroughly as necessary, in accordance with Article 16 and for inspectors to make visits with or without notice and not only at the request of the workers or employers. In this connection, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the need to take steps to change the wording of section 411 of the Labour Code by deleting the expression "as necessary" in the first indent. Article 3, paragraph 1(b), of the Convention provides that supplying technical information and advice to employers and workers concerning the most effective means of complying with the legal provisions is an ongoing function of the labour inspection system. The Committee also recalls that Paragraphs 6 and 7 of Recommendation No. 81 provide guidance on the methods that labour inspection staff might adopt to ensure that this duty is performed regularly and systematically.

With regard to the training needs of inspection staff, the Committee would like to point out that training should address not only methods and procedures for performing duties (inspections, advice on labour legislation, etc.), but also inspectors' prerogatives (right to enter workplaces, authority to make or have made orders, establishing reports, etc.) and their obligations (probity, observance of confidentiality, etc.), as laid down in Articles 3, 12, 13 and 15 of the Convention. The credibility of inspectors in relation to employers and workers and, hence, the effectiveness of the inspection system as a whole, are contingent on the exercise of these powers and the observance of these obligations.

So that it can assess as accurately as possible the extent to which the Convention is applied, the Committee again asks the Government to provide in its next report detailed information on the application of the Convention in practice and on difficulties encountered. In particular, it would be grateful for details of any collaboration that exists with other government services and employers' and workers' organizations and the arrangements for such collaboration (Article 5), the status and conditions of service of inspectors (Article 6), measures taken for the training of inspectors at the time of recruitment and in the course of their employment (Article 7), inspection staff and the material and logistical resources at their disposal (Articles 8, 10 and 11), the exercise in practice by inspectors of the prerogatives set in Articles 12 and 13, the procedure for notifying work accidents and occupational diseases (Article 14), the coverage of inspection visits (Article 16) and the penalties imposed and enforced (Article 18). The Government is also asked to provide available statistics on the subjects set out in Article 21. So that it can assess the needs of the inspection services and set priorities taking into account the available human and material resources, the Committee encourages the Government to compile and maintain a record of industrial and commercial workplaces liable to inspection (number, activity, size and geographical location) and the workers employed therein (numbers and categories).

All the above information should enable the central inspection authority to identify the system's strengths and weaknesses, assess its needs and submit a budget estimate for consideration by the competent authorities. Noting the request for technical assistance made by the Government, the Committee hopes that on the basis of this information it will be able to specify the purpose of its request and seek international financial aid as well in order to obtain the funds it needs to build the capacity of the labour inspection system.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes that the information supplied by the Government in its report is much the same as that in the report covering the previous period. The Committee nonetheless notes with interest the document published by the Ministry of Labour and Social Security on the system for electronic follow-up of inspection visits implemented in the context of the Centroamérica Cumple y Gana cooperation project, and the operational inspection plan for 2009.

The Committee notes that on 4 October 2010 the Office received a communication from the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP) on the application of the Convention and that the communication was forwarded to the Government on 18 October 2010.

The Committee notes with regret that, contrary to the intention stated in its report, the Government has provided neither the copies of periodical reports by the regional inspection units (Article 19 of the Convention), nor the annual inspection report for 2009 (Articles 20 and 21). The Committee points out that information on the practical application of the Convention is essential to an assessment of the running of the inspection system and hence the extent to which the Convention is applied, and requests the Government to ensure that the abovementioned reports are sent as soon as possible so that they can be examined together with the report received on 27 August 2010, the points raised by COHEP in its comments on the application of the Convention, and any observations the Government may wish to submit in reply.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 3, paragraph 1(a) and (b), of the Convention. Preventive measures in the area of occupational safety and health. The Committee notes the measures taken to improve levels of occupational safety and health, namely: (a) the unification of competence for inspections relating to occupational safety and health and general working conditions (Decree No. 295/2006 establishing the legal and institutional conditions for the uniform supervision of health and safety by regional inspectorates); (b) the reinforcement of inspections (inspections outside regular hours, inspections focusing on sectors in which employees are exposed to serious hazards, inspections in the priority sectors of agriculture, construction and processing industries); (c) more severe sanctions; (d) the publication of lists of employers which have violated health and safety regulations as a deterrent on the Ministry's web site; and (e) the introduction of the "Partnership for Safe Employment" initiative. The latter initiative is intended to improve occupational safety and health, enhance the social responsibility of employers and disseminate good practices. This initiative consists of a voluntary commitment to compliance with the regulations respecting health, safety and labour conditions and this takes the form of a written agreement entitling employers to use the label "Safety Employment Partner" at their events and in the provision of their services. A list of employers which have signed the agreement is published on the web site of the labour inspectorate. These employers are provided with regular information on labour law provisions by the Government. Any violation of the respective requirements involves the risk of losing the right to use the label.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide information on any further measures adopted with a view to promoting a culture of good safety and health conditions in all workplaces and their impact.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

India

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1949)

The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government in its report, including detailed statistical data. It also notes the comments by the Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry of India (ASSOCHAM) and the All India Manufacturers' Organisation (AIMO) which were forwarded with the Government's report.

Articles 2, 3, 10, 11, 12(1)(a) and 16 of the Convention

1. Coverage and functioning of the labour inspection system. The Committee recalls its previous comments according to which one of the priorities with regard to labour set by the National Common Minimum Programme (NCMP), adopted in 2004 by the Government, was the re-examination of labour laws to reduce labour inspectors' power ("Inspector Raj"). According to a communication by the Centre of Indian Trade Unions (CITU), internal directives had been issued in most states in the name of "Ending Inspector Raj", so that no labour inspection was to be carried out; the lack of labour inspection and monitoring by the Labour Department, even in many factories in the national capital territory of Delhi and industrial areas, such as Mayapuri and Patparganj, was resulting in frequent violations of minimum wage legislation and a lack of safety measures leading to frequent accidents.

The Committee notes the Government's reply according to which the Ministry of Labour and Employment is considering the re-examination of labour laws in order to ensure a hassle-free industrial environment and reduce unnecessary interference of inspecting staff; however, this does not mean that there will be lack of monitoring of the application of labour laws and internal instructions in most states preventing inspections. The Ministry has also taken steps to make the system of inspection mostly complaint driven.

The Government adds that "Ending Inspector Raj" has not been a thriving concept" in the Chief Labour Commissioner's (Central) Organisation (CLC(C)), entrusted with the task of maintaining industrial relations, enforcement of labour laws and verification of trade union membership in the Central Sphere. Therefore, in the Central Sphere, workplaces liable for labour inspections are actually inspected. The Committee takes note of the detailed statistical information provided in this regard in the Government's report. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide statistics on the labour inspection activities of the CLC(C) and their results.

With regard to the inspection system outside the central sphere, the Committee notes that the aim of reducing "Inspector Raj" in the framework of the NCMP is to avoid a proliferation of inspections in the same enterprise, including labour inspections, and once again emphasizes that any measure taken to limit the number of labour inspections is a restriction incompatible with the main objective of labour inspection, which is the protection of workers, and is contrary to Article 16 of the Convention which provides that workplaces or enterprises liable to labour inspection should be inspected as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the relevant legal provisions. A complaint driven system aimed at reducing "unnecessary interference of inspecting staff" is also incompatible with Article 15(c) for, as a consequence, it makes it impossible for labour inspectors to respect the requirement of confidentiality relating to complaints (source and fact that an inspection visit is made as a result of a complaint).

With regard to its previous comments on the unequal coverage of the labour inspection system from one state to another in terms of workers and workplaces, the Committee notes that the Government reiterates its previous statement to the effect that measures will be taken to collect information on the coverage of workplaces and workers liable to inspection throughout the country. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would communicate to the ILO as quickly as possible comprehensive statistical information on labour inspection staff and activities (visits, advice, enforcement) by state. It also trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures, in the light of the information collected, so that any imbalances in the coverage of workplaces and workers liable to inspection from one state to the other are redressed.

2. Exemptions of certain sectors from labour inspection and introduction of self-certification schemes. In its previous comments, the Committee, following observations made by the CITU and the Bharatiya Mazdoor Sangh (BMS) on internal directives which prevent workplace inspections in special economic zones (SEZs) and in the information technology (IT) and IT-enabled service sectors (ITES), noted that, in fact, very few inspections had been carried out in these sectors and requested the Government to indicate the applicable legal provisions and to supply relevant detailed statistical data. The Committee also noted comments made by the CITU and the BMS with regard to the self-certification scheme implemented since 2008, in particular as to the absence of any mechanism for the verification by the labour inspectorate of information supplied through this procedure, and had requested information on the performance of this system in practice.

The Government replied in its previous and latest reports that there are no separate labour laws for SEZs and that the implementation of labour laws in SEZs is ensured through the respective machineries of the central or state governments, as appropriate, subject to certain dispensations provided to SEZ units such as the delegation of powers to the development commissioner under the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 and the declaration of the SEZs as public utility services under the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947.

In relation to the IT-ITES sectors, the Government indicates that working conditions are regulated to a large extent by the generally applicable labour laws and the state governments are legally vested with powers to deal with the violation of labour laws including in the IT sector. However, the Committee notes that in the 2007–08 Annual Report of the Ministry of Labour and Employment, it is indicated that the CLC(C) has advised its subordinate offices in respect of IT software and IT service industries, that “routine and periodic inspections may not be necessary since the employees engaged by these IT industries are usually qualified and, therefore, are in a better position to protect and promote their interests”. Enforcement of labour laws in these establishments is carried out through returns submitted by the employers under various labour laws. In its latest report the Government indicates that this type of enforcement is being continued in IT software and IT service industries.

With regard to the self-certification schemes introduced in April 2008, the Government indicates that in the context of the preparation of the 11th Five-Year Plan (2007–12), the Planning Commission set up a Working Group on Labour Laws and Other Labour Regulations which made the following recommendation on the self-certification system: “Since inspections are becoming complaint driven, the problems of “Inspector Raj” may not be as formidable as it is made out to be. The system of inspections cannot be eliminated, as it would compromise with the interests of workers, especially those who are vulnerable. Hence it would be more pragmatic to promote transparency by resorting to self-certification system and placing employee-related information obtained through this method in the website”. As a result, since 1 April 2008, those employing up to 40 persons are required to give only a self-certificate regarding compliance, while those employing 40 or more persons submit a self-certificate duly certified by a chartered accountant. According to the Government, this has been introduced to minimize routine inspections of complying employers. In this regard, the Committee would like to draw the Government’s attention to the fact that, in general, the risk of non-application of labour legislation is not less significant in establishments employing a small number of workers than in larger enterprises. The Committee also notes that a new inspection policy has been introduced since 1 April 2008, placing emphasis on inspection of newly covered units, defaulters and those not submitting self-certification with a view to concentrating on improving compliance. According to the Government the information previously requested by the Committee on the functioning of this system is still being collected and will be furnished on receipt.

Recalling once again that under Article 16, workplaces shall be inspected as often and as thoroughly as is necessary, the Committee urges the Government to adopt measures to ensure the full implementation of this provision by ensuring notably that the issuing of any dispensation and the introduction of a self-certification system does not affect the effectiveness of the labour inspection system and especially the frequency and thoroughness of inspection visits. In particular:

- The Committee requests the Government to specify the dispensations provided to EPZ and SEZ units and the extent to which they have an impact on labour inspection; it would also be grateful if the Government would furnish detailed statistical information on the: enterprises and workers in EPZs and SEZs; labour inspectors who oversee them; inspections carried out; offences reported; penalties imposed; and industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease reported.
- The Committee requests the Government to forward examples of returns submitted on the application of labour laws in the IT and ITES sector and to describe the process through which such returns are submitted and verified by the labour inspectors.
- The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the impact of the self-certification system introduced on 1 April 2008, notably on the frequency and effectiveness of inspection visits, to indicate the sectors in which self-certification is most prominent and to describe the arrangements made for the verification of information supplied by employers in self-certification schemes, the handling of any disputes and the action taken with regard to violations that are identified.

3. Free access of labour inspectors to workplaces. The Committee recalls that the CITU had previously indicated that in the State of Haryana no labour inspection could be carried out without the prior authorization of the Secretary of Labour which was never given. Moreover, the lack of inspections in factories had led to the failure to implement basic labour laws on minimum wages and violations of freedom of association. The Government does not provide a specific reply to these allegations and is confined to reiterating previously provided information on the future amendment of section 9 of the Factories Act (Powers of Inspectors) and section 4 of the Dock Workers (Safety, Health and Welfare) Act which will establish explicitly the right of inspectors to enter workplaces freely. According to the Government, these amendments are included in the next batch. Recalling that, in accordance with Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention, labour inspectors shall be empowered to enter freely workplaces liable to inspection, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures aimed at amending section 9 of the Factories Act (Powers of Inspectors) and section 4 of the Dock Workers (Safety, Health and Welfare) Act without further delay, so that this right is guaranteed. The Government is requested to keep the ILO informed of progress made to this end and to supply a copy of the amended texts once they are adopted.

Articles 6 and 15(a). Independence and integrity of labour inspectors. The Committee notes that, according to the AIMO, any proposal to give substantial powers to labour inspectors may give rise to a problem of corruption. It also refers to the Government’s indication that steps are taken to make the labour inspection system complaints-driven in order to reduce arbitrariness. The Committee recalls that under Article 6, the conditions of service of inspection staff, notably their wages, should be such as to guarantee their independence vis-à-vis improper external influences and that under Article 15, labour inspectors should be prohibited from having any direct or indirect interest in the undertakings under their supervision. These provisions are intended to provide safeguards against improper influences. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the pay scale of labour inspectors by comparison to the remuneration of comparable categories of public officers like tax inspectors. It also requests the Government to forward the text of any code of conduct or similar document applicable to labour inspectors.

Article 18. Adequacy of penalties. The Committee had previously noted the Government's indication that an amendment enhancing the penalties under various provisions of the Factories Act, 1948, was at an advanced stage of enactment and that a proposed amendment was being prepared under the Dock Workers (Safety, Health and Welfare) Act, 1986. In its latest report the Government indicates that the proposal to incorporate the amendments enhancing the penalties under these Acts is still under the active consideration of the Government and that once the amendments are notified, the final text will be sent to the ILO. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to have these amendments adopted without further delay so as to establish penalties that are sufficiently dissuasive to ensure the effective application of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers, and to furnish copies of the final texts to the ILO.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes the Government's report received by the ILO in August 2009.

Articles 6 and 7 of the Convention. Review of national labour policy and extension of the functions of the labour administration system to workers who are not employed persons. The Committee notes with interest that, according to the Government's report, since March 2008, every employer is under the obligation to communicate by electronic means all information relating to the commencement, modification, extension or termination of any employed or self-employed labour relationship, including in the case of contracts for continued and coordinated collaboration, training courses, where the worker is a member of a cooperative, or where the employer is a temporary employment agency (Inter-ministerial Decree of 30 October 2007 respecting compulsory electronic notifications to the competent services by public and private employers and Legislative Decree No. 185/2008 adopting urgent measures of assistance to families, labour, employment and enterprises with a view to redefining the national strategic framework in light of the need to address the crisis, which was converted into law by Act No. 2 of 28 January 2009).

In a comment made on 18 September 2009 concerning the application of the Labour Statistics Convention, 1985 (No. 160), the Italian General Confederation of Labour (CGIL) welcomes the entry into force in March 2008 of this information system. Designed as a compulsory system, in addition to the advantage of providing a more precise knowledge of labour market trends, it also, in contrast with the purely statistical data of the National Institute, provides a picture of the real situation, which is particularly valuable in times of crisis. Noting the viewpoint of the CGIL that such data should be published and observing that this issue is closely related to Article 6(2)(b) and (c), and Article 7 of the Convention, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide the Office with any relevant comments in this respect.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would also provide information on the impact of the new legislation on labour market trends in the specific context of the global economic crisis.

Jamaica

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes the detailed information in the Government's report in reply to its previous comments as well as the information on the activities of labour inspectors in the Pay and Conditions of Employment Branch (PCEB) and in the Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) Department of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. It further notes the detailed information contained in the report of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (MLSS) for 2008 and 2009.

Article 18 of the Convention. Increase of penalties. The Committee notes with satisfaction that, through the amendments of the Factories Act (FA) and the Holidays with Pay Act (PA) in 2009, the process of amending the prescribed fines by these Acts has been simplified as this process now merely requires a ministerial order, and that through the amendment of the FA and PA, the penalties for breaches of these laws have significantly increased, involving prison sentences in the case of default of payment (versions of the texts amending the FA: No. 08-2009, and the PA: No. 14-2009, are available at the website of the Houses of Parliament www.japarliament.gov.jm/index.php?option=com\_content&view=article&id=334&Itemid=45). Among other things, there has been an increase in the fines for the obstruction of labour inspectors in the course of their duty and for failure to notify accidents and occupational diseases up to maximum fines of JMD500,000 and JMD300,000, respectively (see FA). The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the impact of the increased fines and other penalties on the observance of the amended legal provisions.

Articles 3(1) and (2). Preventive activities in the field of occupational safety and health. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication of the development and implementation by the OSH Department of the MLSS of a Voluntary Compliance Programme (VCP), a programme aimed at raising awareness of employers and workers and at encouraging the improvement of safety and health in all economic sectors. According to the Government, the response to this programme, which was launched in 2007 and comprises two sets of VCPs, namely one in the area of safety and health and one in the area of HIV and AIDS, has been overwhelming with more than 70 enterprises applying, exceeding the original goal of enrolling 50 enterprises in the programme. Participating enterprises are subject to an audit by OSH inspectors based on a set of performance criteria and, provided that they attain a certain score, recommended for a VSP certificate valid for two years. According to the Government, workplaces with excellent safety and health management systems will not only be recognized and promoted as model workplaces, but the VSP coordination and partnership programme which aims to complement the regulatory and enforcement efforts by OSH inspections through the identification of risks and the development of solutions by employers and workers, will also allow for enterprises to be self-regulatory, once the new OSH Act is passed (which, according to the Government, is expected in the near future). The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide further information on the number of participating enterprises, the number of VSP certificates issued, the publication of recognized best OSH practices, the manner and number of inspection visits after the issuance of a VSP certificate and the overall impact of the programme on safety and health conditions in participating enterprises.

Please provide further information on the envisaged self-regulatory approach (for example, self-assessment procedure in enterprises and envisaged level of control through OSH inspections in self-regulatory enterprises).

Article 13. Powers of labour inspectors to order immediate preventive measures. The Committee has repeatedly noted the Government's reference to the pending adoption of a new OSH Act, which would extend the power of OSH inspectors to issue prohibition notices (stop orders), where the safety and health of workers may be adversely affected, to all branches of the economy. It notes that the draft of this Act, after minor modifications by the Ministry, is currently being finalized by the Chief Parliamentary Counsel and that the final version of the OSH Bill will be tabled in Parliament in 2011 and enacted in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to take appropriate steps to ensure that the legislation is supplemented without delay with regard to the abovementioned powers of labour inspectors and to send a copy of the relevant text.

Article 14. Notification of cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes that, according to the information in the current report of the Government, during the last reporting period, the OSH inspectorate has not been informed of cases of any of the 15 occupational diseases which are recognized in national legislation. In addition to the reasons for the under-reporting previously brought forward (such as: (i) the difficulty of establishing a causal relationship between the disease and the worker's occupation; and (ii) the lack of qualified specialists in occupational medicine), the Government adds that some contemporary diseases, such as the carpal tunnel syndrome, are not recognized by national legislation. The Government indicates that it is therefore currently reviewing the Workmen's Compensation Act and the National Insurance (Prescribed Diseases) Regulations with a view to incorporating the ILO list of occupational diseases into national legislation. The Committee hopes that through the abovementioned increase of the amount of fines for the non-respect of the obligation to notify accidents and occupational diseases, this obligation will be better observed in the future. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the steps taken to adopt the ILO list of occupational diseases and, if so, to provide information on the impact of this measure on the number of notifications of occupational diseases to the OSH inspectorate as well as on the labour inspection activities aimed at identifying sectors with a high level of occurrence of occupational diseases and developing appropriate preventive actions.

It once again asks the Government to indicate the measures envisaged to improve the system for the notification of occupational diseases. In this context, the Committee again wishes to draw the Government's attention to the ILO code of practice on the recording and notification of occupational accidents and diseases which offers guidance on the collection, recording and notification of reliable data and the effective use of such data for preventive action (available at www.ilo.org/safework/normative/codes/lang--en/docName--WCMS\_107800/index.htm).

Articles 20 and 21. Annual report on the work of the labour inspection services. The Committee notes the information annexed to the Government's report, on the activities of labour inspectors in the PCEB and in the OSH Department of the MLSS. It notes, however, the absence of statistics of violations detected and penalties imposed. As the collection of relevant data is concerned, the Committee would like to refer the Government to paragraph 158 of its General Survey of 2006 and to its general observation of 2007 to recall the necessity for measures aimed at promoting effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and other government services or public institutions responsible for investigating and penalizing infringements with a view to establishing a procedure for the communication of the relevant information, which would enable the central inspection authority to include them in the annual report on its activities. In addition, the Committee recalls that a separate annual report on the work of the inspection services, in accordance with all the requirements contained in Articles 20 and 21, has to be established and published by the central inspection authority. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that an annual report containing all the data required by Article 21 of the Convention is published by the central authority and a copy sent to the ILO as soon as possible or to indicate the steps taken to this end and, if applicable, the difficulties encountered.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1953)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report received at the ILO on 30 September 2010, the enclosed observation of the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO) dated 2 September 2010 and the response of the Government to this observation. It also notes the observation on the application of the Convention by the National Confederation of Trade Unions (ZENROREN), dated 28 September 2010.

The Committee will examine the Government's report together with the trade union's observations, as well as any other information that the Government might wish to submit to the Office on the points raised, at its next session.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1969)

With reference to its previous comments whereby it welcomed a number of positive actions to strengthen the functioning of the labour inspection system, the Committee notes from the Government's report received in August 2010, information on the progress made in the areas mentioned as well as on further developments in other issues.

Articles 17 and 18 of the Convention. Application of sanctions and incentives in order to ensure the application of the legal provisions covered. The Committee notes with satisfaction that, along with the strengthening of legal proceedings against employers in breach of legal provisions relating to the matters covered by the Convention, blacklists are now published and the enterprises concerned are refused bank guarantees, while undertakings which offer better conditions of work and services to their employees are included in a golden list which helps them obtain bank guarantees. According to the Government, such measures contribute in a significant manner to improvement of migrant workers' conditions of work.

Articles 5(a) and 21(c). Establishment of a register of workplaces in cooperation with other public bodies. With reference to its 2009 General Survey, the Committee notes with interest the establishment of a comprehensive computerized database of all undertakings liable to inspection. It further notes that a comprehensive survey is currently being undertaken of all undertakings in the Kingdom in collaboration with the Public Statistics Agency and the Social Security Agency.

Cooperation with other public bodies and institutions to improve the conditions and terms of employment. The Committee notes the participation of the labour inspectorate in a number of committees such as: the Quadripartite Technical Committee on health, social security, and vocational training; a Committee on the Prevention of Industrial Risks (Amman secretariat for industry, trade, health); the Tourism Committee (inspection of industrial undertakings) and with, among others, the Ministries of Interior and Tourism; the Public Agency for Food, Medicine, and Health; the Joint Security Committee for the inspection of migrant labour with the Ministry of Labour and Public Security; and a National Committee for the Establishment of a Child Labour Framework (with health, education and social development authorities; the International Housing Foundation; and the National Council for Family Affairs).

Cooperation with the justice system. The Committee notes with interest that cooperation established between the labour inspectorate and the judicial bodies through following up on procedures and sentences handed down with respect to undertakings found in violation is also under way with guidance provided by the decisions of the court of cassation with respect to the interpretation of some legal texts. The Government also indicates that the labour inspectorate is requested by the courts to collaborate by proposing an estimate of compensation for occupational accidents in addition to giving testimony with respect to objections raised against the citations initiated by labour inspectors.

Articles 7, 9 and 10 of the Convention. Strengthening of the resources of the labour inspectorate. During 2008–09, the number of labour inspectors has been increased by 75, including 30 specializing in occupational safety and health, while others are lawyers and engineers, which brings their total number to 139 distributed across all regions of the Kingdom. The number of executive staff and support also increased through hiring of computer data clerks and drivers.

A special centre was set up aimed to train and to develop labour inspectors' skills through holding specialized courses in the area of their work, and information on the experiences of other countries in certain areas of labour inspection such as child labour, human trafficking and occupational safety and health standards. The Government mentions several courses on different issues (more than 100 inspectors were trained on handling cases of child labour; 90 inspectors were trained on identifying the manner of handling cases involving victims of trafficking; several courses were held on training inspectors on inspection of working conditions, and the manner of maintaining legal texts, and their application on the ground; courses on international Conventions ratified and computer and English language courses).

Moreover, a special methodology for inspection was adopted by formulating a working manual and operational procedures for the inspection process on which inspectors were trained, including on the manner of using the special forms annexed to the manual. These forms are available to labour inspectors through electronic equipment.

Article 16. Effectiveness of inspection visits in particular areas. The Committee notes that repeated visits are carried out in workplaces and accommodation quarters of migrant workers during periodic visits at daytime, and even at night to verify the observance of the working conditions of women. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue providing information on any development in the functioning of the labour inspection system and, in particular, the impact in the field of the abovementioned measures in terms of respect of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, including migrant workers.

While noting with interest the communication of the annual report on the labour inspection activities for 2009, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would ensure that such a report is published in the future and that the information and data it contains are broken down, in so far as possible, in the manner indicated in Paragraph 9 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81).

Part IV of the report form of the Convention. The Committee notes the indication by the Government of difficulties in the application of the Convention of a financial and logistical nature as well as the numbers and qualifications of the labour inspection and support staff. The Committee understands that the Government envisages the strengthening of logistics and material support and provision of rehabilitation programmes and courses in order to raise the capacities of inspectors. It also calls on projects to support inspection staff with the ILO and international organizations competent for labour inspection. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to undertake measures to these ends and asks it to keep the ILO informed on any progress achieved.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report received on 2 September 2009.

Articles 1 and 6(1) of the Convention. Scope of labour inspection: Supervision of conditions of work in agricultural undertakings. The Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government pursuant to its previous requests. It notes with satisfaction that the scope of the 2007 Labour Institutions Act and the 2007 Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) Act also cover agricultural workers.

The Committee also notes with interest that, according to the Government, Legal Notice No. 227/1990 which exempted establishments located in export processing zones (EPZs) from the application of the health and safety legislation, is now null and void and that the provisions of the OSH Act apply to all workplaces, including those in EPZs. The Committee would be grateful if the Government could indicate in its next report the measures taken to ensure the enforcement of occupational safety and health provisions and the results achieved, including with regard to the prevention of occupational risks linked, inter alia, to the use of agricultural equipment, pesticides and other chemical substances.

Articles 14 and 15. Lack of adequate personnel and appropriate means of transport. The Committee notes once again the indication by the Government that there is still no specific budgetary allocation for labour inspection in agriculture and the Department still suffers from serious staff shortage as no new staff has been engaged since 1994. The budgetary allocation has instead been reduced owing to the prevailing economic slowdown and food crisis being experienced in the country. The Committee notes meanwhile the Government's commitment to take the necessary measures to remedy the situation once the economic situation improves.

The Committee considers that it would be unfortunate if the current context of global economic crisis led to a further deterioration of the conditions of work and the protection of workers through inter alia, a weakening of the entity entrusted with securing the enforcement of legal provisions in a sector of vital importance such as agriculture. The Committee emphasizes that the Global Jobs Pact adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 98th Session (June 2009) makes specific reference to the ILO standards relevant to labour inspection as part of a strategy of exit from the global economic crisis, a strategy aimed at preventing a downward spiral in labour conditions and building the recovery.

The Committee recalls that, according to Article 14 of the Convention, arrangements should be made to ensure that the number of labour inspectors in agriculture is sufficient to secure the effective discharge of their duties and that such numbers should be determined with due regard for, inter alia, the material means placed at the disposal of the inspectors. Moreover, Article 15 provides that labour inspectors should be furnished with the transport facilities necessary for the performance of their duties. The Committee cannot emphasize enough the importance of ensuring adequate and appropriate means of action, in particular transport facilities, to labour inspectors, as the mobility of supervisory staff is a prerequisite for labour inspection, especially in agricultural undertakings which are by their nature far from urban centres and, in addition, often spread over large areas lacking public transport facilities.

Finally, with reference to its general observation of 2009, the Committee emphasizes that the absence of data on the number of agricultural undertakings liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein represents an insurmountable obstacle for any assessment of the rate of coverage by labour inspection services in relation to their scope, as defined in national legislation, and makes it impossible to evaluate the budgetary resources to be allocated to this public function, either for the determination of the appropriate number of labour inspectors or the necessary material resources and transport facilities for the discharge of their functions (Articles 14, 15 and 21) or the provision of specific training (Article 9).

Referring to its 2009 general observation, the Committee once again urges the Government to carry out an objective assessment of the situation by identifying the agricultural undertakings liable to inspection (number, activity, size and location) and the workers engaged therein (number and categories), with a view to enabling an adequate setting of priorities for action and provision of relevant financial resources, in the framework of the national budget and/or a request for international financial assistance to the same end. It requests the Government to indicate in its next report any measures adopted in relation to the above and the results achieved.

Articles 25, 26 and 27. Periodical and annual reports. The Committee notes that no annual report has been received and that, for a number of years, it has been noting with concern the persistent lack of specific data on labour inspection activities in the agricultural sector. The Committee notes from the Government's report that disaggregated data on the activities of the labour inspectorate in agricultural undertakings, including in EPZs, are still not available, primarily due to lack of personnel, and that the Government envisages a formal request to the ILO for technical assistance with a view to improving data collection and management.

While regretting the persistent lack of progress in this area, the Committee notes with interest that section 42 of the Labour Institutions Act, 2007, which applies to agriculture, provides that the Commissioner for Labour shall prepare and publish, not later than 30 April each year, an annual report on the activities undertaken in his/her department, the content of which largely corresponds to Article 27 of the Convention. Furthermore, section 25 of the OSH Act, which also applies to agriculture, provides for the development and maintenance of an effective programme for the collection, compilation and analysis of occupational safety and health statistics covering occupational accidents and diseases, as well as the existence of an accident database where information sent through the DOSHI form is entered.

The Committee emphasizes that disaggregated data on labour inspection activities in the agricultural sector, including in EPZs, can provide national authorities with a regular means of assessing the extent to which the available means match requirements, and constitute an invaluable and regular source of practical information and numerical data that is indispensable for the evaluation of the application of the Convention. The Committee also notes that such data can be reflected either in the general labour inspection annual report or in a separate report.

The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to give effect in practice to sections 42 of the Labour Institutions Act, 2007, and section 25 of the OSH Act, with a view to improving data collection and management and publishing an annual report on the work of the inspection system in agriculture, including in EPZs, either as a separate report or as part of its general annual report. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the measures taken in this regard. It reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance aimed at establishing the conditions in which the Department of Labour can collect data on the activities of the inspection services under its control.

Labour inspection and child labour in agriculture. In response to the Committee's previous comment concerning the measures taken to reduce child labour and the results of these measures, the Government mentions several measures, such as the establishment of a child labour division which acts as liaison between labour inspectors and the National Steering Committee which is the apex body; the development of a child labour policy and a national plan of action that seeks to progressively eliminate worst forms of child labour by 2015; capacity building workshops for inspectors on child labour issues; the development of a child labour monitoring system and data bank on child labour issues; the strengthening of institutional structures that deal with child labour especially in the district and local levels; and the building of partnerships and sharing of information with other government agencies at the district level.

Noting that there is no specific information as to labour inspection activities on child labour in agriculture, the Committee once again recalls, with reference to its general observation of 1999, that labour inspectors can play an important role in: (i) identifying and registering the child workforce in agricultural undertakings; (ii) establishing an educational framework for this population; (iii) identifying specific problems of children and young persons who are exposed to a high risk of accidents and occupational diseases due to the use of complex machines and chemical products; and (iv) finding appropriate solutions to the above. Also referring to its 2009 observations under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), and the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), respectively, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the activities of the labour inspectorate concerning child labour in agriculture as well as examples of enforcement activities and the progress achieved.

Republic of Korea

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report which was received on 7 September 2009.

Articles 10 and 16 of the Convention. Staff numbers of the labour inspection services and effectiveness of the system. The Committee takes note of the data provided by the Government in reply to the Committee's request with regard to the number of workplaces liable to inspection and the number of inspections carried out in 2008. According to the Government, as of 31 December 2007, 1,432,812 workplaces were subject to labour inspection. In 2008, 24,925 workplaces were inspected. The Committee observes that this represents a significant increase in relation to the number of inspections reported for 2006 which amounted to 17,732. Nevertheless, there is still considerable room for improvement in relation to the number of workplaces subject to labour inspection. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide detailed information on the operation of the inspection system, and in particular to indicate the total number of workplaces liable to inspection and the number of inspections carried out in 2009 and 2010.

Article 12(1)(a) and (b). Right of inspectors to enter workplaces freely. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the Work Guideline for Labour Inspectors allowed for the possibility to carry out inspections without prior notice, as an exception to the general rule which is to give prior written notice of the plan of inspection to the employer. The Committee takes note of the clarifications made by the Government in its latest report with regard to the three types of labour inspection established in the law: (i) regular inspection based on the Comprehensive Plan for Workplace Labour Inspection; (ii) occasional inspection in cases where a law or regulation is enacted or revised or there is social demand; and (iii) special inspection where a labour dispute has taken place or is highly likely to take place following non-compliance with working conditions prescribed by labour laws and regulations or where social trouble is caused by failures to make statutory payments. The Committee notes from the Government's report that, pursuant to section 17 of the Work Guideline for Labour Inspectors, an employer should be notified at least ten days before labour inspection is carried out; the Government is considering ways to introduce an inspection system without advance notice in phases depending on the type of inspection (regular, occasional, special inspection).

The Committee observes from the above that, although the possibility of unannounced visits is provided for in the law, it is not applied in practice as long as an inspection system without advance notice has not been introduced. The Committee recalls that Article 12 of the Convention is intended to ensure that inspectors may carry out inspections at any time, without previous notice, with the necessary freedom for an effective inspection. Unannounced visits enable the inspector to enter the inspected premises without warning the employer, especially to avoid that the employer may be tempted to conceal a violation, by changing the usual conditions of work, preventing a witness from being present or making it impossible to carry out an inspection (see General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, paragraphs 261–263).

The Committee also observes that it is not clear from the information provided by the Government on the three types of inspection visit, whether inspection visits can take place pursuant to a complaint. It recalls that conducting unannounced visits on a regular basis is especially useful if the visit is carried out in response to a complaint, as it enables inspectors to observe the confidentiality required by Article 15(c) of the Convention regarding the purpose of the inspection (General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 263).

Consequently, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide in its next report information on progress made with regard to the adoption of an inspection system without advance notice to supplement the guidelines applicable to inspectors in accordance with the provisions of Article 12(1). The Committee also requests the Government to furnish statistical information on the number of unannounced visits which took place in 2009 and 2010, including the number of visits which took place in response to complaints.

Time when inspections are carried out. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on the time when inspections may be carried out so as to give full effect to each of the provisions of Article 12(1). The Committee notes that, according to the Government, there is no provision in the Labour Standards Act, especially its section 102 on the authority of labour inspections, which may restrict a labour inspector's entry to workplaces at any hour of day or night, and, therefore, inspection can be conducted freely at any hour, if it is deemed necessary. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide further information in its next report indicating in particular the number and types of inspection visits which were carried out in the night in 2009 and 2010.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication and communication to the ILO of an annual inspection report. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the content of the "White Paper on Labour" published by the Ministry of Labour instead of an annual report and to communicate a copy within the time limits set out in Article 20. The Committee notes from the Government's report that the White Paper contains the various policies and projects pursued by the Ministry and related statistics for the year concerned and deals with all the subjects described in Article 21 of the Convention except for point (b) on the "staff of the labour inspection service". The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide in its next report a summary of the content of the White Paper with regard to Article 21(a) and (c)–(g) of the Convention, as well as the information required under point (b).

Articles 5(a) and 21(e). Effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the justice system. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the 2009 White Paper contains information relative to the general observation made by the Committee in 2007, in particular, the number of cases reported to local labour offices and the results of their handling by the inspectorate (administrative settlement, referral to judicial treatment, imposition of a fine, etc.) The Government specifies that the results of the judicial examination are not included in the White Paper as judicial proceedings are concluded only after a decision is taken by the justice system. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate in its next report whether a system exists or is contemplated for the recording of judicial decisions so as to enable the labour inspectorate to make use of this information in pursuance of its objectives and to include it in the annual report, as envisaged in Article 21(e) of the Convention. It would also appreciate further information on any measures taken or contemplated to promote effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the justice system.

Latvia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report, which was received on 12 October 2009, and the attached documents.

Articles 3(1), (2) and 10 of the Convention. Principal labour inspection functions and the strengthening of inspection staff. The Committee notes from the Government's report and the annual labour inspection reports sent to the ILO (covering 2007 and 2008) that there are two distinct structures within the labour inspection system to deal respectively with labour relations and labour protection. The Committee notes that the officials exercising their functions in both structures are all labour inspectors but the number of those assigned to combating illegal employment has been increased while the number of those assigned to supervising conditions of work has been reduced and a number of vacancies remained for the position of inspector and competitions were under way, as of 1 June 2009. The Committee must recall that, according to Articles 2 and 3(1) of the Convention, the labour inspection system should primarily be aimed at ensuring the application of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. Consequently, the control of the legality of employment can only be considered as an additional function entrusted to the labour inspection structures. According to Article 3(2) of the Convention, any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors shall not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of the primary duties defined in paragraph 1 of the same Article or to prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers.

However, the Committee notes that, according to the Government and to the information included in the annual reports for 2007 and 2008, the labour inspectorate mainly focuses on illegal employment as an issue becoming even more pressing in the current conditions of high budget deficit and unemployment in the context of the economic crisis. In 2008, 4,554 inspections aimed at combating illegal employment resulted in the identification of 623 cases of illegal employment, the conclusion of 600 written employment contracts between workers in irregular situations and their employers, and the stoppage of labour relations of a number of shadow workers (1,023). No information is provided concerning the protection of the rights of the latter derived from their employment relationship in connection with the period worked. The Committee cannot emphasize enough the importance of ensuring that the same protection should be provided to all workers by the labour inspection system regardless of the type of the employment relationship. It emphasizes in paragraph 77 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection that the Convention does not contain any provision suggesting that any worker be excluded from the protection afforded by labour inspection on account of their irregular employment status and that, to be compatible with the objective of labour inspection, the function of verifying the legality of employment should have as its corollary the reinstatement of the statutory rights of all the workers (wages, leave benefits, overtime and any other related matters).

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the structure of the labour inspectorate and the number of positions allocated respectively to the supervision of labour relations and labour conditions, as well as those positions which remain vacant.

The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the functions entrusted to the labour inspectorate to combat illegal employment do not interfere with the effective discharge of the primary duties defined by the Convention which are aimed at securing the application of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. If no measures have been taken or envisaged, the Government is requested to take such measures and to keep the ILO duly informed.

Articles 3(1) and 21(d) and (e). Labour inspection enforcement activities and relevant statistics. The Committee notes with interest from the annual report of the labour inspection service in 2008, the information concerning its activities centred on the issue of occupational safety and health (OSH), in pursuance of the objective of the implementation of European Union campaigns in the area of OSH (SLIC information and inspection campaign on manual handling of loads, and information campaign on risk assessment), including inspection campaigns in sectors with increased risk of accidents and occupational diseases (in 2008, construction, textiles, and hairdressers and beauty parlours). The Committee observes however that the statistical data provided do not enable the Committee to evaluate the activities carried out in relation to other areas of labour conditions such as wages, working time, leave, child labour and areas of protection of workers such as social security, freedom of association, etc. and the results achieved in terms of legal notices, injunctions, fines, etc. The statistics only refer to violations identified and sanctions applied by the labour inspectorate in relation to so-called "labour protection", without further detail as to the nature, area and seriousness of the legal provisions at issue nor to the nature of the sanctions imposed. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide detailed statistical data on the labour activities and results achieved with regard to legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. To be in a position to assess the level of application of the Convention, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would also ensure that, in the future, the labour inspection annual reports include the number of workplaces liable to inspection, the number of inspection visits made, their purpose, the classification of infringements according to the legal provisions to which they relate, and the nature of the penalties imposed (see the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), Paragraph 9(b)(ii), (c)(i), (d)(ii) and (e)(ii)). The Committee also refers in this regard to its general observation of 2009 on the crucial importance of information on the number of industrial and commercial workplaces liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein.

Article 14. Notification of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the adoption of Regulation No. 585 of 9 August 2005 establishing the procedure for the investigation and registration of work accidents, as well as Regulation No. 908 of 6 November 2006 on the procedure for the investigation and registration of cases of occupational diseases and had requested information on the operation of these procedures in practice and their impact on the detection and registration of work accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes with interest that in 2008, for the first time in five years, the number of accidents fell in part thanks to inspection campaigns implemented in high risk sectors which had not been previously inspected, and an active publicity campaign in the media. It also notes with interest that, according to the Government, an occupational therapist can request the labour inspection service to prepare an OSH report on the workplace in order to evaluate how the work may have influenced a person and diagnose an occupational disease, even in cases where the indications of an occupational disease are revealed in an employee or a person after termination of the employment relationship. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide information on the operation of the procedures for the investigation and registration of work accidents and cases of occupational disease and, in particular, their impact on the registration of work accidents and cases of occupational disease.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1994)

Referring also to its comments under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Committee takes note of the Government's report received on 12 October 2009.

Articles 6(1)(a), 14, 20, 26 and 27 of the Convention. For many years, the Committee has been regretting the absence in annual reports on the work of the inspection services of specific data on the activities of the labour inspectorate in agriculture, with the exception of statistics of occupational accidents and diseases, which are presented by sector of economic activity. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that the activities of the labour inspectorate in the agricultural sector appeared to be focused on combating illegal employment and not on the conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, as required by the Convention.

The Committee notes from the latest annual report provided by the Government that the highest number of accidents for 2008 was in the timber-processing sector, due primarily to lack of experience, insufficient training and professional skills of accident victims, as well as non-use of personal protective equipment and lack of safety appliances. The Committee recalls once again that the specific characteristics of work in the agricultural sector involve specific risks to which workers are exposed (for example, risks related to the handling and use of chemicals and agricultural machinery) and therefore requires specific skills from inspectors acquired through adequate training (Article 9(3)) and facilities (Article 15), such as transport and other facilities that take account of the distant and remote nature of agricultural undertakings, as well as appropriate equipment for measuring and analysis. Only where relevant training is provided to labour inspectors, can the latter perform the very important preventive function entrusted to them according to Article 6(1)(b) of the Convention, namely to supply technical information and advice to employers and workers concerning the most effective means of complying with the legal provisions. In this regard, Paragraph 2 of the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Recommendation, 1969 (No. 133) promotes the association of the labour inspectorate in agriculture in training of workers and Paragraph 14 relates to the appropriate means by which Members should promote education campaigns intended to inform the parties concerned, not only of the need to apply strictly the legal provisions but also of the dangers to the life or health of persons working in agricultural undertakings and the most appropriate means of avoiding them. The Committee has noted significant progress with regard to the safety and health of workers in countries where such campaigns were carried out, particularly in forestry work. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take appropriate measures to ensure that agricultural undertakings liable to inspection are inspected as often and as thoroughly as necessary. Referring to its 2009 general observation under this Convention, it would be grateful if the Government would indicate whether the labour inspection services can base their work on a census of agricultural undertakings liable to inspection and the workers engaged therein so as to be able to plan the activities to be undertaken in the sector and allocate the necessary resources. If this is not the case, the Government is requested to take measures for this purpose and to keep the Office duly informed. Finally, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would ensure that the annual report on the inspection activities in the agricultural sector contains detailed information as requested by Article 27.

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report and the information it contains in relation to the substantial institutional changes which took place in 2007 in the field of professional career services, in particular, the merger of the State Professional Career Choice Agency with the State Employment Agency, the creation of an advisory council at the State Employment Agency to formulate opinions and proposals to the Minister for Welfare regarding the implementation of employment policies and the adoption of amendments to the Act on Support for Unemployed Persons and Persons Seeking Employment which came into force on 19 July 2007 in order to specify the competence of the various ministries involved in the field of unemployment policy (Ministry of Economics, Ministry of Welfare, Ministry of Education and Science).

Articles 6 and 10 of the Convention. Impact of austerity measures on labour administration. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had welcomed among other things, the information provided by the Government on the criteria for selecting and remunerating public labour officials and the need to provide them with conditions of service and work which allow them to continue in their posts and improve their skills and qualifications. It had requested the Government to provide information on any change in the functioning of the labour administration system.

The Committee notes that in the context of the current economic crisis and an emergency agreement with the European Commission and the International Monetary Fund (IMF), Latvia has been one of the first European States to introduce austerity measures in 2009. It notes that according to publicly available information, on 9 June 2009 an agreement was reached on the creation of a government-level crisis working group with the involvement of the social partners. On 16 June 2009 the Parliament (Saeisma) adopted amendments to the Law on Insurance in Case of Unemployment which came into force on 1 July 2009 in order to increase state support to the unemployed. However, this measure was accompanied by a reduction in social guarantees: among other things, the Parliament adopted on 16 June 2009 the Act on State Pension and State Allowance Disbursement in the period from 2009 to 2012 which drastically reduced old-age pensions and benefits. This Act was subsequently declared unconstitutional by the Latvia Constitutional Court Decision No. 2009-43-01 of 21 December 2009 on the grounds that the measures in question were disproportionate and did not comply with the principle of protection of legitimate expectations. The Committee also notes that on 1 December 2009 the Saeisma adopted Latvia's revised budget for 2010, which introduced significant tax increases and reduced government expenditure to 2004 levels. The Committee understands that both the Latvian Free Trade Union Federation (LBAS) and the Employers' Confederation of Latvia have publicly expressed apprehension about the impact of these measures on the competitiveness of Latvian business and on employment levels in times of recession.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide in its next report an assessment of the impact of the above measures on the application of the Convention, especially Article 6, according to which the competent bodies within the system of labour administration shall be responsible for the preparation, administration and review of a national labour policy, including a national employment policy, by among other things, studying and keeping under review the situation of employed, unemployed and underemployed persons and making services available to employers and workers and their respective organizations.

The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would indicate the impact of the above measures in relation to Article 10 of the Convention according to which the staff of the labour administration shall have the status, material means and financial resources necessary for the effective performance of their duties.

The Committee finally requests the Government to provide any additional legislative text adopted in the framework of the austerity measures with regard to labour market issues along with an evaluation of its expected impact.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes the Government's report and the attached documents received at the ILO on 28 October 2009.

Article 3(2) of the Convention. Additional duties entrusted to labour inspectors in connection with union matters. For many years the Committee has been asking the Government to take steps to limit intervention by labour inspectors in the internal affairs of trade unions and confederations solely to cases of complaints which might be addressed to them by a significant number of members. The issue was raised by the Committee with regard to section 2(c) of Decree No. 3273 of 26 June 2000, under the terms of which the labour inspectorate has the power to monitor vocational organizations and confederations at all levels in order to check whether the latter, in their operations, are exceeding the limits prescribed by law and by their rules of procedure and statutes. The Committee stated in a direct request of 2002 that such powers were tantamount to the right to interfere in the internal affairs of professional organizations. The Government then announced that an amendment to the Labour Code would settle the issue. However, Memorandum No. 35/2 of 12 April 2006 from the Director-General of the Ministry of Labour reproduced the criticized provision using identical wording.

Section 163(3) of the version of the draft Labour Code submitted to the ILO in 2007 for opinion stated that the Labour Inspection and Occupational Safety and Health Department of the Ministry of Labour would be responsible for monitoring the application of laws, decrees and regulations relating to terms and conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, including the provisions of ratified international and Arab conventions and, more specifically ... "(3) to conduct inquiries further to complaints relating to trade unions and confederations at all levels".

In its 2009 report, the Government indicates that this provision is contained in section 161(3) of the current version of the draft Labour Code and will have the effect of removing any power from the labour inspectorate to monitor trade union affairs, as this power would be assigned to the trade union council. It explains that the powers of the labour inspectorate with regard to occupational organizations will therefore be limited to the examination of complaints submitted to it by the latter. Since the current wording of the text in no way lends itself to such an interpretation, it is essential, in order to avoid any ambiguity in this regard, for the drafting to be reviewed in the appropriate way. Noting that the draft amendments to the Labour Code have been under discussion for more than ten years, the Committee requests the Government, pending the definitive adoption of the Code, to contemplate cancelling, in the forms provided for by law in such matters, the provision of Memorandum No. 35/02 of 12 April 2006 of the Director-General of the Ministry of Labour under the terms of which labour inspectors retain the power to monitor trade union activities. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee reminds the Government that, by ratifying this Convention, it undertook to take measures to implement it in both law and practice. In view of the worrying information provided in this regard, the Committee draws its attention to the following points.

Shortcomings of the labour inspection system in relation to Articles 3, 6, 7 and 9–21 of the Convention. According to the information provided by the Government, although labour inspectors are supposed to carry out routine inspections of workplaces to ensure that the legal provisions concerning working conditions are being respected, the shortage of inspectors, their lack of qualifications and the fact that they perform tasks other than those inherently related to labour inspection constitute significant obstacles to the performance of this duty. Contrary to the information provided in the Government's first report received by the ILO in 2003, according to which inspections were carried out on a routine and proactive basis at least in workplaces and activities at risk, inspections are now carried out only in response to complaints. Furthermore, the number of inspectors has not been increased as planned and while the Directorate of Dispute Prevention and Resolution is not yet operational, it is inspectors who continue to ensure the settlement of disputes and intervene in collective labour disputes. They are also involved in inspection operations organized jointly by the Ministry of Labour and Employment, the Ministry of Trade and Industry, Cooperatives and Marketing and the Ministry of Home Affairs and Public Safety to verify the legality of the situation of foreign employers from the point of view of the right to establish a business.

