Workers in the rural sector and the informal economy. The Government indicated that homeworkers in the informal sector can register at provincial employment offices to receive basic training to enhance their skills. It also initiated a project in 2006 to reach agricultural sector workers, improve working and living conditions and to raise awareness for labour protection. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the implementation of rural employment policies and programmes and on any other measures it has taken to promote employment and improve the quantity and quality of employment opportunities for homeworkers, with special attention to the situation of women. It also asks the Government to include information on the measures taken to reduce the decent work deficit for male and female workers in the informal economy and to facilitate their absorption into the labour market.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last report received in June 2004. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a detailed report on the application of the Convention, including information in reply to the points raised in the Committee's previous observations, which set forth the following matters:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. The Committee recalls that the draft National Employment Policy was to be submitted by the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare to Cabinet in July 2004 for consideration and adoption. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the measures taken to ensure that employment, as a key element of poverty reduction, is central to macroeconomic and social policies. It asks the Government to report on the status of the draft National Employment Policy and the Poverty Eradication Action Plan, as well as any evaluation on the impact of its programmes to combat unemployment focusing on university graduates. The Committee emphasizes the importance of establishing a system for compilation of labour market data and requests the Government to report on any progress made in this field. It asks the Government to provide in its next report disaggregated data on trends in the labour market, including information on the situation, level and trends of employment, underemployment and unemployment throughout the country and the extent to which they affect the most vulnerable categories of workers (such as women, young persons and rural workers).

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Government indicated that during the development of the draft National Employment Policy, the views of all affected persons were taken into account through the various workshops held. The Committee recalls that Article 3 of the Convention requires consultations with representatives of all persons affected, and particularly representatives of employers and workers, in the formulation and implementation of employment policies. It is the joint responsibility of the Government and the representative organizations of employers and workers to ensure that representatives of the most vulnerable and marginalized groups of the active population are associated as closely as possible with the formulation and implementation of measures of which they should be the prime beneficiaries. The Committee would appreciate receiving information on the involvement of the social partners in the matters covered by the Convention.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1968)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee recalls that in its 2009 observation, it requested the Government to report on the measures implemented as a part of an active policy intended to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment. In the report received in October 2010, the Government indicates that the strategic goal of the state employment policy is the promotion of productive employment. In order to achieve this goal, the Government aims at ensuring the implementation of priorities which include: enhancement of labour market competitiveness; promotion of job creation; reorientation of education and training to match labour market needs; improvement in the employability of the labour force; strengthening productive employment and avoiding undeclared work; and increased social protection for the unemployed. The Government also reports that the draft Decision of the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine on the approval of the Basic Lines of the State Employment Policy 2010–11, has been agreed upon with the representatives of workers' and employers' organizations. Its priorities include the promotion of entrepreneurship and self-employment and the enhancement of labour market quality and competitiveness. The Committee notes that one of the goals of the Decent Work Country Programme 2008–10 is improving employment policy formulation and promoting equal opportunities in the labour market. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report an assessment of the effectiveness and relevance of the measures implemented in the framework of the Basic Lines of the State Employment Policy 2010–11. It further requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the Decent Work Country Programme 2008–10 on improving employment policy formulation and review, and the involvement of the social partners in this process.

Measures taken in response to the global crisis. The Committee notes that the economic crisis resulted in GDP falling by 15 per cent in 2009. The crisis also accentuated the vulnerabilities of the banking sector. Since October 2008, the national currency has lost about 40 per cent of its value against the US dollar. Ukraine's economy resumed growth in 2010 and provided moderate improvements in external demand. Real GDP grew by 4.9 per cent year-on-year in the first quarter of 2010, and by 6 per cent year-on-year in the second quarter. The International Monetary Fund concluded in July 2010 a standby arrangement for Ukraine in support of the authorities' economic adjustment and reform programme. The Committee further observes that the number of persons employed decreased from 21 million in 2008 to 20,190,000 in 2009. In light of the financial constraints, the Government decreased expenditures for active labour market measures. There was a sharp increase in registered unemployment between November 2008 and May 2009 and a considerable increase in unemployment benefit expenses. The Committee notes that one of the priorities of the State Employment Policy is to minimize the negative impact of the financial and economic crisis on the labour market. In this context, the Government adopted, among other legislative measures, Law No. 799-VI of 25 December 2008 to amend certain legislative texts in order to minimize the negative impact of the global financial crisis on employment, to strengthen social protection against unemployment and to ensure a dynamic response to the effects of the financial and economic crisis on the labour market. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on how the measures adopted have succeeded in mitigating the impact of the crisis on the labour market and have been translated into the generation of productive and lasting employment opportunities for the unemployed and other categories of vulnerable workers such as those who were laid off as a result of restructuring in the mining sector.

Coordination of education and training policies with employment policy. The Government indicates in its report that the development of a flexible and employment-oriented system of vocational guidance and training is among the priorities of the State Employment Service. In 2009, 80,800 unemployed persons underwent vocational training on referral of the State Employment Service. Nevertheless, the Committee understands that in 2009 the number of participants in available training programmes, decreased by 36 per cent compared to 2008, when there were 49 per cent fewer people participating in paid social work and 35 per cent fewer jobseekers placed. It further notes that the Ukrainian economy suffers from a severe skills mismatch which hampers business growth, may limit job creation and gives rise to structural unemployment. Many of the unemployed lack the skills that employers require. Excess demand for some skills coexist with excess supply of other skills. The Committee notes that one of the priorities of the Ukrainian employment policy is the reorientation of education and training to match labour market needs. In its 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee reiterated its conviction that broad social dialogue is the best guarantee of the effectiveness of employment policies and human resources development. Increased involvement of the representatives of employers' and workers' organizations is not only essential to ensure the successful implementation of the necessary measures, but can also contribute to improving the quality of social dialogue (paragraph 166 of the 2010 General Survey). The Committee therefore invites the Government to provide an assessment in its next report on the efficiency and relevance of training programmes and other initiatives undertaken in collaboration with the social partners, in promoting the return of unemployed persons to productive employment. In this context, the Committee would appreciate information on the impact of specific mechanisms and measures for improving the quality and labour market relevance of training in lifelong learning perspective, as well as tools for skills analysis and forecasting, especially at the sector level. It further invites the Government to include information on the measures taken to improve coordination of employment and education and training policies with a view to enhancing the employability and competitiveness of the labour force.

Youth employment. The Government indicates that, out of 542,800 registered unemployed persons in 2010, 214,100 were persons less than 35 years of age. It further indicates that one of the objectives of the draft Basic Lines of the State Employment Policy 2010–11 is strengthening youth employment. The Committee observes that it is youth and, above all, school leavers who are massively experiencing unemployment due to the crisis. In its 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee noted that there was a growing problem of unemployment among educated workers, particularly young university graduates who are unable to find secure employment commensurate with their skill level. This is an issue for advanced market economies as well as developing countries. Not only are their skills underutilized but this pattern of casual jobs can prove detrimental to their lifetime career progression (see paragraph 800 of the 2010 General Survey). The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the efforts made to improve the employment situation for young persons and the results achieved in terms of designing targeted programmes and incentives for promotion of sustainable job creation for the youth.

Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181) (ratification: 2004)

Protection of workers covered by the Convention. With reference to the comments made in 2006 and 2007, the Committee notes the Government's detailed report for the period ending in May 2009. The Government refers to the provisions of Act No. 18.099 of January 2007 establishing standards for the protection of the rights of workers in relation to company decentralization, as amended by Act No. 18251 of January 2008. The Committee notes with interest that section 7 of Act No. 18251 defines the joint responsibility shared by subcontractors, intermediaries and labour providers regarding labour obligations towards contracted workers. Labour obligations are those concerning the employment relationship which derive from ratified international conventions, laws, decrees, awards, decisions on wage agreements or registered collective agreements, or from information contained in the staff register. The report also refers to provisions of the collective agreement for enterprises that supply labour for work in green areas, call centres, shopping centres and IT companies, which came into force at national level by means of Decree No. 707/008 of 22 December 2008. The Committee notes with interest provisions 17 and 18 of the collective agreement signed in November 2008 which urge the parties to adhere to the gender mainstreaming established in various national legal texts, in Conventions Nos 100, 111 and 156, and in the Mercosur Social and Labour Declaration. Labour supply companies have undertaken to promote gender equality in all employment relationships. To this end, they undertake to respect the principle of non-discrimination at the time of fixing wages, arranging promotions or assigning tasks (Article 5 of the Convention). Furthermore, the Committee notes the new approach included in provision 21 of the collective agreement, in which the parties declare that the supply of workers through companies registered with the National Employment Directorate (DINAE) constitutes a means of combating informal employment as well as contributing to decent work. The Committee requests the Government to send in its next report the text of any court decisions interpreting Act No. 18251 and ensuring the effective protection that must be afforded to workers covered by Convention No. 181 (Part IV of the report form). The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on the number of workers protected by the Convention, the number and nature of infringements recorded and any other relevant information on the practical application of the Convention (Part V of the report form).

Regulation of private employment agencies. Controls and penalties. The Committee notes that, by means of section 343 of Act No. 18362 of October 2008, new duties were assigned to DINAE giving it the power to register, authorize, keep information on and control private employment agencies. The Government indicates that, even though the employers and workers have been consulted, the decree implementing section 343 of Act No. 18362 has not yet been approved. DINAE is therefore in the process of restructuring in order to implement the assigned duties. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position in its next report to announce that an implementing decree has been approved ensuring that DINAE can effectively supervise the operation of companies that supply labour and also regulate the services that are still provided by former employment agencies (Article 3). The Government recognizes in its report that in practice there are problems of supervision when an agency that has been penalized closes down and the persons involved set up a new company which applies to DINAE to receive new authorization. The Committee therefore hopes that steps will be taken to ensure that adequate machinery and procedures exist for the investigation of complaints, alleged abuses and fraudulent practices concerning the activities of private employment agencies (Article 10). DINAE and other competent public authorities (such as the labour inspectorate) should have sufficient resources to take remedial action to ensure the application of the relevant national legislation (Article 14).

Exceptions. The Government points out that the categories of workers and types of services in respect of which exceptions are authorized have not yet been determined in view of the fact that the implementing decree has not yet been approved. Should the exceptions provided for in Article 7(2) of the Convention be authorized, the Committee requests the Government to provide the relevant information and give the reasons therefor (Article 7(3)).

Migrant workers. The Committee notes the general legislation that ensures the right to work and equality of treatment of migrant workers. The Government also mentions the agreement against the illegal traffic in migrants between the Mercosur States Bolivia and Chile, signed in Belo Horizonte on 16 December 2004. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information in its next report on the manner in which penalties are laid down against agencies covered by the Convention which engage in fraudulent practices and abuses (Article 8(1)). The Committee also requests the Government to include information on labour agreements outside the Mercosur area in relation to the matters covered by the Convention (Article 8(2)).

Cooperation between public services and private agencies. Compilation and dissemination of information. The Committee hopes that the Government will include information in its next report on the progress made in ensuring cooperation between the public employment service and private employment agencies (Article 13(1)). It also requests the Government to provide examples of the information communicated by private employment agencies to the competent authorities and information on the operation of private employment agencies which is made publicly available (Article 13(3) and (4)).

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Zambia

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1979)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Active employment policy and poverty reduction strategy. The Committee notes the replies provided by the Government in August 2009 to its 2008 observation. The Committee recalls that the Government formulated the Fifth National Development Plan (FNDP) for the period 2006 to 2010. The Committee notes that in the report provided on the Social Policy (Basic Aims and Standards) Convention, 1962 (No. 117), the Government explained that the decision to develop a National Development Plan was to enhance national ownership as FNDP was considered “home grown” because it was not driven by donor agencies. The National Development Plan also included other sectors which were integral parts of poverty reduction strategy such as governance and public safety. The Government indicates that since the life span of the FNDP will end in 2010, the process of formulating a Sixth National Development Plan (SNDP) has commenced. The Committee invites the Government to supply a report on Convention No. 122 containing detailed information on the principal policies pursued and measures taken with a view to ensuring that there is work for all who are available for and seeking work, including particular reference to policies and measures implemented under the National Development Plan.

Measures for workers infected with HIV. The Government indicates in its report that it has adopted policy measures to resolve challenges associated with HIV and AIDS in the workplace and to ensure that there is work for all who are available for and seeking work. The Government also states that workers' representative organs are encouraged to play a leading role in the fight against HIV and AIDS. The Committee also notes with interest various Government efforts envisaged to encourage the development of HIV and AIDS policies at the workplace which includes: workplace-based HIV and AIDS prevention and care programmes throughout the country; ensuring protection from harassment and discrimination for HIV-positive employees; proscribing compulsory HIV and AIDS testing at places of work; integrating HIV and AIDS support services in collective bargaining; and facilitating the establishment of voluntary counselling and testing facilities to enable employees to know their status. The Committee recalls that the Conference adopted the HIV and AIDS Recommendation, 2010 (No. 200), which invites Members to promote the retention in work and recruitment of persons living with HIV. Members should consider extending support through periods of employment and unemployment, including, where necessary, income-generating opportunities for persons living with HIV, or persons affected with HIV or AIDS (Paragraph 22 of Recommendation No. 200). The Committee would welcome receiving further information on the implementation of its HIV/AIDS policy and how it takes into consideration the effects of HIV and AIDS on employment generation.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Government indicates in its report that it celebrates consultations with those working in the rural and informal sectors through initiatives such as the Private Sector Development Programme (PSD), which engages the private sector to help identify legislation that impedes rural and informal business. During the formulation of the National Employment and Labour Market Policy, the Government embarked on nation-wide consultations with their social partners. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report further explanation on the participation of social partners in ongoing decision-making for national employment policy and poverty reduction strategy as well as the involvement of the Tripartite Consultative Labour Council and the National Employment and Labour Sector Advisory Group in this process. The Committee would also welcome more indications of the involvement of representatives for those working in the rural sector and the informal sector in the consultations required by the Convention.

Youth employment. The Government indicates that in response to youth employment challenges, strategies have been incorporated into the National Employment and Labour Market Policy to increase youth access to practical skills training and employment. These efforts include the promotion of specialized skilled trades through various youth skills training centres. The Committee notes the inter-governmental collaboration and efforts to support societal integration of especially vulnerable groups such as orphans and street children. The Committee asks the Government to report on the impact of the measures and programmes implemented to respond to the employment needs of young workers along with an assessment of their success for increasing their employment opportunities and participation.

Education and vocational training. The Government indicates that training of vulnerable groups is addressed through inter-governmental collaboration between the Ministry of Science Technology and Vocational Training and the Ministry of Gender and Women in Development. Women have been most affected by the erosion in employment opportunities, especially in the formal sector. Programmes targeting women and other vulnerable groups are being undertaken by the Ministry of Labour and Social Security to facilitate and enhance accessibility to employment and to reduce the gender imbalance in employment. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report the impact of training measures taken to meet the needs for productive employment of vulnerable groups of workers and specifically for women and older people.

Article 2. Collection and use of employment data. In its reply to the previous observation, the Government indicates that it has developed and strengthened the Labour Market Information System (LMIS). A Labour Market Information Steering Committee has been established. The last Labour Force Survey (LFS) was conducted in 2008 as a follow-up to the 2005 LFS. The Committee notes that a database comprising all key Labour Market Indicators (including the Decent Work and Millennium Development Goals Employment Indicators) has been put in place. The Government also intends to improve quality and availability of labour market information through collaborative efforts between the Ministry of Labour and Social Security and the Central Statistics Office. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation and success of the employment measures adopted from the collaboration of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security and the Central Statistics Office. In this respect, the Committee stresses the importance of compiling and analysing statistical data and trends as a basis for deciding measures of employment policy. The Committee intends to follow up on progress made for the development of labour market information systems, for the purposes of ensuring that policy-makers have up-to-date and accurate information to guide their decisions (see paragraphs 69–70 of the 2010 General Survey on employment instruments). The Committee therefore requests the Government to describe the measures taken to collect and analyse statistical data disaggregated by age and gender, and other data concerning the size and distribution of the labour force, the nature and extent of unemployment and underemployment and trends therein, as a basis for deciding on measures of employment policy.

Zimbabwe

Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159) (ratification: 1998)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2008, which includes brief replies to the matters raised in the previous direct requests, as well as a communication from the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) forwarded to the Government in November 2009.

Article 2 of the Convention. National policy on vocational rehabilitation and employment of persons with disabilities. The Committee notes that the Government intends to carry out a survey in 2010 to identify the number of persons with disabilities and their needs and that a new national policy will be based on the survey. The Committee invites the Government to provide a general description of the existing national policy on the vocational rehabilitation and employment of persons with disabilities, as well as any available information on the new policy based on the national survey.

Article 3. Promotion of employment opportunities in the open labour market. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there are no available statistics on the number of participants benefiting from vocational training or on the number of persons placed in employment. The ZCTU expressed its concerns about the lack of legislation mandating a quota system for persons with disabilities linked to a penalty regime that funds rehabilitative education and training. The ZCTU also communicates that rehabilitation services suffer from lack of funding and that access to medical assistance remains difficult. The Committee asks the Government to provide in its next report updated information on the measures and services established to promote employment for persons with disabilities, as well as any available information regarding the number of participants in the vocational rehabilitation programmes.

Article 4. Equal opportunity and treatment. The Government indicates that while the Disabled Persons Act prohibits discrimination, there is no legislation aimed at effective equality of opportunity and treatment for persons with disabilities. The ZCTU communicates that anti-discrimination legislative protections are indeed in place through section 9 of the Disabled Persons Act and section 5 of the Labour Act, which prohibits discrimination in the advertisement, recruitment, creation, and classification of jobs. The Committee reiterates its request for some examples of court cases, or other relevant administrative decisions, which apply the abovementioned provisions against discrimination.

Article 7. Vocational rehabilitation and employment services. The Committee notes that the National Employment Services Department under the Ministry of Public Service, Labour and Social Welfare, continues to offer a general employment service without any special adaptation for persons with disabilities. The Committee asks the Government to indicate whether any consideration has been given to adapting the existing employment services to suit the needs of workers with disabilities. The Committee further invites the Government to describe how the existing employment service provides vocational guidance, training and employment placement to workers with disabilities.

Article 8. Access to services in rural areas and remote communities. Emphasizing the requirement under this Convention to promote vocational rehabilitation and employment services in rural areas and remote communities, the Committee once again asks the Government to describe what steps have been taken to implement this provision.

Article 9. Suitably qualified staff. The Committee awaits the Government's information regarding the various training programmes for rehabilitation counsellors and other suitably qualified staff, as well as the number of such instructors in each of the three national rehabilitation centres.

Paid Educational Leave Convention, 1974 (No. 140) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its previous comments:

Definition of paid educational leave. Please indicate the terms on which paid educational leave is granted for vocational training, general, social and civic education, and trade union education, with an indication in each case of the conditions to be fulfilled by workers in order to be granted such leave, the length of the leave and the level of financial entitlements (Articles 2, 3 and 10 of the Convention).

Coordination of the policy to promote the granting of paid educational leave with general policies. Please state what steps have been taken to coordinate the national policy on paid educational leave with general policies on employment, education and training and hours of work (Article 4).

Guinea

Paid Educational Leave Convention, 1974 (No. 140) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the following matters raised in its 2006 direct request, which read as follows:

Policy for the promotion of paid educational leave and its application in practice. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information to demonstrate that it has formulated and that it applies, in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention, a policy designed to promote the granting of paid educational leave for the various purposes of training and education specified. The Committee also asks the Government to describe the manner in which public authorities, employers' and workers' organizations, and institutions providing education and training are associated with the formulation of the policy for the promotion of paid educational leave (Article 6). Lastly, the Committee invites the Government to communicate all reports, studies, inquiries and statistics which will allow it to assess the extent of the application of the Convention in practice (Part V of the report form).

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observations, which read as follows:

Formulation and implementation of education and training policies. In reply to its previous comments, the Government indicates that there are no coordination structures linking the three ministries responsible for the implementation of vocational guidance and training policies and programmes. The Government's report received in June 2004 enumerates the technical and vocational training institutions that exist. It also provides information concerning the implementation of the "employment" component of the Poverty Reduction Strategy approved in 2002. The Committee refers, in this respect, to the comments on the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), and asks the Government to indicate the manner in which the measures adopted or envisaged in the context of the Poverty Reduction Strategy reinforce the links between education, training and employment, particularly through the employment services. It asks the Government to provide information in its next report on the efforts being made to secure coordination among the various institutions responsible for developing comprehensive and coordinated policies and programmes of vocational guidance and vocational training. It draws attention once more to the importance of social dialogue in preparing, implementing and reviewing a national human resources development, education and training policy. It would be grateful if the Government would also provide practical information on levels of instruction, qualifications and training activities so that it can assess the application of all the provisions of the Convention in practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guyana

Paid Educational Leave Convention, 1974 (No. 140) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its 2003 direct request:

The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which the various training programmes and plans implement paid educational leave, as provided for by the Convention. It also hopes that the Government will be in a position to provide statistics on the number of workers in both the public and private sectors who have benefited from paid educational leave during the period covered by the next report (Part V of the report form).

The Committee requests the Government to indicate the arrangements for the participation of employers' and workers' organizations in the formulation and application of the policy for the promotion of paid education leave (Article 6 of the Convention).

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last report received in 2003.

Article 1 of the Convention. The Committee recalls the Government's reply to its direct request of 1999 regarding proposed amendments to draft legislation for the creation of a National Council for Technical and Vocational Education and training. The Committee requests the Government to report on any progress achieved in adopting and developing comprehensive and coordinated policies of vocational guidance and vocational training, closely linked with employment, in particular through public employment services, as provided in Article 1 of the Convention.

Article 1(5). The Committee refers to its previous comments regarding projects and programmes by the Government to encourage and enable all persons, on an equal basis and without any discrimination whatsoever, to develop and use their capabilities for work in their own best interests and in accordance with their own aspirations, account being taken of the needs of society. The Committee requests the Government to include in its next report information on the implementation of projects and programmes in line with Article 1(5) of the Convention and relevant information on initiatives to encourage the vocational training of women, the type of training used and the percentage of their participation.

Article 5. The Committee requests that the Government indicate the manner, procedure or consultative machinery instituted to ensure the cooperation of employers' and workers' organizations and other interested bodies in the formulation and implementation of policies and programmes for vocational guidance and training.

The Committee requests the Government to provide any extracts, reports or other available material relating to policies and programmes of vocational training which targets specific areas or particular branches of economic activity or specific population groups, as requested in Part VI of the report form.

Russian Federation

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1979)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Formulation and implementation of education and training policies. The Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2009. The Government describes systems of general, technical and vocational education, referring to the Education Act of 10 July 1992. The Government indicates that approved general education establishments may conclude vocational apprenticeship agreements with enterprises in order to provide the recipients with vocational education. Vocational training may be followed both in approved education establishments and in an enterprise or with a specialist qualified in the provision of individual training. In its 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee emphasizes that Convention No. 142, together with Recommendation No. 195, forms part of the framework for the pursuit of the objective of full employment, decent work and the achievement of education for all. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to supply information in its next report on the policies and programmes of vocational guidance and vocational training which have been adopted, indicating the manner in which it ensures effective coordination between these policies and programmes, on the one hand, and employment and the public employment services, on the other (Article 1(1) of the Convention).

Measures to overcome the economic crisis. The Government indicates that, in order to prevent the negative consequences of long-term unemployment and to provide the public with better information on the services available for promoting and finding employment, measures have been taken to extend periods of vocational and further training from three to six months and increase allowances for vocational training (from 5,400 to 10,800 roubles per unemployed person). Moreover, a programme of vocational and further training has been launched primarily targeting workers threatened with redundancy. From February to July 2009, a total of 12,800 agreements were concluded in the regions of the Russian Federation, with the aim of providing training for 83,900 persons. The Committee refers to the comments which it is making this year on Convention No. 122 and requests the Government to indicate the way in which vocational training activities designed to tackle the economic crisis contribute towards the placement in employment of the workers affected. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the manner in which the social partners cooperate in the formulation and implementation of policies and programmes of vocational guidance and vocational training (Article 5).

Article 3. Information for vocational guidance purposes. The Government indicates that, as at 1 January 2008, a total of 3,207 establishments were recorded as providing initial vocational training for 1,413,000 recipients. In 2006, there were 630,000 recipients compared with 783,000 in 2004. In 2006, a total of 680,000 persons had completed training compared with 708,000 in 2004. Initial vocational training establishments provide skills training in 291 occupations and propose accelerated training courses. The Government indicates that institutes for specialist studies and intermediate education faculties provide basic vocational education as preparation for intermediate vocational training from an advanced level. As at 1 January 2008, a total of 2,847 establishments were registered as providing intermediate vocational education, comprising 2,631 public establishments and 216 private establishments, catering for a total of 2,514,000 students. These establishments provide skills training in 260 specialist areas. The Committee requests the Government to supply further information in its next report enabling an examination of the results achieved as regards the occupational integration of the recipients of these activities provided by various vocational establishments.

Paid Educational Leave Convention, 1974 (No. 140) (ratification: 1998)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2008, which includes brief replies to the matters raised in the previous direct request, as well as a communication from the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) forwarded to the Government in November 2009.

Granting paid educational leave. The Government indicates that the provisions of the Convention are given effect through collective bargaining agreements under the auspices of the National Employment Councils, which cover various sectors of private and quasi-governmental enterprises. The Government further explains that paid educational leave is partly incorporated into individual companies' rules, regulations, or individual employment contracts and that for the public sector, such leave is guaranteed under the Statutory Instrument No. 1 of the 2000 Public Service Regulations. The ZCTU, however, expresses its concerns about the lack of minimum standards regarding paid educational leave in the private sector, since the Labour Regulations Act has no relevant provisions on the subject. Although collective bargaining agreements in some industries provide for paid educational leave, ZCTU observes that some employers refuse to grant such leave to their employees. The Committee recalls that the Convention requires the formulation and application of a "policy designed to promote, by methods appropriate to national conditions and practice and by stages as necessary, the granting of paid educational leave" (Articles 2–5 of the Convention). Accordingly the Committee reiterates its hope that in its next report the Government will include relevant documents related to the formulation of such policy in association with employers' and workers' organizations (Article 6). In particular, the Committee asks the Government to provide practical information on the availability of paid educational leave in the private sector (Article 9).

Article 4. Formulation and coordination of the policy. The Government indicates that the coordination of the national policy on paid educational leave with other employment policies will be subjected to a tripartite consideration in the near future. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on effective tripartite consultations held to coordinate the national policy and their results.

Article 7. Financial arrangements. The Government communicates the difficulty of surveying all workplaces in order to determine the amount of available funds for paid leave in a given period. The Committee invites the Government to indicate the measures envisaged so that it will be in a position to submit in its next report the requested information on the financing of arrangements for paid educational leave.

Article 8. Discrimination. The Government recalls that section 5(i) of the Labour Relations Act of 2000 ensures that workers have equal access to paid educational leave, irrespective of race, sex, colour, creed, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin. The Committee refers to its comments on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), and asks the Government to provide in its next report on Convention No. 140, information on measures taken to ensure that all workers have equal access to paid educational leave.

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1987)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in June 2010. In its previous comments the Committee expressed concern at the fact that the Government had not provided information on the application of the Convention since July 2004 and had emphasized that technical assistance might be useful to rectify the situation. The ILO undertook a mission to Kinshasa in May 2010 precisely for this purpose. The Committee notes with interest the provisions of the Labour Code, adopted in October 2002, and of the Ministerial Orders adopted in October 2005 and August 2008 implementing the Convention. The Government also indicates that some 250 cases of termination of employment are examined each month by the General Labour Inspectorate. Approximately 100 cases are the subject of conciliation, 100 cases have been brought before the courts, and the other cases remain pending. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the practice of the labour inspectorate and the courts on matters of principle relating to the application of Articles 4, 5 and 7 of the Convention. The Committee hopes that the next report will contain further information on the number of appeals against termination, the outcome of such appeals, the nature of the remedy awarded and the average time taken for an appeal to be decided (Parts IV and V of the report form). In view of the circumstances of the country, it would also be important to know the number of terminations for economic or similar reasons (Articles 13 and 14).

Article 2(4). Exclusions. The Committee previously noted that career civil servants were excluded from the scope of the 1967 Labour Code. These particular categories of employees were made subject to special regulations determined by Act No. 81/003 of 18 July 1981. The Committee notes that section 1 of the 2002 Labour Code excludes from its scope judges and magistrates, career civil servants governed by the general employment regulations and those governed by special employment regulations, and also certain members of the Congolese armed forces, the Congolese national police and the National Service. The Committee notes Organic Act No. 06/020 of 10 October 2006 establishing employment regulations for judges and magistrates, which states that judges are irremovable (section 14) and contains provisions on their dismissal (section 48 ff.). The Committee requests the Government to supply information in its next report on the protection afforded against wrongful dismissal to other categories of public sector employees such as officials in the armed forces and the national police.

Article 7. Procedure prior to or at the time of termination. The Government indicates in its report that the possibility for workers to defend themselves before termination is provided for in collective agreements. The Committee requests the Government to send copies of the collective agreements which provide for this possibility and to indicate in its next report the manner in which the application of this provision of the Convention to workers not covered by collective agreements is ensured.

Article 12. Severance allowance and other income protection. The Committee recalls its previous comments and notes that the 2002 Labour Code does not provide any indication on the severance allowance to be paid to workers. The Committee recalls that Article 12 provides that a worker whose employment has been terminated is entitled to a severance allowance or any other form of income protection or benefit. The Committee trusts that the Government will provide information on how it gives effect to this provision of the Convention.

Turkey

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1995)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in March 2010 in reply to the previous observations. The Committee also appreciates the ongoing contribution of information and views by the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ) and the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TİSK) on the application of the Convention.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Tripartite Committee (representation made under article 24 Constitution of the ILO). The Committee recalls that in the conclusions adopted in November 2000 by the committee set up by the Governing Body to examine the representation made by TÜRK-İŞ it was noted that the laws regulating the employment of seafarers and journalists did not require a valid reason related to capacity, conduct or operational requirements for termination. The Committee notes with interest that the Government states in its report received in March 2010 that it has amended the Act on Relations between Employees and Employers in Media Profession (No. 5953) to give journalists the same protections afforded other employees under the Labour Law (No. 4857). It notes with regret however that the Maritime Labour Law (No. 854) has not yet been amended to bring it into compliance with the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that seafarers are given the protections afforded by the Convention and to provide information on the steps taken in this regard in its next report.

Article 2(2) and (3) of the Convention. Adequate safeguards against recourse to contracts of employment for a specified period of time. The Government indicates that the Labour Act No. 4857 has two safeguards against the abuse of fixed-term, temporary, and seasonal contracts and contracts lasting less than six months with the aim of evading the Convention. First, even though section 18 of the Labour Act limits the application of valid reason requirement to workers with indefinite contracts with at least six months of service, the first paragraph of section 11 requires fixed-term contracts to meet the “objective” standard of a specified term, completion of a certain work, or materialization of a certain event to be recognized as such under the Act. Second, the Government indicates that the second paragraph of section 11 of the Act treats successive fixed-term contracts as an indefinite contract unless there is “an essential reason which may necessitate repeated (chain) contracts”. The Committee notes TİSK’s view that the objective reason requirement affords a stringent protection against the potential abuse of fixed-term contracts. The Committee would appreciate receiving in the Government’s next report updated information on the efficacy of these two safeguards in ensuring the protection resulting from the Convention.

Article 2(4)–(6). Categories of employees excluded from the Convention. The Committee recalls its previous observation that the Government did not list any category of workers for exclusion under Article 2(6) in its first report in December 1997. The Committee notes that under Article 4 of the Labour Law (No. 4857), the Law does not apply to a range of businesses such as those in sea and air transport, in agriculture and forestry employing less than 50 workers, in domestic services, in the production of handicrafts by family members, in sport, etc. The Committee recalls that the Convention applies to all branches of the economy and to all employed persons but that it can be given effect to by different means including laws, collective agreements, arbitration awards or court decisions. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in what way the protections afforded by the Convention are available to the categories of workers contemplated by the exclusions in Article 4 of the Labour Law. The Committee recalls its previous observation that section 18 of the Labour Law that requires a valid reason relating to conduct, capacity and operational requirements for the termination of employment, specifically excludes a business employing less than 30 employees. In the same observation, the Committee also noted that the last paragraph in section 18 of the Labour Act excludes employers’ representatives who manage the enterprise and their assistants from the protections enumerated in sections 18, 19 and 21 of the same Act. In response to the Committee’s request to explain how these two categories of workers are afforded protection under Articles 4, 5, 6 and 7 of the Convention, the Government refers to section 17 of the Labour Act, which entitles these employees to a compensation of three times the applicable notice period. The Government further indicates that this compensation is in addition to the amount paid in lieu of notice. The Committee notes that section 18 of the Labour Act lists the reasons contained in Article 5 of the Convention as invalid reasons for dismissal under the Labour Act such as reasons relating to discrimination, maternity leave, filing complaints and participating in proceedings regarding alleged violation of laws, trade union membership and activities, etc. Given that termination on some of these grounds constitutes an infringement of the fundamental Conventions such as those regarding discrimination and freedom of association, a penalty of three times the notice pay is substantially less than the remedies afforded other workers under the Labour Act and might be considered inadequate compensation for the purposes of Article 10 of the Convention. The Committee accordingly invites the Government to reconsider this aspect and to afford appropriate protection against invalid dismissal for this category of employees.

The Committee understands that the fourth paragraph in section 18 of the Labour Act, which previously determined the calculation of six-month and 30-worker thresholds required for the application of valid reason standard, has been deleted. The Committee further notes TÜRK-İŞ’ concern that the 30-worker threshold excludes a significant number of workers from the Convention’s coverage, given the ubiquity of small and medium-sized enterprises. The Committee invites the Government to indicate in its next report how the resulting change in the threshold calculation ensures the application of the Convention.

Article 4. Valid reason for termination. The Committee notes that the Convention’s valid reason protection is being implemented through domestic court decisions based on the Labour Act, especially by the Court of Cassation’s rulings on which facts related to workers’ competence and conduct, or employers’ business necessity constitute valid grounds. TİSK indicates that the number of cases in the Ninth Chamber of the Supreme Court of Appeals, dedicated to labour disputes other than social security issues, has increased from 20,000 to 43,000 per year since the Labour Act came into force in June 2003, with reinstatement lawsuits making up a bulk of the increase. TİSK and TÜRK-İŞ both communicate difficulties arising from the prolonged period of adjudication lasting more than two years, since employers cannot leave a vacancy open for long and employees suffer from delayed reinstatement. TİSK indicates that the Court of Cassation distinguishes “valid reason” terminations under section 18 of the Labour Act from dismissals based on “justified grounds” under section 25 by applying the principle of termination as the last resort in the former, and the standard of serious misconduct in the latter. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on the decisions of the tribunals on the abovementioned matters covered by the Convention (see Part V of the report form).

Article 10. Remedies in case of invalid termination. The Government indicates that under section 21 of the Labour Act, courts and arbitrators have the power to declare a termination invalid and determine the amount of compensation in lieu of reinstatement. Employees must apply for reinstatement within ten days of judgement, and employers must choose between reinstatement and compensation. Workers are entitled to up to four months of one’s wages during the appeals process, which must be paid back upon reinstatement or deducted from the final amount of compensation. TÜRK-İŞ indicates that employers frequently choose compensation over reinstatement under this legal framework. TÜRK-İŞ suggests that the statutory compensation amount of between four and eight months of wages is inadequate and hinders one's reinstatement, since adjudication takes more than two years in practice and employees must pay back the initial compensation to be reinstated. TÜRK-İŞ also indicates that the Turkish Employment Agency (İŞKUR) requires workers who win their lawsuits to pay back the unemployment benefits they have received during adjudication, even though employment security and unemployment insurance are distinct entitlements. TİSK expresses the view that the remedy of either reinstatement or compensation combined with an expedited system of financial aid during adjudication exceeds the Government's obligation under the Convention. The Committee notes the 1995 General Survey on protection against unjustified dismissal, which states that the wording of Article 10 of the Convention gives preference to reinstatement but is flexible in allowing other remedies and that, when compensation is paid, it should be adequate (paragraph 219 of the General Survey of 1995). In this respect, the Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report regarding the adequacy of compensation for unjustly dismissed workers who are not reinstated.

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1990)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its report received in June 2004, which indicated that the draft Employment Bill which, according to the Government, would give effect to the Convention, had still not been adopted. The Committee understands that the Employment Act was adopted and came into force in 2006. In this context, the Committee considers it particularly regrettable that the Government has still not provided the relevant information on the application of the Convention. The Committee trusts that the Government will be in a position to provide a detailed report containing full particulars on the application of each of the provisions of the Convention in both law and practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Argentina

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1956)

Articles 1 and 12 of the Convention. Definition of the term “wages” and regular payment of wages. The Committee notes the Government’s reply to the comments of the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA), dated 21 October 2009, concerning section 103bis of Act No. 20.477 on labour contracts and Decree No. 1347/03 of 12 December 2003. The CTA, and the Federation of Professionals of the Government of the Autonomous City of Buenos Aires, indicated that under section 103bis, referred to above, certain benefits in kind, classified as “social benefits”, are not considered to form part of the wage. Furthermore, Decree No. 1347/03 provides for a wage rise which is not classified as remuneration.

With regard to section 103bis of Act No. 20/477, the Committee notes that clauses (b) and (c) were repealed by Act No. 26.341 of 12 December 2007 and that, under section 3 of the latter Act, certain benefits enumerated in section 103bis have acquired the nature of remuneration. It further notes the Government’s indication that the benefits enumerated in the current version of section 103bis, although they are paid in the context of a professional relationship, are not related to the work performed or the service provided by the worker and are considered to be social security benefits intended to improve the living standards of workers and their dependants. The Committee also notes the ruling of the Supreme Court of Justice of 1 September 2009 which, based among other factors on the comments made by the Committee for many years, indicated that: (i) section 103bis(c), repealed during the course of the procedure, is unconstitutional; and (ii) that food vouchers are part of wages.

With regard to Decree No. 1347/03, the Committee notes the adoption of Decree No. 2005/2004 of 29 December 2004 which provides: (i) that the wage increase envisaged by Decree No. 1347/03 has acquired the nature of remuneration (section 6); and (ii) a new wage increase which is not classified as remuneration (section 1).

The Committee takes this opportunity to recall that, as indicated by the ILO Governing Body in 1997 when examining a representation on the “desalarization” policy pursued by a member State, the fact that a wage benefit, however it is termed, does not enter into the definition of wages contained in the national legislation, does not ipso facto constitute a violation of the Convention, provided that the remuneration or earnings due, payable under a contract of employment by an employer to a worker, whatever term is used, are covered by the provisions of Articles 3 to 15 of the Convention. With reference to paragraph 47 of its General Survey of 2003 on the protection of wages, the Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that any allowance which is of a non-wage nature under the national legislation is, in application of the Convention, covered by the protection afforded by national laws and regulations concerning wages.

Finally, the Committee notes that the Government has not provided any further information on the other points raised in its previous comments, namely: (i) the progress made in the negotiations to resolve the dispute between the Ministry of Health of the Government of Buenos Aires and the Federation of Professional Employees of the Government of the autonomous city of Buenos Aires; (ii) the situation with regard to the Bill to amend sections 120 and 147 of the Act on labour contracts on the elements of wages which cannot be attached; (iii) any changes in the situation concerning the payment of wages in the form of locally issued vouchers; and (iv) the current situation regarding wage arrears and other difficulties in the regular payment of wages which may persist in certain sectors or provinces. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide detailed information on these points.

Comoros

Minimum Wage Fixing Machinery (Agriculture) Convention, 1951 (No. 99) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(1) of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery. Further to its previous observation, the Committee notes the Government’s explanations that confirm that no progress has been made either with respect to the promulgation of the decree fixing the guaranteed inter-occupational minimum wage (SMIG) at 35,000 KMF (approximately US$110) per month or as regards the reactivation of the Higher Council of Labour and Employment (CSTE). The Government indicates that the draft decree establishing the SMIG rate for the entire private sector, including agriculture, has not yet received the final approval of the President and that the Ministry of Labour is currently taking steps to successfully complete this process. The Government also indicates that tripartite consultations within the CSTE are expected to resume after the adoption of the revised Labour Code which, in turn, is scheduled to be discussed at the next ordinary session of the National Assembly. Regrettably, the Committee is once again obliged to observe that the Convention is presently not applied in either law or practice. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary action without further delay with a view to: (i) establishing and implementing the guaranteed inter-occupational minimum wage rate; and (ii) initiating tripartite consultations within the CSTE on its periodic review and adjustment. It also asks the Government to transmit a copy of the revised Labour Code as soon as it is adopted.

Finally, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the conclusions of the ILO Governing Body as regards the relevance of the Convention following the recommendations of the Working Party on Policy regarding the Revision of Standards (GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paragraphs 19 and 40). In fact, the Governing Body has decided that Conventions Nos 26 and 99 are among those instruments which may no longer be fully up to date but remain relevant in certain respects. The Committee therefore suggests that the Government should consider the possibility of ratifying the Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131), which contains certain improvements compared to older instruments on minimum wage fixing, for instance, as regards its broader scope of application, the requirement for a comprehensive minimum wage system and the enumeration of the criteria for the determination of minimum wage levels. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decision taken or envisaged in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Congo

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 12(1) of the Convention. Payment of wages at regular intervals. The Committee has been commenting for some time on the problem of accumulated wage arrears in the public sector and the need to put an end to practices of delayed payment of wages that clearly contravene the letter and the spirit of the Convention. According to information provided in 2004, the wage debt was estimated at 187.6 billion CFA francs (approximately US$440 million) corresponding to the wage bill of 23 months. The Committee subsequently asked for detailed and documented information on the evolution of the situation, but no report was submitted for three consecutive years. Regrettably, in its last report, the Government does not communicate any updated figures on the progress made regarding the settlement of outstanding payments but limits itself to enumerating the provisions of the Labour Code that ensure legislative conformity with the Convention. The Committee understands that problems of unpaid wages persist, for instance in public education, and that in certain cases wage arrears hinder the Government's privatization programme in the energy, oil, banking, agricultural, forestry, transport and hotel sectors. The Committee therefore once again asks the Government to give a detailed account of the current situation regarding the payment of wages to public employees on time and in full and also to describe any new measures taken with a view to resolving the wage crisis that continues to affect a large number of them.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Costa Rica

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1960)

Article 2 of the Convention. Inclusion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes the information sent by the Government in reply to its previous comment, particularly concerning the connection between Executive Decree No. 11430-TSS of 30 April 1980 and Executive Directive No. 34 of 8 February 2002. It notes the Government's indications that the latter does not depart from the terms of Executive Decree No. 11430-TSS but actually complements it. The Committee observes that, under the terms of the Executive Decree, public contracts must contain clauses explicitly requiring the bidder to comply with legal or "conventional" provisions regarding wages, hours of work, occupational health and safety and, more generally, conditions of employment which are not less favourable than those established for work of the same character in the same sector of activity and the same geographical area. It notes the report sent to the Ministry of Labour and Social Security by the legal service of the Office of the Comptroller-General of the Republic on 2 June 2010, which confirms that the expression "conventional provisions" means collective agreements.

The Committee recalls, however, that its previous comments referred to Executive Directive No. 34, which merely requires the inclusion in public contracts of a clause establishing the obligation of contractors to comply strictly with labour and social security obligations. While noting the Government's indications that this Directive does not restrict the scope of Executive Decree No. 11430-TSS of 30 April 1980, the Committee considers that, in order to avoid any possible misunderstanding, to guarantee legal certainty and to ensure the full application of the Convention, the wording of the Directive should be aligned to that of the aforementioned Executive Decree. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will take steps towards this end in the very near future and requests it to keep the Office informed of any developments in this respect.

The Committee further notes that, according to the abovementioned report of the legal service of the Office of the Comptroller-General of the Republic, it is rare for labour clauses to be included in public contracts in practice, even though there are no obstacles to their inclusion, but the omission of these clauses from public contracts makes no difference to the obligation of contractors to comply with the rights established by the social legislation. In this respect, the Committee has examined, by way of example, a public contract awarded in March 2009 by the National Insurance Institute, which contained clauses regarding the responsibility of the contractor to respect the obligations incumbent on him with regard to the social rights of his workers, in conformity with Executive Decree No. 11430-TSS. These clauses, however, did not contain any further details of the legal or "conventional" provisions which had to be observed with regard to wages and other conditions of work. As the Committee emphasized in its 2008 General Survey on labour clauses in public contracts (paragraph 128), the labour clause must be included as an integral part of the public contract signed by the selected contractor. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the actual inclusion in all public contracts to which the Convention applies of clauses ensuring conditions of work to the workers involved in the execution thereof which are not less favourable than those established by national laws or regulations, collective agreement or, if applicable, arbitration awards for work of the same character in the same branch of activity, in conformity with Article 2(1) of the Convention. Furthermore, the terms of these labour clauses and any variations thereof must be determined by the competent national authority after consultation with the employers' and workers' organizations concerned, in accordance with Article 2(3) of the Convention.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1960)

Articles 6, 8 and 9 of the Convention. Freedom of the workers to dispose of their wages – Deductions from wages. The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report regarding the obligation for certain officials to take out an insurance policy (póliza de fidelidad) designed to ensure that they duly fulfil their obligations. It notes that a total of 1,313 public servants are subject to this obligation and notes the Government's indications regarding the legal basis thereof. The Committee also notes the decision handed down by the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court on 26 June 2008 further to the appeal lodged by the Union of Workers of the Ministry of Finance and the National Customs Service (SITRAHSAN), which refers in particular to Articles 8 and 9 of the Convention and to the 2003 General Survey on protection of wages. In its decision, the Constitutional Chamber notes that the Convention does not contain any definition of the term "deductions from wages" and does not list the types of deduction that are authorized, merely prohibiting those made with a view to ensuring a direct or indirect payment for the purpose of obtaining or retaining employment made by a worker to an employer or his or her representative or to any intermediary. As the Committee emphasized in the aforementioned General Survey (paragraph 222), "Member States therefore enjoy full freedom ... when regulating the types of permissible deductions through legislation".