The Committee notes with concern that inspectors are not recruited based on a personal interest in carrying out these duties, but under a system of compulsory placement, which, according to the Government, has an adverse effect on their degree of motivation. Furthermore, the lack of any specific training after they take up their duties, their very low remuneration and the shortage of office equipment and transport facilities mean that inspectors lack the enthusiasm that is essential to the performance of inspection duties and are less likely to remain in their posts. The most experienced inspectors move on in search of better paid jobs. According to the Government, all these conditions explain the fact that the profession is not attractive to the technicians and experts whose collaboration would nonetheless be of benefit to an effective labour inspection service.

With regard to the action taken in response to violations observed, the Committee notes that employers at fault are issued with a formal warning to fulfil their obligations, but that the level of the penalties applicable in the case of a failure to comply is not sufficiently dissuasive. The relevant legal provisions have not been amended since the Labour Code was adopted in 1992, despite a spiralling monetary inflation rate. In any case, the Government has not provided any figures on the administrative or penal action taken in response to the violations observed by inspectors. The Committee is therefore unable to carry out any assessment of the coverage of the labour inspectorate's services or the impact of the inspections carried out in relation to the objective of the Convention. Similarly, the Government has not provided any information allowing the Committee to assess the impact of the collaboration of organizations of workers (through the reporting of violations) and employers (through the encouragement of their members to respect the legislation), mentioned in the report, on the operation of the labour inspectorate.

The Committee notes that the weaknesses of the labour inspection system were already highlighted in an assessment of the labour inspectorate carried out by the ILO in 2005 and that recommendations were made to improve its operation. It notes that these recommendations have for the most part not been implemented but that the Government announces forthcoming amendments of the provisions of the Labour Code concerning the penalties applicable to those responsible for violations and undertakes to invest efforts to establish a computerized labour inspection system.

The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that labour inspectors quickly resume the primary duties defined in Article 3(1) of the Convention to enable them to carry out routine inspections in the highest possible number of industrial and commercial workplaces liable to inspection (Article 16). It emphasizes that, for inspectors, routine inspections constitute the safest means of fulfilling their obligation of confidentiality concerning the existence and source of complaints (Article 15(c)) and avoiding exposing the workers concerned to the risk of reprisals on the part of the employer.

The Committee also requests the Government to ensure that labour inspectors receive the necessary training for the effective performance of inspection duties, which consist mainly of enforcing the legal provisions concerning conditions of work and the protection of workers, but also involve providing employers and workers with technical advice and information on the most effective means of complying with these provisions and drawing the attention of the competent authority to any legislative gaps relating to protection at work.

The Committee also requests the Government to take measures to ensure the full application in both law and practice of Article 6 concerning the status and conditions of service of inspection staff and Article 7 concerning the criteria and methods for selecting candidates for the profession as well as the training of inspection staff.

With regard to the material and logistical means necessary for the establishment and operation of an effective inspection service, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to identify the most urgent needs in this regard and to take measures to find the resources to meet those needs, both at the national level and in the context of international cooperation. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments in this regard and reminds it of the possibility of seeking technical assistance from the Office to identify the needs concerned as the first phase.

Finally, referring to its general observations of 2007 and 2009, the Committee requests the Government to take concrete measures to create a computerized labour inspectorate so that the central inspection authority is able, in accordance with Article 20, to publish and transmit to the ILO an annual inspection report gradually containing all the information required in paragraphs (a) and (g) of Article 21. The Committee reminds the Government that Paragraph 9 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), provides useful guidance on the information required on each subject and the ideal level of detail.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1971)

Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention. Annual report on labour inspection activities. Further to its previous observation, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the legal texts on the prosecution of reported violations in respect of conditions of work and the protection of workers. However, it notes with regret that the Government has still not taken measures to give effect to Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention, which establish the obligation for the central authority to publish an annual report on the work of the inspection services under its control and to provide a copy of it to the ILO. In these circumstances, the Committee does not have the necessary means to assess the operation of the labour inspection system and to evaluate the extent to which the Convention is applied in law and practice. Noting the Government's commitment to provide the ILO at the end of 2010 with a report containing the data and statistics covered by Article 21 and observing that such a report has not been provided, the Committee requests the Government to do so in the very near future, and also to ensure that the report is published, and to provide information on the measures adopted for this purpose, the results achieved and the difficulties encountered.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Luxembourg

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1958)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's reports for the periods ending on 30 June 2005 and 30 June 2007, received at the ILO on 21 December 2005 and 26 November 2007, respectively, the annual report of the Inspectorate of Labour and Mines (ITM) for 2005 and the legislation attached. It also notes that the Labour Code, adopted on 31 July 2006, does not change the previous legal provisions on labour law, including those on labour inspection.

Developments in the labour inspection system. The Committee notes the process to enhance the efficiency and relevance of the labour inspection system, in particular a bill to reform the ITM currently before the competent parliamentary bodies. It awaits any developments in this respect and would be grateful if the Government would keep the Office informed.

International cooperation in labour inspection. The Committee notes that the annual report of the ITM contains information on each of the subjects set out in Article 21 of the Convention, and also on the ITM's regional activities in the context of the European Union, such as participation in the drafting of new directives on occupational health and safety, and its activities at international level including the organization, in collaboration with the ILO, of a conference on integrated labour inspection systems held from 9 to 11 March 2005 and attended by delegates from some 70 countries. The Committee notes that according to section 6 of the Act on the Posting of Workers, the ITM's purpose is to act as a liaison office for international cooperation with counterpart public administrations in the Member States of the European Union. The synergy thus created will enhance action to prevent industrial accidents and occupational diseases among migrant workers, in the "major region" composed of the founding members of the "old Europe". The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the ways and means used to attain this objective, and on the results.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes the Government's report and the documents attached, received on 5 November 2009. It also notes the comments of the Autonomous Trade Union of Labour Inspectors (SAIT), dated 2 February 2010, concerning the application of this Convention and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129). These comments were sent to the Government on 6 April 2010 but it has not provided any information on the points raised.

Articles 6 and 11 of the Convention. Conditions of service and work of labour inspectors. In its previous reports, the Government mentioned the poor conditions of work of labour inspectors and the lack of equipment and transport facilities owing to the meagre budgetary resources allocated to the labour administration, but the Committee noted in its previous observation that section 235 of the Labour Code provides that the competent authorities are obliged to adopt the necessary measures to provide inspectors with local offices which are suitably equipped in accordance with the requirements of the services and accessible to the persons concerned, and with the transport facilities necessary for the performance of their duties where no suitable public transport facilities exist, and are also obliged to make arrangements to ensure that labour inspectors are reimbursed for any travelling and incidental expenses which may be necessary for the discharge of their duties. The Committee further noted that, under the same text, the implementation of these measures is covered by the state budget. It therefore requested the Government to supply any information, together with any relevant legal, administrative, or financial text, or any document describing the measures taken for the purposes referred to in section 235 of the Labour Code and the impact of these measures on the operation of the labour inspectorate in practice.

However, in its report received in November 2009, the Government indicates that the procedure for the submission to the competent authorities of the draft text on the special conditions applicable to labour inspectors has been suspended due to political instability. The Committee understands that this text is designed to improve the conditions of work of inspectors, including travelling and incidental expenses and hours of work. With regard to the lack of means in relation to the labour inspectorate's operational needs, the Government merely acknowledges that major efforts need to be made and mentions the possibility of the cooperation of other bodies without giving further details. Furthermore, the Government's indications concerning the distribution of labour inspection staff are extremely contradictory in that it states on the one hand that in general, a labour inspection service operates with two labour inspectors, one controller, a secretary and an office junior, but refers on the other hand to a table in the 2009 biannual activity report which indicates that Antananarivo has a single inspection service operating with 53 inspectors, Antsirabe has a service operating with two inspectors, Toliary has a service operating with three inspectors and other regional services operate with one or two inspectors.

According to the SAIT, the Government has taken no steps to make the slightest improvement to the situation of the labour inspectorate, which it describes as wholly inadequate, with dilapidated infrastructure, furniture and other equipment allocated to the services and extremely precarious living and working conditions of labour inspectors and controllers, which are far removed from the concept of decent work, the promotion of which comes within the remit of the labour inspectorate. The SAIT states that labour inspectors are often required to finance the operational needs of the service using their own funds due to the failings of the administration. This includes the provision of office equipment and the funding of travelling costs incurred when visiting workplaces. Furthermore, the political crisis has apparently triggered an upsurge in action designed by those responsible to hinder the operation of the labour inspection services and harass labour inspectors and controllers.

The union indicates that a trade union demonstration was organized on 27 November 2009 as a sign of protest against the politicization of the labour administration and to stress the urgent need to modernize the labour inspectorate in the face of the crisis. According to the SAIT, in response to this demonstration, in which a large number of labour inspectors and controllers participated, the Labour Minister encouraged labour controllers to rise up against labour inspectors and dismissed several labour inspectors who had participated in the demonstration and who occupied senior posts within the Ministry, while transferring a number of other labour inspectors who had until then been working in the capital to posts several hundred kilometres away, with no regard for the inconvenience caused to their families, in particular to their children of school age, or to their trade union duties and imminent retirement.

The SAIT further indicates that, following the invitation it extended in vain to the Minister to engage in dialogue, it decided to report the situation described above to the Office while confirming the commitment of its members to assume their share of the responsibility for the efforts to implement the ILO's Decent Work Agenda.

The Committee notes the following documents attached to the union's comments:

- (1) labour inspectors' communication dated 27 November 2009;
- (2) three individual service notes ordering national directors to hand over their functions;
- (3) four individual decisions concerning the assignment of labour inspectors, two of whom hold trade union office;
- (4) a copy of Decree No. 2004-841 of 31 August 2004 concerning the conditions governing the assignment and transfer of public servants;
- (5) a copy of Decree No. 2006-432 of 27 June 2006 implementing the system of quotas for recruitment competitions in the public service;

- (6) report on the election of the officers of the trade union of labour inspectors dated 25 April 2007 (which includes the names of the public servants who are the subject of the above individual decisions);
- (7) a document containing extracts from Ordinance No. 60-149 concerning the conditions governing the exercise of trade union rights and the defence of the occupational interests of public service employees and public servants; and
- (8) a copy of the SAIT's comments to the ILO dated 4 June 2008 concerning the application of the Convention, which were not received, as a result of which the Committee was unable to examine them, in which the SAIT reports the appalling conditions of service and work of labour inspectors which are discriminatory compared to those enjoyed by other public servants with the same qualifications and similar responsibilities.

The Committee expresses deep concern at the situation described not only by the Government but also by the SAIT concerning the severe lack of material means available to the labour inspectorate in relation to the numerous and complex duties that inspectors are required to carry out. Furthermore, this situation seems to be exacerbated by a clear lack of consideration on the part of the authorities towards labour inspection staff and seems to have resulted in a weakening of the public institution of which they form part and the role of which is to enforce the labour legislation. Inspectors are therefore discredited in the eyes of the social partners due not only to the severe lack of means available to them, but also, and above all, to their precarious status compared to the status of other public servants with similar qualifications and responsibilities.

The rare information provided by the Government concerning the operation of the labour inspectorate in practice indicates a clear lack of understanding of the value and socio-economic role of this public institution. The independence of labour inspectors from any change of government and from any undue external influence is one of the key principles laid down in the Conventions concerning labour inspections. The documents provided by the SAIT concerning the dismissal and transfer of labour inspectors to very remote locations in December 2009, which took place in the month following their participation in industrial action by means of an administrative transfer, would seem to confirm the SAIT's opinion that these measures were designed to punish trade union membership or activity.

The Committee urges the Government to provide detailed information in its next report in reply to the points raised by the SAIT. Furthermore, it requests it to take measures as a matter of urgency to restore normal operations within the labour inspectorate, including ensuring that an investigation using all legal means is carried out to verify the legitimacy of the grounds for the decisions to transfer members of the inspection staff who participated in the industrial action of 27 November 2009 and that any occupational and trade union rights which have been violated are restored.

The Committee also requests the Government to keep the ILO duly informed of the process of adopting the draft text relating to the special conditions applicable to labour inspectors and to provide a copy of the draft or final text, as applicable.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes the Government's report received on 5 November 2009. It draws the Government's attention to its observation under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), in which it refers to the comments of the Autonomous Trade Union of Labour Inspectors (SAIT), received by the ILO on 2 February 2010 and sent to the Government on 5 April 2010. These comments, accompanied by supporting documents, mainly concern the worsening conditions of service and work of labour inspectors and controllers and the action taken by the Government against a number of labour inspectors and controllers in response to their participation in industrial action aimed at obtaining conditions of service and work in line with the provisions of the two ratified international Conventions on labour inspection. Given that the comments of the SAIT concern matters affecting all labour inspectors and controllers, including those performing their duties in agricultural enterprises, the Committee urges the Government to provide information in its next report in reply to the points raised in its observation under Convention No. 81 concerning the application of the provisions of Articles 8 and 15 of this Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Malaysia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1963)

Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention. Annual report on the work of the inspection services. The Committee notes the Government's report which contains detailed statistical information on labour inspections and inspections on occupational safety and health, with respect to Peninsular Malaysia, Sabah and Sarawak. It notes with interest that the information provided corresponds to the requirements under Article 21 of the Convention. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that each one of the 11 agencies under the auspices of the Ministry of Human Resources (MOHR) produces its own annual report, and that the statistics reflecting common data are available on the MOHR's web site. The Committee wishes to indicate that these data must be published as an integral part of an annual report on the work of the inspection services (Article 20(1)) within a reasonable time after the end of the year and in any case within 12 months (Article 20(2)). In this connection, the Committee recalls its General Observation of 2009, in which the Committee referred to the use of statistical data both at the international and national levels, indicating that at the national level, such data would allow assessment of the rate of coverage by labour inspection services in relation to their scope, as defined in national legislation. Such assessment could then be used for the determination of the appropriate number of labour inspectors and the necessary material resources for the discharge of their functions (Articles 10, 11 and 16), or for the provision of training (Article 7). With these factors identified, an appropriate budget to meet the justified and quantified needs of labour inspection could then be allocated, according to the national financial possibilities. At the international level, these data would allow for an assessment of the implementation of the Convention in practice (Article 20(3)). Accordingly, the Committee requests the Government to take all necessary measures with a view to compiling and publishing an annual report of the labour inspection services, containing such data as contained in the Government's report, and to send a copy to the Office, as required under Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1965)

Articles 3(1), 5(a), 16, 18 and 21 of the Convention. Annual report on the labour inspection activities and collaboration with the judicial authorities. The Committee notes with interest the annual inspection report provided to the Office containing information reporting a number of good practices which deserve to be emphasized, and particularly the activities carried out by the Occupational Health and Safety Authority in schools to raise awareness among the public from an early age concerning occupational safety and health issues, as well as the participation in the European Safety and Health at Work Campaign with the slogan “Healthy Workplaces – Good for you. Good for business”, which emphasizes the financial value to enterprises of beneficial conditions of work for workers. The Committee also notes with interest the information on the inspection campaigns targeting certain branches of activity, such as hotels and the collection of household rubbish.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mauritania

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1963)

Article 6 of the Convention. Status of labour inspectors and controllers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that no provision had been made for allowances in new Decree No. 021/2007/PM of 15 January 2007 issuing the specific conditions of service of the labour administration, which establishes the status of labour inspectors and controllers, whereas all the other administrative departments had been awarded an allowance in the context of another decree adopted in 2007. The Committee notes the Government's reply stating that it will make a point of rectifying this error. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take steps in the very near future to ensure that allowances are granted to labour inspectors with regard to the specific nature of their duties and to keep the Office informed of any developments in this respect.

Article 7(3). Training of inspectors. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest the information supplied by the Government to the effect that the ADMITRA project, in cooperation with the Ministry of Public Service and Employment, has organized a major workshop on inspection methods for labour inspectors and trainee labour inspectors from the National School of Administration (ENA). Moreover, a workshop in “training engineering” was held for labour inspectors and trainers from the ENA, which will enable them in turn to train their colleagues. It also notes with interest that in 2011 a total of 40 new young inspectors and controllers who have passed an external competition will strengthen the numbers of the labour inspection staff. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to provide initial and further training for inspection staff, if necessary with technical assistance from the Office, and requests the Government to keep it informed of any developments in this respect, including the content and methodology of the training.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest the summary report from the regional labour inspectorates for 2008. However, it notes that, contrary to the Government's indications, the provisional table of implementing regulations for the updated law concerning penalties were not attached to its report. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on any progress made with a view to the publication by the central inspection authority of an annual report, as provided for by Article 20, containing the information required in relation to the matters covered by Article 21, or on any obstacles encountered in this respect. It reminds the Government of the possibility of requesting technical assistance from the Office in connection with the establishment of a system for the compilation of data enabling the central authority to draw up such a report.

Labour inspection and child labour. In its previous comments, the Committee stressed the importance of the role of labour inspection staff in protecting the safety, health and well-being of children. It asked the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that labour inspectors and controllers will be given the necessary training, powers and resources to take effective action in this respect. However, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not refer to this matter. The Committee therefore again requests the Government to take steps as soon as possible to enable labour inspectors to effectively enforce the legislation relating to child labour.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1996)

Articles 3(1), 13 and 14 of the Convention. Labour inspection in the area of OSH. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 7 October 2009 (OSHA), which establishes an OSH strategy based on prevention and reinforces the role of the labour inspectorate in this regard. It also notes from the Government's report the activities carried out by the labour inspectorate in this area in 2009, including mass media campaigns and training on OSH; according to the annual labour inspection report provided by the Government, as a result of the above activities, the number of serious and fatal accidents decreased by 13 and six cases, respectively, as compared to last year. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide information on prevention and enforcement activities carried out by labour inspectors in the area of OSH along with an assessment of their impact.

Noting, moreover, that according to the Government the OSHA empowers labour inspectors, in case of imminent danger, to issue injunctions which should be approved by the State General Inspector, the Committee requests the Government to specify whether such injunctions have immediate effect.

The Committee finally takes note of the information provided by the Government on recorded occupational diseases and their origins in 2008 and 2009. It recalls that in previous reports the Government had indicated that the options for notifying cases of occupational disease to the labour inspectorate were being reviewed. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged for the notification of occupational diseases and would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide information on this issue.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1958)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in the ILO in September 2009, and the attached documentation, in reply to its previous comments.

Articles 6 and 7 of the Convention. Status, recruitment criteria and conditions of service of labour inspectors. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the conditions of service of the labour inspectorate by means of Decree No. 2.08.69 of 9 July 2008 of the Ministry of Employment and Vocational Training (MEFP). The Decree covers the conditions for the recruitment and careers of labour inspectors and deputy labour inspectors, and their career advancement at the various levels of the structure and hierarchy of the labour inspectorate.

Article 11(2)(b). Provisional travelling expenses of labour inspectors. The Committee notes with interest that, under the terms of Ministerial Order No. 2.08.70 of 9 July 2009, labour inspectors and deputy inspectors receive monthly indemnities to cover expenses related to visiting workplaces liable to inspection. The Committee however notes that the amount of the indemnity depends on the grade of the inspector, and not on criteria directly related to the facility or difficulty of transport, the geographical extent of the areas within their competence or the existence of public transport facilities. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the reasons for which the travel indemnities for inspection visits are based on the grade of the inspection staff. It also requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which inspectors operating in areas without public transport and who do not possess their own vehicle are compensated for any excess travelling expenses necessary to discharge the objective set out in Circular No. 2556 of 2 April 1999 on inspections at the rhythm of 15 inspections a month.

Article 15(c). Obligation of confidentiality regarding the source of complaints. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, section 531 of the Labour Code and Dahir No. 1-58-008 of 24 February 1958 issuing the general conditions of service of the public service, as subsequently amended and supplemented, provide an adequate legal basis for ensuring compliance by labour inspectors with the obligation of confidentiality regarding the source of complaints, as required by this provision of the Convention. However, the Committee notes that the texts referred to by the Government relate to the general obligation of professional confidentiality and discretion of all public officials, but do not explicitly cover the prohibition from giving any intimation to the employer or his representative concerning the source of any complaint or that a visit of inspection was made in consequence of the receipt of such a complaint. The recommendation made to labour inspectors in the Guide on the methodology of inspections to indicate, "depending on the circumstances”, the purpose of the inspection and the desired procedure would however appear to constitute a real obstacle to the protection of those lodging complaints against any risk of reprisal by the employer. It would be desirable for this recommendation to only apply in specific circumstances, namely during inspections requiring the presence of the employer or his representative or the preparation of a workplace, the stoppage of machines or installations, inspections to verify the implementation of an earlier injunction or order, information-gathering inspections or those organized in the context of a thematic campaign, or inspections following an employment accident or the notification of an occupational disease. However, inspections occasioned by a complaint should, in the same way as those that are planned (routine inspections), be initiated and carried out in full freedom by the labour inspector, who should not be obliged to indicate the purpose or inform the employer (or his representative) of the inspection. This is the essential condition for compliance by labour inspectors with the obligation of confidentiality set out in Article 15(c) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take measures in the light of the above to ensure the freedom necessary for labour inspectors in the discharge of their duties during inspection visits so as to enable them to protect those lodging complaints from any risk of reprisals by the employer or his representative.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in reply to its previous comments in the report received by the ILO on 14 August 2009, as well as in the report on the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), received on 1 September 2009, and the attached documentation, namely the texts of Decree No. 2.08.69 of 9 July 2008 issuing the conditions of service of the labour inspectorate, Decree 2.08.70 of 9 July 2008 respecting the professional travel indemnities for labour inspectors and the report of the Labour Directorate of the Ministry of Employment and Vocational Training providing an assessment of the work of the labour inspection services for 2008.

Articles 6, 9 and 14 of the Convention. Number and qualifications of labour inspectors in agriculture. The Committee notes with interest that, to make up for the retirement of labour inspectors in 2005, the Ministry of Labour recruited 40 inspectors in 2007 and organized the recruitment of 15 inspectors in 2009. However, although it explains the reduction in the number of inspections on the grounds of the additional responsibilities entrusted to inspectors, the Government does not specify the number of those responsible for inspecting agricultural undertakings. Similarly, it does not provide details allowing a distinction to be made between occupational safety and health training activities undertaken for inspectors in agriculture in relation to the activities intended for all the inspection staff. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the number and geographical distribution of labour inspectors and deputy inspectors in agricultural and forestry undertakings and to provide detailed information on the specific training which may have been provided to them to enable them to discharge their missions of supervision, information and technical advice in agricultural undertakings.

Article 12. Cooperation between inspection services in agriculture and other government services or institutions. The Committee notes the general institutional information concerning the coordination of the activities of the external services of public administrations and public institutions at the level of the governorates. The Committee wishes to emphasize that the cooperation that the Government is called upon to promote by this provision of the Convention does not consist of entrusting inspection duties to other institutions but, more generally, of making it possible for the labour inspection services to exchange information or services relevant to the operation of the labour inspection system in agriculture with other public or private bodies and institutions. In its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection, the Committee noted that a range of different structures and bodies have at their disposal a wide range of data, information and research on the world of work which should be communicated systematically to the appropriate labour inspection departments through appropriate mechanisms (paragraph 154). In particular, it advocates such cooperation between the labour inspection services and those responsible, respectively, for employment, equality in the workplace, vocational training, job placement, migration, youth, basic or compulsory education, the disabled and for the gathering of statistical information with a view to defining the priorities for action of the labour inspection services (paragraph 155). In particular, the Committee emphasizes the value of effective cooperation with social security institutions and the police, as well as the judicial authorities, the tax authorities and the ministries responsible for the sectors covered by the labour inspection system (paragraphs 157 and 158).

In 2007, the Committee addressed an observation to the Members bound by this Convention and by Convention No. 81 on the various forms of cooperation that could be promoted between the labour inspection services and the judicial authorities and, in 2009, a general observation on the cooperation required between the labour inspection services and other public and private bodies for the establishment and regular updating of a register of workplaces liable to inspection. It notes in this respect with interest the guidance provided in the Methodological guide for inspections drawn up in 2006 with ILO support for the establishment of such a register and its content. The Committee would be grateful if the Government, with a view to the establishment of the register of workplaces liable to inspection, would take measures to facilitate the establishment of the above forms of cooperation, describe these measures and provide any relevant documentation, as well as information on their impact on the operation of the labour inspection services in agriculture.

Noting with interest that, according to the Methodological guide for inspections, an independent occupational health service has to be established in agricultural and forestry undertakings and their subsidiaries when they employ at least 50 workers, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the methods of collaboration followed in practice between labour inspection services and such medical services, particularly with a view to the prevention of occupational risks, and particularly those that cause pathologies specific to agricultural activities. It also requests the Government to provide data on the geographical distribution of these services and those that are competent for workers in smaller agricultural undertakings.

Article 13. Collaboration between the labour inspection services and employers and workers or their organizations. According to the Government, such collaboration is focused in particular on the field of industrial relations (collective bargaining, occupational elections, particularly with a view to the establishment of enterprise committees and safety and hygiene committees). While taking due note of this information, the Committee wishes to emphasize the need for collaboration between inspection services and the social partners in the forms and using the means advocated by the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Recommendation, 1969 (No. 133), namely through the development of education campaigns intended to inform the parties concerned, by all appropriate means, of the applicable legal provisions and the need to apply them strictly, as well as of dangers to the life or health of persons working in agricultural undertakings and of the most appropriate means of avoiding them (Paragraph 14). The Committee therefore requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of any progress achieved with a view to effective collaboration between the inspection services and employers, workers or their organizations for the achievement of the objectives of the Convention and the results expected or achieved.

Articles 15(1)(b) and (2), and 21. Transport facilities and the reimbursement of the professional travel expenses of inspectors for the inspection of agricultural undertakings. Frequency of inspections. The Committee notes that under the terms of Decree No. 2.08.70 of 9 July 2008 of the Ministry of Employment and Vocational Training, the travel indemnities allocated to labour inspectors and deputy inspectors are determined as a function of the grade of each official, to the exclusion of any other criterion. The text does not, for example, contain specific provisions applicable to the discharge of inspections and tours of agricultural undertakings, for which purpose the distances to be covered can be very variable and give rise to higher meal expenses and other costs than those for inspections in urban areas, where public transport may be available. Circular No. 2556 of 2 April 1999 respecting inspections nevertheless establishes the number of 15 inspections a month for each district supervisor of labour laws in agriculture and for each official responsible for the inspection of these laws. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to allow labour inspectors principally or partially covering the agricultural sector to be provided with appropriate allowances for their inspection visits and to be able to recover, where appropriate, any additional costs that they may have had to cover in the course of their work. If such measures have not yet been adopted, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would make up this shortcoming and provide relevant information and documentation, such as cost reimbursement forms.

Articles 16(2) and 20(c). Confidentiality of complaints. The Committee notes that, according to the Government in its report on the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), section 531 of the Labour Code and Dahir No. 1-58-008 of 24 February 1958 issuing the general conditions of service of the public service, as amended and supplemented, constitute an adequate legal basis for ensuring compliance by labour inspectors with the obligation of confidentiality in relation to complaints, as required by this provision of the Convention. However, the Committee observes that the texts referred to by the Government concern the general obligation of professional secrecy and discretion incumbent upon all officials, but that they do not explicitly establish the prohibition on giving any intimation to the employer or his representative that a visit of inspection was made in consequence of the receipt of a complaint. The recommendation made to labour inspectors in the Methodological guide for inspections to indicate, “according to circumstances”, the purpose of the visit and its desired cause would moreover appear to constitute a real obstacle to the protection of the authors of complaints against any risk of reprisals by the employer. It would be desirable for this recommendation only to be applied in specific circumstances, namely when inspections require the presence of the employer or his representative or the preparation of a workplace, the stoppage of machinery or equipment, in the case of inspections to verify the implementation of an earlier order or injunction, during information visits or those organized in the framework of a thematic campaign or as a result of an industrial accident or the notification of a case of occupational disease. Inspections carried out on the basis of a complaint should, in principle, in the same way as those that are planned (routine), be initiated and undertaken in full freedom by the labour inspector without having to indicate the purpose or inform the employer (or his representative). This is the essential condition for compliance by labour inspectors with the obligation of confidentiality set out in Article 20(c) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take measures in the light of the above to ensure the freedom necessary for labour inspectors in the discharge of their functions during inspections so as to enable them to protect the authors of complaints from any risk of reprisals by the employer or his representative.

Articles 26 and 27. Information and statistical data necessary for the functioning of the labour inspection services and the publication of an annual report on the work of the inspection services in agriculture. The Committee notes the recommendations in the Methodological guide for inspections concerning the register, data entries and files on workplaces and the information that has to be contained therein, such as their characteristics, the number of persons employed, etc. It cannot overemphasize the value of also including data, such as the distribution of the workforce by type of employment (managerial and administrative staff, manual workers), sex and age, as well as the presence of persons with disabilities. In this respect, the Committee notes with interest the specific recommendation to inspectors in relation to monitoring the protection of certain categories of workers (pregnant women, young workers and workers exposed to risks).

The Committee also considers that information on the existence of trade unions and their representative nature would enable inspectors to make use of such organizations for the communication within agricultural undertakings of information designed to raise the awareness of men and women workers concerning matters related to legal provisions and occupational risks. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would ensure that the annual report on the work of the inspection services, with a view to the establishment of the register of workplaces in the agricultural sector, contains information and statistics which enable the central authority to make an assessment that is as reliable as possible of the operation of the labour inspection system in agricultural undertakings with a view to identifying priorities for action and determining appropriate budgetary allocations in relation to the national situation. Such information, which must necessarily include the number of undertakings liable to inspection, is also useful to the Committee to enable it to assess the level of application of the Convention.

The Government is requested to indicate whether the annual assessment of the work of the labour inspection services in agriculture is published as an annual report, as provided for in Article 26 of the Convention. If so, please indicate any comments to which it may have given rise from occupational organizations of employers and workers. If it is not published in that form, please take measures for the publication of the document on a regular basis within the required time-limits.

Mozambique

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government in its report received in September 2009 and in its reply to the previous comments, which reached the Office more recently.

New legislation to protect workers living with HIV/AIDS. The Committee notes with interest the indication by the Government of the adoption of Act No. 12/2009 of 12 March 2009 respecting the rights and duties of persons living with the HIV/AIDS virus, which it indicates defines the necessary prevention, protection and treatment measures. According to the Government, this Act addresses the needs of the persons concerned for protection and makes it possible to combat their stigmatization and discrimination, in accordance with the provisions of article 79(1) of the National Constitution. While noting with concern the information suggesting a significant contamination rate among the personnel of the Ministry of Labour, the Committee however notes that measures have been adopted for the provision of information to public employees and to the public (distribution of condoms and medical treatment to public employees; widespread dissemination of Act No. 5/2002; and distribution of information and advisory pamphlets on medical treatment and nutrition) and that labour inspectors in the north of the country have received training in this field. The Committee also notes with interest that the Ministry has commenced, with ILO support, the revision of the labour inspection manual with a view to helping inspectors address issues related to HIV/AIDS at the workplace. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of Act No. 12/2009 and any text issued thereunder and inform the ILO of the impact of the Act on the operation and results of labour inspection activities in workplaces liable to inspection.

The Government is also requested to provide information on any training provided to inspectors responsible for the application of the above Act (number of inspectors, subjects of the training, duration of courses, etc.), and to provide a copy of the revised manual for the use of inspectors, etc.

Articles 3(1), and 21(a), (b), (d), (e) and (f). Labour inspection staff; activities carried out during 2008 and their results. The Committee notes with interest the efforts made by the Government to compile and communicate in its report detailed information on the activities of the labour inspectorate and their results, despite the inadequacy of the resources available and the distances involved.

Inspection staff, workplaces inspected and workers covered. The Committee observes that in 2008 the inspection staff, composed of 135 employees (inspectors, occupational safety and health experts, controllers, auditors and industrial relations experts) carried out inspections in 5,227 workplaces, thereby exceeding the number of inspections planned (106.49 per cent). According to the Government, these operations addressed compliance with the legislation on all aspects of labour and covered 169,330 workers, including 136,368 men and 25,471 women. A total of 1,187 of the workers concerned were engaged under fixed-term contracts, 11 were miners, 3,138 were national daily workers and 3,095 were foreign workers. The Committee notes with interest the level of detail of this information. With reference to its general observation of 2009, in which it emphasized the need to maintain a register of workplaces liable to inspection as a tool for planning and evaluating inspection activities, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would take measures in cooperation with other Government bodies and institutions in possession of the relevant data with a view to establishing and updating such a register regularly, and if it would keep the ILO informed of the progress achieved in this respect and of any difficulties that may have been encountered.

Number of violations reported. According to the Government, the inspection services reported 8,149 violations of the legislation, issued fines in 2,496 cases (or 30.62 per cent of cases) following written warnings, while 5,653 offences gave rise to warnings in the context of guidance and education activities. Furthermore, during these inspections, the employment relationship of 325 foreign nationals was suspended on the grounds of illegality. The Committee wishes to recall in this respect that, in accordance with the spirit and letter of the Convention, the labour inspectorate should monitor legal provisions respecting conditions of work and the protection of workers, without considering the legal nature of the employment relationship or the status of the worker. The Committee invites the Government to see with reference to this question paragraphs 75 et seq. of its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection and to ensure that the labour inspection services are responsible for ensuring the recovery by workers whose employment relationship is suspended on the grounds of the illegality of their employment of the social entitlements acquired during their employment.

Occupational safety and health. Statistics of industrial accidents. The Committee notes that in 2008 the inspection services were notified of the occurrence of 416 industrial accidents, resulting in 13 deaths, 251 cases of temporary incapacity for work and 106 cases of permanent partial incapacity for work. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted following the most serious accidents with a view to preventing their recurrence. In cases where such measures have not been taken, it would be grateful if the Government would facilitate collaboration between the inspection services, employers and workers (or their respective organizations) with a view to promoting an effective culture of prevention, particularly making use of the means advocated in Part II of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81).

Articles 10(b), 11(1)(b) and (2), and 16. The Committee requests the Government to provide specific information on the equipment and transport facilities available to labour inspectors during the course of 2008 to carry out the programme of inspections, and to describe the measures adopted to ensure that workplaces are inspected as often and as thoroughly as necessary.

It would be grateful if the Government would also indicate the procedures for the reimbursement to labour inspectors of the expenses incurred in professional travel undertaken using their own vehicles.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication and communication to the ILO of an annual labour inspection report. The Committee notes with interest that the statistical data provided by the Government on the operation of the labour inspectorate in 2008 amounts to a substantial part of the information that should be contained in the annual report that has to be published in accordance with Article 20. The information covers the issues set out in clauses (a) (laws and regulations), (b) (staff of the inspection services), (d) (statistics of inspection visits), (e) (statistics of violations and penalties imposed) and (f) (statistics of industrial accidents) of Article 21. The Committee is bound to encourage the Government to pursue its efforts for the establishment and proper functioning of a system of reporting on inspection activities throughout the national territory, including statistics of workplaces liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein (clause (c)) and statistics of occupational diseases (clause (g)). Such a system would make it possible for the central authority to publish an annual report reflecting the operation of the inspection services, their strengths and weaknesses and to determine priorities for action taking into account national possibilities and to make the corresponding budgetary forecasts. The access of employers, workers and their respective organizations to the information contained in the annual report would also enable them to express their opinions with a view to the progressive improvement of the inspection system. Furthermore, the communication of the annual report to the ILO would enable its supervisory bodies to follow on a firm basis the development of the inspection system and to provide support to the Government through their recommendations and advice with a view to the optimal application of the Convention. The Committee invites the Government to refer to Chapter IX of its General Survey with regard to the objectives pursued at both the national and international levels by the provisions of Articles 19, 20 and 21 of the Convention respecting reporting requirements, and requests it to indicate in its next report the measures adopted to give effect to them, the difficulties encountered and the solutions envisaged to overcome them.

Netherlands

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1951)

Further to its previous observation, the Committee takes note of the Government's report containing information in reply to the issues raised by the National Federation of Christian Trade Unions (CNV) in September 2007, and the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) in August 2007 on the new Act on Working Conditions. It also notes the attached unofficial translation of the Act on Working Conditions (Health and Safety), which came into force on 1 January 2007, and the communication by the FNV of further comments received in August 2009 and transmitted to the Government on 16 September 2009.

Impact of the European Framework Directive in the area of occupational safety and health with regard to the application of the Convention

1. The Committee notes the replies provided by the Government to the comments previously made by the CNV, and the FNV on the new Act on Working Conditions. The Committee observes that these comments concerned in essence the difficulties that may arise in the application of the new Act which is based, according to the Government, on the following principles of the European Framework Directive in the area of occupational safety and health (OSH): no additional rules above European Union OSH regulations; legislation should only set aims to be achieved as concretely as possible but should not prescribe the means for achieving them; it is the responsibility of employers and employees to determine how to achieve these aims; less rules and lower administrative burdens and less inspection pressure on companies. The FNV and CNV question the impact of the Act on the conditions of work in terms of: univocal application of the law; equal application of the law regardless of the relative weight of employers and workers' organizations at sector and company levels; the need for continuous improvement of applicable standards; the need to continue to protect workers against conditions of work that undermine their welfare, for instance, through discrimination; and the decline in the number of labour inspectors who will be called upon to verify the application of the Act. The Government replies in essence that the labour inspectorate, regardless of a recent reduction in its staff which is due to a general reduction of the number of civil servants, will be in charge of supervising the univocal and harmonious application of the prevention principles as a minimum and will ensure the continuous improvement of the applicable standards where necessary. It further indicates that prevention with regard to psycho-social aspects, such as working under psychological pressure, stress and violence, is one of the priorities of the labour inspectorate and refers to other legal provisions as concerns the protection against discrimination at work.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information, including statistical data, on the application of the Act on Working Conditions and, in particular, the effect this Act may have on the prevention of occupational accidents and diseases, including psycho-social aspects and related diagnosis. It would also be grateful if the Government could communicate statistics on the staff of the labour inspection service disaggregated by sex and by area of competence (OSH, so-called working conditions, working hours, wages and illegal employment).

2. The Committee also notes the Government's reply to the comments previously made by the Confederation of Netherlands Industry and Employers (VNO–NCW) according to which the so-called "Arie" regulation on working with dangerous substances is too complex and creates a heavy administrative burden. The Government indicates in this regard that the Ministry of Social Affairs and Employment has requested the Social Economic Council (SER) for advice on this regulation and was waiting for it. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would keep the ILO informed of the content of the advice provided by the SER and of any measures taken in order to help the employers to cope with the new requirements set in the new regulation.

3. The Committee finally notes the latest comments made by the FNV in its communication dated 28 August 2009 as to the need for specific training to be provided to labour inspectors in the area of technical skills relating to nanotechnology risks and requests the Government to provide its reply thereto.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Niger

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report received on 19 November 2009.

Need for a labour inspection audit for determining needs and their satisfaction with ILO support and international financial cooperation. In its previous comments, the Committee had taken note of the report of the high-level fact-finding mission which was conducted from 10 to 20 January 2006 by the ILO further to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards of the ILC (May–June 2005), on the application of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), and which was extended to issues of forced labour and slavery. The Committee had noted the need for an audit of the labour inspectorate to determine exactly the type and scope of the inspectorate's needs so that, once that had been carried out, the Government, with the support of the ILO and of other United Nations agencies and concerned donors, could endeavour to mobilize the necessary resources.

Referring to the conclusions of the ILO's high-level fact-finding mission report, where it was underlined that the labour inspectorate is desperately short of the necessary resources to carry out its various missions, in terms of both human resources and material resources, the Committee notes with regret that the Government is confined to indicating in its report that it endeavours to take all necessary measures for the audit to take place as soon as possible and that the Committee would be informed in this regard. It provides no specific information as to any relevant measures taken or envisaged.

Therefore, the Committee is bound to urge once again the Government to take all necessary measures, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, with a view to assembling the logistical and substantive conditions for launching, under ILO auspices, an audit of the labour inspectorate permitting the progressive application of the Convention in accordance with national priorities and requirements.

Norway

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1949)

Articles 5(a), 10, 16, 17 and 18 of the Convention. Increase in the number of labour inspectors and inspection activities. Collaboration of the labour inspection services with the authorities responsible for education and the judicial authorities. Further to its previous request concerning the geographical distribution of inspection staff, the Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government in this respect. In particular, it notes with satisfaction that the numbers of inspectors have increased from 277 in 2007 to 315 in 2008, which has resulted in a significant increase in the number of workplaces inspected.

The Committee also notes with interest that guidelines to ensure uniform practice in relation to violations of the legal provisions covered by the Convention are in force and that there has been a rise in the number of judicial decisions following reported violations as a result of the development of better cooperation between the labour inspectorate, the police and the judicial authorities.

While recognizing that the number of reported offences referred to the police has increased over the past five years, the Norwegian Confederation of Trade Unions (LO) nevertheless considers that the number is low in relation to the number of violations reported by the Government in its report on the application of the Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139). They consisted in particular of failure to comply with the obligation to train workers responsible for certain types of work or to provide personal protective equipment, reported on the occasion of an inspection campaign targeting particularly sensitive branches. The Committee noted in a comment addressed to the Government in 2009 that through appropriate training for labour inspectors, the Labour Inspection Authority has adopted measures to extend the supervision of health risks related to chemicals, and particularly carcinogenic substances and agents, with a view to improving the quality of supervision. The Government has also launched a major campaign in four different sectors with a view to raising competence levels and reducing the risks of infection due to solvents and risks of dermatological and respiratory problems among workers. Furthermore, in its report on Convention No. 139 received by the Office in January 2010, the Government reports significant progress in the field of prevention as reported by the labour inspectorate during a second verification campaign in workplaces in which violations had been identified.

Article 14. Cooperation in the notification of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes with interest in the Government's report relating to the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), that the labour inspectorate has been able to cooperate in the establishment of an electronic hospital register of the accidents treated in all Norwegian hospitals, including a special module for the registration of industrial accidents. However, according to the Government, cases of occupational disease remain under-declared despite the obligation placed on medical practitioners to notify them to the labour inspectorate; nevertheless, the Committee notes with interest that the difficulties relating to the slowness of the manual processing of documents are being resolved through the collaboration of the labour inspectorate with the Norwegian Medical Association for the establishment of an electronic system of reporting based on the electronic patient journal and the secure electronic portal known as "Health Net". The Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of any progress achieved in the communication to the labour inspectorate of data on industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease, the impact of this progress on activities for the prevention of occupational risks in workplaces and their results.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1971)

Article 19 of the Convention. Notification of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. As in its observation on the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Committee notes with interest the establishment of a hospital accident register with a view to the registration in an electronic database of all accidents treated in Norwegian hospitals. The labour inspectorate participated in this process with a view to the establishment of a special module for the recording of industrial accidents. The Committee particularly appreciates the organization of such collaboration with a view to improving the notification and prevention of industrial accidents. The Committee also notes that, according to the Government, cases of occupational disease are still under-declared despite the obligation for medical practitioners to notify them to the labour inspectorate. The Government explains this situation by the current notification procedure which involves a paper version, which is time-consuming for medical practitioners. The Committee notes with interest a project carried out in collaboration with the Norwegian Medical Association for the establishment of an electronic notification procedure based on the electronic patient journal and the secure electronic portal known as "Health Net". The Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of any progress achieved in terms of the provision to the labour inspectorate of data on industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease, the impact of this progress on activities for the prevention of occupational risks in workplaces and their results.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Pakistan

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1953)

The Committee notes the Government's report for the period covering June 2009 to May 2010 received at the ILO on 8 June 2010 which basically contains the same information as the Government's report sent to the ILO in 2007. The Committee equally notes the information contained in the report sent to the ILO by the Government in November 2008, as well as the observations made by the All Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions (APFTU) received on 16 March 2010 and the observations made by the Pakistan Workers Federation (PWF) received on 30 July 2010.

The Committee is well aware of the difficult situation the country is facing, due to the devastating impact of the recent flood. However, it would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the following points.

Labour inspection policy and revision of labour law legislation. According to the report sent by the Government in 2008, a new occupational safety and health bill, based on the approach in the 2006 document on labour inspection policy (LIP 2006) by the Ministry of Labour, Manpower and Overseas Pakistanis (MLMOP), was in the course of being drafted and was expected to be adopted by the end of 2010.

The LIP 2006 document foresees various measures such as the establishment of a central labour inspection authority; the establishment of a computerized register of enterprises; the improvement of material means allocated to labour inspectorates; the establishment of integrative inspections also referred to as “one inspector, one enterprise”; the strengthening of training of labour inspectors; the increase of preventive measures; the recruitment of qualified technical experts and specialists; the increase of protection for workers in the informal economy which constitute 80 per cent of the workforce of the country and which are not covered by labour legislation; the risk assessment of enterprises and workplaces among other things through self-declaration or self-reporting by enterprises and the involvement of private actors in inspection.

According to a 2010 document on labour policy (LP 2010) published on the website of the MLMOP, it is envisaged to revise and consolidate labour legislation, to establish a tripartite council on occupational safety and health (OSH) and tripartite monitoring committees at district, province and federal levels to monitor implementation of labour laws, particularly in the area of payment of wages, working environment and working time.

In relation to labour inspection policy, the Committee notes that, according to the APFTU, “The previous Government has imposed a ban on the inspection of industries by the Labour Department, Social Security Department and Old Age benefits officers, not allowing them to inspect any industrial workplaces or departments.” The trade union adds that: “Accordingly, the Government has given open hand to employers to do whatever they want. Due to this, the previous Government has also given permission to employers to get labour from children and child labour has therefore increased in Pakistan.”

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would communicate any up-to-date documentation on national labour inspection policy and report on any steps taken to implement it.

Please provide information on any developments as regards the adoption of new labour law legislation and, if applicable, communicate a copy of any text thereof. Please also provide information on the intended establishment of the tripartite OSH council and the tripartite monitoring committees mentioned in the LP 2010 document and, if applicable, provide information on their activities and their impact on the operation and outcomes of labour inspection and provide a copy of any relevant document.

The Committee also requests the Government to make any comment deemed relevant on the issue raised by the APFTU.

Article 4 of the Convention. Supervision and control within the labour inspection system. The Government referred in its 2008 report to a review of inspection procedures at the provincial level, focusing particularly on the provincial government of Punjab. It further indicated that inspection visits continue to be under the control of provincial authorities. It indicates in its last report that it is envisaged to establish a national labour inspectorate as the central inspection authority to serve as the focal point for the nation’s inspection activities. The Committee also notes in this regard that the PWF, like other trade unions in the past, regrets once more the persisting absence of a system for supervising application of the legislation in the provinces of Sindh and Punjab. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide the ILO with information on any steps taken following the abovementioned review of the inspection procedures in the provinces of the country.

Please provide detailed information on the structure and organization of the labour inspection system in Punjab and Sindh and on its functioning in practice and, if applicable, a copy of any relevant legal provisions.

Please also provide information as regards the establishment of a national inspection authority and, if applicable, a copy of any relevant legal provisions.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would also make any comment deemed relevant on the points raised by the PWF.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication of annual inspection reports. The Committee recalls that the last annual report has been communicated to the ILO in 1995. It would like to come back to the information contained in the 2006 LIP document which indicates the intention to eventually establish a computerized register of enterprises, by various means such as the conduct of awareness-raising campaigns concerning the registration of workplaces and enterprises, the adoption of penalties for the non-registration with the provincial labour inspectorates, the use of existing data (e.g. information available by tax authorities) and the intended collaboration with trade unions and employers’ organizations to this end. The Committee has underlined, in its 2009 general observation, the essential character of the availability of statistics on industrial and commercial workplaces liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein (Article 10(a)(i) and (ii) and Article 21(c)) and the usefulness of the availability of this data for the determination of the budgetary needs for the determination of the appropriate number of labour inspectors, the necessary material resources for the discharge of their functions (Articles 10, 11 and 16) or the provision of training (Article 7). The Committee asks the Government to endeavour to implement the abovementioned measures and, if applicable, additional measures with a view to establish a register of enterprises. It further asks the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that an annual report on the matters set out in Article 21 of the Convention is published and sent to the ILO. The Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to the guidance provided in Paragraph 9 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), which may serve as a basis for the disaggregation of the information required as well as to the possibility of ILO technical assistance for the establishment of annual inspection reports.

Peru

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the Government's detailed report received at the ILO on 2 September 2009, as well as the documents attached. It also notes the observations made by the General Confederation of Workers of Peru (CGTP), the Single Confederation of Workers of Peru (CUT) and the Autonomous Confederation of Workers of Peru (CATP), dated 31 July 2009 and 1 September 2009 respectively, on the application of the Convention, which the ILO sent to the Government on 16 November 2009. However, the Government has not provided any comments concerning the points raised.

Article 6 of the Convention. Status and conditions of service of labour inspectors. According to the CGTP, the CUT and the CATP, in several regions of the country, labour inspection staff do not benefit from the status and conditions of service guaranteed to other public officials (level of pay and career prospects in particular), which are such that they are assured of stability of employment and are independent of any change of government and any improper external influence. The trade unions indicate that 33 of the 181 labour inspectors are carrying out their duties under temporary administrative service contracts (CAS), even though the career system and the guarantee of job stability should apply to all inspectors under the relevant regulations. Noting these allegations, the Committee notes that sections 6 and 25 of General Labour Inspection Act No. 28806, read in conjunction with section 3 of Supreme Decree No. 021-2007-TR, are in full conformity with the requirements of Article 6 of the Convention. Supreme Decree No. 037-2006-TR, which the trade union organizations emphasize may be amended on a discretionary basis by the Executive Authority, is not available to the ILO. The Committee nonetheless emphasizes that it is essential that the status, level of pay and career prospects of labour inspectors are such that they attract quality staff, retain them and protect them from any improper external influence. These conditions should not only be expressed in law on the basis of legal provisions, but should also be applied in practice. The Committee therefore requests the Government to clarify the status and conditions of service of the staff carrying out labour inspection duties as defined in Article 3(1) of the Convention. It requests it, in any case, to take measures to ensure the full application in both law and practice of Article 6 of the Convention, and to keep the ILO duly informed in this regard.