In the light of the information supplied by the Government, the Committee recognizes that the obligation on certain public officials to take out an insurance policy as referred to above was established in the public interest, namely to ensure the proper management of public funds. This cannot be considered equivalent to the deductions prohibited by Article 9 of the Convention. The Committee wonders, however, about the potentially large sums that the officials concerned may be required to pay under this obligation to take out insurance. It recalls in this regard that Article 8 of the Convention provides that deductions from wages shall be permitted only under conditions and within the limits prescribed by national laws or regulations or fixed by collective agreement or arbitration award. Furthermore, Paragraph 1 of the Protection of Wages Recommendation, 1949 (No. 85), indicates that "all necessary measures should be taken to limit deductions from wages to the extent deemed to be necessary to safeguard the maintenance of the worker and his family". In this regard, the Committee notes that, in the abovementioned decision, the Constitutional Chamber considered that the regulations concerning the obligation to take out insurance do not authorize the administration to make deductions from wages and that it is the worker himself or herself who pays the due amount directly. Although it is true that the obligation to take out insurance that has been the subject of comments from SITRAHSAN does not constitute a deduction from wages in the strict sense of the term, in practice the situation is identical for the workers concerned, in as much as part of their wages has to cover the payment of the compulsory guarantee. Moreover, the Constitutional Chamber has recognized this, since it devoted substantial parts of its decision to Articles 8 and 9 of the Convention. It would therefore be contrary to the spirit of the Convention to consider that, since the payment of the compulsory guarantee is made directly by the worker, it is not subject to the limits which Article 8 of the Convention prescribes. It is the Committee's understanding in this regard that the amounts owed by public servants who are subject to this obligation may amount to as much as several months' wages. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide further information on the limits set by the national legislation with regard to the payments due in relation to this guarantee. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed statistics on the amounts due in this regard from the officials concerned and on the proportion of such amounts in relation to their wages.

Articles 3 and 4. Payment of wages in legal tender and value attributed to allowances in kind. The Committee notes that the Government has requested technical assistance from the Office with regard to the draft amendment to sections 165 and 166 of the Labour Code. The Committee hopes that the Office will be in a position to provide this assistance in the near future in order to facilitate bringing the national legislation into conformity with the Convention on this point. It requests the Government to supply information on any new developments in the process of adoption of these amendments.

Articles 8 and 12. Deductions from wages and payment of wages at regular intervals. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, including, for example, extracts from reports of the inspection services indicating the number and nature of recorded infringements of the provisions of the Labour Code concerning protection of wages, and on the steps taken to deal with such infringements, particularly concerning unjustified deductions from wages and the delayed payment of wages in certain enterprises, as referred to in its previous comments.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes with regret that, despite the observations that it has been making on this matter since 1991, legislation has still not been adopted to give full effect to the Convention.

The Committee recalls in this respect that the essential purpose of the Convention is to ensure that, through the insertion of appropriate labour clauses in public contracts, the workers employed by a contractor and paid indirectly out of public funds enjoy wages and conditions of labour which are at least as satisfactory as the wages and conditions of labour normally established for the type of work concerned, whether they are established by collective agreement or otherwise. Such protection is deemed to be necessary because this category of workers may not be covered by collective agreements and other measures regulating wages, and is often more exposed than others because of the competition between firms tendering for public contracts. Furthermore, the Committee deems it important to emphasize that the protection provided through labour clauses in public contracts cannot normally be ensured through the application of the general labour legislation only. This is due first of all to the fact that there are many countries in which the minimum standards fixed by law are improved upon by means of collective bargaining or otherwise. Thus, even where fairly extensive labour legislation exists and is properly applied, the inclusion of labour clauses in public contracts can serve a very useful purpose in ensuring fair wages and conditions of labour for the workers concerned. Secondly, it is due to the fact that the provision of penalties, such as the withholding of contracts, as envisaged in the Convention, makes it possible to impose sanctions in case of violations of the labour clauses in the public contracts which may be more directly effective than those applicable for infringements of the general labour legislation.

The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with the provisions of the Convention and reminds it of the possibility of seeking the technical assistance of the International Labour Office for this purpose.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Establishment of minimum wage fixing machinery. Further to its previous comments on the abolition of the system of the guaranteed interoccupational minimum wage (SMIG), the Committee notes the Government's explanations to the effect that this decision was taken under pressure from the International Monetary Fund (IMF), which required the Government to adopt a raft of measures, including liberalization of the labour market, to be the beneficiary of a Structural Adjustment Programme (SAP). The Government adds that it made the choice of deregulation rather than leave the SMIG in place, since the balance of public finances would have been seriously jeopardized and wages would not have been guaranteed, thereby threatening the social peace and stability of the country. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the establishment of minimum wage fixing machinery outside the system of collective bargaining is essential for ensuring effective social protection for workers who are not covered by the rules of collective agreements, and that the Government must take the necessary steps to ensure that collectively agreed minimum wage rates are binding and the application thereof is linked to a system of supervision and effective penalties.

The Committee therefore concludes that the situation remains unchanged. Apart from the Government's indication that the matter would be studied by the new National Council for Labour, Employment and Vocational Training (CNT), the Convention is no longer applied either in law or in practice. The CNT was set up pursuant to Decree No. 2008-0023/PR/MESN of 20 January 2008 as a tripartite structure to enable the Government and the social partners to exchange ideas in a free and open manner. In this regard, the Government points out that there is increasing talk of the possibility of reintroducing the SMIG for each branch of economic activity. The Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information on the planned meeting of the CNT and any decisions regarding the reintroduction of the national minimum wage rate. It also requests the Government to send its comments in reply to the observations made by the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD) sent to the Government in September 2007.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. Further to its previous observations, the Committee notes with regret that the Government is still not in a position to report any meaningful progress in putting in place the appropriate legal framework for the implementation of the Convention. The Committee notes that for over ten years, the Government has been stating that it is planning to examine the necessary measures to give effect to the Convention in the overall context of the forthcoming revision of labour laws and regulations which it hopes to undertake with the Office's assistance as soon as the conditions have been fulfilled for the organization of a national tripartite consultation. Despite those reassurances, however, the Committee observes that major legislative exercises, such as the adoption of the new Labour Code of 2006, have been completed without any effort having been made to address the issue of labour clauses in public contracts. Moreover, the Committee understands that the Government is involved in a public procurement reform project initiated by the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa (COMESA) with a view to improving public procurement practices and harmonizing rules and procedures at the regional level.

The Committee recalls that the Government may draw upon the advisory services of the Office, should it so wish, for the purpose of revising its public procurement legislation and aligning it with the requirements of the Convention, and urges the Government to take long overdue action in order to ensure conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee also asks the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress made in the preparation of new procurement laws and regulations under COMESA's public procurement reform project and transmit copies of any new texts as soon as they are adopted.

The Committee also notes the observations made in 2007 by the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD) concerning the application of the Convention. According to the UGTD, the absence of legislation implementing the Convention creates a legal vacuum which is prejudicial to the workers employed under public contracts. In this connection, the UGTD hopes that the National Commission of Labour, Employment and Vocational Training will soon be established so that it can take measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to transmit its comments in reply to the points raised by the UGTD.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 8 and 12 of the Convention. Deductions from wages and payment of wages at regular intervals. The Committee has been commenting for a certain number of years on the provision of the Labour Code permitting wage deductions on the basis of individual agreement and also on difficulties experienced in the public sector concerning the timely payment of wages. The Committee requests the Government to provide up to date information on both issues, in the light of the provisions of the Labour Code (Act No. 133/AN/05/5èmeL).

Moreover, the Committee notes the communication of the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD) received on 23 August 2007 concerning the application of the Convention. The UGTD states that whereas Chapter IV of the Labour Code, in particular section 152, provides for the protection of wages in the strict sense of the word, the absence of wage guarantees such as the guaranteed minimum inter-occupational wage (SMIG), which was abolished in September 1997, has deprived the workforce of real income protection. The Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in reply to the observations of the UGTD.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1970)

Article 4(2) and (3) of the Convention. Full consultation and direct participation of the social partners in the establishment and operation of the minimum wage fixing machinery. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government in reply to the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) dated 30 August 2009.

The IOE indicated that a new constitutional text had been drawn up and then adopted by referendum without the effective participation of the main actors in the world of work and that article 328, paragraph 2, and transitional provision No. 25 of the new constitutional text, which provide for the annual progressive adjustment of the minimum wage so as to cover the cost of the household basket of goods (canasta familiar) do not take into account the direct participation of the employers and workers concerned, as required by this provision of the Convention.

In its reply dated 3 February 2010, the Government indicates that, under the terms of section 117(2) of the Labour Code, the minimum wage is adjusted annually with the participation of the National Wage Council (CONADES), a tripartite advisory body. It emphasizes in this respect that wages are only adjusted by the Minister of Labour and Employment in cases where a consensus decision has not been adopted by the CONADES. As the CONADES did not achieve consensus in the meetings prior to the adjustment of the minimum wage in 2009, the Minister of Labour and Employment, in accordance with section 118(3) of the Labour Code, increased the minimum wage on the basis of the consumer price index established by the competent authority.

In this respect, the Committee wishes to refer to paragraphs 233 and 234 of its 1992 General Survey on minimum wages, in which it indicates that the party responsible for carrying out the consultation should take into consideration what is stated or proposed by the party it consults, without this meaning that the Government has to comply with all the requests of the organization consulted, still less that it should enter into negotiations. The consultation must take place before decisions are taken and must be effective, that is to say that it must enable employers' and workers' organizations to have a useful say in matters that are the subject of consultation.

Furthermore, with reference to its previous observations concerning the current rate of the minimum wage, namely US$240 a month, and whether it allows workers a decent standard of living, the Committee notes that, according to the data of the National Institute of Statistics (INEC) concerning the cost of the household basket of goods (canasta familiar vital y básica), the minimum wage covers the cost of the so-called "subsistence" household basket of goods (US$382.64 out of a monthly income, for two persons, of US$448), but does not cover the cost of the so-called "basic" household basket of goods (US$535.56 out of a monthly income, for two people, of US$448). An increase of around 16 per cent would still be necessary to cover the needs of a family of five persons. While noting the increase of 10 per cent in the minimum wage in 2010, the Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure a minimum wage rate that is sufficient to allow workers to cover their needs and those of their family. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the minimum wage rates that are applicable and their adjustment through the CONADES, in full and effective consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.

Greece

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1955)

Article 11 of the Convention. Wages as privileged debts. The Committee refers to its comments under the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), with regard to the observations communicated by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) with the support of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC) on the impact of the measures introduced in the framework of the mechanism to support the Greek economy. The GSEE refers to important reductions and cuts in the wages of all workers under private law contracts employed in the public and private sectors and draws specific attention to section 41 of Act No. 3863/2010, by which claims of social security institutions in insolvency proceedings are granted the same rank of privilege as workers' wage claims. These institutions are now considered equally and proportionally as privileged creditors with regard to their right to be paid out of the liquidated assets of the insolvent employer. According to the GSEE, such preferential treatment of claims of social security institutions does not correspond to the State's obligation to secure full payment of workers' claims that derive from their employment, before other ordinary creditors establish any claim to a proportionate share of the employer's assets. Reference is made, in this respect, to the Protection of Workers' Claims (Employer's Insolvency) Convention, 1992 (No. 173), which requires workers' claims to be given a higher rank of privilege than most other privileged claims, and in particular those of the State and the social security system and which, according to the GSEE, constitutes an international minimum standard that must be respected. In addition, the GSEE refers to section 75 of Act No. 3863/2010, which provides that, upon termination of employment, severance pay may be paid in bi-monthly instalments each corresponding to two months' wages, and considers that the payment of an amount with such a critical survival function for workers and their families becomes uncertain and precarious. The Committee will examine the comments by the GSEE along with the Government's reply thereto at its next session.

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Introduction of a minimum wage and consultation of the social partners. The Committee notes with regret that, according to the information contained in its last report, the Government is maintaining its decision not to introduce the guaranteed interoccupational minimum wage (SMIG) at the present time in view of the economic situation of the country. It also notes that, as acknowledged by the Government, the introduction of a minimum wage is an important claim of national trade union organizations. The Committee notes in this respect that in November 2005 a 48-hour general strike was called by the National Confederation of Workers of Guinea (CNTG), and that the claims included the establishment of a minimum wage. In this context, it notes with concern that the inflation rate in Guinea appears to be particularly high, which makes it all the more necessary to ensure workers a minimum wage permitting them and their families to benefit from a satisfactory standard of living.

The Committee deplores the fact that, despite its repeated comments on the subject, the Government has still not been able to adopt the decree determining the minimum guaranteed wage rate for one hour of work, as provided for in section 211 of the Labour Code. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures without further delay to give effect to the provisions of the Convention by adopting the implementing decree for section 211 of the Labour Code. The Committee would also be grateful to be provided with more detailed information on the measures adopted or envisaged to ensure effective consultations with the social partners on equal terms in all the stages of the process of fixing minimum wages, as required by the Convention.

The Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the Government in its last report, the minimum wage rates in the various sectors are determined in collective agreements. In this respect, it is bound to recall that the fixing of minimum wages by collective agreements is only permitted under certain conditions: the minimum wages must have the force of law, not be subject to abatement and failure to apply them shall make the person or persons concerned liable to appropriate penal or other sanctions (see paragraphs 99–101 of the 1992 General Survey on minimum wages). The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the manner in which compliance with these principles is ensured in the context of the system for fixing minimum wages by collective bargaining. It requests the Government to provide copies of these sectoral collective agreements containing provisions relating to the minimum wage and to indicate the number of men and women, and of adults and young persons, covered by such provisions.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's last report contained no reply to its previous comments, but essentially reproduced information already submitted in earlier reports which the Committee had considered to be strictly irrelevant to the scope and content of the Convention. The Committee is once again led to conclude that for the last 40 years there has been practically no progress in implementing the provisions of the Convention in either law or practice. The Committee expresses its deep disappointment about the Government's continued failure to apply the Convention despite the technical assistance provided by the Office in 1981 and the numerous commitments made by the Government ever since as regards the drafting and adoption of specific regulations or legislation concerning public contracts. Under the circumstances, the Committee hopes that the Government will make a sincere effort to maintain a meaningful dialogue with the ILO supervisory bodies and once more urges the Government to take all necessary measures without further delay in order to bring its national law and practice into conformity with the clear terms and objectives of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Islamic Republic of Iran

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1972)

Article 12 of the Convention. Payment of wages at regular intervals. The Committee notes the Government's detailed report in reply to the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), which were forwarded to it on 18 September 2009. The ITUC had reported significant problems of wage arrears, principally in the sugar cane, metal industries and textile sectors, with delays in payment ranging from two to 12 months. The Committee recalls that it has been commenting on this issue since 2005 and that the Office carried out two missions in 2006 and 2007, following the examination of the situation on two occasions by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, with a view to gathering concrete figures on wage arrears and the number of workers affected in order to gain a better understanding of the nature and scope of the problem.

In its report, the Government admits that the accumulation of wage arrears is in contravention of the letter and the spirit of the Convention and states that it is determined to accelerate its efforts to find appropriate solutions to the problem of the delayed payment of wages through social dialogue and better implementation of active labour policy, labour legislation and other corresponding laws and regulations. It reiterates that wage arrears are due, among other reasons, to unfair globalization causing inequalities both within and between nations, the lack of competitiveness, the scarcity of skilled labour and the lack of investment in human resources development at the enterprise level, the outdated equipment used in plants, the weakness of supporting industrial infrastructure, the privatization of state industries, low productivity and the rapid increase in wages, which are making certain industries, such as textiles, sugar and steel production, more fragile. In this respect, the Government indicates that it is continuing to invest massively in enterprises experiencing difficulties with a view to renewing the means of production and improving productivity, saving jobs and avoiding labour conflict. The Government adds that programmes are proposed for the payment of debts in instalments, together with managerial advice.

I. Monitoring and evaluation of the situation of wage arrears

The Government indicates that 680 large and medium-sized enterprises have encountered problems, including problems of delayed payment of wages, including 459 public enterprises and 71 private enterprises. It adds that, of these enterprises, 311 have reported problems relating to wage arrears classified as mild to serious, while mismanagement and lack of flexibility were identified as the reasons for similar problems in 89 other enterprises. The Government finally indicates that these figures do not include small workshops in the informal economy, which must have been more adversely affected by the crisis. With regard to the court proceedings initiated in this field, the Committee notes that 80,972 complaints were lodged in 2007, resulting in 51,872 rulings in favour of 61,385 workers. Similarly, 85,626 complaints were lodged in 2008 resulting in 45,765 rulings in favour of 59,215 workers. With reference to the monitoring of the situation, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the number of inspections is constantly increasing (a 45.6 per cent increase in 2008 in scheduled inspections and a 14.7 per cent increase in unscheduled inspections), as well as an increase in the staff of the inspection services (rising from 531 inspectors in 2007 to 821 in 2009). It notes that labour inspectors have a new form that has been prepared to include inspection of the payment of workers' wages. In the event of problems due to the non-payment of wages, labour inspectors have to note the amount of the arrears and the period, in months, during which the wages have not been paid. The Committee also notes the establishment of working groups in each province to supervise the payment of wages and, where necessary, to report the non-payment of wages and any arrears that build up. Finally, the Committee notes the indication that some concrete steps still have to be taken for the analysis of the data collected by the labour inspection services, but that more detailed statistical data will be provided in future reports on the amount of wage arrears, the sectors and regions most affected, and estimates of the delays in the payment of wages.

II. Situation of wage arrears in the sugar cane, textile and metal sectors

The Government indicates that in the sugar cane sector covered by Decree No. 40030.53539 of June 2008, the enterprise Haft Tapeh Sugar is now under the control of the Industrial Development and Renovation Organization (IDRO), the main task of which is to pay the wages due to the 17,000 workers in the enterprise. The Committee notes that 2,477,647,642 rials (or approximately US$250,000) have been paid in wage arrears and that, as of October 2009, all the workers had received what was owed to them. It also notes the Government's indication that the delay in the payment of wages, which used to be three months, is now one month.

In the textile sector, which accounts for 280,000 jobs in 9,400 enterprises, the Government indicates that the delay in the payment of wages ranges from two to four months, particularly in the province of Mazandaran. It notes that the debts of 43 major enterprises in this sector have been rescheduled over several months, and even years, depending on the gravity of their financial problems, and that the Government is continuing to invest massively in this sector and in renovation programmes (US$4 billion in 2008). However, the Government does not provide any specific indication of the amount of wage arrears in the metal industry sector, or on any progress made in this respect.

While noting this information, the Committee observes that wage arrears are far from being resolved and that the international economic and financial crisis has only aggravated already existing structural factors. The Committee therefore requests the Government to continue providing detailed information, and particularly statistical data, on the amounts of wage arrears and the sectors affected. It also requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any new legislative, administrative or other measures intended to ensure the regular payment of wages, as required by Article 12 of the Convention.

In this respect, the Committee recalls its general observation of 2009 on wages which refers to the Global Jobs Pact, adopted by the International Labour Conference in June 2009 in response to the global economic crisis. The Pact places particular emphasis on the need to strengthen respect for international labour standards and explicitly identifies ILO instruments on wages as being relevant in order to prevent a downward spiral in labour conditions and build recovery (paragraph 14). The Committee wishes to emphasize that the Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95), in particular, seeks to prevent wage arrears, which not only deprive workers of means of subsistence and therefore lower consumption, but also imply poor tax revenues and reduced public spending, thus leading to a vicious circle that affects the entire economic and social tissue of society. The Committee recalls that in view of the complexity of the issues, progress in this field can only be made through cooperation with the social partners. Implementing reforms and reaching compromise solutions in a crisis environment needs constant and genuine social dialogue. Drastic conditions also call for strict monitoring and enhanced enforcement, which in turn implies the strengthening of labour inspection services and a system of truly dissuasive and effective sanctions.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1952)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes the observations made by the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) concerning the application of the Convention. The FNV reiterates its view that the national legislation has never specifically implemented the Convention but rather the EU Public Procurement Directive of 2004 which is purely permissive. The FNV adds that the Government has initiated a process of privatization and liberalization of public services and public procurement has become an instrument in the Government's privatization policy. The FNV also expresses its concern over a new legislative proposal for a Public Procurement Act (TK 2009-2010, 32 440), which was transmitted to the Parliament on 25 June 2010. The Committee invites the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in response to the observations of the FNV. It would also appreciate receiving a copy of the Public Procurement Bill referred to above.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes the Government's succinct report and regrets that no clear replies have so far been provided to the issues that the Committee has been raising for over 20 years. The Committee recalls that the Government has been making reference to the Labour Ordinance, the Civil Code and the Uniform General Instructions (UAV) as giving effect to the requirements of the Convention despite the Committee's repeated observations that the mere fact of the national legislation being applicable to all workers does not release a ratifying State from its obligation to take the necessary measures to ensure that public contracts contain the labour clauses specified in Article 2 of the Convention (see also paragraphs 110–113 of the General Survey of 2008 on labour clauses in public contracts). On other instances, the Government stated that it had no authority to dictate how much contractors should pay their workers in so far as they complied with the minimum wage legislation in force while more recently it indicated that discussions had been initiated between the Labour Department and the Department of Public Works on how to ensure compliance with the provisions of the Convention. Finally, in its last report, the Government refers to the General Administrative Rules, which include an express reference to ILO Convention No. 94, without being clear whether these rules are specific to public procurement contracts and how they relate to the abovementioned UAV. In light of the fragmented and unclear information provided by the Government in successive reports, the Committee requests the Government to give in its next report a detailed account on any measures taken or planned in order to implement the basic requirements of the Convention. It would appreciate receiving copies of all legal instruments, such as laws, regulations or administrative circulars, which relate to the labour conditions applicable to those engaged in the execution of public contracts and thus may have an impact on the application of the Convention.

Finally, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the General Observation of 2009 on wages in which reference was made to the Global Jobs Pact, adopted by the International Labour Conference in June 2009 in response to the global economic crisis, that places particular emphasis on the need to strengthen respect for international labour standards and expressly identifies ILO instruments on wages and labour conditions on public contracts as being relevant in order to prevent a downward spiral in labour conditions and build recovery (paragraph 14). The Global Jobs Pact further suggests that governments as employers and procurers should respect and promote negotiated wage rates (paragraph 12), thus recognizing Convention No. 94 as one of the ILO instruments in the crisis that can help ensure that investments financed by public stimulus packages generate jobs with decent pay and working conditions.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1961)

Article 12(1) of the Convention. Payment of wages at regular intervals. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 206 of Decree No. 67-126/MFP/T of 1967, which exempts all agricultural, industrial and commercial undertakings from the obligation to pay at regular intervals not exceeding 15 days the wages of workers employed on a daily or weekly basis, is no longer applicable by virtue of section 343 of the Labour Code of 1996 which repeals all regulatory provisions that are not in harmony with the provisions of the Code. The Government refers to section 160 of the Labour Code which prescribes that wages have to be paid at regular intervals not exceeding 15 days in the case of workers employed by the day or week and not less often than once a month in the case of employed persons whose remuneration is calculated on a bi-monthly or monthly basis. The Government adds that the draft decree on regulations implementing the Labour Code reproduces textually the provisions of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's explanations and requests the Government to transmit a copy of the new regulations implementing the Labour Code as soon as it has been adopted.

With regard to the problem of wage arrears, the Committee notes the Government's statement that, since 1999, the wages of public sector workers have been paid regularly and all previous difficulties have been resolved following the establishment of the Committee for the Settlement of the Internal State Deficit (CADIE). The Committee understands that the committee responsible for the settlement of wage arrears has reportedly announced the completion of its mission in July 2008 after having paid a total of 6 billion CFA francs (approximately US$13 million) of wage arrears to public employees. The Committee would appreciate if the Government would clarify whether any difficulties remain regarding the payment of wages on time and in full in either the public or private sector, or whether any measures have been taken or planned to prevent similar situations in the future.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1953)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee has been commenting for numerous years on the Government's persistent failure to adopt implementing legislation which would give effect to the basic requirement of the Convention, that is, the insertion of labour clauses in public contracts to ensure that the workers engaged in the execution of public procurement contracts (whether for works, goods or services) enjoy wages and other working conditions not less favourable than those fixed by collective agreements, arbitration awards or national laws or regulations for work of the same character in the same area. The Committee notes with regret that in its last report the Government does not provide any new information nor does it appear prepared to take any measures in order to bring its public procurement legislation into line with the letter and the spirit of the Convention. Under the circumstances, the Committee is bound to reiterate that the mere fact that the Labour Code and its Omnibus Rules Implementing the Code apply to workers employed in the public contracts is not sufficient to meet the level of protection required by Article 2 of the Convention. As regards other legal instruments to which the Government has been referring in its reports, these mostly seek to regulate the bidding and selection process in public procurement, but have no direct bearing on the matters dealt with by the Convention. Finally, Republic Act No. 6685, which seeks to promote the employment of local manpower, does not satisfy the requirements of the Convention either. The Committee recalls, in this respect, that, although the Convention requires the insertion of labour clauses covering wages, hours of work and other working conditions in all public contracts to which it applies, it does not preclude the application of other social criteria at either the pre-selection or the post-award stage of the tendering process, for instance, affirmative action measures with a view to promoting the employment of women or vulnerable groups or pursuing broader social policy objectives such as the promotion of employment for long-term unemployed, young persons, disabled or migrant workers, etc. The requirement in public contracts that such additional criteria be satisfied does not relieve the Government of its duty to include clauses ensuring to the workers the conditions prescribed by the Convention. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to adopt all necessary measures without further delay in order to give full effect to the Convention. To this effect, the Government may draw upon the technical assistance of the Office and may also make use of the Committee's General Survey of 2008 on labour clauses in public contracts and of the Office's Practical Guide, copies of which have previously been transmitted to the Government.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 13/2009 of 27 May 2009 issuing labour regulations. It also notes that, according to the Government's report, sections 42–46 of this Act establish the labour clauses required by the Convention. However, these provisions regulate subcontracting, in which the head of an industrial or commercial enterprise assigns the execution of work or services to a contractor who in turn recruits the necessary workforce, and do not regulate contracts concluded with a public authority. The Committee notes with regret that, despite the comments which it has been making for many years, the recent General Survey and the Practical Guide – copies of which were sent to the Government – the Government still does not appear to fully understand the actual concept of public contracts which is the subject of the Convention. The Committee is therefore bound to repeat that a public contract pursuant to Article 1(1) of the Convention is a contract: (i) concluded by a public authority; (ii) involving the expenditure of funds by a public authority and the employment of workers by the other party to the contract; and (iii) relating to the execution of public works, the manufacture of materials or the provision of services. It is therefore clear that subcontracting in the form of the specific labour contract governed by the provisions of Chapter II, Title II, of the new Labour Code bears little relevance to public contracts and even less to the labour clauses which such contracts ought to contain.

Moreover, with regard to the 2007 Public Procurement Act, the Committee recalls that the mere fact that the general legislation applies to workers responsible for the execution of public contracts, as laid down by section 96 of this Act, is not sufficient to ensure the observance of the provisions of the Convention. The Convention seeks to ensure that public contracts are executed under conditions of labour which are not less favourable than those established by collective agreement, arbitration award or national laws or regulations for work of the same character in the trade or industry concerned in the region where the work is carried out. This in practice means the most advantageous labour conditions for the workers concerned, including pay rates, overtime pay, and other working conditions, such as limits on hours of work and paid leave entitlement, established in the industrial sector and geographical region in question. The concrete terms of this obligation incumbent on the selected bidder and any subcontractors are to be reflected in a standard contractual clause which has to be effectively enforced, notably through a system of specific penalties. Moreover, the Committee recalls that the Convention does not only apply to construction contracts but also to contracts for supplies and services. In the light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps without delay to bring national law and practice into conformity with the Convention, and requests it to keep the Office informed of any developments on these matters.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 16 of the Convention. Full information on legislative amendments. While recalling that the Government has been referring for the last ten years to the imminent adoption of new labour legislation and also recalling that draft amendments had been prepared with the assistance of the Office more than 20 years ago in order to bring the national legislation into conformity with the requirements of the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary steps without further delay to enact the new law and reminds the Government of the availability of further ILO technical assistance in this regard.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee has been commenting on the Government's persistent failure to give effect to the provisions of the Convention in either law or practice. The Committee has also been requesting clarification as to whether the Executive Resolution of 10 June 1952 providing for the inclusion of fair wages clauses in government contracts, which previously gave effect to the provisions of the Convention, is still in force. In its last report, the Government indicates that it is currently reviewing the requirements of the Convention and that the Committee's concerns are duly noted. In addition, the Government refers to the "Tripartite Advisory on Responsible Outsourcing Practices" which was adopted in 2008 by the tripartite committee on work-related benefits for low-wage workers and which seeks to ensure compliance with national employment laws by end-user companies when they outsource their business functions and buy services from third-party contractors. The Committee is bound to observe, in this connection, that this initiative bears little relevance to the Convention as it does not refer to public procurement contracts awarded through competitive bidding.

To help better understand the requirements of the Convention, the Committee wishes to refer to paragraphs 40 and 41 of its General Survey of 2008 on labour clauses in public contracts in which it explained that the essential purpose of the Convention is to ensure that the workers employed by a contractor and paid indirectly out of public funds enjoy wages and conditions of labour which are at least as satisfactory as those normally established for the type of work concerned, whether they are established by collective agreement or otherwise, in the locality where the work is done. The Convention requires that this be done through the insertion of appropriate labour clauses in public contracts. The intention is that labour costs are removed from competition between bidders and also that local standards higher than those of general application should be applied, where they exist. Accordingly, clauses within public contracts that merely restate the applicability and binding nature of national employment or labour laws – such as for instance the clause included in the Public Sector Standard Conditions of Contract (PSSCOC) formulated by the Building and Construction Authority – are not sufficient to meet the requirements of the Convention.

Along the same line of thought, in paragraphs 44 and 103 of the General Survey, the Committee observed that conditions not less favourable than the three alternatives offered by the Convention (i.e. collective agreement, arbitration award or national laws or regulations) in practice, in most instances, imply the best conditions of the three. In fact, the type of labour clauses prescribed by Article 2 of the Convention seek to ensure that the contractor applies the most advantageous pay rates, including overtime pay, and other working conditions, such as limits on hours of work and paid leave entitlement, established in the industrial sector and geographical region in question. The concrete terms of this obligation incumbent on the selected bidder and any subcontractors, are to be reflected in a standard contractual clause which has to be effectively enforced notably through a system of specific sanctions. In light of the preceding observations, the Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary steps without further delay in order to effectively implement the Convention and asks it to keep the Office informed of any progress made in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery. The Committee trusts that the Government will supply detailed information in its next report on the application of all the provisions of the Convention in the light of the Employment Act, 2006. The Committee also requests the Government to send available data concerning changes in the minimum wage and the rate of inflation, and also the average wage by branch of activity and occupation.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ukraine

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1961)

Article 12(1) of the Convention. Regular payment of wages. The Committee recalls that the wage arrears situation in Ukraine was again examined by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards at the 99th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2010). In its conclusions, the Conference Committee expressed deep concern about the worsening wage crisis and requested the Government to provide updated information for the present session of the Committee of Experts concerning: (i) concrete measures to improve the application of the Convention in practice and the results achieved, including statistical information on the wage arrears situation; (ii) the activities of the labour inspection services or other monitoring bodies with regard to wage protection; (iii) any developments concerning the adoption of the law on the protection of workers' wage claims in the event of the employer's insolvency; and (iv) the working conditions, including pay conditions, prevailing in the mining sector.

The wage arrears situation. The Committee notes that according to the State Statistics Committee of Ukraine, the total amount of wage arrears as of 1 July 2010 stood at 1.79 billion Hryvna (UAH) (approximately 166.7 million euros).

By sectors of economic activity, the industrial sector represents 52.8 per cent of the total amount of wage arrears, construction represents 15.8 per cent and transport and communication 8.5 per cent. As regards the structure of the wage debt, nearly 70 per cent from the total amount belongs to economically active enterprises and 30 per cent to bankrupt or inactive enterprises. The Committee also notes that based on figures presented at the national tripartite Conference on “Recovering from the crisis: Implementing the Global Jobs Pact in Ukraine” held in Kiev in May 2010, wage arrears increased 2.5 times in 2008 and 2009, and the situation apparently continues to worsen.

The Government indicates that the situation is constantly scrutinized by interim commissions which have been created within executive and local municipal bodies to deal with the repayment of wage arrears. Since the beginning of 2010, these commissions held 5,185 sessions during which 16,643 heads of enterprises were warned about the disciplinary liabilities, 94 contracts were terminated and 3,797 other measures were taken. The Government further indicates that the results of these activities are frequently discussed in targeted meetings of the Cabinet of Ministers, often with the participation of the social partners. Moreover, the Government indicates that on 11 August 2010, the Ministry of Labour drafted and approved a decree on a plan of urgent measures for the repayment of wage arrears. The Committee asks the Government to describe in detail the urgent measures envisaged in the Decree of 11 August 2010 and to provide concrete information on its practical implementation. The Committee would appreciate receiving a copy of that Decree. More generally, the Committee asks the Government to keep the Office informed of the evolution of the situation and to report on any new measures or initiatives aimed at resolving the wage crisis in the country.

Labour inspection activities. The Committee notes the Government’s indications concerning the activities of the State Department for the supervision of observance of the labour legislation (Gosnadzortuda) in the field of wage protection. According to the Government’s report, Gosnadzortuda controls the observance of the implementation of Presidential Decree No. 292 of 2001 on urgent measures aimed at accelerating the repayment of wage arrears and of Presidential Decree No. 576 of 2004 on urgent measures for completing the settlement of wage arrears. Since the beginning of 2010, Gosnadzortuda and its regional bodies carried out 5,831 inspections in 4,598 indebted enterprises, and drew up 3,947 reports of administrative offences. Overall, some 6,095 officials of indebted enterprises were found administratively liable for non-payment of wages and a total amount of UAH2.4 million (approximately 225,000 euros) of punitive sanctions was imposed by courts and labour inspectors. With specific reference to the situation in the Lugansk region and the state enterprise “Luganskugol”, the Government indicates that in 2009–10, this enterprise and its separate subdivisions were inspected on 36 occasions which revealed numerous violations of the labour legislation, including non-observance of applicable minimum wage levels. The Committee asks the Government to continue supplying up-to-date statistics on labour inspection results and all other activities aimed at ensuring compliance with national laws and regulations on wage protection.

Draft legislation on workers’ protection in insolvency – Pay conditions in the mining sector. The Committee notes that the Government’s report does not contain any information concerning the process of adoption of new legislation on the protection of workers’ wage claims in the event of the employer’s insolvency, to which reference was made by a Government representative at the Conference Committee discussion of June 2010. Similarly, the Government’s report does not elaborate on the working and pay conditions in the coal industry which experiences considerable difficulties and is undergoing restructuring. Referring to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee again asks the Government to: (i) indicate any further developments concerning the preparation of new legislation aimed at modernizing existing legislation on the protection of workers’ claims in the event of insolvency proceedings; and (ii) provide an updated account of the employment situation in the mining sector, particularly as regards the prevailing working conditions and the regular payment of wages.

The situation in the Lugansk region and the Nikanor-Nova mine. The Committee notes the comments of the Independent Trade Union of Miners (ITUM) of the Nikanor-Nova coalmine, dated 27 July, 22 October and 1 November 2010, concerning ongoing wage problems in the Nikanor-Nova coalmine. According to ITUM, there is deliberate and systematic non-compliance with labour legislation in force and applicable minimum wage standards and, as a result, workers are deprived of the possibility to earn a decent living. In addition, ITUM considers that as of July 2010, the minimum monthly wage for workers engaged in underground work should be UAH1,129 (instead of UAH888 currently paid) and UAH1,042 for all other workers. In its reply dated 11 October 2010, as well as in its reply to earlier comments made by the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of the Lugansk Region (KSPLO) on the same issue, the Government indicates that the Lugansk regional state inspectorate continuously monitors coal mining enterprises and has frequently detected violations of the labour legislation, including payment of wages at a rate below the applicable minimum wage. The Government further indicates that all inspections are carried out with the direct involvement of KSPLO representatives and that managers who permitted such violations have been charged with administrative offences.

Finally, the Committee notes that the Government has requested the Office to undertake a technical assistance mission with a view to better understanding the current wage debt situation. The Committee understands that this mission is now planned for early 2011 to be followed by a national tripartite event on the timely and full payment of wages. It hopes that the mission will give an opportunity to review and evaluate the wage arrears situation and trusts that the Office will seek to address pending issues and hold separate meetings with government authorities, institutions or services, employers’ and workers’ organizations – including the KSPLO – and other associations interested in the matters in question.

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 2006)

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Binding force of minimum wage and periodic review of minimum wages. The Committee notes the comments of the Independent Trade Union of Miners (ITUM) of the Nikanor-Nova coal mine dated 27 July 2010 concerning the application of the Convention. According to ITUM, the state enterprise “Luganskugol” that manages the Nikanor-Nova coal mine has set the minimum wage rate as from 1 July 2010 at a level that is lower than the rate provided for under section 5.7 of the applicable collective agreement, i.e. 630 Ukrainian hryvnas (UAH) instead of UAH1,129 for the workers engaged in underground work. Further, ITUM indicates that this is a situation that affects more than 200,000 workers; it should therefore be properly investigated and those responsible should be brought to justice while measures should be taken to prevent similar practices.

In addition, the Committee notes the comments of the National Forum of Trade Unions of Ukraine (NFPU) received on 30 April 2010 concerning the application of the Convention. The NFPU expresses concern about several provisions of the new draft Labour Code, which is scheduled for adoption by the National Parliament very shortly, including the possibility for the minimum wage to be determined centrally by the Government. In the view of the NFPU, this does not reflect modern labour market conditions; the active involvement of employers’ and workers’ organizations would be the only efficient way to ensure adequate wage rates while it would also be essential to provide for compensation of unpaid or underpaid sums through judicial means. The Committee requests the Government to submit any comments it may wish to make in response to the observations of ITUM and NFPU.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes with regret that the Government is still unable to report substantive progress concerning the adoption of legislation giving effect to the provisions of the Convention. While noting the Government’s indication that the draft bill to amend the Labour Code Ordinance, Cap. 293 is under review and should be resubmitted to the Legislative Council, the Committee recalls that the Government has been stating for the last 28 years that the enactment of appropriate legislation for the insertion of labour clauses in public contracts is under consideration.

The Committee wishes to point out that the principal obligation for a government arising out of the ratification of an international labour Convention is to take such action as may be necessary to make effective the provisions of the ratified Convention, and to continue to ensure its application for as long as it does not decide to denounce it. The Committee therefore strongly suggests that the new legislation designed to implement the Convention should be adopted without delay and asks the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments in this respect.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1944)

The Committee notes the adoption of Decree No. 6.660 of 30 March 2009, raising the level of the minimum wage as from 1 September 2009 to 959.08 bolívares (bolívares fuertes) (approximately US$447), amounting to an increase of 20 per cent, for all workers in urban and rural areas, the private and public sectors, as well as domestic workers, concierges and apprentices. The Committee notes this information with particular interest, especially in light of the Global Jobs Pact, adopted by the International Labour Conference in June 2009 to address the impact of the international financial and economic crisis. Indeed, the Global Jobs Pact calls on governments to consider options such as minimum wages that can reduce poverty and inequity, increase demand and contribute to economic stability (paragraph 23). It also emphasizes that, in order to avoid deflationary wage spirals, minimum wages should be regularly reviewed and adapted (paragraph 12).

Article 3(2) of the Convention. Consultations with employers’ and workers’ organizations. The Committee notes the Government’s reply to the observations made by the Federation of Chambers and Associations of Commerce and Production of Venezuela (FEDECAMARAS) and the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV). The Committee also takes note of new comments made by FEDECAMARAS and the Independent Trade Union Alliance (ASI), dated 31 August 2010 as well as the Government’s reply dated 19 November 2010. These organizations have indicated, in the same way as the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) in 2007, that the Government was not holding the consultations envisaged by law for the determination of the national minimum wage, namely convening the National Tripartite Commission responsible for making concerted recommendations on the adjustment of the minimum wage, in accordance with section 167 of the Basic Labour Act. The organizations emphasized that they were not able to give their views on the subject as the invitations to the consultations were sent out very late or even after the date of publication of the Decree to increase the minimum wage.

In its replies, the Government indicates that it holds consultations with the social partners concerned at the national, regional and even local levels concerning any comments that they may wish to make and the measures adopted by the Government in relation to the determination of minimum wages. It adds that section 172 of the Basic Labour Act authorizes the executive authorities to determine the amount of the minimum wage, after seeking the views of the most representative employers' and workers' organizations and other national bodies, so that they can make known their opinion on the determination of the national minimum wage, which demonstrates the Government's will to establish, maintain and consolidate fair, inclusive and beneficial social dialogue, without exclusive rights or discrimination of any type based on former positions related to power or favouritism.

The Committee wishes to emphasize once again the fundamental importance of the consultation procedure under the Convention and recalls that, while each government may determine by national law or regulations the manner of consultation, such consultations must nevertheless be held prior to the adoption of decisions and they have to be effective, that is to say that they need to allow employers' and workers' organizations to be able to give their views in a useful manner on the matters under consultation, in this case minimum wages. The Committee also recalls, as indicated in paragraph 241 of its 1992 General Survey on minimum wages, that the participation of employers and workers, their organizations and representatives, must be direct, including the possibility that the parties concerned form part of the relevant bodies and that their participation is effective, that is to say that the opinions reached by the parties concerned should be duly taken into consideration, and that the participation should take place on an equal footing. While noting the efforts made by the Government to review minimum wage rates regularly, with a view to ensuring workers a satisfactory standard of living, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the exact procedures for consultation with employers' and workers' organizations for the fixing of the minimum wage and on the functioning of the National Tripartite Commission responsible for making recommendations on the adjustment of the minimum wage.

Finally, the Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the decision by the ILO Governing Body to classify Convention No. 26 among those instruments which may no longer be fully up to date but which nevertheless remain relevant in certain respects (document GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paragraphs 19 and 40). The Committee therefore suggests that the Government might consider the possibility of ratifying the Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131), which marks a certain progress in relation to older instruments on minimum wage fixing, for instance in terms of its broader scope of application, the requirement for a comprehensive minimum wage system and the obligation to determine criteria for fixing and adjusting minimum wage rates. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decision adopted or envisaged in this respect.

Zambia

Article 12(1) of the Convention. Regular payment of wages. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it continues its effort to reduce wage arrears owed to local council employees, and that the total wage debt owed to the Mufumbwe District Council workers now stands at 2.6 billion Zambian kwacha (ZMK) (approximately US$560,000). The Government indicates that wage arrears are due to the fact that local councils have had their revenue sources reduced over the years. It also indicates that grants are given to local authorities to help them reduce and eventually eliminate all salary arrears. While noting these explanations, the Committee asks the Government to collect and transmit comprehensive information concerning the overall situation of wage arrears of local council employees in all nine provinces of the country. It also asks the Government to describe in detail any measures, other than giving restructuring grants, intended to resolve the ongoing wage crisis. The Committee would be particularly interested in receiving information on any collectively agreed measures or initiatives, and more generally, on the role of social dialogue in tackling the persistent difficulties in the regular payment of wages.

In this respect, the Committee wishes to refer to its 2009 general observation in which reference was made to the Global Jobs Pact, adopted by the International Labour Conference in June 2009 in response to the global economic crisis, that places particular emphasis on the need to strengthen respect for international labour standards and expressly identifies wage-related ILO instruments as being relevant in order to prevent a downward spiral in labour conditions and build recovery (paragraph 14). In this connection, the Committee wishes to emphasize the importance of Convention No. 95, which seeks to prevent wage arrears that not only deprive workers of cash and therefore lower consumption, but also imply poor tax revenues and reduced public spending, thus leading to a vicious circle that affects the entire economic and social tissue of the society. In view of the complexity of these issues, progress may only be made through cooperation with social partners while reforms and compromise solutions in a crisis environment call for constant social dialogue. Moreover, drastic measures need strict monitoring and enhanced enforcement, which in turn implies reinforced labour inspection services and a system of truly dissuasive and effective sanctions.

Zimbabwe

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery. The Committee recalls the observations made by the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU), according to which wage negotiations within the National Employment Council for the Agricultural Industry (NEC) are problematic because of the non-cooperative attitude of the employers. The ZCTU denounced the exceptionally low wages paid in the agricultural sector which had forced farm workers to leave employment massively and join the informal sector, while migration to neighbouring countries continued unabated. It also made reference to the wage dispute settlement procedures which were slow and tedious and regretted that, despite having the lowest pay rates, some farm workers went for months without a salary.

In its reply, the Government indicates that the NEC continues to engage employers' and workers' organizations in the review of minimum wages in the agricultural sector and that the question of whether minimum wages are in keeping with the rate of inflation, or indeed the frequency of reviews, remains to be answered by the respective parties. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide additional information on any developments concerning minimum wage policy in the current economic context and to indicate any progress made with regard to the readjustment of the minimum wage for the agricultural sector.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 26 (Bahamas, Dominica, Lesotho, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Togo, United Kingdom: British Virgin Islands); Convention No. 94 (Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Uganda); Convention No. 95 (Dominica, France: New Caledonia, Guinea, Kyrgyzstan, Niger, Solomon Islands, Uganda); Convention No. 131 (Albania, Central African Republic, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia); Convention No. 173 (Armenia).

Working time

Costa Rica

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1982)

Article 2 of the Convention. Daily and weekly hours of work. The Committee notes that the information sent by the Government to the effect that Bill No. 16030 has been set aside by the Human Rights Commission of the Legislative Assembly and will not be examined by Parliament. It understands, however, that the Ministry of Labour had adopted in 1998 Directive DM-0095-98 authorizing the introduction of a compressed week system (jornada acumulada or 4x3) similar to the one provided for in the abovementioned Bill and which consisted in alternating four workdays of 12 hours each and three rest days. The Committee requests the Government to provide more detailed information in this regard and to indicate in particular whether this ministerial Directive is in effect.

In addition, the Committee refers to the comments it has been formulating for a number of years concerning section 136 of the Labour Code which permits to extend to ten hours the daily limit of hours of work for those works which are not unhealthy or hazardous by nature, or to nine hours when working hours are not equally distributed during the week. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures without further delay in order to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention on this point.

Moreover, the Committee notes that a bill on employment protection in times of crisis has been brought before the Legislative Assembly. It notes in particular that section 8 of this bill provides for the possibility, among a range of exceptional measures which would be authorized in times of crisis, for the employer to replace a normal system of working hours with another system permitted by the labour legislation, provided that day or mixed work is not replaced by night work. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the progress made with regard to the adoption of this bill and on its potential impact on the limits applicable to hours of work.

Article 6. Overtime. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning section 139 of the Labour Code which provides that time during which the worker rectifies his/her own errors may not be considered as overtime hours even though no such exception is provided under Article 6 of the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that any work performed outside of the normal hours of work are considered overtime with all the consequences this implies. In addition, the Committee recalls its previous comments concerning section 140 of the Labour Code which provides that the daily limit of hours of work, including overtime, cannot exceed 12 hours, that is to say, four hours beyond the normal daily limit. It refers, in this connection, to its 2005 General Survey on hours of work (paragraph 144) in which it noted that “even though the establishment of specific limits to the total number of additional hours is left to the competent authorities by both Conventions, this does not mean that such authorities have unlimited discretion in this regard. Taking into account the spirit of the Conventions and in the light of the preparatory work, it is appropriate to conclude that such limits must be reasonable and they must be prescribed in line with the general goal of the instrument, namely to establish the eight-hour day and the 48-hour week as a legal standard of hours of work in order to provide protection against undue fatigue and to ensure reasonable leisure and opportunities for recreation and social life”. In this respect, the possibility to require workers to perform four additional hours per day, without any other limit, weekly, monthly or annual, manifestly does not appear to be in line with a reasonable limit of additional hours. The Committee requests the Government to determine the limits of permissible additional hours in a manner that ensures that such limits are reasonable within the meaning of this Convention.

Holidays with Pay Convention (Revised), 1970 (No. 132) (ratification: 1996)

Articles 11 and 12 of the Convention. Compensation in lieu of annual holiday with pay. With reference to its previous comments concerning the need to amend section 110(b) of the Labour Code of 1965, the Committee notes with satisfaction that, under section 222(2) of the new Labour Code No. 262/2006 Coll., cash compensation in lieu of annual leave is permitted only in the case of termination of employment, as required by these Articles of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 6 of the Convention. Permanent and temporary exceptions. In reply to the comments the Committee has been making since 1994, the Government indicated that the regulations applying section 49 of Act No. 2/1990 were still being examined with the parties concerned, particularly in the oil sector. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the progress made in this matter. The Government is also invited to communicate information on the organizations of employers and workers consulted in the preparation of the abovementioned regulations. Pending the latter's adoption, the Committee urges the Government to provide information on the manner in which effect is given, in practice, to the provisions of section 49 of Act No. 2/1990 on overtime.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 7 of the Convention. Permanent and temporary exceptions. In reply to comments that the Committee has been making since 1994, the Government indicated that the regulations to implement section 49 of Act No. 2/1990 are still being examined with the parties concerned, particularly in the oil sector. It requests the Government to report on progress in this process. The Government is also asked to provide information on the employers' and workers' organizations consulted in the preparation of these regulations. Pending the latter's adoption, the Committee urges the Government to provide information on the way in which the provisions of section 49 of Act No. 2/1990 on overtime are applied in practice.

Weekly Rest (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1957 (No. 106) (ratification: 1971)

Article 7 of the Convention. Permanent exemptions – Sunday work. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government in reply to its previous comments and the numerous attachments to its report, as well as the comments made by the General Confederation of Labour–Force Ouvrière (CGT–FO), received on 26 August 2010, and the Government's reply to these comments, received on 15 November 2010. In its comments, the CGT–FO recalls the criticisms that it made in 2009 concerning Act No. 2008-3 of 3 January 2008 establishing an exemption to the Sunday rest rule for retail furniture stores, and Act No. 2009-974 of 10 August 2009, and its view that these extensions of exemptions from the principle of Sunday rest are opening the way to the generalization of Sunday work, as the many exceptions now granted no longer have an objective and imperative basis from the viewpoint of the general interest. The CGT–FO also emphasizes the dangers arising from this generalization of Sunday work in terms primarily of the family and social life of workers, but also the frequently precarious nature of jobs involving Sunday work.

I. The viewpoint of the workers concerned with regard to Sunday work

In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government and the social partners to provide further information on a number of points. It expressed the wish to be provided with the results of any opinion surveys carried out among the workers concerned. The Committee notes that the Government attached to its report the findings of several surveys published in 2008 and 2009, and a table recapitulating the results. It notes that, according to the findings of the CSA poll of October 2008 entitled "The opinion of the French on Sunday work", 50 per cent of the workers questioned indicated that they were ready to work on Sunday if they were paid double, while there were 49 per cent of negative opinions. The Committee also notes the findings of the survey "Sunday work: What do those who work on Sunday think?", published in December 2008, according to which, in the view of 82 per cent of the employees questioned in the context of the study, the fact of working on Sunday primarily arises from a constraint related to the nature of their work or job. Moreover, the employees questioned indicated that a majority were personally in favour of greater legal flexibility so that more shops could open on Sunday (55 per cent) and the Bill to authorize Sunday work on a voluntary basis (66 per cent). In its comments, the CGT–FO questions the relevance of taking into account opinion surveys to assess the conformity of a legal measure with an ILO Convention. The Committee wishes to emphasize in this respect that this information is not intended to assess the conformity of the national legislation with the Convention as such, but rather to have available fuller information on the overall context surrounding the 2009 Act. The CGT–FO also recalls the difficulties involved in drawing reliable findings from opinion polls and refers to a study carried out in 2008 by the Centre de recherche pour l'étude et l'observation des conditions de vie (Crédoc), which was not mentioned by the Government in its report, according to which, although 52 per cent of those surveyed were in favour of the Sunday opening of shops, 61 per cent were opposed to working on a Sunday. The Committee observes that the polls published on the issue of Sunday work do not offer definitive conclusions on the views of the workers concerned. Indeed, there appears to be a dichotomy between the replies given by workers concerned with Sunday work and those of potential clients on a Sunday.

II. The voluntary nature of Sunday work

The Committee also requested information on the measures adopted to ensure the voluntary nature of Sunday work and the compensatory measures offered to the workers concerned. In this respect, it notes the Government's indications that the reality of the voluntary nature of the work is ensured by several requirements and guarantees, both individual and collective, set out in the applicable legislative provisions. The Committee also notes that, according to the Government's report, no guarantees of this type existed in the Labour Code before the adoption of the Act of 10 August 2009. The Committee further notes the Government's indications that, in tourist towns and areas, the guarantees and compensatory measures available for employed persons are established by the provisions of branch and/or enterprise agreements. It notes that section 2 of Act No. 2009-974 requires the opening of negotiations with a view to the conclusion of an agreement on the measures to compensate Sunday work in branches that include shops and retail services, and in such shops or services where an agreement is not already in force. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the provisions respecting compensatory measures for Sunday work contained in the collective agreements concluded in sectors in which employees traditionally work on Sundays, and the conclusion of enterprise agreements which harmonized the system of compensatory measures applicable to persons employed by the enterprise, irrespective of the location of the shop or the type of exemption (tourist town or area, "areas of exceptional consumption" (PUCE), exemptions accorded by the Prefect), with most agreements providing for the doubling of remuneration and the granting of compensatory rest. Finally, the Committee notes the conclusion of the inter-branch agreement of 27 November 2009 on shops opening on Sunday in the Plan de campagne area, which is the largest commercial zone in France and concerning which there was a lively polemic before the adoption of the Act of 2009, as the retail stores were open there despite the legal prohibition that was then applicable. The Committee notes that this agreement envisages two days of weekly rest, one of which is determined in agreement with the employed person, but which may nevertheless be worked, and a wage supplement equivalent to a minimum of 100 per cent of the minimum interoccupational growth wage (SMIC).

The Committee notes that the CGT-FO, in its comments, emphasizes that the Labour Code, as amended by Act No. 2009-974, envisages a difference of treatment that is difficult to justify for workers employed in retail stores according to whether they are employed in a tourist town or in a PUCE, as the voluntary nature of Sunday work is only required in the latter case. The CGT-FO also considers that it is difficult to ensure the really voluntary nature of Sunday work, particularly during a period of high unemployment and in view of the economic dependence of employed persons on their employer. With regard to the compensatory measures for employed persons who do not benefit from Sunday rest, the CGT-FO considers that, also in this respect, the Act introduces inequality of treatment between employed persons. While persons employed in retail stores located in a PUCE benefit from remuneration that is at least double their normal pay, and equivalent compensatory time off, the same does not apply to those engaged in an establishment located in a tourist area. The CGT-FO accordingly asserts that, in view of these differences, the actors concerned are tempted to request classification of their areas as tourist areas, so that retail stores can benefit from the exemption for Sunday work with a minimum of constraints. It observes that all employed persons who do not benefit from these minimum compensatory measures set out in law can only avail themselves of the provisions of the various sectoral collective agreements or enterprise agreements, which is also a major source of inequality of treatment between employed persons. The CGT-FO also affirms that an enterprise agreement may derogate from the provisions of a branch collective agreement, even where it is less favourable to the employed person. Finally, according to the CGT-FO, since the entry into force of the Act of 10 August 2009, most of the measures taken in enterprises establishing compensatory measures for work on Sunday in reality arise out of unilateral decisions by the employer, validated by a referendum of the personnel, which does not offer sufficient guarantees of dialogue and avoids the traditional channels of collective bargaining.

In its reply to the CGT-FO's comments, the Government emphasizes that the principle of the voluntary nature of the work applies to all employed persons working on Sunday under individual and temporary exemptions granted by Prefects. It adds that the principle of the voluntary nature of such work was not extended to cases of exemptions from the right to Sunday rest in so far as, in such cases, Sunday work is a structural component of the jobs involved, known at the time of recruitment. The Government also recalls the guarantees afforded by the law to ensure the voluntary nature of work by employed persons and observes that the labour inspection services have not up to now reported difficulties in the implementation of the legal requirements in this respect. With regard to the compensatory measures, the Government asserts in its reply that the Act of 10 August 2009 extended the scope of the exemptions for which compensatory measures for Sunday work are compulsory. These consist not only of exemptions in PUCes, but also exemptions under section L.3132-20 of the Labour Code. In both of these cases, the employed persons benefit from either compensatory measures determined by collective agreement, or by law (the doubling of remuneration and compensatory rest) in the absence of an agreement.

III. Current situation in tourist areas and PUCes

In its observation in 2009, the Committee also requested information on any developments concerning the definition of tourist areas and PUCes. It notes that, according to the Government's report, 570 territorial communities are registered as areas of touristic interest and 36 of them include one or more areas of exceptional consumption or permanent cultural activity, with the city of Paris having seven such areas. It also notes that five of these towns and areas have been registered as such since the entry into force of Act No. 2009-974, and that only around ten applications are under examination. The Committee notes that, according to the Directorate of Research, Studies and Statistics (DARES), around 50,000 retail stores with approximately 250,000 employed persons would potentially be concerned by Sunday work in tourist towns and areas. It also notes that, according to the Government's report, 15 PUCes were created in June 2010 following the adoption of the Act of 10 August 2009, with the number of stores concerned being estimated at 500 and the number of employed persons potentially concerned being evaluated at between 4,000 and 5,000.

In its comments, the CGT-FO indicates that the profiles of tourist areas are fairly difficult to understand, which is unacceptable as it leaves the door open for unjustified applications for classification as tourist areas. It considers that the definition of PUCes also raises problems, as the elements which characterize a PUCe bear no relation to the requirement to meet primary necessities, but relate more closely to the achievement of profit objectives. Furthermore, the criteria set out in law, relating to customary Sunday consumption and the volume of customers, would appear, according to the CGT-FO, to respond to a desire to legalize practices that were previously illegal. Finally, it considers that, one year after the entry into force of the Act, PUCes are appearing throughout France.

In reply to the CGT-FO's comments, the Government indicates that no significant acceleration in applications for classification as tourist areas has been observed since the adoption of the Act, and that the 11 areas so classified obeyed the strict application of the provisions of the Labour Code. With regard to PUCes, the Government indicates that up to now 24 PUCes have been established, while 13 other applications, which did not fulfil the legal requirements, were refused. The Government adds that the number of employed persons potentially concerned by the exemptions in relation to PUCes is under 15,000 and that the allegation of the generalization of Sunday work is therefore unfounded.

The Committee takes due note of the voluminous information provided by the Government and the CGT-FO. It recalls the three basic principles around which the Convention is articulated, to which it referred in its previous observation: continuity (a period of weekly rest comprising at least 24 consecutive hours), regularity (weekly rest to be enjoyed in every period of seven days) and uniformity (weekly rest to be granted, wherever possible, simultaneously to all the persons concerned in an establishment and to coincide, wherever possible, with the traditional day of rest). It also recalls that Article 7 of the Convention only permits the application of special weekly rest schemes where the nature of the work, the nature of the service performed by the establishment, the size of the population to be served or the number of persons employed is such that the normal weekly rest scheme cannot be applied.

While noting that the Labour Code indeed establishes a period of weekly rest of at least 24 consecutive hours, as required by the Convention, and explicitly provides that "in the interest of the employed persons" the weekly rest period shall be granted on Sunday, and while noting that the Act of 10 August 2009 reaffirms in its title the principle of weekly rest, the Committee is bound to note the progressive extension of the exemptions to this principle authorized by the legislation. It accordingly observes that, according to a study published by DARES in October 2009, Sunday work concerned around 6.5 million employed persons, or 28 per cent of them, in 2008 and, of those, 2.8 million (or 12 per cent) habitually worked on Sunday, and that these statistical data are far from being negligible.

In any event, irrespective of the issue of the number of commercial establishments and workers concerned by these new exemptions, what remains to be demonstrated is that it was impossible to apply the normal weekly rest scheme, thereby necessitating recourse to Sunday work. Taking the example of the extension to retail furniture stores of the exemptions authorized by section L.3132-12 of the Labour Code, the Committee notes that this exemption was introduced by Act No. 2008-3 of 3 January 2008 with a view to the development of competition for the benefit of consumers. This wording clearly demonstrates that it is based on economic considerations, related to competition, and the wishes of consumers. Social considerations, namely the impact of the exemption on the workers concerned and their families, do not appear to have been taken into account, or at least not at the same level as economic factors. Moreover, while the opening of furniture stores may correspond to the wishes of consumers, it does not appear to amount to a necessity such that the application of the normal weekly rest scheme is impossible.

The legal measures adopted in favour of tourist areas and PUCes give rise to similar comments from the Committee. Prior to the amendment made by the Act of 10 August 2009, the exemption for tourist areas was limited in time to the tourist period and in scope to retail stores offering the public goods and services intended to facilitate their stay or their relaxation or leisure activities. These conditions, which appeared to be such as to confine the exemption within the limits of its assigned objective, were set aside by the amendment of 10 August 2009. Moreover, the introduction of PUCes openly responds to concerns of an economic nature, which nevertheless reflect the preferences of many consumers. It, however, had the effect of encompassing in the exemption all the stores located within the perimeter of large commercial centres without taking into account their size or activity, thereby going beyond the scope of the special schemes defined by the Convention on the basis of criteria related to the impossibility of complying with the normal scheme that it establishes, by reason of the nature of the work, the nature of the services performed by the establishment, the size of the population to be served or the number of persons employed (Article 7(1)).

The Committee clearly understands that, in the context of open competition, exacerbated as it is by the crisis, the member States of the ILO are led to endow labour rules with a certain flexibility to help enterprises cope. It nevertheless observes that, under the terms of the Convention, for an exemption to be made to the general weekly rest scheme, regard must be had to all proper social and economic considerations. It therefore requests the Government to continue reviewing, with the social partners, the impact in practice of the measures introduced by Act No. 2008-3 of 3 January 2008 and Act No. 2009-974 of 10 August 2009 having regard for both social and economic considerations. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of the outcome of this evaluation, and of any initiative that it may take in this respect.

Furthermore, the Committee is concerned at the information relating to the difference of treatment between persons employed in shops located in tourist areas and those who work (sometimes for the same company) in an establishment located in a PUCE in relation to the guarantees concerning the voluntary nature of Sunday work and the minimum compensatory measures established by law. It considers it desirable to ensure equivalent protection for persons employed in these two categories of establishments, particularly since the number of businesses benefiting from exemptions in tourist areas has been increased since the entry into force of the Act of 10 August 2009, and it requests the Government to provide fuller information on the measures that it could envisage adopting for this purpose, in consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. The Committee notes the examples of sectoral collective agreements to which the Government refers in its report, but also notes the CGT-FO's indications that enterprise agreements can derogate from sectoral agreements, even where their provisions are less favourable to the workers. It requests the Government to provide more detailed information on this point and, if this is indeed the case, to indicate the manner in which the existence of minimum guarantees is ensured for workers engaged on Sunday in terms of the voluntary nature of the work and compensatory measures. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to attach to its next report a copy of the report of the parliamentary committee to follow up the Act of 10 August 2009.

Georgia

Holidays with Pay Convention, 1936 (No. 52) (ratification: 1993)

Articles 2 and 6 of the Convention. Right to annual holidays with pay. The Committee notes the observations made by the Georgian Trade Union Confederation (GTUC) concerning the application of the Convention. The GTUC indicates that, in practice, there are cases in which employees work on the basis of a one-month renewable employment contract, thus never becoming eligible for annual holidays with pay. The GTUC considers that this situation is in practice tantamount to relinquishing the workers' entitlement to annual paid leave and therefore such contracts should be considered null and void. The GTUC also indicates that, as a matter of frequent practice, many employees are dismissed before they take paid leave to which they are entitled, and the legislation makes no provision for the payment of monetary compensation for any unused portion of annual leave upon termination of employment. Recalling that the GTUC had communicated similar comments in 2008, which the Government has so far failed to address, the Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in reply to the new observations of the GTUC.

Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14) (ratification: 1938)

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to weekly rest. The Committee has been commenting on the lack of legislative provisions guaranteeing the workers' right to an uninterrupted weekly rest period comprising at least 24 consecutive hours in every period of seven days based on the principles of regularity, continuity and uniformity. In its reply, the Government indicates that measures to give specific legislative expression to the requirements of this Article of the Convention are not thought to be necessary. The Government explains that while the national legislation does not explicitly regulate weekly rest periods, the Convention is still given effect through a combination of existing legislation, mainly the Health and Safety in Employment Act 1992 which obliges employers to take all practical steps to ensure employees are free from harm, including work-related stress or physical or mental fatigue, while at work; the Employment Relations Act 2000 which requires a written agreement for all employees; and the Minimum Wage Act 1983 which provides that if the maximum number of hours in the week is not more than 40, the employer and the employee must endeavour to fix the daily working hours so that they are not worked on more than five days of the week. In this connection, the Committee notes the observations made by Business New Zealand (BNZ) in support of the Government's position, indicating that New Zealand's legislative framework is clearly protective of employees' health and safety while recognizing at the same time the changes in the nature of work and work practices since the adoption of the Convention, which makes compliance with its rigid requirements not always possible.

While noting these explanations, the Committee is still of the view that in the absence of concrete rules and of standards clearly spelled out in national laws and regulations or in collective agreements, the protection of the workers' right to weekly rest in the manner foreseen by the Convention cannot be attained. The Convention was indeed adopted in 1921, but this fact alone does not render it irrelevant in today's context. The body of international labour standards has not remained irresponsive to the challenges of globalization and the momentous changes occurring in the world of work. It is worth recalling, in this respect, that a comprehensive review of international labour Conventions and of Recommendations was undertaken between 1995 and 2002 by the ILO Governing Body through its tripartite Working Party on Policy regarding the Revision of Standards. Upon completion, 71 Conventions – including both Conventions Nos 14 and 106 on weekly rest – were designated as being up to date and recommended for active promotion. The Committee therefore considers that the object and purpose of the Convention, as well as its normative content, have not lost any of their relevance and remain as an essential feature of labour legislation as ever before. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to consider all appropriate action in order to bring national law and practice in closer conformity with the letter and the spirit of the Convention.

In addition, the Committee notes the comments made by the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU) in which the NZCTU raises concerns about the impact of fatigue due to excessively long hours of work in the sectors of road transport and mining. According to the NZCTU, driver fatigue is primarily a safety concern but it is linked to an apparent lack of adequate rest. As regards the situation in certain mines, the NZCTU denounces practices of seven days working in a row together with shifts that last for 11 or 12 hours each. Finally, the NZCTU draws attention to draft new legislation which seeks to remove the workers' right to a meal and rest break by either transferring it to another time or replacing it by a monetary compensation. Even though this last point is not directly related to the application of the Convention but illustrates the utmost importance of regular rest periods for the worker's health and well-being, the Committee requests the Government to provide any comments it may wish to make in response to the observations of the NZCTU.

Holidays with Pay (Agriculture) Convention, 1952 (No. 101) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 8 of the Convention. Right to annual holidays with pay. The Committee notes the statement in the Government's last report that section 63(6) of the draft Employment Act would provide that any agreement to relinquish the right to minimum annual holiday would be null and void. The Committee hopes that the Act will be adopted in the near future, bringing section 12(a) of Government Notice No. 888, which the Committee has repeatedly highlighted as being in need of amendment, into conformity with the Convention. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the full text of the revised legislation as soon as it is adopted.

The Committee also takes this opportunity to recall that, on proposal of the Working Party on Policy regarding the Revision of Standards, the ILO Governing Body has decided that Convention No. 101 is outdated and has invited States parties to that Convention to contemplate ratifying the Holidays with Pay Convention (Revised), 1970 (No. 132), which is not deemed to be fully up to date but remains relevant in certain respects (see GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paragraph 12). Acceptance of the obligations of Convention No. 132 in respect of persons employed in agriculture by a State party to Convention No. 101 involves the immediate denunciation of the latter. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decision it may take in this respect.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 1 (Angola, Czech Republic); Convention No. 4 (Lao People's Democratic Republic); Convention No. 14 (Angola, Armenia, Bahamas, Burundi, Costa Rica, Czech Republic, Guinea-Bissau, Islamic Republic of Iran, Ireland, Kyrgyzstan, Solomon Islands); Convention No. 30 (Equatorial Guinea); Convention No. 47 (Ukraine); Convention No. 52 (Burundi, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan); Convention No. 89 (Angola, Burundi, Congo, France: French Polynesia, France: New Caledonia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, South Africa); Convention No. 101 (Burundi, Djibouti, United Republic of Tanzania: Tanganyika); Convention No. 106 (Angola, Costa Rica, Djibouti, France, Guinea-Bissau, Islamic Republic of Iran, Sao Tome and Principe, Ukraine); Convention No. 132 (Czech Republic, Guinea, Ireland); Convention No. 171 (Czech Republic); Convention No. 175 (Guyana).

Algeria

White Lead (Painting) Convention, 1921 (No. 13) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's report. It also notes its indication that white lead has not been used in the manufacture of paint since the adoption of the Order of 4 March 1950. The Committee further notes that, according to the discussions held by the Government with the management of the Association of Paint, Varnish and Adhesive Manufacturers of the National Paint Company and the Paint Company of West Algeria, producers have abandoned the use of this ingredient in the preparation of paint. Furthermore, according to the Government's report, a survey undertaken by the Ministry of Industry confirms that paint manufacturers do not use lead or its compounds.

The Committee notes Decree No. 97-254 of 8 July 1997 determining the conditions and procedures for issuing and withdrawing authorization prior to the manufacture and/or import of consumer products of a toxic nature or presenting a specific risk, as well as the Ministerial Order of 28 December 1997 and its annexes. The Committee notes that item 11 of Annex III specifies that the acceptable dose limit for lead and its compounds is set at 5g/kg for paint.

As indicated by the Government, the texts referred to above apply to the final product and do not make a distinction between the various applications of paint. Indeed, for 40 years, the Committee has been reminding the Government that there are no specific provisions in force giving effect to the Convention. The very serious risks arising from lead compounds are generally recognized and the Committee deplores the fact that the Government has not yet taken the necessary measures to secure the application of the Convention. The Committee is therefore bound to recall the main principles of the Convention: (i) the prohibition of the use of white lead and sulphate of lead in the internal painting of buildings; (ii) the regulation of the use of white lead in artistic painting; (iii) the prohibition of the employment of young men under 18 years of age and all women in any painting work involving the use of white lead; and (iv) the regulation of the use of white lead in painting work for which its use is not prohibited. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide statistics with regard to lead poisoning among working painters, as required by Article 7 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures without delay to bring the national law and practice into conformity with the terms and objectives of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the brief information provided by the Government in its latest report. It notes the Government's indication that the Committee's comments will be taken into account, in so far as possible, in the context of the process of revising the occupational safety and health laws and regulations, and particularly the revision of Act No. 88-07 of 26 January 1988, with a view to bringing them into conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Government also refers in its report to the complexity of the issue of the guarding of machinery, on the one hand, and the fact that most of the machinery used in Algeria is imported, on the other. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that a draft executive decree has been formulated and submitted for inter-ministerial examination. In this respect, the Government indicated previously that this draft text is in a preliminary stage in accordance with the established procedures and that it reflects all the relevant provisions of the Convention, as well as those of the Recommendation. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to adopt the draft executive decree referred to above without delay so as to give effect to the various provisions of the Convention. Nevertheless, and in the absence of more detailed information, the Committee is bound to recall the following points:

Article 2(3) and (4), of the Convention. The Committee recalls that section 8 of Act 88-07 of 26 January 1988 which prohibits the manufacture, exhibition, putting up for sale, sale, import, hire or transfer in any other manner of machinery or parts of machinery that do not correspond to current national and international health and safety standards does not determine the machinery that is considered to be dangerous, nor the parts thereof which are likely to present danger, in accordance with the requirements of Article 2(3) and (4) of the Convention. It recalls that it had noted that the provisions of Executive Decree No. 90-245 of 18 August 1990 applicable to gas pressure machinery and of Executive Decree No. 90-246 of 18 August 1990 applicable to steam pressure machinery, met the requirements of Article 2 of the Convention, but that similar measures of general application to machinery covered by the Convention as a whole were needed. In this regard the Committee wishes to reiterate its previous comments that the objective of Article 2 of the Convention is to guarantee that machines are safe before they reach the user, whereas the provisions of Executive Decree No. 91-05 of 19 January 1991 respecting general safety provisions concern the guarding of machinery once it is in use.

The Committee again draws the attention of the Government to paragraphs 73, et seq. of its General Survey of 1987 on safety and the working environment where it indicates that it is essential for the effective application of Part II of the Convention that national legislation designate those parts of machinery that present danger and require appropriate guarding (paragraph 82) and that, until there has been a determination of the machinery and parts thereof that present danger, the prohibition of the sale, hire, transfer in any other manner and exhibition of machinery contained in Article 2 of the Convention remains ineffective. The Committee recalls its previous reference to paragraph 85 of the 1987 General Survey, op. cit., to indicate that the definition of dangerous machinery and parts thereof should as a minimum cover all those parts enumerated in Article 2 of the Convention.

Article 4. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's reply that the responsibility referred to in paragraph 2 of the Committee's previous comments was provided for in section 37 of Act No. 88-07 of 26 January 1988 which prescribed sanctions in cases of violations of sections 8, 10 and 34 of the same Act. The Committee recalls once again that, while section 8 of Act No. 88-07 prohibits the manufacture, exhibition, putting up for sale, sale, import, hire or transfer in any other manner of machinery that is dangerous, with a view to its use, section 10 of the same Act explicitly lays down the responsibilities only of those who are involved in the manufacture, import, cession and use of the machinery (manufacturer and importer) and not of the vendor, the person letting out on hire or transferring the machinery in any other manner, or the exhibitor, and their respective agents. The Committee once again refers to paragraphs 164–175 of its 1987 General Survey, op. cit., in which it observes that the general prohibition from manufacturing, selling, hiring or transferring in any other manner machinery which is dangerous is inadequate if it is not accompanied by a provision explicitly requiring these provisions to be applied to the manufacturer, vendor, the person letting out on hire or transferring the machinery in any other manner or their respective agents, in order to comply with Article 4 of the Convention which expressly establishes the responsibility of these persons, and to avoid any ambiguity. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the responsibility of the categories of persons mentioned in Article 4 is explicitly established in national legislation and that sanctions are applicable in the event of the violation of these provisions.

Articles 6 and 7. Further to its previous comments concerning the responsibility of the employer, the Committee notes the Government's indication that this responsibility is established in section 38 of Act No. 88-07. The Committee notes that the provisions of Act No. 88-07, including section 38, do not fully respond to its previous comments that the use of machinery any parts of which, including the point of operation, is without appropriate guards, is not explicitly prohibited in law. It reiterates its previous indications that sections 40–43 of Executive Decree No. 91-05, while requiring the dangerous parts of machines to be guarded, do not explicitly prohibit the use of machinery, the dangerous parts of which are not guarded. The Committee refers once again to paragraph 180 of its 1987 General Survey, op. cit., in which it indicates that Article 6(1), of the Convention is formulated as a general prohibition to be included in the national legislation and that, in order to observe this provision, it is not enough to require the guarding of machines while in use, without at the same time requiring that the use of machines without appropriate guards is forbidden. The Committee wishes to reiterate the need for the legislation to establish clearly that the obligation to ensure compliance with this prohibition rests on the employer, in accordance with Article 7 of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will do its utmost to take the necessary measures in the near future.

Hygiene (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1964 (No. 120) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 14 of the Convention. Suitable seats for workers. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that labour legislation is currently being reviewed, and that the obligation to provide suitable and sufficient seats for workers has been taken into consideration in the provisions of the future Labour Code. The Committee once again requests the Government to adopt, as soon as possible, appropriate measures in law and practice to ensure that all workers covered by the Convention have sufficient and suitable seats, and the possibility of using them, and to keep the Office informed of any progress achieved in this respect.

Article 18. Protection against noise and vibrations. The Committee notes the reference by the Government to sections 15 and 16 of Executive Decree No. 91/05 of 19 January 1991 which states the obligations of employers to reduce the impact of noise on workers' health, and where this is not possible, to provide such workers with personal protective equipment. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government adopt, as soon as possible, appropriate measures in law and practice to give effect to the provisions of this Article with regards to vibrations, and to keep the Office informed of any progress achieved in this respect.

Part IV of the report form. Application in practice. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain information on this matter. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, for example by supplying extracts from inspection reports and, where such information exists, the number of workers covered by the legislation; the number and nature of the contraventions reported; and the number, nature and cause of accidents reported.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes that the information provided by the Government in its latest report contains no new information regarding progress in relation to the draft legislation reportedly under discussion with a view to giving effect to the Convention. The Committee hopes that the Government's next report will contain full information on the matters raised in its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 11(1) of the Convention. Prohibition to use machinery without the guards provide being in position. The Committee notes that, in addition to referring to general provisions in sections 213 and 215 of the Labour Code concerning the powers of the executive authorities in the labour protection field and the responsibilities of the owner of an enterprise and the employer in relation to occupational safety and health, the Government indicates that regulations were being developed in order to give effect to this provision of the Convention. The Committee hopes that the draft legislation giving effect to this provision of the Convention will be adopted in a near future and requests the Government to transmit copies thereof once it has been adopted.

Article 12. Protection of the rights of workers under national social security or social insurance legislation. The Committee notes the Government's additional information that a "Life Requiring Compulsory Personal Insurance Against Industrial Accidents" has been elaborated in accordance with paragraph 2.6 of the "State Programme for the Implementation of the Employment Strategy of the Republic of Azerbaijan (2007–10)" approved by Decree No. 167 of 15 May 2007 as well as section 211 of the Labour Code. It also notes that a draft Law on "Compulsory Personal Insurance of Employees against Industrial Accidents and Occupational Diseases" is being elaborated. The Committee hopes that the draft law will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to transmit copies of relevant legislation once it has been adopted.

Article 13. Application to self-employed workers of the obligations of employers and workers. The Committee notes the information provided concerning the ongoing revision of the Labour Code and the declared intent of the Government to introduce amendments and additions thereto regulating the responsibilities, inter alia, of independent employees. The Committee hopes that these amendments will be adopted in a near future and requests the Government to transmit copies thereof once they have been adopted.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide a general appreciation of the manner in which the Convention is applied, including, for instance, extracts from labour inspection services reports, statistics on the number of workers covered by the legislation, the number and nature of contraventions reported, as well as any other information allowing the Committee to assess more accurately how the Convention is applied in practice in the country.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Barbados

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report and the reply to its direct request. It notes that, despite comments it has reiterated for several years, the Government's report contains no new information and that, according to the Government's replies, no follow-up has been given to the Committee's comments. The Committee also notes that the Government's report refers to observations submitted by the "Barbados Workers' Union" which requests the Government to reactivate the Advisory Committee on Radiation Protection; to establish legislative measures to afford protection to workers exposed to ionizing radiation, particularly by fixing the maximum admissible radiation exposure doses; to take appropriate measures to prescribe a compulsory medical examination – not merely optional – for workers exposed to radiation; and to provide alternative employment allowing them to maintain their income for persons who can no longer work in zones exposed to radiation. In view of the above, the Committee is bound to reiterate its observations on the following matters.

Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention. The Committee noted the Government's indication that the regulatory body to monitor the exposure of workers to ionizing radiation has not been established yet. It further notes that the ACRP has not yet given directives regarding protective measures to be taken against ionizing radiation, or time limits for the application of such measures. Referring to its introductory comments, the Committee urges the Government to take the appropriate steps to make the ACRP operational and thus creating the framework for the monitoring of workers' exposure to ionizing radiation and the issuing of directives regarding protective measures, which falls, according to the Committee's understanding, in the area of competence of the ACRP.

Articles 3 and 6. With regard to the fixing of maximum permissible doses of ionizing radiation, necessary in order to comply with the requirement to ensure effective protection of workers in the light of "knowledge available at the time" and in the light of "current knowledge", the Committee noted from the Government's report that the radiation protection officer, being a hospital physician and the chairperson of the ACRP, is well aware of the recent revised dose limits of the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP). In this regard, the Government indicates that reports on the doses of ionizing radiation received by workers show that the limits recommended by the ICRP were not exceeded. However, in particular cases recorded for cardiac catheterization doctors and one radiologist, the dose of radiation absorbed was beyond this limitation, which subsequently has been brought to their attention. The Committee, noting that the observance of the dose limits for ionizing radiation, as recommended by the ICRP in 1990, do not seem to set a problem to the Government in practice, requests therefore the Government to reconsider the possibility to fix maximum permissible dose levels of ionizing radiations with legally binding effect in order to guarantee by means of enforceable provisions an effective protection of workers exposed to ionizing radiations, in accordance with Articles 3 and 6 of the Convention.

Article 5. With regard to the installation of a computerized system, type "Selectron HDR", in 1990 which reduces the number of workers dealing with radiation sources to an extent that the probable exposure to radiation would turn to zero, the Committee noted the Government's indication that this system is used in the treatment of cancer of the uterine cervix and related problems. However, its use in other medical disciplines has to be planned since logistical problems regarding the necessary equipment and the movement of staff working in related disciplines need to be resolved. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary action to enable the use of the "Selectron HDR" system in all medical disciplines where appropriate in order to restrict the exposure of workers to the lowest practicable level and to avoid any unnecessary exposure of workers. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on experiences already collected in applying the system in the field of the treatment of cancer of the uterine cervix.

Article 7. The Committee noted the Government's indication that no legislation is in place to set a lower limit on the age of radiation workers. However, since it is a very fundamental issue, it is hoped that it will appear in the amended Radiation Act. In the meantime it belongs to the radiation protection officer's tasks to ensure that adequate structural shielding in place is provided, such as area monitoring, warning lights or alarm where appropriate and that only qualified workers are employed to operate machines producing radiation. In this respect, the Committee notes again the Government's indication provided with its 1998 report to the effect that the minimum age for engagement in radiation work was 16. Recalling the provision of Article 7(2) of the Convention which provides for a minimum age of 16 to become engaged in work involving ionizing radiation, the Committee requests again the Government to specify the legal basis providing for the prohibition to engage young persons under 16 years of age in work involving exposure to ionizing radiations. Moreover, the Committee recalls the provision of Article 7(1)(a) of the Convention, providing for the fixation of appropriate levels of exposure to ionizing radiations for workers who are directly engaged in radiation work and are aged 18 and over. The Committee therefore asks the Government once again to indicate the measures taken or contemplated in order to fix appropriate levels for this group of workers. Since the Committee understands from the Government's indication that an amendment of the Radiation Act is intended, it would invite the Government to consider the possibility to incorporate such appropriate levels in the amendment of the above Act.

Article 8. With regard to dose limits to be set for workers not directly engaged in radiation work, the Government indicated that the reports on radiation received by these workers show either negligible or zero doses. While the Committee noted this information with interest, it nevertheless wishes to point out that Article 8 of the Convention obliges every ratifying State to fix appropriate levels of exposure to ionizing radiations for this category of workers, in accordance with Article 6, read together with Article 3(1) of the Convention, that is in the light of knowledge available at the time. In this respect, the Committee would draw the Government's attention to paragraph 14 of its 1992 general observation under the Convention, as well as to section 5.4.5

of the ILO code of practice on the radiation protection of workers (ionizing radiations) of 1986, explaining that the employer has the same obligations towards workers not engaged in radiation work, as far as restricting their radiation exposure is concerned, as if they were members of the public with respect to sources of practices under the employer's control. The annual dose limits should be those applied to individual members of the public. According to the 1990 ICRP Recommendations, the annual dose limit for members of the public is 1 mSv. The Committee therefore asks the Government to indicate the measures envisaged to fulfil its obligation under this Article of the Convention.

Article 9. The Committee noted the information supplied with the Government's report on the functions of the alarm systems used in those units at hospitals where radiation treatment is carried out. It also notes the existence of appropriate warning signs fixed on the doors to indicate the presence of hazards arising from ionizing radiations. However, with regard to adequate instructions of workers directly engaged in radiation work, the Committee calls again the Government's attention to section 2.4 of the 1986 ILO code of practice on the radiation protection of workers (ionizing radiations) which contains general principles for informing, instructing and training of workers. The Government is requested to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that workers are adequately instructed in the precautions to be taken for their protection in conformity with Article 9(2) of the Convention.

Article 11. The Committee noted the Government's indication to the effect that the workers designated to perform radiation work are presently monitored by TLD radiation monitoring badges supplied by the universities of the West Indies. The Committee requests the Government to explain more in detail the characteristics of this specific monitoring and the manner in which it is carried out.

Article 12. With regard to appropriate medical examination of workers directly engaged in radiation work, the Government indicated that a medical examination is still a prerequisite for an appointment to the public service. In addition, all workers assuming duties at the hospital are tested subsequently after they have taken up their work on a voluntary basis. In this respect, the Committee wishes to underline that subsequent medical examinations of workers directly engaged in radiation work have to be carried out on a mandatory basis and thus cannot be left to the discretion of the workers concerned whether or not they want to undergo a medical examination once they have been employed. The Government is accordingly requested to indicate the measures taken or envisaged ensuring that all workers engaged in radiation work are obliged to undergo appropriate medical examinations, not only prior to their employment, but also subsequently at appropriate intervals.

Article 13. With regard to the measures to be taken in emergency situations, the Government indicated that no such measures are in place yet, but that it is hoped that the development of emergency plans will be one of the tasks of the proposed regulatory body. In this respect, the Committee states that the ACRP is responsible, inter alia, to prepare a detailed radiation protection programme for Barbados (point (3) of the Advisory Committee on Radiation Protection – Terms of reference). The Committee thinks that the preparation of measures to be taken in emergency situations would form an integral part of its task. The Committee therefore hopes that the ACRP will resume its functions in the near future and that it will, within the framework of its duties, elaborate plans for emergency situations. To this effect, the Committee invites the Government again to refer to its 1987 general observation under the Convention as well as to paragraphs 16–27 of its 1992 general observation under the Convention concerning occupational exposure during and after an emergency which intend to give guidance regarding the measures to be taken in emergency situations. The Committee hopes that the Government will report on any progress made in this respect.

Article 14. In absence of any additional information regarding alternative employment of workers with premature accumulation of their lifetime dose, the Committee requests once again the Government to indicate whether and, if so, under which provisions, it is ensured that a worker who is medically advised to avoid exposure to ionizing radiations is not assigned to work involving such exposure, or is transferred to another suitable employment if he or she has already been assigned.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1992)

Articles 4, 7 and 15 of the Convention. Formulation, implementation and revision of national policy. Revision at appropriate intervals with regard to occupational safety and health in specific sectors. Coordination between various authorities. Communication from the Union of Teachers, Federal District (SINPRO–DF). The Committee notes the communication sent by SINPRO–DF and the reply from the Government received in June 2010. The Committee also notes that the Government's report was received too late to be examined at the present meeting, and for that reason the Committee will merely examine the communication and its reply and will examine the Government's report in 2011. The Committee notes that, according to SINPRO–DF, there is no system of health protection for the public sector and in particular the teaching sector, nor is there any inspection of workplaces, periodic examinations, risk evaluation, or statistics having a minimum of reliability to enable the adoption of effective policies. The trade union maintains that occupational safety and health standards in the public sector, particularly education, are limited to leave of absence for sickness and occupational rehabilitation, i.e. when the person concerned is already ill, but that there are no preventive measures. The union refers to various existing pathologies, osteo-muscular disorders, respiratory ailments and burnout, inter alia, and considers that these pathologies are due to the high level of stress which is a feature of this occupation, the excessively heavy workload, its repetitive character, and the gulf that exists between planners of policy and those implementing it. SINPRO–DF states that the situation is so serious that it has requested an investigation which is attached to its communication, from the Laboratory for Psychodynamics and Labour Clinic of the University of Brasilia. This study emphasizes the need for prevention and dialogue with the teachers. The trade union calls for an occupational safety and health policy to be formulated for the teaching sector, with the full participation of the workers.

The Government's reply. Firstly, the Government indicates that the (national) Federal Government has adopted initiatives aimed at the application of standards to all federal public servants but that it has no knowledge of such initiatives with respect to the Government of the Federal District. It also indicates that the supervisory role of the Ministry of Labour does not extend to inspection of occupational safety and health conditions within public entities. Secondly, the Government sends a note from the Under-Secretariat for the Management of Education Professionals of the Government of the Federal District dated 13 April 2010, which indicates that the Occupational Safety and Health Council is established under section 5 of Decree No. 29.021/2008 and that its powers include the formulation of an occupational safety and health policy, and the monitoring and implementation thereof. It is unclear from the information supplied whether the representative workers' and employers' organizations participate in the aforementioned Council.

It is the Committee's understanding that the Government makes a distinction between the application of national policy in sectors within its direct jurisdiction and in the Federal District and other federal entities. The Committee also understands, according to the information supplied, that the Federal District will formulate a specific safety and health policy for the Federal District, as suggested by the aforementioned Decree. The Committee recalls that it already indicated to the Government in previous comments that it should adopt appropriate measures to ensure the application of ratified Conventions throughout its territory, and that the Convention required a coherent national policy and coordination in order to achieve this. For that reason the Committee indicates that occupational safety and health policies intended for different sectors or territorial entities must form part of a national policy which establishes a basis applicable to all workers covered by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to seek solutions to the situation described by SINPRO-DF in the context of Articles 4, 7 and 15 of the Convention, bearing in mind that the national policy referred to by these Articles prescribes consultation with the social partners and its formulation, practical application and periodic revision with the fundamental objective of prevention, and requests it to supply detailed information in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on any measure adopted to achieve coherence and coordination of national policy as required by the Convention.