Article 7(3). Training of labour inspectors. According to the Government, in 2007, 1,394 persons, including inspectors carrying out labour inspection duties, as well as persons belonging to other groups (employers, workers, trade unions, administrative staff), were given various training (relating in particular to occupational safety and health, legislation, the safety and health management system and industrial relations) in the context of a training project promoted by USAID and MYPE Competitiva, with the aim of enabling labour inspectors to carry out their duties more effectively. The Committee notes that it is envisaged to continue and strengthen the training of labour inspectors, especially in matters relating to their new duties and in specific complex areas (freedom of association, outsourcing, forced labour, child labour). The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide further information on the content, frequency and duration of the training given to inspectors in the course of their employment, as well as on the exact number of inspectors concerned in each case.

Articles 10 and 11. Human resources, transport facilities and other means of action available to the labour inspection services. With regard to the number of labour inspectors, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, the Regional Directorate of Labour and Employment Promotion of Lima was strengthened through the appointment of 100 additional inspectors in 2007. It was also envisaged to recruit 100 additional inspectors in 2008, to be deployed across the other regions taking into account the number of enterprises and the size of the economically active population, with the aim of recruiting 250 additional inspectors by 2011. The Committee notes that, according to the CGTP, the CUT and the CATP, labour inspectors usually have to wait around 45 days to be reimbursed for their travelling expenses. Furthermore, the amounts reimbursed do not correspond to the amounts actually spent and are instead calculated and granted on the basis of distance and limited to a maximum of four inspections per day. The Government acknowledges that the National Directorate of Labour Inspection (DNIT) does not have its own means of transport and that the four cars and six lorries allocated to it under Supreme Decree No. 002-2007 were made available to the headquarters of the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion, where they are used by the entire administration. The labour inspection services are therefore forced to call on other units or even use their employees' own private vehicles to carry out inspections in areas where access is difficult. The Government further points out the shortage of protective clothing required for occupational safety and health inspectors as well as measuring equipment required to assess the risks posed to the health of workers, and indicates that some national directorates do not have offices that are suitable for the performance of inspection duties (accessibility, guarantee of confidentiality, etc.). In the Government's view, the labour inspection budget should be increased to enable labour inspectors to carry out their duties more effectively. The Committee emphasizes that it is necessary that the needs to that end are expressed as precisely as possible by means of an assessment detailing the labour inspectorate's current means and its results in relation to the number of workplaces covered (nature of activities, specific risks, geographical location, etc.) and the number and classes of workers employed therein. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take measures to carry out an assessment of the operation of the labour inspectorate and determine the human resources and material means that are necessary for its gradual improvement taking into account priority objectives. It requests it to keep the Office informed of any steps taken to that end and any progress made, as well as any difficulties encountered.

Articles 4, 15(c), 16 and 19. Planning and carrying out of inspections. The Committee notes that, according to the CGTP, the CUT and the CATP, labour inspectors continue to act mainly in response to complaints and not according to a schedule of inspections that takes into account predetermined criteria and allows them to target the branches of activity most exposed to hazards to the health and safety of workers, the legal provisions most liable to violation and the most vulnerable categories of workers. According to the unions, inspections relating to occupational safety and health are rare and, in 2008, these inspections accounted for 6.28 per cent of the total inspections carried out, while the number of inspectors responsible for inspections in this area was reduced by 50 per cent. The unions draw particular attention to the high rate of fatal accidents affecting temporary workers and point out that inspections in the public sector are rare. The Committee recalls that, under Article 16 of the Convention, workplaces should be inspected as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the application of the legal provisions enforceable by the labour inspectorate. Furthermore, it emphasizes that inspections give inspectors the opportunity to supply on-site technical information and advice to employers and workers (Article 3(1)(b)), particularly in matters relating to occupational safety and health, but also in other areas, and to make use of the broad powers of investigation defined in Article 12(1) to ensure the application of the relevant legal provisions. Furthermore, reiterating its 2008 direct request, the Committee once again stresses the need for the labour inspectorate to introduce a combination of different types of inspection (programmed, thematic, in response to a complaint) in order to cover as many workplaces as possible, but also to ensure the principle of confidentiality relating to complaints laid down in Article 15(c). In paragraph 263 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, the Committee recommends a practice of unannounced visits on a regular basis as a means of observing this principle. According to the information contained in the inspectorate's 2007 annual report, 102,123 inspections seem to have targeted several branches of activity that are particularly sensitive with regard to safety and health, such as construction, home work, port work, oil companies, transport and mines. However, the Committee emphasizes that, in order to assess the coverage of the labour inspectorate, it requires not only the number of inspections carried out, but also the number of workplaces visited, and, above all, the number of workplaces liable to inspection across the country. The latter figure is particularly important for the planning of inspection activities. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication in its report that it is envisaged to ensure that, in future, the labour inspectorate develops a proactive approach based on information obtained in collaboration with the tax administration. It also notes with interest, with reference to its general observation of 2009 concerning the inter-institutional cooperation required for the establishment of a register of workplaces, that the labour inspectorate plans to establish broad cooperation with the National Superintendence of Tax Administration (SUNAT), the National Superintendence of Public Registries (SUNARP), the National Registry of Identification and Civil Status (RENIEC), the social security bodies (EsSalud), as well as the Public Sector Pension Fund (ONP) in order to implement the labour inspectorate's integrated computer system (SIIT). It hopes that this will result in a mapping of workplaces which will allow the central labour inspection authority, established under Act No. 28806 on labour inspection, to draw up an appropriate schedule of inspections.

The Committee requests the Government to provide the ILO with its opinion concerning the inadequate coverage of the labour inspectorate with regard to occupational safety and health, as well as information concerning any measures taken to give effect to the above Articles of the Convention.

Articles 12(1)(a) and (c), and 15(c). Scope of the principle of the right of free entry of labour inspectors to workplaces liable to inspection. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, steps have been taken to bring the legislation into conformity with the above provisions of the Convention. However, it notes that, under section 8 of Supreme Decree No. 019-2007-TR amending Act No. 28806 on labour inspection, labour inspectors are authorized, where there is a threat to the life or safety of the workers, to carry out inspections on their own initiative without a prior mission order but that subsequent approval is required to validate the inspection. Consequently, it seems that labour inspectors still do not enjoy the right of free access to workplaces, as defined by Article 12(1). The Committee is therefore bound to emphasize once again that it is essential that labour inspections are not subject to any authorization. Furthermore, the requirement of a mission order containing a description of the purpose of the inspection constitutes an obstacle to the guarantee by inspectors of confidentiality concerning the source of the complaint and the link between the inspection and a complaint (Article 15(c)). Recalling that it has been commenting on the right of labour inspectors to enter freely any workplace liable to inspection for several years (2001, 2004, 2006, 2008), the Committee requests the Government to take measures as soon as possible to bring the legislation and practice into conformity with the Convention on this point, in particular through the repeal of the legal provisions which make inspection visits dependant on an order issued by a higher authority, as well as those providing that the scope and purpose of inspections must be established in advance for all inspection visits. The Committee requests it to provide information in its next report concerning these measures and to provide a copy of any relevant text.

Articles 20 and 21. Noting with interest, following its repeated requests, the provision of a report on the work of the labour inspectorate for 2007, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the useful guidance contained in Paragraph 9 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), concerning the manner in which the information required by Article 21(a)–(g) could be presented and would be grateful if it would take the necessary measures to ensure that an annual report containing the information set out in these provisions is published and communicated to the ILO in the near future.

Portugal

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1962)

Articles 3(1)(a) and (b), 17 and 18 of the Convention. Distribution of inspection activities between the objectives of prevention and enforcement. Further to its previous comment concerning the observations made by the Confederation of Portuguese Industry (CIP), the Confederation of Trade and Services of Portugal (CCSP), the Portuguese Confederation of Tourism (CTP), the General Confederation of Portuguese Workers – National Trade Unions (CGTP–IN) and the General Workers' Union (UGT) concerning the priorities to be given to labour inspection activities, the Committee notes the Government's indication to the effect that a project for the creation and development of a new website was launched on 12 May 2008. This new site for the Authority for Conditions of Work (ACT) includes the preparation of new explanatory files and the restructuring of the format. In a communication received on 14 September 2009, the UGT repeats its observations and indicates that combating fraud and violations of the legislation must be a priority and the inspection services must be reinforced accordingly. The Committee requests the Government to send any comments that it may wish to make in reply to the observations from the UGT and to supply any relevant information concerning the development of the abovementioned website.

Article 5(a). Effective cooperation between the inspection services and other government services. The Committee notes with interest the indication to the effect that as regards effective cooperation between the inspection services and other government services and, in particular, judicial bodies, the courts inform the ACT of the judgments and other decisions that they issue. In this respect, the Committee notes the numerous court decisions attached to the Government's report. Some decisions are analysed by the ACT services with a view to a possible review not only of the evaluation criteria used in cases of infringement but also of the inspection procedures themselves. The law enables the courts to have recourse to the ACT when they consider that to be useful for resolving a matter and taking an appropriate decision, and a member of the labour inspection staff may attend hearings in this context. In this regard, Act No. 101 of 12 May 2009 approving the procedure applicable to employment relations and social security strengthens the participation of the ACT in judicial procedures. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply copies of relevant court decisions as well as any information concerning the strengthening of effective cooperation between the inspection services and other government services, in particular, the judicial bodies.

Article 7. Strengthening the inspection services. Adequate training. In its abovementioned communication the CIP indicates that the ACT should focus on education and information rather than enforcement. As regards strengthening the inspection services, particularly through training, the Committee notes that in 2007 the ACT established 32 programmes of further vocational training. Two training courses were concerned with the computerized system for registering labour inspection activities, another training course was concerned with digital tachographs in road transport, and 13 courses were concerned with occupational safety and health. The remaining courses mainly dealt with machinery and equipment (4), manual handling of loads (4), safety in the construction industry (3), road transport (4) and the prevention of electrical risks. In 2008, a total of 46 programmes were established, including six on the computerized system for the registration of labour inspection activities, four on road transport, two on the participation of minors in performances and other artistic activities, four on temporary work and four on occupational safety and health in agriculture and forestry. The remaining courses mainly dealt with the manual handling of loads (7), machinery and equipment (3), undeclared work and other forms of illegal work (4), exposure to asbestos at work (4), physical hazards (4) and chemical hazards (4). The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on any measure or initiative for strengthening the inspection services. It also requests the Government to indicate the impact, if any, of the training given on inspectors' working methods and their capacity for detecting infringements of the labour legislation.

Articles 10 and 16. Numbers of inspection staff and inspection visits. The Committee notes the new observations made by the CIP and UGT concerning numbers of inspection staff and inspection visits. The CIP indicates that, according to the information available on this subject, the number of inspections increased between 2003 and 2007 (from 40,083 to 60,989) and then decreased between 2007 and 2008 (from 65,284 to 60,989). The number of fatal and non-fatal industrial accidents also decreased. The UGT reiterates that the inspection services must be reinforced in order to make them more effective. During the tripartite discussions which took place concerning a new system of labour relations, the UGT indicated its wish to see the commitment to strengthen the effectiveness of the labour legislation made a reality, declaring that the making of this commitment was an essential prerequisite for the conclusion of any agreement. The union emphasizes that the Government has kept its promise to boost staff numbers by employing a total of 400 inspectors by the end of 2009 and guaranteeing an increase in the future in order to maintain staffing levels, as well as undertaking to increase the number of technicians and/or administrative staff by recruiting at least 50 persons per year in 2009, 2010 and 2011. The UGT hopes that the expected staff recruitment will indeed take place in line with the agreement concluded. In this respect the Committee notes the information supplied by the Government to the effect that, as at 31 December 2008, the ACT comprised 311 labour inspectors, including 39 with managerial and supervisory duties and eight performing their work within other structures. A notice of 19 July 2007 announced the opening of an external competition for entry to occupational training with a view to taking up a post as labour inspector. Accordingly, 150 trainees were admitted to the inspectorate on 11 May 2009, thereby increasing the number of serving inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on any measure or initiative taken with a view to strengthening the numbers of labour inspectors. It also requests the Government to supply up-to-date information on the number of inspectors, trainees, technicians and administrative staff currently in service.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes the Government's report received by the ILO on 14 September 2009.

Articles 6(1)(a) and (b), and 22–24 of the Convention. Inspection activities in relation to prevention, prosecution and penalties for infringements. Further to its previous comments on this point, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its observation made in connection with Article 3(1)(a) and (b) and Articles 17 and 18 of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81). The Committee further notes the observations made by the General Union of Workers (UGT) received on 14 September 2009 and attached to the Government's report, which reiterate, as in 2005 and 2007, that the situation in agriculture does not appear to have changed. There is still a large number of small agricultural enterprises, especially family enterprises, and this makes the task of enforcement difficult. Whatever the action taken, it still remains inadequate in a sector as specific as agriculture. In this regard the Committee notes the information contained in the annual report on the work of the Authority for Conditions of Work (ACT) for 2008, which contains some information on this sector. The Government indicates that 98 inspections in relation to safety and health were conducted in agriculture, giving rise to 15 reports of infringements. The annual report also indicates that 7.5 per cent of fatal accidents took place in agriculture.

As regards enforcement and prevention measures taken by the labour inspectorate in agriculture, particularly pursuant to EU occupational safety and health strategies, the Committee notes that the strategy adopted at national level is principally concerned with: (1) the coherence and effectiveness of public policies, resulting from the linkage which exists between the various departments of the administration; and (2) the promotion of safety and health in the workplace. According to the Government, the task of the labour inspectorate is very general and mainly covers two essential areas, namely occupational safety and health and industrial relations. However, another task of the labour inspectorate is to promote and enforce the application of laws which transpose the provisions of EU directives into the national legislation. The Committee notes that in 2007 a plan to promote decent work and a reduction in occupational accidents and diseases was established with a focus on the sectors where the mortality rate is particularly high, including agriculture. The plan established for 2008–10 provides for action by the labour inspectorate in the areas of risk evaluation and prevention and the promotion of occupational safety and health, particularly in small enterprises. This plan also includes inspections in agriculture. These entail prevention and enforcement of the occupational safety and health provisions in this sector and also relate to plant and equipment, movement of persons, exposure of workers to risks arising from chemical and biological agents, information for and training of workers, and responsibility in the event of industrial accidents. While noting this information, the Committee notes that the report on the work of the ACT for 2008 only contains very general information with regard to agriculture, which still focuses on occupational safety and health without taking account of the other areas which should be covered by enforcement and prevention. In view of the specific features of this sector, the Committee again requests the Government to supply more detailed information in this area, and to ensure that information on enforcement and prevention activities appear in a distinct manner in the annual report.

Articles 9(3) and 14. Reinforcement of inspection staff numbers and training in agriculture. As regards the content of the training given in 2005 and 2006, the Committee notes that the objective of this training was to enable labour inspectors to identify the main occupational hazards and preventive measures to be taken and also to use inspection service procedures while taking account of the specific features of the agricultural sector. The Committee notes that in 2008 other training was given with the same objectives in the forestry and stock-rearing sectors. This training was mainly concerned with the risks arising from the use of equipment, forestry operations, the use of pesticides and other chemical products, treatment of animals, handling and storage of waste and of cereals and fodder. The training programme also included preparedness for situations involving serious and imminent danger, the identification of risk prevention measures with reference to the applicable legislation, and the preparation, implementation and expansion of inspections in this regard.

As regards inspection staff, the Committee refers to its observation made in connection with Articles 10 and 16 of Convention No. 81. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any new measures or initiatives taken or contemplated for reinforcing the inspection services in agriculture. It also requests the Government to supply information on the impact of the abovementioned training on the working methods of inspectors and their capacity for detecting infringements and preventing accidents.

Article 27. Content of the annual inspection report. The Committee notes that, according to the annual report of the ACT, 615 inspections were conducted in 2008 in 564 undertakings, resulting in 57 cautions and 181 reports of infringements, which differ from the figures quoted above. As regards the regions of the Azores and Madeira, the Committee notes that the report on inspection activities in the Azores does not contain any information on the agricultural sector and that the report on inspection activities in Madeira will be sent in due course. The Committee requests the Government to supply detailed statistics on the inspection activities of the ACT in agriculture on the mainland and also in the regions of the Azores and Madeira. It also requests the Government to indicate the reasons for the difference between the figures supplied by the Government in its report and those contained in the annual report of the ACT for 2008.

Qatar

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes the Government's report, received in the ILO on 2 September 2009, in reply to its previous comments and the attached statistics on labour inspection.

Articles 5(a) and 21(e) of the Convention. Effective cooperation between the labour inspectorate and the justice system. With reference to its general observation of 2007 in which it emphasized the value of effective cooperation between the labour inspectorate and the judiciary, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, such cooperation is carried out through an exchange of information, statistics and other data between the inspectorate and the High Judicial Council. However, the Government does not provide examples of the precise purpose and the manner in which the information exchanged is used. The Committee nevertheless notes that it is planned to establish a system for the registration of Court rulings, which would be accessible to the labour inspectorate.

While noting the provision of certain statistical data on the prosecutions initiated by the labour inspectorate as a result of workers' complaints in 2006 and 2007, the Committee however notes that the data provided does not allow for any analysis, as elementary details are missing, such as the subject of the complaints, the legal provisions concerned and the nature of the court rulings. For example, an indication is provided that 415 of the 1,260 prosecutions referred to the courts in 2007 were set aside, without any explanation of the grounds for their dismissal. To be analysed and exploited, statistics should reflect an object and precise results. Analysis of the statistics on prosecutions following labour inspections should make it possible to verify whether they are mainly targeted at conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, as envisaged by Article 3(1)(a), of the Convention, determine whether their dismissal was due to procedural errors attributable to labour inspectors, in which case measures would need to be taken to provide relevant training to the latter, and to ensure that court rulings correspond to the objectives of labour inspection and, if this is not the case, to develop measures to raise the awareness of magistrates concerning the importance of the socio-economic role of labour inspection. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take measures to establish cooperation between the labour inspection services and the judiciary so as to improve the effectiveness and credibility of labour inspection and allow publication in the annual inspection report of informative statistics and information on the impact of these activities. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would keep the ILO informed of any progress in this regard.

Article 12(1). Extent of the right of labour inspectors to enter freely premises and workplaces liable to inspection. In its previous comment, the Committee emphasized, as it did in paragraph 267 of its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection, that the fact that "the instruments provide that inspectors should be authorized to enter workplaces without previous notice does not mean that, where deemed useful or necessary by the inspector, the employer or his or her representative cannot be informed of the time and purpose of the inspection". The Committee hopes that the Government will review its viewpoint on the meaning and scope of Article 12(1), of the Convention and accordingly take measures to amend section 7 of Ministerial Order No. 13 of 2005 in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the spirit and letter of the Convention on this point and that, while being authorized to carry out inspections freely and without notice, labour inspectors will also be able to inform the employer of their inspection or its purpose where they consider that such notification is useful or necessary for the effective supervision envisaged.

Article 15(c). Obligation to treat as confidential the existence of a complaint. While noting the legal provisions ensuring compliance by labour inspectors with the obligation of confidentiality in relation to the author of a complaint giving rise to an inspection, the Committee wishes to emphasize once again that the Government should ensure that these provisions are supplemented so that where, during an inspection carried out in response to a complaint, the inspector may decide not to inform the employer or his representative of the existence of such a complaint and proceed to carry out an investigation of the complaint in full discretion. Such a provision would have the effect of ensuring the protection of those lodging complaints by any reprisals from the employer or his representative.

Articles 14 and 21(f) and (g). Notification and statistics of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease and the prevention of their recurrence. The Committee notes with interest that statistics of industrial accidents which occurred in 2008 are presented under the nationality of the victims, age group, cause, part of the body injured and resulting incapacity rate.

However, it observes that no information is provided with regard to cases of occupational diseases.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the objective that is pursued through the criteria for the statistical identification of victims and of the factors of industrial accidents, with an indication of whether, and in what manner, such an objective is achieved.

The Committee also requests the Government to provide the statistics that are available of cases of occupational diseases and to ensure that such statistics are included in the annual labour inspection report and are used with a view to developing a relevant prevention policy. It would be grateful if the Government would provide information in its next report on any progress achieved in this respect and on any measures adopted to ensure the follow up of cases of occupational diseases among migrant workers, who make up the majority of the workforce engaged in workplaces liable to inspection.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication and content of the annual labour inspection report. While taking due note of the brief statistical data provided by the Government in the annex to its report, the Committee wishes to recall the importance that it attaches to compliance with the obligation of the publication and communication by the central inspection authority, within the time limits set out in Article 20, of an annual report containing useful information on each of the items covered by Article 21. Indeed, assessment of the level of application of the Convention is only possible where, in addition to legislative information, the Committee also has access to precise information on the application of the legislation in practice. Presented as suggested in Paragraph 9 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), (inspection staff, workplaces liable to inspection, persons employed therein, statistics of inspection visits, violations, penalties imposed, industrial accidents and occupational diseases), such information would also shed light on the operation of the labour inspection system in relation to the requirements of the Convention and would enable the central authority to determine priorities for action and the corresponding resources. With reference to its general observation of 2009 concerning the importance of establishing and updating a register of workplaces liable to labour inspection, containing information on the number and categories of workers employed therein (Article 21(c)), the Committee particularly requests the Government to ensure that measures are taken to ensure that the annual report contains such information which is indispensable for assessing the effective coverage of the inspection system in relation to the industrial and commercial workplaces liable to inspection. It would be grateful if the Government would provide information on any progress achieved in this respect.

The Committee requests the Government to ensure that, in any case, the central labour inspection authority publishes and communicates to the ILO, within the time limits set out in Article 20, a report on the activities undertaken by the services placed under its control and supervision, containing the information required by Article 21, and presented in so far as possible as indicated in Paragraph 9 of Recommendation No. 81.

Rwanda

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1980)

Articles 1, 4, 6, 7, 10, 11, 16, 19, 20 and 21 of the Convention. Application of the Convention in the framework of the decentralization of labour inspection. The Committee takes note of Act No. 13/2009 of 27 May 2009 on regulating labour in Rwanda which contains provisions on the functions and powers of labour inspectors.

In its previous comments, the Committee expressed concern at the risk of weakening the labour inspection system following the decentralization of its functions and responsibilities as long as the decentralization was not accompanied by the transfer of corresponding resources, as well as by measures ensuring equal protection for the workers concerned throughout the territory.

The Committee notes that according to the Government's report: (i) the state budget for labour inspectors has been decentralized at district level and is now determined at that level; (ii) labour inspectors at district level, currently in the number of one inspector per district, are placed under the supervision of the prefect or the mayor; (iii) the labour inspectorate is to remain "dependent" on the Labour Directorate at national level (section 157 of Act No. 13/2009) which is in fact composed of a single National Labour Inspector and has an obligation to assist labour inspectors through capacity building, technical supervision, training, transport, logistical facilities and communication; and (iv) the recruitment of labour inspectors is to take place at district level.

The Committee observes once again with concern that such a reform contravenes seriously the requirements of the Convention, in particular with regard to important provisions such as Articles 1, 4, 19, 20 and 21, since in each district a single labour inspector is placed under a local authority which does not have the specific competence necessary to supervise technically or ethically the performance of labour inspection activities.

With regard to Articles 10 and 11 of the Convention relating to human resources and material means to allow an efficient functioning of the labour inspection system, the Committee once again recalls that according to paragraph 140 of the 2006 General Survey, the decentralization of the labour inspection system (in the form of the designation of a central authority in each constituent unit of a federal State) may be acceptable under Article 4 only if these units have the budgetary resources necessary for implementing the functions of the labour inspectorate within their respective jurisdictions. In this case, the decentralization of labour inspection means its dismantlement as it happens in the framework of a situation characterized by a general and chronic inadequacy of resources, with the risk that available resources differ substantially from one province to another, thus influencing not only the volume and quality of inspection activities, but also the ability of inspectors and local inspection offices to fulfil their obligations to report to the Minister, as envisaged in Article 19, so as to allow for the exercise of his/her prerogatives in respect of supervision for the purposes of a general assessment through the annual report requested by Articles 20 and 21. Finally, any instruction of a policy or technical nature addressed by the Minister of Labour to the provincial labour inspectors with a view, among other things, to ensuring consistency among provinces, strongly risks remaining a dead letter in case the budget allocated to labour inspection depends on the decision of the local prefect or mayor.

The Committee also emphasizes that the provision of adequate budgetary resources is essential to ensuring that inspection staff is composed of public officials whose status and conditions of service are such that they are assured of stability of employment and are independent of changes of government and of improper external influences (Article 6).

The Committee requests the Government to take all necessary measures without delay for the establishment of a functioning system of labour inspection placed under the control of a central authority and endowed with resources determined on the basis of a needs assessment (number and geographical distribution of workplaces liable to labour inspection, numbers of the workforce occupied therein, major branches of activities, etc.) in the framework of the national budget and, where needed, by recourse to external cooperation. The Committee requests the Government to report in detail to the ILO on the measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 14 of the Convention. Information on industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes the Government's commitment, in response to its previous comments, to making every possible effort to ensure that the labour inspectorate is informed of industrial accidents and occupational diseases. It asks the Government to provide in its next report information on the procedures introduced and the specific measures taken to this effect.

Articles 19, 20 and 21. Inspection activity reports. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on measures taken to ensure the publication and communication to the ILO of an annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate. It therefore asks the Government to take, in the very near future and with ILO technical assistance if necessary, measures to ensure that the central inspection authority fulfils its obligations under Articles 20 and 21, on the basis of regular inspection reports submitted to it, in accordance with Article 19, by the services under its control. The Committee asks the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress made in this respect and to provide in its next report any available information on inspection visits carried out during the period covered and on the results of these visits (including, in particular, details of the number and categories of inspected establishments, the contraventions reported, the measures prescribed, and the penalties imposed and effectively enforced).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Saudi Arabia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report and its annexes, received on 18 September 2009, including the annual report of the work of the labour inspectorate for the period 2008–09.

Article 21 of the Convention. Content of the annual labour inspection report. The Committee notes with interest that the provisions of the Labour Law promulgated by Royal Decree No. M/51 dated 23 Sha'ban 1426 (27 September 2005) and published in 2006, relating to work inspection (sections 194–209), are in full compliance, in particular, with the spirit and the letter of the provisions of Articles 3, 4, 6, 7, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19 and 21 of the Convention. However, the Committee remarks that the annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate still does not contain statistics on specific violations committed and penalties imposed (Article 21(e)), despite the relevant provision of section 206(5) of the Labour Law. Such information is essential to allow an assessment of the level of compliance with the Convention, as it is designed to indicate whether the labour inspection activities mainly focus on the enforcement of the legal provisions pertaining to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, as provided for by Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. According to a summary of the annual report on the achievement of the labour inspection for 1430H (2009), published via the Government's web site, the majority of the violations reported related to sections 25, 33, 36 and 38 of the Labour Law, especially with regard to employment, use of expatriate workers by their employers in professions different from the ones specified in their work permits, use of expatriate workers by another employer than the one indicated in their work permit, delay of payment of salaries, absence of by-law in the enterprises, non-recruitment of Saudi nationals in the positions foreseen in the law or non-application of the rules on occupational safety and health. It is also indicated that the labour inspectors participate in the inspection activities, along with other government agencies such as the special committees entrusted with verifying the employment of Saudi nationals in certain activities and professions, or other committees entrusted with the improvement of certain aspects of the labour market. This seems to indicate that relevant data are available and could be included in the annual report as provided by section 206(3) of the Labour law, in line with Article 21(e) of the Convention. Accordingly, the Committee asks the Government once again to make every endeavour to ensure that the annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate contains detailed statistics on the violations committed and the penalties imposed, according to the guidance provided in part IV of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81).

Also referring to its General Observation of 2009, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would take the steps necessary to ensure that statistics of workplaces liable to labour inspection and the number of the workers employed therein (Article 21(c)) are included in the annual report, so as to allow for an assessment of the coverage of the labour inspection services throughout the whole country.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Senegal

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes the observations made by the National Federation of Independent Trade Unions of Senegal (UNAS) on the application of this Convention, received by the ILO on 2 June 2010.

Strengthening of the labour inspection system through the creation of a medical labour inspection service. Further to its previous comments in which it noted that a medical labour inspection service had been institutionalized by Decree No. 2006-1253 of 15 November 2006, the Committee notes that this body has still not been set up. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the reasons for the delay in implementing the text creating a medical labour inspection service and keep the Office informed of any concrete measures taken to give effect to that text.

Article 13(2)(b), of the Convention. Measures with immediate executory force in the event of imminent danger to the health or safety of the workers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the need to revise the legislation to give full effect to Article 13(2)(b), of the Convention. It notes that, according to the Government, Decree No. 2006-1253 of 15 November 2006 does not prevent labour inspectors from adopting measures with immediate executory force in the event of imminent danger to the health or safety of the workers, including where no violation has taken place. Referring in this regard to sections 6-11 (concerning enforcement orders) and sections 18-22 (concerning urgent procedures and work stoppages) of that Decree, the Government states that inspectors have the power to adopt such measures regardless of the type of activity carried out by the enterprise concerned, but that it is nonetheless considering updating the Decree. However, the Committee notes that the labour inspector may apply to the judge for an urgent procedure under section 18 only in cases where a worker's physical integrity might be seriously undermined as a result of a failure to observe the occupational safety and health legal provisions and regulations. Furthermore, under sections 19 and 20 of the same Decree, the labour inspector may order a work stoppage in the event of a serious and imminent danger resulting from a shortcoming in or failure of protection only in the case of establishments in which the staff are involved in construction work, public works or any other works on buildings, and only where the situation constitutes a violation of the legal provisions in force. The Committee is bound to emphasize that, in accordance with the letter and spirit of Article 13(2)(b), of the Convention, the exercise of this power should not be subject to any distinction based on the type of activity or work concerned. It requests the Government to refer to paragraph 112 of its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection.

The Committee therefore requests the Government once again to take steps to amend the legislation so that it is in full conformity with Article 13(2)(b), of the Convention, according to which labour inspectors should be able to order or recommend measures with immediate executory force in the event of imminent danger to the health or safety of the workers, regardless of the branch of activity, the type of work carried out and whether or not there has been a violation of the legal provisions or regulations.

Articles 18 and 21(e) of the Convention. Adequate nature and effective enforcement of penalties for violations. The Committee notes the figures on the action taken by labour inspectors (written observations (154), enforcement orders (20), reports (0), interruption of works (0) and urgent procedures (0)). It notes that the period covered is not indicated, which makes it impossible to assess the volume of activity of the inspection services over time or the type of violations reported. Furthermore, these figures are of no use in determining the action taken with a view to improving the level of application of the relevant legislation. The Government's indication that four enforcement orders were issued in 2008 provides no further clarification and is not accompanied by any information establishing that penalties were imposed on the persons responsible for the violations reported. The Committee notes with concern that, according to the Government, no measures to update the scale of penalties are envisaged and that the only text applicable in this regard is Decree No. 62-017 PC/MFPT/DGTSS/TMO of 22 January 1962. Further to its previous comments concerning the need to ensure the dissuasive nature of the penalties, the Committee requests the Government to refer to paragraphs 291-306 of the abovementioned General Survey and to take measures as a matter of urgency to ensure the establishment of an effective system of penalties taking into account the nature and seriousness of the violation committed, as well as, according to the circumstances, the employer's general attitude towards its legal obligations. The Committee requests the Government to describe the measures taken and to provide the most detailed figures possible on the violations reported, the measures implemented by labour inspectors and their impact in relation to the application of the legislation and occupational safety and health requirements.

Article 5(a). Cooperation between the labour inspection services and the justice system. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the cooperation between the labour inspection system and the judicial system is in the process of being strengthened with a view to improving the processing of cases. The Government mentions, however, the difficulties encountered by the inspection services in accessing the registration system for court decisions, but points out that, in response to the Committee's 2007 general observation, educational and informative training has been provided for labour inspectors and judges with a view to increasing awareness of the cooperation between the systems.

The Committee notes with regret that the information provided by the Government remains vague with regard to the content of the training and insufficient for the purpose of making any assessment of the impact of the measures taken. Furthermore, it is not even indicated whether measures aimed at facilitating access to court decisions by the labour inspectorate are envisaged.

Referring to its 2007 general observation, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures implemented to promote effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the justice system, as well as on the impact of these measures in terms of court decisions.

Articles 6, 7, 10 and 11. Labour inspectorate staff, status and qualifications; means available for carrying out inspection duties. The Committee notes that the labour inspectorate is currently staffed by 57 inspectors and 63 controllers covering the entire country. The Government indicates in its report that the pay and career prospects of inspectors is a matter under consideration. According to the UNSAS, the working conditions of labour inspectors and controllers are clearly inadequate in view of the duties that they are required to carry out and they lack the necessary means of transport to carry out regular inspections of establishments. The Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of the process of adopting the status and conditions of service of labour inspectors, as well as of any measures taken in this regard. It would be grateful if the Government would in any case take measures to ensure that the functions of labour inspector and controller are sufficiently appealing to attract and retain qualified persons within the inspection services and that the conditions of service of inspection staff are at least equivalent to those applicable to other categories of public officials with comparable duties and responsibilities, such as finance and tax inspectors.

The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that labour inspectors and controllers have the material resources and transport facilities required to carry out their duties and to keep the Office informed of any progress made in this regard, as well as any difficulties encountered.

Article 12(1)(a) and (2). Investigation powers of inspectors. In this regard, the Government refers to its reply contained in its previous report. The Committee is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments as follows:

The Government specifies in its report that, in both law and practice, labour inspectors and controllers are entitled to enter freely any workplace liable to inspection at any hour of the day and night, irrespective of whether or not collective work is being carried out there, as their right to enter an establishment does not depend on the nature of its work. However, according to section L.197(1) and (2) of the Labour Code, "labour and social security inspectors shall be authorized to enter freely, at any hour of the day, any workplace liable to inspection ... " and "at night, in premises where collective work is being carried out". The Committee therefore feels bound to request the Government once again to take the necessary measures to bring the labour legislation into conformity with Article 12(1)(a), of the Convention, to ensure that inspectors might freely enter establishments liable to inspection, irrespective of their type of activity, and not only during the day but also at night.

In its previous comments, the Committee had also requested the Government to amend section L.197(1), in fine, which states that "the head of the enterprise or establishment, or his representative, may accompany the labour and social security inspector during the inspection", because it hinders the freedom of action to which the inspector should be entitled during his visit. While noting the Government's comments that the fact of being accompanied during an inspection by the employer or his representative is a legal option open to the labour inspectors and controllers, the Committee nevertheless points out that the actual wording of this section of the Labour Code gives the choice to the employer (or his representative) and not to the inspector, although it should be for the inspector to decide whether or not to be accompanied during his visit in the exercise of his duties, as prescribed by the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government once again to take the necessary measures to amend the Labour Code so that the labour inspector might be authorized to decide whether the employer should accompany him on his visit or not, and that he might exercise his right to interrogate the staff alone, pursuant to Article 12(c)(i) of the Convention, thereby guaranteeing the respect of the principle of confidentiality with respect to the workers (Article 15(c)). Finally, noting that, according to the Government, the labour inspector is free to decide whether he notifies the employer or not of his visit, the Committee requests it to ensure that this right, as defined under Article 12(2) of the Convention, is given a legal basis.

Articles 10, 20 and 21. Basic information required to assess the functioning of the labour inspectorate in practice: statistics of industrial and commercial workplaces liable to inspection and number of workers covered. In its 2009 general observation, the Committee stressed the importance of keeping a register of the workplaces and enterprises liable to inspection, containing data on the number and categories of workers employed therein. The Committee requests the Government to take due account of its 2009 general observation and to provide the Office with information on the measures taken to ensure that a register of the workplaces liable to inspection is created as well as on the results achieved.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual report on the labour inspection activities. The Committee notes the preparation of an annual report by the labour statistics service. It reminds it of the dual obligation to ensure that the central labour inspection authority publishes an annual report and transmits that report to the ILO, as provided for by the above Articles of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take every measure necessary to ensure the publication and communication of such report by the central inspection authority within the prescribed time limits (in Article 20) and further reminds it that this report should contain the information required on the matters listed in Article 21. Part IV of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), contains very useful guidance on the manner in which this information could be presented so as to reflect, as faithfully as possible, the functioning of the labour inspectorate, including its strengths and weaknesses, and provide a basis for determining the budgetary, organizational and educational measures required to enhance its effectiveness.

Serbia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the Government's report received on 22 September 2009, in response to its previous comments.

Article 3(1)(a) and (c) and (2) of the Convention. Action against illegal employment, and monitoring of legislation relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the labour inspectorate's priority for a number of years had been the fight against illegal employment and emphasized that the exercise of such a function by the labour inspectorate should have as its corollary the reinstatement of the statutory rights of all the workers in order to be compatible with the objective of labour inspection. The Committee notes the Government's statement in its latest report to the effect that the fight against illegal labour is part of the European Union Accession Strategy and the Strategy on Poverty Reduction and focuses on industries where unregistered workers – mostly young and unqualified workers or older workers over 40 years – are most dominant (hotel/restaurant/cafe and tourism, trade, civil engineering and artisan and personal services). The Government adds that illegal employment is primarily due to a transition from public companies towards a huge number of small and medium-sized private enterprises, which has led to an aggravation of working conditions, often with regard to high-risk jobs (e.g. engineering). This is why the Government is of the view that it is important to carry out regular and intensified inspection. The Government specifies that, where illegal employment has been detected, the employer is ordered to sign employment contracts and charges are pressed against employers in cases where more than one irregular worker is hired; as a result, the number of signed employment contracts and workers reported for compulsory social security coverage usually increases after the inspection is carried out. In order to address key legislative obstacles in this regard, the labour inspectorate has, among other things, proposed amendments to applicable regulations that would require the registration of signed employment contracts and improve the procedure for registration of workers in compulsory social security schemes under section 144 of the Pension and Disability Insurance Act.

Taking due note of the Government's statement that the fight against illegal employment aims among other things at the "formalization" of employment relations so as to prevent a deterioration of conditions of work and that this has led to an increase of the number of signed employment contracts and workers reported for compulsory social security coverage, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide statistical data illustrating the improvements made in the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers through the activities of the labour inspectorate in the framework of the fight against illegal employment.

Article 3(1)(b). Preventive role of the labour inspectorate in the field of occupational safety and health. The Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government on various activities relative to cooperation with services and institutions dealing with prevention during the period under review, including the organization of 15 round tables on risk assessment throughout the country from 20 to 24 October 2008, with an active participation of representatives from trade unions, employers' organizations, chambers of commerce, and experts in the area of occupational safety and health (OSH). The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide information on any action relative to cooperation with all the services and institutions dealing with prevention, including the social partners, the intensification of media campaigns, particularly in high-risk sectors, and the development of promotional material for public information.

Recalling that in its previous comments the Committee had welcomed the implementation of a new policy regarding health and safety in small and medium-sized enterprises, according to which regular inspection visits would focus on prevention through information and education, the Committee also requests the Government to indicate the part of regular inspection visits targeted at small and medium-sized enterprises, and to provide information on information and education campaigns addressed at such enterprises.

Articles 5(a) and 18. Effective cooperation of labour inspection services with government institutions and with the judicial system. Adequate penalties imposed and effectively enforced. In its previous comments, the Committee referred to comments by the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia, according to which the system of penalties against employers is not efficient. The Committee notes that the Government refers in its latest report to the pronouncement of sentences far below the minimum foreseen by the law which constitutes an obstacle to the proper and full application of the penal provisions envisaged under the Labour Law and the Law on Safety and Health at Work (OSH Law). The Government's report also refers to the need to accelerate judicial procedures so as to overcome related problems with regard to the statute of limitations.

According to the Government, the labour inspectorate organized expert meetings and consultations between the labour inspectorate and bodies responsible for criminal prosecution in Serbia, both at the first instance and at the level of the Council for Criminal Offences. The need to further intensify the cooperation between these bodies was underlined in these meetings with a view to overcoming problems in the duration of the criminal procedures and the amount of the penalties imposed. The importance of exchange of data between municipal bodies and prosecution councils on the collection of fines was also stressed so as to ensure the harmonization and alignment of databases and monitor the economic effects of inspections as well as the efficiency of penal policy. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide statistical data on the average duration of proceedings and the average amount of penalties imposed for violations of the Labour Law and the OSH Law as well as information on the impact of the steps taken in order to overcome problems in the duration of proceedings, the amount of fines and their effective enforcement. The Committee would also like to request the Government to continue to provide information on any further steps taken or envisaged in order to ensure effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the judicial authorities.

According to the Government, in 2008, 60 requests for the institution of criminal proceedings were filed by the labour inspectorate in relation to offences which apparently concerned only the area of OSH. Recalling that the functions of the labour inspectorate are not limited to the enforcement of the OSH legislation (the OSH Law) but also include the enforcement of legal provisions and advice relating to the conditions of work under the Labour Law, the Committee requests the Government to specify in its next report the manner in which the labour inspectorate addresses violations of legal provisions on hours of work, wages, the employment of children and young persons and other connected matters and the number of proceedings instituted for such violations.

Article 7(3). Adequate initial and further training of labour inspectors. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the comments of the Union of Employers of Serbia, according to which, following the restructuring of the labour inspectorate as a single body, labour inspectors were not provided with adequate training to perform both legal and technical supervision. According to the Government's report, the labour inspectorate launched in 2008 a modernization process to be delivered through internal training in three phases so as to enable labour inspectors to undertake integrated inspections. In this framework, an inspection methodology was designed and all inspectors gained adequate knowledge in areas in which they had not yet performed inspections (e.g. engineers in the field of labour relations, lawyers in the field of safety and health at work, etc.). The Committee would be grateful if the Government would communicate additional information as to the number of participants in the training sessions, their duration, the topics covered and the evaluation of the results. It also requests the Government to continue to furnish information on further periodical training for labour inspectors.

Articles 12(1) and 18. Penalties for obstructing labour inspectors in the performance of their duties, particularly with regard to their right of free entry in establishments. In its previous comments, the Committee took note of comments by the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia, according to which labour inspectors were occasionally denied the right to enter a workplace for inspection purposes, particularly in new private enterprises. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the 2005 Labour Law and the 2005 OSH Law contain an obligation for the employer to allow the labour inspector to access facilities and premises at any time when occupied by workers, and, should it occur that the labour inspector is prevented from undertaking inspections, the labour inspectorate should address the Ministry of the Interior, which will enable unobstructed inspection with the assistance of the police. Keeping in mind that section 273(10) of the Labour Law and section 69, paragraph 1(32), of the OSH Law set fines in cases where a labour inspector is prevented from conducting an inspection, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate if any acts of obstruction were reported by labour inspectors to the central inspection authority and, if so, to describe the penalties imposed and the proceedings followed to ensure their effective enforcement in conformity with Article 18 of the Convention.

Article 5(a), 14 and 21(f) and (g). Notification of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. In its previous comments the Committee took note of difficulties in the actual system of notification and registration of occupational accidents and diseases, despite the existence of a legal obligation for the employer to notify these under section 50 of the OSH Law. The Government's report contains a list of steps that are necessary to ensure effective prevention of occupational accidents and diseases, including coordination of all services, institutions and individuals who work on the prevention of occupational accidents; intensified media campaigns, brochures aimed at promoting a national prevention culture in the field of safety and health at work, the introduction of a continuous data processing practice in all departments and institutions working in the area of OSH; as well as an efficient national system for recording and collecting data on occupational accidents and diseases. With regard to the latter, the Government indicates that the Serbian Institution for Occupational Medicine and Radiology "Dr Dragomir Krajovic" (under the Ministry of Health) is implementing a project on the development of a register for occupational accidents and on the identification, reporting and registration of occupational diseases. Working groups, in which representatives of the labour inspectorate have taken active part, were established in order to consider proposals for a new list of occupational diseases and an efficient registration system for occupational accidents.

The Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the 1996 ILO code of practice on the recording and notification of occupational accidents and diseases which could offer guidance in this framework. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in order to strengthen the efficiency of the system for recording and notifying occupational accidents and diseases, including through the adoption of a new list of occupational diseases and a better collaboration of all institutions concerned for that purpose.

Articles 20 and 21. Submission and content of the annual report. In its previous comments, the Committee welcomed the detailed information contained in the annual report on the labour inspection activities for 2007 and requested additional information including on the total number of industrial and commercial establishments under the supervision of the labour inspectorate and the number of workers employed therein. The Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government as to the number of establishments subject to labour inspection (318,540 businesses of which 10,056 are legal entities and 33,592 are individual entrepreneurs engaged in industrial activities as well as 35,738 legal entities and 72,703 entrepreneurs engaged in the trade sector). Drawing the Government's attention to its 2009 general observation on the importance of statistics on workplaces liable to inspection and the number of workers covered as a basis for assessing the effectiveness of the labour inspection system and its needs, the Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that, in its future annual reports, the labour inspectorate will provide statistical data on the number of registered companies engaged in industrial and commercial activities as well as on the number of workers employed therein.

The Committee also notes however, that no further annual report on the labour inspection activities was received. It recalls that, according to Article 20, the annual report should be published by the central authority and duly forwarded to the ILO within a reasonable time after its publication. The Committee therefore requests the Government to ensure that the annual report on the labour inspection activities is forwarded to the ILO on an ongoing basis in accordance with Article 20 and that it contains information on the items listed in Article 21. In particular, in order to assess the coverage of labour inspection, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would also indicate in its next report, in addition to the information usually provided in the annual report, the total number of industrial and commercial establishments under the supervision of the labour inspectorate and the number of workers employed therein (clause (c)), the statistics of inspections carried out (clause (d)), and statistics on the outcome of judicial procedures and penalties imposed (clause (e)).

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1960)

Article 5(b) of the Convention. Collaboration between the labour inspection services and the social partners. Further to its previous comment concerning cooperation between the labour inspection services and the social partners, the Committee notes the Government's indication that this is possible at institutional level by means of the Tripartite Advisory Committee set up within the Labour and Social Security Inspectorate. Moreover, the Committee notes that, in 2009, a working party was formed with the social partners, and this will analyse the statistical data relating to labour inspectorate activities, including action by the inspection services in enterprises which operate in several autonomous communities.

As regards promotion of the labour inspectorate's duty to provide information, the Committee notes the indication that this duty is performed during inspection visits. Furthermore, the inspection services adopt more general measures, including the distribution of brochures during lectures and information meetings. This type of activity is undertaken as part of specific inspection campaigns. In this regard, the Committee notes the campaigns which took place in 2008, in particular the European campaign on the manual transport of loads and the SEGUMAR campaign concerning the prevention of occupational hazards on board fishing vessels.

Articles 9 and 10. Cooperation of experts and technicians. Numbers and qualifications of labour inspection staff. The Committee notes with interest the establishment of a labour and social security inspection college, which is in the process of being constructed. It notes that this college will be open to the participation of all the autonomous communities and to cooperation with other public or private institutions concerned with training. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that in 2007 a total of 559 training courses were held for 5,983 persons. In this respect the Committee notes that, for 2008, the numbers of inspection staff increased to 1,746 officials, comprising 836 inspectors and 910 deputy inspectors, as well as 236 technicians. It notes in particular that the new INTEGRA computer application, developed in the context of the "LINCE" project, has been a valuable tool in the training of labour inspectors. The Government also mentions that a study has been conducted on "Training needs of the inspection system and evaluation of appropriate solutions". The Committee further notes that, in 2008, the focus was placed on quality, not quantity, of training courses, and most of the 447 courses given were devoted to technical rather than computer education.

Article 11(1)(a). Labour inspection information system. As regards the development of the "LINCE" project and the new INTEGRA computer application mentioned above, the Committee notes that this application has constituted the core of the "LINCE" project since its creation in 2007 and encompasses the four subsystems of vital importance for labour inspection and social security, namely: (i) programmes and campaigns; (ii) inspection activities; (iii) follow-up to reports of infringements through administrative and dispute settlement channels; and (iv) evaluation and monitoring. According to the Government, this application, apart from providing IT support for labour inspection activities, constitutes an integrated information management system which enables information to be transmitted, shared and utilized in a coherent manner. Moreover, the Committee notes that two other systems have been developed: (i) the INTEGRA-PERSONAL system, which manages the human resources of the inspection and social security services; and (ii) the INTEGRA-PRODUCTIVIDAD system, which manages the productivity of the inspectorate and support staff. Finally, the Committee notes the creation of a number of databases, namely: (i) the CEPROSS database concerning occupational diseases; (ii) the ADEXTTRA database concerning information on foreign workers; and (iii) the e-SIL database (occupational information system) concerning social security. It notes that, since 2007, all these projects have been subject to constant improvement, inter alia, in order to ensure coherence in methods and quality of implementation of activities in all inspection and social security services, by documenting and disseminating working procedures in a clear and accessible manner, which enables the provision of a knowledge base ensuring the coherence of inspection activities.

Articles 18 and 21. Penalties applicable to infringements. Content of the annual general report. The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government concerning infringements reported with regard to gender equality and discrimination and also with regard to subcontracting in the construction industry. It notes that, between 2007 and 2008, the number of infringements increased considerably (52 and 43 respectively in 2007 compared with 121 and 631 in 2008). The annual labour inspection report for 2008 indicates that 610,774 establishments were inspected, giving rise to 1,047,977 reports and 92,098 notices of infringement of the legislation. The Committee further notes the statistics on penalties imposed in the areas of labour relations (5,955 infringements reported), occupational risk prevention (27,882 infringements, in addition to which there were 5,851 infringements reported during investigations conducted further to industrial accidents), industrial accidents (954,981 in 2007 compared with 828,941 in 2008, namely a decrease of approximately 10 per cent), employment and foreign workers (12,994 infringements) and social security (40,564 infringements). Finally, the Committee notes the statistics for 2009 relating to each autonomous community and also indicating that 69,694 infringements were reported at national level.

As regards the laws and regulations relating to the competencies of the labour inspectorate, the Committee notes the adoption of Royal Decree No. 1109/2007 of 24 August 2007 concerning procedures in force in the construction industry, Act No. 20/2007 of 11 July 2007 regulating the status of self-employed workers, Act No. 38/2007 of 16 November 2007 modifying the powers of the general administration of the State to impose penalties, Act No. 44/2007 of 13 December 2007 including recruitment agencies in the list of enterprises which may be held liable for occupational infringements, and also the Decision of 25 November 2008 of the Directorate-General of Labour Inspection and Social Security, which establishes the basis for authorizing enterprises to use the electronic inspection register. The Committee further notes with interest Instruction No. 1/2007 of 27 February 2007 on the strengthening of relations between the Labour and Social Security Inspectorate and the Public Prosecutor's Office concerning criminal acts in the sphere of occupational safety and health.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the manner in which the Convention is applied, indicating in particular:

- (a) Any measure or initiative aimed at improving cooperation between the labour inspection services and other institutions and the social partners, and also any activity or programme relating to the duty of the labour inspectorate to provide information. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on the activities of the working party set up in 2009, including any studies or official reports which have been drawn up.
- (b) Any measure or initiative taken with a view to increasing the numbers and improving the qualifications of labour inspectors and also the results achieved. The Committee also requests the Government to keep the Office informed of the progress made regarding the establishment of the labour inspection and social security college and to supply documentation relating to the legal framework of the college and its operation.
- (c) Any further developments relating to the labour inspection information systems – LINCE, INTEGRA-PERSONAL, INTEGRA-PRODUCTIVIDAD, etc. – and their impact on inspection service activities. The Committee also requests the Government to supply a copy of the study on the “Training needs of the inspection system and evaluation of appropriate solutions” and to indicate the measures taken to follow up on its conclusions.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1956)

The Committee notes the Government's reports received on 23 October 2008 and 5 October 2009, along with its replies to the comments made previously in communications dated 31 May 2007 and 11 July 2008 by the Lanka Jathika Estate Workers' Union (LJEWU) and in a joint communication dated 4 October 2007 by the Confederation of Public Service Independent Trade Unions (COPSITU), the Government Service Labour Officers' Association (GSLOA), the United Federation of Labour (UFL), the Progress Union (PU), the Free Trade Zone Workers Union (FTZWU) and the Health Service Trade Union Alliance (HSTUA). The content of these communications has been summarized in the Committee's previous comments. The Committee also notes the comments made by the Ceylon Workers' Congress (CWC) in a communication dated 8 July 2008 and by the National Trade Union Federation (NTUF) in a communication dated 22 July 2009. The Committee finally recalls that its comments also relate to the matters raised by the World Confederation of Labour (WCL – now merged into the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC)) in September 2005.

The Committee recalls the conclusions reached by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (ILC, 96th Session, June 2007) which, having noted the efforts made by the Government to restructure the labour inspection system with ILO assistance, develop the prevention side of labour inspection, promote qualifications of labour inspection staff and increase the number of both female and male labour inspectors, requested the Government to communicate further information on the right of access by inspectors to establishments in export processing zones (EPZs), the powers of injunction of labour inspectors, the allocation of professional travel expenses, and the publication of an annual inspection report.

Articles 3, 13, 16 and 17 of the Convention. Restructuring of the labour inspection system with ILO assistance. In its previous comments, the Committee requested information on the consequences in practice of the restructuring of the Department of Labour and its agencies with ILO support. It also noted the need to give power of injunction to labour inspectors in the area of occupational safety and health (OSH).

The Committee notes from the statistical data provided by the Government that, while the number of registered factories has almost quadrupled since 1996 (from 4,669 in 1996 to 16,153 in 2008), the number of inspections has merely risen by approximately 30 per cent (from 3,061 in 1996 to 4,004 in 2008). Moreover, while there was an important increase in the number of complaints received and investigated (from 17 to 71 and from 16 to 96, respectively) during the same period, the number of court cases filed and concluded actually fell from 17 to seven and from 13 to three respectively. The CWC indicates in its comments of 8 July 2008 that it is not aware of any prosecutions undertaken against employers who have been found by labour inspectors to be in breach of their legal obligations. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the impact of the restructuring of the labour inspection system on the effective discharge of labour inspection functions in accordance with Article 3, in particular, the number of visits carried out, numbers and types of violations detected, cases of progress based on the provision of information and advice, cases brought to the courts and outcomes of the proceedings, number and subject of complaints investigated and results obtained.

The Committee also reiterates its request for a copy of the document on the restructuring of the Ministry of Labour, as well as any document setting out the new arrangements for the operation of the labour inspection system.

The Committee also notes that the data provided on the labour inspection activities in the area of OSH (including the number of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease, are too general. It notes from the information provided by the NTUF in its communication of 22 July 2009 that, under sections 44 and 100 of the Factories Ordinance No. 45 of 1942, factory inspecting engineers can apply to the Magistrates' Court for an injunction where there is an imminent risk of serious bodily injury. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the labour inspection activities carried out in the area of OSH and the results obtained as well as the numbers of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease by sector of economic activity and geographical area. Noting moreover the comments by the NTUF on the difficulties encountered in ensuring enforcement of occupational safety and health legislation vis-à-vis employers, it invites the Government to make any comment it considers appropriate in this regard.

Articles 7(3), 8, 9 and 10. Numbers, composition and training of labour inspection staff and collaboration with technical experts. The Committee notes the detailed data provided by the Government on the labour inspection staff, which amounts to a total of 544 inspectors, including 20 new Tamil-speaking labour officers. It notes furthermore with interest that action has been taken to strengthen the labour inspectorate by recruiting 80 additional officers. Action is also being taken to recruit 21 new assistant commissioners of labour from the assistant commissioners of labour (departmental) service. Finally, requests have been made to the Ministry of Public Administration to attach to the supervisory grade of the inspection staff the officers of the Sri Lanka Administrative Service (SLAS). The Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of progress made in the process of recruiting additional inspection and supervisory staff.

The Committee also notes that there is a marked shortage of OSH staff, who number only 27 inspectors out of a total of 545. It recalls the comments previously made by the WCL and the recent comments of the NTUF with regard to the persistent shortage of factory inspecting engineers, medical officers and occupational hygienists to carry out routine inspections of industrial enterprises, particularly those in which hazardous substances are used or handled. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or under consideration to increase the number of inspection staff specialized in OSH.

Noting moreover the text of the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health Act No. 38 of 2009, which empowers the officers or agents of the Institute to carry out inspections on OSH and to provide advisory services in this area, the Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any arrangement to associate technical experts and specialists from the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health with the work of the labour inspectorate for the purpose of securing the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to the protection of the health and safety of workers and investigating the effects of processes, materials and methods of work on the health and safety of workers.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that action has been taken to absorb 178 field officers entrusted with the enforcement of the Employees' Provident Fund Act (i.e. the social security law covering the private sector) as labour officers so as to further strengthen the labour inspection service. With reference to its previous comments on this question, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the impact of the increase in staff entrusted with the enforcement of the Employees' Provident Fund Act in recovering social contributions from half of all employers who, according to the Government, had failed to pay them.

The Committee notes with interest that the number of female inspectors has increased to 154. However, male inspectors continue to account for over 70 per cent of the labour inspection staff (391 male inspectors). The Committee requests the Government to indicate the impact of the recruitment of female labour inspectors in terms of the effective discharge of labour inspection functions in sectors with a predominantly female workforce, such as the textile sector, and to keep the ILO informed of progress made in terms of the further recruitment of female staff.

Finally, noting the information provided by the Government on initial and periodic training of labour inspectors, the Committee requests the Government to provide details on the training activities carried out (subjects, dates, attendance and evaluation of the training).

Article 12(1)(a). Right of labour inspectors to enter freely workplaces liable to inspection. With reference to the comments previously made by the LJEWU on this question, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: there is no restriction or difficulty in entering EPZs for officers of the Department of Labour; inspections can be carried out only by the commissioner of labour and his/her officers and not the Board of Investment (BOI) – there is no separate labour inspectorate for EPZs; and all relevant parties (commissioner general of labour, BOI officials, major trade unions, employers' organizations and the Minister of Labour) meet in the framework of the National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC), where the issue of labour inspection in EPZs has never been raised by the trade unions. The Committee recalls that it has noted in the past the generally applicable legislation and information on the rights exercised in practice by labour inspectors during inspections. It must, however, note that almost all the communications received from trade union organizations, including the most recent communication from the NTUF dated 22 July 2009, confirm that the right of labour inspectors to free entry in EPZs encounters obstacles in practice due to the need to give prior notice to the BOI. The Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the importance of enabling inspectors to exercise the right to free entry into workplaces, including in EPZs, without prior notice, as established by the Convention. This is necessary, among other things, to enable inspectors to observe the confidentiality required with regard to the purpose of the inspection if it is carried out in response to a complaint, as well as to maintain the confidentiality of the source of the complaint (see in this respect, the General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, paragraph 263). The Committee requests the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that, as required by Article 12, labour inspectors may enter EPZs on the sole condition that they hold appropriate credentials, without prior notice to the BOI. It would also be grateful if the Government would indicate the number of inspection activities carried out in EPZs and their outcomes (number of inspection visits, violations detected by subject, measures taken and outcomes).

Finally, the Committee suggests that the Government may host a discussion on ways of improving labour inspection in EPZs in the framework of the NLAC and keep the ILO informed of the outcome of the discussions.

Article 11(1)(b). Travelling expenses. The Government indicates that public officers including the labour inspectorate are paid subsistence and travelling expenses in accordance with the rates stipulated by the Ministry of Public Administration in consultation with the Ministry of Finance. Most of the district offices have official vehicles to use for labour inspections. In addition, the inspecting officers could use their own vehicles. The cost of travelling is reimbursed at the rates stipulated by the Government. Finally, inspecting officers can obtain low interest loans to buy personal vehicles, if they wish. However, the LJEWU and the NTUF are of the view that the travelling allowance is inadequate and the limitations placed on the mileage that is reimbursed limits the number of inspections carried out. The Committee once again urges the Government to take measures to provide inspectors with the transport facilities that are indispensable for the discharge of their functions, and to keep the ILO informed of any measures taken or under consideration to this end.

Article 18. Dissuasive sanctions. The Committee notes with interest that, following the amendment of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act, steps have been taken to update the fines and penal provisions in all legislative acts relating to conditions of work. It notes in this regard the text of the bills to amend the Shop and Office Employees' Act, the Maternity Benefits Ordinance, the Termination of Employment of Workmen (Special Provisions) Act and the Industrial Disputes Act, communicated by the Government. The Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of the progress made in the adoption of the abovementioned bills.

Article 21. Statistics and the publication of the annual report on labour inspection activities. In its report, the Government acknowledges that the collection and analysis of statistical data for the annual report could be further improved and requests the ILO for technical assistance. Recalling that in its previous comments the Committee welcomed action to update the master register of workplaces and, with reference to its 2009 general observation on the importance of such statistics, the Committee requests the Government to indicate any progress made in relation to the collection of data on the number of workplaces liable to inspection, including in EPZs, and the workers employed therein. It also reiterates its previous requests under Article 21 for the publication of data on the number of inspections made, including in EPZs; the violations identified and the penalties applied; and cases of occupational disease; and for measures to be taken to ensure that the annual report is published, as required by Article 20.

With regard to the Government's request for technical assistance, the Committee invites the Government to take formal steps to this end.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1970)

Context and developments relating to labour inspection. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement that after the adoption of a transitional Constitution of 2005, and the implementation of the federal rule which is considered to be the administrative executive system in the country, the majority of powers were transferred to the provinces (wilayat). This required the revision of all Sudanese laws so as to be in conformity with the new rule. The Government further indicates that the Labour Code of 1997 is being revised, and that a draft of it has been sent to the ILO for comments. However, according to information available at the ILO, the Committee notes that a request has not been received despite repeated invitations by the Cairo Subregional Office. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would take the necessary steps to avail itself of the ILO technical assistance for the revision of the Labour Code and to provide information on the results achieved. Referring to its previous observation as to the delegation of most of labour inspection activities to the labour offices in the provinces, the Committee requests the Government to take the measures necessary to ensure, meanwhile, that workplaces continue to be inspected, as provided by the Convention (Articles 12, 13 and 16), and that an annual report on the work of the labour inspection services is published and a copy of it communicated to the ILO (Articles 20 and 21).

Article 5(a) of the Convention. Cooperation between the inspection services and the judicial system. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement that the relationship between the inspection services at the Ministry of Labour and the judicial system is strong and historic. Each labour office has an inspection unit which carries out its inspection duties, and refers its violations to the judicial bodies. At the federal Government level, inspection has been restricted. It further indicates that some cases were referred to the courts in cases where the measures taken by labour inspectors, which consist in providing advice, warning and reprimand, have all failed. The court rendered its judgement by imposing a fine and a sentence of imprisonment. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide the ILO with copies of excerpts of as many judicial decisions as possible, rendered in cases of infringement of legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. It would also welcome any indication concerning the effective enforcement of such decisions in practice and its impact on the observance of the relevant legislation.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes that the Government's report received on 25 September 2009 is identical to the one submitted in 2005. Consequently, the Committee is bound to reiterate its previous comments and requests which read as follows.

Article 7 of the Convention. Training of labour inspectors. The Committee hopes that the Government will continue to provide information on any new training activities for the purpose of improving inspectors' skills and that it will also be able to report on the impact of retraining on the working and results of the labour inspection services.

Article 14. Notification to the labour inspectorate of cases of occupational disease. For many years the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to ensure that full effect is given to this Article of the Convention, specifically as regards occupational diseases. The Government states that there have been no changes in the law with regard to application of the Convention, but that in view of the crucial role of labour administration in administering and enforcing labour laws, the labour inspection legislation is to be reviewed in order to bring it more into line with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee draws the Government's attention in this connection to its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection (paragraph 118), in which it emphasized that it is vital, for preventive purposes, for formal mechanisms to be put in place to provide the labour inspection services with the data they need to identify high-risk activities and the most vulnerable categories of workers. The Government is therefore asked to take advantage of the planned legislative revision in order to adopt provisions that supplement the national legislation, in accordance with this Article of the Convention, by defining the instances and the manner in which the labour inspectorate must be informed not only of occupational accidents, but also of cases of occupational disease. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would keep the Office informed of any progress in this respect and provide copies of any draft provisions or any adopted texts, together with all relevant documents (administrative orders, circulars, declaration forms, etc.).

Article 15(b). Scope of the obligation on labour inspectors to maintain professional secrecy. The Committee trusts that the Government will also take advantage of the revision which it announced, to give effect to this provision, as it undertook to do, by ensuring that a provision is adopted to extend the scope of the obligation on labour inspectors to observe professional secrecy in order to ensure that they continue to be bound by this obligation after they have left the service.

Scope of the obligation on labour inspectors to maintain professional secrecy. The Committee trusts that the necessary measures will be taken without delay so as to give full effect to Article 15(b) of the Convention by extending the duty of labour inspectors to observe professional secrecy to the period following their departure from the service.

In addition, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the following point.

Articles 3(1)(a) and (b) and 5(b). In its 2009 direct request relating to the application of the Safety Provisions (Building) Convention, 1937 (No. 62), the Committee has noted from the statistics communicated by the Government a high increase of fatal and serious workplace accidents caused by materials, substances and radiation, between 2007 and 2008 in the building and construction sector. The Committee notes with concern these trends which are an indication of a serious failure in the functioning of labour inspection. The Government is requested to take all the necessary financial and capacity-building measures without delay to ensure that the labour inspection services can exercise their legal enforcement powers against negligent employers in construction workplaces with regard to occupational safety and health and provide employers and workers with information and technical advice aimed at raising their awareness in this area. The Committee urges the Government to inform the Office of such measures and the progress achieved in terms of fatal and serious work accidents.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1981)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report received on 3 September 2009.

Article 3(2) of the Convention. Functions of labour inspectors. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has observed that in settling disputes, labour inspectors risk assuming a burden that is detrimental to the performance of their primary duties set out in Article 3(1) of the Convention, i.e., securing the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, such as provisions relating to hours, wages, safety, hygiene and welfare, the employment of children and young persons, and other connected matters.

In its previous comments, the Committee had welcomed the amendments introduced in 2005 to the Industrial Relations Act (No. 1 of 2000) and in particular, the fact that sections 76, 77 and 78, as amended, provided that labour disputes would henceforth be referred directly to the Conciliation, Mediation and Arbitration Commission and not to the Commissioner of Labour or any person authorized to act on his or her behalf. The Committee had also noted however, that pursuant to section 82 of the Industrial Relations Act as amended, the Commissioner of Labour or any person authorized to act on his or her behalf, maintained the power to "intervene" in labour disputes, before being reported to the Commission, if he or she had reason to believe that they could have serious consequences for the employers, the workers or the economy if not resolved promptly.

The Committee notes the supplementary information provided by the Government in this regard in its latest report. It notes in particular the text of the Guidelines for intervention by the Commissioner of Labour (gazetted in Vol. XL111 of 1 September 2005). The Guidelines form an integral part of section 82 of the Industrial Relations Act (section 1.2 of the Guidelines) and lay down general principles to guide the Commissioner of Labour in "preventing or limiting" disputes and assisting employers, employees and their organizations in understanding "how the Commissioner will perform the dispute functions" in terms of section 82 of the Industrial Relations Act. The Committee observes that the Guidelines, which have the force of law, appear to lump together the functions of prevention (which form an integral part of labour inspection functions), with the functions of conciliation and resolution of disputes; in several sections of the Guidelines, the Commissioner of Labour does not appear to be limited to merely exercising prevention functions but is also empowered to a large extent to carry out conciliation.

In particular, according to sections 2.3.5 and 2.4 of the Guidelines, the Commissioner is empowered to, and indeed "should", intervene in disputes irrespective of whether the parties to the dispute wish the Commissioner to do so, under a wide range of circumstances, including if "it is within the public interest generally" for the Commissioner to do so, before a dispute is reported to the Conciliation, Mediation and Arbitration Commission. A dispute is defined in very general terms as a dispute which "exists or may arise" between employees and their employers; trade unions and employers; trade unions themselves; or employer organizations themselves (section 2.2 of the Guidelines). Depending on the nature of the dispute, the Commissioner may intervene either "personally [...] to resolve or prevent the dispute through conciliation" or by appointing a person of his/her choice, to conduct fact-finding and make recommendations for the prevention or resolution of the dispute. In particular, the Commissioner may appoint a "conciliator" in consultation with the Commission; a "commissioner" in consultation with the parties; or a judge after consultation with the President of the Industrial Court (section 2.5 of the Guidelines). More importantly, if a party reports a dispute to the Conciliation, Mediation and Arbitration Commission under section 76 of the Industrial Relations Act after the Commissioner of Labour has intervened but before that intervention has been completed, the Commission may, after consultation with the Commissioner of Labour, direct the Commissioner or persons appointed by the Commissioner "to conciliate the dispute" as if they were commissioners appointed by the Conciliation, Mediation and Arbitration Commission under section 80(1) of the Industrial Relations Act (section 4.1 of the Guidelines). Furthermore, if a party reports the dispute to the Conciliation, Mediation and Arbitration Commission after the Commissioner of Labour has completed an intervention in accordance with section 82 of the Industrial Relations Act, the Commission may deem the dispute to have been "conciliated" and issue the required certificate stating whether or not the dispute has been resolved (section 4.2 of the Guidelines). Section 5.1 of the Guidelines provides that an appropriate budget needs to be allocated to ensure that the Commissioner of Labour's office is able to fulfil its obligations as set out in the Guidelines.

The Committee observes that under the Guidelines, the labour inspector (Commissioner of Labour) or a person of his/her choice, may be entrusted with both the prevention and the conciliation of disputes on his/her own initiative. Thus, the powers which had been lifted from the Commissioner of Labour under sections 76, 77 and 78 of the Industrial Relations Act as amended in 2005, appear to be reinvested in the Commissioner of Labour through the provisions of sections 2, 4 and 5 of the Guidelines, thereby preventing the legislative amendments of 2005 from producing any effect. The Committee also observes that this situation takes place within a certain context which was discussed at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in relation to the application of Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) in 2009, and that it emerges from the Government's report under that Convention that, further amendments to the Industrial Relations Act are currently under way.

The Committee recalls that according to Article 3(2) of this Convention, any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors should not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. In this respect, the Committee also emphasizes that, Paragraph 8 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), provides that the functions of labour inspectors should not include that of acting as conciliator or arbitrator in proceedings concerning labour disputes.

The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the measures taken or considered for the amendment or abrogation of the provisions of section 82 of the Industrial Relations Act, and sections 1, 2, 4, and 5 of the Guidelines for intervention by the Commissioner of Labour, so that the Commissioner of Labour may be exempted from carrying out functions of conciliation and resolution of industrial disputes, which are likely to interfere with the effective discharge of the primary duties of labour inspectors, or prejudice the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers.

The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the part of the activities of the Commissioner of Labour, which concern the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work, the protection of workers compared to the part of activities which concern conciliation and the settlement of disputes.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual labour inspection report. In its previous comments, the Committee had welcomed the detailed information provided in the 2005 annual report of the Department of Labour. The Committee notes however, that no subsequent annual reports have been received. It recalls that according to Article 20(3) of the Convention, the obligation to communicate the annual labour inspection reports within a reasonable period after their publication, is an ongoing one. The Committee would therefore be grateful if the Government would ensure that the annual report of the Department of Labour was communicated on a regular basis and that they continued to contain the information listed in Article 21 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Tunisia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report received at the ILO on 19 November 2009. It also notes the labour inspection reports for 2006 and 2007, received at the ILO on 4 January 2008 and 17 March 2010.

Articles 10, 21(b) and (c) of the Convention. Number of inspectors and geographical distribution. Statistics of workplaces liable to inspection and number of workers employed. The Committee notes with interest from the labour inspection reports for 2006 and 2007 the composition and distribution by sex of the labour inspectorate staff (Article 21(b)). However, the reports contain no information on the number of workplaces subject to inspection and the number of workers employed therein (Article 21(c)). According to Article 10, the number of labour inspectors shall be determined according to the number, nature, size and situation of the workplaces. It is therefore important that the Government should ensure that such data are collected so that it is in a position to distribute the inspection staff appropriately throughout the territory in accordance with priorities to be defined on the basis of criteria such as the risk level of the main activities, worker categories (young workers, women, level of qualification, etc.) and available resources. Besides, such information is essential for the central authority in scheduling routine inspection visits, assessing the workplace coverage rate and establishing resource requirements in annual budgets with a view to better coverage. The Government may wish to refer in this connection to paragraphs 325 and 326 of the 2006 General Survey on labour inspection, and to Paragraph 9(c) of Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), regarding the level of detail to be given in the relevant information. The Committee asks the Government to provide figures showing the geographical distribution of labour inspectorate staff, so that it can assess the extent to which the abovementioned Articles of the Convention are observed, and to ensure that the annual labour inspection report contains, in the future, statistics of the workplaces liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein.

Articles 17 and 18. Information concerning action taken on unheeded warnings and on reports of violations. The Committee notes from the labour inspection reports that inspectors issued 3,386 warnings in 2007 and 3,318 in 2006, as well as 652 violation reports in 2007 and 402 in 2006. It notes, however, that no information has been sent on the action taken on these warnings and reports.

The Committee further notes that since the inspection report for 1998, received at the ILO in 2000, according to the Government, inspections of labour suppliers have been stepped up, the aim being to get employers to comply with the legislation in force. However, the Government provides no information on any follow up to such inspections. To assess how effective such action has been, a record is needed of all the offences committed by labour suppliers and the action taken by labour inspectors to remedy them or punish the offenders.

The Committee invites the Government to refer to Chapter VIII of its General Survey of 2006 in which it points out that the provision of advice and information, the issuing of orders and the initiation of legal procedures are complementary approaches to achieving the Convention's objective. The credibility and effectiveness of a labour inspection system depend to a large extent on the action taken on contraventions reported. It is accordingly essential that penalties imposed by labour inspectors for violations should be visible enough to be dissuasive. The Committee therefore asks the Government to provide information on the action taken on unheeded warnings and on violations notified to courts of law, and to ensure that in future relevant statistics are supplied in the annual report of the central labour inspection authority.

Articles 3(1)(b), 14, 21(f) and (g). Statistics of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes from the labour inspection report for 2007 that employers too often neglect to notify industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease and that this prevents the inspectorate from compiling complete and relevant data. In this connection, the report only refers to the statistics contained in the annual report of the Sickness Insurance Fund (CNAM), without providing the report in question. The Committee reminds the Government that according to Article 14 of the Convention, the labour inspectorate must be notified of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. The inspectorate needs data of this kind, in particular so that it can fully assume its preventive role and so that in the annual inspection report it can include statistics of industrial accidents and of the case of occupational disease, as required by Article 21(f) and (g). In this connection, the Committee invites the Government to refer to paragraphs 118 to 132 of the abovementioned General Survey in which it points out the importance and scope of the labour inspectorate's preventive role. To enable the central authority to include in its annual report information regarding industrial accidents and instances of occupational disease, the competent authority is required by Article 5(a) of the Convention to promote cooperation between the two institutions to this end. Furthermore, such information is essential to the development of a relevant prevention policy.

In order to combat negligence of employers in notifying industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease, it would likewise be appropriate to ensure that laws and regulations are sufficiently clear as to the cases and circumstances in which such incidents are to be notified to the competent authorities, and as to the procedure for notification and the penalties that apply in the event of negligence. Informing and sensitizing employers and workers about this matter is an essential means of encouraging compliance with the relevant legal provisions. Labour inspectors can carry out such measures as part of the duties they perform in pursuance of Article 3(1)(b) and of Paragraphs 6 and 7 of Recommendation No. 81. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to take steps to ensure that the labour inspectorate is informed of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease in the instances and circumstances laid down in the national legislation. If failure to notify is a result of gaps in the legislation, the Government is asked to take steps to complete the legislation accordingly so as to facilitate enforcement and supervision by the labour inspectorate. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would proceed at once to encourage cooperation between the labour inspection services and the CNAM so that, in future, available relevant statistics may be included in the annual labour inspection report, in accordance with Article 21(f) and (g), if possible in the manner indicated in Paragraph 9(f) and (g) of Recommendation No. 81.

Article 20. Publication and communication to the ILO of the annual inspection report. The Committee appreciates the Government's efforts to compile annual labour inspection reports. It notes, however, that there is no requirement for such reports to be published and that they are in any event not communicated to the Office within the deadline prescribed by Article 20 (the inspection report for 2007 was not received until March 2010). The Committee reminds the Government that according to Article 20, the annual report must be published at the latest within 12 months of the end of the period they cover. Consequently, the Committee asks the Government to ensure that full effect is given to the abovementioned Articles of the Convention and that, in future, the annual report of the central inspection authority on the work of the inspection services under its control is published and that a copy of it is sent to the International Labour Office within the period prescribed. It would be grateful if, in the meantime, the Government would ensure that the reports for 2007, 2008 and 2009 are published and sent to the Office promptly.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1951)

The Committee notes the general report on labour inspection containing information and statistical data on labour inspection activities for 2008. The Committee also notes the comments made by the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TİSK) dated 20 May 2009 and the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ) dated 3 June 2009 with regard to the application of this Convention.

Article 2 of the Convention. Labour inspection in the informal sector. In its report, the Government indicates that, in order to extend the scope of inspection activities to include establishments in the informal economy, section 59 of the Social Insurance and General Health Insurance (SIGHI) Act No. 5510 requires inspection officers to determine during their inspections whether or not employees are insured, and submit to the social security institution within a maximum of one month the names, citizen ID numbers and wages of those who are employed without insurance. The social security institution is responsible for undertaking the necessary legal proceedings based on such notifications. The General Report on Labour Inspection for 2008 indicates that 642 workplaces were inspected, covering a total of 23,574 workers, and 2,996,425 Turkish lira (TRY) of administrative fines were imposed in 179 workplaces, and 962 workers were found not to be insured in 367 workplaces inspected.

In this respect, in its comments of 28 May 2009, the TİSK refers to the adoption of the Action Plan for the Strategy to Combat Informal Economy, published in the Official Gazette No. 27132 on 5 February 2009. The Action Plan was drawn up with a view to creating a comprehensive strategy in which all sectors of society participate with a strong social and political will to raise awareness of the disadvantages of the informal economy, promote the registration of employment, simplify the legislation and procedures, develop an effective monitoring system and system of sanctions, strengthen the sharing of data among institutions and ensure effective coordination among the organizations concerned.

The TİSK also reports that the scope of labour inspection has been broadened and labour inspectors have been given new powers. An important change is the promulgation of Act No. 5763, which modifies paragraph 2 of section 3 of Act No. 4857 (the Labour Code). Under the new provision, a subcontracting employer is required to notify and register his place of employment with the regional directorate, and to include the subcontracting contract together with all the necessary documents. This provision also authorizes labour inspectors to inspect documents concerning the registration of the subcontractor's place of employment to determine whether they are genuine.

In this respect, the TİSK refers to section 11 of the Regulation on subcontracting relations of 27 September 2008, which provides that the original work may only be divided and subcontracted if expertise is required by the process and the nature of the work and/or for technological reasons. The TİSK considers that section 11 of the Regulation introduces a power that exceeds the purpose and scope of section 3 of the Labour Code, which only authorizes labour inspectors to ascertain the existence of collusion and not to examine subcontracting relationships from the viewpoint of section 11 of the Regulation. The TİSK states that the criteria for exercising this power are so ambiguous that problems may be generated in practice.

Furthermore, the TİSK reports that the practice of short-time employment is steadily spreading. In accordance with the Regulation on short-time work and short-time allowances/benefits of 13 January 2009, employers who apply for the authorization to put their workers on a short-time working scheme due to the general economic crisis or for reasons of force majeure must notify the provincial/district office of the Turkish Labour Institute and the trade union concerned if there is a collective labour agreement. Such applications are promptly examined by the labour inspectors of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. Where an application is found to be admissible, the dates of the commencement and termination of the short-term employment and a finalized list of workers' details are sent to the Turkish Labour Institute. The Institute notifies the employer of the results of the investigation and the employer notifies the workers by posting a notice at the place of employment; if there is a collective labour agreement, the employer also informs the trade union that is party to the agreement. The TİSK considers that the Regulation of 13 January 2009 extends the scope of labour inspection in connection with the short-time work and short-time benefits and improves the compatibility of the legislation with the Convention.

The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the SIGHI Act in its amended version and to continue providing information on the measures taken to extend labour inspection activities in the informal sector, as well as relevant and updated statistics of unregistered workplaces and uninsured workers. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the abovementioned Action Plan, and on the results achieved and measures envisaged in that context. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide feedback on the viewpoints expressed by the TİSK concerning section 11 of the Regulation on subcontracting and the practice of short-time employment.

Articles 3(1)(a) and 7(3). Training of labour inspectors necessary for the effective discharge of their duties. In its report, the Government indicates that, in order to strengthen the capacity of the Labour Inspection Board for the effective implementation of the new EU legislation in the area of health and safety at work and labour relations, an EU twinning project on improving the labour inspection system in Turkey was launched in January 2008 and completed in October 2009. The Committee notes with interest that during the implementation of the project, training related to the chemistry, metal, construction and mining industries were organized for labour inspectors and the social partners in Turkey by German and Belgian experts, and that general guidelines on the labour inspection system and guidelines on the management of occupational safety and health in the chemical, metal, construction and mining sectors, as well as on social inspection, were prepared. The Government also indicated that all labour inspectors and 76 representatives of the social partners participated in the four-day training course organized for them.

The Committee further notes with interest that, according to the Government, from 2007 until April 2009, labour inspectors participated in training for an accumulated duration of 6,272 hours in the field of occupational safety and health and labour legislation. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide more detailed information on the training organized for labour inspectors, particularly on the content, regularity and the number of participants in such training. The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would provide copies of the abovementioned guidelines and any relevant information on their application.

With reference to its 2009 observation, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide clarifications on the views expressed by the TISK regarding the sharing of responsibilities for the supervision of social security legislation.

Articles 3(1)(b), 17 and 18. Balance between the proactive measures taken and sanctions applied by labour inspectors. In its report, the Government indicates that, from the occupational safety and health perspective, 37,005 inspections were conducted from January 2007 through March 2009, of which 18,383 were general inspections, 2,171 control inspections and 16,451 investigative inspections. Through these inspections, labour inspectors raised TRY15,102,383,00 in fines for occupational safety and health violations and TRY64,325,183,00 for violations relating to the organization of work. The Government indicates that labour inspectors primarily report deficiencies in the establishments inspected using their discretion so that employers can rectify these deficiencies in a certain period of time. If employers do not comply with the instructions of inspectors, an administrative fine is imposed on them. As regards the technical assistance provided to employers and workers, the Committee notes that the Chairman of the Labour Inspection Board provided training on occupational safety and health in 34 workplaces in 2008, while labour inspectors trained engineers, workers and executives at various levels at the Centre for Labour and Social Security Training and Research in the Tuzla shipyard region. Twelve labour inspectors trained 20,000 workers between 17 July 2008 and 29 August 2008 in the Tuzla region.

In this respect, the TISK reports that one of the purposes of the Action Plan for the Strategy to Combat the Informal Economy is “to strengthen inspection capacities and enhance the deterrent effect of sanctions”. According to the Action Plan, inspections will be carried out more with a view of educating people and increasing their awareness than imposing sanctions. The TISK considers that effective inspection aimed at encouraging people to act in compliance with the law will reduce losses, as well as the incidence of undeclared work to a minimum, and will eliminate the situation of unfair competition that arises between those who comply with the law and those who do not.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide details on the activities of labour inspectors to provide technical information and advice to employers and workers concerning the most effective means of complying with legal provisions. Moreover, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the implementation of the abovementioned Action Plan, as well as a copy of it, and on the effect of the proactive measures taken and sanctions applied by labour inspectors.

Articles 4 and 5(a). Placement of labour inspection under the supervision and control of a central authority and effective cooperation between the various services entrusted with labour inspection. Noting that the Government has not provided any information on this subject, the Committee is bound to reiterate its previous request, which read as follows:

According to the TISK, the transfer of duties from the Ministry of Labour and Social Security to other ministries (Ministry of Health, Ministry of Defence, Ministry of Energy and Natural Resources) and to municipalities constitutes an obstacle to the necessary coordination of labour inspection activities. In the view of the TISK, the dispersion of responsibilities jeopardizes the integrity of inspection and does not allow the necessary coordination under the authority of a central body, as envisaged in the project for intervention against illegal employment prepared by the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. The TISK adds that, although section 95(2) of the Labour Law establishes the requirement to inform the responsible regional authorities of the results of inspections, this requirement is not often met, with the result that neither inspection records nor the relevant statistics are up to date. The TISK calls for the Government to publish the results of the remedial measures adopted for this purpose.

The Committee observes that neither the Government’s report received in 2007, nor the general report of the labour inspection for 2005 refers to any restructuring of the labour inspection system. The Committee would be grateful in this respect if the Government would provide clarifications, describe the measures referred to by the TISK to improve the exchange of information between inspection services and supply detailed information on their implementation in practice and on their impact on the compilation of statistics.

With reference to its 2007 general observation, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measure implemented to promote effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the judiciary with a view to the achievement of the economic and social objectives of the labour inspection services.

Article 5(b). Collaboration between the labour inspection services and employers and workers. In its report, the Government indicates that inspection teams in cooperation with workers, employers and/or representative of the employer carry out, in parallel with existing labour inspection activities, “project” inspections covering specific areas, professions and branches of activities or specific risks and issues. The teams plan in detail and determine every aspect of such inspections, their scope, aims and methods of application, including the duration and source of financing. These “project” inspections are implemented within the framework of annual inspection programmes or within the year in accordance with the methods and principles specified in the “Guide for project inspections”. Noting this information with interest, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide more information on the activities of such teams, and particularly on their composition and operation, as well as a copy of the abovementioned guide.

With reference to its 2009 observation, the Committee requests the Government to provide more information on the purpose, frequency and impact of the collaboration projects of the Labour Inspection Board with the social partners in terms of the objectives of labour inspection.

Article 6. Status and conditions of service of labour inspectors. Noting that the Government has not provided any information on this matter, the Committee is bound to reiterate its previous request, which read as follows:

The Committee notes, from the information provided by the TISK, that draft conditions of service for the public service, including a draft text of the specific conditions of service of labour inspectors, have still not been adopted and that labour inspectors are accordingly still covered by a 1979 text. The Government is asked to provide clarifications on this matter and to supply a copy, if possible in one of the working languages of the ILO, of any text that is in force determining the status and conditions of service of labour inspectors.

Articles 10 and 11. Human and logistical resources of the labour inspection services necessary for the effective discharge of their duties. In its report, the Government indicates that between January 2007 and May 2009, 69 new assistant labour inspectors were recruited by the Labour Inspection Board. By May 2009, the total number of labour inspectors was 534, and there were 68 assistant labour inspectors, while the number of staff assisting labour inspectors on administrative tasks was 108. However, according to the General Report on labour inspection for 2008 there were 591 labour inspectors, of whom 306 were responsible for the inspection of administrative and social aspects of labour relations (social inspections) and 285 for inspections related to occupational health and safety (technical inspections). However, table 1 of the General Report for 2008 indicates that the total number of labour inspectors in the Board was 642, of whom 522 were labour inspectors and 119 assistant labour inspectors. It also emerges from table 1(a) of the General Report on labour inspection for 2008 that there are no labour inspectors for technical inspections in Antalya, Erzurum and Samsun administrative provinces, while there is only one labour inspector for social inspections in Zonguldak and two such inspectors in Erzurum Province. In this context, in its comments submitted through the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), TURK-İŞ, considers that both the number of labour inspectors and the equipment at their disposal are inadequate. TURK-İŞ considers that in order to make labour inspection effective the first step should be to increase the number of labour inspectors and ensure their absolute independence during their activities.

In this respect, the Government announces that the number of labour inspectors will be increased gradually in future, while according to the TISK, the institutional capacity of the Head of the Labour Inspection Board will be strengthened in 2009–11 with the employment of 118 assistant labour inspectors in 2009 under priority 19.4 of the Turkish National Programme for the Adoption of the Acquis Communautaire, published on 31 December 2008 in Official Gazette No. 27097. As regards the equipment and facilities available to labour inspectors, the Government indicates that all labour inspectors in the Board are already equipped with portable computers and that a fund is reserved for the purchase of portable computers for assistant labour inspectors.

The Committee requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the total number of labour inspectors employed, their categories and the measures taken to strengthen the inspection staff. Moreover, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that an appropriate number of inspectors are recruited and assigned to the Antalya, Erzurum and Samsun and Zonguldak administrative provinces. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which it is planned to strengthen the logistical resources of the inspection services and to provide detailed information on the transport facilities, and other office and inspection equipment available to labour inspectors.

Labour inspection and child labour. The Committee notes the information provided by the TURK-İŞ that, according to the studies undertaken in the context of the ILO–IPEC Programme, the number of working children aged 6–14 in the industrial sector has significantly decreased in Turkey. The TURK-İŞ proposes that social and economic measures be taken, compulsory education age raised to 12 years, and that local administrations, public and non-governmental organizations carry out projects to prevent child labour on the streets. The Committee also notes the information provided by the TISK on the opening of a second branch of its Office for Working Children in the Kartal District Vocational Training Centre of the Ministry of Education on 3 May 2007 with the support of the Kartal District (Istanbul) authorities. According to the TISK, a 15-month project entitled “Eliminating the worst forms of child labour in Adana Province: Social cooperation to fight child labour” was launched together with the TURK-İŞ on 12 December 2005. As a result of the project, working on the street and in temporary agricultural workplaces, as well as heavy and dangerous work in small and medium-sized enterprises were identified as the worst forms of child labour in Adana Province. The TISK and TURK-İŞ Social Support Centre for Working Children was opened in Adana on 23 May 2006 in the context of the project. The project made it possible to stop the employment of 345 children and provide medical treatment to 126 children. Although the project ended on 30 March 2007, the TISK continues to finance the health and educational programme of the Centre for Working Children, as it does in the TISK offices for working children.

The Committee requests the Government to provide more information on the measures taken and/or policies designed by the Government to combat illegal recourse to child labour and to promote education among young workers. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the specific role of labour inspectors in combating child labour and relevant statistics on the ten-year project to combat child labour, 2005–15, referred to in its previous report.

Uganda

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the Government has not sent the report requested by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards concerning the measures taken to follow up its conclusions adopted at its session in May–June 2008. However, it notes the information received by the ILO on 11 November 2008 concerning the adoption in 2006 of Employment Act No. 6 and Occupational Safety and Health Act No. 9, and the views expressed by the Central Organization of Free Trade Unions (COFTU) and the National Organization of Trade Unions in Uganda (NOTU) at a tripartite workshop on the application of the Convention. The Committee also notes that, as recommended by the Conference Committee in 2001, 2003 and 2008, an ILO technical assistance mission was received from 13 to 17 July 2009 and that, together with the Government and the social partners and various public bodies, it examined the reasons for the deterioration in the labour inspection system since the 1990s, with a view to remedying it.

Need to establish a labour inspection system that meets the requirements of the Convention

The ILO technical assistance mission noted that the dismantling of the labour inspection system that followed its decentralization observed by an earlier ILO mission in 1995, has progressively worsened. The many interviews it had with staff of the labour administration and other public departments and with the social partners provided the mission with information betraying a level of distress that demands the urgent re-establishment of a labour inspection system able to ensure the supervision of the legal provisions related to conditions of work and the protection of workers, in accordance with Article 3, paragraph 1(a), of the Convention and to provide both employers and workers in industrial and commercial workplaces with useful information for their implementation, as required by Article 3(1)(b).

The field visits proposed to the mission were limited to two very large foreign-owned agro-food companies located in areas of very intense industrial activity (Kampala and Jinja) and the mission regretted that it had not been in a position in which it could assess working conditions in small and medium-sized Ugandan establishments. However, the gradual deterioration in the labour inspection situation can be discerned from the information contained in the annual inspection reports received at the ILO in 1994 and 1996. According to the report covering 1994, the Labour Department had 83 employees, of whom 62 worked in the districts. Despite limited resources, the inspection staff managed to carry out 280 fully fledged visits, 292 visits to monitor implementation and 436 visits for other purposes. As prescribed by Article 3(1)(a) of the Convention, these inspections focused on application of the provisions on working conditions (general conditions and occupational safety and health) and the protection of workers. Of the many complaints from workers that had reached it, the labour inspectorate was able to deal with 1,252 and refer 32 to the courts. The annual inspection report for 1994, as well as providing detailed information on the work of the inspectorate, supplied statistical data together with relevant analyses and comments, including on occupational accidents, placing special emphasis on the lack of general safety and health standards in small and medium-sized establishments.

In 1995, an ILO technical assistance mission found that the labour administration was only represented in 20 of the country's 39 districts and had lost over 75 per cent of its human resources. For example, of the 67 posts planned for the occupational safety and health department, only two existed, one in Jinja, the other in Mbala, notwithstanding the significant number of establishments covered by the 1964 Factories Act and the fact that they were located throughout the country.

The annual inspection report for 1996 referred to 17 collective labour disputes concerning trade union rights, the refusal by employers to pay wage arrears and retirement benefits, and unfair dismissals of unionized workers. With the restructuring of the country's administration, unemployment was compounded by the dismissals of public employees. During the period covered, supervision of working conditions appears to have been marginalized in relation to employment policy and to no longer have been a matter of concern for the Government. The central labour administration's resources had been so reduced that no vehicles were left for travel outside the capital to supervise the operation of district services, some of which were unattainable by telephone. During the year covered by the above report, only 13 of the 21 district labour services were able to communicate information on their work: in all, 1,151 inspection visits were carried out, for some of which transport was provided by the employers. In total, there were 19 occupational safety and health inspection staff. Out of the 104 occupational accidents notified, only eight were investigated. Records showed that 25 per cent of the accidents were in construction and 33 per cent in government services and private security bodies. The 26–30 age group accounted for 34.61 per cent of the accidents, but no legal proceedings had been initiated during the period covered. The industrial court nonetheless apparently played an important role in pacifying and harmonizing industrial relations and, in most of its decisions it found for the workers. Its impact was attributed to its functional and financial independence.

In the observations it made in the years that followed, the Committee repeatedly noted that the Convention was not applied and reminded the Government of the obligations arising out of ratification, asking it to take the necessary steps to remedy the situation of the labour inspection services. Such measures involve, in particular, placing the inspection services under the supervision and control of a central authority and recruiting qualified and properly trained personnel. Financial, material and logistical resources are also essential for the control of the industrial and commercial establishments covered by the Convention and of the relevant national legislation (suitably equipped offices, provision of appropriate technical equipment for inspections and transport facilities and repayment of duty travel expenses). The diversity and complexity of the labour inspection functions defined in the Convention also require labour inspectors to devote most of their time to these duties, in their capacity as public officials who are assured of stability of employment and are independent of improper external influences.

Nevertheless, due to the decentralization of the labour administration as a whole, the Ministry of Labour as such soon disappeared and its component parts were absorbed by a succession of ministries. The labour administration is now a department in the Ministry of Gender, Labour and Social Development (MGLSD). Its resources have been significantly reduced, as has its authority over the decentralized services. While decentralization was designed as a response to the demands of a policy to encourage investment, both national and international, in the interests of developing the national economy and creating jobs, its implementation has become increasingly detrimental to workers because it has overlooked issues relating to conditions of work, which is in violation of the Convention.

The Local Governments Act, No. 1 of 1997, transferred labour issues to the districts, together with services and activities for social rehabilitation, probation and well-being of street children and orphans, the role of women in development, community development, youth, culture and information services. With this transfer of authority, the districts are now exercising powers formerly held by central government, such as formulating development plans on the basis of priorities defined at the local level including raising, levying, managing and assigning resources through separate budgets, and establishing or abolishing public service bodies. As labour administration issues were no longer given priority, district labour departments were consequently reduced to rudimentary structures, and in some instances disappeared altogether. Furthermore, the number of districts increased from 56 to 75 in 2005 and to 80 in 2009, and is likely to increase further in the near future. Only the district of Kampala, which has a special status, is administered by the country's central authorities. COFTU and NOTU have expressed concern at the fragmentation of the country's administration at a time of drastic reductions in labour administration personnel and have called for amendment of the Constitution so that labour inspection can be placed back under the control and supervision of a central authority in a fully fledged ministry of labour endowed with the necessary capacities to fulfil its functions effectively. Although a similar view was expressed by nearly all the political and administrative officials and other stakeholders it met, the mission concluded that there is no such prospect on the agenda.

On 15 September 2008, the Local Governments Act was again amended with a view to the further decentralization of the administration taking account of a distinction between rural and urban entities. In accordance with section 77 of the Act, local governments will have the right and duty to formulate, approve and execute their budgets and plans subject to compulsory budgetary equilibrium (paragraph 1). Subject to the obligation to give priority to the objectives set out in national programmes (paragraph 2), urban governments are given financial independence, provided that their plan is incorporated into the district plan (section 79). The Committee notes that, according to section 83 (paragraph 2), central Government allocates to local governments to finance the operation of decentralized services, an unconditional minimum amount calculated in accordance with Chapter 7 of the Constitution, equal in value to the amount of the previous tax year for the same item.

In its report received in November 2008, the Government stated that it was seeking funds within the framework of the Decent Work Country Programme adopted in May 2007, while pointing out that the enhancement of labour inspection is a key element of a strategy for improvement of industrial relations through the promotion of rights at work. It undertakes to address all the issues raised by the Committee in the report due in 2009, taking into account the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2008. However, the Government has not sent the report as announced, but documented information gathered by the ILO mission of July 2009 shows that, while the MGLSD received an additional budgetary allocation in the course of the year, the labour inspectorate had no place in the MGLSD's budgetary allocations for the current fiscal year and that, moreover, labour administration issues in general are not included in any of the projects or strategies developed for the short and medium term by the Ministry in charge of local governments.

The Committee nevertheless hopes that, as soon as possible, the labour inspectorate will be given a key role in the country's social and economic development strategy, in particular through the process for revising the Decent Work Country Programme adopted in 2007, through the enactment of the above new legislation on employment and occupational safety and health, and to ILO technical assistance in fulfilling the objectives of the Convention. The Committee recalls that labour inspection is a function of the public administration that needs its own operating budget allowing the recruitment of suitable personnel and adequate resources to be made available. It is for the ministry responsible for labour to define requirements for this purpose and to raise awareness among governmental authorities and the social partners, particularly employers, of the positive impact of efficient labour inspection on a country's economic development and enterprise financial results.

The Committee notes the re-establishment of an Industrial Court financed by the state budget. In accordance with Act No. 8 of 2006 on labour disputes (arbitration and settlement), the court hears disputes that the labour inspector has been unable to settle or appeals by one of the parties where there has been no decision within 90 days. However, if the Industrial Court is to play its role fully, it would be advisable for the legislation on the functioning and powers of the labour inspectorate to be revised so as to adapt it to developments in the world of work, and for the legislation on conditions of work to be supplemented by regulations to give it practical effect under the supervision of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes the indication to the technical assistance mission that a parliamentary process is under way for this purpose. The Committee notes that the Employment Act, No. 6 of 2006, and the Occupational Safety and Health Act, No. 9 of 2006, contain provisions that are largely consistent with the Convention, and requests the Government to take measures promptly to give effect to them in practice. In particular, it requests it to ensure that effect is given in the near future to section 3(1) of the Occupational Safety and Health Act (No. 9) and section 9 of the Employment Act (No. 6), concerning the recruitment of the necessary inspection staff to ensure the implementation of these Acts, and that the number of inspectors will be determined in each district on the basis of the technical and geographical criteria referred to in Article 10 of the Convention. The Committee therefore urges the Government to ensure that the necessary conditions are created to establish effective cooperation between the labour administration and the other public services and private institutions that possess useful data (such as the ministries of finance, justice, tourism, commerce and industry, the Bureau of Statistics, the Investment Authority and the National Social Security Fund (NSSF)) for the establishment of a companies register providing the labour inspectorate with the necessary information to develop an inspection programme that takes into account the branches of activity in which workers are the most vulnerable in view of the general conditions of work and the risks for their safety and health.