The Committee is examining other aspects of the communication from SINPRO-DF in its comments on the application of the Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161). In addition, as regards the examination of a communication from the Wood, Civil Engineering and Furniture Industry Workers' Union of Altamira and Region (SINTICMA), it refers to its comments on the Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167).

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 1990)

Article 5 of the Convention. Occupational health services with functions that are adequate and appropriate to the occupational risks of the undertaking. Article 8. Cooperation and participation on an equitable basis of the employer, the workers and their representatives. Communication from the Union of Teachers, Federal District (SINPRO-DF). The Committee refers to its comment on the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), in which it noted, inter alia, that SINPRO-DF affirms that the situation regarding the health of the teachers whom it represents is extremely serious and that occupational safety and health standards for the public sector, particularly education, are limited to leave of absence for illness and occupational rehabilitation, that is when the person concerned is already ill, but it maintains that there are no preventive measures. The Committee notes that, according to SINPRO-DF, in addition to the lack of preventive measures, the medical services repeatedly refuse to grant leave of absence for illness without even examining the patients concerned and it is extremely rare that they recognize the occupational origin of pathologies and they decide on early invalidity pensions to the clear detriment of the teachers in terms of the salaries they earn. The union also indicates that the period of sickness does not count towards accumulated service, which has an impact on holiday time and career progression, and that ultimately sick workers are penalized. SINPRO-DF indicates that the number of judicial proceedings relating to this subject already exceeds 1,000. It emphasizes the need for health services to identify and evaluate risks to health, monitor environmental factors at work, provide advice with regard to the planning and organization of work, promote improvements, and participate in analysis of occupational accidents. The union also calls for the application of Article 8 with regard to the worker participation provided for in this Article. The Committee notes that the Government has sent a report from the Under-Secretariat for the Management of Educational Professionals of the Government of the Federal District, which indicates that provision was made under Decree No. 29.021/2008 for a medical examination for admission to employment, a periodic medical examination for staff working in school canteens, that a programme for the periodic examination of all public employees is being drawn up, which was due to be implemented from May 2010 onwards, and that another programme – the “Better Health” programme – has been drawn up, which aimed at improving the health of employees and reducing absenteeism. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information on preventive measures of the health services or on the participation of teachers in the application of Article 8 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the full application of Articles 5 and 8 of the Convention in the sector concerned and to supply detailed information in this respect.

As the Government's report was received too late to be examined at the present meeting, the Committee will examine it in detail at its next meeting, together with the reply to the present comments.

Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167) (ratification: 2006)

Communication from the Union of Workers in the Lumber, Civil Construction and Furniture Industries of Altamira and the Surrounding Region (SINTICMA). The Committee notes that the Government's report, received on 2 November 2010, arrived too late to be examined at the current session. The Committee also notes the communication by SINTICMA, sent to the Government on 12 April 2010. The Committee notes that the Government has not sent its comments concerning this communication. The Committee also notes that, according to SINTICMA, enterprises operating in the region do not comply with the labour legislation concerning the documentation of workers, that the working conditions on the sites are subhuman and that the workers enjoy none of the rights guaranteed by the legislation. It maintains that the enterprises enslave workers in conditions of urban slavery, that many of them suffer accidents at work and that no inspections are carried out in these towns. It indicates that there is one Ministry of Labour and Employment assistance post for 40,000 workers seeking help who are from ten towns in the trans-Amazonian region. It indicates that the labour inspectorate is unable to monitor these enterprises because the work is temporary and it only visits the region every two or three years. It maintains that this situation also exists in the lumber industry, which has even more difficulties than the civil construction sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the application of the Convention to workers in the informal economy, including the workers in the region mentioned in the communication. Noting that the Government's report does not reply fully to the questions raised in its previous comments concerning the application of the Convention to the informal sector, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in reply to those comments, in particular on the manner in which those workers are taken into account for the purposes of: (a) developing policies for the construction sector; (b) recording occupational accidents; and (c) training. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the communication submitted by SINTICMA so that the Committee can examine them at its next meeting, together with the Government's report.

Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176) (ratification: 2006)

The Committee notes the first and second reports of the Government and notes with interest the adoption of Regulatory Standard No. 22 (NR 22), as amended on 1 October 2007, concerning occupational safety and health in mining, which gives effect to the Convention and was drawn up through a tripartite process. NR 22 regulates, inter alia, fundamental aspects relating to the Convention, such as the participation of workers through the Internal Commission for the Prevention of Accidents in Mining (CIPAMIN), established by section 22.36, and the right of workers to remove themselves from any sector of the mine when there are reasonable grounds to think that the situation poses a serious danger to their safety or health, as established by Article 13(1)(a) of the Convention.

Bulgaria

Hygiene (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1964 (No. 120) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report and particularly on the inspections carried out between 2002 and 2004 by the Executive Agency General Labour Inspection.

Article 6(2) of the Convention. Establishment of a system of sufficiently dissuasive penalties. The Committee notes the reply by the Government to its previous direct request according to which it is taking into account the comments made by the Committee concerning the need to establish sufficiently dissuasive penalties for violations of the legislation respecting occupational safety and health. The Committee notes that the highest number of violations concern occupational safety and health standards (75 per cent of all violations reported). Despite the very high number of contraventions, the Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on adequate penalties to ensure the proper application of the legislation. In this respect, the Committee recalls that measures can only be effective when the penalties involved are sufficiently dissuasive, for example, by imposing very heavy fines on those responsible for violations. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures for the establishment of a system of penalties which will have a preventive, dissuasive and effective impact against violations of the legislation giving effect to the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Burkina Faso

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information in the Government's reports submitted in 2007, including the reference to various legislative and regulatory texts.

Article 2 of the Convention. Implementation and periodical review of a coherent national policy on occupational health services. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report, according to which a national occupational safety and health policy is still being prepared. This involves a framework document on national policy in this area, accompanied by a national action plan. The measures concerning the implementation and periodical review of the policy are set forth therein. The Committee hopes that this document will be adopted in the very near future and asks the Government to provide a copy thereof once it has been adopted.

Article 6. Provision for the establishment of occupational health services. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that some progress has been made in this respect, in that the action plan accompanying the framework document on national policy relating to occupational health services will cover not only the formal sector, but also the informal sector and the agricultural sector. The Committee notes, however, that the Government has not provided any clarification as to the points raised in its previous comments. It is therefore obliged to reiterate its request concerning the following points: Article 3, Establishment of health services; Article 5(a), Identification of risks from health hazards in the workplace; Article 5(b), Surveillance of the workplace; Article 5(c), Role of health services in the planning and organization of work; Article 5(d), Role of the health services in testing and evaluating new equipment; Article 5(e) and (i), Role of the health services in ergonomics; Article 5(h), Role of the health services in vocational rehabilitation; Article 5(j), Emergencies and first aid; Article 9(2), Cooperation of the health services with other services in the enterprise; Article 10, Independence of health service personnel; Article 11, Qualifications of health service personnel; Article 15, Notification to health services of absences from work for health reasons. The Committee asks the Government to take these points into consideration within the context of the preparation of the new national policy, so as to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention.

Part VI of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government, according to which 162,372 workers in the private sector and 70,308 workers in the public sector are covered by the legislation. Furthermore, the Committee invites the Government to request, at the appropriate time, ILO assistance with the view to the effective application of the Convention. The Committee hopes that such technical assistance can be carried out and asks the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this respect with the relevant ILO bodies. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information concerning the practical application of the Convention in order to follow the progress made.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Burundi

Safety Provisions (Building) Convention, 1937 (No. 62) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report and the statistical data. It notes with regret that, despite the comments it has been making for a number of years, the legislation to apply the Convention has not been changed.

Article 4 of the Convention. Inspection system. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes from the information provided that the Government will explore possibilities for training labour inspectors to monitor safety prescriptions in the building sector. The Government nevertheless points out in its report that managers in charge of occupational risk prevention at the National Social Security Institute (INSS) are qualified to carry out inspections in the building sector and that they give useful instructions to the employers concerned. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the practical application of this provision of the Convention.

Articles 6–15. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, the legislation governing occupational safety has not been repealed and that Rwanda-Urundi (ORU) Ordinance No. 21/94 of 24 July 1953 establishing the legal framework for occupational safety in the building industry has not been revoked, and that the Government is envisaging its re-dissemination. The Committee requests the Government to provide clarification on the legislation in force to enable it to assess how the Convention is applied in Burundi.

Part V of the report form. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the statistical data in the Government's report showing trends in the number of active workers and the numbers receiving occupational risk benefits between 2000 and 2004, and the distribution of enterprises according to size and branch of economic activity at 31 December 2004. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information in its next report regarding trends in accidents in the building industry, together with any other relevant information allowing the Committee to assess how the safety standards established in the Convention are applied in practice.

Revision of the Convention. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167), which revises Convention No. 62 of 1937 and could well be better adapted to the current situation in the building sector. It again points out that the ILO Governing Body invited States parties to Convention No. 62 to envisage the ratification of Convention No. 167, which entails, ipso jure, immediate denunciation of Convention No. 62 (GB.268/8/2). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any action taken on this suggestion.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Cameroon

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1989)

The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government in its brief report indicating that Order No. 051 on diseases caused by exposure to asbestos was adopted on 22 September 2009. The Committee also notes that the Government has yet again not responded to its previous comments or to the communications by the General of Confederation of Labour–Liberty of Cameroon (CGT–Liberté), transmitted to the Government on 8 November 2005. The Committee further notes that the Government has reiterated its interest for technical assistance from the ILO to ensure application of this Convention. Noting that effect does not appear to have been given to the majority of the provisions of the Convention, the Committee invites the Government to make a formal request to the Office for technical assistance in the development of legislation to give effect to the provisions of this Convention, and regarding the reporting obligations associated with ratification of ILO Conventions. The Committee also asks the Government to provide a detailed report on the application of each provision of this Convention, in law and in practice, and to include a copy of the abovementioned Order No. 051.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes that the CGT–Liberté has indicated that, while asbestos is not produced in the country, it has been used to create firewalls in certain buildings and there is a general lack of awareness of the dangers related thereto. The Committee asks the Government to give a general appreciation of the manner in which the Convention is applied in the country, and to attach extracts from inspection reports and, where such statistics exist, information on the number of workers covered by the legislation, the number and nature of the contraventions reported, and the number, nature and cause of accidents and occupational diseases reported.

[The Government is asked to report in detail in 2012.]

Canada

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1988)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its latest report, including information concerning the application of the Convention, in law and practice, in a number of the provinces and territories. It also notes the statistical information on the application of the Convention, which has been dealt with in a request addressed directly to the Government. As regards legislative and other measures undertaken, the Committee welcomes the information indicating that representatives of the Canadian employers' and workers' organizations are participating in the Federal Regulatory Review Committee on the revision of Part X (Hazardous Substances) Regulations, and that this Committee has proposed lowering the occupational exposure limit on asbestos from 1 to 0.1 fibre/cubic centimetre, as well as new provisions that would specify requirements for an asbestos management programme for asbestos removal from any building/facility in federal jurisdiction. The Committee notes that following extensive consultation with industry, labour and technical experts, comprehensive new Workplace Safety and Health Regulations, which include new requirements to address asbestos hazards, took effect on 1 February 2007 in Manitoba. The Committee also notes the revised Occupational Health and Safety Regulations of 1 September 2009 in Newfoundland and Labrador; and the replacement in Ontario of Regulation 837 Respecting Asbestos by the O. Reg. 490/09 Designated Substances (effective 1 July 2010), which maintains worker protections while easing compliance for employers. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the legislative measures undertaken concerning the Convention.

The Committee also notes the comments by the Canadian Labour Congress (CLC), concerning the application of the Convention which were transmitted to the Office together with the Government's report, but which were not specifically addressed by the Government in its report.

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Measures to be taken for the prevention and control of health hazards due to occupational exposure to asbestos; periodical review in the light of technical progress and scientific knowledge. Article 10(b). Total or partial prohibition of the use of asbestos. The Committee notes that according to the CLC there is a compelling body of evidence showing that the most efficient way to eliminate asbestos-related disease is to stop producing and using it. The CLC indicates that the views of the ILO, the World Health Organization (WHO) and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) in this matter must be respected as the main legitimate source of information. With reference to the Ninth International Conference on Occupational Respiratory Diseases in Kyoto in 1997 (Kyoto Conference) the CLC states that chrysotile is contaminated by tremolite and other amphibole group fibres and that these cannot be separated which is reason enough to justify a prohibition of all forms of asbestos. The Committee also notes that the CLC states that, in their view, the Canadian Government should introduce a total prohibition of the use of asbestos or products containing asbestos in work processes within the country, and for the phasing out of asbestos exports. The CLC refers to the "National Programme for the Elimination of Asbestos-Related Diseases" (NPEAD) – a programme specifically designed by the ILO and WHO for countries that use chrysotile asbestos but wish to eliminate asbestos-related diseases – and states that NPEAD is designed as a national institutional framework for strategic preventative strategies for the regional to the enterprise levels to take account of health, economic and social aspects of the problem, including indirect costs such as loss of potential income and the number of jobs offset by any changes. The CLC also indicates that if planned properly, job losses can be effectively offset by developing a positive employment transition process that is linked to the prohibition of asbestos and the promotion of alternative technology. The CLC also refers to the ILO Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), ratified by Canada, and its accompanying Recommendation, together with the ILO Resolution on Social and Economic Consequences of Preventive Action at the 59th Session (June 1974) of the International Labour Conference, as important guideposts for establishing and implementing such an employment policy. The CLC also notes that NPEAD envisages the replacement of asbestos by other materials or products or the use of alternative technology. In the light of these comments by the CLC, the Committee requests the Government to provide further detailed and up-to-date information on measures taken to give effect to Articles 3(1) and (2) and 10(b), taking into account, in particular, technological progress and advances in scientific knowledge.

Articles 4 and 22(1). Consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers. The Committee notes the allegations by the CLC that, to their knowledge, consultations as required under these provisions of the Convention have not taken place in the recent past. The Committee asks the Government to respond to this comment by the CLC and to provide further information on measures taken to ensure a full application of these provisions of the Convention.

Article 17(2). Protection of workers and limiting the release of asbestos dust in the context of demolition work. The Committee notes that in its comments the CLC also refers to the WHO International Programme on Chemical Safety (IPCS), which in their view makes it clear that asbestos should not be used in construction materials because of the impossibility of protecting construction workers, their families and building occupants. The Committee requests the Government respond to the comment by the CLC and to provide further information on the measures taken to ensure a full application of this provision of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Central African Republic

White Lead (Painting) Convention, 1921 (No. 13) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government confines itself to reiterating, as it has done since 1992, that no statistics are available on morbidity and mortality resulting from lead poisoning among working painters.

It is therefore bound once again to express its hope that the Government will take the necessary measures so that the Central African Social Security Office (OCSS), which is responsible for compiling the necessary statistics, takes the necessary action to compile and provide the statistics in question, in accordance with Article 7 of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Safety Provisions (Building) Convention, 1937 (No. 62) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information that the Government has taken due note of the comments of the Committee and that the necessary measures will be taken within the overall revision of the legislative and regulatory texts on labour envisaged by the Department of Labour and that the technical assistance of the ILO's multidisciplinary advisory team for Central Africa will be requested. The Committee trusts this overall revision will be accomplished soon and that the Government will not fail to address the Committee's previous comments as set out below.

Introduction into national legislation of the standards set forth in ratified Conventions. In its previous comments, the Committee drew the Government's attention to the need to adopt measures in laws and regulations to give effect to the provisions contained in the Convention even if, as stated by the Government, under the Constitution of 4 January 1995, international agreements, treaties and Conventions that are duly ratified by the Republic have the force of national law.

The Committee recalls that the incorporation into national legislation of the provisions of ratified Conventions, from the mere fact of their ratification, is not sufficient to give effect to them at the national level in all cases in which the provisions are not self-executing, that is where they require special measures for their application, which is the case, at least, for Part I of the Convention. Furthermore, special measures are also needed to establish penalties for non-observance of the standards set forth in the instrument, which is the case of Article 3(c) of the Convention.

The Committee once again draws the Government's attention to Article 1(1), of the Convention, in accordance with which each Member which ratifies the Convention undertakes to maintain in force, laws or regulations which ensure the application of the General Rules set forth in Parts II–IV of the Convention. In this respect, the Committee recalls that draft texts were prepared following the direct contacts which took place in 1978 and 1980 with the responsible government services. The Committee is bound to express the firm hope that the relevant texts will be adopted in the very near future.

Statistics of accidents (Article 6). For a number of years, the Committee has been noting the absence, in the Government's reports, of statistical information relating to the number and classification of accidents occurring in the building sector. In its last report, the Government states that the Labour Department does not currently have at its disposal reliable statistics in this field.

The Committee recalls that, under this Article of the Convention, each Member which ratifies the Convention undertakes to communicate the latest statistical information indicating the number and classification of accidents in an enterprise or sector. The Committee once again hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to indicate the measures which have been taken to give effect to the Convention on this point and to supply the appropriate statistical information.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Further to the comments which it has made for many years on the application of Article 2(3) and (4) of the Convention, the Committee notes that the implementing regulations provided for in section 37(3) of General Order No. 3758 of 25 November 1954, with a view to designating machinery or dangerous parts thereof, have still not been adopted. The Committee again notes the Government's statement that the Bill is being prepared by the competent authorities.

The Committee hopes that the future implementing regulations will also give effect to Article 10(1) of the Convention establishing the obligation of an employer to take steps to bring national laws or regulations relating to the guarding of machinery and to the dangers arising and the precautions to be observed in the use of the machinery to the notice of workers, as well as to Article 11 which provides that workers shall not use machinery without the guards provided being in position, nor make such guards inoperative, while guaranteeing that, irrespective of the circumstances, workers shall not be required to use machinery when the guards provided are not in position or when they are inoperative.

The Committee recalls that, should it consider it to be appropriate, the Government may seek the assistance of the International Labour Office in the preparation of this text.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 1999)

Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention. Formulation, implementation and periodic review, in consultation with the social partners, of a coherent national policy on occupational health services. Consultation with organizations of employers and workers on the measures required to give effect to the Convention. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government in its report that, in the context of the formulation and implementation of occupational health services, an Occupational Accident and Occupational Disease Information System (SIATEP) was implemented and the Occupational Safety Institute was established under Act No. 20255 of 11 March 2008. Furthermore, as a result of the National Agreement on the Prevention of Occupational and Fatal Accidents of 2005, Act No. 20123 on subcontracting was adopted in October 2006, which provides that, without prejudice to the responsibilities of the main, contracting or subcontracting enterprise, the main enterprise shall adopt measures to protect the life and health of all the workers, regardless of their status. The main enterprise shall also ensure the establishment and operation of a joint safety and health committee and a risk prevention department. Furthermore, the Act establishes the employer's obligation to notify the Labour Inspectorate and the Ministerial Regional Department (SEREMI) immediately of any serious and fatal accidents and to take other measures. The Ministry of Labour is also obliged to produce quarterly reports on fatal occupational accidents. Through the SIATEP, the administrative bodies will be obliged to keep a database containing information on occupational accidents and occupational diseases. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on its national policy on occupational health services and the consultations held with the social partners on the measures that need to be taken to give effect to the Convention.

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2007)

The Committee notes the Government's detailed reports concerning the application of the Convention in the country, and welcomes the Government's commitment to production safety. The Committee notes the Government's reply to the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) communication dated 9 September 2009. The Committee also notes the ITUC's communication dated 1 September 2010, transmitted to the Government on 15 September 2010, which provides information on the general application of the Convention in practice, and more specifically on the enforcement capacity of the administrative bodies, including the availability of adequate penalties and a system of inspection; the application of the Convention to migrant workers and family-run workshops; the need for regular reporting and prompt notification systems; the application of occupational safety and health (OSH) laws and regulations by the courts; and the continued increase in the number of reported cases of occupational disease. The Committee invites the Government to respond to the most recent ITUC communication in its next report and asks the Government to provide further information on the following points, with reference to the 2009 comments by the ITUC.

Articles 5(c), 10 and 14 of the Convention. Awareness raising, guidance and training on occupational safety and health. The Committee notes the information provided on how effect is given to these provisions of the Convention, and the efforts made, in law and in practice, to ensure that not only workers but also persons in management are adequately trained in matters related to OSH, taking into account the need for continuous training on the introduction of new techniques, new technology, new material or new equipment. The Committee also notes the efforts by the work safety regulatory and supervisory units at various levels to provide employers and workers with information on OSH legislation and policies, through multiple means of advocacy, such as newspapers, magazines, radio and television, video and audio materials, and special campaigns in the form of "Safety and Law" television programmes, "Safety on the Spot" columns, "National Safe Production Month" and "Work Safety Long March", and online access to OSH laws, regulations and policies. It also notes the information that training and education in the area of OSH is always included as a key component in higher technical, medical and professional education. The Committee also notes that the ITUC considers that further efforts are needed in the area of enforcement of OSH laws and regulations in the country and calls on the Government to undertake a widespread public educational campaign on OSH legislation and associated rights and duties. The ITUC also indicates that there is a need to disseminate information, in an effective manner, on how to obtain access to redress in the event of non-compliance. The Committee notes the Government's response which indicates the continued efforts to publicize and educate the public on production safety. With reference to the foregoing and the 2009 comments by the ITUC, the Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on measures taken to increase the awareness and knowledge of OSH, not only among the workers and employers directly concerned, but also among the general public.

Article 5(e). Protection of workers and their representatives from disciplinary measures. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided information on the application of Article 5(e). The Committee also notes that the ITUC refers to numerous cases in which workers and their representatives have been harassed, imprisoned or have faced other repercussions following attempts to obtain OSH-related compensation and rights. With reference to the 2009 comments by the ITUC, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the protection of workers and their representatives from disciplinary measures as a result of action properly taken by them in accordance with the requirements under Article 5(e).

Article 9. Adequate and appropriate system of inspection and provision of adequate penalties for violations. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government which indicates that the State Administration of Work Safety (SAWS) is responsible for the supervision and inspection of OSH at workplaces in industrial, mining and commercial sectors (except workplaces in coal mines which are under the responsibility of the State Administration of Coal Mine Safety). The Committee welcomes the information that the Government is in the process of regularizing the enforcement of the administrative law on production safety in order to encourage law enforcement personnel to correctly apply production safety laws, administrative regulations and departmental rules, and to narrow discretionary powers to prevent and reduce corruption. The Committee also notes that the ITUC refers to evidence of continuous breaches of OSH laws and regulations in factories and workplaces, and that enforcement efforts are hampered by the existence of widespread collusion by officials. The ITUC further states that many OSH inspectors are only temporarily employed, and are thus inexperienced in OSH management and lack adequate and appropriate training. The Committee notes the Government's response which indicates that in 2009, the State Council launched the "Safety Production Year" campaign, and that as a result, all regions, departments and entities have made comprehensive efforts to implement the three measures for production safety, namely "law enforcement", "advocacy and education" and "rectification". With reference to the foregoing, the 2009 comments by the ITUC, as well as its comments under Article 15 below, the Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that an adequate and appropriate system of inspection and penalties is in place for the enforcement of laws and regulations concerning OSH.

Article 11(c). Procedures for the notification of occupational accidents and diseases by employers, and the production of annual statistics. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that section 17 of the Law of the People's Republic of China on Production Safety (1 November 2002) (Law on Production Safety) requires the principal leading members of production and business units to submit to the higher authorities timely and truthful reports on accidents due to lack of work safety, and that section 43 of the Law of the People's Republic of China on Prevention and Treatment of Occupational Diseases (1 May 2002) (Law on Occupational Diseases) states that where the employer or the medical and health institution discover any worker suffering, or suspected of suffering, from an occupational disease, it shall report to the local public health administration department without delay. The Committee also notes the communication by the ITUC which indicates that many cases of occupational diseases are covered up by owners and/or local authorities, particularly in village and township enterprises and small and illegal workshops. With reference to the further guidance provided in Paragraph 15(2) of the Occupational Safety and Health Recommendation, 1981 (No. 164), as well as in the 2002 Protocol to this Convention, the Committee wishes to emphasize that in the process of improving its OSH system in general, it is of particular importance to pursue efforts to improve the system of recording and notification of occupational accidents and diseases. While the improvement of such national systems may temporarily result in an increase in the number of cases recorded, such improved and better functioning systems constitute an important tool in the process of evaluating progress and measuring the impact of actions taken. In this context, and with reference to the comments made under Article 15 below, it is important to take measures, institutionally or otherwise, to ensure effective coordination among the various government entities (at the national, provincial and municipal levels) with regard to the recording, notification and investigation of occupational accidents and diseases. These measures should also include systematic information-sharing and structured feedback systems, as well as the compilation and use of statistics to develop targeted and, in particular, preventive interventions and strategies. With reference to the foregoing and the 2009 comments by the ITUC, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that the functions referred to in Article 11(c) are progressively carried out.

Article 15. Coordination between various authorities. The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that SAWS, the State Administration of Coal Mine Safety and the Ministry of Health are the entities primarily responsible for OSH, and that the China Occupational Safety and Health Association, established in October 2003, functions as a central coordinating body for occupational safety. The Committee also notes the statement by the ITUC that OSH-related reform policies and instructions set out by central government are not implemented at local level. The Committee notes the Government's response which indicates the efforts made to enhance the vertical and hierarchical management of production safety supervision and the regulatory system. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure coordination between the various authorities and bodies responsible for OSH, both at central and local government levels, with reference to the 2009 comments by the ITUC; and to provide further information regarding the composition, mandate and coordinating functions of the China Occupational Safety and Health Association. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on any measures taken to encourage officials at the national, provincial and municipal levels to strengthen collaboration among Government entities in the development of preventive measures, including promotional campaigns based on information-sharing and other coordination mechanisms.

Article 18. First-aid arrangements. The Committee notes that the Government has indicated measures taken to deal with emergencies and accidents in the workplace. The Committee further notes the statement by the ITUC that many enterprises have no basic effective safety procedures or equipment and that prevention, control and emergency measures are lacking. With reference to the 2009 comments by the ITUC, the Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the measures taken or envisaged to require employers to provide for adequate first-aid arrangements to deal with emergencies and accidents.

Article 19(d). Provision of appropriate training and information on OSH. Article 20. Cooperation between management and workers and/or their representatives within the undertaking. The Committee notes the reference made by the Government to the legal requirements provided for in sections 21 and 22 of the Law on Production Safety, and section 31 of the Law on Occupational Diseases, on the application of Article 19(d) to workers, but notes that limited information is provided on the application of Article 20 outside of the requirements under section 72 of the Law on Production Safety concerning cooperation with rescue efforts. The Committee also notes the statement by the ITUC that, in practice, many workers are unaware of the risk of occupational diseases and most are never informed of potential hazards at their workplace, and that this is the case, for example, as regards chemical processing workers, who are mostly migrant workers from the inner provinces, and who do not receive information about the chemicals and hazards they face at work. The Committee notes the response by the Government which indicates that SAWS has developed the "Outline for the development of safety culture during the 11th five-year period" focusing on the building of a safety culture in enterprises and which includes intensified training for persons in charge of enterprises, persons in charge of safety administration, and special operational staff. With reference to the foregoing and the 2009 comments by the ITUC, the Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the application of Article 19(d) to workers' representatives in the undertaking; and on the cooperation between management and workers and/or their representatives within the undertaking as required under Article 20.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. 1. Workplace accidents. The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government, which indicates that the total number of accidents and deaths throughout the country has decreased for seven consecutive years as a result of a series of major policies and measures adopted by China for strengthening production safety, including intensified legislation and law enforcement to guarantee the life and safety of persons involved. The Committee also notes the Government's recognition that serious problems of unlawful or illicit production practices have not been stopped in spite of repeated efforts to prohibit such practices, and that this can be associated with the lack of effective enforcement of the laws that prohibit such practices, and is also due to serious problems of corruption. With regards to coal mining, the Committee notes that the Government has adopted measures to firmly eliminate backward coal production entities and to combat illegal mining, and that the number of accidents that led to more than ten deaths has reduced from 75 in 2000 to 20 in 2009, down 73.3 per cent. The ITUC states that SAWS reported a 15 per cent reduction in the number of deaths caused by work-related and traffic accidents since China ratified the Convention in 2007. As regards issues related to OSH in the construction industry and in relation to hazardous chemicals, the Committee refers the Government to its comments this year concerning the application by China of the Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167), and the Chemicals Convention, 1990 (No. 170).

2. Occupational diseases. The Committee notes the communication by the ITUC which states that China officially recorded 14,296 cases of occupational diseases in 2007, although according to the World Health Organization there were actually some 690,858 cases by the end of 2007, of which 90.8 per cent (627,405 cases) were pneumoconiosis – the leading occupational illness in China today, primarily affecting miners, sandblasters and metal grinders. The Committee notes the response provided by the Government which indicates the development by the State Council of the National Occupational Disease Prevention and Control Plan (2009–15) which comprehensively analyses the current situation on prevention and treatment of occupational diseases in China and provides guiding ideology, basic principles and targets to achieve. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, including statistical information on the number of workers covered by the legislation, the number and nature of contraventions reported, and the number, nature and causes of occupational accidents and diseases reported.

3. Scope of the application of the Convention in practice. The case of gemstone processing. In addition to what is stated above, the ITUC, with reference to the gemstone processing sector, states that, as a result of local government seeking to attract investment, more factories are planning to move to remote areas where law enforcement is more relaxed. The ITUC states that, with poor OSH awareness, workers will be vulnerable to unscrupulous employers. With reference to the 2009 comments by the ITUC, the Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the application of the Convention in the gemstone processing industry.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its latest report, and the attached legislation, as well as the communication by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on 1 September 2010, and transmitted to the Government on 15 September 2010, which provides information on the general application of the Convention in practice, and more specifically on subcontracting within the construction industry; safety management practices and their adherence with international standards; the hazards associated with work from heights; the exposure of construction workers to a wide range of chemicals, physical and biological hazards; the welfare of workers and the provision of separate sanitary and washing facilities; information and training of workers; the reporting of accidents and diseases; and on the implementation of national laws and regulations, including the lack of enforcement and lack of cross-departmental cooperation. The Committee invites the Government to respond to the issues raised in the ITUC' communication in its next report.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Chemicals Convention, 1990 (No. 170) (ratification: 1995)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its latest report, and the attached legislation. The Committee also notes the communication by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), received on 9 September and transmitted to the Government on 1 October 2009 and the response thereto provided by the Government in its 2010 report under Convention No. 155. The Committee notes that a number of the issues raised by the ITUC in its 2009 communication concern the application of this Convention.

Article 15 of the Convention. Information and training. The Committee notes the response provided by the Government, which indicates that in order to strengthen safety in the production, operation, transport and storage of hazardous chemical processes, targeted safety training for the workers concerned has been emphasised under the Regulations on Safety Management of Hazardous Chemicals and only those workers who have passed the examinations and tests may be involved in the use of hazardous chemicals. The Government indicates that the first draft for chemical safety labelling standards has been drafted under the Regulations on Preparation of Warning Labels for Use of Chemicals at Workplace, and that it has been made available for public comment. The Committee also notes that, according to the abovementioned comments by the ITUC, there are many workers who are unaware of the risk of occupational diseases, and most are never informed of potential hazards at their workplace. The ITUC further states that chemical processing workers, who are mostly migrant workers from the inner provinces, do not receive information about the chemicals and hazards they face at work, and training is not provided on a continuous basis on the practices and procedures to be followed for safety in the use of chemicals at work, nor is any first-aid training provided. The Committee asks the Government to respond to the comments by the ITUC concerning the information and training of workers on the hazards associated with exposure to chemicals used at the workplace, and to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to continue to give effect to Article 15.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government, which indicates that the National Registration Centre for Chemicals set up by State Administration of Work Safety (SAWS) is dedicated to the prevention of hazardous chemical accidents, technical research and analysis thereof, and has opened a special hotline for emergency advisory services on chemical accidents; and that, in October 2006, SAWS issued the Emergency Plans for Responding to Hazardous Chemical-induced Accidents and Disasters. The Committee also refers to information provided by the Government under its reports on the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), which states that, since 2004, hazardous chemical accidents in China have demonstrated a declining trend, with a decrease from 193 accidents in 2004 to 83 accidents in 2009. The Government also indicates that there has been a decrease in the number of deaths in this sector, from 300 in 2004 to 149 in 2009. The Committee notes that the ITUC states that chemicals are often unsafely used in producing resin, all forms of plastics, glues and adhesives, toys, fabrics, leather, shoes, furniture, packaging and paints; and that this, together with long working hours, poor workflow designs and inadequate facilities in the factories, results in frequent outbreaks of occupational illnesses due to benzene poisoning, chronic n-hexane poisoning, and pneumoconiosis due to organic dust in the textile industry. The Committee asks the Government to respond to the comments by the ITUC, with reference to the safe use of chemicals, and to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Colombia

White Lead (Painting) Convention, 1921 (No. 13) (ratification: 1933)

Article 3 of the Convention. Prohibition of the employment of young persons under 18 years of age in any painting work of an industrial character involving the use of white lead or sulphate of lead or other products containing these pigments. The Committee notes with satisfaction that, in accordance with resolution No. 4448 of 2005 of the Ministry of Social Welfare, now replaced by resolution No. 1677 of 2008 of the same Ministry, no boy, girl or young person under 18 years of age may be engaged in any painting work of an industrial character involving the use of white lead or sulphate of lead or any product containing these elements. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of this Article in practice. Furthermore, noting that section 4 of resolution No. 1677 of 2008 envisages the possibility that, under certain conditions, young persons between 15 and 17 years of age who have obtained a technical or technological training qualification may be engaged in activities prohibited by the Decree, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the application of this section to the matters covered by this Article of the Convention.

Communication from the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) and the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC). The Committee notes a communication of the CUT and the CTC indicating, among other matters, that the great majority of workers who use industrial paints are in the informal economy or work in small enterprises or craft workshops that are not subject to any legal supervision or any contacts with occupational risk agencies, and on which, for the same reason, there are no reliable statistics. The Committee will examine the communication in detail at its next session, together with any comments that the Government may wish to make thereon.

Benzene Convention, 1971 (No. 136) (ratification: 1976)

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Application of the Convention to all activities involving exposure of workers to products containing benzene, and Article 4(1). Prohibition of the use of benzene or products containing benzene in certain work. For many years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take appropriate measures to extend the scope of application of its national legislation to ensure that it covers all activities involving exposure of workers to benzene or products of benzene containing more than 1 per cent by volume of benzene, in accordance with Article 1 of the Convention. Furthermore, the Committee previously requested the Government to take legislative measures to determine the work processes in which the use of benzene and products of benzene is prohibited, in accordance with Article 4(1) of the Convention. The Committee notes with regret the information provided by the Government that there are no specific standards on benzene establishing the protection of workers against risks related to exposure to or use of this chemical as required by Articles 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 of the Convention. However, the Government indicates that there are general technical standards which could contribute to protecting workers against exposure, such as Colombian Technical Standard NTC 1728 of 1982 concerning protective respiratory equipment against toxic gases. Furthermore, the Government indicates that, given that the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC) has classified benzene as group 1, the Ministry of Social Protection signed an agreement with the National Cancer Institute in 2008 with the aim of drawing up a technical standard and the National Plan on the Prevention of Occupational Cancer in Colombia 2010–14. The general objective of the Plan is to promote the prevention of occupational cancer and its social, economic and personal impact across the national territory. The specific objectives include the goal of developing and maintaining a system for collecting data on morbidity and mortality; investigating carcinogenic agents; implementing systems of monitoring at the government level; determining the priorities relating to vigilance and exposure; implementing the international recommendations made by the WHO and the ILO on matters relating to occupational cancer; and providing information to workers. The Committee notes that the issue is the scope of the Convention, as defined in Article 1(a) and (b), that Colombia ratified the Convention more than 30 years ago and that the Government should give full effect to all provisions of the Convention relating to the aromatic hydrocarbon mentioned in Article 1(a), as well as products containing benzene, in accordance with Article 1(b), whether by means of specific technical standards on benzene or more general standards on occupational cancer. As pointed out by the Government in its report, this matter has effects in various Articles of the Convention. Taking into account the information provided by the Government that there are no specific technical standards on benzene, but taking into account also that the standards on protection against occupational cancer could cover certain aspects of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which these standards cover the provisions of the Convention concerning exposure to products containing benzene. Furthermore, taking into account that one of the objectives of the National Plan on the Prevention of Occupational Cancer is to ensure compliance with the ILO Conventions and that 30 years after its ratification the application of the national legislation to the two cases provided for in the Convention is still not guaranteed, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary legislative measures to ensure that the Convention also applies to activities involving exposure of workers to products containing benzene and to provide the relevant texts, as well as relevant information relating to the Convention arising from the implementation of the National Plan on the Prevention of Occupational Cancer.

Article 9(1)(b). Periodic medical re-examinations. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate whether the medical examinations to be carried out in the framework of the subprogramme of preventive and occupational medicine are compulsory and whether the subprogramme has a binding effect which does not leave it to the discretion of the employer to carry out or to not carry out the medical examinations. Furthermore, the Committee, reminding the Government that this provision of the Convention calls for periodic re-examination at intervals to be fixed by national laws or regulations, requested the Government to take the appropriate legislative measures in this regard and to specify the periodicity of the medical examinations to be carried out according to the above subprogramme. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that section 19(1) of Ministry of Social Protection Resolution No. 2346 of 2007, as amended by Resolution No. 1918 of 2009, provides that occupational medical assessments constitute one of the main activities under the subprogramme on preventive and occupational medicine. The Committee notes with interest that, under the terms of section 13 of Resolution No. 2346, the employer is under the obligation to carry out specific occupational medical examinations in accordance with the risk factors to which the worker is exposed and according to the worker's individual conditions, using as a minimum the parameters established and the biological exposure indices (BEIs) recommended by the American Conference of Governmental Industrial Hygienists (ACGIH). It also provides that in cases of exposure to carcinogenic agents, the criteria of the International Agency for Research in Cancer (IARC) shall be taken into account; in the case of exposure to agents causing pneumoconiosis, the criteria of the International Labour Organization shall be observed; and that in following up cases of diseases caused by biological agents, the criteria of the Center for Disease Prevention and Control (CDC) shall be taken into account. The section also provides that, where there are no criteria or parameters for the evaluation of risk factors or agents, and no biological exposure indices, the employer shall establish an evaluation protocol which shall include the identification of the risk factor or agent, vigilance criteria and the frequency of the medical assessment. Please indicate the intervals fixed by the national legislation, in accordance with this provision of the Convention, and continue providing information on any other regulations in this respect. Please also indicate the manner in which these medical examinations are organized in practice.

Part IV of the report form in relation with Articles 1(a) and (b), 5 and 9 of the Convention. Exposed workers. Preventive measures. Medical examinations. The Government has communicated a guide, drawn up in 2008, focusing on occupational safety and health with specific reference to benzene and its derivatives. Please provide information on the practical application of the guide, the manner in which it facilitates the application of the Convention, in particular, preventive measures in accordance with Article 5. Please provide statistics or estimates of the number of workers exposed to benzene under the terms of Article 1(a) and (b) of the Convention and on the manner in which the medical examinations envisaged in Article 9 of the Convention will be implemented.

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 2001)

Part VI of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. Communication from the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) and the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC). The Committee notes the Government's report and a communication from the CUT and the CTC received on 31 August 2010 and sent to the Government on 6 September 2010. The Committee notes that the Government's comments on the communication have not as yet been received. The Committee will examine the communication at its next session together with any comments the Government may wish to make. It will set out below the main matters raised. The CUT and the CTC indicate that the main problem relates to the practical application of the Convention rather than the relevant legislation. The communication refers, in particular, to the following matters.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Formulation, implementation and periodic review of a coherent national policy on occupational health services. Progressive development of such services. The communication indicates that the Occupational Risk Administrators (ARP) are in charge of health services and that they have no preventive duties, that their membership rate is extremely low, only 36 per cent of workers being members, which means that, out of 19 million workers, 12 million have no cover whatsoever.

Articles 5 and 8. Occupational health services that are adequate and appropriate to the occupational risks of the undertaking. Cooperation between the employer, the workers and their representatives. The abovementioned organizations raise the following matters:

- High rate of occupational accidents. According to the CUT and the CTC, Government action is limited to the hiring of occupational risk insurers, and the inefficiency of prevention is reflected in the high rate of occupational accidents. They indicate that between 2008 and May 2010, 1,221,619 occupational accidents were reported, of which only 868,791 were recognized as occupational accidents. Furthermore, taking into account only the figures for those recognized as such, the monthly average of occupational accidents is 29,958 which amounts to 968.1 accidents per day.
- Non-application of regulations. The CUT and the CTC state that in its report, the Government merely lists functions of the subprogramme on preventive and occupational medicine, on which the trade union organizations were not consulted. Furthermore, Colombia cannot continue to hide behind regulations that are not applied, and it must take the necessary administrative and budgetary measures to comply with the Convention. They also indicate a lack of participation by workers and assert that although forums for dialogue do exist officially, they do not operate in practice.

- Absence of supervision of work environment factors. The organizations allege, in particular, a lack of prevention in mines and indicate that on 16 June 2010 an occupational accident occurred in the San Fernando coalmine causing 73 deaths, among other reasons because the risks were not identified and there was no monitoring of the work environment factors. Furthermore, of the 29 mines operating legally in the Sinifaná basin, only five meet all requirements and, in the others, the main requirements that are not fulfilled relate to safety and health.

Article 15. Notification to occupational health services of occurrences of ill health and absence from work for health reasons in the interests of identifying any relation between the ill health and health hazards. The CUT and the CTC assert that this provision is not applied and that workers must wait until a disease becomes chronic or degenerative before asking the employer or insurers to have the necessary studies carried out.

The Committee asks the Government to supply information on the application in practice of the abovementioned Articles, indicating the proportion of workers covered by the functions set forth in Article 5 of the Convention. If, as provided in Article 3(2), occupational health services cannot be immediately established for all undertakings, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the plans for establishing such services, drawn up in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers. The Committee will examine the Government's report together with its comments on the present communication.

Plan of Action 2010–16. While noting that the abovementioned organizations refer to the absence of a policy on occupational safety and health, the Committee points out that this is not a subject covered by the present Convention. It wishes to take this opportunity to inform the Government that in March 2010, the Governing Body adopted the Plan of Action 2010–16 to achieve widespread ratification and effective implementation of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), its Protocol of 2002 and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187) (GB.307/10/2(Rev.)). The Committee points out that, under this Plan, the Office provides technical assistance to any governments wishing to bring their legislation and practice into conformity with these key occupational safety and health Conventions, with a view to promoting ratification and effective implementation of these instruments. The Committee reminds the Government that the Office is at its disposal for the preparation of reports on ratified Conventions. The Committee invites the Government to supply information on any needs that may arise in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government's brief report received on 30 August 2010 does not contain replies to all the questions raised in its previous comments and in particular that it does not indicate clearly the sections of the national legislation, including the Colombian technical standards, which, in the Government's opinion, give effect to the provisions of the Convention. Furthermore, it notes that the Office requested further information on this matter. The Committee also notes the attachments to the Government's report, received on 27 October 2010, including Ministry of Labour resolution No. 00935 of 25 May 2001 establishing the National Occupational Health Committee for the Asbestos Sector. Section 7 of the resolution lays down the duties of the above Committee which include providing the Government with assistance in developing standards under the present Convention. The Committee also notes the communication by the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT) and the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC), which was received on 31 August 2010 and sent to the Government on 6 September 2010. The Committee notes that it has not received the further information requested or the Government's reply to the communication by the trade unions. In this context, at the current session, the Committee will only note the comments submitted by the CUT and the CTC and will examine them in detail at its next session, together with any comments that the Government wishes to make in that regard.