The Committee notes that, in accordance with section 20 of the Employment Act (No. 6), an annual report containing information on labour inspection must be published by the labour commissioner at the ministry responsible for labour, which seems at least to suggest a return to the idea of a central labour inspection authority within the meaning of Article 4 of the Convention to supervise and control the work done by the district inspection services. An annual report, prepared in accordance with Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention, will also enable the national authorities concerned, as well as the social partners and the ILO's supervisory bodies, to gain a sufficiently clear idea of the way the labour inspection system functions and hence to envisage or propose, as the case may be, the necessary means of improving it.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in pursuit of the above objectives, together with any relevant documents. It would be grateful in particular for information on the manner in which it plans to give effect to Article 4 of the Convention in terms of organizing and running the labour inspection system in practice in the context of the application of the current version of the Local Governments Act. The Committee finally requests the Government to ensure that an annual inspection report, containing the information available on the subjects listed at Article 21 of the Convention and reflecting both progress made and the shortcomings of the labour inspection system, will be published and that a copy will be sent to the ILO.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ukraine

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 2004)

Referring to its previous observation regarding the comments by the Federation of Trade Unions of Ukraine (FTUU), dated 28 September 2009, on the application of this Convention, the Committee notes the Government's communication of 12 January 2010 replying to the points raised by the union.

In its comments, the FTUU referred to Act No. 877-V, adopted on 5 April 2007 by the Supreme Council concerning the fundamental principles of state supervision in the area of economic activity, which entered into force on 1 January 2008. According to the union, the Act was supplemented on 23 May 2009 by an Order of the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine concerning temporary restrictions on state supervision activities in the area of economic activity, applicable until 31 December 2010. Although the FTUU has not transmitted to the ILO copies of the abovementioned instruments, it indicates that they contain a number of discrepancies with regard to the provisions of this Convention and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129).

According to the union, Act No. 877-V significantly restricts the rights of state inspectors and their ability to carry out their supervisory functions as a result of the introduction of additional procedures, namely:

- the requirement to establish the periodicity of inspection visits to workplaces;
- the requirement to obtain specific authorization documents, without which inspection officials may be refused entrance by the employer;
- inspection visits must be carried out only during working hours;
- notice of a planned visit must be given at least ten days in advance;
- the requirement of an order or warrant from the relevant superior authority in case of unscheduled inspections.

Moreover, Cabinet Order No 502 provides that scheduled inspections of economic entities shall be temporarily suspended until 31 December 2010, except in the case of entities which, according to the risk assessment criteria approved by the Cabinet of Ministers, are classified as “high-risk” economic entities, and in the case of regular monitoring operations in connection with the enforcement of tax legislation and the verification of the calculation, completeness and timeliness of payments due under various budgets and state tax and contribution funds.

According to the union, the provisions of these texts undermine the effectiveness of state labour inspection, in particular inspection activities in connection with the enforcement of legislation regarding occupational safety and health and the working environment. The Committee understands that, in response to the union's request (by letter No. 4322-0-33-08-21 of 19 May 2008) for a clarification regarding the legality of the provisions of Act No. 877-V, the Ministry of Justice affirmed that, under the terms of the Constitution and the Act concerning international agreements to which Ukraine is party, international agreements currently in force, which have been accepted by the Supreme Council as binding, are an integral part of the national legislation and must be observed conscientiously in accordance with international law and that, consequently, in case of conflict with national provisions, those of international agreements prevail. However, the Ministry refused to ask the Government to initiate an amendment process of these instruments. As a result, according to the union, the inspectors of the state occupational safety and health and mining inspectorate are hindered in their activities.

The FTUU requests that the Government's attention be drawn to the importance of bringing the national legislation into line with the obligations it has accepted under the terms of this Convention and Convention No. 129.

In reply to the points raised by the FTUU, the Government fully recognizes that Article 12(1)(a) and (2), as well as Article 15(c) of the Convention, have indeed been violated by several provisions of Act No. 877-V, and that the provisions of Cabinet Order No. 502, issued to restrict temporarily the performance of state monitoring activities in the sphere of economic activity until 31 December 2010, are also contrary to the provisions of Articles 16 and 18 of the Convention. Moreover, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, the State Department for Supervision of Labour Legislation (Goznadzortruda) has prepared a Bill to amend Act No. 877-V and a draft Cabinet Order to amend Cabinet Order No. 502, but none of these texts have yet been approved by the competent executive authorities. In this regard, the Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to paragraph 266 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, in which it explains that “the different restrictions placed in law or in practice on inspectors' right of entry into workplaces can only stand in the way of achieving the objectives of labour inspection as set out in the instruments” and notes that “such restrictions are not in conformity with the Conventions”. The Committee recalls that, under the terms of Article 12(1)(a), labour inspectors with proper credentials shall be empowered to enter freely and without previous notice at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection and that “the protection of workers and the technical requirements of inspection should be the primordial criteria for determining the appropriate timing of visits, for example to check for violations such as abusive night work conditions in a workplace officially operating during the daytime, or to carry out technical inspections requiring machinery or production processes to be stopped” (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 270).

As regards the frequency and thoroughness of inspection visits in accordance with Article 16 of the Convention, the Committee notes that “how this provision is applied in practice is the basic test of any labour inspection system” (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 256). It further recalls that “in order for labour inspectors to carry out inspections as often and as thoroughly as prescribed in the instruments, they must have adequate freedom of movement and logistical means. They must also have the necessary information on the enterprises and activities liable to inspection to enable them to focus their interventions on priorities defined on the basis of objective criteria, such as level of occupational risk, categories of men and women workers employed (young persons, migrants) and the presence of a trade union” (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 258).

The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of Act No. 877-V and Cabinet Order No. 502, as well as the related abovementioned draft texts, and to take the necessary measures in the near future to ensure that law and practice are brought into line with the provisions of the Convention with regard in particular to the rights and powers of labour inspectors. It would be grateful if the Government would report on the steps taken and the results achieved and provide the Office with any relevant documentation.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 2004)

Referring to its previous observation regarding the comments by the Federation of Trade Unions of Ukraine (FTUU) dated 28 September 2009 on the application of this Convention, the Committee takes note of the Government’s communication of 12 January 2010 by which the Government replies to the points raised by the union.

In its comments, the FTUU referred to Act 877-V adopted on 5 April 2007 by the Supreme Council concerning the fundamental principles of state supervision in the area of economic activity, which entered into force on 1 January 2008. According to the union, the Act was supplemented on 23 May 2009 by Order of the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine concerning temporary restrictions on state supervision activities in the area of economic activity, applicable until 31 December 2010. Although the FTUU has not transmitted a copy of the abovementioned instruments to the ILO, it indicated a number of discrepancies they contain with regard to the provisions of this Convention as well as the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81).

Referring to its observation under Convention No. 81 and noting that the issues raised by the FTUU and the provisions referred to by the Government relate to the same extent to Articles 1(1)(a) and (2); 20(c); 21 and 24 of the present Convention, the Committee requests the Government to also provide, in addition to the requested documentation, any information relating specifically to the rights, the powers and the means of action of the labour inspection staff in agricultural enterprises.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

United Arab Emirates

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1982)

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest the information and documentation relating to the following provisions of the Convention and specific issues.

Article 3(2) of the Convention. Lightening of additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors in the framework of disputes settlement. The Government indicates that the transfer of the department which examines workers’ conflicts to the Ministry to the Workers’ Abu Dhabi Court was to be effective beginning 2010.

Articles 5(a) and 21(e). Measures aimed at promoting cooperation between the labour inspection service and the judicial system. The Ministry of Labour held several meetings with the judicial bodies to facilitate the procedures of referring work-related criminal cases, which impact on workers’ rights, set up a mechanism to regulate the referral of lawsuits by the Ministry of Labour against undertakings found in violation, and resolve the violations notified by the labour inspectorates. According to the Government this step has enabled the labour inspectorate to refer cases without administrative complications and contributed in deciding on cases of an urgent nature.

Moreover, to implement the guidelines on the development of the adjudication mechanisms, the Ministry of Labour set up three new offices in charge of labour relations at local courts in addition to the offices in each of the Dubai and Abu Dhabi courts. A coordinating committee has been set up between the judicial department in Abu Dhabi and the Ministry of Labour to, notably, help judges and labour officials obtain all the relevant information on workers’ cases. In the context of cooperation with the judicial department in Abu Dhabi, the first programme for the training of labour inspectors was held from 1 to 9 March 2009 at the Training and Judicial Studies Academy, attached to the department. Eighteen inspectors and legal researchers participated.

Referring to its general observation of 2007 under the Convention, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, coordination is under way with the Ministry of Justice and relevant judicial bodies to find a system for the registration of judicial decisions which will be made accessible to the officials and the central authority of the labour inspection system.

Articles 7(3) and 8, 10, 11, 20 and 21. Restructuring of the labour inspection system. Training of labour inspectors and material facilities available for the performance of their functions. According to the Government, three new administrations for inspection have been upgraded: the Workers Guidance Administration; the Occupational Safety and Health Administration; and the Labour Inspection Administration.

The Workers Guidance Administration is responsible for making workers aware of the measures taken by the Ministry and work policies by undertaking field visits to this effect, as well as providing advice and counselling to employers and workers and residents through the media and convene symposia, and orientation lectures in collaboration with other administrative units at the Ministry. It is also responsible for preparing booklets, newsletters and special guiding materials related to inspection, labour laws and policies, and their dissemination through official communication channels.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration is responsible for the formulation of plans, standards and technical instructions and rules which are to be observed in the area of occupational safety and health, the recording of violations of occupational safety and health and the adoption of measures to prevent diseases and injuries by participating in medical arbitration committees, carrying out periodic inspections of various types of undertakings and workplaces liable to inspection, providing protection from occupational injuries, monitoring the requirements and standards of workers' accommodation and occupational safety, and raising awareness among workers through various means. In addition, training programmes and courses for the qualification of labour inspectors at the Ministry continue to be organized. In November 2009, the training concerned judicial enforcement; the labour code; criminal proceedings; application of penal sanctions; alternatives to conflict resolution; problems encountered by inspectors; and ethics of inspectors.

The labour inspection administration is responsible for supervising the application of the federal law which relates to regulating labour relations and the orders putting it to effect, in addition to following up on workers, and investigating the violations committed by undertakings and workers. It is responsible for carrying out various types of inspection visits in accordance with set deadlines so as to ensure a continued revision of the extent of observance by undertakings of the application of the provisions of the law in collaboration with various government bodies. It also prepares reports and statistics related to the administration. According to the Government, the Labour Inspection Administration relies in its work on report forms designed specifically for this purpose so as to regulate the work of the inspection system, and to ensure that labour inspectors carry out their duties as set out in the Convention.

In reply to the Committee as to the reason for the decrease in the number of inspection visits in the Emirate of Dubai, the Government indicates that this was due to the three-month training course which started in October 2007 and was followed by all 84 employees of the inspection department. In 2008, the number of inspections increased from 14,000 to 27,895 in Dubai, after the completion of the training.

Article 3(1)(a). Control of the legal provisions relating to working conditions, accommodation, living and transport for lower skilled workers. The Committee notes the indication by the Government that the guidelines of November 2006 which specify the need to provide decent living conditions to migrant workers, to construct model housing complexes and provide appropriate transportation means between workplaces and workers' accommodation are mandatory and that their implementation has improved, to a large extent, the migrant workers' accommodation and transportation facilities to and from their work. The step taken to refuse to grant reluctant employers collective labour contracts unless a clear commitment to providing suitable accommodation to workers is proved, has been very efficient to this end. Order No. 13 of 2009 issued by the Council of Ministers relating to the manual on general standards for workers' housing, contains relevant provisions. According to the Government, such standards were prepared by the bodies responsible for workers' accommodation in the State, and specialized advisory offices in accordance with relevant best practices and international standards.

Moreover, in an increasing number of workers' residence complexes, which have been built to match the increase in the rates of demand on manpower and are run by private sector undertakings under the supervision of the local government of the Abu Dhabi Emirate, the role of labour inspectors now lies in verifying the application of the conditions and criteria which have been introduced in order to ensure the health and safety of the inhabitants of the residence complexes. The occupational safety and health section of the inspection unit inspects workplaces and workers' accommodation in order to verify the extent of conformity with relevant standards, investigates occupational accidents and provides expertise and knowledge in these fields.

Specific protection of workers exposed to direct sunshine and dehydration. In reply to the previous Committee's request, the Government states that suitable means of transportation have been provided between workers' accommodation and their workplaces in order to put into effect the Order issued by the Undersecretary of the Ministry of the Interior in 2004, which prohibits the transportation of workers on board open vehicles or modified cargo vehicles of all types and sizes. These vehicles were identified as main causes for the increased rate of injuries and deaths of workers.

The Committee also notes the statistical information provided by the Government on violations of Order No. 408 of 2007 which regulates work in the sun during the months of July and August for the period 2007–08 and a copy of Ministerial Order No. 587 of 2009 which relates to determining the hours of work for the tasks carried out in the sun, and in open air places, and the Government's statement that the number of undertakings found in violation has significantly decreased thanks to the increase of inspection visits.

Workers' right to transfer to another employer. The Government communicates, in reply to the previous Committee's request, copies of Ministerial Order No. 634 of 2008 which amends some provisions of Ministerial Order No. 826 of 2005 to facilitate the transfer of the sponsorship of all categories of workers on the basis of a written report of the labour inspection department or by the labour office, as well as a number of other texts out of which Ministerial Order No. 788 of 2009 obliges undertakings to transfer workers' wages through banks, currency exchange companies and financial institutions equipped to operate through a wages protection system (WPS). The latter is a system which was developed by the Central Bank of the United Arab Emirates, equipped with a technique which authorizes the Ministry of Labour to monitor all the data related to workers' wages so as to give a warning to undertakings which are late in the disbursement of workers' wages.

Article 15(c). Confidentiality relating to complaints and their source. In the above context, the Government refers to a service called "a salary system" which is an electronic system allowing workers in the private sector to notify the delay with which undertakings where they are employed pay their wages in relation to set deadlines, and notify the Ministry of illegal deductions or the failure to add overtime hours, without revealing the identity of the plaintiff, so as to keep the worker in his/her job, and to ensure continuity of the employment relationship. Labour inspectors verify the soundness of the complaint as well as the identity of the plaintiff before carrying out the workplace inspection and then adopt the necessary measures without revealing the identity of the person who submitted the complaint. On that occasion, the inspectors also verify the situation of the rest of the workers of the undertaking at fault so as to hide that the visit was performed following a complaint.

Articles 14 and 21(f) and (g). Notification of, and statistics on, employment accidents and cases of occupational disease. In reply to the Committee's previous observation on the lack and imprecision of statistics on employment accidents and the importance of establishing a formal mechanism for the communication to the labour inspectorate of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease, the Government refers to Ministerial Order No. 32 of 1982 and to a Memorandum of Understanding signed by the Ministry of Labour and the health authority of Abu Dhabi to promote the working environment in accordance with the most updated occupational safety standards and to reinforce cooperation with respect to occupational health, safety activities, prevention, as well as to monitor damage and injuries related to work in Abu Dhabi. The instrument also seeks to ensure an exchange of data and statistics on occupational-related diseases, damage and injuries at the workplace, occupational health, injuries and medical care in emergencies, medical care services, medical treatment and clinical results, as well as an evaluation of the extent to which this data coincides. Each undertaking occupying over 15 workers will be obliged to submit a register on occupational injuries and diseases according to the law. The partnership with the health authority is expected to ensure the flow of a large number of data and information on private sector companies, which will help the Ministry in instituting legal proceedings against non-compliant companies. It will also seek to ensure a certain degree of collaboration and coordination in the process of registering occupational injuries between the Ministry of Labour and the authority.

Articles 17 and 18. Deterrent effect of legal proceedings and penalties applied against employers who are in violation of the legal provisions enforced by labour inspectors. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication by the Government that daily newspapers publish the identity of those undertakings which violate the legal provisions relating to certain areas of conditions of work. It notes in this regard, the communication of a copy of the UAE Gazette, dated 25 July 2007, whereby 201 names of such offenders are mentioned. The Government also mentions other legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers in industrial and commercial establishments and refers again in this regard to the possible refusal to authorize the conclusion of any new labour contract by an undertaking in violation or the eventual transfer of the sponsorship of its workers. It states that these measures led to more attention being paid by undertakings to the observance of the provisions of the law because of the consequences of a cessation of transactions with them and the refusal of new work permits for the recruitment of workers indispensable to the running of their activities. In 2008, 7,083 undertakings were stopped.

However, it is also intended to launch an annual labour prize to reward undertakings which observe the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers.

Noting that no annual report on labour inspection activities has been received at the ILO to allow for an assessment of the application, in practice, of the new provisions referred to by the Government, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would take the necessary measures to ensure, according to Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention, that such annual report is published soon and that it contains all relevant information. It recalls that guidance is provided in Paragraph 9 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), as to the appropriate manner in which the requested information could be disaggregated.

In addition, while noting the communication of a copy of Order No. 367 issued by the Undersecretary of the Ministry of Interior on 25 December 2002, which prohibits the confiscation of the passport of any person resident on the UAE territory without a judicial order, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide statistics of infringements of this Order.

United Kingdom

Anguilla

Labour Inspectorates (Non-Metropolitan Territories) Convention, 1947 (No. 85)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's brief report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its 2009 direct request which read as follows:

The Committee notes the indication by the Government that the United Kingdom no longer provides grant-in-aid to the Government of Anguilla in an effort to ensure greater economic and political autonomy to the territory. It also notes that the territory has no responsibility for its economic development, social progress and employment policies. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide the ILO with a copy of the legal provisions relating to the status of the territory as described in the report and its impact on the application of the Convention, and give, in particular, details on the arrangements made between the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of Anguilla regarding the allocation to the labour inspectorate, the human resources and financial and material means necessary for its functioning.

The Committee observes that for more than 15 years, no new information had been received at the ILO concerning measures undertaken in order to give effect in law and in practice to the Convention, and that the only information contained in the report is that labour inspectors attend all training programmes in labour inspection and occupational health and safety organized by the ILO subregional office. The Committee hopes that the Government will communicate in its next report, as detailed information as possible on the application of each of the provisions of the Convention as well as copy of relevant legal texts and available statistics on the labour inspection activities performed during the period covered by the report.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

British Virgin Islands

Labour Inspectorates (Non-Metropolitan Territories) Convention, 1947 (No. 85)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat the matters raised in its 2006 direct request which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's report to the effect that, since the previous report (1999), no change has occurred in application of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government has given the same information in successive reports since 1979. As the Committee has received no information on which to base an appreciation of the level of application of the Convention ratified in 1950, it is bound to request the Government to supply in its next report to the International Labour Office, in conformity with article 22 of the ILO Constitution, up to date information on measures taken or envisaged to give effect in law and in practice to each of Articles 1 to 5 in reply to the requests made in Parts I to VI of the report form of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1967)

Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention. Publication and communication to the ILO of an annual report on the work of the labour inspection services. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government in its report received in September 2009 in reply to the previous comments. In particular, it notes with interest the indication of the existence of a website for the National Institute for Prevention and Occupational Safety and Health (INPSASEL), on which information is published on the mandate, activities and results of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes that in 2009 and 2010 activities were targeted at:

- conditions of work and accommodation of workers engaged in catering (violations were noted in relation to safety and health and the obligation to notify risks, accidents and cases of occupational diseases);
- the working conditions of men and women workers in the State of Aragua, bringing to light a significant number of cases of persons suffering from musculoskeletal injuries; a similar operation is planned in 32 other regions of the country according to the operational plan 2010;
- risks related to health, occupational safety and the environment in relation to the transport of chemicals and hazardous gases;
- supervision of workers' delegates responsible for prevention in workplaces throughout the country;
- the registration of occupational safety and health committees (9,595 in the construction and factory sectors, as well as in commercial establishments in 2009); and
- the system for the declaration of cases of occupational diseases (1,904 cases declared in 2009).

The Committee also notes the detailed analysis of the statistics of industrial accidents over the period 2005–06, based on their geographical distribution, economic activity, occupation, material factor, part of the body injured, nature of the injury, educational level of the worker and age group. The efforts made to reduce the phenomenon of under-declaration are also reported to have allowed the reinforcement of INPSASEL policies in relation to men and women workers engaged in sectors that are traditionally excluded, namely SMEs, the informal economy, young workers, women and hitherto invisible categories of workers.

Analysis of the statistics is also reported to have enabled the Institute to reinforce and renew public policy on occupational safety and health and to reorient its programmes of action through strategic intervention projects, particularly in construction, factories and mines, with particular emphasis on activities in the petroleum sector, both with regard to its strategic importance and the high level of occupational risks which characterize it.

The Committee notes however that the above statistical analysis covers a relatively old period and reminds the Government that Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention respecting the annual report on the work of the labour inspection services determine, respectively, the time-limits and the content of such a report. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would therefore take measures to ensure that, as envisaged by Articles 20 and 21, the central labour inspection authority publishes and communicates to the ILO each year within the required time-limits an annual report containing updated information on the relevant laws and regulations, the staff of the labour inspection service, the number of workplaces liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein, statistics of inspection visits, violations and penalties imposed, as well as of industrial accidents and occupational diseases. In view of the level of detail of the relevant data already posted on the INPSASEL website, the Government should be in a position to comply with this requirement rapidly and to provide information in its next report on the progress achieved in this respect, as well as ensuring that an annual labour inspection report is published and communicated to the ILO in the near future.

Zimbabwe

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1993)

Articles 6, 10 and 11 of the Convention. The Committee notes that in its brief report received on 21 December 2009, the Government is confined to indicating that the information previously requested by the Committee on the composition and conditions of service of labour inspection staff and the material resources made available to them, is being collected and will be communicated in due course. It also notes the comments made by the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) in communications dated 29 August 2008 and 21 September 2009 in relation to the scarcity of human and material resources which obstructs the effective exercise of the functions of the labour inspection system. It notes that the Government confirms in its report that resource constraints have hampered the inspection service owing to economic challenges. The Committee also notes that the ILO is to provide a technical assistance package in the areas to be identified by the Government and the social partners. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the composition and distribution of the inspectorate staff responsible for general conditions of work and occupational safety and health, and on any development with regard to inspectors' conditions of service; (ii) the manner in which effect is given to each provision of Article 11 of the Convention, specifying in particular the procedure for refunding labour inspectors' duty travel costs. Please also provide copies of the relevant texts.

Articles 5(a) and 18. Suitable and effectively applied sanctions. In its previous comments, the Committee had welcomed the adjustment of pecuniary penal sanctions to ensure that they maintain a deterrent effect and the possibility of imprisonment for violations of the fundamental rights of employees. The Committee refers in this regard to its general observation of 2007 on the importance of effective cooperation between the labour inspection and the justice system in ensuring the effective enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. In this regard, the Committee notes the conclusions and recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry appointed under article 26 of the ILO Constitution to examine the observance by the Government of Zimbabwe of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), according to which, there are significant gaps in the administration of justice and it is necessary to provide appropriate resources and training to the courts, especially the Labour Court and the key institutions and personnel in the country, in the areas of freedom of association and collective bargaining and human rights more generally [Report of the Commission of Inquiry, December 2009, para. 606(4) and (5)]. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged, including in the framework of the technical assistance package, to strengthen the cooperation between the labour inspection services and the justice system, including through training of labour inspectors and judges on the fundamental rights of workers.

Noting moreover that no reply has been provided in relation to its previous request for statistical data on the contraventions reported by inspectors in respect of the subjects covered by the Convention, and the sanctions imposed and effectively applied in practice, the Committee once again asks the Government to provide this information.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual inspection report. The Committee notes that no annual report on the activities of the labour inspection system, as prescribed by Articles 20 and 21, has been received by the ILO since the ratification of the Convention in 1993. In its report the Government indicates that it has previously sought the assistance of the ILO in order to set up a labour market information system which is a prerequisite to the production of annual reports but this assistance is yet to be availed of. Drawing the Government's attention to its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection in which it explains the importance of publishing and communicating to the ILO an annual report on inspection activities, and to Part IV of Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81) on the manner in which the requisite information might be presented to good effect, the Committee trusts that the Government will ensure that effect is given as rapidly as possible to Articles 20 and 21, and invites the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the ILO in this regard.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would report any progress made towards ensuring an effective and efficient labour inspection system with the support of the social partners.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes that the Government's report, received on 21 December 2009, is confined to indicating that the Government takes note of the Committee's comments and undertakes to keep the Office informed of any developments in the strengthening of labour inspection in the agricultural sector.

The Committee also notes the comments made by the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) in a communication dated 21 September 2009, which provides information in relation to the comments previously made by the Committee. According to the ZCTU, there is no legislation in place that deals specifically with agricultural undertakings. However, occupational safety and health issues are covered under the Environment Management Act (Chapter 20:27) according to which, every worker has the right to work in an environment that does not endanger his or her safety. The Act regulates the usage, storage, labelling and disposal of hazardous substances and articles. The Act is complemented by the collective bargaining agreement in the agricultural industry SI323/1993 which compels employers to provide employees appropriate protective clothing and devices to protect them from hazardous substances. The labour inspection in agriculture is also covered by sections 125–126 of the Labour Act which empower labour officers and designated agents of Employment Councils to investigate and inspect work practices in any employment establishment.

The ZCTU deplores that this enforcement mechanism has not been effectively applied in farms since 2000 due to the troubled political situation. Labour officers as well as designated agents of Employment Councils are incapacitated in terms of resources. It adds that political violence in some farms is still a problem and that trade unions, in particular the officials of the General Agriculture and Plantation Workers' Union (GAPWUZ) which is affiliated to the ZCTU are harassed, beaten, detained and intimidated whenever they try to conduct trade union activities. According to the ZCTU, in some farms that have been compulsorily acquired by the Government, workers are evicted from their dwellings for demanding their salaries; efforts to enforce payment of salaries are becoming fruitless and a relevant dispute is pending before the National Employment Council for the Agriculture Sector while the eviction dispute is pending in the Mutare Magistrate Court as Case No. 42/09. Furthermore, the employers are refusing to negotiate insisting that the 10 Zimbabwe dollars (ZWD) salary currently paid to farm workers is adequate. The lack of meaningful inspections in the agriculture sector subjects farm workers to exploitation and lack of enforcement and penalties remain a challenge. The Committee requests the Government to provide any comments it may consider appropriate to the observations of the ZCTU. It further requests the Government to send a detailed report on the manner in which the Convention is applied in law and in practice on the basis of the questions raised in the report form of the Convention.

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 63 (Algeria, Barbados, Chile, Cuba, Djibouti, Egypt, France, France: French Polynesia, France: New Caledonia, Uruguay); Convention No. 81 (Armenia, Australia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Benin, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burkina Faso, China: Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Cuba, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ecuador, France, France: New Caledonia, Gabon, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lebanon, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Malta, Mauritania, Republic of Moldova, Netherlands, Netherlands: Aruba, Portugal, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Suriname, Swaziland, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukraine, United Kingdom: Gibraltar, Viet Nam, Zimbabwe); Convention No. 85 (United Kingdom: Montserrat); Convention No. 129 (Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Colombia, Egypt, Estonia, France: New Caledonia, Hungary, Kazakhstan, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malta, Netherlands, Norway, Serbia, Slovenia, Spain, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Ukraine); Convention No. 150 (Albania, Armenia, Australia, Belarus, Benin, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, China, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Gabon, Guinea, Guyana, Jamaica, Jordan, Kyrgyzstan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Mali, Mauritius, Republic of Moldova, Romania, San Marino, Seychelles, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Kingdom: Isle of Man, Zambia, Zimbabwe); Convention No. 160 (Armenia, Australia, Australia: Norfolk Island, Austria, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Benin, Plurinational State of Bolivia, Canada, China: Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Greece, Guatemala, India, Ireland, Italy, Kyrgyzstan, San Marino, Tajikistan, United Kingdom, United Kingdom: Gibraltar).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 150 (Argentina, Israel); Convention No. 160 (El Salvador).

Employment policy and promotion

Algeria

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1969)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government in August 2009 in reply to the observation of 2008. The Government indicates that a Plan of Action for the Promotion of Employment and Combating Unemployment was adopted in April 2008. This plan places the creation of lasting and decent employment at the heart of economic and social policies and aims to reduce the unemployment rate, standing at 13 per cent since 2007, to under 10 per cent by 2009–10 and under 9 per cent by 2011–13. Seven priority areas have been determined in the plan of action, including: support for investment in the employment-creating economic sector, promotion of training leading to qualifications, promotion of an incentive policy for the creation of employment in favour of enterprises and promotion of youth employment through the new mechanism providing assistance with vocational integration. The Government indicates that employment support programmes have also been put in place, such as the national programme for the development of agriculture and the national programme for rural development, which aim to provide rural groups that usually have no land assets with the financial and material means to enable them to participate in the implementation of projects in their locality. The Committee also notes the National Economic and Social Pact, which was concluded on 30 September 2006 for a period of five years. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report whether any particular difficulties have been encountered in achieving the objectives of the National Economic and Social Pact, adopted in September 2006, and the Plan of Action for the Promotion of Employment and Combating Unemployment, adopted in April 2008, and to state to what extent these difficulties in job creation have been overcome. The Committee also requests the Government to include up-to-date information on the current situation and trends regarding the active population, employment, underemployment and unemployment, throughout the country and in the different regions, by sector of activity, sex, age and level of qualifications.

Youth employment. The Committee notes the vocational integration assistance mechanism (DAIP), which has facilitated the conclusion of 48,002 professional integration contracts, 29,721 vocational integration contracts and 86,573 training/integration contracts. By the end of 2008, a total of 164,296 jobs had been created for young first-time jobseekers. The DAIP also introduced a training/integration contract for young persons without training or qualifications, by means of an apprenticeship with a master craftsman for one year with a grant of 4,000 Algerian dinars (DZD) per month for a maximum period of six months. In the same context, there are plans to pay grants of DZD3,000 to unqualified young persons who embark on training in shortage occupations. A local project financing study committee (CLEF) responsible for evaluating projects presented by young jobseekers, in collaboration with the National Youth Employment Support Agency (ANSEJ), has been established. According to the information compiled in the General Survey of 2010 concerning employment instruments, the Committee noted that there is a high rate of unemployment among educated workers, particularly young university graduates, who are unable to find employment commensurate with their skill level. This is now an issue for the advanced market economies as well as developing countries. Not only are the skills of young graduates underutilized, but this pattern of casual jobs can also prove detrimental to their lifetime career progression. The Committee therefore encourages governments to develop job creation and career guidance policies targeted at this new category of the educated unemployed (General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 800). The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate in its next report the results achieved for ensuring productive employment for the recipients of the vocational integration assistance mechanism (DAIP) and to provide information on the new measures adopted to combat youth unemployment, particularly young graduates and under- or unqualified young persons.

Promotion of small and micro-enterprises. The Committee notes the measures adopted for promoting the development of SMEs, particularly in the form of training in techniques for the creation and management of activities for promoters; the development of business incubators; the setting up of facilitation centres in the craft sector; the establishment of an advisory council for SMEs; and the setting up of three specialist micro-enterprise agencies and specific funds to support small enterprises. In 2008, a total of 13,191 micro-enterprises were created, generating 37,154 permanent jobs. In the 2010 General Survey, the Committee also emphasized the importance for small and medium-sized enterprises to have access locally and nationally to support services for human resources development. The Committee requests the Government to supply information in its next report on the measures taken “to create an environment conducive to the growth and development of small and medium-sized enterprises” (see Paragraph 5 of the Job Creation in Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises Recommendation, 1998 (No. 189)).

Labour market policies in favour of workers with disabilities. The Government indicates that centres providing assistance through work and also teaching centres provide training for persons with disabilities with a view to their vocational integration. The Committee requests the Government to supply further details in its next report on the activities of these centres and to include any other relevant information concerning the integration of workers with disabilities in the labour market.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and implementation of policies. The Committee notes the establishment at national level of two national committees, the first chaired by the Prime Minister and the second by the Minister for Employment, and also of a local committee responsible for the monitoring and coordination of employment mechanisms in order to evaluate progress towards full employment. The Committee invites the Government to supply in its next report, further information on the activities of these committees indicating, in particular, the contribution of the social partners to the formulation and revision of employment policies and programmes. It also requests the Government to indicate the manner in which account is taken of the opinion of “representatives of other sectors of the economically active population” such as those working in the rural sector and the informal economy, with a view to securing their full cooperation in formulating and enlisting support for such policies.

Angola

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1976)

Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. The Committee notes the succinct report provided by the Government in May 2010. In its 2008 observation the Committee noted that, in the context of its policy to combat unemployment and poverty, the Government established some public policies with a view to stimulating employment. It further noted that employment and vocational training were one of the ten priorities of the poverty reduction strategy, which should channel the resources obtained from oil to create favourable opportunities for productive employment for young persons and to reduce the informal economy. The Committee observed that the social indicators were a source of great concern – 70 per cent of the population survived on less than US$2 a day and enrolment in primary schools was increasing very slowly (from 50 per cent in 1990 to 53 per cent in 2000). It therefore emphasized the need to guarantee the essential function of employment services to promote employment in the country. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that the employment service staff is composed of public officials who are hired through public competition according to the needs of the Ministry of Public Administration, Employment and Social Security and of the employment centre. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide a report containing the available statistical information on the number of public employment offices established, the number of applications for employment received, vacancies notified and persons placed in employment by such offices (Part IV of the report form) and to provide information on the following matters:

- consultations held with representatives of employers and workers on the organization and operation of the employment service, and on the development of employment policy (Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention);
- the manner in which the employment service is organized and the activities which it performs to effectively carry out the functions set out in Article 6;
- the activities of the public employment service in relation to socially vulnerable categories of jobseekers, with particular reference to workers with reduced mobility and disabilities (Article 7);
- the results of the measures adopted to give effect to Act No. 1 of 2006 to encourage young persons seeking their first job (Article 8);
- the measures proposed by the Training Centre for Trainers (CENFOR) and other institutions to provide training or further training to employment service staff (Article 9(4));
- the measures proposed by the employment service in collaboration with the social partners to encourage the full use of employment service facilities (Article 10); and
- the measures adopted or envisaged by the employment service to secure cooperation between the public employment service and private employment agencies (Article 11).

The Committee recalls that the Office is in a position to provide the Government with technical advice and assistance for the establishment of a public employment service, as required by the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Argentina

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1956)

Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. In reply to the 2005 observation, the Committee notes the report received in 2010 in which the Government indicates that 324 municipal employment offices have been established in 23 provinces with a coverage of 76 per cent of the total population. In 2008, the employment offices provided services for 157,548 persons and in 2009 for 316,957 persons. The Committee notes that the National Employment Services Network also endeavours to provide vocational guidance, support for job-seeking, employment placement, guidance for self-employment and referral to educational institutions and/or training activities. The Committee invites the Government to provide up-to-date information in its next report on the measures adopted to ensure that the National Employment Services Network has sufficient offices to meet the needs of employers and workers in each of the regions of the country (Article 3 of the Convention). In this respect, the Committee invites the Government to include the statistical data requested in Part IV of the report form for the Convention on the number of applications for employment received, the number of vacancies notified and the number of persons placed in employment by the 324 municipal employment offices.

Cooperation with the social partners. The Government refers in its report to the action taken by employment offices and also mentions the establishment of the Employment Services Directorate under the National Directorate of the Federal Employment Service. The Committee refers to its General Survey of 2010 on the employment instruments, in which it highlighted the fact that direct and constant interaction between the public services and employers and jobseekers in the job market is essential (paragraph 208 of the General Survey of 2010). The Committee reiterates the request that it has been making for many years for the Government to include in its report information on the manner in which the social partners have been associated with the activities of the public employment service. The Committee recalls the requirement in Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention to establish advisory committees for the full cooperation of the representatives of employers and workers in the organization and operation of the employment service.

Strengthening of employment services through technical cooperation. The Committee notes the final report of the Integrated Support Programme for the Reactivation of Employment in Argentina (AREA) of October 2008. The AREA programme was supported by the Government of Italy and received ILO assistance to facilitate the creation of public employment services, vocational training and local development. The Committee invites the Government to include information in its next report on the manner in which ILO advice has contributed to strengthening the operation of the public employment service.

Austria

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1972)

The Committee notes the Government's report for the period ending May 2009, including replies to its 2008 direct request, the Second National Reform Programme for Growth and Employment, the Economic Report Austria 2009 as well as current labour market statistics.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends and active labour market measures. The Committee notes that the goal of full employment had been reached in August 2008, when the unemployment rate stood at 3.3 per cent. The Government states that as a result of the global financial and economic crisis, since autumn 2008, the situation of the Austrian labour market had deteriorated and unemployment rose by 30 percentage points as compared to autumn 2008. According to data available from the OECD, this rate reached 4.9 per cent in the fourth quarter 2009 after having peaked at 5.1 per cent in that year's third quarter. This drop of the employment rate, the first for seven years, mostly affected young persons, men and foreigners working in manufacturing and for temporary work agencies. The Government remains committed to again achieve full employment and has introduced a package of measures to increase the employment rate beyond the EU's targets for 2010. Having reached the overall EU quantitative goal of 70 per cent in 2008, the employment rate stood at 72.1 per cent. Having achieved the goal of 60 per cent as early as 2001, the female employment rate in 2008 was 65.8 per cent. The Government is further aware that as before, the better integration of older workers in the labour market, which has reached 41 per cent in 2008, continues to be a key in order to reach the Stockholm target of 50 per cent. The Committee recalls that increasing the participation and employment rates of older workers is a crucial issue common to advanced economies in light of the ageing and shrinking of their working age population.

The Committee notes that in light of the ongoing effects of the global economic crisis, the measures undertaken by the Government to stimulate the economy and create jobs resulted in economic packages and tax breaks amounting to €5.7 billion – 2 per cent of the Austrian GDP. Furthermore, the budget for active labour market policies has been increased by almost half; the total in 2009 was €1.3 billion. Legislative measures comprise the Employment Promotion Act 2009, which focuses on expansion of short-time work, training and facilitating the establishment of labour foundations. The “Early Intervention Strategy” remains the Government's main tool to improve the integration of young and older persons in the labour market. The employment campaign for persons with disabilities will be continued and supported with additional resources to facilitate their entry into the labour market. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide in its next report information on the situation, level and trends of employment, unemployment and underemployment, both in the aggregate and as they affect particular categories of workers, especially with regard to young persons and workers with disabilities.

Article 3. Consultation with social partners. The Committee notes that the social partners' proposals were taken into consideration by the Government. This led to a reform of the Youth Employment Package 2008 to include on-the-job and external training and the implementation of a training guarantee for young persons below the age of 18. In this regard the Committee notes with interest that the social partners' document “Labour Market – Future 2010” would be integrated into the 24 integrated guidelines for growth and employment of the National Reform Programme. The Committee invites the Government to also include in its next report updated information on the participation of the social partners in the design and implementation of other active employment market measures as required by the Convention.

Belarus

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1968)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Measures to promote employment. The Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2009 containing replies to the 2008 direct request. The Committee also recalls its 2009 observation, including comments submitted by the Belarusian Congress of Democratic Trade Union (CDTU), which indicated that short-term contracts, in practice, limit workers' rights to free choice of employment. Under Presidential Decree No. 29 of 1999, employers may conclude fixed-term contracts with all categories of employees, including those who already have indefinite contracts. The CDTU argued that such legal framework hinders the workers' right to free choice of employment and is contrary to the spirit of the Convention. The CDTU drew attention to instances of abuse by some employers in Bobruisk and Novopolotok, who have threatened workers with dismissal and non-renewal of fixed-term contracts. In its General Survey of 2010 concerning employment instruments, the Committee indicated that the realization of the right to work as a basic human right can be attained through the promotion of full, productive and freely chosen employment as the cornerstone of economic and social policies. The Committee, referring to Article 1(2)(c) considered that, similar to the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the right to work included the obligation to assure individuals their right to freely chosen or accepted work, including the right not to be deprived of work unfairly (paragraphs 48 and 49 and summary on page 24 of the 2010 General Survey). The Committee thus hopes that the Government will report on the regulations adopted to generate decent jobs with adequate protection specifying how it has been possible to satisfy the employment needs of the workers whose short-term contract of employment has ended.

Active employment policy. Coordination with economic and social policy. The Government recalls that the State Employment Promotion Programme, aimed to enhance the effective use of available human resources, is annually approved by the Council of Ministers. According to the data provided by the Government in its report, the unemployment rate was at 0.8 per cent of the total economically active population in January 2009. In 2008, 4,522,600 persons were employed; 162,700 new jobs have been created, including 1,492 temporary jobs under the Youth Work Experience Programme; 23,200 permanent jobs for unemployed persons; and 509 partially subsidized jobs for persons with disabilities. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information in its next report on policies and programmes promoting full employment and how these policies and programmes will translate into productive and lasting employment opportunities for the unemployed and those categories of workers most affected by the crisis.

Equitable regional development. In reply to previous requests, the Government indicated that, as part of the State Employment Programme for 2008, it had taken several labour market measures to address the consistently high level of unemployment in 36 small and medium-sized towns, villages and regions. The Government indicates that out of 31,000 jobs created, 7,700 were in small towns and contributed to a subsequent decrease in unemployment rates among those which were otherwise consistently high. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken to address high levels of unemployment in small and medium-sized towns, as well as the results of such measures.

Vulnerable categories of workers. The Committee notes that the State Employment Programme for 2008 includes particular measures for those who are unable to compete on equal terms in the labour market. The Government indicates that in 2008 the local authorities reserved a total of 25,600 jobs for persons with disabilities, young persons, and persons released from correctional institutions. The Government also communicates that subsidized jobs have been created to provide temporary employment to young persons who are graduates of higher educational institutions, specialized schools, and vocational and technical schools. The Government reports that the unemployment rate for women decreased from 66 per cent in January 2008 to 60.6 per cent in 2009. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing information on the active measures adopted to promote employment for vulnerable categories of workers and the impact of such measures.

Education and vocational training policies. The Committee notes that the national system of vocational training is developed and implemented under the Regulations on the Organization of Vocational Training, Retraining and Further Training of the Unemployed (Order No. 1334 of 2006) and the Regulations on the Continuous Training of Manual and Non-Manual Workers (Order No. 599 of 2007). The Government explains that the vocational training provided is shaped by the regional labour market situation, as determined annually by different bodies of the state employment service, and that unemployed persons are provided with compensation during the period of their training. The Government communicates that a total of 22,300 unemployed persons received vocational training in 2008; 11,000 of them were trained in their first occupation, 9,600 underwent retraining, and 1,600 received further training. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures mentioned above on enabling a better alignment of vocational education and future labour market needs.

Article 3. Participation of social partners. The Committee notes that the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection consulted the Federation of Trade Unions of Belarus (FPB) and the Belarusian Confederation of Industrialists and Entrepreneurs (BCIE) in the design and implementation of the State Employment Programme for 2009–10. The Government indicates that the General Agreement for 2009–10, signed in December 2008 by the Government, the national employers' organizations, and the trade unions, contains a chapter entitled "Development of the labour market and employment promotion”, emphasizing the need to prioritize active labour market measures. Furthermore, the tripartite National Council for Labour and Social Issues convenes every six months to supervise compliance with the General Agreement. The Committee also notes that the interests of the agricultural sector are represented in the National Council for Labour and Social Affairs by the Agricultural Sector Workers’ Union (ASWU), a workers’ organization, and the Belarusian Agroindustrial Union (BelAPS), an employers’ organization. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on participation of the social partners in employment policy formulation and implementation.

Cambodia

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes the Government’s report received in May 2010 containing some replies to the points raised in the 2009 observation. The Committee has also benefited from the information provided by the ILO specialists in the Regional Office for Asia and the Pacific.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of social and economic policy with poverty reduction. In its report, the Government refers to the implementation of the National Strategic Development Plan, the Rectangular Strategy Plan, and the Vocational Training’s Strategic Plan. The Committee notes that the Government’s new policies under the Tourism Law include plans to establish a tourism-focused research institute, university, and vocational school to promote industry-specific skills. The Government details other measures adopted to respond to the global crisis, including provision of short-term vocational training and micro-credit service to newly unemployed workers and availability of low interest, short-term credit to farmers in small and medium-sized enterprises. The Government also describes the 2008–11 implementation of the Emergency Food Project financed by the Asian Development Bank, which seeks to build a better response system to food crises, provide subsidies for seeds and fertilizers, and distribute free food to the most vulnerable groups in 200 communes and seven provinces. The Committee notes that the Government also endorses a policy of labour migration to neighbouring countries as a way of reducing poverty and unemployment. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the achievements of the employment objectives defined in the Rectangular Strategy and other development plans designed to promote full, productive, and lasting employment opportunities to the unemployed and other categories of workers affected by the crisis. The Committee also invites the Government to report on the action taken within the framework of an active employment policy to prevent abuse in the recruitment of Cambodians working abroad (see Part X of the Employment Policy (Supplementary Provisions) Recommendation, 1984 (No. 169)).

Employment trends. The Committee notes that according to the Ministry of Planning’s 2007 Labour Force Report, Cambodia’s labour force participation rate in 2007 remained at 75 per cent and its unemployment rate continued to be low at 1 per cent. The informal economy is said to provide up to 90 per cent of all employment due to inadequate opportunities and wages in the formal sector. The Committee notes that under the global economic crisis, the economy has experienced a significant drop from the average growth rate exceeding 10 per cent in the years between 2004 and 2007 to loss of 2 per cent in 2009, although the growth rate in 2010 has recovered to a rate between 4 and 5 per cent. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report updated information on the labour market and employment trends and communicate any difficulties experienced in collecting relevant data and using such data to implement policies in accordance with the Convention.

ILO technical assistance. The Government indicates improvements in labour law compliance since the Better Factories in Cambodia Programme despite the pressure engendered by the economic crisis. Minimum wage compliance rate increased by 12 per cent, while the compliance rates regarding requirements to provide protective equipment and install needle guards on sewing machines have also increased by 12 per cent and 7 per cent, respectively. Noting that the garment industry has been particularly affected by the crisis and that its workers are among the most vulnerable, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress in implementing the Better Factories initiatives in the country and its impact on fostering productive employment.

Regional development and rural employment. The Committee notes the Government’s efforts to address the regional disparity in development by promoting the tourism industry, planning to establish Special Economic Zones in locations other than Phnom Penh, and cooperating with regional partners like Japan to develop the triangle area of Cambodia–Laos–Viet Nam. The Committee also notes that the ILO has assisted the Government since 1992 to promote labour-based appropriate technology (LBAT) to build essential rural infrastructure and that this strategy is currently being considered as a part of the Government’s comprehensive strategy to improve social safety through productive and employment-intensive public works. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the effects of the abovementioned measures on promoting employment opportunities in the rural areas, including data and analysis examining the progress made towards achieving equitable regional development. In addition, the Committee invites the Government to detail the specific employment objectives of the Triangle Development Area in its next report.

Youth employment. In its 2009 observation, the Committee expressed its concern regarding the estimated rate of 275,000 young people annually entering the labour market. The Committee understands that the Government is finalizing a youth policy with an action plan partly addressing the employment issue. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on specific measures adopted to generate employment opportunities for the youth.

Educational and training policies. The Committee notes the establishment of the National Training Board, headed by the Deputy Prime Minister and composed of representatives from the private sector, training institutions, and governmental ministries. The Board seeks to improve the existing educational and vocational institutions by setting national standards and certificates in cooperation with foreign experts, as well as creating a National Employment Agency and job centres. The Government indicates that there are 45 public and 209 private/NGO educational and vocational institutions and that the number of students graduating from these programmes has increased by 22.5 per cent in the years between 2006 and 2008. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the effects of such educational and training measures on increasing employment opportunities.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Government continues to indicate that the Labour Advisory Committee has not been consulted in the development and implementation of employment policies. The Committee emphasizes that social dialogue is essential in normal times and that it becomes even more so in times of crisis. The employment instruments require member States to promote and engage in genuine tripartite consultations (General Survey of 2010 concerning employment instruments, paragraph 794). The Committee invites the Government to intensify its efforts to take into account the stakeholders' perspectives in formulating and implementing employment policies. The Committee asks the Government to address this essential issue in its next report by demonstrating how the representatives of employers and workers are consulted at the policy planning and implementation stages so that their experience and views are taken into account.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1968)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Declaration and pursuit of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the report received in November 2009, in which the main legislative provisions adopted in relation to training and employment are listed. The Government indicates that the Committee of Experts will be informed as soon as possible of the results of action taken in response to the matters raised in the observation of 2008. In the General Survey of 2010 concerning employment instruments, the Committee noted the National Agreement for Employment, Training and Labour Protection, signed in May 2009 in response to the crisis. The measures included encouraging the retention of workers and promoting skills training with tax incentives for enterprises which facilitate the training of workers as an alternative to redundancy. According to data published by the ILO in the 2009 Labour Overview, the unemployment rate increased from 7.9 per cent in 2008 to 10 per cent in 2009, particularly affecting women and young people. In order to be able to examine the manner in which the Convention is applied, the Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information on how an active policy designed to promote full and productive employment has been formulated within the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy. The Committee requests the Government once again to identify the most effective programmes with the most positive impact on the creation of employment for the most vulnerable groups, such as women, workers in precarious situations and workers affected by restructuring.

Youth unemployment. Coordination of vocational education and training measures with employment policy. Participation of the social partners. The Committee reiterates the other points raised in its observation of 2008, in relation to which the Government is requested to supply detailed information in its report on the following:

- the measures adopted to ensure decent working conditions for young persons entering the labour market;
- the manner in which education, training and lifelong learning policies are coordinated with prospective employment opportunities;
- the manner in which the experience and views of the social partners are fully taken into account, their full cooperation secured, and their support enlisted for the formulation and implementation of the employment policy. In particular, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on formal procedures for consultation with the social partners on the matters covered by the Convention (Article 3);
- the action taken as a result of the assistance or advice received from the ILO with regard to employment policy (Part V of the report form).

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes with interest the detailed information provided by the Government in September 2009, in reply to the tripartite discussion that took place in the Conference Committee in June 2009 and to its previous observation.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Formulation of an employment policy. The Committee notes that the Government pursues long-term strategies and policies for employment promotion, prioritizes employment expansion in the socio-economic development and endeavours to achieve a healthy interaction between economic development and employment generation. The Government has devoted its attention to developing labour-intensive and tertiary industries, private enterprise and enterprises with foreign investment, small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), self-employment and flexible forms of employment. To ensure that job creation is placed at the centre of macroeconomic policies, the authorities have established interdepartmental employment working groups for policy coordination. A joint ministerial meeting system which was headed by a vice-premier brought together representatives of more than 20 ministries. Active employment policies are being adopted, focusing on tax reduction, microcredit and interest subsidized loans for business start-up and self-employment; hiring incentives such as tax reduction and social insurance contribution subsidies for enterprises that recruited unemployed people; public job-creation schemes for hard-to-place workers; and targeted employment assistance programmes to ensure every family had at least one member in employment. The Government acknowledges the long-term employment pressure that they suffer due to factors such as a large population, industrialization, urbanization, economic restructuring and the comparatively low quality of the labour force. The Government also states that, every year, China has 24,000,000 jobseekers in urban areas and 10,000,000 rural workers yet to be transferred, resulting in a degree of employment pressure not experienced by any other country. In its report, the Government indicated that, since 2003, over 10,000,000 jobs have been created and more than 8,000,000 workers have been transferred from rural areas each year. In 2008, registered urban unemployment stood at 4.2 per cent. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report information on the impact of the measures mentioned to generate employment.

Measures taken in response to the global crisis. The Committee notes that the crisis has especially affected the exporting sector and SMEs and that migrants and new labour entrants have been among the most affected. In its General Survey of 2010 concerning employment instruments, the Committee noted that the State Council had adopted Notification No. 4 in 2009, which deals with employment issues under the economic situation, and other documents which deal with facing the current economic situation and stabilizing the labour relationship (General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 620). Among the measures taken to respond to the crisis, the Government launched stimulus packages that focus on infrastructure, public works, rural development investment and support for labour-intensive industries, particularly SMEs and the service sector. Enterprises have been allowed to postpone or reduce payment of social insurance contributions and have also received subsidies. The Committee notes that social dialogue is being promoted as a tool to respond to the crisis. The national tripartite mechanism jointly issued the guidance on how to face the current economic situation and to stabilize the labour relationship, to encourage and guide enterprises and workers in stabilizing job posts and avoiding lay-offs as much as possible, by taking, through consultations, measures such as wage adjustments and flexible working time. The Committee notes the importance of genuine tripartite consultations to confront and mitigate the effects of the global economic crisis. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the participation of the social partners in the design and implementation of an active employment policy to overcome the negative effects of the crisis.

Impact of legislation on employment creation. The Government indicates that the implementation of the Labour Contract Law has brought an increase in employment (reaching 93 per cent in 2008), and a decrease in the tendency of signing short-term contracts, which has increased workers' stability in employment. The implementation of the Labour Contract Law has also resulted in an increase in the number of people signing up for social security. The Government also states that the Employment Promotion Act has translated active employment policies into law, providing powerful legal support for achieving full employment. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on the impact and results achieved in terms of productive employment creation and the improvement of employment security for workers through the implementation of the Labour Contract Law and the Employment Promotion Act.

Vulnerable groups. The Committee notes the different employment policies, plans and actions developed to tackle the consequences of the devastating earthquake in Sichuan (May 2008), including employment assistance and support policies to recover production and stabilize employment. According to the data provided by the Government, up to March 2009, the supporting localities had supplied information on over 1,170,000 job opportunities in the areas affected by the earthquake, helped 105,000 workers find employment through remote job-changing employment and direct employment by disaster-relief reconstruction projects, assisted over 1,267,000 workers to find employment on the spot or nearby and 308,000 workers were transferred from Sichuan through organized labour migration. The Committee also notes that the Emergency-Start and Improve Your Business (E-SIYB) was launched to support SMEs recover production in the area and rural workers to create business in the cities of Chengdu, Deyang and Mianyang. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the regulations adopted to promote employment of people with disabilities. The Government further informs that it has formulated a series of accompanying policies and measures in order to further assist people with disabilities and promote their employment, including special services, improvement of employment services and training to help them start their own businesses and self-employment. The Government has also adopted specific measures for rural workers with disabilities to increase their employability. At the end of 2008, new employment had been found for 368,000 workers with disabilities in the urban areas and 17,171,000 rural workers with disabilities were engaged in active production. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on the impact of the measures taken in order to promote productive employment for vulnerable categories of workers. Please also include in the next report data on the situation and trends of the active population, employment, unemployment and underemployment disaggregated by sector, age, gender, in particular for vulnerable groups such as young persons, women, people with disabilities, rural workers and ethnic minorities.

Ensuring re-employment of laid-off workers. With reference to the measures to enhance the employability of workers that had been laid off by state-owned enterprises, the Government indicates that between 2003 and 2008, over 30,000,000 workers had realized work through different channels. The Government has designated occupational training institutions to carry out flexible and diversified trainings and has launched the Re-employment With Skills project, which expected to train 4,000,000 workers per year. Between 2006 and 2008, 68 per cent of the 18,880,000 workers who had participated in the re-employment training had found work. The Committee notes that companies that hire older workers receive subsidies and that special attention is paid to older workers in the 40–50 age group. The Committee wishes to continue to receive information on the measures envisaged to improve the insertion in the labour market of the remaining workers affected by the lay-off by state-owned enterprises.

Consistency and transparency of labour market information. The Government reports that up to November 2008, seven labour surveys had been conducted. Nevertheless, the complexity of the labour market is not entirely reflected. The Committee notes that the Government is exploring ways to improve these survey methods to enhance the results afforded by them. The Committee noted, in the 2010 General Survey, that the China Enterprise Confederation, through its membership network, is gathering information regarding recruitment, management of human resources and vocational training from companies (General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 80). The Committee recalls the importance of compiling and analysing up-to-date statistical data and trends as a basis for deciding measures of employment policy. The Committee wishes to continue to receive information on the progress made in order to obtain accurate data and how it is being used to formulate and review employment policies.

Constructing a unified labour market. The Committee notes that the reform in the household registration system is steadily advancing and that the reform aims at achieving an integrated management of residence permits for the migrant population. The Government is relaxing the requirement for rural workers who already have stable employment and residence in cities and townships. Efforts are also being made to actively develop village and township enterprises and the county-level economies to increase job opportunities for the rural labour force. The Government informs that it intends to increase efforts to ensure a unified urban–rural labour market and implement the Employment Promotion Law in greater depth so as to accelerate the establishment of an employment policy that embodies equality between urban and rural areas. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the impact of the measures that are being implemented in order to ensure that workers enjoy the same rights and obligations in a unified labour market. Please provide further information on the projects launched to unify employment management and the results achieved by the employment services in providing jobs for rural workers seeking employment in cities. The Committee hopes that the measures to be taken will succeed in unifying the labour market and invites the Government to include an evaluation on how a balanced growth between economic development and employment has been achieved among the different regions of the country.

Extension of social security and healthcare. The Government indicates that social security coverage is being expanded to cover more people, particularly rural migrant workers and workers in precarious employment, and that the establishment of a basic medical insurance system is being accelerated. The Government further reports that from 2009 to 2011, governments at all levels were expected to invest around US$120 billion in improving medical insurance and the medical service system. The Government expects that by 2010 every one of the country's 1.3 billion citizens will enjoy full health insurance coverage. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report updated information on the matter and its impact on creating lasting employment.

Strengthening employment services. The Government indicates that in 2008, 99 per cent of the urban neighbourhoods and 80 per cent of towns have set up public employment services that provide assistance and job placement services and have helped 20 million people find work. The Committee recalls the key role that efficient employment services play to maintain full employment and to secure the needs to workers and enterprises (General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 202). In 2008, 10,000 private employment agencies operated in the country. The Committee notes that within the efforts to complete and improve the employment services that cover both rural and urban areas, pilot projects for the establishment of county- and town-level public employment service systems were initiated. In 2009, another programme was launched to provide internships for 3 million college graduates, and there were plans to help 1,000,000 long-term unemployed workers to find jobs and assist 8,000,000 migrant workers to transfer to the non-agricultural sector. The Committee invites the Government to report on the achievements made in strengthening public employment services and regulating private employment agencies. Please also provide information on the measures taken to ensure cooperation between the public employment services and private employment agencies and measures that the Government is taking to encourage private employment services to improve the quality of their services in order for them to fulfil their employment promotion functions.

Promoting small and medium-sized enterprises. The Committee notes the increase of channels to finance SMEs. The Government has also encouraged financial institutions to improve their services and increase their credit support for SMEs, including granting microcredits for individuals setting up their own business. In 2008, the Government issued the guidance on boosting the efforts to encourage start-ups for employment promotion and created a directorate to offer assistance to entrepreneurs which are starting up their businesses. The Committee notes that 82 cities have been selected to pilot a new initiative of Start-up Oriented City. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report more information regarding these pilot initiatives and information on the impact of these measures on employment creation. Please also inform on the measures taken in order to facilitate procedures to start-up business and on the efforts made to create an environment conducive to the creation, development and sustainability of SMEs.

Vocational training and education policies. The Government intends to provide non-agricultural occupational training to 40,000,000 rural workers through the Employment-With-Skill for the Rural Labour Force Programme. Between 2006 and 2008, 26,500,000 rural workers have received training. In addition, some localities have issued training coupons and opened training accounts in an effort to encourage rural workers to participate in trainings. The Committee also notes that the Ministry of Human Resources and Social Security implemented a special occupational training programme in 2009–10 to provide “tailored training” to meet the specific job requirements of enterprises, so that rural workers may walk directly into the job. The Committee also notes that, to assist laid-off workers and the rural labour force re-enter the labour market, the Government designated occupational training institutions to carry out flexible and diversified trainings. The Committee also noted in the 2010 General Survey that trade unions at various levels had set up vocational training institutions (General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 176). The Committee invites the Government to include information on how the human resource development policies are coordinated with employment policies and on how the Government is strengthening the coordination between vocational institutions. It also welcomes information on how the local entities and social partners participate in the design and implementation of training policies and programmes.

ILO technical cooperation. The Committee notes that the ILO’s SIYB Programme completed activities in areas of product development, quality control and development of trainers. It also notes that the technical assistance provided under the UN Millennium Development Goal, with the ILO as the leading executive agency, expects to improve the content and implementation of the young peasant workers services policy framework. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the results obtained through these projects and also on the results in terms of employment creation derived from the implementation of the Decent Work Country Programme (2006–10).

Côte d'Ivoire

Fee-Charging Employment Agencies Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 96) (ratification: 1992)

Part III of the Convention. Regulation of fee-charging employment agencies. In reply to the observation of 2006, the Government indicates in a report received in June 2010 that the activities of temporary work enterprises can in fact be deemed equivalent to those of a fee-charging employment agency, since they are also conducted with a view to profit. The Government indicates, however, that the promulgation of two different decrees, one concerning fee-charging employment agencies (No. 96-193 of 7 March 1996) and the other concerning temporary work (No. 96-194 of 7 March 1996), stems from the fact that, in the case of fee-charging employment agencies, the employment relationship ceases once the worker has been made available to the employer whereas, in the case of temporary work enterprises, the employment relationship may continue for up to six months. Under these circumstances, the Committee notes the Government’s statement to the effect that it does not consider the ratification of the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), to be necessary. The Committee notes that, in 2008, a total of 37 approved employment agencies, 27 of which deal with temporary work and ten with placements subject to payment, received 2,519 requests for employment and actually placed 226 jobseekers in companies. In reply to the previous comments, the Government indicates that the renewal of the operating licence takes place on an annual basis and occurs on presentation of the statistics concerning job offers and requests and placements of jobseekers. The Government also indicates that, at the opening of a temporary work enterprise, the licence costs 250,000 CFA francs (XOF) and its renewal costs XOF200,000 per year and, for fee-charging employment agencies, the licence costs XOF200,000 and its renewal costs XOF100,000 per year. The Government states that there is no competition between fee-charging employment agencies and the Agency for Employment Research and Promotion (AGEPE) but that certain placement agencies do not supply statistics because they work within the informal economy after obtaining the initial licence. The Government states that, in such cases, licences will not be renewed because one of the conditions for the renewal of licences is the production of statistics. However, the Government indicates that the controls exercised by the AGEPE are minimal and that, since the liberalization of the activities of employment agencies, just one office has been closed for failing to adhere to its stated objectives. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the steps taken to ensure regular controls on the activities of fee-charging employment agencies. It recalls that Article 13 of the Convention states that appropriate penalties, including the withdrawal when necessary of the licences and authorizations provided for by the Convention, shall be prescribed for any violation of the relevant national legislation. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to supply general information on the manner in which the Convention is applied, including, for instance, extracts from official reports, information on the number and nature of infringements reported, and any other particulars relating to the practical application of the Convention.

Cyprus

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1960)

Decisions relating to the application of the Convention. The Committee notes the simplified report provided by the Government for the period ending in July 2010. The Government indicates that, in June 2009, a private employment agency filed a complaint with the Commission for the Protection of Competition against the Public Employment Service with the allegation that the state maintenance of a Public Employment Service offering free employment services to employees violated national law and the European regulation on the protection of competition and placed private employment agencies into a less favourable or disadvantaged position. The Government indicates that, after the investigation of the complaint, the Commission for the Protection of Competition issued a decision stating that the allegations were not valid based on the fact that the Public Employment Service operates according to the Convention which has been ratified by Cyprus and which has become an integral part of the country's legislation. The fact that the Public Employment Service provides services according to the law is compatible with the national and European regulation on the protection of competition because the competent authority is entrusted by the State to provide a public service. The Government indicates that the decision also stated that since the Convention does not discriminate between employers and employees, it is implied that services can be offered free of charge to both parties. The Committee notes with interest that this decision contributes to the achievement of the Convention objectives. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information, including statistical data, on the contribution of the public employment service to the maintenance of full employment and use of productive resources.

Dominican Republic

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 2001)

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information supplied by the Government in the reports received in July and November 2009. Moreover, the Government sent a report containing statistical information relating to the period ending October 2010. In comments sent to the Government in September 2010, the Autonomous Confederation of Workers' Unions (CASC), the National Confederation of Trade Union Unity (CNUS) and the National Confederation of Dominican Workers (CNTD) state that an employment policy does not exist as such but forms part of other policies formulated and implemented by the Government in the production, fiscal and social spheres.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Active policy designed to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment. The Government indicates in the report received in November 2009 that the Dominican Republic economy achieved average annual real GDP growth in excess of 6 per cent between 1991 and 2000. A local financial crisis occurred in 2003 as a result of the bankruptcy of three banks. After 2005, growth in GDP was restored until the impact of the global financial crisis made itself felt. The Government also indicates that the rate of employment lagged behind the dynamic growth in GDP. During the 2000–08 period, the average annual growth rate in employment was 2.4 per cent, with the creation of 569,000 new jobs. The Government regrets that most people are occupied in precarious work and have few or no qualifications – some 1.4 million persons consider themselves as non-professional self-employed workers. In addition, in the report received in July 2009, the Government indicated that, by means of Decree No. 340/09 of April 2009, the National Employment Commission (CNE), made up of an inter-governmental technical team, was revived. The trade union organizations mentioned above point out that the CNE has not held any meetings since May 2010. The Committee understands that an Employment Plan 2009–10 is being drawn up. The Committee refers to paragraph 785 of the 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, which states that there are three fundamental steps to achieving full, productive and freely chosen employment. The first is to make a political commitment to achieve full employment. The Committee observes that Article 2 of Convention No. 122 states that member States shall establish a clearly defined framework for coordinating economic and social policies. The Committee therefore again requests the Government to indicate the manner in which an active policy designed to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment has been formulated. The Committee hopes that the next report will include up-to-date statistical information on the size and distribution of the labour force and the nature and extent of unemployment as a key component in the implementation of an active employment policy within the meaning of the Convention.

Article 3. Measures for tackling the crisis. Participation of the social partners. In the report received in October 2010, the Government indicates that the global economic crisis had an impact on the economy, with the GDP growth rate decreasing from 5.3 per cent in 2008 to 3.5 per cent in 2009 and the Dominican Republic peso having been devalued by 2.2 per cent. The Government refers briefly to the stimulus measures adopted in the area of taxation. The Committee notes the meetings of the Social and Employment Policy Round Table held in January and February 2009, in the context of the "Summit on national unity in the face of the global economic crisis". In order to overcome the global financial crisis, the social actors and other parties involved discussed and formulated proposals mainly intended to promote employment, support micro-, small and medium-sized enterprises, promote entrepreneurs and create new enterprises. The Committee underlines the importance of ongoing and genuine tripartite consultations for confronting and alleviating the effects of the global economic crisis (paragraph 788, 2010 General Survey). The Committee again requests the Government to supply detailed information in its next report on the consultations held with respect to formulating and implementing an active employment policy. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on the consultations held with representatives of the persons affected by the measures to be taken in other sectors of the active population, such as rural workers and workers in the informal economy.

Articles 1(3) and 2. Coordinated economic and social policy. The Committee notes that the State Secretariat for Economics, Planning and Development, with the collaboration of the National Council for State Reform, has drawn up a proposal for the “National Development Strategy 2010–30”. The third component of the strategy proposes an articulated, innovative and sustainable economy which has a productive structure generating substantial sustained growth with decent employment and plays a competitive role in the global economy. One of the general objectives within this third component consists of reorienting the economic structure in such a way as to be more conducive to the creation of decent jobs in sufficient numbers. The Committee requests the Government to supply information in its next report on the manner in which the objective of creating decent work has been reflected in the formulation of economic and social policy. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the manner in which the National Development Strategy has been coordinated with a national employment plan.

Compilation and use of labour market information. The Committee notes the indication in the Government’s report received in July 2009 that a first edition of the Dominican Republic Labour Overview has been drafted. The report states that an observatory has been set up to monitor the behaviour of general labour market indicators, general characteristics of the economy, population trends and other important aspects such as technical and vocational training and social security for the workforce. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the labour market as compiled by the labour market observatory in the Dominican Republic.

Vulnerable groups. The data on the labour market supplied by the Government in the report received in October 2010 indicate that the unemployment rate remained at 14.9 per cent of the population, while still showing a sharper increase for young persons and still remaining higher for women than for men. The Government recognizes that informal occupation remains high, with 57 per cent of people working in the informal economy. The Committee highlights the fact that the specific lines of action of the second component of the National Development Strategy include seeking to raise human and social capital, increasing economic opportunities for people living in poverty, and strengthening the labour training system in order to facilitate access to productive work for persons living in poverty. The Committee hopes that the next report will include information on the measures taken to strengthen programmes designed to facilitate the access of young persons and women to the employment market and on the results achieved through those measures. The Committee requests the Government to report in detail on the situation, level and trends of employment, unemployment and underemployment, indicating the extent to which they affect the most vulnerable sections of the population (women, young persons, persons living in poverty, rural workers and those working in the informal sector).

Migrant workers. The Committee observes that one of the specific objectives of the second component of the National Development Strategy is to restructure and modernize the legal and institutional framework in order to strengthen the system for the management and control of migratory flows, in line with the best international practices and respecting the rights of the migrant population. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in the context of an active employment policy to prevent abuses in the hiring of foreign workers and of those who leave the country to seek employment opportunities abroad.

Coordination of training policies with employment policies. The Committee observes that the National Development Strategy provides for the consolidation of a high-quality higher education system and a system of further training in order to facilitate entry into the employment market, develop entrepreneurial capacities and increase the productivity of the population. The Committee again requests the Government to include detailed information in its next report on the measures taken to coordinate education and vocational training policies with prospective employment opportunities, including a summary of the results achieved by the National Institute of Technical and Vocational Training (INFOTEP).

Small and medium-sized enterprises. The Committee notes the promulgation of Act No. 488-08 of December 2008 establishing a regulatory regime for the development and competitiveness of micro-, small and medium-sized enterprises. The Committee recalls that the 2010 General Survey also underlined the central role played by micro-, small and medium-sized enterprises in reducing poverty through job creation, in accordance with the Job Creation in Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises Recommendation, 1998 (No. 189). The Committee requests the Government to include information in its next report on the impact of Act No. 488-08 on the creation of high-quality employment and the reduction of poverty.

Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2009 observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government’s report received in November 2008 referring again to the Employment Agency Proclamation No. 104 of 1998, which has already been examined in previous comments. The Committee also understands that in June 2007 the Office reviewed a draft proclamation aimed at strengthening the authority of public authorities in dealing with private employment agencies and to revise the regulations concerning the operation of those agencies. The draft proclamation was also discussed in tripartite workshops with government authorities and other stakeholders. In this context, the Committee asks the Government to provide a report including the text of any new legislative text enacted concerning the application of the Convention and information on the matters raised in its previous comments.

Article 8 of the Convention. Protection of migrant workers. The Government indicates that to implement the Convention, the Ministry of Labour consulted with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Ethiopian embassies. An inter-ministerial committee has been established including representatives of the Ministry of Justice, the Emigration Office and the federal police. The Government also mentions the provisions of section 598 of the Criminal Code to combat unlawful recruitment. The Committee reiterates its concern regarding the protection of Ethiopian workers recruited or placed either through regular or irregular private agencies for employment outside the country and the prevalence of trafficking in persons. The Committee asks the Government to report on the measures taken by the inter-ministerial committee to provide adequate protection and prevent abuses of workers recruited in Ethiopia for employment abroad and law cases. Please also provide particulars of cases when section 598 of the Criminal Code has been applied to abusive recruiters. Please also specify if the most representative organizations of employers and workers have been consulted in this matter (Article 8(1)). It also again requests the Government to provide information on bilateral labour agreements concluded to prevent abuses and fraudulent practices in the recruitment, placement and employment of Ethiopian migrant workers abroad (Article 8(2)).

Article 9. Trafficking of children. The Government states in its report that, according to section 15(4) of the procedure prepared by the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs, recruited workers should not be less than 18 years and that this would be safeguarded by routine inspection systems. The Committee refers to its comments on the application of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), and requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that child labour is not used or supplied by private employment agencies.

The Committee reiterates its interest in receiving detailed information in the Government's next report on the measures adopted to apply the provisions of the Convention which are referred to specifically in a direct request.

France

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1952)

Article 4 of the Convention. Reform of the public employment service. Participation of the social partners. The Committee notes the Government's report received in February 2010, which contains information in reply to the matters raised in its 2008 observation. The Committee notes that the establishment of closer links between the National Employment Agency (ANPE) and the National Occupational Union for Employment in Industry and Commerce (UNEDIC) has led to the creation of Pôle Emploi as a new one-stop shop. Under Act No. 2008-126 of 13 February 2008, a National Employment Council was established as a tripartite body responsible for giving strategic direction to employment policies and ensuring coherence between the missions and activities of the various bodies comprising the public employment service. The Government also indicates that, in the context of the 2008 stimulus package, a social investment fund was created in February 2009 for a period of two years. The fund is designed to coordinate efforts to promote employment and vocational training and is managed by a group comprising representatives of the Government, social partners and the public employment service. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the activities carried out by the National Employment Council and the governing body of the Pôle Emploi relating to the organization and operation of the public employment service. The Government is requested to indicate whether, in addition to the governing body meetings held, there are any other arrangements allowing the effective involvement of the social partners in the operation of Pôle Emploi.

Article 1(1). Contribution of the free public employment service to employment promotion. The Committee notes that, according to the summary of the results of the evaluation conducted concerning the use of private placement operators, published in October 2009, jobseekers seem to be dealt with more quickly and monitored more often in the context of private job placement operators and the Cap vers l'entreprise (CVE) scheme compared to the usual process. Jobseekers registered with private job placement operators benefited from more support in obtaining employment than they received in the usual process, including assistance in targeting enterprises and help with interview preparation. The Government indicates that, as of 30 June 2009, 9,939 young graduates had benefited from a support service, 62.4 per cent of whom were women, and that 31 per cent of these persons had been placed in long-term employment. The Government also indicates that nearly 70 per cent of these young persons were still in employment six months after the start of their employment contract. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the results of the evaluations conducted concerning the use of private job placement operators, in terms of the integration or reintegration of jobseekers, particularly young persons, into the labour market. It requests the Government to indicate the manner in which collaboration between private job placement operators and Pôle Emploi is ensured.

Article 3. Development of employment offices throughout the territory. The Government indicates that it was deemed necessary to develop the operations of employment centres. Compulsory areas of activity have been determined to contribute to the development of local employment and reduce the cultural and social obstacles preventing access to employment. The reform was due to enter into force in January 2010. According to the Government, the aim of Pôle Emploi is to establish 950 sites covering the entire national territory. This objective was due to be achieved by the end of 2009. The Committee requests the Government to continue reporting on developments relating to the operations of employment centres. It also requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in ensuring that there are sufficient employment centres and Pôle Emploi agencies to serve all geographical areas and that their location makes them easily accessible to both employers and workers.

Fee-Charging Employment Agencies Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 96) (ratification: 1953)

Part II of the Convention. Progressive abolition of fee-charging employment agencies conducted with a view to profit. The Committee notes the Government's report received in January 2010 in reply to its 2008 observation. The Government indicates that Act No. 2008-126 of 13 February 2008 concerning the reform of the public employment service established the Pôle Emploi as a new one-stop shop which registers unemployed people, functions as a job placement agency and provides jobseekers with benefits and support. The Government confirms that the new Act has opened up the employment placement market to private employment agencies by bringing an end to the legal monopoly of the National Employment Agency (ANPE). The activity of private employment placement, either in a primary or secondary role, is henceforth provided by sections L.312-1 to L.312-8 of the Labour Code. The Government indicates that the French legislation was drawn up based on the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181). According to the Government, the new legislation provides a similar framework with regard to the conditions governing the performance of private employment placement activities by private employment agencies and workers benefit from the protection provided under Convention No. 181, if not a higher level of protection, in terms of a free placement service, the prevention of discriminatory practices with regard to employment placement and protection of privacy in the processing of personal data. In its previous comments, the Committee drew the Government's attention to the fact that, like other member States which have ratified Convention No. 96, France has accepted Part II of the Convention, which obliges it to abolish fee-charging employment agencies conducted with a view to profit. The measures introduced in January 2005 and February 2008 opening up the employment placement market to private employment agencies do not give effect to the obligations contained in Part II of Convention No. 96 accepted by France at the time of its ratification in 1956. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to adhere to the obligations of the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), the ratification of which involves the immediate denunciation of Convention No. 96. It invites the Government to report on steps taken in consultation with the social partners to ratify Convention No. 181.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1971)

Article 1(1) and (2) of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the detailed information contained in the Government's reports received in May and October 2010, in reply to its 2009 direct request. The Government indicates that, between October 2007 and March 2008, around 150,000 additional jobs were created in the competitive sector. At the end of 2009, the economic recovery was not visible in the unemployment rate, which stood at 10 per cent of the active population at that time. The main aims of the employment policy implemented for the period 2007–09 were to integrate as many people as possible into the labour market, promote close cooperation with the social partners and enhance job security. In view of the difficult economic climate and its consequences on employment, the Government indicates that it is continuing a programme of reforms for the years 2008–10 with the aim of promoting growth and employment in the context of the European Lisbon Strategy, while implementing an economic recovery plan. The Committee previously noted that, in November 2008, the Government established an economic recovery plan to tackle the crisis, which totalled 26 billion euros (€), including €14.9 billion allocated to supporting enterprises and employment. The plan aims to create a secure framework that acts as an incentive for jobseekers and encourages them to look for work more actively and tackle the major challenge of long-term unemployment. The Government also mentions other specific measures that have been implemented to combat the effects of the crisis, including the creation of the Social Investment Fund (FISO) designed to support workers and jobseekers exposed to the crisis; the temporary use of part-time work, particularly in the automotive sector; and the strengthening of the employment services through the establishment of Pôle Emploi. In July 2010, the Government provided a detailed assessment of the measures financed under the FISO, which have benefited nearly 2 million people. As a tool to support workers exposed to the crisis, nearly 400,000 workers have benefited from the part-time scheme, nearly 80,000 of whom have received training. As support for the retraining of workers made redundant, at the end of May 2010 around 115,000 persons had benefited from one of the two schemes designed to get them back into work quickly. Under the measures to provide compensation and support the purchasing power of jobseekers, a total of 47,708 allowances were granted between April 2009 and March 2010 to workers who had lost their jobs but were not eligible for unemployment benefit. The Government also mentions a new method of terminating an employment contract based on the mutual agreement of the employer and the employee, implemented by Act No. 2008-596 of 25 June 2008 modernizing the labour market. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the results of the various measures reforming the labour market and their impact on the employment situation. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made in implementing the measures to tackle the crisis, in terms of employee protection and improved access to the labour market for jobseekers.

Article 1(2). Youth employment. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the results achieved in terms of the creation of jobs for young persons. The Government indicates that, in the first quarter of 2010, of the 2.7 million persons who are unemployed (9.5 per cent of the active population), 634,000 persons, or 23 per cent, are aged between 15 and 24 years. To address this situation, the Government indicates that it has established a series of specific measures targeting young persons, particularly those without qualifications and those from sensitive areas. On 31 May 2009, 468,000 young persons had benefited from CIVIS, which target young persons without qualifications, of whom 176,000 have found long-term employment, 32,000 short-term employment and 31,000 have received training. As of 14 September 2009, 13,044 autonomy contracts had been signed under the Plan Banlieues, aimed at young persons under 26 years of age, which resulted in 1,026 positive outcomes, of which 75 per cent involved the young persons concerned finding long-term employment. The Government also indicates that, in the context of the emergency youth employment plan of 24 April 2009, it has been decided to implement a programme of additional training for young persons aged between 16 and 25 years who are finding it difficult to find a job. Among other measures, it is envisaged to provide 50,000 young persons with new and enhanced skills for accessing employment. The Committee also notes other measures in favour of the training of young persons financed by the recovery plan which are focused on the long-term vocational and social integration of young persons who have left the education system without qualifications and without a job, namely “training support contracts” and “second chance schools” (E2C). Under the emergency youth employment plan, which provided for the creation of 7,200 places in E2Cs, 925 places had already been opened in May 2010. A total of 775,400 assisted contracts had been signed in the form of employment initiative contracts in the commercial sector and bridging contracts in the non-commercial sector. The Government indicates that the recovery plan also contributes to the “Action for Youth” plan (designed to reduce school drop-out rates and promote the vocational integration of young persons) by including a provision to increase the resources allocated to the contracts for integration into working life, which will assist 200,000 young persons in 2010. In this regard, the Committee refers to paragraphs 288 and 289 of its General Survey of 2010 concerning employment instruments, which refer to the employment situation of young persons in France. The Committee also expressed its concern at the very high unemployment rate among graduate jobseekers, particularly among young university graduates, who are unable to find employment commensurate with their skill level. This problem affects both developing and industrialized countries, where the skills of these young graduates are underutilized and they find themselves accepting casual jobs. This situation can prove detrimental to their career progression. The Committee therefore encourages governments to develop job creation and career guidance policies targeted at this new category of graduate workers (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 800). The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the efforts made to improve the youth employment situation. It would like to be able to examine elements in the Government’s next report which allow it to assess the effectiveness of the various measures implemented to promote the long-term integration of young persons into the labour market.

Older workers. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide up-to-date information on the impact of the measures intended to increase the employment rate of older workers. The Committee notes the indications that, in 2008, 56 per cent of persons aged between 50 and 64 years were active. Although unemployment affects young persons more than older workers, the latter struggle to find a route out of unemployment, particularly men, and, in 2008, 60 per cent of unemployed men aged between 50 and 64 years had been unemployed for more than one year, compared to 38 per cent of those aged between 30 and 49 years. The Government mentions a number of measures in favour of older workers, such as special allowances which guarantee a replacement income for older workers who lose their jobs and whose employment prospects are limited, until they are able to claim their pension rights. The Government also indicates that enterprises with up to 50 employees are required to conclude an agreement or establish a unilateral action plan in favour of the employment of older workers before 1 January 2010, failing which they will incur a financial penalty equivalent to 1 per cent of their total wage bill. The Government indicates that enterprises with 51–300 employees have been granted a period of three years (from the first quarter of 2010) to enable them to hold negotiations and finalize their action plans. These measures must include the overall objective of keeping employees aged 55 years and over in employment or recruiting workers aged 50 years and over. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the results of the implementation of the action plans in favour of the employment of older workers in enterprises with up to 50 employees. It also requests the Government to provide any relevant information concerning the progress made with regard to the employment of older workers in other enterprises.

Education and training policy. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 2009-1437 of 24 November 2009 concerning lifelong vocational training and guidance which aims to facilitate the training of jobseekers and workers with few qualifications and develop training within small and medium-sized enterprises. The Committee notes that the Act guarantees the right to lifelong training. It also notes the communications sent in July 2010 by the National Autonomous Union of Sciences and the National Union of Scientific Researchers concerning the possible effects of the Act of 3 August 2009 concerning mobility in the civil service and also the Government’s reply received in November 2010. The Government indicates that this Act has established a joint job security fund designed to contribute to the funding of vocational training leading to the qualification and renewed qualification of workers and jobseekers. The Act also provides for regional planning contracts for the development of vocational training (CPRDF) designed to define a medium-term programme of vocational training for young persons and ensure the coherent development of initial and continuous vocational training paths based on a joint regional analysis. The vocational reorientation mechanism enables civil servants to progress in their professional careers according to their skills, abilities and wishes, thus reinforcing their freedom of choice in employment. In addition, by providing for guidance, training and evaluation measures, the mechanism creates favourable conditions for ensuring that civil servants receive the best training for their new jobs. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the vocational training measures and their impact in terms of integration into the labour market. It hopes that the report will contain information on the measures to coordinate education and training policies with employment, as well as on their impact in terms of the long-term integration of the most vulnerable categories of workers into the labour market.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the preparation and formulation of policies. The Government indicates that employment and vocational training policies are defined in close consultation with the social partners and that certain measures are financed jointly and implemented through coordination between the State and the social partners, such as the vocational training measures for young persons, the unemployed, older workers and workers at risk of redundancy. The social partners also took part in the social summit of 18 February 2009 which resulted in the establishment of the FISO designed to coordinate crisis response policies on employment and vocational training. The Government indicates that the latest inter-occupational agreement signed on 9 July 2009, concerning the social management of the impact of the economic crisis on employment, has resulted in the implementation of a number of temporary measures (in force until 1 January 2011), such as the “occupational transition contract” (CTP) and the “personalized back-to-work assistance agreement” (CRP) to improve the situation of employees who are made redundant. The Government also mentions the composition of the National Employment Council, which brings together representatives of all actors involved in employment and training policies. The Committee requests the Government to indicate how the consultations held with the social partners within the National Employment Council have contributed to the formulation of employment policies and how their experience and opinions have been fully taken into account when formulating these policies.

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1954)

Organization and functions of the employment service. The Committee notes the comprehensive analysis and detailed information provided by the Government in the report received in August 2010 in reply to the 2006 observation. The Committee asked the Government to report on the practical impact of the measures implemented by the newly created Federal Employment Agency (BA). The Government recalls that in the framework of the reform of the BA between 2005 and 2006, a results-oriented management strategy has been introduced that was geared towards cost-effectiveness. It states that one of the fundamental prerequisites for the success of this new management strategy was to create transparency with respect to results and processes and to provide clarity as to the BA’s general policy orientation. Also, a system of targets geared to outcomes was developed. Unlike the situation in the private industry, financial goals were not seen as top priorities. Rather, the target system had to reflect the mission as required by law. Therefore, success is measured on whether it is possible to avoid unemployment and whether the length of a client’s unemployment has been reduced. The Committee notes among the results achieved: a reduction of unemployment duration (down from approximately 168 days in 2006 to approximately 125 days in 2007); an increase in the number of persons integrated into the labour market (up from 37.3 per cent in 2006 to 42.2 per cent in 2009); an increase of the public institutions’ share in successful placements (up from 9.3 per cent in 2006 to 10.6 per cent in 2009); an increase of successfully filled vacancies (up from 203,725 in 2006 to 293,042 in 2009). The Government indicates that the BA’s efforts were focused on its core activities, namely advisory services and placement. Specific action programmes for employers were introduced in all employment offices at the end of 2006 as a central element of the reform. Cases of good practice were selected, systematized and publicized. The Committee also notes that in 2006, the BA placement, advisory and information system (VerBIS) was put into operation to complement the Job Exchange database. Since August 2009, jobseekers can register online. Approximately 820,000 jobs are currently offered on the Job Exchange, 3.7 million candidates’ profiles are published, an average of 665,000 persons visit Job Exchange every day and ten million persons view the site, which is one of the largest e-Government applications. The Committee refers to its observation on the application of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) and expresses its appreciation of the efforts in implementing measures to achieve the best possible organization of the employment market through the public employment service in an extremely difficult period. It invites the Government to continue to provide, in its next reports on the application of Convention No. 88, relevant information concerning the results of measures implemented to enhance the capacity of the BA to promote full and productive employment (Articles 1 and 6 of the Convention).

Status and training of employment service staff. In reply to the 2006 observation, the Government indicates that out of a staff of approximately 110,000 persons, around 67,800 have employee status (of which around 800 are on temporary leave from civil servant status), and 15,600 have civil servant status. Some 23,200 persons are employed with fixed-term contracts and 3,200 are junior employees. Approximately 63,000 staff members are employed in the unemployment insurance field; 43,000 in the field of the guaranteed minimum income for jobseekers and 3,600 in the Family Allowance Fund. The Committee notes that the BA Diversity Management Strategy ensures that the varying experience and skills of certain staff members, such as migrants and persons with disabilities, are used specifically to meet clients’ needs. The Government also indicated that the Collective Agreement for Persons Employed by the Federal Employment Office (TV-BA) entered into force in January 2006 and that the BA has reviewed the in-house training system in recent years with a view to keeping staff members’ qualifications up to date.

Cooperation between the public employment service and private employment agencies. The Committee recalls its 2006 observation in which it invited the Government to report on the measures taken to ensure that cooperation between the BA and private employment agencies is effective within the meaning of Article 11 of the Convention. In paragraph 227 of the 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee also recalled that in Germany cooperation between public and private employment services has taken the form of quasi-outsourcing by the public employment services. In this regard, the Government confirms in its report that the private placement market is firmly established. The existing cooperation between the public and private services has been increased and private agencies make use of the Job Exchange platform to publish job offers. The Committee further notes that the possibility of outsourcing placement services to private providers has been expanded to cover more generally activation and vocational integration measures, including placement services, to assist persons seeking training, and those who were made redundant or who are unemployed (section 46 of the Social Code, Book III, as modified by the Law on Modification of Labour Market Policy, which entered into force on 1 January 2009). As part of the decentralized structure, the individual employment offices bear individual responsibility for using private providers' services and for referring their clients to those services. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on measures taken to ensure effective cooperation between the BA and private employment agencies.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1971)

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the comprehensive information contained in the Government's report for the period ending in May 2009, including detailed replies to the issues raised in the 2008 observation. The Government states that the German industry was going through an extremely difficult period. In the second half of 2008, there was a significant fall in GDP as a result of the global financial and economic crisis, leading to economic growth of only 1.3 per cent in 2008. In the first quarter of 2009, GDP fell by a further 6.7 per cent as compared to the same period in the previous year. The average figure for unemployment in 2008 was 7.8 per cent (old Länder, 6.4 per cent; new Länder, 13.5 per cent). In June 2009, 3,410,000 persons were unemployed in Germany. The Government provided information on the main labour market reform measures undertaken and the results achieved in terms of insertion into labour. The Committee notes that the Law on Modification of Labour Market Policy entered into force on 1 January 2009 and aims at integrating jobseekers and potential trainees more quickly into the labour market. The Government intends to strengthen preventive measures within an active labour market policy. A core element of this strategy is the introduction of the right for young people and adults who have left school without a qualification, to receive support and obtain a secondary education degree, which will improve their chances to enter the labour market and to acquire professional qualifications. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on policies and programmes promoting full employment and how these policies and programmes will translate into productive and lasting employment opportunities for the unemployed and other categories of vulnerable workers affected by the crisis. It trusts that the Government will continue to provide information on the consultations held on the matters covered by the Convention with the social partners, including details of their contribution to mitigate the effects of the global crisis and to implement an active employment policy.

Long-term unemployment. The Government reports that the number of persons without work for more than 12 months in the years 2007 and 2008 continued to decline to 1.1 million persons, which is equivalent to 36.6 per cent of all unemployed. The rate of women among the long-term unemployed stood at 52.7 per cent in 2008, of which 64 per cent were registered in the new Länder. In both regions, women (39.5 per cent) were relatively more severely affected by long-term unemployment than men (33.5 per cent). As part of the measures to decrease this form of unemployment, the Government has extended the federal "50plus" programme, which is aimed at reintegrating older workers in employment, until the end of 2010. During the first phase of this programme, between October 2005 and December 2007, 79,670 older long-term unemployed persons could be activated, resulting in 22,562 integrations from within this group. The new measures adopted in 2008 enabled the activation of 73,800 older long-term unemployed, of which some 19,500 became employed or founded a company. The Committee further notes the employment subsidy programme "JobPerspective", in which employers contribute, for a maximum period of 24 months, up to 75 per cent of the salary of persons with specific impediments for placement. In April 2009, approximately 32,000 persons were in the Job Perspective programme. The Government further states that the overall decrease of unemployment, and thus including long-term unemployment, that has been achieved until the effects of the worldwide economic crisis became apparent in October 2008, was not only an effect of the favourable economic environment. Rather, this development is also owed to the success of the legislative measures adopted in 2008 to modernize public employment services through which structural unemployment could be reduced and long-term unemployment prevented. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing information in its next report on the results achieved through measures taken to combat and prevent long-term unemployment.

Youth unemployment. The Committee notes that the median unemployment rate of persons below the age of 25 years has slightly declined from 10.8 per cent in 2006 to 8.5 per cent in 2007, reaching 7.1 per cent in 2008. In June 2009, the unemployment rate stood at 7.5 per cent, which is still below the overall unemployment rate of 8.1 per cent. The unemployment rates of persons below 25 years differ between the new and old Länder, amounting to 6.4 per cent for the old Länder and 12.1 per cent for the new Länder. To combat this development, the federal Government and the governments of the new Länder continue to support the "Apprenticeshipprogram East", which focuses on additional apprenticeship positions. The Federal Ministry for Economics and Labour has extended until 2010 and further developed the National Education Pact, which includes several employment promotion measures and resulted in 86,500 new apprenticeship positions and 616,259 new apprenticeship contracts. The costs of all youth-related employment policy measures in 2008 amounted to 1.3 billion euros, benefiting 173,200 apprentices. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing detailed information in its next report on the efforts made to improve the employment situation of young persons, and the results achieved in terms of job creation and sustainable employment as a result of the programmes adopted.

Women. The Committee notes that the employment rate among women increased from 60.6 per cent in 2005 to 64 per cent in 2007 and reached 65.4 per cent in 2008, whereas the respective rates for men stood at 71.3, 74.7 and 75.9 per cent. Women seem to have been less affected by the economic crisis than men. While the men's unemployment rate in May 2009 has increased by 13.4 percentage points as compared to the same month in the previous year, the women's unemployment rate for that period has decreased by 3.1 percentage points. In the same month, the overall unemployment rate of women (7.9 per cent) was below that of men (8.5 per cent). The Government indicates that part-time work does not generally constitute precarious employment but can be an adequate means for securing and fostering workplaces, contributing to equal employment opportunities for men and women in all age groups. The Government is concerned about workers remaining in lowly remunerated employment and sees it as necessary to ensure especially women's shift into employment that is subject to social security contributions. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report information on how recently adopted measures have translated into lasting employment opportunities for women, in particular in the new Länder.

Fee-Charging Employment Agencies Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 96) (ratification: 1973)

Part II of the Convention. Progressive abolition of fee-charging employment agencies. The Committee notes the statement contained in a report received in November 2010 indicating that the Government is mindful of the fact that the provisions of Convention No. 96 remain in force until the ratification of the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181) becomes effective. The Committee further notes that the Government would wish to request ILO technical assistance for the full application of the provisions of Convention No. 96 both in law and practice and for the ratification of Convention No. 181. In its previous observations, the Committee drew the Government's attention to the fact that the provisions regarding private employment agencies contained in the Labour Act 2003, and in the Labour Regulations 2007, did not give effect to the obligations set out in the parts of Convention No. 96 that have been accepted by Ghana. The Committee notes that technical assistance by the ILO would be particularly useful in helping the Government to address gaps in law and practice in the implementation of Convention No. 96 and might contribute to facilitate ratifying Convention No. 181. It therefore hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to adhere to the obligations of the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), the ratification of which involves the immediate denunciation of Convention No. 96. It invites the Government to report on steps taken in consultation with the social partners, to ratify Convention No. 181.

Greece

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1984)

The Committee notes the detailed report provided by the Government for the period ending in May 2009, including information on the initial measures adopted to overcome the impact of the global crisis on employment.

The Committee refers to its comments under the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), with regard to the observations communicated by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) with the support of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC) on the impact of the measures introduced in the framework of the mechanism to support the Greek economy as of May 2010. The Committee notes in particular, that according to the GSEE, the measures adopted in this framework did not constitute a topic of social dialogue but were forwarded to Parliament for adoption with urgent procedures.

The Committee recalls as a general matter, the role to be played by active labour market measures in addressing the human dimension of the financial and economic crisis. In the 2009 Global Jobs Pact, the ILO agreed to "put the aim of full and productive employment and decent work at the heart of the crisis responses". In its concluding remarks of the 2010 General Survey on employment instruments, the Committee further emphasized that social dialogue is essential in normal times and becomes even more so in times of crisis (paragraph 794 of the 2010 General Survey).

Given the new measures that have been adopted since the Government's last report on the application of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to monitor carefully the impact of the policy pursued in the framework of the international support mechanism and to provide a detailed report on the application of the Convention when the report is next due in 2011. The Committee will examine the comments by the GSEE along with the Government's reply thereto, as well as the Government's report which is due in 2011, at its next session.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1988)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government in its report received for the period ending September 2009. The Government includes the General Employment Plan for the period 2008–09, which aims to develop the country's productive potential. The Government indicates in its report that in this time of global crisis, the Government's efforts are geared towards achieving sustainable development based on decent work. In January 2009, the National Emergency and Economic Recovery Programme (PNERE) was launched to mitigate the negative effects of the crisis, which provides for the creation of jobs in both the public and private sectors through the construction of road infrastructure, health centres, hospitals and schools and the promotion of national and foreign investment. The Government's priority sectoral policies are those concerning energy, rural development, housing and micro credit. The Committee requests the Government to include information in its next report concerning the impact that the General Employment Plan 2008–09 and the PNERE have had in terms of creating productive and sustainable employment.

The Committee notes that, according to data from the Economic Commission of Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), the country's GDP grew by 4 per cent in 2008, compared to 6.3 per cent in 2007. According to the Government, the unemployment rate stood at 5.67 per cent in 2008, with 421,451 persons unemployed and the highest unemployment rates found in the municipalities of Guatemala, Huehuetenango and San Marcos. Furthermore, according to the 2009 Labour Overview, as a result of the economic crisis, 2008 saw a drop in family remittances, which totalled an amount equivalent to 11.3 per cent of the GDP. Furthermore, the reduction in exports had a negative impact on employment. In its General Survey of 2010 concerning employment instruments, the Committee noted that the Government was attempting to estimate the impact of the Central America Free Trade Agreement (CAFTA) on employment. Some workers' organizations had expressed concern that the CAFTA would result in heavy job losses, especially in agriculture and small and medium-sized enterprises, in the first year of its implementation (see paragraph 32 of the General Survey of 2010). The Committee requests the Government to include information in its next report on the impact that the trade policy has had in terms of meeting employment demand.

Article 3. Strengthening of labour market institutions. Participation of the social partners. The Government reports the creation of the National Employment System to establish active job creation policies. The Government also indicates that the design and formulation of the National Employment System has been the subject of tripartite validation. The Committee refers to its request concerning the application of the Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88), in which it expressed its interest in receiving further information on the manner in which the social partners cooperate in the activities of the public employment service. In this regard, the Committee once again refers to its 2010 General Survey, in which it emphasized that social dialogue is essential in normal times and becomes even more so in times of crisis. The employment instruments require member States to promote and engage in genuine tripartite consultations (see paragraph 794 of the General Survey of 2010). The Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which the social partners participated in the design, implementation and evaluation of employment policies to combat the negative effects of the crisis. The Committee requests the Government to include information on the consultations required by the Convention with all sectors concerned, such as representatives of the rural sector, informal economy and workers affected by the drop in exports.

Article 2. Collection and use of information on the labour market. The Committee notes the reactivation of the Labour Market Observatory. In the context of the PNERE, a survey of the employment situation at the national level will be carried out every three months for the purpose of monitoring labour market conditions and identifying productive sectors and geographical areas which require additional stimulus measures to protect jobs. The Ministry of Labour and Social Security's Operational Plan for 2009 provided for the promotion of projects and programmes to assist the most vulnerable sectors, such as young persons, women, older persons and persons with disabilities, to facilitate their integration into the labour market. Despite the increase in the participation of women in the labour market, according to the 2009 Labour Overview, the rate of active participation among women continues to be significantly lower than among men and stands at 45.2 per cent compared to 82.5 per cent among men. Furthermore, the overall illiteracy rate among persons aged 15 years and over stands at 25.2 per cent, while the rate among females is 32.1 per cent and the rate among males is 18.3 per cent. The Committee requests the Government to include up-to-date information in its next report concerning the labour market situation, levels and trends so that it can determine the impact that the new measures adopted have had in terms of promoting the employment of the most vulnerable sectors (women, young persons, older workers, rural workers and workers in the informal economy). With regard to workers with disabilities, the Committee refers to its request concerning the Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159).

Coordination of education and training policy with employment opportunities. The Government indicates in its report that employers are responsible for expressing their specific needs for the purpose of creating vocational training mechanisms, according to the specific needs of the labour market. Employers are more aware of what training is required to incorporate workers into the productive sector and they express those needs in the context of the activities of the National Employment System. In its General Survey of 2010, the Committee emphasized the increasingly important role of the social partners and training institutions in defining human resources development strategies. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the manner in which the representatives of workers and employers have contributed to developing vocational training mechanisms. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the plans and programmes of the Ministry of Education and the Technical Institute for Training and Productivity (INTECAP), as well as those implemented by the National Employment System, in terms of ensuring that qualified persons are able to “use their skills and endowments in a job for which they are well suited” (Article 1(2)(c) of the Convention).