The Committee will indicate at this session the main themes of the above communication, which seem to relate to Articles 10 (replacement/prohibition of asbestos or of certain types of asbestos or products containing asbestos) and 3(2) of the Convention (periodic review of the national legislation in the light of technical progress and advances in scientific knowledge). The trade union confederations state that the Government fails to recognize Article 10, which provides that where necessary to protect the health of workers and technically practicable to adapt the national legislation, which they emphasize has not been done in Colombia, the national legislation shall provide for one or more of the following measures: (a) replacement; or (b) total or partial prohibition. They refer to various international scientific organizations such as the WHO, according to which "there is no significant evidence of a threshold for exposure to asbestos below which cancer does not occur". The communication also indicates that in its report on the Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161), the Government does not refer to the measures taken to give effect to these provisions concerning asbestos (Articles 6(3) and 20); that there is neither prevention nor protection with regard to asbestos (Articles 3, 9 and 15); that there is no national training programme for the handling and use of asbestos (Article 22); and that the technical standards are not imposed (Article 5 of the Convention). The communication refers to these matters, in particular in relation to mining and construction workers. The CUT and the CTC indicate that more than 10,000 tons are extracted every year in the mine located in the department of Antioquia, which is extremely risky given that the exploitation of mining resources is carried out using traditional methods without technology. They also indicate that in 2007 30,403 tons of asbestos were imported by the fibrocement sector. This sector has apparently taken some measures but according to the trade union confederations, there are no control measures to eliminate risk and the Government has taken no measures to that end. They indicate that in the construction sector, asbestos and its handling has serious consequences, that workers are exposed to asbestos when working in demolition and producing insulation boards, paint primers, asbestos cables, asbestos textiles, millboard, packaging, reinforced plastic, roofs, tiles and aqueducts, for example, and that most of these products are developed using chrysotile and crocidolite or amosite. They also indicate that there are an estimated 320 deaths related to asbestos each year, according to estimates by Global Unions, based on ILO methodology. Finally, the trade unions indicate that the Colombian trade union confederations are united in their belief that the use of asbestos should be prohibited and its replacement promoted and they refer to resolution No. 001 of 14 December 2006 of the Confederation of Workers of Colombia and maintain that the Convention be applied in domestic legislation and that the use of asbestos should not be permissible. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this communication and on the effect given to Article 4 of the Convention, which requires that the most representative organizations of employers and workers be consulted on the measures to be taken to give effect to the provisions of the Convention, and to provide information on that matter.

Chemicals Convention, 1990 (No. 170) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes the Government's brief report and the attached documentation. It notes with interest the handbook of carcinogens belonging to groups 1 and 2 of the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC), classifying the agents which, inter alia, are present in the working environment in Colombia.

Part V of the Convention. Application in practice. Communication from the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) and the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC). The Committee notes the communication from the CUT and the CTC which was received on 31 August 2010 and communicated to the Government on 6 September 2010. The Committee notes that the Government's comments on the communication have still not been received. The Committee will therefore merely list the main issues referred to in the communication and will examine them in greater detail at its next meeting, together with any comments that the Government makes in response. In the first part of the communication, the trade union confederations supply additional information on the legislation which gives expression to certain provisions of the Convention. In the second part they refer to the following issues related to the application of the Convention in practice:

- Article 1 of the Convention. Scope. The CUT and CTC declare that, despite the existence of regulations, the real problem of substance is that protection against risks covers only workers who are in a formal employment relationship and are consequently insured. They indicate that most workers are in the informal and self-employed sectors and that there is no system of prevention or protection for them with regard to occupational accidents and diseases.
- Article 13. Obligation of employers to assess risks and protect workers by appropriate means. The CUT and CTC indicate that in order to eliminate risks from the use of chemicals, alternative less toxic materials must be used, ventilation must be improved, leaks must be monitored and protective clothing must be used. Nevertheless, they state that there are no adequate plans for prevention, no monitoring measures are taken, there are no alerts when needed and frequent loss of life or cases of permanent disability still result from the handling of certain chemicals.
- Article 15. Obligation of employers to provide information and training. As regards training, the CUT and CTC indicate that many workers have a basic knowledge but are unaware of regulations on industrial safety and consequently of instructions concerning the handling of chemicals, and that certain companies disregard these requirements in order to pay lower wages.

The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the points listed above and in particular on the manner in which the application of the abovementioned provisions is ensured in practice.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Côte d'Ivoire

White Lead (Painting) Convention, 1921 (No. 13) (ratification: 1960)

Article 3(1) of the Convention. Prohibition of the employment of young persons under 18 years of age and women in any painting work of an industrial character involving the use of white lead or sulphate of lead. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that the Labour Code prohibits the use of white lead, sulphate of lead or leaded linseed oil in painting work in construction (section 4 D 431). The Committee recalled that the prohibition laid down in Article 3(1) applies to all sectors which engage in industrial painting work, and not only building work. The Committee also requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that young persons under 18 years of age and women are not employed in any painting work of an industrial character involving the use of white lead or sulphate of lead or other products containing these pigments, in accordance with this Article of the Convention.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, measures will be taken to extend the law to all sectors which engage in industrial painting work, and not only in building work, and that the law will be amended to prohibit the employment of young persons under 18 years of age and women in any painting work of an industrial character involving the use of white lead, sulphate of lead or other products containing this pigment. The Committee recalls that it has been referring to this matter for many years. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention and to provide more concrete information on the amendment of the law. Pending the adoption of the amendments announced, the Committee requests the Government to take practical steps without delay to ensure that young persons under 18 years of age and women are not employed in the work mentioned and to provide information in that regard.

Plan of Action (2010–16). The Committee would like to take this opportunity to inform the Government that, in March 2010, the Governing Body adopted a plan of action to achieve widespread ratification and effective implementation of the key instruments in the area of occupational safety and health (OSH), the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), its 2002 Protocol, and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187) (document GB.307/10/2(Rev.)). The Committee would like to bring to the Government's attention that, under this plan of action, the Office is available to provide assistance to governments, as appropriate, to bring their national law and practice into conformity with these key OSH Conventions in order to promote their ratification and effective implementation. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on any needs it may have in this respect.

Benzene Convention, 1971 (No. 136) (ratification: 1973)

Action Plan (2010–16). The Committee notes with interest the documents entitled “National Occupational Safety and Health Policy” and “National Occupational Safety Plan 2010–14”, the latter of which indicates under objective 1.1 the desire to ratify the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), the Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161), and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187). It also notes the introduction of the document concerning the national policy, which indicates that “Due to the lack of an overall policy, there are problems in terms of both the design and the operation of the occupational safety and health system in Cote d’Ivoire, even though it is codified”. The Committee takes this opportunity to indicate that, in March 2010, the Governing Body adopted the plan of action to achieve widespread ratification and effective implementation of Convention No. 155, its 2002 Protocol and Convention No. 187 (see document GB.307/10/2(Rev.)). The Committee indicates that, under this plan of action, the Office envisages a whole series of actions to provide assistance to governments who request it to help them to bring their legislation and practices into line with the fundamental occupational safety and health Conventions in order to promote their ratification and effective implementation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any needs identified in this regard.

Croatia

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its latest report. The Committee notes, however, that the Government has not submitted a detailed report, as requested, indicating the specific measures which give effect to each Article of the Convention, in order to allow the Committee to properly examine the current application of the Convention in the country. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to submit a detailed report, indicating the measures taken or envisaged, in law and in practice, to give effect to each Article of the Convention, and to continue to provide information on any legislative measures undertaken with regard to the Convention.

The Committee also recalls the comments submitted by the Croatian Trade Union Association (HUS) in 2009 regarding the Salonit asbestos issue referred to briefly in its previous comment, and that the HUS alleges that there has been no change in solving the workers' status, that the workers have still not been compensated, and that they still have major problems in defining their working status as the ex-owner still controls the bankruptcy process. The Committee also notes the information submitted by HUS that around ten workers started a hunger strike in September 2009 in order to call upon an urgent solution to their problems. While the Committee notes the response provided by the Government on the issues examined below, the Committee notes the absence of further information regarding, inter alia, the legal stalemate caused by the bankruptcy process against the ex-owner of the Salonit factory. The Government is requested to provide further information in response to this and other issues raised by the HUS including in particular, whether the Government has succeeded in adequately mitigating the negative impact of this legislative stalemate for the individual workers concerned.

With reference to its previous comments concerning legislative measures taken and the question of compensation of victims and providing them an old-age pension on more favourable conditions, the Committee notes with satisfaction the information provided by the Government regarding the adoption of the Ordinance on conditions and methods for health monitoring, diagnostic procedures for suspected occupational diseases caused by asbestos and the criteria for recognizing occupational diseases cause by asbestos (Official Gazette 134/08). The Committee also notes that the Commission for Settling Claims for Compensation by Workers Suffering from Occupational Diseases Due to Exposure to Asbestos (the Commission) drew up guidelines in 2010 for workers claiming compensation, pursuant to the Act on compensating workers occupationally exposed to asbestos, which provide a detailed explanation of the procedure for recognizing occupational diseases and indicate the documents that need to be submitted in order to obtain the right to monetary compensation for an occupational disease caused by exposure to asbestos. The Government indicates that these guidelines, accompanied by application forms and other useful information, have been made available on the website of the Croatian Institute for Occupational Safety and Health. The Committee notes the information indicating that the Commission has received 937 claims for compensation since it was established in 2007, including 106 new cases between July 2009 and July 2010. The Government indicates that of the 330 decisions that have been issued, 144 were successful and 186 were unsuccessful. The Committee further notes the information indicating that in the course of implementing the Act on the requirements for obtaining an old-age pension by workers occupationally exposed to asbestos (Official Gazette 79/07), it was noted that there were a certain number of workers, who, while working for a legal person using asbestos as a raw material in its manufacturing process (Salonit d.d. in administration and Plobest), had subsequently developed a recognized asbestos-related occupational disease, but did not meet the requirements relating to age or had not completed the required number of years of insurance, as prescribed by the Act. The Committee welcomes the information indicating that in response to this, the Government amended the Act (Official Gazette 149/09) in order to enable this category of ill workers to obtain the right to an old-age pension under more favourable conditions. As a result of this, since 1 January 2010, they have been receiving 26 per cent higher pensions. The Committee asks the Government to continue to ensure that all claims and requests for compensation by workers suffering from an occupational disease due to exposure to asbestos during the course of their employment are handled as expeditiously as possible, to provide information on progress in this respect, as well as on the measures taken to raise the awareness of such workers regarding the possibilities to seek redress.

As regards measures taken at the institutional level, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report on the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), concerning the adoption on 19 December 2008 of the National Occupational Health and Safety Programme 2009–13, and the establishment, after consultation with the social partners, of the Croatian Institute for Health Protection and Safety at Work. The Government indicates that the Institute has the role of confirming diagnosed occupational diseases and keeping a register of occupational diseases, as well as submitting an annual report to the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare on the preventive measures taken to reduce the number and occurrence of occupational diseases, accidents and any other injuries to health which arise in the course of or in connection with work. The Committee also notes that the Institute is establishing a database on the employers and workers who handle, or are exposed to, antineoplastic, carcinogenic and mutagenic substances and ionizing radiations, and that employers are legally obliged to submit data to the Institute. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the activities undertaken by the Croatian Institute for Health Protection and Safety at Work, in particular concerning the application of the Convention; and to provide an update on the previously noted intention to ensure coherent national action in relation to the application of this Convention.

As regards measures taken to rehabilitate the Salonit factory and adjacent areas, the Committee notes the information indicating that the Government, through the Fund for Environmental Protection and Energy Efficiency, paid 86 million kuna (HRK) for labour costs of workers, and that until the end of 2009, contracts worth HRK13 million had been concluded for preparing rehabilitation work, with the involvement of 107 workers of the Salonit d.d. administration. The Government further indicates that the Fund guarantees continued engagement in rehabilitation work to all workers who do not acquire the right to pension. The Committee notes, however, that the Government has not addressed the application throughout the country of legislative measures requiring that all work related to remediation be carried out under expert supervision by an authorized company. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the application throughout the country of legislative measures requiring that all work related to remediation be carried out under expert supervision by an authorized company.

Part III of the report form. Decisions by courts of law. The Committee notes the information which indicates that a total of 29 lawsuits were filed with the Administrative Court by the applicants who had been unsuccessful in their application for compensation. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the outcomes of these lawsuits, and to provide copies of the texts of the decisions.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee asks the Government to give a general appreciation of the manner in which the Convention is applied in the country, and to provide, where such statistics exist, information on the number of workers covered by the legislation, the number and nature of the contraventions reported, and the number, nature and cause of occupational accidents and diseases reported.

[The Government is asked to report in detail in 2012.]

Cuba

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1982)

Articles 4, 8 and 15 of the Convention. National policy and legislation. Coherence and coordination between enforcement bodies. The Committee notes with satisfaction Ministry of Labour and Social Security Resolution No. 39 of 29 June 2007 issuing the General Bases for Occupational Safety and Health which provide that national bodies, organizations and entities shall use these in establishing plans and strategies for ongoing improvement in the occupational safety and health systems and in allocating human, material and financial resources therefore in their budgets. These bases apply to all workers and to students engaging in work for the purpose of their training. It contains provisions on the bodies that govern the Occupational Protection and Health System; coordination of the various bodies that are involved; the powers, functions and duties of heads of work units; the occupational safety and health system of work units; occupational safety and health committees; risk management and prevention programmes. Annex II of the Resolution sets forth mandatory basic technical measures to be universally applied. It also notes Ministry of Labour and Social Security Resolution No. 50 of 25 June 2008 issuing the methodology for working out the requirements for individual and collective protection equipment, budgetary needs and implementation monitoring. The Ministry of Labour and Social Security also adopted Resolution No. 51 of 25 June 2008 issuing the methodology for formulating the Organizational Regulation on Occupational Protection and Health, Occupational Safety Handbook, for work units, setting out the different levels of organization in enterprises and other forms of economic organization. The Committee notes that the legislation referred to is conducive to coherence and coordination between the bodies responsible for applying the Convention. It also notes that Resolution 19/03 of 8 September 2003 on the notification and registration of occupational accidents should pave the way to eventual ratification of the Protocol of 2002 to the present Convention, which supplements the Convention by regulating registration and notification. The Committee takes this opportunity to point out that in March 2010 the Governing Body adopted the Plan of Action (2010–16) to achieve widespread ratification and effective implementation of the occupational safety and health instruments (Convention No. 155, its 2002 Protocol, and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187)); and that these three instruments are the fundamental occupational safety and health instruments. In view of the fact that Cuba has ratified the present Convention and Convention No. 187, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that the Plan of Action envisages a number of arrangements for technical assistance, and invites the Government, should it envisage the possibility of ratifying the 2002 Protocol, to communicate any needs for assistance that might arise.

Part V of the report form. Practical application. The Committee notes that the legislation covers 5,072,400 workers, of whom 1,934,100 are women, and 3,138,300 are men. It also notes that, in 2009, 10,974 inspections were carried out, 29,869 infringements were reported and 25,253 orders were issued to remedy the infringements and that, in 2008, 6,028 workers were injured in occupational accidents, 79 of which were fatal, whereas in 2009 5,397 workers were injured in occupational accidents, 88 of which were fatal. Noting that in 2009 there were fewer occupational injuries than in 2008, but more of them proved fatal, and that this is borne out by the mortality rate provided by the Government (13.1 per cent in 2008 and 16.3 per cent in 2009), the Committee asks the Government in its next report to indicate the possible reasons for this difference and to provide relevant statistics for the reporting period. It would also be grateful if the Government would provide a breakdown of accidents by sector of activity.

Czech Republic

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes the information in the Government's latest report, including references to the availability of legislation online. The Committee also notes the inclusion of observations made by the Confederation of Industry and Transport on the importance of occupational safety and health (OSH) policy in the sector of radiation protection, despite the high costs, and that surveillance of workers in this area is undertaken by the Czech authorities, and also the strong pressure of both the Czech Republic and the international community. The Committee further notes the responses by the Government to its previous comments, which appear to show effect given to Articles 1 and 12 of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the relevant measures undertaken with regard to the Convention.

Article 5 of the Convention. Exposure to ionizing radiation. The Committee notes the response provided by the Government indicating that the principle of optimization and other basic principles of radiation protection are enshrined in Act No. 18/1997 Coll., the Atomic Act, as amended. The Government indicates that limiting the exposure of workers to the lowest level possible is done using the system of quality assurance, and that such a system requires each workplace involved in disposing ionizing radiation to submit the so-called evidence of optimization as well as a quality assurance programme according to section 13(5) of the Atomic Act, which forms a part of the approval documentation for a permit to dispose of ionizing radiation. Section 17(3) of Decree No. 307/2002 Coll., as amended, takes into account the economic and social factors to assess the benefits of measures for introducing graded radiation activities, medical radiation, natural and accidental exposure. The Committee notes that the Government has not referred to any efforts made to restrict the exposure of workers to ionizing radiation to the lowest practicable level, and that any unnecessary exposure is to be avoided. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government indicate the measures taken or envisaged to apply Article 5 of the Convention, in law and in practice.

Article 7. Prohibition against engaging workers under the age of 16 in work involving ionizing radiation. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that section 21 of Decree No. 307/2002 sets limits for apprentices and students (16–18 years of age), but that the Government does not specify the provisions which ensure that workers under the age of 16 are not engaged in work involving ionizing radiation. The Committee asks the Government to specify the exposure limits set for apprentices and students (16–18 years of age); and to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that no worker under the age of 16 shall be engaged in work involving ionizing radiation.

Article 8, in accordance with Article 6. Levels to be set for workers who are not directly engaged in radiation work. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government which indicates that section 23 of Decree No. 307/2002 limits the exposure of individuals in special cases, including exposure of individuals who care for patients exposed to medical radiation beyond their duties or who live in the same household (persons older than 18 years), and that the limit for such exposure is 5 mSv per calendar year and 1 mSv per calendar year for other persons. The Committee, referring to paragraph 35(a)(ii) of its 1992 general observation on the Convention which specifies that external and internal exposures of workers not directly engaged in radiation work, as well as of members of the general public, are to remain below 1 mSv a year, asks the Government to keep the Office informed of any measures taken to bring national laws into line with these requirements.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the response provided by the Government indicating that the reduction of risk of accidental exposure of workers to a dose exceeding the maximum permissible limit (occurring in only extremely rare incidents) is dealt with in the document “On-site Emergency Plan” that is part of the approval documentation for permission to use ionizing radiation sources (in the annex to the Atomic Act), and that the focus of inspectors of the State Office for Nuclear Safety is also to prevent such situations. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government in its report regarding the application of the Convention, including on inspection activities in the area of radiation protection. The Government indicates that a total of 1,078 inspections were carried out in the area of radiation protection in 2009, of which 33 were identified as grade 3 (meaning an inspection in which deficiencies were detected preventing a safe manner in the carrying out of activities leading to exposure). The Committee also notes the information that 22,500 workers were monitored by dosimetric services in 2009. The Government indicates that the issuing of personal radiation cards has helped ensure an accurate and a complete assessment of doses for workers entering the controlled area. The Committee notes the information that, based on an analysis of the findings from investigations of higher doses, the critical group of workers with high occupational exposure (apart from uranium miners) are doctors conducting medical intervention radiology procedures. The Government also indicates that since 2002, radiation exposure of workers has been monitored in workplaces where there may be a significant increase in radiation from natural sources, and that the most important professional groups, whose doses are regularly evaluated, are airline staff and tour guides in caves open to the public. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice.

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 1993)

Article 10 of the Convention. Professional independence. The Committee notes the response provided by the Government which indicates that providers of occupational health care are independent from employers and that currently the care provided is almost entirely based on a contractual relationship between the employer and the occupational health-care provider. The Committee notes the comments by the Czech-Moravian Confederation of Trade Unions (CMKOS), included in the Government’s report, which state that there are health-care institutions which still use their own employees (doctors) for occupational health purposes and their independence is thus compromised. The Committee notes the Government’s response thereto, which indicates that the comments by CMKOS were discussed at the tripartite Working Group for the Cooperation with the ILO of the Council of Economic and Social Agreement on 18 October 2010, and it was agreed that a special sitting of the Working Group (with the expert participation from the side of the Government, as well as of the social partners) will be dedicated, in the near future, to the issue of occupational health services, as well as the White Lead (Painting) Convention, 1921 (No. 13). The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the personnel providing occupational health services enjoy full professional independence from employers, workers, and their representatives, where they exist, in relation to the functions listed in Article 5, with reference to the comments by CMKOS; and to provide further information on the outcome of the abovementioned tripartite working group.

Article 11. Qualifications required for personnel providing occupational health services. The Committee notes the response provided by the Government, which indicates that, in addition to occupational health-care specialists, occupational health-care services are also provided by general practitioners. The Government indicates that the Institute of Health Care Post-Graduate Education organizes training for general practitioners targeted at occupational health-care issues through courses covering 150 hours of lectures. The course is concluded by examinations and tests, after the passing of which the graduate receives a certificate. CMKOS admits that although new legislation has introduced specific provisions for education of medical doctors and nurses specializing in occupational health, these services are, in practice, usually carried out by general practitioners, and that the reform of the national health legislation has not been realized yet. The Committee notes the response above by the Government to the comments by CMKOS. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the qualifications required for the personnel providing occupational health services, with reference to the comments by CMKOS; and to indicate whether general practitioners, who undertake a role in occupational health care, do not do so until they are certified in such duties.

Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's latest report, including the comments by the Czech–Moravian Confederation of Trade Unions (CMKOS), which indicate that mining trade unions pay maximum attention to the unfavourable situation concerning fatal accidents, and adopt measures realized by union occupational safety and health inspectors. The CMKOS also states that pursuant to Memorandums of Understanding between mining trade unions, the State Labour Inspection Office and the Czech Mining Office, the situation is jointly appraised on a regular basis and agreed conclusions are immediately realized. The Committee also notes that the Government has referred to online versions of the annual reports on mining safety for the period 2006–09. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken and envisaged to improve safety and health standards in mines, particularly coalmines.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Safety Provisions (Building) Convention, 1937 (No. 62) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee notes the new reorganization of the labour inspectorate into four specialized subservices, one of which will be inspecting technical safety standards. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide more information on this restructuring, in particular on the manner in which this renewed system of inspection ensures the effective application of the provisions of the safety legislation in the building industry.

Article 6. The Committee notes that the Government explains the absence of statistical information on occupational accidents by the war situation prevailing since 2 August 1998, which has prevented the central services of the labour administration from contacting all the external services. The Committee hopes the Government will be in a position to supply to the Office, with its next report, statistical information on the number and classification of the accidents occurring, particularly to persons working in the sector covered by the Convention, and as detailed information as possible on the number of persons engaged in the building industry and covered by the statistics.

The Committee notes that, according to section 125 of Act No. 93-001 of 2 April 1993 concerning constitutional harmonization during the transition period, all legislative and regulatory texts in existence at the time of the entry into force of the said Act, will continue to be in force until they are expressly repealed. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the legislative and regulatory texts applying the provisions of the Convention have already been provided to the Office. The Committee notes that the texts referred to by the Government, which were recalled by the Government in its report of 1984, were adopted between 1959 and 1974. In view of the substantial changes that have taken place in the country since then, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the laws and regulations currently in force and those that have been expressly repealed. Please provide the Office with a copy of the amending laws or regulations which will permit an assessment of the application of the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary measures in the very near future.

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2(2)–(4) of the Convention. Prohibition against the sale, hire, transfer in any other manner and exhibition of unguarded machinery. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government according to which a draft law has been prepared concerning the guarding of machinery and other mechanical devices and prohibiting the sale, hire, transfer in any other manner and exhibition of machinery not provided with appropriate protection of their dangerous parts. It notes that this law is to be submitted for examination during the next session of the Labour Council. The Committee asks the Government to ensure that the draft legislation gives effect to the Convention and requests it to transmit a copy thereof as soon as it has been adopted.

Article 3. Exemptions to the obligation to provide guards. Article 4. Responsibility for ensuring compliance. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not provide an answer to the questions raised by the Committee. The Committee urges the Government to provide information on measures taken or envisaged to give effect, in law and in practice, to Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention.

Part V of the report form. Practical application of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government yet again to provide a general appreciation of the manner in which the Convention is applied in the country, including, for instance, extracts from official reports, such as labour inspection reports, and information on any practical difficulties in the application of the Convention, the number and nature of work accidents reported, as well as any other information allowing the Committee to assess more accurately how the Convention is applied in practice in the country.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Djibouti

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that, for the third consecutive year, the Government's report has not been received and that, prior thereto and since 2000, the Government has submitted the same report which does not provide any new information in reply to the Committee's previous comments. While noting the efforts made in the country through the adoption of a new Labour Code in 2006 and the development and adoption of a Decent Work Country Programme 2008–12, the Committee must underscore that the reporting obligations undertaken by the Government are important and that a regular review of the situation in the country in relation to the matters covered in this Convention can be helpful for the Government in its further improvements, not only in relation to the application of the present Convention but in the area of occupational safety and health in general.

Plan of Action (2010–16). The Committee would also like to take this opportunity to inform the Government that, in March 2010, the Governing Body adopted a plan of action to achieve widespread ratification and effective implementation of the key instruments in the area of occupational safety and health (OSH), the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), its 2002 Protocol, and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187), (document GB.307/10/2(Rev.)). The Committee would like to bring to the Government's attention that, under this plan of action, the Office is available to provide assistance to governments, as appropriate, to bring their national law and practice into conformity with these key OSH Conventions in order to promote their ratification and effective implementation. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on any needs it may have in this respect.

In the meantime, the Committee must repeat its previous observation which reads as follows:

The Committee understands, however, that a new Labour Code has recently been adopted (Act No. 133/AN/05 of 28 January 2006) and notes with interest that it contains provisions concerning occupational safety and health that constitutes a general framework for the protection of workers against risks related to work. According to previously submitted information the relevant legislation would also include Order No. 1010/SG/CG of 3 July 1968 concerning the protection of workers against ionizing radiation in hospitals and health-care institutions, or in Order No. 72-60/SG/CG of 12 January 1972 on occupational medicine. With reference to article 125(a) of the newly adopted law providing for the adoption of implementing legislation to regulate measures for the protection of safety and health in all establishments and companies covered by the Labour Code, on a series of different issues including radiation protection, the Committee requests the Government to clarify whether the abovementioned Orders remain in force and, as appropriate, to transmit to it copies of any revised or complementing legislation once it has been adopted.

The Committee also notes the observations submitted by the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD) on 23 of November 2007, raising concerns regarding insufficient protection against ionizing radiation for employees at health care centres. These observations were transmitted to the Government for comment on 21 September 2007, but no comments have been received to date.

Article 3(1). Protection of workers against ionizing radiations; Article 6(2). Maximum permissible doses; and Article 9(2) of the Convention. Instruction of the workers assigned to work under radiations. With reference to the foregoing and its previous comments, the Committee recalls that all appropriate steps shall be taken to ensure effective protection of workers against ionizing radiations and to review maximum permissible doses of ionizing radiations in the light of current knowledge. In this context, the Committee notes that the UGDT seems to indicate that, in practice, industrial undertakings using procedures involving ionizing radiation do not seem to apply uniform rules for the protection of workers against exposure thereto and that the workers engaged in, for example, health-care centres are not sufficiently informed of the dangers related to their activity and are not protected in an adequate way. The Committee again draws the Government's attention to the revised dose limits for exposure to ionizing radiation established on the basis of new physiological findings by the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) in its 1990 recommendations. The Committee requests the Government to respond to the observations made by the UGDT and urges the Government to take all appropriate measures, in the near future, and with due account of the 1990 Recommendations of the ICRP, to give full effect, in law and in practice, to these provisions of the Convention.

Article 7(1)(b) and (2) of the Convention. Exposure limits for young persons between 16 and 18 years of age. Prohibition against employing young persons under 16 in work involving exposure to radiation. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that there were no provisions in relevant legislation prohibiting the employment of children under 16 years of age in radiation work and fixing maximum permissible doses for persons between 16 and 18 who are directly engaged in radiation work, as called for by this Article of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take all appropriate measures to ensure the application of this Article in the near future.

Exceptional exposure of workers in situations of emergency. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee again draws the Government's attention to paragraphs 16–17 of its 1992 general observation under this Convention which concern occupational exposure during and after an emergency. The Government is requested to indicate whether, in emergency situations, exceptions are permitted to the normally tolerated dose limits for exposure to ionizing radiation and, if so, to indicate the exceptional levels of exposure allowed in these circumstances and to specify the manner in which these circumstances are defined.

Hygiene (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1964 (No. 120) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee understands that a new Labour Code has recently been adopted (Act No. 133/AN/05 of 28 January 2006) and notes with interest that it contains provisions concerning occupational safety and health that constitute a general framework for the protection of workers against risks related to work. The Committee nevertheless requests the Government to provide additional information concerning the following points.

Articles 10, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 18 of the Convention. With reference to the comments that it has formulated for several years, the Committee notes that article 125(a) of the Labour Code provides for the adoption of implementing legislation to regulate measures for the protection of safety and health in all establishments and companies covered by the Labour Code, in particular, with regard to lighting, ventilation or aeration, drinking water, sanitary facilities, evacuation of dust and fumes, precautions to be taken against fire, installation of emergency exits, radiation, noise and vibrations. The Committee trusts that the Government will adopt the abovementioned legislation in the very near future and that it will give full effect to Articles 10, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 18 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of this legislation as soon as it has been adopted.

With reference to the advances that hopefully will be made through the Decent Work Country Programme 2008–12, including, inter alia, further cooperation with the social partners, the Committee urges the Government to make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Dominican Republic

Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167) (ratification: 1998)

Application of the Convention. Government's report and observations from trade unions. The Committee notes the report from the Government which was received too late for the Committee to be able to examine in detail at the current session of the Committee. Nevertheless, the Committee notes the insufficient information provided in relation to its previous comments, and in particular the absence of a reply to questions formulated in paragraphs 2–3 of the comment, which refer to Article 10 on workers' right and duty to participate in ensuring safe working conditions and Article 12(1) on the right to removal. With reference to the comments from the Autonomous Confederation of Workers' Unions (CASC), the National Confederation of Trade Union Unity (CNUS) and the National Confederation of Dominican Workers (CNTD), transmitted to the Government on 23 September 2010, the Committee notes that the report received from the Government does not contain a response thereto. The comments from the trade unions refer, inter alia, to the high rate of accidents and diseases in the construction sector, and to the lack of effectiveness of the labour inspectorate in addressing frequent, systematic and serious violations of the applicable legislation. The Committee also notes the reference made to the Ministerial Resolution No. 4 of 2007, but that the Government does not include a copy thereof with its report. It is thus not clear whether this Resolution has an impact on existing legislation and whether this text is the draft legislation on risk prevention, and the amendment to the Occupational Safety and Health in Industry Regulation No. 807 of 30 December 1966, that the Government has referred to in its previous reports. The Committee requests the Government to respond to the comments submitted by the CASC, the CNUS and the CNTD; to provide further details on current legislation giving effect to the Convention, including copies of such legislation; and to reply to its previous comments. The Committee will examine the report of the Government at its next session in the light of any information received in these respects.

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1970)

Noting that the Government's report does not contain the information requested previously, the Committee refers to the comments it has made this year on the application of the Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148), in which it invites the Government to request technical assistance from the Office for the preparation of reports and for a number of issues pertaining to the occupational safety and health Conventions. The Committee again invites the Government to provide detailed information replying to the questions in the Committee's observation of 2005 on the application of this Convention.

Benzene Convention, 1971 (No. 136) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes that in its report the Government does not supply the information requested in the Committee's previous comments and states that the Committee's comments have been referred to the new authorities of the Directorate of Occupational Safety and Health so that they may provide the relevant responses. The Committee refers to the comments it has made this year on the application of the Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148), in which it invites the Government to seek technical assistance from the Office for the preparation of reports and in relation to a number of issues pertaining to the occupational safety and health Conventions. The Committee again asks the Government to supply detailed information on the matters raised in the last observation (2006) on the application of this Convention.

Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes that in its report the Government does not supply the information requested in the Committee's previous comments and states that the Committee's comments have been referred to the new authorities of the Directorate of Occupational Safety and Health so that they may provide the relevant responses. The Committee refers to the comments it has made this year on the application of the Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148), in which it invites the Government to seek technical assistance from the Office for the preparation of reports and in relation to a number of issues pertaining to the occupational safety and health Conventions. The Committee again asks the Government to supply detailed information on the matters raised in the last observation (2006) on the application of this Convention.

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes the Government's brief report which includes copies of three internal safety and health regulations of the enterprises Adelca, Mezclalista and Baker Hughes Incorporated, apparently adopted pursuant to Ministerial Resolution No. 219 of 2005, and other information from various sources. Further to the comments that it has made for several years, the Committee once again notes with regret that, despite asking the Government to reply in detail to the comments made, the Government's report is a general summary and, in the absence of further explanation by the Government, the Committee is unable to assess the importance of the further information from various sources attached to the Government's report. In some cases, it is pointed out that the information requested is not within the remit of the unit concerned. The Committee indicates that regardless of the internal distribution of competencies, coordination is necessary both to apply the occupational safety and health Conventions and to prepare the respective reports and that, regardless of the internal distribution of responsibilities, the responsibility for presenting the reports lies with the Government. As a result of the various issues mentioned, the information available does not allow the Committee to assess whether the national legislation and practice give effect to the obligations assumed under the Convention. However, the Committee notes that certain efforts are being made with regard to occupational safety and health in the country. For example, the Committee notes that the Occupational Safety and Health Unit has now become the Occupational Safety and Health Directorate and that the Committee's comments have been sent to the new authorities for their respective comments. The Committee requests the Government to gather together the information requested in its previous comments and to reply in detail to the questions raised in 2009. The Committee asks the Government to consider the possibility of requesting technical assistance from the Office with a view to preparing reports and replying to the questions raised in relation to the occupational safety and health Conventions.

Plan of Action (2010–16). The Committee takes this opportunity to inform the Government that in March 2010 the Governing Body adopted the Plan of Action 2010–16 to achieve widespread ratification and effective implementation of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), its 2002 Protocol and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187) (document GB.307/10/2(Rev.)). The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that, under this Plan, the Office is providing technical assistance to governments so that they can bring their legislation and practices into conformity with these key occupational safety and health Conventions in order to promote their ratification and effective implementation. Furthermore, the Committee recalls that the Office is available to provide assistance with the preparation of reports on ratified Conventions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any needs that may arise in this regard.

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1990)

Articles 11 and 12 of the Convention. Use of crocidolite and the spraying of asbestos. Article 17(1) and (2). Demolition of plants or structures containing friable asbestos insulation materials. Article 24(4). Efforts made to provide workers unable to pursue their work for medical reasons with other means of maintaining their income. The Committee notes that in its report the Government does not provide the information requested in the previous comments and indicates that the Committee's comments have been referred to the new authorities of the Occupational Safety and Health Directorate so that they may provide the relevant responses. The Committee refers to the comments it has made this year on the application of the Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148), in which it invites the Government to seek technical assistance from the Office for the preparation of reports and for a number of issues pertaining to the occupational safety and health Conventions. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to provide the information requested in the 2005 observation on the abovementioned Articles of the Convention.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. Article 5. Labour inspection services. The Committee requests the Government to make every effort to provide information on the practical application of the Convention, including reports supplied by the labour inspection service or other bodies responsible for enforcement of the Convention and the relevant regulations, so that the Committee can assess more fully the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice. Please provide, for example, general information on the manner in which the Convention is applied, including in the construction sector, to the extent possible.

Ethiopia

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report of this year, including a copy of a document entitled "Occupational Safety and Health Directive 2003" by the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs. While the content of this document represents a promising development in this area, the Committee notes that the Government refers thereto as a "draft Directive on OSH" and that its status therefore remains unclear. The Committee asks the Government to clarify the status of the Occupational Safety and Health Directive 2003 and – if this is draft legislation – to indicate whether it has been adopted and, in that case, to transmit a copy thereof to the Committee as soon as it has been adopted.

Article 1(1)–(3) of the Convention. Adequate protection to public servants. The Committee also notes that, in reply to previous comments on this issue, the Government indicates that two new laws – Proclamations No. 377/2003 (amending Labour Proclamation No. 42/1993) and Proclamation No. 262/2002 on "public civil servants" – have been adopted, ensuring the safety, health and welfare of public servants. The Government did not, however, include copies thereof in its report. The Committee requests the Government to submit to it copies of Proclamation Nos. 377/2003 and 262/2002, as well as any other relevant legislation that may have been adopted subsequently to enable the Committee to examine the application of this Convention in the country.

Technical assistance. The Committee notes the interest of the Government in receiving technical assistance from the Office to develop structures for effective cooperation at the institutional level in the country and to improve its system of labour inspection and expresses the hope that a request would be along those lines.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Finland

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes the information provided regarding effect given to Article 7(1)(b) and (2) of the Convention, and references made to new legislation adopted giving further effect to the Convention, as well as the detailed information provided regarding regulatory guides for different types of work involving possible exposure to radiation. The Committee further notes the observations from the Central Organisation of Finnish Trade Unions (SAK) included in the Government's report.

Articles 3(1) and 6(1) of the Convention. Effective protection of workers in the light of available knowledge; maximum permissible doses. The Committee notes from the SAK's comments that the dose limits for work-related exposure to radiation defined by the Radiation and Nuclear Authority (STUK) should be stricter on the basis of current research data. Noting that the Government does not address these concerns in its report, the Committee asks the Government to respond to the SAK's comments in its next report.

Article 12. Medical examinations. The Committee notes from the SAK's comments that health inspections are not carried out on all workers because of the use of temporary and subcontracted workers. Noting that the Government does not address these concerns in its report, the Committee asks the Government to respond to the SAK's comments in its next report.

Article 14. Alternative employment or other measures offered for maintaining income where continued assignment to work involving exposure is medically inadvisable. The Committee notes the Government's response that, according to the Employment Accidents Insurance Act (608/1948) compensation for injury or illness covers medical treatment, daily allowances, accident pension and handicap allowance, including any relevant supplements, compensation for costs and loss of income arising from physical therapy. However, with reference to its previous comments the Committee would again like to draw the Government's attention to what is stated in paragraph 32 of the 1992 general observation under the Convention, and the fact that this provision also relates to situations before any occupational disease has been declared but after a determination that continued assignment to work involving exposure to ionizing radiation has been found to be medically inadvisable. In such cases, paragraph 32 makes it clear that every effort must be made to provide the workers concerned with suitable alternative employment, or to maintain their income through social security measures or otherwise. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on measures taken to ensure that workers are offered alternative employment or to maintain their income when it has been determined that it is medically inadvisable for them to continue their work, including information on the situation of workers who have been employed for less than three years.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes from the comments by the SAK that the occupational health-care provisions are not supervised and that no statistics are available on the implementation of statutory health inspections, or on negligence and related sanctions. The Committee requests the Government to indicate measures taken to address the comments raised by the SAK and to provide a general appreciation on the application of the Convention including, for instance, extracts from inspection reports as well as statistical information on the number and outcome of such inspections.

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes the information provided regarding effect given to Articles 5(e), 19(a) and (b), of the Convention, and Articles 1(a) and (d), 3(a), 4(a) and 7, of the Protocol. It notes with interest the detailed statistical information provided, which is examined below. The Committee further notes the observations from the Central Organisation of Finnish Trade Unions (SAK), the Finnish Confederation of Professionals (STTK), the Confederation of Unions for Professionals and Managerial Staff in Finland (AKAVA), the Union of Professional Social Workers Talentia, the Commission for Local Authority Employers (KT) and the State Employer's Office (VTML) included in the Government's report.

Article 4 of the Convention. National policy. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's response stating that the development of occupational health care is based on the Council of State's Decision-in-Principle "Occupational Health 2015 – Development Strategy for Occupational Health Care". This document sets out a detailed policy for most aspects of occupational health care. The Committee also notes the information provided regarding the practical aspects of the 1998–2007 policy related to occupational health in the report on the Occupational Safety and Health Strategy 1998–2007 made available to the Committee. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the continuous process of formulating, implementing and periodically updating the national policy on OSH in the country.

Article 9. System of inspection. The Committee notes the comments of AKAVA in regard to the implementation of the inspection system that reductions have been made in resources of the OSH authorities, and its particular concern over the insufficiency of supervision and expertise with regard to the mental health aspect of OSH services. The Committee also notes AKAVA's suggestions that, instead of resource reduction, additional resources targeted at risk monitoring are required. Noting that the Government does not address these issues in its report, the Committee asks the Government to respond to AKAVA's comments in its next report.

Articles 13 and 19(f). Protection of workers removed from situations presenting an imminent and serious danger. The Committee notes the comments raised by the Union of Professional Social Workers Talentia expresses concerns over the ambiguity of national legislation and regulations especially in regard to workers who need to go to clients' homes on house calls alone or face clients, if they fear the clients in question, knowing them to be violent, or have even had their lives threatened by the client. In such cases, the supervisors of workers have ordered them to press ahead and carry out their duties. If, after personally evaluating their duties as posing a major threat, workers refuse to perform them, the situation may be interpreted as refusal to work without a valid reason. The Committee further notes AKAVA's view on this aspect that it is important to clarify OSH legislation for the purpose of preventing work-related violence more effectively and improving post-incident support in cases of work-related threats and violence. Noting that the Government does not address these concerns in its report, the Committee asks the Government to respond to the concerns of the Union of Professional Social Workers Talentia and AKAVA in its next report.

Articles 14 and 19(d). Occupational safety and health training. The Committee notes the Government's response in regard to the employer's obligation under section 33 of Act 44 of 2006. The Committee also notes the comments of the SAK and STTK that no training criteria, qualifications requirements, or performance monitoring have been set for employers' and employees' representatives responsible for OSH. The Committee further notes from the comments that there are many doctors working in occupational health care who do not have the required qualifications and since they mainly work in health-care centres, it remains unclear how work-related illnesses are identified. Noting that the Government does not address these matters in its report, the Committee asks the Government to respond to the SAK's and STTK's comments in its next report.

Protocol of 2002 (ratification: 2003)

Article 2 of the Protocol. National legislation. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's response that no decree has so far been issued under section 46(4) of Act 44 of 2006 in regard to the content and manner by which the reporting of occupational accidents and diseases are to be carried out. The Committee asks the Government to keep it informed of any decisions taken in this regard.

Article 3(c). Duration for maintaining records. The Committee notes the Government's response in that, by virtue of section 10 of the Occupational Safety and Health Act, employers are obligated to monitor the occurrence of occupational accidents, for which purpose they must maintain their records on occupational accidents for a suitable period of time. The Committee asks the Government to provide clarification as to the practical meaning of "a suitable period of time".

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the detailed statistical information provided concerning the developments in Finland 2005–09 including the analysis Occupational Accident Development Analysis – Final Report 31 January 2010 of the Finnish Institute of Occupational Health. The Committee notes that reference is made to five indicators (compensated occupational accidents and diseases; compensated occupational accidents (for all sectors and for the construction industry and transport and storage sectors); accidents in the workplace and commuting accidents; fatal commuting accidents and compensated occupational diseases); that there has been a noticeable decrease in the number of workplace accidents especially in sectors with high risk of accidents such as construction and transport; that the data broken down by gender indicate that the frequency of accidents for men is more than double that of women and that work-related deaths almost exclusively affect men, that the factors influencing the decrease in the number of workplace accidents include the economic downturn and the reduction in employment; that other societal factors, such as age, also influence the number of occupational accidents; that accidents occur more often among young workers than ageing workers, but that the type of accident changes with age, and that recovery from an injury takes longer for ageing workers; that occupational accidents among ageing workers often involve falling down, slipping and stumbling; and that several lifestyle factors, such as deteriorating health, stress, fatigue, tobacco, alcohol and drug use, and being overweight, are also known to increase the risk of accidents. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide a general appreciation of the manner in which the Convention is applied in the country based on relevant statistical data and the analyses based thereon.

Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes the detailed information provided, including on relevant legislation adopted since the previous report such as the Council of State Decree on the Safety in Construction Work (205/2009) which replaces the 1994 Decree on the same subject. The Committee also notes with interest Act No. 44/2006 on Occupational Safety and Health Enforcement and Cooperation on Occupational Safety and Health at Workplaces and Act No. 1233/2006 on the Contractor's Obligations and Liability When Work is Contracted Out. The Committee further notes the comments from the Central Organisation of Finnish Trade Unions (SAK) included in the Government's report.

Article 1(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. With reference to the previous direct requests on the comments by SAK, the Committee notes that the Government confirms that the main legislation in this area, currently Decree No. 205/2009, applies to "construction, renovation and maintenance of buildings or other structures on or under ground level or in water, as well as to installation, demolition, earthwork, hydraulic engineering and construction design in connection with such construction, renovation or maintenance", but that it is not applicable to dockyards. With reference to the terms of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on how effect is given to the Convention, in law and in practice, in dockyards.

Part VI of the report form. Workplaces where two or more employers undertake activities simultaneously (Article 8). Welfare (Article 32). Reporting on occupational accidents and diseases (Article 34). The provision of appropriate labour inspection services (Article 35(b)). With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided regarding recently adopted legislation and statistical data on the frequency and outcome of labour inspections in this area for the five years 2005–09. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that it has given high priority to inspection of shared workplaces, which is reflected, inter alia, in the fact that between 2005 and 2008 the number of labour inspections on such workplaces increased. In this context, the Committee also notes the concerns expressed by the SAK that as a result of increased grey market activity, outsourcing of construction work and subcontracting activity, occupational accidents within the construction sector are no longer necessarily registered and this falsifies the actual number of accidents within the construction sector; that statistics in Finland only consist of occupational accidents concerning companies insured in Finland, which means that they do not include occupational accidents occurring under employers registered outside of Finland. The Committee also notes that the SAK regrets the termination in 2007 of the so-called RAKETTI register for the health monitoring of construction workers, and that the occupational health-care card system, which later replaced this register, has not been operating as hoped and that the Finnish Construction Trade Union observes that occupational health-care services for the entire construction sector is poor, with inadequate accommodation for workers and workspaces, and special problems have occurred on a nuclear plant construction site, where the level of accommodation has been hazardous to health, as well as causing social problems. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the application in practice of newly adopted legislation and on measures taken to respond to the comments by the SAK regarding the effectiveness of the Finnish reporting mechanisms of occupational accidents and diseases in the construction industry and the functioning of the occupational health-care services provided. The Committee also requests that the Government continue to provide up-to-date statistical data, including extracts from inspection reports with information on the number and nature of infringements, and disaggregated by gender if possible.

Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187) (ratification: 2008)

The Committee notes the Government's comprehensive first report including the legislative texts attached. The Committee also notes the comments submitted by the Central Organisation of Finnish Trade Unions (SAK), the Finnish Confederation of Professionals (STTK), the Confederation of Unions for Professional and Managerial Staff in Finland (AKAVA), the Commission for Local Authority Employers (KT) and the State Employer's Office (VTML) attached to the Government's report.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Promote continuous improvement of OSH by the development of a national policy, national system and national programme. The Committee notes from the Government's report that the legal frame work for the Strategy is provided by the Occupational Safety and Health Act 2002 (OSHA) and supporting legislation and that such legislation promotes and supports the systematic development of working conditions in the workplaces through various programs and projects in cooperation with various actors, such as the Forum for Wellbeing at Work, which was set up in 2008. The Committee also notes the Central Organisation of Finnish Trade Unions' (SAK) comments, where it states that, the 1998 Occupational Safety and Health Strategy of the Ministry of Social Affairs and Health (OSH Strategy) applies to occupational safety and health sector under the Ministry but that it does not include a section on occupational health and occupational health care, and that it is not handled or prepared, for example, by the Ministry of Social Affairs and Health's Advisory Committee on Occupational Safety and Health. The SAK further maintain that this OSH Strategy does not meet the needs for working life, that it is not based on an in depth situation analysis and does not include measures related to, for example, mental health care and work-related illness. The Committee notes that the Government for its part states that the Finnish occupational health care system is under reform in accordance with the Council of State's Decision-in-Principle, issued in 2004 and that the Ministry of Social Affairs and Health's social and health policy strategy 2015 also includes sections on occupational safety and health and occupation health care. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on efforts to promote continuous improvements of OSH through the development of a national policy, national system and national program. The Government is also requested to keep the Committee informed on the Finnish occupational health care system reform.

Article 3(3). Promoting basic principles and to develop a national preventative safety and health culture that includes information, consultation and training. The Committee notes that the Government states that the Advisory Committee on Occupational Safety and Health handles training, guidance, statistics and other monitoring data. The Committee also notes that the Government refers to the Finnish Work Environment Fund (Act 407/1979), which receives funds pursuant to section 35 of the Employment Accidents Insurance Act and that such funds are granted for occupation safety research and training, and collecting and disseminating information related to OSH, in addition to financing the activities of the Centre for Occupational Safety. The Committee also notes that the Government states in its report that, the most representative labour market organisations always contributes to the preparation of OSH legislation by means of advisory committees, either as members of specially appointed working groups or failing this by issuing a statement. In regards to national conditions and practice taken into consideration, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that the Occupational Safety and Health Strategy follow up reports include comprehensive analysis of OSH activity, assessment of the development of working conditions based on statistics and research results, and input from various actors and stakeholders. The Committee also notes the comments raised by the SAK, which takes the view that there is a need to prepare a wide ranging cross administrative national plan of action based on an in depth situation analysis as a part of the Government Policy Programme for Employment, Entrepreneurship and Worklife in cooperation with parties from the labour market, to promote OSH and that the said policy should be based on transparent, open and confidential tripartite cooperation. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the outcome of the consultations held in this regard and to continue to provide information on measures taken to apply this provision of the Convention.

Article 5(1). Formulate, implement, monitor, evaluate and periodically review a national program on OSH. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that in 1998, the Ministry of Social Affairs and Health ratified the OSH Strategy and its implementation has been monitored and assessed regularly, that the National OSH Profile of Finland was created in accordance with ILO Recommendation No. 197 and published in 2006 and that the statement and measures on the preparation, implementation and monitoring of the OSH strategy of the European Commission form part of Finland's OSH policy. The Committee also notes that the SAK emphasizes that the national policy should be monitored and assessed on a regular basis, that this requires improved and further developed statistics, including a more detailed analysis of occupational accidents in particular, as well as reporting and compilation of statistics on all cases of occupational diseases, work-related illnesses and hazardous and dangerous occurrences and that the assessment and development of the impact of the national policy should be supported by a process of reporting on the activities of the occupational safety and health authorities annually, in compliance with ILO Convention No 81 and the creation of a national profile in accordance with ILO Recommendation No 197. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the functioning of and efforts made to formulate, monitor, evaluate and periodically review its national program on OSH.

France

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes the information in the Government's latest report, and the attached legislation, indicating that France has completed its organizational reform of radiation protection by Law No. 2006-686 of 13 June 2006 on transparency and security in nuclear material, which creates a new independent administrative body called the Nuclear Safety Authority (ASN). The Committee notes that the ASN can make decisions to supplement the technical arrangements implementing the provisions of the Labour Code in radiation protection, and that these decisions are subject to the approval of the Ministers of Labour and Agriculture. The Committee further notes that the ASN issued Decision No. 2010-DC-175 on 4 February 2010, approved by the Order of 21 May 2001, specifying the technical methods and frequency of inspections as required in the Labour Code and the Public Health Code. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on relevant legislative measures undertaken with regard to the Convention.

Article 14 of the Convention. Alternative employment or other measures offered for maintaining income where continued assignment to work involving exposure is medically inadvisable. The Committee notes the brief response provided by the Government indicating that action undertaken at the national level, to ensure the full application of the rules protecting workers in undertakings using ionizing radiation, other than natural sources, responds in particular to comments made by the Committee with regard to appropriate measures to ensure the application of this Article of the Convention. The Committee recalls that section R.231-96 of the Decree of 31 March 2003 provides that a worker directly engaged in radiation work may not be assigned to work exposing them to ionizing radiation, except in the event of a situation of radiological emergency, where one of the limits determined in sections R.231-76 and R.231-77 has been exceeded. The Committee notes that no information has been provided on measures offered to provide workers with alternative employment or other means for maintaining their income, and therefore wishes to again draw the attention of the Government to paragraph 32 of the 1992 general observation under the Convention where it is indicated that every effort must be made to provide the workers concerned with suitable alternative employment or to maintain their income through social security measures or otherwise where continued assignment to work involving exposure to ionizing radiations is found to be medically inadvisable. In light of the foregoing, the Committee hopes the Government will consider appropriate measures to ensure that every effort is made to provide these workers with suitable alternative employment or to offer them other means to maintain their income and requests the Government to keep it informed in this respect.

Part III to V of the report form. Application in practice. Inspection services and legal decisions. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding the 2010 national inspection campaign on the application of the regulatory system in undertakings using ionizing radiation, other than natural sources. The Committee further notes the information which indicates that the analysis of this campaign, in which approximately 2,000 undertakings were inspected, will allow for an evaluation of the level of application of the regulation relevant to this sector, and the identification of any gaps. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the application of this Convention in practice.

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes with satisfaction that full effect has been given to Articles 4(1) and 8(3) of the Convention through the adoption of Law No. 2009-526, which amends section L.4621-1 of the Labour Code, and, as a result, removes the exception for transport enterprises in relation to provisions concerning air pollution, noise and vibrations; and the extension of coverage under Decree No. 2009-781 of provisions concerning prevention against vibrations to extractive industries (mines and quarries).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

French Polynesia

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115)

The Committee notes the information regarding the updating of the list of work that requires an increased medical surveillance by the adoption of Decree No. 126 CM of 8 February 2010 which abrogates and replaces Decree No. 1756 CM of 20 December 2002. The Committee also notes that the discussions undertaken in the technical committee with competence for the prevention of occupational risks concerning the improvements to be made to the regulations on exposure to ionizing radiations, which were pursued in 2009 together with Nuclear Safety Authority health officials. The Committee notes the stated purpose of these discussions is to improve the situation with respect to the declaration of ionizing sources, the effectiveness of dosimetric monitoring, to develop complementary regulations adapted to the conditions in French Polynesia and to harmonize law and practice in the work and health sectors and that the further objective is to prepare a draft for 2010 for submission to the Parliament of French Polynesia in 2011. With reference to the comments the Committee has been making since 1993, the Committee once again urges the Government to pursue its efforts to institute legislative changes to comply with the Convention, to appoint a medical inspector and to inform the Committee of the results of these efforts including any progress made. The Committee also feels bound to reiterate its previous comments, which read as follows:

In its previous comments, the Committee noted Deliberation No. 91-019 AT of 17 January 1991 adopted pursuant to Act No. 86-845 of 17 July 1986, establishing specific measures for the protection of workers against the danger resulting from external exposure to ionizing radiations.

The Committee noted that the dose limits set forth in section 5 of the Deliberation do not correspond to the revised dose limits set forth in the 1990 Recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP). Referring to Articles 3(1) and 6(2) of the Convention, the Committee requested the Government to report on the steps taken or envisaged in the light of current knowledge to amend the dose limits for occupational exposure to ionizing radiations and to ensure effective protection of pregnant women.

The Committee also noted that, under section 3 of the Deliberation, exposed workers are defined as those who because of their work may be exposed to annual doses of ionizing radiations greater than one tenth of the annual limit set for workers. With reference to Article 8 of the Convention, which calls for maximum permissible dose levels to be fixed for workers not directly engaged in radiation work, but who remain or pass where they may be exposed to ionizing radiations or radioactive substances, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the steps taken or envisaged to ensure that non-radiation workers are not exposed to doses of radiation greater than those set for the general public (i.e. 1 mSv per year).

The Committee further requested the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the effective protection of workers against internal exposure to ionizing radiations in conformity with Article 6, which calls for dose limits to be set not only for external, but also for internal exposure.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that preparations have commenced, in consultation with employers' and workers' representatives, for a progressive revision of the labour legislation, including the provisions on protection against ionizing radiations, and that this process is expected to be finalized by the end of the first quarter of 1996. The Committee notes with interest the information that the revision will take into account the 1990 Recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) in relation to the matters raised in the Committee's previous comments. In particular, it notes with interest that the 1990 ICRP Recommendations will be incorporated with regard to maximum permissible dose limits of ionizing radiations from sources external to the body for all workers who are directly engaged in radiation work and for pregnant women (Articles 3 and 6), for workers not directly engaged in radiation work, but who remain or pass where they may be exposed to ionizing radiations or radioactive substances (Article 8), as well as the maximum permissible doses which may be taken into the body (Article 6) for workers directly engaged in radiation work. Also with reference to its 1992 general observation on the Convention, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to supply information on the provisions adopted to give full effect to the Convention and which are in conformity with the 1990 Recommendations of the ICRP and the 1994 International Basic Safety Standards.

Emergency situations. The Committee refers to the explanations provided in paragraphs 16–27 and 35(c) of its 1992 general observation on the Convention and to paragraphs 233 and 236 of the 1994 International Basic Safety Standards. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide information on the measures taken or contemplated in relation to emergency situations.

Provision of alternative employment. With reference to paragraphs 28–34 and 35(d) of its 1992 general observation on the Convention and the principles set out in paragraphs 96 and 238 of the 1994 International Basic Safety Standards, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or contemplated to ensure effective protection of workers who have received accumulated exposure beyond which they would run an unacceptable risk and who may thus be faced with the dilemma of having to choose between protecting their health or losing their job.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Ghana

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes the Government's brief report indicating that no legislative amendments to ensure compliance with the Convention have yet been taken. It also notes that the Government requests technical assistance from the ILO in reviewing its laws governing the sectors of concern, namely agriculture, forestry, road and rail transport and shipping. The Committee would like to take this opportunity to inform the Government that, in March 2010, the Governing Body adopted a plan of action to achieve widespread ratification and effective implementation of the key instruments in the area of occupational safety and health, the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), its 2002 Protocol and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187) (document GB.307/10/2 (Rev.)). The Committee invites the Government to consider broadening the scope of technical assistance to be requested to include revision of the national law and practice in the country also in the broader context of the key Conventions covered by the Plan of Action. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on any needs it may have in this respect and in order to ensure the effective application of the provisions of the Convention. In the meantime, the Committee is required to repeat its previous observation regarding the scope of application of the Convention which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 17 of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee reminds the Government that, for more than 30 years, the Committee has drawn the Government's attention to the need to extend the legislation giving effect to the Convention to agriculture, forestry, road and rail transport and shipping. In its 1986 report, the Government indicated that it was due to submit the Committee's observations to the tripartite National Advisory Committee on Labour so that it could examine them and take the necessary steps to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee trusts that, in the context of the revision of the labour legislation launched with the adoption of the Labour Code in 2003, the Government will focus on the need to revise the legislation in the field of occupational safety and health, especially in order to give effect to the Convention.

The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps in the very near future to ensure the guarding of machinery in all sectors of economic activity, particularly agriculture, forestry, road and rail transport and shipping.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

[The Government is asked to report in detail in 2012.]

Guatemala

White Lead (Painting) Convention, 1921 (No. 13) (ratification: 1990)

*Article 2 of the Convention. Regulation of the use of white lead, sulphate of lead, and all products containing these pigments, in various types of work. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information supplied by the Government on the application of this provision in practice. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply such information and urges it to adopt legislative and/or regulatory measures to give effect to this provision of the Convention and to supply information in this regard.

*Article 3(1). Measures to ensure that persons under 18 years of age and women of any age are not employed in any painting work of an industrial character involving the use of white lead or sulphate of lead or other products containing these pigments. The Committee notes the Government's indication that regulations for the application of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), and immediate action for the elimination of such forms of labour, to which the prohibition laid down by the Convention with respect to minors applies, were adopted by means of Government Agreement No. 250-2006. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the abovementioned regulations are applied directly with respect to this provision of the Convention or whether it is necessary to amend existing standards for them to be applied.

*Article 5, Part III(a). Notification of cases of lead poisoning. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement to the effect that Agreement No. 1401 of the Executive Board of the Guatemalan Social Security Institute contains a list of occupational diseases which includes lead poisoning. The Committee notes that the agreement considers an occupational disease to be one contracted as an immediate, direct and unquestionable result of the type of work performed by the worker. The Committee requests the Government to supply further information on the application of the agreement and take account of the fact that this provision of the Convention covers cases not only of lead poisoning but also of suspected lead poisoning and that both types of case must be notified. It also requests the Government to indicate the provisions which make notification of cases of lead poisoning and of suspected lead poisoning obligatory and to provide information on their application in practice.

*Article 7. Compilation of statistics on lead poisoning among working painters with respect to morbidity. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Guatemalan Social Security Institute compiles statistics on morbidity and mortality due to lead poisoning and also notes the statement by the Institute in 2009 that no cases of lead poisoning were reported in Guatemala. It is the Committee's understanding, as indicated in its comments on Article 5, that there is no obligation to notify cases of lead poisoning and of suspected lead poisoning, which would have a certain impact on statistics. The Committee requests the Government to supply more detailed information in this respect.

Maximum Weight Convention, 1967 (No. 127) (ratification: 1983)

*Articles 3 and 7 of the Convention. Maximum weight of loads transported by an adult worker. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee again notes with regret that, despite repeated comments made for more than ten years, the Government has still not adopted the new Occupational Safety and Health Regulations. The Committee emphasizes that the indication that new legislation is being drawn up does not free the Government from the obligation to ensure the application of the provisions of the Convention during the transition period and to supply such information in its report. The Committee urges the Government to adopt the aforementioned Regulations and, in the meantime, to take all necessary steps to ensure the full and binding application of these provisions of the Convention and to supply information in this respect.

*Article 5. Steps to ensure adequate training in working techniques with a view to safeguarding health and preventing accidents. The Committee notes that, according to information supplied by the Guatemalan Social Security Institute, training activities in 2009 included providing workers with information on appropriate methods for the manual lifting of loads. The information is provided through occupational safety and health committees in workplaces. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information in this regard.

*Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes that 690 occupational safety and health committees have been set up in enterprises since 2006. It notes the Government's statement that there are no statistics on infringements relating to the handling of loads because there have been no complaints from workers. It further notes the statement in the report that, when inspections are made, checks are carried out to ensure that employers are providing workers with training in the handling of loads; recommendations are made that lifting should be by mechanical means; and, if manual lifting is involved, that the provisions on maximum weight set forth in the Recommendation related to the Convention are respected. Account is also taken of the attached appendices. With regard to the statement that no complaints have been made by workers in relation to maximum weight, the Committee requests the Government to clarify on what basis complaints may be made, given that according to available information the maximum weight established by the Convention is not enshrined in law. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply the information required in relation to this paragraph.

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1989)

Legislation. The Committee notes the indication in the Government's report that section 201 of the new Occupational Safety and Health Regulations lays down provisions on hazardous substances, prescribing that workplaces where there is exposure to dust, gas or vapours that are flammable or harmful to health, especially containing asbestos and lead, must observe specific limits with regard to capacity, ventilation, lighting, temperature and humidity. Section 205 of the same Regulations states that special rules will apply to hazardous substances, and section 7 states that the employer must provide workers with all necessary information regarding hazards and preventive measures and provide workers with the necessary means of protection. The report also indicates that it is planned to draw up specific technical standards on the prevention of hazards arising from the use of asbestos. According to information supplied in other reports, the Committee notes that the Occupational Safety and Health Regulations are still in the process of being adopted. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that effect is given to the provisions of the present Convention in the Regulations and in the technical code of practice which it also plans to adopt. The Committee wishes to emphasize the indication that the new legislation is being drawn up does not free the Government from the obligation to ensure the application of the provisions of the Convention during the transition period and to provide such information in its report. Furthermore, with the view of the fact that the information available does not enable it to gain a full picture of the application of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information on the application of the present Convention, including new legislation, if adopted, and were it has not been, the manner in which the Government ensures the application of the provisions of the Convention.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the Government's statement that, when inspections are conducted by occupational safety and health officers, checks are made that asbestos is not being used in construction materials or in clutch and brake components in motor vehicle repair shops. It also indicates that inspections were conducted at an enterprise manufacturing pipes, laminates and reflective heat insulation material, and that checks were made that asbestos was not being used. The largest cement manufacturing company in Guatemala, Cementos Progreso, was also inspected to ensure that asbestos was not being used, and a letter from the occupational safety and health manager of the enterprise is attached, certifying that asbestos is not being used and that the enterprise has a specific procedure for the handling and disposal of any old structures that might contain asbestos. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the requirements with which compliance is verified by the labour inspectorate as regards workers involved in demolition work, on infringements reported and measures adopted, and to continue to supply information on the application of the Convention in practice.

[The Government is asked to report in detail in 2012.]

Guinea

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the Government indicates, in its last report, that a draft Order respecting air pollution, noise and vibration, cesspools, drinking water and protection against radiations had been prepared, but was subsequently separated into several draft Orders to make them more easily applicable. These draft Orders should have been adopted some time ago. However, the Advisory Commission on Labour and Social Legislation, as a tripartite commission, is composed of various members with very different concerns and sometimes constraints at the national level, which prevented it from completing its usual session. Furthermore, the Government states that the State of Guinea has priorities, even with regard to the adoption of laws and regulations. The Committee states that the Government has been expressing the intention for many years of adopting regulations to protect workers against ionizing radiations, without however in practice taking the necessary measures to this effect. It notes with regret that the Government's attitude disregards the urgency of taking the necessary legislative action for the adoption of regulations respecting protection against ionizing radiations. In this respect, the Committee recalls that this Convention was ratified by Guinea in 1966 and that since then the Committee has had to comment on various points concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee recalls that, when the Government takes the sovereign decision to ratify a Convention, it undertakes to adopt all the necessary measures to give effect to the provisions of the Convention in question. The Committee also considers that, while the Government may cite the existence of other matters which must take priority in the adoption of laws and regulations, it would be appropriate after the number of years that have elapsed for it to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Orders relating to the application of the provisions of this Convention are adopted as soon as possible. The Committee therefore once again hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to report on the adoption of provisions covering all activities involving the exposure of workers to ionizing radiations in the course of their work and in conformity with the dose limits referred to in its general observation of 1992, in the light of current knowledge, such as that contained in the 1990 Recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) and in the Basic Safety Standards for Protection Against Ionising Radiation and for the Safety of Radiation Sources of 1994.

Articles 2, Article 3(1), and Articles 6 and 7 of the Convention. In its previous comment, the Committee noted the Government's statement that the current dose limits correspond to an equivalent of an annual dose of 50 mSv for persons exposed to ionizing radiations. The Committee had recalled the maximum dose limits for ionizing radiations established in the 1990 Recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection and in the 1994 Basic International Safety Standards for Radiation Protection. For workers directly engaged in work exposed to radiation, this limit is 20 mSv per year averaged over five years (100 mSv over five years), and the actual dose must not exceed 50 mSv in any year. The Committee also draws attention to the dose limits envisaged for apprentices aged from 16 to 18 years, set out in Annex II, paragraph II-6, of the 1994 Basic International Safety Standards for Radiation Protection. The Committee once again hopes that the maximum doses and quantities to be included in the Government's draft Order will be in conformity with the maximum permitted doses and quantities, and that the Government does indeed envisage adopting the above draft Order.

Situations of occupational exposure in emergencies and provision of alternative employment. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the measures which have been taken or are envisaged in relation to the points raised in paragraph 35(c) and (d) of the conclusions of its 1992 general observation under this Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 11 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's reply to its previous comments indicating that it has taken due note that section 170 of the Labour Code seems to permit employers to authorize or to order workers to remove safety devices, contrary to Article 11 of the Convention. It also notes the Government's statement that such authorization is only based on prior measures taken by the employer to avoid all exposure to occupational risks, and that in any event it is the responsibility of the employer to promote best safety conditions at workplaces periodically visited by the labour inspectorate. The Committee would nonetheless request the Government to consider including in the draft Labour Code implementing regulations that are in preparation, a specific provision prohibiting such authorization or order to remove safety devices, as required by this Article of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Hygiene (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1964 (No. 120) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's latest reports do not contain a reply to its previous comments and do not include any new information in relation to the report provided in 2003.

The Committee notes that the Government, in accordance with section 171 of the Labour Code, will be submitting draft orders on sanitary facilities in workplaces and the provision of drinking water and non-alcoholic drinks in enterprises and establishments. The Committee also notes the draft decree establishing Committees on Occupational Safety, Health and Working Conditions (CHSCT).

The Committee recalls that, since 1989, it has been asking the Government to adopt the ministerial orders envisaged in section 171 of the Labour Code in the following areas: ventilation (Article 8 of the Convention); lighting (Article 9); drinking water (Article 12); seats for all workers (Article 14); and noise and vibrations (Article 18) in order to give effect to these provisions of the Convention. The Committee hopes that such decrees will be adopted after consultation with the representative organizations of employers and workers, in accordance with Article 5 of the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it drew attention to the fact that all workers who are mainly engaged in office work, including workers in the public services, are covered by the Convention. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures in the near future to ensure the full application of the Convention in the public service and requests the Government to indicate the progress made in this regard.

Part IV of the report form. The Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the fact that the information that it is requested to provide in this respect concerns the number of workers covered by the national legislation and the number and nature of the contraventions reported. This type of information may be found, for example, in the reports of the labour inspection services.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Benzene Convention, 1971 (No. 136) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the Government does not presently intend to amend Order No. 2265/MT of 9 April 1982, but envisages formulating, in consultation with the social partners, technical guidelines on harmful, hazardous and carcinogenic products, particularly benzene. The Committee also notes that the guidelines envisaged will be made available to all users. It hopes that the guidelines will be formulated and adopted without delay and requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this matter.

Article 4(2) of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's information on processes which use methods of work that are as safe as those carried out in an enclosed system. It notes in particular that the increase in labour and health inspections in enterprises and the involvement of Workers' Committees for Health, Safety and Working Conditions (CHSCT) ensure that the processes are carried out under the safest possible conditions. The Committee requests the Government to provide an indication of the frequency of the inspections carried out in enterprises that use benzene. It also requests the Government to provide copies of the statistics collected during inspections, to enable the Committee to assess the extent to which this provision of the Convention is applied in practice.

Article 6(2) and (3). With regard to the concentration of benzene vapour in the air of workplaces, the Committee notes that a draft Order concerning data files on the safety of chemical substances establishes a level not exceeding 10 ppm or 32 mg/m<sup>3</sup> over an eight-hour time-weighted average. The Committee accordingly concludes that the ceiling established in the draft Order is lower than the one established in the Convention when it was adopted in 1971. It nevertheless wishes to point out to the Government that the threshold limit value recommended by the American Conference of Government Industrial Hygienists (ACGIH) is 0.5 ppm over an eight-hour time-weighted average. It therefore invites the Government to take measures to bring the ceiling value established by the draft Order into line with the value recommended by the ACGIH. The Committee also requests the Government to specify the guidelines issued by the competent authority on the procedure for determining the concentration of benzene in places of employment. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the abovementioned Order as soon as it is adopted.

Article 8(2). With regard to limiting the duration of exposure of workers who, for special reasons, may be exposed to concentrations of benzene in the air of places of employment which exceed the maximum established, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, a study is under way on this matter. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee also requests the Government to provide relevant extracts of the inspection reports and the statistics available on the number of employees covered by the legislation as well as the number and nature of violations reported, as requested under Part IV of the report form.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's statement that a draft Order on occupational cancer giving full effect to the provisions of the Convention had been formulated with ILO technical assistance. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether this Order is still under consideration for enactment.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Referring to the comments the Committee has been making for several years concerning Article 2(1) of the Convention, the Government has explained in several of its reports that, under section 4 of Order No. 93/4794/MARAFDPT/DNTLS of 4 June 1993, an employer is required to replace a carcinogenic substance or agent by a non-carcinogenic or less carcinogenic substance or agent provided that one exists, each time that such replacement can be envisaged in view of the given circumstances. The Committee notes that, in its last report, the Government indicates briefly that measures will be taken as soon as the new Labour Code is adopted to align the provisions of section 4 of the abovementioned Order. The Committee asks the Government to send a copy of the new Labour Code as soon as it is adopted and to indicate any progress made in this matter.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(1) of the Convention. The Committee notes that the draft conditions of service of the public service, which is being discussed within the Government, should contain the necessary measures to give full effect to the provisions of this Article of the Convention through their application in practice in all branches of economic activity. The Committee requests the Government to keep the International Labour Office informed of developments relating to these conditions of service and to provide a copy of them when they have been adopted.

Articles 4, 8 and 10. The Committee notes the information concerning a draft Order, prepared by the Government, which was due to be examined by the Advisory Committee on Labour and Social Legislation. This draft text would cover cesspits, drinking water, noise, vibration, air pollution, etc. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether this text is issued under section 171(1) of the Labour Code. It reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 4, the provisions adopted must prescribe the specific measures to be taken both for the prevention of occupational hazards due to air pollution, noise and vibration, and to control and protect workers against these hazards. The Committee also reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 8 of the Convention, the above draft text should provide for the establishment of criteria for determining the hazards of exposure to air pollution, noise and vibration and should specify exposure limits. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not indicate whether the above draft text provides, as required by Article 10, for the provision of personal protective equipment where the measures taken to eliminate hazards do not bring air pollution, noise and vibration within the limits specified by the competent authority. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of the adoption of this draft text, to provide a copy when it has been adopted and to inform it of any other specific measures taken for the application of the provisions of Articles 4, 8 and 10 of the Convention.

Article 9. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the technical measures and supplementary work organizational measures intended to eliminate the above hazards.

Article 14. The Committee notes that the National Occupational Medicine Service is equipped with a laboratory which is inadequately provided with appropriate instruments for its needs, but that the Government plans within a relatively short period to provide the above Service with modern and appropriate equipment. It requests the Government to keep the Office informed of the progress made in equipping the National Occupational Medicine Service and to inform it of any other measures taken to promote such research.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

India

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes the information in the Government's latest report, and the attached documentation, indicating the notification and directive issued under the Atomic Energy (Radiation Protection) Rules, 2004 during the period between 2005 and 2010, and that notifications on dose limits based on the International Commission on Radiological Protection recommendations and on the radiation protection symbol have been prepared and are ready to be issued. The Committee also notes the response provided by the Government, and the relevant sections of the 2005 Atomic Energy Regulation Board (AERB) Safety manual on radiation protection for nuclear facilities (Safety Manual 2005) attached, which indicate the exposure levels requiring prompt investigation and give further effect to Articles 3(1) and 6(2) of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on relevant measures undertaken with regard to the Convention and to provide copies of any notifications or directives issued under the Atomic Energy (Radiation Protection) Rules, 2004 concerning application of the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. Consultation with representatives of employers and workers. The Committee notes the Government's response indicating that during the formulation of the recent notification and directive, consultation was undertaken with relevant stakeholders, including industry representatives. The Committee asks the Government to keep it informed of measures taken to consult with the concerned representatives of employers and workers on all aspects related to the application of the Convention, including the development and review of relevant legislation and ongoing development of notifications under the Atomic Energy (Radiation Protection) Rules, 2004.

Article 14. Alternative employment or other measures offered for maintaining income where continued assignment to work involving exposure is medically inadvisable. The Committee notes the response provided by the Government indicating that under the Safety Manual 2005, cases of exposure exceeding the dose of 20 mSv in a year should be investigated by an exposure investigation committee, which should include as a member the medical officer of the facility. The Government indicates that one of the functions of this committee is to suggest further action in respect of work to be allocated to the person who has been advised to be removed from radioactive areas as a result of exposure. The Committee further notes the information that AERB team members verify that over-exposed persons who are removed from radioactive work are suitably deployed in a non-radioactive area for a specified period. The Government indicates that no cases concerning loss of wages as a result of alternative employment has been brought to the attention of the AERB. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the specified time period that applies for workers removed from radioactive work due to over-exposure; and to indicate whether other means for maintaining income are offered in cases where alternative employment does not cover the entire duration in which workers are medically advised not to continue work involving exposure.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report regarding the application of the Convention through the relevant administrative procedures in place. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the application of this Convention in practice, with particular reference to any investigations carried out under part 11 of the 2005 Safety Manual, and to specify any situations where workers have been removed from radioactive work and provided with alternative employment. The Committee also asks the Government to provide general information on the number of workers covered by the Convention and the number and nature of infringements reported by the labour inspectorate.

Italy

Maximum Weight Convention, 1967 (No. 127) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government in its last report, including Legislative Decree No. 81 of 9 April 2008, "Single Text for the Protection of Safety and Health in Workplaces (TULS)". The Committee notes with satisfaction that, by means of sections 167–170 and Annex XXXIII of the abovementioned Decree, Italian law establishes that the manual handling of loads is to be avoided as far as practicable and, where it is unavoidable, the individual risk factors must be evaluated provided that, in any event, the maximum weight (in optimum conditions) shall be 25 kilograms for adult men and 15 kilograms for adult women. Annex XXXIII establishes among other things that, without prejudice to the provisions in force on maternity protection and support and on young workers account shall also be taken, in evaluating individual risk factors, of differences of sex and age, clothing, footwear and personal effects, and the adequacy or suitability of knowledge or training. Technical standard ISO 11228, Parts 1, 2 and 3, shall also apply. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of these provisions in practice.

Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139) (ratification: 1981)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information in the Government's most recent report including its response to the Committee's previous comments. The Committee notes the information that the Government intends to give increased attention to accidents at work and that through the recently adopted Law concerning the reorganization and reform of standards on health and safety (Act No. 123 of 3 August 2007), the Government has received delegated authority to reorganize and reform the standards on occupational safety and health, to improve the cooperation between and vigilance exerted by the different national authorities supervising compliance with national legislation on occupational safety and health. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed on all measures taken to implement this national reform in the area of occupational safety and health, including on specific actions taken to improve the application of the present Convention.

Article 1(1)–(3) of the Convention. Prohibited substances or substances subject to authorization. The Committee notes the information submitted by the Government on the adoption of Legislative Decree No. 257 of 25 July 2006 (OG, No. 211 of 11 September 2006) concerning cessation of the use of asbestos. The Committee notes, inter alia, that the maximum exposure limit for all types of asbestos has now been lowered to the EU standard (see Directive 2003/18/CE regarding exposure of workers to the risks arising from asbestos) of 0.1 fibres per cubic centimetre of air measured as a time-weighted average over eight hours, and that any demolition activity and removal of asbestos can only be carried out by recognized entities qualified to carry out such work. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the practical application of these provisions of the Convention, including on progress made concerning the implementation of Legislative Decree No. 257 of 25 July 2006 concerning cessation of the use of asbestos.

Article 3. Preventive measures and record keeping. In response to its previous comments, including the observations made by the Italian General Confederation of Workers (CGIL), the Italian Confederation of Trade Unions (CISL) and the Union of Italian Workers (UIL) that relevant legislative provisions calling for the establishment of an appropriate system of records have not been effectively implemented in practice, the Committee welcomes the information that the Government has initiated work, inter alia, with the assistance of the Higher Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (ISPESL), for the realization of an information system capable of determining carcinogenic situations at work, as provided for in Section 71 of Legislative Decree No. 626/94 on job security (as amended). Against this background, the Committee requests the Government to continue to report on the application of this provision of the Convention, including on progress as regards the initiative to reform its system for keeping records.

Article 5. Alternative employment. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not provide any additional information in this respect. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to provide additional information on the application in practice of this Article of the Convention.

Part IV of the report form and Article 6(c). With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the updated information on exposure data and documented estimates of the number of exposed workers by country, carcinogen, and industry based on the carcinogen exposure (CAREX) database. The Committee notes that for the period 2000–03, the CAREX report submitted includes data on 85 CAREX agents reassessed, taking into account changes in exposure patterns and in numbers of employees by industrial class. According to this CAREX report, out of 21.8 million employees in Italy (broken down as 19.4 in industry and services, and 2.4 in agriculture), 4.2 million (or slightly less than 20 per cent of the workforce) were exposed to the agents included in the study. Prevalence of exposure was highest for environmental (passive) tobacco smoke (800,000 exposures); solar radiation (700,000); diesel engine exhaust (500,000); wood dust (280,000); silica (250,000); lead and inorganic lead compounds (230,000); benzene (180,000); hexavalent chromium compounds (160,000); glass wool (140,000); and PAHs (polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons) (120,000). According to this updated study the ten most common exposures remain “the same as those already identified in CAREX”, with the “relevant exception of asbestos”. The Committee notes that former and current CAREX estimates indicate that asbestos exposure would have decreased with approximately 80 per cent from 352,691 exposures to 76,100. While noting this updated and informative study, the Committee again requests the Government to provide further and more recent information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in Italy, based on extracts from labour inspection reports and, if such statistics are available, the number of workers covered by the legislation, disaggregated by gender if possible, or other measures which give effect to the Convention, the number and nature of contraventions reported, the number, nature and cause of the diseases, etc.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Japan

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 2005)

The Committee notes the Government's report and the legislation attached including the Supplementary Provisions of Mining Safety Law as Amended in 2004 (Law No. 94 of 2004), and the information that the 2006 ban of manufacturing, importing, transferring, providing and using asbestos is provided for in section 55 of the Industrial Safety and Health Act and section 16 of its Order for Enforcement and that subsequently, the Regulations for Equipment of Ships were amended in 2006, prohibiting the use of materials containing asbestos on ships. Furthermore, it also notes that the Government indicates that even before these amendments, it ensured compliance with the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea (SOLAS Convention) which prohibits the new installation of materials which contain asbestos on all ships. The Committee notes the information provided regarding effect given to Articles 14, 15(2) and (3) of the Convention. The Committee further notes the comments from the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO) attached to the report and the Government's response thereto. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on relevant laws and regulations giving effect to the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that, in terms of past exposure, it is currently estimated (up to 30 June 2010) that there are 696 retired seafarers and seven miners which have been engaged in work involving exposure to asbestos. The Government is requested to indicate measures taken to apply the Convention, in particular the provisions of Article 21, to the seafarers and miners at issue.

Article 17. Demolition work. The Committee notes the JTUC-RENGO's comments that while national legislation in this area has been properly developed, the Government does not properly supervise their application in practice and that, at demolition sites, debris and building materials containing asbestos are not properly separated from crushed rock for recycling. The Committee notes that the Government in its response recognizes the importance of the issues raised by JTUC-RENGO and that it has taken the appropriate measures, including the intention of the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare (MHLW), together with the prefectural labour bureaus, to conduct joint inspections of demolition sites; and through a cooperation agreement between the MHLW, the Ministry of Land, Infrastructure and Transportation, and the Ministry of the Environment that these three ministries will jointly ensure an improved application of relevant laws and regulations. The Committee requests the Government to continue to report on measures taken to ensure a proper application of laws and regulations giving effect to this Article of the Convention.

Article 19. Prevention of pollution of the general environment by asbestos dust released from the workplace.

Article 21. Medical check-ups of workers exposed to asbestos. The Committee notes the JTUC-RENGO's comments concerning adverse health effects on workers who worked at workplaces adjacent to the asbestos-contaminated sites, specifically postmen going in and out of such sites and – with reference to Article 21 – the need to follow-up on their health through medical check-ups. The Committee notes the response from the Government that the situations referred to by JTUC-RENGO did not concern workers engaged in work directly related to handling asbestos, but that workers who are exposed to asbestos during their work which causes a health impairment are, in principle, entitled to receive work-related accident compensation and that, in addition, those who are not covered by the work-related accident compensation insurance system, i.e. self-employed workers and residents in the affected area, may be subject to the Act on Asbestos Health Damage Relief. The Committee notes that the situation to which the JTUC-RENGO refers seems to fall outside the scope of the application of Article 21 but would rather be covered by provisions in Article 19 requiring that the competent authority and the employers to take appropriate measures to prevent pollution of the general environment by asbestos dust released from the workplace. The Committee requests the Government to indicate measures taken, by employers and the competent authority, to ensure application of Article 19 of the Convention and to indicate whether the referenced Act on Asbestos Health Damage Relief would be applicable in these situations.

Jordan

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1964)

Article 4 of the Convention. Obligation of the vendor, the person letting out on hire or transferring the machinery in any other manner or the exhibitor. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's response that such obligations are not provided for directly by the Labour Code, but can be addressed through legislation of other bodies and joint committees with relevant monitoring bodies in which the Ministry of Labour participates. The Committee notes that the information provided does not appear to address the issue raised in its previous comments, namely that the obligation to apply the provisions of Article 2 of the Convention shall rest on the vendor, the person letting out on hire or transferring the machinery in any other manner, or the exhibitor. The Committee would like to refer the Government to paragraph 165 of its General Survey of 1987 on safety in the working environment, whereby the Committee pointed out that a "general prohibition in the legislation on the sale, etc. of dangerous machinery is not sufficient if it is not accompanied by a provision placing the obligation to ensure compliance with these measures on the vendor and other persons carrying out such acts". In light of the above comments, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the specific provisions in national legislation that give effect to Article 4 of the Convention.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the introduction of a national week on occupational safety and health in 2004 and the agreement to hold it every year. The Committee further notes the recent statistical information provided by the Government highlighting the achievements, the gradual increase in the number of inspectors and that 48,640 inspections were undertaken in 2009, in which 223 violations of occupational safety and health were reported. The Committee also notes that, while there has been an increase in the number of inspectors since 2008, there has been a decrease in the number of inspectorial visits since 2007. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the nature of the violations and the reason for the decrease in the number of inspectorial visits. The Committee would also request the Government to continue to provide statistical information on the application of the Convention in practice.

Republic of Korea

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2008)

The Committee notes the Government's first report including the legislative texts attached. The Committee also notes the comments by the Korea Employers Federation (KEF) and the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU) attached to the Government's report. The Committee further notes the comments transmitted by the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU) on 27 August 2010 and the Government's response thereto submitted on 28 October 2010.

Article 1 of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding the effect given to the Convention, inter alia, through the Occupational Safety and Health Act No. 4220 of 13 January 1990 (as amended until 4 June 2010) (OSH Act), its Enforcement Decree and related regulations. The Enforcement Decree has not been made available to the Committee. The Committee notes that the OSH Act applies to all businesses, workplaces and workers; however, the Government indicates that, by virtue of the Enforcement Decree, certain businesses, workplaces and workers, listed in table 1 to the Enforcement Decree, have been excluded from certain provisions of the OSH Act. As noted by the FKTU, the Government has not provided any information on progress towards a wider application of the Convention. The Government is requested to provide further information on measures taken to give effect to this provision of the Convention and to make available a copy of the Enforcement Decree to the OSH Act including, its table 1.

Article 4(1). Formulating, implementing and periodically reviewing a coherent national policy in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers. Article 5(d). Communication and cooperation. The Committee notes the information provided that the current national policy, as articulated in the Third Five-Year Plan for Industrial Prevention, was established following a meeting in April 2010 to gather opinions from workers' and employers' representatives. The Committee also notes that the Government periodically checks the implementation of each task in this plan through expert committees under the Deliberation Committee on Industrial Accident Compensation Insurance and Prevention, including, employers, workers and public interest members, and that this Deliberation Committee is tasked with the consideration and coordination of mid- and long-term basic OSH plans on industrial accident prevention and major policies. The Government also refers to the Deliberation Committee in the context of the application of Article 5(d). The Committee notes, however, that, according to the FKTU, the referenced expert committees have not been set up. In this context, the Committee would like to refer the Government to paragraph 49 of the 2009 General Survey on occupational safety and health, in which it is stated as follows: "The social partners are thus to be involved in all stages of the national policy-making process. It should be underscored that the wording in Article 4(1) ... refers to action to be taken in consultation with representative organizations of employers and workers, as opposed to after consultation with, as often provided for in other ILO Conventions. As indicated in the preparatory work [of Convention No. 155] this implied an obligation not merely to consult once but to have a continuing dialogue as necessary. It also implied that this obligation did not affect the authority of the member States, as the case may be, its legislature, to take the final decision." Against this background, and in light of the comment from the FKTU, the Committee requests the Government to provide further information on how the consultations are carried out with the most representative organizations of employers and workers as prescribed in the Convention including, in particular, in Articles 4(1) and 5(e).

Article 9(2). Adequate penalties. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding functioning of the labour inspectorate and the penalties that can be imposed pursuant to Chapter IX of the OSH Act. The Committee also notes that, according to the KCTU, the Government is not applying these provisions properly, and that the inspectorates mainly impose corrective orders rather than fines, although the latter have a stronger preventive effect. The KCTU refers to statistics from 2007 indicating that, in 96.2 per cent of all cases, only corrective orders were issued including two specific cases with further details where, according to the KCTU, the orders were ignored which in both cases resulted in the death of a worker. The Committee notes the Government's response that the main purpose of sanctions is not to punish employers but to prevent accidents and, in any event, it does not only issue corrective orders, but also takes the proper administrative and judicial actions, such as suspension of the use of machines, suspension of work, imposition of fines, prosecution, etc. While not disputing the statistics referred to by the FKTU, the Government indicates that, according to section 15 of the code of practice for occupational safety and health inspectors (Order No. 703 of the Minister of Employment and Labour, 31 July 2009), a correction order is used as a punishment for minor violations in accordance with specified criteria and this sanction can accomplish its purpose without excessively limiting the rights of those subject thereto. The Committee also notes that, according to the Government's report, it introduced in May 2007 a reliability assessment system to assess the accuracy and precision of the results monitoring of the work environment. In this respect, the Committee notes that the FKTU states that no reliability assessment was conducted until the end of July 2010. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on measures taken to give effect to the present Article, with reference to the comments by the KCTU and the FKTU.

Article 10. Provision of guidance to workers and employers. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that, in 2008 and 2009 respectively, a total of 35,325 and 30,772 workplaces were provided with "guidance and inspection". The Committee also notes that, according to the KEF, the Government should also ensure that guidance is provided to workers so as to ensure their compliance with legal obligations. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on measures taken to give effect to the present Article, with reference to the comment by the KEF.

Article 14. Including OSH at all levels of education and training. The Committee notes the reference made by the Government to education materials distributed in schools to promote safety culture. The Committee also notes the comments by the FKTU that this Article also requires the Government to take measures so as to promote the provision of information to meet the training needs of workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on measures taken to give effect to the present Article, with reference to the comment by the FKTU.

Article 15. Arrangements for coordination and consultations with workers' and employer's representatives. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that the Ministry of Employment and Labour coordinates the activities of various authorities and bodies at the national level and that it consults with workers' and employers' representatives on occupational safety and health legislation. The Committee also notes the comments by the KEF that the referenced consultations with the most representative organizations of employers and workers cannot be carried out effectively due to time constraints imposed by the Government. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on measures taken to give effect to the present Article, with reference to the comment by the KEF.

Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187) (ratification: 2008)

The Committee notes the Government's first report including the legislative texts attached. The Committee also notes the comments by the Korea Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU) dated 27 August 2010 and the Government's response thereto submitted on 28 October 2010.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Definition of the term "national policy". Article 4(2)(b). The functions and responsibilities of the Government in respect of occupational safety and health. The Committee notes the reference made by the Government to, inter alia, sections 4–6 of the Occupational Safety and Health Act (No. 4220 of 13 January 1990 as amended until 4 June 2010) (OSH Act) detailing the respective roles of the Government, the employers, workers and other interested parties in relation to OSH. The Committee also notes that, according to the KCTU, the Government is engaged in a process to devolve its OSH management and supervisory functions to local governments and that this process is being carried out without consultation with the representative organizations of workers and employers. The Committee notes that, in response, the Government confirms that, in March 2010, the Presidential Commission for Decentralization decided to transfer part of the OSH duties of the Ministry of Employment and Labour to local governments, that this decision will be confirmed when the revision of relevant laws and regulations is completed, and the consultations will be held with representative organizations of workers and employers on the proposed legislation. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the comments by the KCTU on the redistribution of OSH functions of governmental authorities and on the modalities for cooperation between different authorities in order to maintain a coherent national policy in accordance with the principles of Article 4 of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155).