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last report received in February 2004. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a detailed report on the application of the Convention, including information in reply to the points raised in the Committee’s 2004 observation, which set forth the following matters:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. In its report received in February 2004, the Government provided information on the establishment of the “employment” component of the poverty reduction strategy approved in 2002, including its plans to enhance the range of vocational and technical training available, promote small and medium-sized enterprises, promote labour-intensive work and improve access to employment for women. The Committee also noted the objectives of the Labour and Employment Statistical Information Network (RISSET), the establishment of which was already noted in its previous comments. The Committee requests the Government to provide up to date information on the measures taken to guarantee that employment, as a key component in poverty reduction, is at the heart of macroeconomic and social policies. It asks the Government in particular to provide information on the results achieved by group, such as for young people and for women, by the measures taken to improve the range of vocational and technical training available, on the promotion of small and micro-enterprises and on the jobs created by labour-intensive programmes.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and application of policies. The Committee recalled in 2008 that Article 3 of the Convention requires consultations with all interested parties – in particular, representatives of employers and workers – in the establishment and implementation of employment policies. It is the joint responsibility of the Government and the representative organizations of employers and workers to ensure that representatives of the most vulnerable and marginalized groups of the active population are associated as closely as possible with the formulation and implementation of measures of which they should be the prime beneficiaries. The Committee trusts that the Government will include detailed information in this regard.

Part V of the report form. ILO technical assistance. The Committee once again asks the Government to indicate the actions taken to implement an active employment policy within the meaning of the Convention, further to the technical assistance received from the ILO.

Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159) (ratification: 1995)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its previous comments, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the reports provided in June and September 2006. It refers to the direct requests of 2001 and 2005 and reiterates its request to the Government to provide a report containing specific information on the following points.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that the Community-Based National Rehabilitation Programme (PNRBC), initiated by the Ministry for Social Affairs and the Advancement of Women and Children, provides for vocational rehabilitation measures, including the integration of children with disabilities in schools, vocational training and promotion of the employment of persons with disabilities. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the measures adopted in the context of the PNRBC and a copy of the annual report referred to in its previous reports. Please also provide any other document containing statistics, studies or surveys on the matters covered by the Convention (Part V of the report form).

Article 4. The Committee notes that rules are applied to guarantee equality of opportunity and that a Bill has been prepared on the protection and advancement of persons with disabilities. Please provide information on the content of the acts and to send a copy of the abovementioned text when it has been adopted.

Article 7. The Committee notes the existence of a department responsible for the occupational integration of persons with disabilities in the National Directorate of Technical Education and Vocational Training and that the National Office for Vocational Training and Further Training has established a special section responsible for the training of young persons with disabilities. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the action taken in practice by these services for securing, retaining and advancing persons with disabilities in employment.

Article 8. The Committee notes that vocational rehabilitation and employment of persons with disabilities at their place of origin (rural areas and remote communities) is an essential objective of the PNRBC in collaboration with the Guinea Federation of Disabled Persons (FE.GUI.PAH). Furthermore, some measures have been taken, such as the establishment of branches of the National Orthopaedic Centre (CNO) in the interior of the country (Mamou and N’Zérékoré) and the granting of tax and duty exemptions for any enterprise of persons with disabilities. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the development of services for persons with disabilities in rural areas and remote communities.

Article 9. The Government indicated previously that a CNO has existed since 1973 for the rehabilitation and apprenticeship of persons with disabilities of all ages. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the number of persons trained and made available to persons with disabilities.

Honduras

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1980)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Active policy designed to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment. The Committee notes the detailed report and the full documentation received in September 2009. The Government lists the measures intended to promote economic growth, increase income and reduce the fiscal deficit and tax burden. The Government's objective is to create high-quality employment; carry out investment in economic and social infrastructure in order to promote productivity, investment and decent work; and strengthen investment in education, training, research and technological development. In the 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee emphasized that Executive Decree No. PCM-05-2007 of 2007 integrates the "National Plan for the Creation of Decent Employment" into the country's poverty reduction strategy and gives it the status of state policy (2010 General Survey, paragraph 57). The Government points out that in its report since 2008 the country is no longer in the category of "heavily indebted poor country", having moved into the category of "lower middle income country". According to the National Institute for Statistics, the percentage of households living in poverty in 2009 was 59.2 per cent and 36 per cent of households were classified as living in extreme poverty. In 2009 the rate of open unemployment was 2.9 per cent and the rate of invisible underemployment was 29.8 per cent. With the implementation of the National Decent Work Programme (PNTD), the Government is seeking to generate some 425,000 jobs during 2006–09 and some 650,000 jobs in the following six years. The PNTD seeks to promote decent work with the emphasis on young people, the development of micro-, small and medium-sized enterprises, reduction of informal work and underemployment, and the improvement of services relating to employment, vocational training and labour market information. The Government also states that monitoring instruments for evaluating the management of comprehensive employment policies are being applied in order to be able to measure their results. The Committee requests the Government to supply information in its next report on the results achieved in the creation of productive employment in the context of the PNPD. The Committee requests that up-to-date information be included on the size and distribution of the workforce and on the nature and extent of unemployment, as an essential component of the implementation of an active employment policy within the meaning of the Convention.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. Measures for alleviating the impact of the crisis. The Committee observes the negative impact of the international financial crisis on public finance, growth in GDP and private, national and foreign investment, causing a drop in income and employment. The Government indicates in its report that efforts are being made to ensure macroeconomic stability and stimulate the creation of productive employment, as well as boosting training of the workforce in priority population groups and sectors of production. The Committee also notes the tripartite commission set up to construct a space for dialogue, coordination, negotiation and consultation with special emphasis on the "National Plan for the Creation of Decent Employment" and the "Support policy for supporting the competitiveness of micro-, small and medium-sized enterprises". In the 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee underlines the importance of ongoing, genuine tripartite consultations for tackling and alleviating the consequences of the global economic crisis (2010 General Survey, paragraph 788). The Committee requests the Government to supply information in its next report on the consultations held with a view to formulating and implementing an active employment policy enabling the negative impact of the global crisis to be overcome. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on the consultations held with representatives of the persons affected by the measures to be taken from other sectors of the economically active population, such as those working in the rural sector and the informal economy.

The Committee notes Decree No. 230-2010 of November 2010 establishing the National Solidarity Plan for anti-crisis employment which includes the National Programme on Hourly Employment. The Committee notes the opposition expressed by the General Federation of Workers (CGT), the Workers' Confederation of Honduras (CTH) and the Single Confederation of Workers of Honduras (CUTH) towards the draft National Solidarity Plan in a communication sent to the Government in October 2010. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the manner in which account has been taken of the opinions and experience of the representatives of employers' and workers' organizations in the formulation and implementation of the aforementioned Plan. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the supervision and monitoring of the Programme, the extent to which the beneficiaries have succeeded in obtaining productive employment and details of age, sex, place of residence, training received and any other data enabling a quantitative and qualitative examination to be made of the employment created.

Coordination of policies. The Government states that it is joining forces to improve the employability and competitiveness of the workforce by means of a National Vocational Training Programme which is integrated with the creation of productive work. The Committee also notes that the National Competitiveness Strategy identifies as motors of development the service-oriented maquila (export processing) sector, the full development of agri-food potential, promotion of the forestry sector and the full development of tourism. The Committee requests the Government to include information in its next report on the steps taken to coordinate occupational education and training policies with prospective employment opportunities and to improve the competitiveness of the economy.

Impact of trade agreements. In its previous comments the Committee referred to the entry into force of the Dominican Republic–Central America–United States Free Trade Agreement (CAFTA–DR). In view of the importance of exports for sustaining productive employment in the country's economy, the Committee again requests the Government to include information in its next report on the impact of trade agreements on the generation of productive employment.

Export processing zones. The Committee notes that, according to the Honduran Association of Maquila Enterprises, in January 2009 there were 250 enterprises working in the export processing (maquila) sector employing nearly 119,000 workers. More than 12,000 jobs have been lost in this sector since 2008. The highest levels of activity remain in textiles, clothing and vehicle parts. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the contribution of the export processing zones towards the creation of lasting, high-quality employment.

Micro-, small and medium-sized enterprises (MSMEs). According to the Ministry of Industry and Trade, the 280,000 MSMEs in the country generate approximately 25 per cent of GDP and more than 700,000 jobs. In October 2008 Decree No. 135 approving the Act for the promotion and development of competitiveness of MSMEs was adopted. The Act seeks to promote a favourable environment in which urban and rural MSMEs can develop their competitiveness and establish an enterprise culture, facilitate access to financing, create conditions for the establishment and consolidation of production lines and draw up strategic plans for ensuring the full development of the sector. Funds of 1,000 million lempiras were assigned to the development of the MSMEs. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the impact of the new legal framework relating to MSMEs on the creation of employment and the reduction of poverty.

Migrant workers. The Committee notes that migrants account for more than 5 per cent of the population. The destination of 81.1 per cent of migrants is North America. Remittances from the United States to Honduras amount to some US$2,600,000 annually. The Government states that procedures are being implemented to organize the flow of labour-related remittances and investment and to reduce their utilization in the consumer sphere, ensuring that they are undertaken within proposed plans for the reduction of unemployment and underemployment. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the manner in which programmes for sound investment of remittances sent by migrant workers have contributed to the creation of productive employment.

Youth employment. According to the National Youth Forum, the unemployment rate for economically active young persons stands at 5.2 per cent and is even higher in urban areas, especially the city of Tegucigalpa (10.8 per cent), while rural unemployment stands at 2.9 per cent. The rate of open unemployment for young persons who have completed secondary or higher education is 8.6 per cent and 8 per cent respectively. The Committee observes that young persons who have received training face particular problems in finding employment. The Government indicates that it is necessary to eliminate the social problems that represent a real risk for the youth population, including violence, poor access to health care and education, and also exclusion from political, social and economic opportunities. The Committee notes that the National Youth Policy and its Strategic Plan have been approved. The Plan of Action for Youth Employment 2009–11 has been adopted in order to promote the employability of young people by means of access to technical and vocational training. The strategic components of the Plan of Action include promoting the development of young entrepreneurs and increasing access to productive assets to discourage the migration of young persons between 15 and 29 years of age who form a vulnerable section of the population. The Committee also observes that there is a growing problem of unemployment among educated workers, particularly young university graduates, who are unable to find secure employment commensurate with their skill level. This is now an issue for both advanced market economies and developing countries. Not only are their skills underutilized but this pattern of casual jobs can prove detrimental to their lifetime career progression (2010 General Survey, paragraph 800). The Committee urges the Government to continue to focus on the need to integrate young persons in the labour market. The Committee requests the Government to include information in its next report on the results achieved by the National Youth Policy and the Plan of Action for Youth Employment 2009–11.

India

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1998)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. General economic policies. In reply to the 2008 observation, the Government states in a report received in September 2009 that the successive Five-year Plans in India have always stressed realizing high rate of growth in all economic activities with a view to generating additional employment for the unemployed and also to create decent sustainable work for all of those already employed. As part of the 11th Five-year Plan (2007–12), the Government intended to create 58 million new job opportunities. During 2004–05, the workforce of 459.1 million consisted of 261.23 million self-employed (56 per cent), 65.65 million regular workers (14.3 per cent) and 132.68 million casual workers (28.9 per cent). In its General Survey of 2010 concerning employment instruments, the Committee noted that the 11th Five-year Plan 2007–12 provided an opportunity to restructure policies to achieve a new vision based on faster, more broad-based and inclusive growth. The plan aimed at making employment generation an integral part of the growth process and devised strategies to accelerate not only the growth of employment but also the wages of the poorly paid (General Survey, op. cit., paragraphs 41 and 602). The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report indications on the outcomes or impact of various employment policies and programmes implemented under the 11th Five-year Plan 2007–12. Please also continue to include detailed statistical data on the situation and trends of the active population, employment, unemployment and underemployment disaggregated by state, sector, age, sex and skills, in particular for socially vulnerable groups such as young persons, women jobseekers, scheduled castes and scheduled tribes, ethnic minorities and people with disabilities (Article 1(2) and Article 2(a)).

Skills development. The Government indicates that in the present context of liberalization, globalization and changing economic scenario, the emphasis needs to be on upgrading the skills of the labour force keeping in mind the demand of the labour market. The Committee also notes with interest that the Unorganized Workers' Social Security Act, enacted on 30 December 2008, formulates schemes for skill up-graduation of workers in the informal economy. In association with the ILO, the Government has formulated the National Skills Development Policy and has taken steps on the formulation of the National Employment Policy with the objectives of providing remunerative and decent employment. The Committee looks forward to examining the first report on the application of the Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142). The Committee recalls that Convention No. 142 is critically related to the attainment of full employment and decent work and to the realization of the right to education for all. It invites the Government to include in its next report on Convention No. 122 information on the impact of the initiatives taken for skills up-graduation and reskilling of the workforce in particular of those working in the unorganized sector.

Promotion of employment for poor workers in the rural sector. In reply to the 2008 observation, the Government indicates that the experience under the National Rural Employment Guarantee Act (No. 45 of September 2005) (NREGA) shows that the workforce participation of scheduled caste and scheduled tribe groups was around 55 per cent in 2008–09. Women workforce participation has also surpassed the statutory minimum requirement of one third participation. In the year 2007–08, women participation was 43 per cent, which has increased to 48 per cent in 2008–09. The Committee welcomes receiving in the next report updated information on the implementation of NREGA and its impact in creating employment opportunities for the rural sector.

Article 3. Consultation of the representatives of the persons affected. In reply to previous comments, the Government indicates that the 42nd Session of the Indian Labour Conference, the apex national-level tripartite body, held in February 2009, witnessed a comprehensive discussion on the global financial crisis, its effects on large-scale downsizing, lay-offs, wage cuts and job losses (General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 90). The Committee welcomes this approach and recalls that consultation with the social partners both at the earliest stages of policy formulation and during the implementation process is essential and enables governments to take fully into account their experience and views. It looks forward to examining in its next report how tripartite mechanisms have contributed to formulate an employment policy and implement active labour market measures.

Islamic Republic of Iran

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1972)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in May 2010 in reply to previous comments. It draws the Government's attention to the observation formulated by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) forwarded in September 2010. It also invites the Government to include its own remarks on the matters raised by ITUC when reporting in 2011 on the following issues.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adoption and implementation of employment policy. The Government refers to the 20 Year Perspective Plan aiming for full employment by 2015, as well as the numerous challenges experienced in executing the Economic Development Plan, ranging from the chronic mismatch between female labour supply and market demand, to the shrinkage of the export market due to the global economic crisis. It also describes various policies and measures adopted in 2009 to promote employment, including 3 billion dollars allocated to its economic programmes, lower bank loan interest rates, state employment programmes, and better enforcement of employment regulations. The Committee notes the provision of low interest bank loans for small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), which has created 938,000 new opportunities as of 2009. The Government also indicates that it has provided financial support to struggling enterprises in 2006 and 2007 to prevent mass lay-offs. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the procedures and mechanisms established to review and assess the results of its employment policy measures. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the policies that promote full, productive and lasting employment opportunities to the unemployed and other categories of workers affected by the crisis.

Employment trends. The Government communicates that women's economic participation remains a major issue and that the rate has decreased further from 17 per cent in 2005 to 16.4 per cent in 2006 and 15.6 per cent in 2007. The Government relates that Parliament has addressed this issue by passing a bill promoting home-based work in April 2010, providing a legal basis and financial support to enhance self-employment opportunities for women. According to the Statistical Book for Year 1385 published by the Statistical Centre, the national economic participation rate in the period 2006–07 was 40.6 per cent, while the unemployment rate was 11.2 per cent. The data shows a high youth unemployment rate of 23.3 per cent, as well as a marked disparity between female and male economic participation rates, with the former merely at 16.6 per cent and the latter at 40.6 per cent. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the labour market and employment trends and communicate any difficulties experienced in collecting and disaggregating relevant data.

Labour market measures. The Government indicates that it has established the Workers' Unemployment Prevention Fund in 2006 to provide unemployment benefit and training to workers affected by enterprise restructuring. The Government also mentions an increase in the number of private employment agencies. The Committee further notes that temporary work permits were issued to Afghan workers in 2007. The Committee invites the Government to include both data and analysis regarding the effect of measures taken under the Workers' Unemployment Prevention Fund and private employment agencies' intervention in the labour market. It would also appreciate information on the integration of Afghan workers in the local labour market (see Part X of the Employment Policy (Supplementary Provisions) Recommendation, 1984 (No. 169)).

Youth employment. The Committee notes the Government's Training Plan for University Graduates which finances vocational training for persons with university qualifications by its executive departments and other authorized private and public entities. The Government indicates that the State Technical and Vocation Organization's policies have been revisited in 2008 and 2009 to improve the organization's efficiency and market sensitivity. The Government highlights that 67 per cent of the organization's trainees have been women but regrets the lack of data on the training of young persons disaggregated by gender, as requested by the Committee in previous comments. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on employment policies and measures adopted to address the needs of young workers including data on the gender of persons benefiting from the Government's Training Plan for University Graduates. It further invites the Government to provide detailed information on how the State Technical and Vocation Organization has been restructured under the 2008 and 2009 policy review to better coordinate education and training policies with prospective employment opportunities.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. In response to the Committee's request to detail the institutional mechanisms which give effect to the Convention's consultation requirement, the Government describes five such forums: the National Labour Forum, the High Labour Council, the High Council of Technical Protection, the Council of Social Security Organization, and the High Employment Council. All of these forums share a similar organizational composition consisting of government officials, academic experts, and employers' and employees' representatives. The Government indicates that the subject matters of these forums range from broad labour issues to more specific discussions on social security, educational policy and labour culture. The Committee invites the Government to provide some specific examples of how discussions resulting from such forums have been used in its employment policy formulation and implementation. In this regard, the Committee asks the Government to focus on the consultative procedures beyond the forums' organizational compositions, which enable the Government to take fully into account the views and experiences of persons affected by employment policy measures.

Ireland

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received since 2005. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a detailed report on the application of the Convention, including information on the following matters.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends and labour market policies. The Committee invites the Government to provide an assessment of the impact of its active labour market measures. It would also appreciate receiving information on how the measures taken to promote full and productive employment operate within a "framework of a coordinated economic and social policy".

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the consultations held with representatives of the persons affected, both at the stage of the formulation of employment policies and in relation to the implementation of the measures adopted under such policies.

Italy

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes the detailed replies provided in the Government's report received in December 2009 to the matters raised in its 2007 observation.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment policy measures taken in response to the global crisis. The Committee notes that the unemployment rate rose from a low of 6 per cent in 2007 to 8.2 per cent in 2009: more than 2,200,000 persons were seeking employment in the first trimester of 2010, 1 million persons in the South, more than 800,000 persons in the North and some 440,000 persons in the Centre according to the data published by ISTAT. Employment has decreased the most in the manufacturing sector, which accounted for 60.6 per cent of the total net employment losses from July–September 2008 to the same period of 2009. Other badly affected sectors include wholesale and retail trade, real estate, rental and business services, hotels, restaurants and construction. Three stimulus packages were implemented by the Government since the start of the crisis. The largest component (around 38 per cent) of the 2009 outlay of the combined Italian fiscal stimulus packages was support for business in the form of increased access to credit and subsidies. The next largest item was investment in infrastructure projects (23 per cent). Twenty per cent of the resources were devoted to income support measures, while the remaining 19 per cent was allocated to improve the functioning of the labour market, including training, job search assistance and subsidized reductions in working hours. The Government indicates that, among the measures taken in response to the global crisis contained in Decree-Law No. 185 of 28 November 2008, those regarding employment include: facilitating the employment of individuals benefiting from income support mechanisms; anticipating the re-employment of workers benefiting from the Cassa Integrazione Guadagni (CIG) (Wage Guarantee Fund); strengthening job-security agreements; and stimulating self-employment. Labour market measures focused on the mechanisms which ensure income support in case of risk of unemployment. The Government temporarily broadened the coverage of some of the existing mechanisms, namely the scheme to protect workers' income in firms threatened with financial difficulties due to the crisis or restructuring, by providing unemployment benefits and mobility allowances. At the end of 2009, more than 36,000 enterprises involving 250,000 workers were expected to use those mechanisms. In January 2009, applications for unemployment benefits and mobility allowances increased by 44.2 per cent compared with 2008, reaching 750,000 persons. The Government also reports that, in the framework of the global crisis, various agreements with the social partners signed at the regional level were aimed at facilitating the access to credit of enterprises, reducing working time and broadening the coverage of income support mechanisms. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on how the policies designed and the programmes implemented will translate into productive and lasting employment opportunities for the unemployed and other categories of vulnerable workers affected by the global crisis. It requests the Government to provide information on the effects of the measures adopted to close the gap between the various regions of the country as to the levels of employment.

Other labour market measures. In reply to previous comments on limits to temporary and part-time employment contracts, the Government indicates that, according to the legislation applicable since 2001, a temporary employment contract cannot exceed 36 months. Act No. 247 of 24 December 2007 amended the previous legislation to impose a permanent employment contract after 36 successive months of work under contracts for a specified period of time. The only exception provided for in Act No. 247 is the possibility of a single further renewal of up to eight months subject to certain conditions. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the impact of new legislation regulating the limitation of temporary employment contracts in satisfying the employment needs of workers whose contracts of employment have ended.

Youth employment. The Government indicated in its report that it launched the plan of action Italia 2020, which is mainly designed to facilitate the entry into the labour market of young persons under 25 years. This plan, among others, aims to: strengthen career service networks in high schools and universities; enhance vocational training, training within the workplace and apprenticeship; promote continuous learning; and stimulate an offer of universities in line with the labour market needs. Following the distribution of the funds from the Youth Policy Fund for the period 2007–08 to regions, provinces and municipalities, framework agreements were signed with all regions in order to stimulate creativity, entrepreneurship and employment of young persons while fostering regional productivity and creating stable and qualitative employment. Various other initiatives were carried out especially to promote entrepreneurship among youth and to foster youth employment. The Committee notes that the youth unemployment rate between 2007 and 2009 rose by almost 6.5 per cent points for a total of 26.3 per cent. In its 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee noted that there was a growing problem of unemployment among educated workers, particularly young university graduates who are unable to find secure employment commensurate with their skill level. This is an issue for advanced market economies as well as developing countries. Not only are their skills underutilized but this pattern of casual jobs can prove detrimental to their lifetime career progression (see paragraph 800 of the 2010 General Survey). The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide detailed information in its next report on the efforts made to improve the employment situation for young persons and the results achieved in terms of job creation and sustainable employment as a result of programmes adopted.

Women and other specific categories of vulnerable workers. The Government indicated in its report that Ministerial Decree of 13 November 2008 identified the regions in which the employment rate for women was less than 20 per cent of men's or in which the unemployment rate for women was more than 10 per cent of men's. The Government also indicated that the Programme of Action for the Re-employment of Vulnerable Workers (PARI), aimed at re-employing vulnerable workers, was continued and enhanced. The direct beneficiaries of the programme are workers benefiting from income support or other benefits linked to unemployment and particular categories of workers including young persons, women and workers over 50 years old. PARI relied on individual training plans as well as on economic incentives to enterprises willing to re-employ the beneficiaries of the programme and incentives to individuals choosing self-employment. PARI has been carried out in 18 regions. As of 30 June 2009, more than 18,000 workers were employed in the framework of PARI. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the impact of PARI and other measures designed to encourage and support the employment of women and other specific vulnerable categories of workers such as older workers.

Educational and training policies. In its 2010 General Survey on employment instruments, the Committee noted that the reform of the education system introduced by Act No. 133 of 2008 is aimed at the rational and effective use of funds giving priority to the planning and implementation of a new territorial governance of education and training. It also noted that, in order to align training more closely to the needs expressed in the labour market, the system of higher technical education and training is being reorganized to offer higher technical specialization as an alternative to university studies (see paragraphs 120 and 583 of the 2010 General Survey). The Government in its report provides information on training policies and inter-professional joint funds. The Committee notes the Government's statement indicating that investing in human capital is likely to increase productivity and reduce the risk of unemployment. The inter-professional joint funds, which are established by employers' and workers' organizations through specific agreements, are mechanisms for financing company, sectoral and regional training plans that enterprises decide to run for their own employees. For the period 2004–08, inter-professional joint funds for continuing training approved more than 6,000 training plans involving 35,000 enterprises and almost 764,000 workers. The Committee would appreciate receiving information on how the educational and training measures are coordinated with employment policies. It would also welcome information on how the regional authorities and the social partners participate in the design and implementation of training policies and programmes.

Cooperatives. The Committee recalls that in its 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, it noted that the cooperative legislation in Italy offers a good example in terms of innovation and development (see paragraphs 464, 474 and 478 of the 2010 General Survey). The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the measures taken to promote productive employment through cooperatives in line with the Promotion of Cooperatives Recommendation, 2002 (No. 193).

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1953)

Organization and functions of the employment service. The Committee notes the Government's reports supplied in November 2009 and September 2010, which included observations by the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC–RENGO). The National Confederation of Trade Unions (ZENROREN) also supplied observations in September 2010. In reply to the 2008 observation, the Government's report included an evaluation of the 2006 model project for market testing aimed at securing recruitment in three regions with difficult employment conditions. It further provided an evaluation of the performance of other projects for career interchange for middle- or advanced-aged white-collar jobseekers and other long-time unemployed persons. The Committee also notes that the retained employment rate in those regions, where the career interchange project was implemented by the Government stood at 44.6 per cent and exceeds that of those regions in which the project was implemented through private intermediaries and only resulted in 39.6 per cent. JTUC–RENGO reiterates that the Public Employment Security Offices are the core local institutions concerning employment measures and the front-line agencies for directly contacting jobseekers and employers. In 2010, the Government indicated that the Public Employment Security Offices are a basis of various employment measures of the Government and that they should not be transferred to local municipalities. Also, the service system of the national network should be maintained firmly and continuously. As in its previous observation, the Committee invites the Government to include in its next report updated information on the ability of the public employment service to ensure the best possible organization of the employment market as an integral part of the national programme for the achievement and maintenance of full employment and the development and use of productive resources.

Development of employment offices throughout the country. In its previous observation, the Committee noted that, in April 2007, 466 Public Employment Security Offices, 100 branch offices and 18 local offices existed throughout the country. In 2009, the Government reported that, in April 2009, 437 Public Employment Security Offices existed, including 95 branch offices and 13 local offices. The Committee notes that in 2009 JTUC–RENGO indicated that any specific plan for the reorganization and winding up of public offices should be not only explained to local trade unions, employers' associations and local governments, but also be subject to approval by the Labour Policy Council. In 2010, the Government added that in reviewing the geographical distribution and the local needs, including the workload and changes in local demand, new Public Employment Security Offices have been established in areas with relatively high workloads and others have been consolidated in areas with relatively low workloads. This has resulted in a review of 58 offices between 1 June 2005 and 31 May 2010. As a result, one new office has been newly established and 57 offices have been consolidated. The Committee requests the Government to continue to report on the process based on which the organization of the network of employment offices is reviewed, and the extent to which the social partners participate in such process. The Committee would also welcome receiving information on the steps taken to ensure that such offices are sufficient in number to serve each geographical area of the country and that they are conveniently located for employers and for workers (Article 3).

Participation of the social partners. The Committee notes JTUC–RENGO's request asking that, if the Government was to revise the structure of the Employment Bureau, such should be subject to the approval of the Labour Policy Council, the tripartite advisory body comprising representatives of the public, unions and employers' organizations. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's intention to respect ILO Conventions and the discussion that already had taken place twice in the Council's framework. The Government reiterates that, taking into account Article 4(1) of the Convention, the Government will continue to make use of the framework of the Labour Policy Council. The Committee welcomes this approach and invites the Government to include in its next report information on the contribution made by the Labour Policy Council or any other tripartite framework in the formulation of recommendations in the matters related to the public employment service (Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention).

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1986)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in the report received in November 2009 and the attached comments from the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC–RENGO).

Article 3 of the Convention. Participation of the social partners in the formulation of policies. In reply to the 2008 observation, the Government indicated that consultations covered by the Convention are implemented in the Labour Policy Council. The Committee notes that the Council on Economic and Fiscal Policy formulates the basic policies for economic and fiscal management and structural reform, which determines the fundamental orientation of policy measures, including employment measures. In this regard, JTUC–RENGO expressed its concern about the Government giving serious attention to recommendations made within the Council on Economic and Fiscal Policy, the Council for Regulatory Reform and other forums that do not include worker representation. JTUC–RENGO considers that discussions at the Labour Policy Council tend to be conducted within the framework set by these councils. The Committee notes JTUC–RENGO’s call to respect the Labour Policy Council as one of the pillars of the decision-making process for employment and labour policies. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on how discussions resulting from the Labour Policy Council, as well as other councils, have been used in the formulation and implementation of the employment policy. In this regard, the Committee asks the Government to focus on the consultative procedures which enable to take fully into account the views and experiences of persons affected by employment policy measures.

Articles 1 and 2. Measures taken in response to the global crisis. The Committee notes that the total unemployment rate increased from 3.8 per cent in October 2008 to 5.7 per cent in July 2009 due to the economic deterioration, equivalent to about 1.3 million more individuals unemployed. Among the measures implemented to improve the employment situation, the Government has created funds in prefectures to create short- and medium-term employment and to provide workers not eligible to receive unemployment insurance with income to secure living costs. The Government has also extended grants to firms to compensate decreased business and to support employment without dismissing workers. In April 2008 the “Job-Card System” was set up in order to provide training opportunities for workers with limited opportunities to find employment. The Committee also notes the increase of staff levels at the public employment services as a consequence to the rise in jobseekers that required services. According to JTUC–RENGO, with the rising unemployment among non-regular workers following the economic turndown, the Government has been working with the social partners to adopt the Tripartite Agreement toward Employment Stabilization and Job Creation. JTUC–RENGO also considers that job creation and employment mismatches continue to pose a challenge. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on how the policies designed and the programmes implemented will translate into productive and lasting employment opportunities for the unemployed and other categories of vulnerable workers affected by the crisis such as non-regular workers.

Implementation of an active employment policy. In reply to previous comments, the Government indicates in its report that Japan is progressing with structural adjustments to resolve the surpluses in employment, facilities and debts in order to rebuild a healthy economic environment. The Committee notes that revitalization grants have been established to facilitate small and medium-sized enterprises contributing to regional employment creation and expand employment in regions where unemployment is higher. The Committee also notes from the documentation available in the ILO that a New Growth Strategy (Basic Policies) was approved by the Cabinet in December 2009, focusing on generating demand and jobs by implementing measures to improve people’s livelihoods. The Government aims to create new demand and jobs in fields such as the environment, health and tourism, with the target of generating millions of jobs and ¥100 trillion in demand in these three sectors by 2020. Under the new strategy, the Government set a target for GDP growth of more than 2 per cent a year for the coming decade. Following a contraction of 1.2 per cent in 2008 and 5 per cent in 2009, real GDP growth is projected by the Bank of Japan to be about 2.1 per cent in the fiscal year 2010. The Government also seeks to reduce the unemployment rate from 5 per cent to about 3 per cent in the medium term. The Committee invites the Government to state in its next report whether special difficulties have been encountered in attaining the objectives of the Convention and how far these difficulties have been overcome.

Employment of women. In reply to the previous observation, the Government indicates that female participation in the labour market has increased for six consecutive years, with 23,120,000 female workers as of 2008. The Government informs that approximately 70 per cent of female workers leave their jobs when their first child is born, and a large number of women leave their jobs due to childcare and that the percentage of women in managerial posts continues to be low. The Committee notes the efforts to encourage employment of women workers with the Positive Action Support Site by disseminating information to companies of examples of good practices implemented by different firms and therefore raising public awareness. The Equal Employment Opportunity Law was revised in 2007 to further develop and strengthen the provisions including invalidating dismissals due to pregnancy and childbirth. The Committee notes that the Draft Act for Partial Amendment to the Child Care and Family Care Leave Act, which includes provisions for obliging business operators to establish a reduced work hour system for workers raising children under three years old and promotional measures for male workers to take childcare leave, was approved in June 2009. The Government also reports to be increasing efforts to improve day-care services. The Committee invites the Government to report on the impact of the new legislation and on how these measures have created further productive employment opportunities for women.

Regarding the career-tracking system, the Government recalls that the Equal Employment Opportunity Law prohibits employers to classify workers into certain careers according to sex. In order to ensure opportunities for women to have access to the “main career track” more effectively, the revised Equal Employment Opportunity Law prohibits employers from applying, without legitimate reason, a criterion concerning the worker’s availability for reassignment that results in the relocation of the worker’s residence on the grounds that applying such a criterion is considered as indirect discrimination. The Committee invites the Government to provide further information on the measures taken to ensure that in practice companies are not using the two-track system for recruiting graduates, where men are assigned to managerial tracks and women to clerical tracks where upward mobility is very limited, and thus to ensure that each worker shall have the fullest possible opportunity to qualify for and use his or her skills, in accordance with Article 1(2)(c) of the Convention.

Youth employment. The Government states in its report that the employment situation of the second semester of 2008 resulted in problems such as enterprises cancelling informal job offers made in March 2009 to new graduates. Measures have been adopted to prevent such cancellations through the amendment of the Ordinance for Enforcement of the Employment Security Act. The Government introduced measures to assist young people in temporary or part-time jobs, known as freeters. In April 2008, the Freeters Regular Employment Promotion Plan was promoted to support stable employment and has resulted in the regular employment of 268,000 freeters. Programmes have also been implemented relating to the one-stop service centre for young workers and the promotion of vocational training and career development in collaboration with universities and technical colleges. The Government states that the situation has been improving as the number of freeters has decreased over five consecutive years, with the number of freeters 1,700,000 in 2008. According to the OECD, the unemployment rate for 15–24 year olds rose by 2.4 percentage points, reaching 9.9 per cent in July 2009. In its 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee noted that in Japan one third of young workers are in non-regular employment. The Committee observed that there was a growing problem of unemployment among educated workers, particularly young university graduates, who are unable to find secure employment commensurate with their skill level. This is an issue for the advanced market economies as well as developing countries. Not only are their skills underutilized, but this pattern of casual jobs can prove detrimental to their lifetime career progression (see paragraphs 576 and 800 of the 2010 General Survey). The Committee encourages the Government to report on how it is enhancing vocational training and career development for young workers, as well as on the impact of the measures taken to support re-employment of young workers.

Older workers. The Government reports that as of June 2008, 96.2 per cent of enterprises with 51 or more workers have implemented employment security measures for older people. Thirty-nine per cent of them have allowed workers to remain working until age 65 or more if they wish, while 12.4 per cent have implemented employment security measures for people up to age 70. The Government also states that strong guidance will continue to be provided to enterprises that have not implemented employment security measures for older people. The Committee invites again the Government to provide detailed information on the measures implemented as part of an active policy intended to address the employment situation caused by an ageing workforce and a slowing rate of population growth.

The Japan Postal Industry Workers’ Union (YUSANRO) supplied observations on the Convention in October 2010. The Committee invites the Government to provide its own remarks on the matters raised therein for its forthcoming session.

Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes the Government’s detailed report received in September 2010, including the comments formulated by the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC–RENGO). The report contains replies to the 2005 direct request formulated by the Committee, as well as to matters raised in the report of the tripartite committee established to examine a representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution alleging non-observance by Japan of this Convention, which was approved by the ILO Governing Body at its 304th Session (March 2009).

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Tripartite Committee (representation made under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO). The Committee recalls that it was entrusted to follow up on the application of the Convention with respect to the questions raised in the representation (document GB.304/14/6, adopted by the Governing Body at its 304th Session in March 2009).

Articles 1(3) and 3 of the Convention. National policy aimed at ensuring appropriate vocational rehabilitation for all categories of persons with disabilities. (a) Criteria used to determine whether a person with disabilities is considered to be able to “work under an employment relationship”. In paragraph 73 of the tripartite committee report, it was noted that the objective of type-A and type-B programmes under the support programme for the continuation of work (SPCW) was to provide persons with difficulties to be employed at ordinary workplaces with opportunities for work as well as training for improving their knowledge and skills to enter the workforce. However, while type-A facilities “employed” persons with disabilities under an employment contract, type-B facilities offered “opportunities for productive activities” without establishing an employment relationship and accordingly, the labour legislation did not apply. As a result of this situation, persons with disabilities involved in type-B programmes were not yet considered as able to work under an employment relationship. Considering the difficulty of ascertaining how in this case, the distinction between work under an employment relationship and other work would operate in practice, the tripartite committee concluded that further information was required on the criteria used to determine whether a person with disabilities is considered to be able to “work under an employment relationship”. The Committee notes the indications provided by the Government in its report pointing out that criteria used to decide whether a person with disabilities is considered to be able to “work under an employment relationship” have been set forth by the “Ministerial Circular concerning the application of Labour Standards Law to persons with disabilities engaging in activities under the support programme for continuation of work provided by SSPDA”, No. 100204 of 2 October 2006 (Ministerial Circular No. 100204). The Committee notes that Ministerial Circular No. 100204 states that persons with disabilities engaging in activities under the SPCW fall into one of three categories: (1) those who work in type-A facilities under an employment contract; (2) those who work in type-A facilities without an employment contract; and (3) those who work in type-B facilities without an employment contract. The municipal authority shall decide under which category a person with disabilities falls, taking into account the level of her/his disability and her/his wishes. In principle, those who fall under category (1) are considered to be workers under the Labour Standards Law and those who fall under categories (2) and (3) are not considered to be workers since they are not subject to subordination and supervision. The Committee invites the Government to specify in its next report how many persons fall under categories that do not allow them to be covered by an employment relationship and the measures taken to ensure that they may also benefit from employment opportunities in the open labour market.

(b) Bringing work performed by persons with disabilities in sheltered workshops within the scope of the labour legislation. In paragraph 75 of the report, it was considered that standards applicable to work performed in sheltered workshops should be in line with the principles of the Convention, including the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment. The Government refers to the “Ministerial Circular concerning the application of article 9 of the Labour Standards Law to persons with disabilities engaging in activities at welfare workshops, small-scale workshops, etc.”, No. 0517002 of 17 May 2007 (Ministerial Circular No. 0517002). The Committee notes that Ministerial Circular No. 0517002 fixes the criteria for which persons with disabilities engaging in activities, especially training, at welfare workshops and small-scale workshops can be considered to be workers. The Committee recalls that from the perspective of the Convention’s objective of the social and economic integration of persons with disabilities into the community and wider society and with a view to the full recognition of the contribution made by persons with disabilities, bringing work performed by such persons in sheltered workshops within the scope of labour legislation, to the extent appropriate, would appear to be crucial. The Committee invites the Government to further clarify the measures taken to ensure that the treatment of persons in sheltered workshops is in line with the principles of the Convention, including the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment (Article 4).

(c) Low pay for persons with disabilities carrying out activities under the type-B programmes under the SPCW. In paragraph 76 of the report, it was noted that recipients of type-B programmes under the SPCW received a particularly low level of pay. The Government was requested to provide information on any progress to bring workshop pay to an adequate level. The Government indicates that, in the framework of the Five-Year Plan to Double Workshop Pay, prefectural governments provide support to service providers in an effort to increase the level of workshop pay through measures which include training programmes for raising management consciousness of service providers and human resources development among their staff. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on measures taken or envisaged in bringing workshop pay to an adequate level in the framework of the Five-Year Plan to Double Workshop Pay.

(d) Service fees for participants in type-B programmes under the SPCW. In paragraphs 77 and 79 of the report, it was noted that persons with disabilities were entitled, free of charge, to vocational rehabilitation and employment services through the Public Employment Security Office. The tripartite committee expressed its concern at the introduction of a fee for participants in type-B programmes under the SPCW for the services received under such programmes, including vocational rehabilitation. The Government indicates that recipients of type-B programmes under the SPCW, while engaging in productive activities also receive welfare support. Therefore, they pay service fees in the same way as recipients of other welfare services. It adds that, in addition to reducing service fees in October and April 2008, the Government abolished service fees for persons with disabilities in low-income households in April 2010. The Committee notes with interest the measures taken by the Government to further reduce service fees for recipients of type-B programmes. The Committee hopes that the Government will pursue its efforts to ensure that persons with disabilities are not discouraged or excluded from becoming involved in such programmes and gaining eventual access to open employment. In this regard, the Committee recalls that Paragraph 22(2) of the Vocational Rehabilitation (Disabled) Recommendation, 1955 (No. 99), recommends the provision of free vocational rehabilitation services.

Promotion of employment for persons with disabilities. The Committee notes that the “Basic policy on employment measures for persons with disabilities” was adopted by the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare in 2009 and was followed by a Cabinet decision of 29 June 2010, regarding the “Basic direction with promoting reform of the system for persons with disabilities”. The Government intends to adopt domestic legislation with the aim of ratifying the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. In this regard, JTUC–RENGO states that it will pay close attention to discussions at meetings held in the framework of the proposed reform as well as to the promotion and implementation by the Government of comprehensive policy measures which include the employment of persons with disabilities. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the impact of the measures taken in the framework of the reform of the system for persons with disabilities on promoting employment opportunities for these persons in the open labour market. It asks the Government to continue to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is being applied and to include, for example, statistics and other relevant data disaggregated, as much as possible, by age, sex and the nature of the disability, extracts from reports, studies and inquiries concerning the matters covered by the Convention (Part V of the report form).

Articles 3, 4 and 7. Equality of opportunity between persons with disabilities and workers generally.

(a) Implementation of the Five-Year Plan for Implementation of Priority Measures (2008–12). In paragraph 80 of the report, it was noted that the number of persons with disabilities that obtained employment through the Public Employment Security Office increased in recent years. It was further noted that the Government sought to enhance cooperation and coordination between welfare and employment institutions in an effort to bring about an increased transition of persons with disabilities “from welfare to employment”. The Government was requested to provide further and updated statistical information to assess the impact of these measures against the targets set by the Five-Year Plan for Implementation of Priority Measures (2008–12) (Five-Year Plan), adopted in the framework of the Basic Programme for Persons with Disabilities 2003–12, with particular regard to the number of men and women with disabilities who moved from type-B programmes under the SPCW to sheltered work protected under the labour legislation and eventually to open employment. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government which indicates that the Five-Year Plan includes the target to increase the number of recipients of the Support Programme for Transition to Employment (SPTE) and the SPCW to 2,770,000 by 2011. Moreover, this Plan aims to increase the rate of transition from trial to regular employment for persons with disabilities to 80 per cent or more by 2012, the number of “job coaches” to 5,000 by 2011 and the employment rate for persons with disabilities, after the termination of support from job coaches, to 80 per cent or more by 2012. The Government provides comprehensive information, including statistical data, on the concrete measures implemented in the framework of the Five-Year Plan. In 2008, 448,000 persons with disabilities were estimated to be employed. The number of employment and vocational life support centres for persons with disabilities increased by 235 locations (from 36 locations in 2002 to 271 locations in 2010). The number of special subsidiary companies for the employment of persons with disabilities increased to 265 in 2009. These measures contributed to the increased private sector employment for persons with disabilities throughout Japan (197,388 in 2005 to 246,480 in 2009). The Government further indicates that in 2008, transitions from type-B programmes under the SPCW to type-A programmes were 103, from type-B to open employment were 697 and from type-A to open employment were 101. In total, transitions from welfare institutions to open employment were 3,376. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report updated information on the impact of the Five-Year Plan for Implementation of Priority Measures (2008–12) and to provide relevant data on the transition of persons with disabilities from welfare institutions to open employment.

(b) Quota system for the employment of persons with disabilities. In paragraphs 81–82 of the report, the Government was invited to examine the impact of the quota system’s current limitation to persons with physical and intellectual disabilities on the employment opportunities of persons with other disabilities. Furthermore, while observing that the practice of double-counting of persons with severe disabilities in relation to the quota system did not appear to run counter to the objectives and principles of the Convention, the tripartite committee invited the Government to examine the impact of this practice in order to ascertain its effectiveness. The Government indicates that persons with mental disabilities have been included in employment quota calculations for persons with disabilities since 2006. Since this inclusion, the employment rate of persons with mental disabilities increased significantly more than that of persons with physical or intellectual disabilities, showing that the quota system proved to be effective. The Government further indicates that the number of employed persons with disabilities increased from 113,420 in 1977, when the practice was established, to 238,770 in 2009. Moreover, the number of employed persons with severe disabilities in 1977 was 15,009, compared with 92,420 in 2009. The Government observes that, since the figure also increased for persons who have no severe disabilities, the practice of double counting is not likely to have any effect on preventing the employment of these persons. The Committee invites the Government to also include updated information in this regard.

(c) Reasonable accommodation. In paragraph 83 of the report, it was emphasized that reasonable accommodation is indispensable in promoting and ensuring respect for the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment between workers with disabilities and workers generally. While noting that the Government had provided guidance and financial assistance to employers regarding the management of disability in the workplace, including workplace adaptation, the tripartite committee welcomed the planned study group on the issue of reasonable accommodation and expressed its hope that this initiative would contribute to the strengthening of the Convention’s application. In this regard, it was considered important to clarify employers’ obligations with regard to providing reasonable accommodation. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on this point.

The National Union of Welfare and Childcare Workers supplied new remarks and documents in October 2010, which were forwarded to the Government in November 2010. The Committee invites the Government to provide its own observations on the matters raised therein for the forthcoming session.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in November 2009 in reply to the 2008 direct request. The Government has adopted the National Agenda (2006–15), which includes three action phases, the first of which, “Employment opportunities for all” (2007–12) emphasizes the intensive development of manpower, the growth of export industries, the eradication of structural unemployment and support for employment and vocational training. The National Agenda sets the objective of reducing the unemployment rate by half (from 12.7 per cent in 2008 to 6.8 per cent in 2017), creating 600,000 new vacancies and increasing the activity rate of persons with disabilities and of women. In the document Kulluna Al Urdun (“We are all Jordanians”) adopted in 2007, the representatives of Jordanian civil society expressed support for the objectives of the National Agenda. The document contains recommendations, particularly in relation to taxation, human resources development and the evaluation of enterprise performance. It also emphasizes the importance of reforming labour legislation with a view to promoting openness and flexibility in the labour market. The Committee also notes the document on the national employment policy, of October 2008, which provides a detailed analysis of the labour market situation, identifies the causes of unemployment and proposes a framework for action based on several approaches including: the coordination of vocational training policy with employment policy with a view to reducing the mismatch between labour supply and demand; the implementation of special measures to remove administrative obstacles to the creation of small and medium-sized enterprises; the promotion of a conducive environment for the integration of informal economy enterprises into the formal economy; and the reduction of disparities in regional development and the promotion of labour mobility. The Government indicates in its report that the number of jobseekers reached 24,029 in 2008, of whom 8,668 have been integrated into the labour market. The Committee invites the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the results achieved in the implementation of the National Agenda (2006–15) in terms of the creation of productive and lasting employment. The Government is also invited to supplement its report with updated statistical data on the situation, level and trends of employment, unemployment and underemployment.

Coordination of education and training policy with employment policy. The Government indicates that the Vocational Training Institute has implemented a restructuring project with a view to establishing a vocational and technical education and training system offering high-quality training opportunities which respond to the needs of employers. This restructuring project will enable the Vocational Training Institute to achieve the objectives of the National Agenda, which envisages the establishment of two new vocational training bodies, the Employment and Vocational and Technical Training Council and the Higher Council for Human Resources Development. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to ensure that vocational training policies respond to the needs of the labour market. It invites the Government to include further information on the role of the training bodies and on the coordination established between the measures adopted in the context of education and training policies and of employment policy.

Youth employment. The Committee notes the statistics on the number of graduates who entered the labour market in 2005 and their distribution over three regions. According to the data contained in the national employment policy document of October 2008, each year between 70,000 and 80,000 young persons need to be integrated into the labour market, with the unemployment rate among young persons aged between 20 and 24 years amounting to 38 per cent of the active population. According to the information gathered in the General Survey of 2010 concerning employment instruments, the Committee noted that the unemployment rate is very high among educated workers, and particularly young university graduates, who are unable to find employment commensurate with their skill levels. This is now an issue for the advanced and developing countries, with the skills of young graduates being underutilized so that they have to accept casual jobs. Such a situation can prove detrimental to their lifetime career progression. The Committee therefore encourages governments to develop job creation and career guidance policies targeted in particular at this new category of the educated unemployed (General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 800). The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the impact of vocational training programmes and on the results achieved in terms of the integration of young educated workers. In particular, the Committee would be grateful to examine information disaggregated by gender on the training provided to young persons entering working life, and particularly those with a university qualification, and on its impact in terms of their integration into lasting employment.

Women’s employment. According to the information provided by the Government in July 2009, the Vocational Training Institute implemented a programme intended to increase the participation rate of women in training programmes. According to the National Agenda, the expected results would involve vocational education and training systems which respond more effectively to the needs of the labour market and active participation by the private sector in vocational education and training systems. According to the data contained in the national employment policy document of October 2008, the unemployment rate of women amounted to 26.1 per cent of the active population in 2007, and graduates of higher education were those most affected by unemployment. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures adopted or envisaged to improve and facilitate the integration of women into the labour market.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Government indicates that consultations have been held in the context of the meetings organized within the Ministry of Employment, with the participation of representatives of employers' and workers' organizations and members of civil society. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to provide precise information in its next report on the consultations held with the representatives of the social partners concerning employment policy. The Committee invites the Government to indicate whether consultations have been held with the most vulnerable categories of the population, and particularly with representatives of workers in rural areas and the informal economy, with a view to securing their collaboration in the design and implementation of employment policy programmes and measures.

Part V of the report form. ILO technical assistance. The Committee notes the technical cooperation projects established by the ILO in Jordan, and notes that the final phase of the handicraft promotion project was signed in September 2008. The project is intended to improve the training system in the field of handicrafts by promoting partnerships with the private sector and establishing networks of sales points, an Internet site and brochures to improve the marketing of handicraft production. The Committee also notes the Better Work project and its objective of reducing poverty by broadening opportunities for decent work in global supply chains through the improvement of the competitiveness of Jordanian enterprises, the development of their economic performance and the promotion of international labour standards. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the action taken as a result of the technical assistance received from the Office with a view to ensuring the implementation of an active employment policy within the meaning of the Convention. It also invites the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in relation to the employment priorities of the Decent Work Country Programme.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last report received in June 2005. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a report including information in reply to the points raised in the Committee's 2005 observation, which sets forth the following matters.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Policies to promote employment and coordination with poverty reduction. The Government enumerated the aims of the National Employment Policy, which was established in the context of the national poverty reduction strategy 2003–05, and was approved by Decree No. 126 on 14 March 2005. The objectives of the employment policy aimed, among others, at assisting unemployed citizens in choosing an occupation and placement; improving vocational training and retraining of the unemployed; organizing temporary employment and voluntary work; preventing the rise of unemployment by eliminating or reducing the effect of the factors which lead to mass unemployment; and supporting entrepreneurship and self-employment. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that employment, as a key element of poverty reduction, is central to macroeconomic and social policies. Indeed, the Committee considers that it is essential from the outset for employment objectives to be included "as a major goal" in the formulation of economic and social policy if these objectives are truly to be an integral part of the policies that are adopted. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the results and progress achieved with the implementation of the measures envisaged by the National Employment Plan, including information on the employment situation of socially vulnerable groups such as women, young persons and older workers.