Article 4(2)(c). Mechanisms for ensuring compliance. The Committee notes the information provided that the Ministry of Employment and Labour takes overall responsibility for the administration of OSH-related inspection, and labour inspectors who are in charge of OSH in regional and district labour offices carry out such inspection. A labour inspector, if necessary, has a right to enter a workplace, to question a concerned person, to examine books, documents and other things, to conduct a safety and health inspection, and to collect raw materials or equipment to the extent necessary for the examination without compensation, in order to see if the workplace complies with the OSH Act and other national laws and regulations. The Committee also notes the comments made by the KCTU concerning the application of this Article, as well as on Convention No. 155, and which are examined in the context of the latter. With reference to its observation concerning the application of Article 9 of Convention No. 155, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the functioning of and efforts to maintain, progressively develop and periodically review its labour inspection system.

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has yet again failed to submit a report on the application of this Convention. It further notes that the most recent report on the application of this Convention was received in 1994 and that it is yet uncertain whether Articles 5(3), 6(2), 12 and 14 are fully applied in the country. The Committee also notes, however, the publication in 2008 by the Government, in collaboration with the ILO, of Occupational safety and health in the Kyrgyz Republic – National profile. According thereto a number of laws, regulations and technical standards have been adopted since 1994 which indicate promising developments in the area of occupational safety and health. The Committee also notes that according to this national profile the Government is considering the ratification of the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), the Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167), and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187). Welcoming these developments, the Committee asks the Government to report on progress in this regard. It also urges the Government to fulfil its reporting obligations under this ratified Convention, and invites the Government to consider whether it would benefit from technical assistance from the Office regarding the development of legislation giving effect to the provisions of the present Convention and the reporting obligations associated with such ratified Conventions. In the meantime the Committee must yet again repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 5(3) of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of collective and other agreements containing mutual obligations designed to ensure safe and healthy working conditions.

Article 6(2). The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the general procedures prescribed for the collaboration of employers where two or more of them undertake activities simultaneously at one workplace. It also asks the Government to provide a copy of the Standards and Regulations for Health and Safety in Construction Work (No. III-4-80) and of the Order of the Ministry of Industry and Energy governing work done jointly by several enterprises at the same workplace in coalmining.

Article 12. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the Regulations on state medical supervision referred to in its report.

Article 14. The Committee asks the Government to describe the measures taken to promote research, in accordance with this Article.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1988)

The Committee notes the information provided concerning effect given to Article 10 of the Convention.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not replied to its comments concerning Articles 6 and 7 that it has been repeating since 1992. The Committee must therefore reiterate its previous requests which were drafted as the following:

Article 6 of the Convention. Prohibition by national laws and regulations of the use of machinery without appropriate guards. Noting that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments, the Committee requests the Government, once again, to indicate the measures that have been taken or are envisaged in order to prohibit, in accordance with the Convention, the use of machinery any dangerous part of which, including the point of operation, is without appropriate guards.

Article 7. Employer's duty to ensure compliance. The Committee notes the information concerning the effect given in practice to the Occupational Health and Safety Authority and Act 2000 (Act No. XXVII of 2000), and in particular the statement that there are few offences reported and sanctions imposed for contraventions of the employers' obligations relating to the use of dangerous machinery. It notes the Government's statement that one of the problems is that machinery is often second-hand. The Committee requests the Government to indicate measures taken or envisaged to ensure employers' obligations under Article 7 for second-hand machinery.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Mexico

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1984)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Tripartite Committee (representation made under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO). The Committee notes the discussions that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2010, the conclusions of the Conference Committee, a communication from the National Union of Federal Roads and Bridges Access and Related Services of Mexico which was sent to the Government on 2 August 2010, and the Government's report received on 14 September 2010.

A. Conference Committee on the Application of Standards. The Committee notes that in its conclusions the Conference Committee asked the Government to provide detailed up-to-date information for the 2010 meeting of the Committee of Experts on the follow-up measures taken with respect to the recommendations adopted by the Governing Body, concerning the representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution in relation to the accident that took place in the Pasta de Conchos mine. The Government was to have provided information on the number and nature of accidents, in both the formal and informal sectors of the mining industry; the risk evaluation methods used in the mining industry; the compensation actually paid and compensation still owing to the survivors and the families of the victims – including compensation for damages to be borne by the company involved in this case – and the relevant state benefits, and also any social benefits provided for the families of miners without social protection. Furthermore, the Committee urged the Government to ensure that all relevant actions and measures relating to this case are taken in close cooperation with the social partners and asked the Committee of Experts to continue to follow up on events and on progress made.

B. Communication from the National Union of Workers of Federal Roads and Bridges Access and Related Services of Mexico (SNTCPF). The Committee notes the detailed communication which alleges failure by the Government of Mexico to comply with the recommendations made by the Governing Body in its report on the representation. The Committee notes that the trade union – which was one of the complainants – asks for a recommendation to be issued complementing the report on the representation (document GB.304/14/8). The Committee informs the union that, according to established practice, when facts and allegations similar to those of a representation are presented, it is for the Committee to examine them in the context of the follow-up to measures taken further to the recommendations made by the Governing Body. Noting that the Government has still not made its comments, the Committee will deal with this communication in greater detail at its next meeting, in the light of any comments that the Government sees fit to make. The key points of the lengthy communication would appear to be the following:

- (a) Registration of reliable data on existing mines, adequate OSH measures and labour inspection. The trade union alleges failure to apply Official Mexican Standard NOM-032-STPS-2008, inasmuch as there is no register providing a full list of legal, illegal and clandestine mines in the coalmining region of Coahuila, and as a result it is impossible to plan the necessary measures, the labour inspectorate is unable to monitor them and there is no way of knowing the percentage of mines that were inspected. The union refers to discrepancies in the figures for the mines recognized by different state bodies (the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (STPS), the Mexican Geological Service (DGM), the Ministry of the Environment and Natural Resources (SEMARNAT) and COCOSHT (the state advisory committee on OSH)).

- (b) Pocito mines. Lulú mine and “Ferber” pocito mine. The trade union’s report contains extensive information on the pocito mines, stating that many of them are clandestine. With regard to the “Lulú” mine, the union describes the lack of OSH measures in the mine and indicates that, although the mine was closed down, nobody informed the workers. The union indicates that the various inspection documents are not displayed in the mine and the workers are not informed of them. As regards the “Ferber” pocito mine, it indicates that the labour inspectorate, during an inspection on 13 August 2009, established that there was failure to comply with 76 safety rules, including the requirement for the mine to have two exits and the provision of a methanometer and emergency breathing equipment. After the failure to comply with 76 safety rules was recorded, the inspection report stated as follows: “The representative of the enterprise is therefore informed that the access of personnel working inside the mine must be restricted until the employer or legal representative of the enterprise complies with the safety measures indicated. Consequently, should the employer or legal representative continue with work inside the mine, he will be held fully responsible for endangering the physical safety of the workers in the event of any accident”. The union indicates that on 11 September 2009 a 23-year-old worker died as a result of a rockslide. According to the union, as far as the Coahuila STPS is concerned, it appears sufficient to fill in inspection forms and have the workers believe that it is protecting their rights, and the union describes inspection activities in the region in question as “acts of simulation”.
- (c) Impact of measures. The union indicates that the enactment of NOM-032-STPS-2008 did not produce any change in the region, that even in 2009 the mortality rate increased by 200 per cent, and that enterprises will not comply with the standard as long as it is cheaper to pay fines than pay for the introduction of safety measures.
- (d) Systematic negligence. Ventilation. The union states that the accident at Pasta de Conchos was not an isolated tragic incident but evidence of systematic negligence in the application of safety and health standards. It states that it can prove that the accident was due not only to a lack of “dusting” but also to a lack of adequate ventilation. It claims that this is important for the future since the Government continues to maintain that it did not know what happened to cause the accident and this claim of not knowing has allowed the suspicion to remain, in the history of coalmining in Mexico, that it could have been a worker who was responsible and has enabled the Government to shirk its responsibilities in OSH. The union adds that the Government is responsible for determining unequivocally the cause of the accident. The union also claims that there are plans to exploit the methane gas connected with the coal and that the Government states that it will extract the methane gas beforehand and this will make for greater safety, but in reality this will lead to more fatalities because there are no applicable safety and health standards. The union also mentions that workers were reportedly recruited to locate the bodies of the deceased workers without any inspection of the site and with the only available methanometer non-operational.
- (e) Compensation and treatment of the victims’ families. The union states that the relevant benefits were calculated incorrectly, payments started at the end of 2009 but without being adjusted to wage levels, that the Pasta de Conchos Family Support Association was not included in dialogue, that the victims’ families have been improperly treated by various state bodies and that their lawyers have been subjected to harassment, threats and intimidation and their offices have been raided.

The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the communication from the trade union and, in particular, on the points referred to by the Committee in the above paragraphs, taking account of the general context of the follow-up to the Governing Body’s report, including the relevant comments indicated below.

C. The Government’s report. The Committee will examine in the following paragraphs the information supplied by the Government as follow-up to the recommendations of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards and the Committee’s observation of 2009, relating to the measures adopted to comply with the recommendations made in the aforementioned Governing Body report (GB.304/14/8).

Request for information on any developments concerning the possible ratification of the Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176), based on Official Mexican Standard NOM-032-STPS-2008 concerning safety in underground coalmines. Ventilation. Protection against undue consequences in the event of interruption of work. In its previous observation the Committee noted the adoption of Official Mexican Standard NOM-032-STPS-2008 of 23 December 2008 concerning safety in underground coalmines, drawn up with the technical assistance of the Office. Moreover, while noting the Government’s indication that this standard includes provisions from Convention No. 176, the Committee hoped that this could facilitate the ratification of that Convention and asked the Government to supply information on any developments in this respect. The Committee notes that, according to the report, the STPS recommended in 1998 that the Convention should not be ratified on the grounds that the labour legislation does not have such specific labour standards as those laid down within Article 7(f) of Convention No. 176 which establishes the obligation of the employer to ensure adequate ventilation for all underground workings to which access is permitted, and Article 13(e), concerning the right of workers to remove themselves from any location at the mine when circumstances arise which appear, with reasonable justification, to pose a serious danger to their safety or health. The Government indicates that no amendments have been made to date to the Federal Labour Act in relation to these two aspects of the Convention because the reasons why Convention No. 176 has not been ratified continue to apply. The Committee notes that Chapter 8 of the recently adopted NOM-032-STPS-2008 contains detailed provisions on ventilation in coalmines and that it ascertained in previous comments that Article 13 of Convention No. 155 applies in practice in Mexico. The Committee refers to this last matter in its direct request. The Committee requests the Government to contemplate the possibility of requesting technical assistance from the Office with a view to overcoming the remaining obstacles to the possible ratification of Convention No. 176. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information in this regard.

I. Measures to be adopted in consultation with the social partners

Articles 4 and 7 of the Convention. National policy and reviews, either overall or in respect of particular areas. The Committee notes that the Governing Body, in paragraph 99(b) of its report, invited the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to continue to take the necessary measures in order to:

- (i) ensure full compliance with Convention No. 155, and, in particular, continue to review and periodically examine the situation as regards the safety and health of workers, in the manner provided for in Articles 4 and 7 of Convention No. 155, with particular attention given to hazardous work activities such as coalmining. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, the National Advisory Committee on Occupational Safety and Health (COCONASHT) is working on nine projects, including the development of a national information system on occupational accidents and diseases, and that the Government also provides information on online training workshops and diplomas. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the aforementioned system and requests it to provide further details of the application of Articles 4 and 7 of the Convention to hazardous types of work such as coalmining. The Government is also requested to indicate whether it has a register of existing mines, including pocito mines, and to provide information on OSH policies adopted or planned in relation to large, medium-sized and small enterprises;
  - (ii) conclude and adopt the new regulatory framework for OSH in the coalmining industry, taking into account the Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176), and the ILO code of practice on safety and health in underground coalmines, 2006. The Committee notes the indication in the Government's report that, in relation to NOM-032-STPS-2008, a special inspection operation for underground coalmines was launched on 25 March 2009. The Government indicates that an inspection protocol was used for this operation which was submitted to the members of the Subcommittee for the Coalmining Region at its ordinary session of 17 March 2009 and that this was updated for the actions of 2010, including the material relating to training and skills. The Government also indicates that between March and October 2010 a total of 11 underground mines and 20 pits (pozos) were inspected in Coahuila. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on its application in practice, also taking into account the comments made by the SNTCPF.
- Article 9. Adequate and appropriate inspection system.* The Committee also notes paragraph 99(b)(iii) and (iv) and 99(d) of the Governing Body's report, in which the Government was asked, in consultation with the social partners, to continue to take the necessary measures in order to:
- (iii) ensure, by all necessary means, the effective monitoring of the application in practice of laws and regulations on occupational safety and health and the working environment, through an adequate and appropriate system of labour inspection, in compliance with Article 9 of Convention No. 155, in order to reduce the risk that accidents such as the accident in Pasta de Conchos occurs in the future;
  - (iv) monitor closely the organization and effective operation of its system of labour inspection taking due account of the Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158), including its paragraph 26(1);
- (d) review the potential that the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), provides to support the measures that the Government is taking in order to strengthen the application of its laws and regulations in the area of occupational safety and health in mines.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the STPS is undertaking various actions within the context of the sectoral objective aimed at promotion and monitoring of compliance with labour standards. This objective seeks to increase the number of workplaces which comply with OSH standards, undertake actions relating to the supervision and monitoring of inspection, generate a culture of self-evaluation, and impose penalties designed to have a heavy impact on offenders. The Government highlights the strategy implemented to strengthen the enforcement of labour standards with a view to ensuring that all large and medium-sized coalmining companies comply with the laws and regulations relating to OSH and implement remedial measures. The Government indicates that, in cases where conditions endangering the health, safety and lives of the workers and posing a risk to installations are detected, the Federal Labour Inspectorate restricts coalmining activities from the date of the inspection visit in question until such time as safety and health measures are complied with, and proceeds to issue a warning. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the text of the warning is as follows: "Imminent danger. The Ministry of Labour and Social Security (STPS) restricts the access of workers to this area .... In the event that work operations continue, they shall be the exclusive responsibility of the employer". The Committee notes that the trade union considers in its communication that the abovementioned measure is inadequate and refers to the example of the Felber mine. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the labour inspectorate enforces the interruption of work in areas where there is imminent danger, and to examine these matters in consultation with the social partners and provide information in this respect.

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee also notes the information on the follow up given to labour inspection measures. It notes that 931 measures were ordered, 899 of which were not upheld (owing to various situations such as areas to which measures applied no longer being exploited, and therefore being closed and sealed off, or machinery and equipment to which the measure applied being withdrawn from service), 32 measures were upheld and, of these, 20 were complied with and 12 were not complied with. The Committee considers that, in the light of the report on the representation, it is essential to verify that action is taken to follow up on the measures issued, and requests the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to examine ways of creating mechanisms enabling it to substantially increase its activities to uphold or verify the implementation of the measures issued and to continue to supply information in this regard.

Degree of application and impact of the measures taken. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, inspections are undertaken on the basis of the “Protocol of inspection for underground coalmines”, which coincides with the provisions of the procedure for the evaluation of conformity (PEC), provided for in Chapter 18 of NOM-032-STPS-2008. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that in April 2010 it launched the special inspection operation to inspect underground coalmines, including 20 pits (pozos) and open-cast mines, and that 28 workplaces were visited with 88 inspections, of which 30 related to general safety and health conditions. The Committee observes that, since the accident, the Government has established a particular standard and a protocol of application. It notes, however, that the figures supplied do not provide a clear picture of the degree of application of OSH standards in coalmines. In order to verify the improvements made and progress achieved, it would be necessary to have reliable data on the number and types of mines that exist in the state where the accident occurred, drawing a distinction between large, medium-sized and small mines (pocitos), the estimated percentage of unregistered mines, workers and accidents. This would enable progress to be measured at intervals. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the mines existing in the state of Coahuila, drawing a distinction between large, medium-sized and small mines (pocitos), indicating if possible the number of registered and unregistered pocitos, the number of accidents and fatalities each year, and existing policy for ensuring compliance with OSH standards in the three abovementioned sectors. Finally, the Committee repeats the request for information made by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, including on the risk evaluation methods used in the mining sector.

II. Other measures

Compensation. The Committee noted that the Governing Body, in paragraph 99(c) of the document referred to above, asked the Government to:

- (c) ensure, considering the time that has elapsed since the accident, that adequate and effective compensation is paid, without further delay, to all the 65 families concerned and that adequate sanctions are imposed on those responsible for this accident.

Humanitarian aid. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the elements laid out by the Office of the Federal Attorney for the Defence of Labour (PROFEDET) in its requests representing the widows and children of 56 deceased workers. It also notes that 750,000 pesos were granted to 63 out of 65 beneficiaries and 80,800 pesos were granted to 61 families and that this money was not by way of compensation but by way of “humanitarian aid”. The Committee notes that the trade union disagrees with various aspects of the criteria used and the amounts due. The Committee considers it essential with respect to the workers who died in the accident at the Pasta de Conchos mine that their families receive amounts of money which enable them to live decently and that the State and the employers assume their responsibilities in this regard. The Committee indicates that it will deal with this matter in depth in its next comment and requests the Government to make comments on the matters raised by the trade union in its communication and also to indicate whether, in addition to this “humanitarian aid”, the families of the workers have received adequate and effective compensation and the amount thereof. Furthermore, it is unclear to the Committee, from the information supplied, how the amounts of 750,000 and 80,800 pesos were determined which, according to the Government, are not compensation (for example, whether wage supplements were counted and, if so, which) and the criteria for changing the amount from the initial offer made by Industrial Minera México (IMMSA), which was the equivalent of ten years’ wages according to paragraph 26 of the report, to the subsequent amount, which was lower, and it requests the Government to indicate clearly which of the two amounts was actually granted to the workers.

Compensation. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the amounts determined by way of compensation and other benefits to the family members of the 65 deceased miners were determined in each specific case in the legal proceedings instituted by the families. The Government indicates that IMMSA, on its own behalf or acting on behalf of General Hulla (GH), has deposited credit instruments in 58 cases which the Government indicates with their numbers; in five cases the corresponding cheques have not been displayed and two are still being processed. The Committee points out to the Government that it cannot fully understand from this information whether adequate and effective compensation was paid rapidly in accordance with the national legislation. It also notes the disagreement of the trade union and the families on this point. The Committee requests the Government to provide clearer information in this respect, also taking into account the comments of the trade union, and any other information that contributes to an understanding of the effect given to this recommendation.

State and social benefits. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, through the Ministry of Social Development, support amounting to 1 million pesos was provided to cater for 65 productive projects of up to 15,000 pesos per person; a pledge was made to provide workshops on productive support; a pledge was made to support a project for the construction and equipment of a social, cultural and childcare centre for women belonging to the families of the accident victims; basic products were also provided; INFONAVIT liquidated the total balance of the credits previously taken out by the deceased workers as well as measures relating to mortgages, while the National Fund for Public Housing provided support with a grant of 33,000 pesos so that the persons concerned could obtain housing. While noting the information supplied by the Government, the Committee cannot fail to note that the communication from the trade union, including its appendices such as the report from the Pastoral Laboral National Team, seriously questions the payments and benefits and the attitude of the state bodies, including PROFEDET, as regards treatment of the deceased workers' widows. The Committee recalls that the Governing Body in its report made special mention of the families of the victims. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on all aspects of the communication which relate to the families of the victims in order to gain a clearer picture of the situation and of the existing disputes and court cases. In general, the Committee trusts that the Government will take all necessary steps to find an appropriate solution, including by means of dialogue, to the complaints submitted by the families of the victims of the Pasta de Conchos accident. The Committee also trusts that the families will be given support by the Government, and it requests the Government to provide information in this regard. It also requests information on the allegations of harassment of the lawyers representing the victims' families.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 1987)

Legislation. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Mexican Official Standard NOM-030-STPS-2006 concerning occupational safety and health services, which lays down the guidelines for developing and promoting such services and the adoption of which has been requested by the Committee for a number of years with reference to Instruction No. 24, which formed the basis for this Mexican Official Standard. The Committee notes, however, that it requires more detailed information in order to clarify certain points, which will be dealt with in a direct request.

Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167) (ratification: 1990)

Article 8(2) of the Convention. Measures to ensure cooperation between employers and workers undertaking activities simultaneously at one site; Article 20(1). Good construction of cofferdams and caissons; Article 22. Design and construction of structural frames and form work to ensure that workers are guarded against dangers arising from any temporary state of weakness or instability of a structure; and Article 23. Work done over or in close proximity to water. In its previous comments the Committee noted that the provisions referred to by the Government do not give legislative effect to the aforementioned Articles and that an official Mexican standard was being drawn up which would include the regulation of the subjects mentioned in these Articles. The Committee notes that, according to the report on the 2008 National Standardization Programme, the estimated date for completion of the draft standard referred to above was December 2009. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on any progress made on the draft of the official Mexican standard and to take the necessary steps pending its adoption to ensure the application of these Articles of the Convention and to supply detailed information in this respect.

Article 9. Safety and health of workers in the design and planning of a construction project. The Committee notes that, according to the report, a forum was held in 2006 concerning good working practices in the construction industry. This gave rise to a publication, concluded in October 2007, which included safety and health guidelines in the design and contracting of works, safety and health planning and administration, and general and specific working procedures. While noting these promotional measures, the Committee points out that it is necessary to adopt measures which ensure the application of the provisions of the Convention and not merely the promotion of them. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the persons responsible for the design and planning of a construction project take account of the safety and health of construction workers and requests it to supply detailed information in this respect, both on the manner in which the application of this provision is ensured and on its application in practice.

Article 12. Right of workers to remove themselves from danger entailing an imminent and serious risk to safety or health, and obligation of the employer to take immediate steps to stop operations. In its previous comments the Committee expressed the hope that, in order to bridge the existing legislative gap, the Government would adopt a law or regulations explicitly providing for the right of workers to remove themselves from serious danger to their safety and imposing an obligation on employers to stop operations and, if necessary, evacuate the workers. The Committee notes that, on this point, the Government merely states that there is no existing proposal for amending the Federal Safety, Health and Working Environment Regulations. The Committee refers to its direct request of 2010 relating to the application of the Chemicals Convention, 1990 (No. 170), in which it states, inter alia, with reference to the application of Article 18 of that Convention, that workers, as a result of their presence in a specific setting, may perceive dangers that may go unnoticed outside that setting and therefore should have the right to remove themselves if necessary. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take all necessary steps to ensure the recognition and protection of this right in practice and also to impose the duty on the employer to take immediate steps to stop operations, and requests the Government to supply information in this respect.

Article 16(2). Safe and suitable access ways and control of traffic to ensure the safe operation of vehicles and earth-moving or materials-handling equipment. In its previous comments the Committee pointed out that the standard indicated by the Government (NOM-004-STPS.1994) does not contain any provisions relating to safe and suitable access for the use of vehicles and equipment, or to the organization and control of traffic in relation to such vehicles and equipment, and it asked the Government to indicate the measures contemplated to give effect to this provision of the Convention. The Committee notes that, according to the report, these matters are dealt with in the document entitled “Safe practices in the construction industry”, and in particular chapter 4 on specific working procedures, which the Government mentioned in the information supplied in relation to Article 9 of the Convention. As already stated in its previous comments on that Article, the Committee repeats that, while noting these promotional measures, it is necessary for measures to be adopted which ensure the application of the provisions of the Convention rather than merely promote them. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the application of Article 16(2) and supply detailed information in this respect, including on its application in practice.

Article 19(a), (b), (d) and (e). Adequate precautions to guard against danger to workers from a fall or dislodgement of earth, the fall of persons, materials or objects, consequences of fire or an inrush of water or material, and underground dangers; and Article 21(2). Physical aptitude required for work in compressed air. While noting the Government’s general reference to Part I of its report, in which all the official Mexican standards in force are listed, the Committee draws the Government’s attention to the fact that this general reference does not constitute a reply to its request. The Committee therefore again requests the Government to supply information on the manner in which effect is given, in law and in practice, to these provisions of the Convention.

Part VI of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes that the Government’s report includes comments from the Confederation of Workers of Mexico and considers that the Confederation is complying with the requirements of the Convention, listing the titles of the official Mexican standards which, in its opinion, give effect to the Convention. It also notes the detailed information from the Government on the various orders of competence in the Mexican legal system, including in relation to labour inspection. As regards labour inspection, the Committee notes that the Federal Labour Inspectorate held various meetings in 2009 with the Mexican Construction Industry Board for the purposes of inspection operations concerning safety, health and training in enterprises in the industry. The purpose of the work was to define procedures for the inspections planned for the second half of 2009. One of the main agreements achieved entails the employers’ association providing the competent authority with an up-to-date directory of its members, in which the domicile and workplaces currently in operation are listed. Coordination between the authority and the employers also has the objective of laying down a commitment to provide information on inspections and keep affiliated enterprises informed in order to dispel any doubts. These meetings go under the title of “Technical sessions on inspection procedures relating to general safety and health conditions and on training in the construction industry”. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the application of the Convention in practice, including the results of the inspections referred to above, the most frequent types of occupational accidents and diseases according to those inspections, and the measures taken or contemplated for dealing with them.

Chemicals Convention, 1990 (No. 170) (ratification: 1992)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Tripartite Committee (representation made under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO). The Committee notes the detailed communication sent by the above union, alleging non-observance by the Government of Mexico of the recommendations formulated by the Governing Body in its report on the above representation (document GB.304/14/8). The communication was transmitted to the Government on 2 August 2010. The Committee notes that the Government has not yet provided its comments on this matter. The Committee points out that it will follow up that communication and the action taken in response to the recommendations made by the Governing Body in the context of the examination of the application of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), and refers to its comments concerning the application of that Convention.

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the observations by the Confederation of Mongolian Trade Unions (CMTU), received by the ILO on 5 November 2008 and transmitted to the Government on 12 December 2008, which raise problems with regard to the application of Convention No. 155. The Committee notes that the CMTU considers that several railroad accidents, resulting in injured workers, have occurred due to a number of shortcomings regarding the application of the provisions of the Convention, including inadequate training of workers; lack of enforcement of safety measures in relation to chemical hazards; failure to notify the competent authority in cases of occupational accidents; and omitting to take into account the importance of mental elements affecting health, which is directly related to safety and health at work. The Committee asks the Government to respond to the observations made by the CMTU in its next report.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1999)

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes with interest the comprehensive information provided by the Government in its latest report, including statistical information on the application of the Convention in the Netherlands and information on compensation entitlements for asbestos victims suffering from mesothelioma. The Committee notes the comments submitted by the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) and received by the Office on 30 August 2010 which indicate that only half of the victims of mesothelioma receive the full fixed standard amount of compensation. The Committee welcomes the detailed ten-year survey report published by the Dutch Institute for Asbestos Victims (IAS) and its informative website which contains relevant asbestos-related information from all over the world. The Committee also notes the significant work undertaken by IAS in the field of asbestos, including the development of a database on asbestos victims; research on the diagnostic techniques and medical panels on mesothelioma; research on asbestos-related lung cancer; and research on the possible link between the method of asbestos exposure and the nature of its carcinogenic effect. The Committee further notes the information indicating measures that have been taken to control work with asbestos, including the enhancement of the procedures and the enforcement of local authorities; a more integrated enforcement approach and higher fines; enhancement of the system of certification; and the possible incorporation of new scientific conclusions (in particular, possible limit values) in legislative measures. The Committee notes that the comments of FNV call for close monitoring of the effects of such measures. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the application of this Convention in practice, in particular on the outcome of measures taken to address the hazards involved when undertaking demolition work where there is exposure to asbestos and on the allocation of compensation for victims suffering from mesothelioma, in light of the comments received from FNV.

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes the Government's most recent report which is essentially a repetition of information previously transmitted, and which indicates that national legislation does not contain any specific provisions regarding air pollution, noise and vibration, and that no progress appears to have been made as to the draft legislation which is reportedly under development in order to give effect to the Convention. With reference to the fact that a significant period of time has passed since the Government ratified this Convention and undertook to implement it in the country, and that no progress appears to have been made in this direction, the Committee yet again urges the Government to take the necessary measures, and to submit any relevant legislation to the Committee to enable it to examine the effect given to the Convention in the country.

[The Government is asked to report in detail in 2012.]

Norway

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1982)

Article 4 of the Convention. National policy. The Committee notes the comments from the Norwegian Confederation of Trade Unions (LO) transmitted by the Government indicating that while LO recognizes the extensive legislation regulating occupational safety and health (OSH) matters in the country, it questions whether this reflects a coherent national OSH policy covering both workplaces under the authority of the labour inspectorate and those under the Petroleum Safety Authority. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information in relation to the question raised by the LO.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. Statistical information. The Committee notes that in its reports submitted in 2010 on the application of ratified Conventions on occupational safety and health, the Government refers to statistical information from different sources. This includes information from 2005–08 based on reports from physicians on diseases caused by exposure to chemicals (excluding asbestos-related diseases). According thereto the number of reported cases decreased from 196 in 2005 to 130 in 2008. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that although, according to the Working Environment Act (WEA), reporting on work-related diseases to the labour inspectorate is obligatory, only 4–5 per cent of Norwegian medical practitioners fulfil their reporting duties. The reported figures may therefore not be representative of the actual number of incidents. In this context, the Committee refers to the comments by LO, also transmitted by the Government, on the apparent discrepancy regarding the number of neoplasms reported in 2005–08. According to the above referenced information from physicians included in the report on the application of the present Convention there had been 45 such cases, but according to information submitted in the context of the application of the Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139), there had been 378 such cases. Another source for statistical information the Government refers to are reports on chemical-related injuries transmitted to the social insurance agency. Such reports are reportedly sent either by workers or employers to the Norwegian Labour and Welfare Service and are registered by the labour inspectorate. According thereto the total number of injuries appears to have decreased, while the percentage of injuries caused by chemicals appears to have been stable at 1.4 per cent in the period 2004–07 with a slight increase to 1.6 per cent in 2008. The Committee also notes the information that the most frequently violated sections of the Ordinance respecting protection against exposure to chemicals at the workplace included; sections 6 (Risk assessment), 7 (Concrete measures to reduce chemical exposures) and 9 (Safety training and information). While the Committee welcomes the efforts to provide statistical information, it notes with some concern the reported shortcomings and discrepancies in the data that has been made available and requests the Government to indicate measures taken to address these shortcomings. Noting the crucial importance of reliable statistical data to enable the tracking of progress and to inform national policy in this area, the Committee invites the Government to provide more detailed information on current national systems for recording and notification of occupational accidents and disease and on any other methods used by the Government to assess the impact of measures taken to improve the application of the Convention in the country.

Chemicals Convention, 1990 (No. 170) (ratification: 1993)

Implementing laws and regulations. The Committee notes with interest the detailed information regarding amendments to implementing laws and regulations. It notes that the new amended Act No. 62 of 17 June 2005 which came into force on 1 January 2006 relating to the working environment, working hours and employment protection (WEA) does not include any changes affecting the implementation of this Convention. It also notes that the amendment by Ordinance No. 415 of 20 March 2003 to Ordinance No. 443 of 30 April 2001 on protection against exposure to chemicals at work (Chemicals Ordinance) widens the rules on carcinogens to include mutagenic substances and introduces a limit value for wood dust from hardwoods. The Committee understands that further amendments to this Act were adopted in 2005 introducing, inter alia, special rules for work carried out with cement containing chromium IV. It also notes that the amendments to Ordinance No. 443 of 2001 with respect to protection against exposure to chemicals at the workplace (Chemicals Ordinance), most recently through Ordinance No. 363 of 2005; the amendments to Ordinance No. 1139 of 2002 with respect to the classification, marking, etc. of dangerous chemicals – most recently through Ordinance No. 121 of 2006; the amendments to Ordinance No. 412 of 2000 with respect to the production and use of hazardous substances in enterprises – most recently through Ordinance No. 792 of 2005 and the adoption of the Ordinance No. 516 of 2008 with respect to the registration, evaluation authorization and restriction of chemicals (REACH) give further effect to the Convention. The Committee notes the information regarding the Product Control Act No. 79 of 1976 and its Regulations (Ordinance of 1 June 2004) giving effect to Article 5. The Committee also notes that since 2001 the Norwegian list of limit values has been revised twice and that a new revision is due by the end of 2010. Finally it notes the details provided regarding the enforcement mechanisms based on the Coercive Fulfilment Act, section 19–1 of the WEA as well as regarding the information that the Jotun case was closed due to lack of evidence. In addition to this detailed information, the Committee welcomes the helpful translations provided of relevant changes in legislation which are not publicly available in one of the working languages of the ILO.

Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention. Consultations with employers' and workers' organizations on national policy related to chemicals. The Committee notes the information that the competent authority for the implementation of REACH, the Norwegian Pollution Control Authority, has representatives in various forums and working groups responsible for monitoring and implementing REACH, and that the Norwegian Labour Inspection Authority is responsible for the implementation of the parts of the Reach Regulation which are related to the working environment and concern workers. It also notes that the Norwegian Labour Inspection Authority has established a REACH office to stay up to date on REACH areas that concern the working environment in Norway. The Committee notes with interest the institutional arrangements for collaboration between the Norwegian Pollution Control Authority and the Norwegian Labour Inspection Authority and requests the Government to provide further information on the mandate and activities of the REACH Office and how employers and workers' organizations are consulted in this process and in the periodical review of the national policy related to chemicals.

Article 6. Classification system of chemicals. With reference to its previous comments the Committee notes the information through amendments adopted on 22 April 2009 to Ordinance No. 1139 of 2002 on classification, labelling, etc. of dangerous chemicals, and taking into account corresponding EU Directives, the number of exceptions from the required classification and labelling of individual substances containing organic solvents has been reduced from 12 to three substances (acrylamide, methylamideoxyglycolate and methylacrylamidomethoxyacetate). The Committee also notes the information that the relevant competent authorities are the Norwegian Pollution Control Authority, the Labour Inspection Authority, the Directorate for Civil Protection and Emergency Planning and the Petroleum Safety Authority and that while these authorities may act independently in their areas of responsibility, the Norwegian Pollution Control Authority has a contact role for subjects of common interest. Inspection activities may be independent, coordinated or simultaneous and a common inspection database has been established. The Committee welcomes this information and invites the Government to provide additional information on experiences gained of the collaborative efforts between these institutions and the efficiency of the monitoring of relevant laws and regulations in this area.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. Enforcement campaign. The Committee notes the detailed information provided on the national three-year campaign regarding chemicals launched in 2003. This campaign focused on four trade sectors with a relatively high risk for harmful chemical exposures including automobile workshops, plastic boat industry, the graphics industry and mechanical workshops. The primary goals of the campaign were to increase the knowledge of chemical health hazards, to reduce workers' exposure to mutagenic and carcinogenic substances and to reduce the likelihood of workers developing skin and respiratory diseases. A three-pronged strategy was applied including the conduct of inspections, specific efforts to meet the need for information and guidance of the four target groups, and to ensure close cooperation with other inspection authorities, industry organizations and occupational health providers. Two rounds of inspections were carried out in 2003–06. The first round revealed that about 75 per cent of the companies at issue had not performed or completed the required risk assessments; over 50 of the inspected companies had not measured exposures in the workplace atmosphere; a third of the employees had not received the required training for the job; and the use of personal protective equipment and ventilation was also lacking. All of these points are obligatory requirements according to the WEA. A large number of these companies were followed-up with a second round of inspections. The results were that significant improvements could be noted including that: the number of automobile workshops that had performed risk assessments increased from 25 to 75 per cent; exposure measurement in the work atmosphere for the graphic industry increased from 40 to 72 per cent; significant improvements were observed on all measures concerning chemical hazards (safety training, exposure measurements, provision of occupational health, safety management plans, etc.). Members of the Norwegian tripartite ILO committee had occasion to comment on these inspections reports and the Norwegian Confederation of Trade Unions (LO) observed that the findings demonstrated the need for continued inspections concerning the implementation of the Convention. Noting this detailed information with interest, the Committee invites the Government to ensure a longer term follow-up to this experience and to indicate the possible impact of this experience on the Government's overall strategy in the area of enforcement of national legislation in this area.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. Statistical information. Reference is made to the comments made in the context of the application of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), regarding statistical information provided and the request for further information in that context.

Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139) (ratification: 1976)

Article 1(1) and (3) of the Convention. Periodic determination of carcinogenic substances and agents to which occupational exposure shall be prohibited or made subject to authorization or control. In its previous comments, the Committee pointed out that the prohibition, authorization and control of substances and agents that are periodically determined to be carcinogenic to which occupational exposure shall be prohibited or controlled are very important aspects of the application of the Convention, and noted that the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion and the Ministry of Health had established the Occupational Cancer Prevention and Control Commission. It expressed the hope that the Government would, in the near future, complete the process of determining the carcinogenic substances and agents to which exposure shall be prohibited or made subject to authorizational control, and asked the Government to provide information on progress made in this respect. The Committee notes with satisfaction Supreme Decree No. 15-2005-SA approving the Regulation on maximum permissible values for chemical agents in the workplace, and repealing Supreme Decree No. 025-75-SA on the grounds that its coverage was limited because it omitted certain chemicals currently in use. The Regulation applies countrywide and covers all areas of work involving the use of chemical or carcinogenic agents or substances which may present risks and/or be harmful to the health and safety of workers. The values must be applied by professionals who are well versed in occupational safety and health issues. The Committee asks the Government to specify how often and in what manner it determines and updates the carcinogenic substances and agents to which occupational exposure shall be prohibited or made subject to authorization or control, and those to which other provisions of this Convention apply.

Article 3. Establishment of a system of records. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, the National Centre for Occupational Health and Environmental Protection for Health which reports to the National Health Institute, has been conducting occupational medical assessments since 2003 though it keeps no occupational cancer records. Furthermore, technical guidelines have been produced – jointly by public and private entities – for medical diagnosis in occupational health and they include guidance on the diagnosis of pneumoconiosis (silicosis, asbestosis and other forms) and are awaiting approval. The Government also refers to other measures. However, the Committee again notes that the country has not as yet any system for recording cases of occupational cancer and/or occupational diseases. It again reminds the Government that this Article of the Convention requires the establishment of an appropriate system of records, and asks the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that such a system is established in the near future and to provide detailed information on any developments in this regard.

Communication from the General Confederation of Workers of Peru (CGTP). The Committee notes the comments of the CGTP sent by the Government with its report in 2009. Noting that the comments appear not to be directly related to this Convention the Committee suggests that the CGTP, should it see fit, provide information on the manner in which its comments relate to the provisions of this Convention.

The Committee raises other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Portugal

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes with satisfaction the National Occupational Safety and Health Strategy (SST) for the period 2008–12, which defines two key priorities: the development of coherent and effective public policies and the promotion of occupational safety and health (OSH). The strategy also sets the following ten objectives: (1) develop and strengthen a culture of prevention in accordance with the provisions of the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187); (2) improve the information systems and create a single model for the monitoring of occupational accidents; (3) include occupational safety and health systems in education; (4) boost the national occupational hazard prevention system; (5) improve the coordination of the competent public services; (6) enforce, improve and simplify the specific occupational safety and health standards; (7) implement the organizational model of the authority responsible for working conditions which brings together the promotion of occupational safety and health and labour inspection; (8) promote the application of the occupational safety and health legislation, in particular small and medium-sized enterprises; (9) improve occupational safety and health services; and (10) strengthen the role of the social partners in improving occupational safety and health conditions. Noting with interest that objective 6 of the strategy includes the intention to ratify the Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167), the Safety and Health in Agriculture Convention, 2001 (No. 184), as well as the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187), the Committee refers to the plan of action to achieve widespread ratification and effective implementation of the occupational safety and health instruments (Convention No. 155, its 2002 Protocol and Convention No. 187), adopted by the Governing Body in March 2010, and draws the Government's attention to the possibility of requesting technical assistance from the Office in the context of the plan of action in order to achieve these objectives in the best possible conditions. Noting also that the strategy provides for an interim assessment as well as a final assessment of the implementation of the strategy, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of these assessments once finalized.

Article 4(1) of the Convention. National policy on occupational safety and health. The Committee notes the comments of the General Workers Union (UGT) attached to the Government's report, as well as the Government's reply. According to the UGT, most of the agreements concluded with the social partners, and included in the national action plan on prevention adopted in 2001, have not been implemented. The UGT hopes that the national occupational safety and health strategy will be a critical instrument that will lead to a thorough reworking of the OSH framework, which it regards as lacking. However, the UGT maintains that gaps and shortcomings persist and that the National Health Service is failing to fulfil its responsibilities to protect and monitor the health of workers. Furthermore, according to the UGT, although Portugal has a system of statistics on occupational accidents and diseases, the data are not up to date and are not reliable. For example, in the case of occupational accidents, there are several statistical sources but none are up to date. With regard to occupational diseases, the UGT indicates that the number of cases reported is lower than the reality. According to the Government, the alleged failings in the National Health Service were due to the lack of occupational physicians but this problem has now been solved by Decree No. 176/2009 establishing a degree course in occupational medicine. With regard to the statistics, it indicates that the Portuguese Insurance Institute (ISP) is responsible for compiling, processing and publishing statistics. The Government indicates that the type of data collected and points out that the statistics compiled are available on the ISP's website (www.isp.pt). With regard to occupational diseases, the Government indicates that cases are published in an annual report on occupational diseases. With regard to the allegations made concerning the inadequacy of the statistics especially in relation to under-reporting, the Government indicates that this is a wider problem which requires the coordination of several bodies, such as the labour inspectorate, the occupational safety and health services within enterprises and the National Health Service. The Government also indicates that some physicians are not aware of the obligation to report cases. It indicates that a project to systematize statistics is being considered and that the country is participating in a European project on statistics of occupational diseases. Noting the matters raised by the UGT and the efforts made to overcome them reported by the Government, the Committee recalls that, under Article 4 of the Convention, the Government, in consultation with the social partners, should formulate, implement and periodically review its national policy on occupational safety and health (see also the General Survey of 2009 on occupational health and safety, paragraph 55). Regular review is a crucial step in ensuring that the effectiveness of implementation is assessed and areas for future improvement are identified. The Committee notes that the National Occupational Safety and Health Strategy for the period 2010–12 provides for an interim assessment as well as a final assessment, which fulfils the requirements of review contained in Article 4. The Committee therefore requests the Government to review, in consultation with the social partners, the matters raised by the UGT (especially the failure of the National Health Service to monitor the health of workers, failure to update statistics and reporting failures) in the context of the interim assessment of the strategy, to take all further steps that are necessary to facilitate the implementation of its national policy and to provide information in this regard.

Article 1 of the Convention. Scope of application. Legislation. In its previous comments the Committee referred to Legislative Decree No. 284/89, which excluded maritime and air transport from the scope of the legislation protecting workers against the risks arising from exposure to asbestos in the course of their work. The Committee notes the adoption of Legislative Decree No. 266/2007 of 24 February 2007, transposing Directive 2003/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council amending Council Directive 83/477/EEC on the protection of workers from the risks related to exposure to asbestos at work. It notes with satisfaction that this Decree applies to all activities or operations in which workers are exposed or likely to be exposed to asbestos and that it explicitly repeals Legislative Decree No. 284/89.

Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176) (ratification: 2002)

Articles 5(1) and 16(b) of the Convention. Competent authority responsible for monitoring and regulating various aspects of safety and health in mines. Appropriate inspection services. The Committee notes with interest the organizational changes that appear to reinforce technical competency in the inspection of mines. It notes in this connection that in 2006, occupational safety and health underwent basic restructuring, as a result of which the body now responsible for promoting improvements in conditions of work and supervision is now the Working Conditions Authority. It further notes that in 2007, the Directorate General of Energy and Geology was established, which oversees energy and geological resources and safety and health in mines; and that it has administrative autonomy and is involved in administration of the State under the Ministry of the Economy and Innovation, the Basic Act of which was issued by Legislative Decree No. 208/2006 of 27 October. In this context, responsibility for labour inspection is now shared by the Ministry of the Economy and Innovation and the Ministry of Labour. In 2007, pursuant to Orders Nos 535/2007 and 566/2007 of 30 April, duties were allocated and the Supervision and Regional Coordination Division was established by a notice published in the Official Journal of 29 November 2007 and is in charge of mining support and oversight. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on coordination between these bodies, including information on the sharing of mining inspection duties between the Working Conditions Authority and the Supervision and Regional Coordination Division, and on overall responsibility for matters such as decisions to close and reopen a mine, and on the results achieved through the practical application of this reform.

Article 7(c). Measures to maintain ground stability. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, sections 27 and 29 of Legislative Decree No. 88/90, read in conjunction with section 69 of Legislative Decree No. 162/90, ensure application of this provision. Section 69 refers to “ground sustenance”. However, bearing in mind that, when applied, these provisions may give rise to different interpretations, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the manner in which full compliance with this obligation is ensured, to reconsider the matter when revising its national policy, and to examine, with the social partners, the possibility of giving effect in a more explicit manner to this provision of the Convention, and to provide information in this regard.