The Committee also requests the Government to include in its next report information on the following matters that were raised in its 2004 observation:

- training and retraining measures for workers affected by structural reforms (such as the declining of the Kumtor gold mine);
- the impact of the different programmes adopted by the Government concerning specific groups of workers, such as the "National programme 'Zhashtyk' on youth development until 2010" and the "State programme 'New Generation' for the protection of children's rights".

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and application of policies. The Government reported that a tripartite committee has been created to regulate issues of employment promotion, which held its first session on 17 May 1999. The basic tasks of the tripartite committee: were the preparation of the National Employment Policy up to 2010; the development of corresponding measures to determine future directions in reducing tensions in the labour market; and the development of proposals to introduce amendments in Kyrgyz legislation on employment promotion and other regulatory acts in application of employment policy. The Committee asks the Government to provide specific information about the operation of the abovementioned tripartite committee, as well as the involvement of social partners in the formulation and implementation of the National Employment Plan. It also requests information regarding the measures taken or contemplated to involve in the consultations required by the Convention.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes the Government's detailed report for the period ending in May 2010, including comments from Business New Zealand and the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions – Te Kauae Kaimahi (NZCTU). In reply to previous comments, the Government indicates that the Better work working better – Labour market and employment strategy is no longer in place. The Government reported in detail on the response to the recession, the Medium-term Economic Agenda, the careers strategy, the five-year action plan and labour market reform. Business New Zealand emphasised that anyone seeking employment in New Zealand is free to apply for any job for which he or she is qualified or for which he or she feels capable of performing. No one is directed to take up employment even though the person concerned may have been unemployed for a considerable period. The Committee further notes concerns expressed by the NZCTU for changes to employment legislation, policies and economic approaches by the Government to meet its obligations under the Convention. In this respect, the Committee recalls the concerns expressed by the NZCTU in the 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments that measures to encourage competitive business success should not be taken at the expense of workers' rights. The NZCTU reiterates in the report on Convention No. 122 that new employment legislation allowed businesses with fewer than 20 employees to dismiss new employees during their first 90 days of employment without cause or recourse to standard employment protections, such as personal grievance provisions. According to the NZCTU, this legislative reform undermines workers' rights. The NZCTU emphasizes again that minimum labour rights should apply to SMEs as well as to larger employers. The Committee refers to paragraphs 397–399 of the 2010 General Survey and reiterates that any measures designed to promote full employment and encourage the creation of productive and sustainable jobs, particularly in small and medium-sized enterprises, should be adopted in consultation with the social partners, under conditions that are socially adequate for all concerned and in full conformity with the international instruments ratified by the respective countries. Within this framework, the Committee also recalls that, in its 2007 conclusions concerning the promotion of sustainable enterprises, the Conference urged all enterprises, regardless of their size, to apply workplace practices based on full respect for fundamental principles, rights at work and international labour standards. The Committee again expresses its appreciation in receiving information and data on successes, problems encountered and lessons to be learned from the experience of the social partners in New Zealand with regard to the application of the Convention.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends and active labour market measures. The Government indicates that a period of economic recession began in early 2008 and as a result, efforts to minimize its negative effects were initiated by maximizing employment opportunities for those most affected and by implementing a plan for sustained economic growth. The Committee notes that in response to the economic recession, government agencies are working closely with businesses to help maximize the potential for economic development across sectors and regions. The Government recalls a Summit on Employment hosted by the Prime Minister on 27 February 2009 which included participants from business, industry, trade unions, Maori groups and local and central government agencies (paragraph 84 of the 2010 General Survey). The Summit produced 20 initiatives to alleviate the effects of the economic crisis on those made redundant and at a higher risk of long-term unemployment due to the recession. The Committee notes that in March 2010, the unemployment rate fell from 7.1 per cent to 6 per cent while employment increased by 1 per cent, its largest increase since June 2008. The Government indicates that this result combined with high business and consumer confidence and rising employment intentions demonstrated that the labour market had reached a turning point and was beginning to recover. The Government also indicates that in March 2010 the number of people employed rose by 1 per cent, or 22,000 people and subsequently stood at 2,177,000. The Committee notes concerns raised by the NZCTU stating that unemployment has remained high over the last nine months and further indicates the unemployment rate during June 2010 was 6.8 per cent, not far below its peak in December 2009 of 7.1 per cent. The NZCTU reports support for government fiscal stimulus measures to be increased in light of continuing unemployment, a stalling recovery and the economic outlook internationally. The Government reports on overall policy initiatives aimed at achieving economic growth and development, raising the levels of living and meeting manpower requirements through two aspirational goals: to catch up with Australia's GDP per capita (the New Zealand figure was 76 per cent of Australia's) and for exports to be 40 per cent of the GDP (previously reported at 31 per cent). The Government indicates an economic plan to achieve these objectives through the following six main policy drivers: growth-enhancing tax system, better public services, innovation and business support, better regulation, including regulations around natural resources, investment in infrastructure and improved education and skills. The NZCTU indicates concern that the Government's response in 2008–09 to the recession caused by the global economic crisis was inadequate and poorly targeted and mainly consisted of tax cuts. The NZCTU further expressed concern regarding the possible impact of free trade agreements on manufacturing jobs in New Zealand and the potential for such policy to restrict freedom of choice of employment. The Committee notes the Government response to incorporate labour issues into a framework to guide trade negotiations with other countries. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the impact of the schemes implemented to alleviate the effect of the economic crisis (the ReStart assistance package, the job support scheme, the youth opportunities package and the small business relief package). It also invites the Government to indicate the extent to which the employment objectives included in the medium-term economic agenda have been or are being attained and further information on the employment-related issues to guide trade agreements.

Education and training policies. The Committee notes the detailed information provided in the Government's report on education and training policies and its ongoing commitment to raise workforce literacy, language and numeracy skills in order to support productive employment. The NZCTU has highlighted the recent research by the Government Human Rights Commission which determined youth unemployment to be a top priority and identified high unemployment of young Maori and Pacific people and a current bias against hiring some young people as issues. The Committee also notes the statement by Business New Zealand for ensuring that many Maori and Pacific peoples are better served by the education and training system so that they have the skills required to do the jobs available. In this respect, the Committee notes the Tertiary Education Strategy 2010–15 which seeks to achieve higher levels of education and provide for better employment opportunities among vulnerable categories of workers and in particular, the Maori and the Pasifika. The Government states that this initiative includes a long-term view for tertiary education which includes both institutional and workplace based education for increased employment opportunities among disadvantaged young people and people with low level skills. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on the results achieved by the Tertiary Education Strategy and other measures implemented to coordinate education and training policies with prospective employment opportunities.

Workplace productivity and entrepreneurship. The Committee notes the measures taken to ensure productive work through a targeted review of New Zealand's tertiary qualifications in order to reduce the duplication of skills training, to improve education and training quality and to create better employment outcomes for employers and employees. The Government further indicates measures taken to promote small and medium-sized enterprises through the Government's small business relief package which aims to improve the business environment by reduced impact of taxes and firms' cash flow, improving firms' access to credit and reducing business compliance costs. The Committee also notes a government allowance which is paid to businesses facing temporary difficulties due to the recession. The Government indicates that this initiative was initially made available to employers with more than 100 staff, though, as of April 2009, it was extended to cover employers with 50 to 100 employees. The Committee invites the Government to include information on the results obtained in increasing workplace productivity and further information on the measures taken to create employment by the promotion of small and medium-sized enterprises.

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2006 observation which read as follows:

Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. In its 2004 observation, the Committee requested the Government to report in detail on the application of the Convention. In June 2006, the Government reported that a total of 6,640 applicants were registered in the Employment Exchange and Professional and Executive Registries in 2005. Of these, 1,516 applicants were placed in employment, while a total number of 1,989 vacancies were notified. In reply to a request by the Office for supplementary information, the Government provided, in August 2006, figures on the impact of the National Economic Empowerment and Development Strategy (NEEDS) concerning the training of youth under the Vocational Skills Development Programme between 2002 and 2005. The Committee notes that NEEDS covers small-scale enterprise programmes, rural employment promotion programmes, assistance for self-employment, special public work programmes and women's cooperatives. The Committee notes again, as pointed out by NEEDS, that since manufacturing is stagnant there are few jobs for the growing urban population, and urban unemployment was estimated at 10.8 per cent in 2004. NEEDS policies are expected to create about 7 million new jobs by 2007, by making it easier for private enterprises to thrive by training people in skills relevant for the world of work and by promoting integrated rural development in collaboration with the States. The Committee hopes that the Employment Exchange and Professional Executive Registries will effectively perform their essential task within the meaning of the Convention, that is, of ensuring, in accordance with Article 1(1) of the Convention, the best possible organization of the employment market for the achievement and maintenance of full employment and for the development and use of productive resources. The Committee therefore requests the Government to report on the measures taken, in cooperation with the social partners, so that the public employment service is run efficiently and free of charge, and that it comprises a network of offices sufficient in number to meet the specific needs of jobseekers and employers countrywide. It also asks the Government to describe in its next report the activities of the employment service and the effects noted or expected on employment as a result of implementing its poverty reduction strategy.

The Committee further requests the Government to include in its next report statistical information published in annual or periodical reports on the number of public employment offices established, applications for employment received, vacancies notified and persons placed in employment by such offices (Part IV of the report form). Please also provide information on the following matters:

- consultations held with representatives of employers and workers on the organization and operation of the employment service and the development of employment policy (Articles 4 and 5);
- the manner in which the employment service is organized and the activities which it performs in order to carry out effectively the functions listed in Article 6;
- the activities of the public employment service concerning the various occupations and industries, as well as particular categories of jobseekers that are in socially vulnerable positions, in particular workers with disabilities (Article 7);
- measures proposed by the employment service to assist youth in finding suitable employment (Article 8);
- measures proposed by the employment service, with the cooperation of the social partners, to encourage the full use of employment service facilities (Article 10);
- measures taken or envisaged by the employment service to pursue cooperation between the public employment service and private employment agencies (Article 11).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Fee-Charging Employment Agencies Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 96) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government has not provided information on the application of the Convention since its last report received in February 2006. The Committee recalls that in 1977 it noted the enactment of the Fee Charging Employment Agencies (Regulation) Act, 1976, which provided for the licensing of fee-charging employment agencies and empowered public authorities to prohibit the establishment of fee-charging employment agencies in any area where the public employment service was operating. According to section 1(3), the Act would enter into force when the federal Government made an official notification in the Official Gazette. The Committee has requested several times that the Government take the necessary steps to bring the Act into force in order to achieve the aim of Part II of the Convention, which is the progressive abolition of fee-charging employment agencies conducted with a view to profit.

The Committee recalls the comments made by the All Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions (APFTU) on the application of the Convention, which were forwarded to the Government in June 2005. The APFTU stated that agencies are allowed to charge fees for recruitment abroad and that some of them were involved in human trafficking. The Committee notes the Pakistan Workers Federation's (PWF) new observations, forwarded to the Government in August 2010, indicating that recruiting agencies have been exploiting prospective migrant workers. The PWF also urges the Government to ensure that the Fee-Charging Employment Agencies (Regulation) Act 1976, enters into force in order to protect prospective migrant workers against exploitation and to set up free public employment exchange facilities for jobseekers.

Part II of the Convention. Progressive abolition of fee-charging employment agencies conducted with a view to profit. In its 2006 observation, the Committee noted that in relation to the abolition of fee-charging employment agencies, as required by Part II of the Convention, the Government reiterated that draft rules have been framed to regulate the operation of fee-charging employment agencies. The Government also confirmed that the licences for overseas employment promoters were granted for a period of one, two or three years. In relation to Article 9 of the Convention, the Government indicated that, due to the economic conditions of Pakistan, levies have been established for migrant workers. Therefore, the Government was not in a position to adopt a policy for abolishing fee-charging employment services for migrant workers. It also added that punitive action was taken against those overseas employment promoters that were involved in violations of the Emigration Ordinance, 1979, and the Emigration Rules, 1979. The Committee refers to its previous comments, noting again the lack of progress in achieving the abolition of fee-charging employment agencies. The Committee asks the Government to report on the following issues:

- the measures taken to abolish fee-charging employment agencies;
- the numbers of public employment offices and the geographical areas they serve (Article 3(1) and (2));
- the consultations of employers' and workers' organizations on the supervision of all fee-charging employment agencies (Article 4(1)(a), (2) and (3));
- with regard to overseas employment promoters, the measures taken to ensure that these agents may only benefit from a yearly licence renewable at the discretion of the competent authority (Article 5(2)(b)) and charge fees and expenses on a scale submitted to, and approved by, the competent authority (Article 5(2)(c));
- with regard to placing and recruiting workers abroad, the conditions established by the laws and regulations in force for the operation of fee-charging employment agencies (Article 5(2)(d)).

Revision of Convention No. 96. The Committee refers to its General Survey 2010 concerning employment instruments in which it recalled that public employment services and private agencies are both actors in the labour market. They should therefore mutually benefit from cooperation as their common aim is to ensure a well-functioning labour market and the achievement of full employment. In Chapter III of the General Survey, the Committee noted that if private employment agencies operate in a particular labour market, this operation has to be regulated. Therefore, governmental action is required, either directly through a system of legislation, licensing or certification or, indirectly, by authorizing an existing national practice or one that is to be established (paragraph 237 and subsequent of the 2010 General Survey). In its previous observations on Convention No. 96, the Committee has already highlighted the role that the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), and Private Employment Agencies Recommendation, 1997 (No. 188), play in the licensing and supervision of placement services for migrant workers and the role that Convention No. 181 attributes to private employment agencies for the functioning of the labour market (see paragraph 730 of the 2010 General Survey). Taking into account that the present situation is not in conformity with the provisions of Part II of Convention No. 96, the Committee hopes that the Government and the social partners will contemplate adhering to the obligations of the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), the ratification of which involves the immediate denunciation of Convention No. 96. It invites the Government to report on steps taken, in consultation with the social partners, to ratify Convention No. 181.

Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159) (ratification: 1994)

Promotion of employment opportunities for persons with disabilities. The Committee notes the remarks made by the Pakistan Workers Federation (PWF) in the comments forwarded to the Government in August 2010. PWF indicates that the vocational education and training facilities allocated by the State to the rehabilitation of workers with disabilities are very meagre. PWF also suggests that the Government should allocate more quotas for the employment of persons with disabilities in the public and private sectors so that they can be rehabilitated and obtain gainful employment after receiving vocational education and training. The Committee recalls its 2005 and 2009 direct requests and again asks the Government to provide information on measures taken in the context of its policy on vocational rehabilitation and employment of persons with disabilities, both at federal and provincial levels (Articles 3 and 7 of the Convention). The Government is invited to include relevant information on the application of the Convention in practice, particularly on the activities of the National Council for the Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons (NCRDP) (Part V of the report form).

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Peru

Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159) (ratification: 1986)

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. National policy on vocational rehabilitation. The Committee notes the report received in September 2009 which indicates that for the National Council for the Integration of Persons with Disabilities (CONADIS), increasing the levels of employment of persons with disabilities and their access to decent work is a major goal and a priority. According to the General Confederation of Workers of Peru (CGTP), the extent to which persons with disabilities have been integrated into the labour market is not known exactly. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 29392 of August 2009 defining offences and establishing penalties for breach of the General Act on Persons with Disabilities. In December 2008, CONADIS and the Ministry for Women and Social Development approved an Equal Opportunities Plan for Persons with Disabilities 2009–18. According to the data sent with the report, the RED Cil Proempleo programme succeeded in placing a total of 85 persons with disabilities in jobs during the period 2007–09, and 50 “enterprises for the advancement of persons with disabilities” were created in the period from 2007 to April 2009. The Government states that there is no sign of the results awaited from the development of policies to include persons with disabilities in production. The Committee again asks the Government in its next report to include an evaluation of the results obtained in the context of the Plan for Persons with Disabilities 2009–18 in both the public sector and the private sector in terms of integrating persons with disabilities into the open labour market. The Committee invites the Government to send further information on the application in practice of the penalties established in Act No. 29392 along with other data allowing an evaluation of the employment created for persons with disabilities by the “enterprises for the advancement of persons with disabilities” and as a result of incentives offered for hiring persons with disabilities. The Committee again asks the Government to provide extracts from studies or other assessments of vocational rehabilitation and employment policies and programmes for persons with disabilities, together with up-to-date statistics on the number of participants, the number of placements, public expenditure and other data showing the results of the legislative and policy measures adopted for persons with disabilities (Part V of the report form).

Services in rural areas and remote communities. The Committee notes that the services of the National Institute for Rehabilitation do not extend to rural areas but that these areas are covered by a community-based vocational rehabilitation project. The Committee asks the Government in its next report to provide information on the measures planned to establish and develop vocational rehabilitation and employment services for persons with disabilities in rural areas and remote communities (Article 8), and on the training of suitably qualified staff responsible for the vocational guidance, vocational training, placement and employment of persons with disabilities (Article 9).

Romania

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1973)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends and active labour market policies. The Committee notes the detailed statistical data provided in the Government’s report received in August 2010. The Government indicates that, due to the effects of the economic and financial crisis, the unemployment rate increased significantly and rapidly from 4 per cent in 2008 to 6.3 per cent in 2009. As a result, 572,974 persons were unemployed in 2009 compared to 362,429 persons in 2008. In the first trimester of 2010, the unemployment rate reached 8.2 per cent (756,214 persons unemployed). The Government indicates that the Programme for Employment 2008–10 has been launched, which among its general objectives entails labour market flexibility, an employment rate increase and the promotion of social inclusion. Specific objectives of the programme include: combating effects of unemployment, inclusion of disadvantaged groups in the labour market, increasing the adaptability of workers to labour market needs and ensuring non-discrimination in the labour market. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the impact of the Programme for Employment 2008–10 on ensuring the objectives of the Convention. It also invites the Government to include an evaluation of the efficiency and effectiveness of policies and measures adopted, especially in the crisis context, for promoting full employment and how they will translate into productive and lasting employment for the unemployed and other categories of vulnerable workers.

Vulnerable categories of workers. The Government indicates that including disadvantaged groups and ensuring non-discrimination in the labour market are amongst the Programme for Employment 2008–10 objectives. Data provided by the Government regarding results of the Programme for Employment 2008–10, shows that the third most common category of employed individuals were persons with disabilities (1,061 persons employed in 2008, 582 in 2009 and 164 in 2010). Approximately 25 per cent of persons with disabilities were employed by enterprises which benefited from subsidies for employing this category of workers. The Government also provides statistics on other vulnerable categories such as older workers, unemployed heads of households and socially marginalized groups employed by enterprises which received subsidies or as a result of their participation in job fairs specifically designed for vulnerable categories of workers. The Committee would appreciate continuing to receive information on the results achieved with respect to the sustainable integration of vulnerable categories of workers, such as persons with disabilities and older workers, into the open labour market.

Youth employment. The Government indicates that, in the framework of the implementation of the National Programme for Employment 2008–10, young persons had the highest employment rate among all target groups. Young graduates (generally having completed higher education) accounted for 1.5 per cent of the total number of persons employed as a result of financial incentives to enterprises that support student employment. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the impact of measures designed to increase opportunities for young people to find lasting employment, in particular those experiencing the highest level of multiple disadvantage, e.g. coming from poor households, with low levels of education and being socially excluded.

The Roma minority. The Government indicates that, in the framework of the Programme for Employment 2008–10, 6,686 individuals belonging to the Roma minority (3,660 persons in 2008, 2,322 in 2009 and 704 in 2010) obtained employment through the subsidized programme for temporary employment in community services. As a consequence of orientation and guidance services, 3,009 Romas were employed in 2008, 1,274 in 2009 and 431 in 2010. As a result of their participation in job fairs specifically designed for individuals belonging to the Roma minority, 683 Romas obtained employment in 2008 and 113 in 2009. In its 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee noted that active labour market policies now occupy centre stage in employment policies among industrialized countries. They are now deployed to achieve multiple objectives: to increase the employed labour force and thereby reduce dependence on unemployment benefits and other forms of social support, to increase social cohesion (or reduce social exclusion) and to ensure greater equality of opportunities in the world of work. The Committee observed that social exclusion is harmful to those directly affected and breeds negative social consequences across generations (paragraphs 554 and 566 of the General Survey). On this important issue, the Committee asks the Government to report in detail on the impact of the action taken within the framework of active employment policies and measures to increase social cohesion of the Roma minority.

Education and training policies. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the main objective of the strategy for continuing vocational training 2005–10 was to raise the participation rate in education and training programmes for the working population in the 25–64 age group to 7 per cent. It noted that adult participation in education and training was still low. The Committee notes that only about 5 per cent of newly employed young workers and approximately 10 per cent of the long-term unemployed (including young persons and adults) obtained employment as a result of their participation in vocational training programmes. The Committee requests the Government to include in its next report information on the impact of the measures adopted in collaboration with the social partners to enhance the quality and labour market relevance of the education and training system. It again requests the Government to supply information on the impact of training programmes on creating job opportunities for the unemployed, young persons, the Roma and other categories of vulnerable workers.

Promotion of small and medium-sized enterprises. The Committee noted that the national legislation for small and medium-sized enterprises was in line with the provisions of the Job Creation in Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises Recommendation, 1998 (No. 189). The Government indicates that 458 persons were employed between 2008 and the first trimester of 2010 by small and medium-sized enterprises which received subsidies for creating employment. Furthermore, 593 individuals in 2008, 869 in 2009 and 168 in 2010, started businesses as a result of orientation and guidance services for self-employment and entrepreneurship. The Committee invites the Government to continue to supply information on the sustainable impact of the measures adopted with a view to supporting the development of small and medium-sized enterprises for employment creation.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and application of policies. The Committee previously noted the Government's information that under the existing legal framework, the social partners are to be consulted on the preparation of bills, strategies, policies and programmes for employment and human resources development issues through the National Commission for Employment Promotion, the governing body of the National Employment Agency and the National Council for Adult Vocational Training and its sectoral committees. Furthermore, a National Observatory for Employment and Vocational Training was set up within the Ministry of Labour to foster cooperation between social partners, public institutions, universities and professional associations in the collection and analysis of labour market information. The Committee invites the Government to supply information on consultations held with the social partners, including concrete examples on the manner in which the views of the social partners are sufficiently taken into account in the development, implementation and review of employment policies and programmes.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1967)

Measures taken in response to the global crisis. The Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2009. The Government indicates that, in order to overcome the economic crisis, it adopted a set of revival measures aimed at reducing tensions in the employment market in the regions and giving social support to the persons affected. The measures include Decree No. 915 of 8 December 2008 concerning unemployment benefits, which increased to 4,900 roubles; Federal Act No. 287-03 of 25 December 2008 amending the Public Employment Act, which awards unemployment benefit to persons who have been dismissed and allows the regions of the Federation the possibility of taking direct action in the employment market in times of crisis. Decree No. 1089 of 31 December 2008 allows the withdrawal of allocations from the federal budget for injection into the budgets of the regions in order to facilitate the adoption of supplementary measures aimed at alleviating the effects of the economic crisis on the labour market. These additional measures focus mainly on vocational training for workers threatened by mass redundancy plans, on the establishment of community work and the promotion of geographical mobility, making removal grants available to persons appointed to posts situated in other localities in the context of targeted federal programmes and investment projects. In its General Survey of 2010 concerning employment instruments, the Committee emphasizes that the employment Conventions and Recommendations taken together provide a framework for realizing the human right to work and to education for all, for confronting and mitigating the effects of the global economic crisis, and for ensuring continuing and genuine tripartite consultations (General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 788). The Committee requests the Government to supply information in its next report on the results, in terms of the creation of productive and lasting employment, of the revival measures to overcome the crisis adopted by both the federal and regional governments.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. The Government indicates that regional programmes for employment promotion constitute the principal instrument for implementation of public policy for regulating the labour market and creating employment in the regions. These programmes aim to inform workers and employers on the situation of the labour market, particularly through reception centres specializing in providing advice. In 2009, these reception centres enabled 3.39 million persons to receive vocational guidance. Facilitating the re-entry of unemployed persons into the job market, through the acquisition of new qualifications and skills, is also part of the programmes. This enabled 113,600 persons to receive training in 2009. Furthermore, regional programmes have resulted in the provision of paid community work for 676,000 long-term unemployed persons and persons without work experience, while 117,000 workers particularly at risk were placed in temporary jobs. The Government also indicates that the number of persons registered as unemployed with the employment services increased from 1.4 million in 2008 to 2.2 million in 2009. The total number of unemployed persons came to 7 million, out of a total active population of 66.2 million. In view of this difficult situation, the Committee hopes that the Government will supply information in its next report on the strategic outlines of its employment policy and indicate the manner in which employment policy is reviewed regularly as part of a coordinated economic and social policy. It also requests the Government to supply detailed information on the results achieved by the recently established programmes in terms of the creation of jobs for particular categories of workers, such as women, young persons and older workers. With regard to persons with disabilities, the Committee is formulating a direct request this year in relation to the application of the Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159).

Coordination of education and training policy with employment policy. The Government indicates that, in the context of the regional programmes for employment promotion and in order to guide people in their occupational choices, taking account of individual needs, skills and the situation of the labour market, vocational guidance sessions were held in 2009 for 2.4 million unemployed persons. The Government also indicates that, in order to promote occupational mobility, 1,903,000 workers received allowances in connection with vocational training, retraining and further training. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the measures taken in the area of education and training policies, and also on their impact in terms of vocational integration.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation of employment policy. The Government indicates that public employment promotion policy aims, in particular, to coordinate the action of the public authorities, trade unions and other representative workers' and employers' bodies during the implementation of measures to promote public employment. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which the representatives of employers' and workers' organizations are consulted on employment policy. It hopes that the next report will contain information which will enable an examination of the manner in which the experience and views of the social partners have been taken into account into the formulation and implementation of an active employment policy.

Part V of the report form. ILO technical assistance. The Committee notes that a programme of cooperation between the Russian Federation and the ILO was drawn up for the 2010–12 period, taking into consideration the new circumstances of the economic crisis and basing itself on the Global Jobs Pact, which calls for measures aimed at maintaining levels of employment and avoiding reductions in wages and any deterioration in conditions of work. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the action taken further to the implementation of the programme of cooperation with the ILO for promoting the creation of productive employment.

Sao Tome and Principe

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2007 observation which read as follows:

Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. The Committee notes the Government's report received in April 2007 in reply to its 2006 observation, which includes a brief statement that there is no formal cooperation between the public employment services and representatives of employers' and workers' organizations and that the public employment services have not yet been properly organized to act in accordance with the Convention. The Committee understands that human resources development and access to basic social services are one of the five principles set out in the National Strategy for Poverty Reduction (NSPR – Estratégia Nacional De Redução de Pobreza), which was validated in December 2002 and approved in January 2003. From the information contained in the update of the NSPR published in January 2005, urban and rural unemployment in the country is still a matter of serious concern. In this context, the Committee emphasizes the need to ensure the essential function of employment services, which is to achieve the best possible organization of the labour market, including its adaptation to meet the new needs of the economy and the active population (Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention). It requests the Government to provide the statistical information available in published annual or periodical reports concerning the number of public employment offices established in the district of Agua Grande and in rural areas, the number of applications for employment received, the number of vacancies notified and the number of persons placed in employment, disaggregated by gender and the location of the offices concerned (Part IV of the report form).

Cooperation of the social partners. The Committee refers once again to the provisions of Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention and asks the Government to report on the manner in which the representatives of the social partners have been associated with the operation of the public employment service. The Committee recalls that for many years, it has been pointing out that the above provisions of the Convention require the establishment of advisory committees to secure the full cooperation of representatives of employers and workers in the organization and operation of the employment service.

The Committee recalls again that the Office is available to provide the Government with technical advice and assistance for the implementation of a public employment service within the meaning of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Senegal

Fee-Charging Employment Agencies Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 96) (ratification: 1962)

Revision of Convention No. 96 and prospects for the ratification of Convention No. 181. In reply to the observation of 2009, the Government confirms in a report received in March 2010 that the procedure for the adoption of the decree defining the obligations of employment agencies and the protection of workers employed by temporary work agencies is still in progress. The Government indicates that the draft decree has been adopted by the National Advisory Council for Labour and Social Security. Furthermore, the Government confirms that the issue of the ratification of the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), is receiving close consideration. In its 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee noted an observation from the National Union of Autonomous Trade Unions of Senegal, indicating that the competent authority did not apply satisfactory controls to private employment agencies and that illicit practices had proliferated as a result (paragraph 739 of the General Survey). The Committee again requests the Government to send a copy of the decree adopted pursuant to section L226 of the Labour Code. It also requests the Government to supply information on the developments which have taken place, in consultation with the social partners, with a view to ratifying Convention No. 181.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

In reply to the observation of 2007, the Committee notes the Government's report received in March 2010 and the comments from the National Federation of Independent Trade Unions of Senegal (UNSA).

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. The Government states that the draft employment policy drawn up in 2006 has not been implemented but that its key strategies have been incorporated into the Growth and Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (GPRSP) 2006–10. The Government considers that the GPRSP in itself carries insufficient weight to reduce poverty and that this explains the weak performance of the GPRSP as regards the creation of decent and productive employment. The Committee notes that, in order to rectify this situation, a new national employment policy is being finalized. According to available data, the employment rate is 38.7 per cent, which means that, out of 100 persons of working age, less than 40 have a job. The national unemployment rate is estimated at 10 per cent, with a higher rate in the urban areas of the Dakar region (16 per cent compared with 6.3 per cent in rural areas) and for women (13.6 per cent compared with 7.9 per cent for men). Nearly 23 per cent of workers are underemployed. Poverty continues to have a strong impact on 75 per cent of the rural population. The Committee recalls that the first key stage on the way to achieving full, productive and freely chosen employment is demonstrating the political will to do so. The Committee observes that Article 2 of Convention No. 122 requires member States to adopt a clearly defined, coordinated economic and social policy as a framework (General Survey of 2010 concerning employment instruments, paragraphs 785–787, which provide further guidelines for ensuring the application of Convention No. 122). The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the progress made in the adoption and implementation of a national employment policy. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position in its next report to indicate the results achieved by the measures taken in the context of the poverty reduction strategy in order to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment.

Article 2. Collection and use of employment data. The Government indicates that the various projects such as the Operational Directory of Occupations and Jobs (ROME), the National Employment Agency, and the National Employment and Vocational Qualifications Observatory (ONEQP) have not been developed as much as expected because the 2006 draft employment policy was not adopted. The Government points out that, with the National Agency for Statistics and Demography (ANSD), a draft master plan for the compilation of statistics has been drawn up which will enable more reliable information on employment to be available. UNSAS, for its part, emphasizes the lack of coordination between the different structures managing employment programmes and policies and refers to delays in the compilation of employment data going back to 1997. UNSAS also refers to the urgent need to establish a procedure to regulate supply and demand and to monitor job placement programmes. The Committee stresses the importance of the establishment of a system for the compilation of labour market data in order to be able to decide on and periodically review the measures to be adopted in order to achieve the objectives of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to supply information in its next report on progress made in this area.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the design and formulation of policies. The Committee notes the setting-up of a Higher Employment Council, an inter-ministerial structure responsible for monitoring the implementation of guidelines defined by the Government with regard to employment and training. The Government indicates that the social partners are represented within the inter-sectoral national committee for monitoring implementation of the Declaration on Employment and Poverty Alleviation issued by Heads of State and Government at the Ouagadougou Summit in 2004 and that they are actively participating in all phases of the design, implementation and evaluation of employment policies. The Government also indicates that, regarding the new draft national employment policy, the terms of reference and the memorandum of guidance have been shared with all the social partners and that, once the interim report has been filed, it is planned to hold sectoral meetings with the administration, the representative organizations of employers and workers, NGOs and occupational organizations in the rural and informal sectors before the meeting of the inter-sectoral committee responsible for approving the document which will be submitted to the Government for adoption. The Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information on the activities of the Higher Employment Council, stating the contribution of the social partners with regard to employment policies. It hopes that the Government's next report will contain information which will enable it to evaluate the manner in which the experience and opinions of the social partners have been taken into account in the formulation and implementation of national employment policy.

Part V of the report form. Technical assistance from the ILO. The Government indicates that in November 2008 it received ILO support in connection with discussion of a strategy to formalize the informal economy, and that a draft plan of action for improving the informal economy has been drawn up. The Government also indicates that in September 2009 the ILO gave technical and financial support in connection with updating the draft new national employment policy. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the results achieved as a result of these technical assistance activities in terms of job creation and improved access to the labour market.

Spain

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1960)

Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. Skills and training of employment service staff. In its observation of 2009 the Committee noted the communication from the Independent Federation of Civil Servants (CSI-F), which expressed concern at the lack of skills among staff responsible for occupational guidance in the Autonomous Community of Galicia. The CSI-F referred to the provisions of Article 9 of the Convention, and stated that the Executive of Galicia, through the Labour Council, had hired staff who had no specific qualifications for guidance work. This, in the CSI-F's view, had serious consequences, such as the de-professionalization of the public service in Galicia, poor quality in the supply of these services to the public, and the demotivation of those who do have proper qualifications. In addition, the Committee noted the comments by the Trade Union Confederation of Workers' Commissions (CC.OO.) of Andalucía, appended to the Government's report which was received in September 2009. This organization alleges failure to implement the agreements signed by the Government of Andalucía concerning the increase in staff for the offices of the Andalusian Employment Service and the lack of any provision to fill vacant posts, to the detriment of delivery and quality of the services. In the opinion of the CC.OO. of Andalucía, poor human resources management and the lack of professionalism are causing great dissatisfaction among the users of employment offices because the quality of the public service is declining. In August 2010 the Government sent a new report including information from the Labour Council of the Executive of Galicia. According to the Executive of Galicia, a proposal was made in 2009 to establish an occupational category of “occupational guidance for placement in employment”, which is being considered by the Autonomous Community. Furthermore, a copy was sent of the training programme given to vocational advisers which was combined with two months of practical experience in employment offices. The Government refers in its report to Royal Decree No. 10/2010 of 16 June 2010 concerning urgent measures for the reform of the employment market and to the Special Plan of April 2008 concerning guidance, occupational training and job placement measures. The Government adds that, as part of the Special Plan, the network of employment offices has been strengthened with the recruitment of 1,500 vocational advisers and their recruitment has been extended in order to deal with the sharp increase in the number of jobseekers and provide a more effective response. The Committee notes the conclusion of agreements concerning the training of persons who will perform guidance, advice and evaluation duties in relation to the accreditation of occupational skills, and also notes the implementation of activities designed to inform potential candidates about features of the procedure for the recognition of experience. The Committee refers to its observation on the application of Convention No. 122 and, in view of the current circumstances of the employment market in Spain, it requests the Government to report on the measures adopted to ensure the functioning of employment offices sufficient in number to meet the needs of employers and workers throughout the country. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to supply further information on the manner in which it is ensured that the staff of the employment service in the Autonomous Communities of Andalucía and Galicia have the requisite skills to perform the duties required by the Convention and have received the appropriate training in this respect. The Committee recalls that the part of the report referring to Article 9 of the Convention also requires information to be supplied on the arrangements made for subsequent training of employment service staff, so as to enable an evaluation of the application of the aforementioned provision in each of the Autonomous Communities.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1970)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Measures to mitigate the impact of the crisis. The Committee notes the detailed information supplied by the Government in the report received for the period ending in June 2010. The Government states that the most serious consequence of the economic crisis was large-scale job destruction with the attendant increase in unemployment. The year 2009 saw the destruction of nearly 1,400,000 jobs, in particular affecting young and adult male workers in the construction sector and to a lesser extent in industry. More than 73 per cent of the jobs destroyed were held by temporary workers. By the end of 2009, the unemployment rate had reached 18.1 per cent of the active population (more than 4,000,000 persons), the highest since 1998. The Government provides information on various packages of measures to cope with the crisis. In November 2008, the Spanish Plan to Stimulate the Economy and Employment (“Plan E”) was adopted and included initiatives such as tax breaks and easier access to credit for enterprises. Plan E also included a programme to modernize the economy and foster medium- and long-term sustainable economic growth. Furthermore, in November 2008 a State Fund for Local Investment was established to maintain and create jobs, prevent exclusion from the labour market, set up cooperation agreements between the central Government and the municipalities and to build the institutional administrative capacity of the municipalities. In January 2010, a new State Fund for Local Investment was created to address the downturn in the labour market and achieve a more balanced economy. In addition, Act No. 27/2009 of 30 December was adopted setting out urgent measures to promote and maintain employment and protect the unemployed, providing also for measures to create jobs. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the impact of the anti-crisis packages in terms of creating productive and lasting employment.

In its previous comments, the Committee referred to Act No. 43/2006 of 24 December to improve growth and employment, which sought to promote job stability. The Government states in its report that the system of incentives set out in the Act caused a drop in temporary employment from 2006 to 2009. Because of the crisis, the percentage of indefinite contracts has now reverted to the figures prevailing prior to the 2006 reform. In its General Survey of 2010 concerning employment instruments, the Committee made the point that labour market reforms in Spain had resulted in significant growth in the use of non-regular contracts of employment associated with inferior social benefits and less employment security (General Survey of 2010, paragraph 575). The Committee understands in this connection that the labour reform launched by Act No. 35 of 17 September 2010 establishing urgent measures for labour market reform seeks to: (1) reduce labour market dualism by promoting the creation of stable and quality employment; (2) strengthen instruments for internal flexibility in the development of industrial relations and, in particular, implement measures to shorten the working day, reducing recourse to terminations and providing alternatives to temporary contracts; and (3) increase opportunities for the unemployed, focusing on young people in particular. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the manner in which the legislative measures in force have contained job instability and reduced labour market dualism.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Government recalls that in July 2008 a new Social Dialogue Declaration was signed with the social partners, the aim of which was to boost the economy and further social progress by modernizing the labour market. In February 2010 the Government submitted to the Social Dialogue Committee a proposal on labour market measures for discussion between the social partners. It furthermore announced its intention of concluding these negotiations with a tripartite agreement between the employers' organizations and the unions that would pave the way to a modern and functional labour market consonant with the development of a sustainable economy. According to comments made in September 2008 by the Trade Union Confederation of Workers' Commissions (CC.OO.), the production model is based on low productivity work that is highly intensive in cheap labour with little demand for qualifications, and it is proving unsound in the short term. In its General Survey of 2010, the Committee also pointed out that social dialogue is essential in normal times and becomes even more so in times of crisis. The employment instruments require member States to promote and engage in genuine tripartite consultations (General Survey of 2010, paragraph 794). The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the manner in which the social partners have taken part in devising, implementing and evaluating employment policies to counter the negative effects of the crisis.

Integrated labour market policies. The Government states that it grants subsidies to the Autonomous Communities to develop their Comprehensive Employment Plans, which are financed out of the budget of the Public Employment Service. The Comprehensive Employment Plans should allow significant improvements in terms of activity and occupation in the labour markets of the Autonomous Communities and, through actions and measures to promote employment, should narrow the gaps between the Communities and the national average. Comprehensive Employment Plans have been carried out in the Canary Islands, Castilla La Mancha, Extremadura and Galicia, and a special employment plan has been implemented for the bay of Cádiz. In 2009, the highest employment rates were in Madrid (55.7 per cent) and Navarra (54 per cent), and the lowest in Extremadura (42.8 per cent) and Ceuta and Melilla (43.2 per cent). The Autonomous Communities with the highest unemployment rates are the Canary Islands (26.2 per cent) and Andalucía (25.4 per cent), and those with the lowest are Navarra (10.9 per cent) and the Basque country (11 per cent). The Committee invites the Government to include information on the measures taken to reduce regional disparities so as to attain a better balance in the labour market.

Long-term unemployment. The Government states that in 2008 long-term unemployment stood at over 21 per cent and in 2009 rose to 28.4 per cent. The Government indicates that as a group affected by the most negative consequences of the current economic situation, the long-term unemployed are targeted for priority action under employment policies. In 2009, the number of long-term unemployed stood at 1,181,700, an increase of 114 per cent (629,600 new jobless) over 2008. Specific measures are being adopted for this group through the development of vocational training and retraining programmes and incentives to offer stable employment in the form of subsidies for employers' social security contributions. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report information on the impact of the measures taken to enable the long-term unemployed to secure stable jobs.

Youth employment. The Government states that young people have seen a considerable decline in their position in the labour market, with a significant drop in their employment level and a notable increase in their unemployment rates. Youth employment posted a significant decline in 2008, falling 23.9 per cent (433,000 unemployed young people) as compared to 2008. At the same time, unemployment rose by 41.9 per cent (250,000 new unemployed). As a result of these trends the number of young persons in employment stood at around 1,400,000 and the number of those unemployed, at 841,500. The Committee notes that in order to encourage the employment of young people, Act No. 27/2009 of 30 December on urgent measures to promote and maintain employment and protect the unemployed, provides for an evaluation of the current system of hiring subsidies with a view to making young people of 16 to 30 years of age with special employability problems a priority target group for the new subsidies. The Committee asks the Government to include information on the measures set forth in Act No. 27/2009 to improve the quality of employment for young people with little training. It also invites the Government to send information on other measures taken to afford young graduates the opportunity of finding lasting employment in which they can use their training and skills.

Education and vocational training policies. The Committee notes the CC.OO.'s remarks that there has been no drop in the school failure rate and no suitable measures to provide students with guidance on vocational training or to improve the education system. The Government states that Plan E included a series of initiatives for education and vocational training. As regards vocational training, a roadmap was approved to promote and improve vocational training through measures to accelerate reform and increase the number of persons with qualifications. The aim is to set up a system that accommodates the needs of students, workers and employers, improve the social image of vocational training and put Spain on a par with the other European countries in terms of student numbers in vocational training. The Committee further notes that the Sustainable Economy Act of November 2009 has a chapter on vocational training. Its four main objectives are: match training with the needs of the economy, broaden the scope of the training on offer, integrate the various vocational training curricula into the education system and set up cooperation between the public education system and the social partners in designing and carrying out training initiatives. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to improve qualification standards and coordinate education and training policies with potential employment opportunities.

Thailand

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in February 2010, in reply to its previous direct requests.

Article 6(b)(iv) of the Convention. Measures to facilitate the movement of migrant workers across borders. The Government recalls that since 2004 seven strategies for the management of foreign workers were defined with the ultimate goal of “employing alien workers legally”. The implementation of the strategy was divided into three phases: Phase 1 is the registration of Burmese, Laotian and Cambodian migrant workers in Thailand. These registered workers are allowed to temporarily work for a period not exceeding one year while awaiting repatriation. The number of foreign workers with work permit renewal reached, in 2007, 535,732 persons and, in 2008, 510,570 persons. Phase 2 seeks to adjust registered alien workers’ status to that of legal migrant workers. This phase implies that the nationalities are verified and the workers have to apply for the visa with the Thai authority in order to further apply for the work permit. This situation concerned some 41,000 Laotian and 33,856 Cambodian workers as of September 2008, while Burmese workers are still under the registration process; Phase 3 aims for the recruitment of alien workers with regard to Memoranda of Understanding (MOU) signed between the Thai Government and Cambodia, Lao People’s Democratic Republic and Myanmar. The Government further indicates that the strategy prescribed under the policy on overseas employment services emphasizes extending overseas labour market and maintaining the existing presence of Thai workers abroad. New labour markets in Europe and South Africa are promoted; Thai workers abroad are located mostly in the Republic of Korea and other Asian countries. MOUs have been concluded with receiving countries, mainly Japan, Republic of Korea, Israel, Malaysia and the United Arab Emirates. In its 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee highlighted the importance of public employment services in the facilitation of occupational and geographical mobility for the achievement of full employment (see paragraph 269 of the 2010 General Survey). On this important issue, the Committee refers to its observations on the application of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122). It requests the Government to provide information on the effect of the measures taken by the public employment service to prevent abuse in the recruitment of labour and the exploitation of migrant workers in Thailand and facilitate their registration. As indicated in the 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, action at the national and international levels is essential to eradicate abuses by intermediaries that engage in human trafficking or otherwise violate rights enshrined in the fundamental Conventions.

Strengthening public employment services to adequately protect migrant workers. The Committee notes the efforts made to provide greater protection for migrant workers by introducing measures to verify the nationalities of migrant workers in order to regularize their employment status. The Government further indicates that the Department of Employment has informed employers to register their demand for workers in positions experiencing labour shortages and their need for migrant workers from Myanmar, Cambodia and Lao People’s Democratic Republic in support of government-to-government cooperation and the respective MOUs. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the impact of the measures adopted to strengthen employment services for adequate protection of migrant workers.

Effective cooperation between the public employment service and private employment agencies. The Government states that no measures are taken at present regarding cooperation between the public employment service and private employment agencies. The Committee notes the data provided by the Government in its report indicating that 161,852 Thai workers were placed overseas (and 137,940 workers were placed abroad between January and November 2009). The Committee refers to its 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments and invites the Government to adopt an appropriate legal framework regulating private employment agencies. It also invites the Government to include in its next report information on measures adopted to ensure cooperation between the public employment service and the private employment agencies.

Part IV of the report form. Information on public employment services. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Department of Employment on job applicants, job vacancies and job placement. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide statistical information on the number of public employment offices established, the number of applications for employment received, the number of vacancies notified, and the number of persons placed in employment by such offices.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last report received in April 2007.

Follow-up of the discussion at the 99th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2010). Subsequent to its 2007 observation, the Committee notes the conclusion of the tripartite discussion that took place at the Conference Committee in June 2010. The Government indicated that it has adopted an economic stimulus and recovery package in line with the Global Jobs Pact, with the aim of reviving the Thai economy and protecting the poorest in the country by building a better safety net for the most vulnerable groups. The Committee also noted the information by the Government that it had implemented human resources development schemes which provided adequate access to lifelong learning, sought to enhance the overall quality of education and improve national competitiveness. In 2010, the Department of Labour Protection and Welfare had taken measures to mitigate the impact of lay-offs on workers and their families affected by the crisis.

The Conference Committee invites the Government to provide further information on the following matters:

- results achieved in the framework of the Tenth National Economic and Social Development Plan for the period 2007–11 in terms of generation of decent, productive and freely chosen employment;
- measures taken to include the most vulnerable categories of workers in the labour market, such as workers with disabilities, rural women and workers in the informal economy;
- promotion of an enterprise culture, entrepreneurial initiatives and small and medium-sized enterprises, in line with the Job Creation in Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises Recommendation, 1998 (No. 189);
- measures taken to register alien workers with the goal of ensuring their legal employment;
- how tripartite mechanisms have contributed to the formulation of a specific employment policy and to the implementation of active labour market measures in order to overcome the crisis and ensure a sustainable recovery.

The Committee also notes that the Government was requested by the Conference Committee to provide a report for the present session. The Committee asks the Government to supply a report for examination at its next session and to reply to the matters raised by the Conference Committee as well as those already indicated in its 2007 observation.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment policy and social protection. The Committee recalls that an unemployment insurance scheme was launched in 2004. The Government's report indicated that, between July 2004 and February 2007, out of a total of 403,403 persons registered under the scheme, 111,568 persons – representing 27 per cent of the beneficiaries – were re-employed within six months following registration and a remaining 722 persons were referred for further skills training. The Committee also noted a communication forwarded by the National Congress of Thai Labour in April 2007, which insisted that there were many workers in the informal sector including the service industry and self-employed persons who were not covered by the social security system. In a communication received in October 2007, the Government indicated that concrete measures and plans would soon be introduced to better serve and protect workers in the informal economy. The Committee requests the Government to include in its next report information on the extent, terms and type of coverage for workers in the informal economy under the revised scheme as well as any other steps taken to coordinate employment policy measures with unemployment benefits.

Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. The Committee noted that the Government established a policy on employment promotion to increase income, as shown by the priority given to three strategies in its development plan – development of human potential and social protection strategy, sustainable restructuring of rural and urban development strategy and upgrading national competitiveness strategy. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report, how the measures taken to promote employment under the three abovementioned strategies operated within the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy. It also requests the Government to include information on labour market programmes implemented to match labour supply and demand.

Labour market and training policies. The Committee noted that the skills training offered by the Department of Skills Development (DSD) focused on pre-employment training, upgrading training and retraining. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the results achieved by the measures taken by the Ministry of Labour and the Ministry of Education to coordinate education and training policies with prospective employment opportunities.

Article 1(2)(c). Prevention of discrimination. Women. The Government indicated that employers were encouraged to appoint female labour advisers in their establishments. In addition, female workers have also been provided with equal opportunities to the same extent as male workers in accessing services of the DSD. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the impact of the measures adopted to ensure that progress is achieved in raising the participation rate of women in the labour market. Please also indicate the gender distribution of trainees in the training courses of the DSD.

Persons with disabilities. According to Government statistics, the relative number of persons with disabilities that found job placements increased in 2006. Other interventions included providing vocational training courses for persons with disabilities, occupational development services to help those that have completed vocational training to develop practical skills and family and community welfare services to provide care and support for children with disabilities. The Committee requests the Government to report on the impact of the training programmes for persons with disabilities, in particular, the number of persons with disabilities that completed the programme and were able to find employment in the open labour market.

Migrant workers. In the context of employment policies, the Committee underlines the need to ensure fair treatment to all migrant workers. The Committee recalls that the protection of migrant workers has been a matter of concern in the tripartite discussions held in June 2006 and June 2010. On this important issue, the Committee refers again to the tripartite discussion that took place during the Conference in June 2010 and asks the Government to report in detail on the impact of the action taken within the framework of an active employment policy to prevent abuse in the recruitment of labour and the exploitation of migrant workers in Thailand.