Article 7(d). Provision of two exits, each of which is connected to separate means of egress to the surface. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that according to the Government, section 36 of Order No. 198/96 establishes that in all underground mines there must be at least two exits of solid and stable construction, and the five underground mines currently operating meet this requirement.

Article 7(e). Monitoring, assessment and regular inspection of mines, and Part V of the report form. Practical application. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information supplied by the Government to the effect that the legislation is applied in the five underground mines; that in the mining companies supervision is carried out by persons appointed by the technical director and by officers and miners under the supervision of the mines engineer; and that the services of specialized and certified companies is enlisted, and these submit their reports to the labour inspectorate on the latter’s request. As to opencast mines, Legislative Decree No. 270/2001 of 6 October introduced more stringent requirements on the qualifications of technical officers and made submission of a safety and health plan mandatory.

Article 8. Preparation of specific emergency response plans. The Committee notes that in replying to its previous comments, the Government states: that according to section 151 of Legislative Decree No. 162/90, companies must have their own risk assessment systems and that Legislative Decree No. 324/95 requires employers to draw up a safety and health plan before operations begin; that the competent departments of the Ministry of the Economy and Innovation must provide technical guidance for enterprises in preparing safety and health plans, which must contain intervention scenarios for the most serious incidents such as fires, floods and explosions, this provision being compulsory for all extraction work. In addition, section 33 of Order No. 198/96 of 4 June establishes that without prejudice to the provisions of section 3 of Legislative Decree No. 324/95, employers must ensure that the safety and health plan provides for adequate measures to protect the safety and health of workers both in normal situations and in critical circumstances.

Article 10(a). Training and instruction of miners. The Committee notes that in reply to its comments, the Government states that there have been considerable improvements in this area, including an increase in ongoing and comprehensive instruction for miners, which was pioneered by the Neves-Corvo mine and has now been adopted by the country as a whole and applied in certain areas. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the practical application of this provision.

Article 10(b). Supervision of mine work. The Committee notes that the Government refers to section 3(5) and section 24(4) of Order No. 198/96 of 4 June, which contain rules on the supervision of workers in isolated posts and provides that such posts must be monitored at least once per daily work period. Each shift is monitored by means of radio transmitters and checks are carried out by appointed persons.

Article 10(c). System whereby the names and location of persons underground can be known. The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government which refers to various identification arrangements pertaining to this provision. The Committee reminds the Government that it is essential, regardless of the system, to know at all times the name and location of persons underground, and asks the Government to state whether the mechanisms currently applied allow these objectives to be met, and, if not, to reconsider the matter when reviewing the national policy and to examine, with the social partners, the possibility of giving effect to this provision of the Convention in a more explicit manner, and to provide information in this regard.

Article 13(1)(e). Right of workers to remove themselves from any location posing a serious danger, and Article 13(2)(b),(c),(e) and (f). Selection and duties of safety and health representatives in mines. The Committee notes that according to the Government, pursuant to section 274(2) of the Labour Code issued by Act No. 99/2003, workers are allowed to leave the place of work in the event of danger and that section 177(7) of Legislative Decree No. 162/90 makes the same provision. The Committee notes that the Government has sent no information on the practical application of this provision of the Convention, or on Article 13(2)(b),(c),(e) and (f), of the Convention, on which the Committee sought information in earlier comments. It again asks the Government to provide more extensive information on the practical application of these provisions.

Safety Provisions (Building) Convention, 1937 (No. 62) (ratification: 1962)

National legislation. The Committee notes with interest the information in the Government's report regarding the application of section 3 and Title V of Law No. 13/2009 of 27 May 2009 to workers in the informal economy. The Committee also notes that the process of drafting a Ministerial Order on health and safety at the workplace in the building industry to fill the legal void created by the abrogation in 2001 of Ordinance No. 21/94 of 23 July 1953 is still ongoing. Concerned about the current situation, the Committee urges the Government to take relevant action without further delay. It would like to inform the Government that the Office is available to provide relevant technical assistance to the Government to assist it in its efforts to bring national law and practice into conformity with this Convention and requests the Government to transmit a copy of any new legislation once it has been adopted.

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention, in conjunction with Part V of the report form. On taking note of the Government's reply, the Committee looks forward to receiving the Government's annual report on the latest statistical information in relation to the number and classification of accidents, including those relevant to workers in the informal economy. The Committee also notes that the Government has indicated that it is in the process of raising the awareness and building the capacity of the labour inspectors. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on this process and any supporting legislative provisions.

Revision of this Convention. The Committee would also like to draw the Government's attention to the Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167), which revises Convention No. 62 of 1937 and could well be better adapted to the current situation in the building sector. The ILO Governing Body invited States parties to Convention No. 62 to envisage the ratification of Convention No. 167, which entails, ipso jure, immediate denunciation of Convention No. 62 (GB.268/8/2). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all possible developments in this respect.

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the Government's summary report submitted in June 2004 indicated that the Government had no new developments to report.

For a number of years, the Committee has drawn the attention of the Government to the fact that the national legislation does not contain provisions to give effect to Part II of the Convention (prohibition of the sale, hire, transfer in any other manner and exhibition of unguarded machinery) and that it does not provide for the full application of Article 17 of the Convention (which applies to all sectors of economic activity), as it is not applicable to certain branches of activity, inter alia, sea, air or land transport and mining.

Since 1979, in reply to the Committee's comments, the Government has indicated in its reports that a Bill to revise the 1974 Factories Act was being drafted and would contain provisions consistent with those of the Convention, and would apply to all the branches of economic activity. In its latest report (received in 1986), the Government indicates that the draft Factories Bill, 1985, has been examined by the competent parliamentary committee and is to be submitted to Parliament for adoption.

With its report for the period ending 30 June 1991, the Government supplied a copy of extracts of the Factories Bill containing provisions which should give effect to Part II of the Convention. In this connection, the Government was requested to indicate the stage of the legislative procedure reached by the Bill and the body which was in the process of examination of the Bill. Since no information has been provided by the Government in this respect, the Committee once again expresses the hope that the abovementioned Bill will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to provide a copy of this text, once it has been adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1993)

Legislation. The Committee notes the information regarding newly adopted legislation including Act No. 355/2007, Coll. on Protection, Support and Development of Public Health and Regulation No. 345/2006, Coll. on basic safety requirements for protection of the health of workers and the general public against the effects of ionizing radiation, which give effect, inter alia, to Article 12 of the Convention.

Articles 3 and 6 of the Convention. Permitted dose limits. Pregnant workers. Article 7(1)(b). Exposure limits for young persons between 16 and 18 years of age. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction the information that Regulation No. 345/2006, Coll., referred to above, provides, inter alia, that the exposure limit for pregnant women working in a workplace with sources of ionizing radiation shall be such that from the time when the woman informs the operator until the end of her pregnancy the sum of the effective doses from external exposure and the committed effective doses from internal irradiation of the foetus does not exceed 1 mSv, and that the prescribed dose limits for exposure to radiation of young persons between 16 and 18 years of age are in conformity with the relevant exposure limits recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP), that is: (a) an effective dose of 6 mSv in a year; (b) an equivalent dose to the lens of the eye of 50 mSv in a year; and (c) an equivalent dose to the extremities or the skin of 150 mSv in a year.

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1980)

Article 1 of the Convention. Scope. Particular branches. In its previous comments, the Committee referred to aviation and maritime crews, who were excluded from the application of Royal Decree No. 1316/1989, and asked the Government to indicate which standards give effect to the Convention and, ultimately, guarantee the protection it affords to air and maritime transport workers. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Government states that Royal Decree No. 286/2006 of 10 March 2006 on protection of the safety and health of workers against hazards arising from exposure to noise repealed Royal Decree No. 1316/1989 and that the exceptions provided for in section 1(2) of the repealed Decree relating to aviation and maritime crews were no longer present in the new text. Royal Decree No. 286/2006 also provides in its single transitional provision that the obligation laid down in section 8 – that on no account shall exposure of workers, determined in accordance with section 5.2 (comparison with exposure limits), apply to staff on board maritime vessels only – will apply as from 15 February 2011. The Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information on the practical application of the Convention to workers in the aviation and maritime sectors.

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes the debate which took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2007 and the conclusions resulting from the debate. The Conference Committee observed that this case should serve as an example of good practices. It congratulated the Government on the considerable efforts made to improve the situation of all workers with regard to occupational safety and health (OSH) and asked the Government to continue to supply information in this regard, including on migrant workers.

Legislation. The Committee notes with interest the legislation adopted in the area of OSH for various sectors and spheres (such as, inter alia, self-employment, subcontracting, construction workers), the heavy penalties for violations of the relevant legislation, and the updating of the list of occupational diseases. It notes that section 8.1 of Act No. 20/2007 of 11 July 2007 (Self-Employment Regulations) states that the competent public administration shall assume an active role in the prevention of occupational hazards to self-employed workers by means of activities promoting prevention, technical advice, monitoring and controls on compliance with OSH standards. It also lays down conditions regarding the right to stop work and abandon the workplace when the activity in question entails a serious imminent hazard. It also regulates the application, in cases where self-employed workers and workers from another enterprise or other enterprises are working together, of the obligation to cooperate and also the obligations to provide information and training as laid down in section 24(1) and (2) of Act No. 31 of 1995 on coordination of business activities. The Committee also notes Royal Decree No. 1299/2006 of 10 November 2006, approving the schedule of occupational diseases in the social security system. The Government reports that Act No. 32/2006 of 18 October 2006 concerning subcontracting in the construction industry lays down a set of guarantees to avoid any lack of controls in this sphere. The guarantees include: requiring compliance with specific conditions so that subcontracting beyond the third level meets objective criteria, in order to avoid practices which endanger OSH; the requirement for these enterprises to meet quality and solvency criteria and the strengthening of guarantees concerning training in occupational risk prevention; and increasing the participation of workers. Furthermore, new regulations have been adopted in relation to infringements arising from non-compliance by subcontractors, contractors and promoters of their obligations regarding risk prevention. These provisions are set out in Royal Decree No. 1109/2007. The Government refers to the adoption of Royal Decree No. 597/2007 of 4 May 2007 concerning the publication of penalties for serious infringements relating to occupational risk prevention. Finally, the Committee notes Royal Decree No. 1027/2007 of 20 July 2007 approving regulations on heating installations in buildings and Royal Decree No. 1644/2008 of 10 October 2008 laying down standards regarding the sale and installation of machinery.

Articles 4 and 7 of the Convention. National policy and overall reviews or reviews in respect of particular areas. The Committee notes with interest that, in accordance with the provisions of these Articles, national policy on OSH is being reviewed and updated, as borne out by numerous recent legislative changes in this area, adopted as part of the Spanish Strategy on Occupational Safety and Health (2007–12), which was supported by the National Occupational Safety and Health Committee, in which the General Administration of the State, the Autonomous Administration and the most representative employers' and workers' associations are represented. The Committee notes that the strategy in general terms encompasses occupational risk prevention policies in the short, medium and long term, and seeks to transform the values, attitudes and conduct of all stakeholders in occupational hazard prevention, with the aim of reducing accident rates and progressively improving working conditions. The Government states that the strategy is based on the idea that, in order to achieve these general objectives, eight operational objectives have been established, which, for structural reasons and taking account of the main stakeholders, have been grouped into two major sections: (a) those relating to the prevention of occupational hazards in the workplace; and (b) those relating to public policies. Each objective has given rise to various lines of action and the latter in turn have resulted in various specific measures giving practical expression to the objectives, designating the person responsible for implementation of the measures and establishing a time frame for launching and implementing them. The Committee notes that, in connection with the evaluation and follow-up of the strategy, a working group on follow-up action to the Spanish OSH strategy has been set up within the National Occupational Safety and Health Committee. The Government also indicates that it has drawn up an initial plan of action, an evaluation of which was carried out up to October 2008, and has drawn up a second plan of action up to June 2010, when a further review of the strategy was due to be carried out and another phase of work to be prepared. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the manner in which the review of the national OSH policy was carried out and also on any other review which may be undertaken. It also requests the Government to supply information on the conclusions and changes arising as a result of any review and to continue to supply information on national policy trends in this area.

Application of the strategy for small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs). The Committee notes with interest objective 1 of the strategy, "Achieving better and more effective compliance with social security and occupational health regulations, especially in relation to SMEs," and also the particular measures contemplated in this context to promote compliance with OSH legislation by SMEs. For example, provision has been made for the National Occupational Safety and Health Institute (INSHT) to draw up a code of practice specifically concerning the application of prevention regulations by SMEs and micro-enterprises. Furthermore, all INSHT guides on prevention regulations must contain a specific chapter on their application by SMEs. The strategy also provides that all future standards on occupational hazard prevention must contain a report on their application in SMEs and, if applicable, differentiated measures for SMEs must be included. With a view to the simplification of their occupational hazard prevention obligations, enterprises of up to ten workers will be provided with public advice regarding the organization of their prevention activities, with the promotion of self-evaluation involving standard models for various sectors and specifying activities or hazards which require specialized technical help. Simplified procedures are established for enterprises employing fewer than 50 workers. The “Spanish Occupational Safety and Health Network” will be developed as an instrument for promoting and supporting cooperation and the exchange of information and experience among its members. The INSHT as administrator of the network and focal point for the European Agency for Safety and Health at Work will promote awareness and dissemination of information relating to occupational hazards among SMEs. Recalling that the plan of action for achieving satisfactory levels of ratification and effective application of OSH instruments, approved by the Governing Body in March 2010, pays particular attention to SMEs and to research into particularly relevant applications or practices in OSH that also improve productivity and are attainable for SMEs, the Committee considers that the particular focus placed on SMEs by the Spanish strategy could contribute towards establishing good practices in this area. The Committee therefore requests the Government to supply detailed information on the implementation of OSH measures aimed at SMEs and on their results, including achievements and any problems encountered, and also requests the Government to supply copies of materials which have been devised, such as the INSHT codes of practice referred to by the plan.

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1967)

Article 17 of the Convention. Applicability of the Convention to all branches of economic activity. The Committee notes that the regulation on the health and safety conditions in using work equipment, attached to the Government’s report, applies only to workplaces covered by the Labour Law dated 22 May 2003 (No. 4857), and that the implementing regulation on duties, competence, responsibilities and working principles of the engineers or technical personnel in charge of occupational safety, dated 20 January 2004, No. 25352, applies only to industrial workplaces employing at least 50 permanent workers and where permanent work over six months takes place. Noting that section 4 of Labour Law No. 4857 excludes a number of workplaces and economic activity from its scope of application, the Committee asks the Government to take measures in law and in practice to ensure full effect is given to the provisions of this Article.

Part V of the report form in conjunction with Article 15. Application in practice and appropriate inspection services for the purpose of supervising the application of the provisions of the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its reports under the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), and the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), however the Committee notes that the Government has not responded to the concerns raised by the Confederation of Progressive Trade Unions of Turkey (DİSK) and the Turkish Confederation of Public Workers Associations (TÜRKIYE KAMU-SEN). The Committee therefore reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the application of the Convention, with particular regards to Articles 2, 6 and 10 of the Convention, on the availability of appropriate inspection services as required by Article 15, and on measures taken or envisaged to address the high number of workplace fatalities and accidents caused by machinery.

The Committee notes the information in the Government’s latest report, the attached comments by the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ) and the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TİSK), and the comments submitted on 1 September 2009 by the International Trade Union Confederation on behalf of TÜRK-İŞ, which indicate that the draft bill on occupational safety and health (OSH) has not yet been adopted. The Committee further notes that the Government has provided information which appears to give further effect to Articles 7 and 11(b) and (f) of the Convention. The Committee hopes that the proposed legislation will be adopted soon and asks the Government to provide a copy of the relevant legislation, once adopted, indicating the specific provisions that give effect to Articles 1(2) and 2(2) on the scope of application; Article 5(b) on relationships between the material elements of work and the persons who carry out or supervise the work; Articles 5(d) and 19(b) on communication and cooperation at the level of the undertaking; Articles 13 and 19(f) on the right to removal; Article 17 on collaboration between two or more undertakings engaged in activities simultaneously at one workplace; and Article 19(e) on the right of workers or their representatives to inquire into, and be consulted by the employer on all aspects of OSH associated with their work.

Article 12(b) of the Convention. Measures to make available information and undertake studies concerning the correct installation and use of equipment and the correct use of substances. The Government indicates that there are provisions in place regarding the information to be provided by producing or supplying companies, and that it would be useful to receive the text of the machinery safety regulations from the Ministry of Industry and Commerce. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government supply the text of the abovementioned regulations, and to indicate the specific provisions that ensure that those who design, manufacture, import, provide or transport machinery, equipment or substances for occupational use, make available information concerning correct installation and use, and information on hazards and instructions on the way these are to be avoided, as required by Article 12(b).

Article 18. Measures to deal with emergencies, accidents and first-aid arrangements. In its comments, TISK raises their concerns regarding the Government's intention to abolish the current threshold of 50 workers when requiring enterprises to employ one or more physicians and set up a health unit as they fear that this will result in heavier burdens on employers in small and medium-sized enterprises and may encourage enterprises to engage in undeclared employment. The Committee refers the Government to paragraphs 181–191 of its 2009 General Survey on occupational safety and health for further information on the application of Article 18, which may vary depending on the size and activity of the undertaking. The Committee asks the Government to indicate in its next report the measures taken or envisaged to ensure full effect is given to this Article of the Convention in enterprises that employ less than 50 persons.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government on the projects undertaken to ensure the harmonization of the administrative records of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, and affiliated and related institutions, with the national and European definitions, classifications and standards, and for the improvement of the statistical system in Turkey. The Committee also notes the comments which indicates a 12 per cent decrease in the number of workplace accidents between 2005 and 2007 as a result of increasing countrywide effectiveness of OSH services. The Committee further notes the comments submitted by TÜRK-İŞ indicating that a new OSH policy document has been adopted by the National Health and Safety Council for 2009–13. TÜRK-İŞ alleges, however, that there are still shortcomings in OSH measures in practice as far as subcontracting is concerned. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on measures taken or envisaged to address the application of the Convention to subcontracted workers; to provide a copy of the 2009–13 OSH policy document; and to continue to provide information on the application of this Convention in practice, with particular reference to ongoing activities under the National Pneumoconiosis Prevention Action Plan.

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 2005)

The Committee notes the information in the Government's latest report; the attached comments by the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ), the Confederation of Public Employees Trade Unions (KESK) and the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TISK); as well as the comments submitted on 2 September 2009 by the International Trade Union Confederation, on behalf of TÜRK-İŞ. The Committee notes that a number of the provisions of the Convention are applied through now repealed regulations and that new legislation has been drafted but not yet adopted. The Committee hopes that this legislation will be adopted soon and asks the Government to provide a copy of the relevant legislation once adopted indicating the specific provisions that give full effect to the provisions of the Convention, in particular Article 3(1) on the progressive development of occupational health services for all workers, including those in the public sector, and all undertakings, in response to the comments submitted by KESK which allege that public sector employees are not covered; Article 5 on the functions of the occupational health services; Article 8 on cooperation between employers, workers and their representatives; Article 11 on required qualifications for occupational health services personnel; Article 12 on health surveillance at no cost to the workers; and Articles 14 and 15 on ensuring health services receive relevant information.

Article 4 of the Convention. Consultations with the most representative organizations of employers and workers. The Committee notes the comments by TÜRK-İŞ and KESK which allege that social partners have not been consulted on the draft legislation relevant to the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the consultations undertaken with the most representative organizations of employers and workers, as required by Article 4 of the Convention.

Part VI of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the statistical information provided by the Government in its report, and the information provided by the Government on the practical application of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155). The Committee notes the comments by TÜRK-İŞ alleging that the majority of occupational accidents occur in undertakings employing less than 50 workers, and that Articles 14 and 15 of the Convention are not properly implemented. The Committee asks the Government to indicate measures taken or envisaged to address the issues raised by TÜRK-İŞ, and to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice.

United Kingdom

Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187) (ratification: 2008)

The Committee notes the Government's comprehensive first report including the legislative texts attached. The Committee also notes the comments of the Trade Union Congress (TUC), submitted on 31 August 2010, and the Government's response thereto of 15 October 2010.

Article 4(2)(c) of the Convention. Mechanisms for ensuring compliance with national laws and regulations, including systems of inspections. The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that section 19 of the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 (HSWA) provides the criteria for the appointment of inspectors, while sections 20–25 set out the inspectors' powers; that as of 1 April 2009 the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has 1,323 full-time inspectors; and that, according to the HSE Enforcement Policy Statement, enforcement law is based on the principle of proportionality: "Those whom the law protects and those on whom it places duties expect that action taken by enforcing authorities to achieve compliance or bring dutyholders to account for non-compliance should be proportionate to any risks to health and safety, or to seriousness of any breach, which includes any actual or potential harm arising from a breach of law." The Committee also notes that, according to the TUC comments, the level of inspections carried out in the country is both low and inconsistent, that in the ten-year period from 1999 to 2009, the number of recorded inspections decreased 69.5 per cent, and that, based on the number of premises covered by the Field Operations Divisions (FOD), the average premises could expect a visit by an HSE inspector every 38 years. The Committee notes that, in its response, the Government indicates that it has not set targets for the number of inspections to be undertaken, and has neither maintained nor created system routines so as to record them, and that the Government considers that the number of inspections carried out by the FOD should be evaluated in the context of the preventive activities the FOD actively carries out including the safety and health awareness days and the introduction of new supply-chain initiatives. The Government also indicates that the figures quoted by the TUC do not take into account the fact that the rapid turnover of small businesses distorts the figures. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the functioning of, and efforts to maintain, progressively develop and periodically review its labour inspection system.

Article 4(3)(d). Occupational health services in accordance with national law and practice. The Committee notes that the Government reports that the main occupational health services (OHS) responsibilities lay with the dutyholder, and that any worker who suffers an illness due to their occupation is eligible for treatment by the National Health Service (NHS); that by virtue of Regulations 6 and 7 of the Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations 1999, the employer is under a duty to provide OHS in accordance with national law and practice; and that it launched, in January 2010, a pilot programme for a voluntary UK accreditation scheme for OHS based on standards developed by the Faculty of Occupational Medicine (FOM), and that this scheme will become operational in 2011. The Committee also notes that, according to the TUC, there is no national occupational health provision in the United Kingdom and that, as few employers have access to private providers, a vast majority of workers have no coverage. The Committee further notes that, in its response, the Government emphasizes the regulated employers' duties in this respect where particular risks are thought to occur and where medical surveillance might be necessary. The Government also refers to the introduction, in 2001, of the "NHS Plus" project offering a range of OHS for large and small employers. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on efforts to maintain, progressively develop and periodically review its occupational health service system, and on the experiences gained in relation to the OHS voluntary UK accreditation scheme and the 2001 "NHS Plus" project.

Safety and Health in Agriculture Convention, 2001 (No. 184) (ratification: 2005)

Article 4 of the Convention. National policy. Formulation, implementation and periodic review after consultation of the social partners. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Decree No. 321/009 of 9 July 2009 concerning safety and health in agriculture, which gives effect to the present Convention and was drawn up in consultation with the social partners. The Committee emphasizes that a Tripartite Group for the Rural Sector was set up in 2007 with the aim of giving effect to the Convention. The Group was composed of the Rural Association of Uruguay, the Rural Federation, the National Association of Milk Producers, the Inter-Union Assembly of Workers – National Confederation of Workers (PIT–CNT) and the General Labour and Social Security Inspectorate of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. Advice was provided by the ILO and the Group's work culminated in the adoption of Decree No. 321/009. Moreover, section 95 of the Decree provides for the establishment of the Tripartite Committee on Safety and Health in the Rural Environment (CTR), which will follow up the application of the Decree and take decisions by consensus. Section 3 of Decree No. 321/009 establishes the objectives of national policy, while section 4 of the Decree states that national policy shall be formulated, implemented and periodically reviewed in conjunction with the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the work of the CTR and on any developments relating to the implementation and periodic review of its national policy on safety and health in agriculture.

The Committee is raising a number of other points in a direct request to the Government.

Zimbabwe

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2003)

Legislation. The Committee notes the information from the Government indicating that there have been no legislative changes which affect the application of the Convention but that a new occupational safety and health (OSH) law is under review by the Ministry of Labour and Social Service. In this context, the Committee hopes that the Government will take into account the comments that have been made by the Committee in the context of the application of the present Convention as well as the other OSH Conventions ratified by Zimbabwe. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of the developments in this regard and to transmit copies of any new legislation once it has been adopted.

Part V of the report form. Article 9(2) of the Convention. Application in practice. Adequate penalties for violations of the laws and regulations. Statistical information. The Committee notes that in response to its previous comments, the Government refers to the monitoring functions entrusted to the inspectorate services, including the requirements related to the registration and licensing of hazardous substances also monitored by the inspectorate services. In terms of statistical information, the Government merely notes that there are about 1,300,000 workers covered by national legislation in the formal sector, and an unknown number of workers in the informal economy, and that there were 146 (unspecified) contraventions. The Government does not provide any further statistical data, nor more detailed information based on the work of the inspectorate services. In this context, and with reference to the ILO Plan of Action (2010–16) to achieve widespread ratification of Convention No. 155, its 2002 Protocol and Convention No. 187 (see www.ilo.org/wcmsp5/groups/public/---ed\_norm/---normes/documents/genericdocument/wcms\_125616.pdf), the Committee invites the Government to consider developing its recording and notification systems and to consider a ratification of the Protocol of 2002 to the present Convention, which regulates issues related thereto. As regards the comments by the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) that the penalties and fines for non-compliance with the law on occupational health are too low, the Government indicates that, although under current legislation violations were fined and properly followed up, the new OSH law which is under review will provide for stiffer penalties for violations of the OSH law. Levels of fines in Zimbabwe range from levels one to 14, where one is the lowest. The penalties provided for in the new law will range from ten to 14. The Committee also notes that in comments made on the application of other OSH Conventions ratified by the Government, the ZCTU further considers that the main shortcomings in the application lies in the monitoring and enforcement of relevant national legislation and that another notable challenge is the court system where OSH cases are allegedly not given priority and prosecutions can take more than two years to be brought before the courts. Against this background, the Committee requests the Government to respond to the comments by the ZCTU by providing further detailed information on the application in practice of both existing, as well as any future, legislation with regard to the present Convention; to submit information regarding the sanctions which apply for breaches of national OSH legislation and the follow-up thereto; and to keep the Committee informed of any developments regarding the recording and notification system in the country.

Chemicals Convention, 1990 (No. 170) (ratification: 1998)

Article 6(1) of the Convention. Classification systems. With reference to the comments from the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) submitted in 2006, the Government indicates that the Environment Management Act, Chapter 20:27, sections 72, 74 and 75, and the Hazardous Substances Regulations, provide for the classification and labelling of hazardous substances, which consists of four groups and that the labelling is approved by the Environment Management Board. It also notes that, as a complement thereto, pictograms in the form of warning triangles are also applied. The Committee notes, however, that the Government did not provide any further information on the specific criteria for the classification of all chemicals and for assessing the relevance of the information required to determine whether a chemical is hazardous. In additional comments submitted in 2009, the ZCTU submits that the shortcomings of relevant national legislation is, inter alia, a lack of monitoring and enforcement and the fact that the relevant penalties for sanctions are not a deterrent. The Committee requests the Government to provide additional information on specific criteria for the classification of all chemicals and on procedures of labelling, in law and in practice. With reference to the comments submitted by the ZCTU, the Committee also requests the Government to provide further information on monitoring and enforcement of relevant national legislation, in particular as regards the registration and labelling of chemicals, including the imposition of penalties against violations.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee refers the Government to the comment made this year regarding the application of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155).

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 13 (Afghanistan, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Benin, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, Cameroon, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Croatia, Cuba, Estonia, Finland, Guinea, Italy, Luxembourg, Russian Federation, Senegal, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo); Convention No. 45 (Angola, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Plurinational State of Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, China, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Ecuador, Egypt, Fiji, Gabon, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Japan, Malawi, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Tajikistan, United Republic of Tanzania; Tanganyika, Turkey, United Kingdom: Falkland Islands (Malvinas), United Kingdom: Gibraltar); Convention No. 62 (Belgium, Egypt, France, Guinea, Honduras, Ireland); Convention No. 115 (Belgium, China: Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, Denmark, Egypt, Germany, Ghana, Guyana, Hungary, Japan, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Norway,

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention (Revised), 1934 (No. 42) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the new schedules of occupational diseases are established by the Interministerial Order of 5 May 1996 fixing the list of diseases presumed to be of occupational origin (Official Journal No. 16 of 23 March 1997). The Government states in this connection that the 84 schedules set forth in the abovementioned Order were so drafted as to be consistent with Convention No. 42 and after consultation of the Occupational Diseases Commission. It adds that the Committee's comments will be brought to the attention of this commission with a view to the updating of the schedule.

While taking due note of this information, the Committee can but observe that despite the comments it has been making for many years, the Government did not seize the opportunity offered by the adoption of the abovementioned Order of 1996 to bring its legislation fully into line with the Convention. It nevertheless hopes that the Occupational Diseases Commission will be in a position to consider the matter promptly and that the Government will indicate in its next report the measures that have been taken to amend the schedules to take account of the points below:

- (i) the lists of the various pathological manifestations related to toxic substances enumerated by the Convention (appearing in the left-hand column of the various schedules) must be of an indicative nature;
- (ii) the wording of the items pertaining to poisoning by arsenic (schedules Nos 20 and 21), manifestations caused by the halogen derivatives of hydrocarbons of the aliphatic series (schedules Nos 3, 11, 12, 26 and 27), and poisoning by phosphorous and certain of its compounds (schedules Nos 5 and 34) must, pursuant to the Convention, which is worded in general terms on these points, cover all the manifestations that may be caused by the above substances;
- (iii) the list of activities in which there is a risk of exposure to anthrax infection (schedule No. 18) must include the "loading, unloading or transport of merchandise" in general.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention (Revised), 1934 (No. 42) (ratification: 1959)

The Government explains in its report received in September 2010 that a national independent tripartite body, Safe Work Australia, has been set up in partnership with the state and territory governments, whose functions include the development of national policies on workers' compensation and the formulation of proposals for the harmonization of workers' compensation arrangements across jurisdictions. The Government points out that the issues raised by the Committee have been drawn to the attention of the concerned state and territory governments and these will also be considered in the broader context of the activities of Safe Work Australia. While taking note of the Government's indication that workers' compensation and occupational health and safety issues are primarily the responsibility of the legislature of the state and territory governments, the Committee observes that the responsibility to implement the Convention lies with the Government and hopes that the Government will spare no effort, within the new institution concerned with the harmonization of the legislation, to bring the state and territory legislations in conformity with the Convention.

Queensland. The Committee regrets to note that for many years the State Government of Queensland has failed to comply with the obligation contracted by Australia under Article 2 of the Convention to recognize the presumption of occupational origin of the diseases listed by the Convention for workers engaged in the corresponding occupations or industries, and to amend the Workers' Compensation and Rehabilitation Act of 2003 accordingly. The Committee hopes that the State Government of Queensland will make an effort to consider the solutions implemented by other constituent territories of Australia, which are fully applying the Convention, and will amend the present workmen's compensation scheme by supplementing it with a list of occupational diseases and corresponding trades covering at least all those enumerated in the Convention, so as to provide for the presumption of their occupational origin.

Australian Capital Territory. The Government states in its report received in August 2010 that Schedule 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act shall be amended at the end of 2010 to establish the presumption of the occupational origin of anthrax infection contracted in employment related to the loading and unloading or transport of merchandise in general. The Committee welcomes this report and requests the Government to supply a copy of the amended Act in the next report.

South Australia. The Committee invites the State Government of South Australia to follow the example of the Australian Capital Territory in expressly establishing in the legislation the presumption of the occupational origin of anthrax infection of workers employed in loading and unloading or transport of merchandise. The Committee notes that the aim of such recognition of the occupational origin of this infection consists precisely in freeing the worker concerned from the obligation to prove on the balance of probabilities that the disease has arisen out of employment.

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1987)

Article 1 of the Convention. Equality of treatment. With reference to its previous comments on the Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17), and Convention No. 19, the Committee notes with satisfaction that a new Labour Code has been adopted in 2007 according to which foreign workers, their families or dependants, who have been victims of occupational accidents, are granted the same treatment in respect of compensation as the nationals of Cape Verde (section 18(1)).

The Committee is raising other points in a request directly addressed to the Government.

Old-Age Insurance (Industry, etc.) Convention, 1933 (No. 35) (ratification: 1935)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Tripartite Committee (representations made under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO)

1. Representation made by the National Trade Union Coordinating Council (CNS) and a number of national trade unions of workers of the Private Sector Pension Funds (AFPs). The Committee recalls that the non-observance by Chile of Convention No. 35 and the Invalidity Insurance (Industry, etc.) Convention, 1933 (No. 37), following the reform of the pensions system in 1980 has been recognized for many years. This issue has given rise to several representation procedures under article 24 of the ILO Constitution, in the context of which, in 1986 and 2000, the Governing Body concluded that the Conventions in question were not complied with and entrusted the Committee of Experts with the task of supervising the implementation of its conclusions and recommendations. These conclusions and recommendations called on the Government to amend the national legislation to ensure that the privately managed pension system established by Legislative Decree No. 3.500 of 1980 is administered by non-profit-making organizations; that representatives of the insured are able to participate in the administration of the system; and that employers contribute to the financing of the old-age and invalidity benefits. The Committee recalls that, in view of the absence of adequate measures taken by the Government to give effect to the recommendations of the Governing Body, this case has already been discussed on repeated occasions in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in 1987, 1993, 1995, 2001 and, most recently, in 2009. During the most recent Conference Committee discussion of the case, the Government recognized that the privately managed pension system established in 1980 was not in accordance with the basic principle for social security systems encouraged by the ILO in a context of tripartism and the Government indicated that a legislative reform in 2008 (Act No. 20.255) had resulted, with ILO technical assistance, in the most significant social reform through the establishment, in addition to the existing pension system of a system of minimum pensions based on the principle of solidarity, under which the total number of beneficiaries in December 2008 would be 600,000, rising to nearly 1,200,000 beneficiaries in December 2012.

In its examination of the present case in 2009, the Committee considered that this reform did not give effect to recommendations of the Governing Body as the 2008 reform did not modify the general logic of the Chilean pension system, which remains based on individual saving capacity: persons who are in employment are still required by law to be affiliated to a profit-making pension fund and have to pay into their individual capital accumulation account a percentage of their remuneration, without employers also being required by law to contribute to the financing of benefits. In this respect, the Committee observed that the reform not only maintained the private pension fund administrators (AFPs) as the principal mechanism for old-age protection, but in effect reinforced their position because, if their private management generates pensions that are not sufficient to cover at least the essential needs of the pensioner, these insufficient amounts will be supplemented by an old-age pension (APS) financed through national solidarity and paid to persons whose retirement pensions do not reach a minimum threshold.

In its latest report, the Government confines itself to confirming that the privately managed pension system is administered by profit-making institutions. According to the information provided by the Worker members during the discussion of the case at the Conference in 2009, 30 per cent of the profits made on the funds resulting from the contributions paid by workers thereby go to pension fund administrators, in addition to the management fees for the funds. The Committee notes with continuing concern that the management of the system by private profit-making companies gives rise to considerable losses for workers, who are thereby denied part of the profits made by the contributions that they pay into their capital accumulation accounts.

With regard to the issue of the participation of insured persons in the administration of the system, the Government indicates that the reform introduced by Act No. 20.255 was intended to ensure better representation of insured persons in the administration of pension funds by establishing a users' commission composed of representatives of workers, retirees, public institutions and private institutions, and that the commission is chaired by a university professor. According to the Government, the function of this commission is to ensure the accuracy of the information provided to users on the basis of which they make their decisions when selecting their pension fund. On 10 May 2010, the users' commission issued its first report containing, inter alia, proposals relating to the various aspects of the operation of the pensions system. In this respect, the Committee notes that the creation of the users' commission, although representing a step in the right direction, still does not guarantee the representatives of insured persons the right to be able to participate in the administration of their pension funds, as required by the Conventions under examination. The Government is therefore requested to take the necessary measures to ensure, in accordance with the Conventions under examination, that the representatives of insured persons participate in the administrative bodies of AFPs, and in particular those that determine investment policies. The Committee emphasizes in this respect that other countries which have also adopted capital accumulation systems have established systems of administration that guarantee the participation of insured persons.

Finally, with regard to the need to ensure the collective financing of pensions, the Government indicates in its latest report that the reform of the system introduced by Act No. 20.255 of 2008 has had the effect of making employers responsible for invalidity and survivors' insurance contributions. In the case of enterprises employing 100 persons or more, this new measure entered into force on 1 June 2009 and will be extended to all enterprises from 1 July 2011. The Committee notes that this reform has not had an impact on the financing of old-age pensions, which remain exclusively financed by workers. The Committee nevertheless welcomes that it establishes the practice of contribution by employers to the invalidity and survivors protection scheme, thereby introducing the principle of the collective financing. The Committee notes, however, that the level of the contributions that are solely to be paid by employed persons (namely old-age contributions and deductions from wages for the administration of pension funds) represents 11.5 per cent of the monthly wage of employed persons, while the contribution of employers to the financing of invalidity and survivors' benefits is equivalent to only 1.87 per cent of the wage. The Committee hopes that this is only a first step by the Government with a view to establishing a better balance between the contributions of employers and of workers to the financing of old-age, invalidity and survivors' insurance schemes. As an informational matter, the Committee observes in this respect that Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), provides that the total of the insurance contributions to be paid by protected employed persons should not exceed 50 per cent.

In view of all of the substantive questions arising in relation to the application of the Convention, the Committee encourages the Government to continue having recourse to the technical assistance of the Office, as it has done in recent years, with a view to continuing the reform of the Chilean retirement pensions system based on the principles of solidarity, the sharing of risks, and collective financing, which are the essence of social security, combined with the principles of transparent, responsible and democratic administration of the pensions scheme by institutions that are not profit making, with the participation of the representatives of the insured persons.

2. Representations made by the College of Teachers of Chile AG. In 1999 and 2007, in the context of two representations made by the College of Teachers of Chile AG alleging non-observance by Chile of Conventions Nos 35 and 37 on the grounds of non-payment of part of the social security contributions based on the gross remuneration of teachers, the Governing Body approved the reports of the tripartite committees established by virtue of article 24 of the ILO Constitution. These reports found that the Conventions had not been observed and called on the Committee of Experts to follow up the recommendations in the reports. In the first case, the Government was called upon to guarantee the payment by municipal authorities of the social security contribution arrears for teachers so that they could lay claim to full social security benefits, and particularly old-age and invalidity benefits. In the second case, the Governing Body concluded that it was the responsibility of the State to guarantee the payment of the debt in relation to the social security system resulting from the non-payment to teachers by the municipal authorities of an education subsidy which constituted a component of remuneration on the basis of which social security contributions are calculated and which therefore results in a decrease in social security benefits.

The Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the Government in its latest report, action has been taken with a view to preventing delays in the payment of social security contributions in combination with an unprecedented reform to improve the operation of the labour justice system. The Government nevertheless indicates that the education system is prone to disputes relating to the problem of the payment of certain components of wages, and particularly special subsidies, in view of the complexity of the structure of remuneration, which complicates the determination of arrears, and that these issues are the responsibility of the Court of Accounts (Contraloría General) and the directorate of labour, which have had to resolve these disputes in an appropriate manner. The Government adds, with regard to the special problem of teachers employed by municipal authorities, that the Basic Act on the municipal sector has been amended to provide for adequate penalties against the mayors of municipal authorities who do not comply with their obligations, including the payment of the social contributions owed in respect of their employees. The legislation henceforth includes the dissuasive concept of "significant failure to discharge a duty", which may lead to the removal from office of those responsible and the prohibition on their holding public office in the future. Finally, the 2008 reform of the social insurance system has reinforced the responsibility of mayors and other competent authorities in relation to the payment of social contributions.

The Committee takes due note of this information and invites the Government to describe the manner in which the new legislation is applied in practice, including with an indication of the number of inspections carried out, particularly by the labour directorate and the Court of Accounts, with a view to ensuring the payment by municipal authorities of the education subsidy; the number and nature of the violations reported; and the number and nature of the penalties imposed. The Government is also requested to indicate whether the situation of the arrears in the case of municipal authorities has been resolved and to indicate any amounts that remain unpaid; the number of municipal authorities that are still in arrears in the payment of the education subsidy, the amounts involved and the number of workers affected; as well as the amounts of the reimbursements made.

3. Representation made by the College of Teachers of Chile AG. On 9 November 2009, the College of Teachers of Chile AG, under article 24 of the ILO Constitution, presented a representation alleging non-observance by Chile of Convention No. 35 and Convention No. 37. At its 308th Session (June 2010), the ILO Governing Body found this representation receivable and decided “to postpone the appointment of the Committee to examine the representation pending the examination of the case by the Committee of Experts at its next session, in November–December 2010”. The Governing Body also decided “to transmit the information provided by the complainant to the Committee of Experts with a view to the examination of this issue in the context of the follow-up given to the recommendations previously adopted by the Governing Body on similar matters, as envisaged by Article 3, paragraph 3, of the Standing Orders concerning the procedure for the examination of representations”.

The Committee notes the mandate assigned by the Governing Body in conformity with article 3, paragraph 3, of the Standing Orders concerning the procedure for the examination of representations. In accordance with this provision, “if a representation which the Governing Body decides is receivable relates to facts and allegations similar to those which have been the subject of an earlier representation, the appointment of the committee charged with examining the new representation may be postponed pending the examination by the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations of the follow-up given to the recommendations previously adopted by the Governing Body”. The recommendations of the Governing Body in respect of the previous representations presented by the College of Teachers regarding similar facts and allegations were adopted in 1999 and 2007 and the follow-up given is examined under point 2 above.

The 2009 representation procedure led the Committee to suspend its examination under article 22 of the ILO Constitution of the issues related to this representation, pending a decision by the Governing Body on this matter. The Committee recalls that it had treated these matters in its observations of 2008 and 2009 based on the information supplied by the College of Teachers A.G. of Chile and the Government and also on the information emanating from the discussion in 2009 by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards of the implementation by Chile of Convention No. 35.

The Committee notes that the College of Teachers of Chile AG indicates that in 1980 Legislative Decree No. 3.551 issuing standards respecting remuneration in the public sector established, as from 1 January 1981, a special untaxed subsidy for teachers under the authority of the Ministry of Public Education. Calculated as a pro rata of the basic wage, this subsidy amounted to 90 per cent of the wage for graduate teachers and 50 per cent for non-titularized teachers. In 1982, a law transferred to the municipal authorities teachers who had previously been under the responsibility of the Ministry of Public Education, while placing them under the remuneration system of the private sector. This transfer resulted in the ending of the payment of the subsidy. The College of Teachers asserts that the non-payment of this component of their remuneration is at the origins of a “historic debt” of the State in relation to teachers. Furthermore, according to the College of Teachers of Chile AG, as social security contributions represent a percentage of gross remuneration and are paid by the employer to the competent social security bodies, the ending of the payment of the special subsidy also resulted in a decrease in the contributions of the employers to their capital accumulation retirement accounts and therefore a decrease in the amount of the pensions of around 80,000 teachers, in violation of the general principles set out in Conventions Nos 35 and 37, ratified by Chile.

According to the information supplied by the Government in its reports under article 22 of the ILO Constitution in 2009 and 2010, the special subsidy established by Legislative Decree No. 3.551 of 1980 constitutes a non-taxable supplement to remuneration paid only to public employees not subject to old-age and invalidity contributions. The Government adds that all teachers were transferred to the private remuneration system by Act No. 18.196 of 1982, which explicitly provides that the legislative texts governing the public sector remuneration system, including Legislative Decree No. 3.551 of 1980, shall no longer be applicable to the persons concerned. The Government also indicates that since 1991 the conditions of service of teachers employed by municipal authorities have been governed by Act No. 19.070, which does not provide for the maintenance of the subsidy referred to above, and that the Supreme Court has found that the fact that agreements may in certain cases have been concluded for the maintenance of the previous remuneration system cannot be considered as legitimately applying to employment contracts concluded following the adoption of Act No. 18.196, which prohibits such agreements. Furthermore, the Court of Accounts (Contraloría General de la República) has considered that, although certain teachers transferred to the municipal authorities may have continued to receive a wage supplement of a nature similar to the special subsidy established by Legislative Decree No. 3.551, this amount was the result of an agreement concluded by the latter with the municipal authorities employing them. It accordingly considers that there is no “historic debt” in relation to those teachers, but that it consists of a political claim by the latter.

The Committee notes that the new representation made by the College of Teachers of Chile AG bears similarities with the two previous representations since all three cases concern allegations relating to the non-payment of social contributions with an impact on the level of the teachers’ old-age and invalidity pensions. The Committee notes that the first two representations concerned the non-observance by the competent authorities of the legal provision of the national legislation, and that the existence at the national level of a legal basis regarding the entitlement of teachers to the payment of arrears of social contributions was clearly established. However, the new representation made in 2009 by the College of Teachers raises the question of whether there exists in national law a legal basis establishing the entitlement of teachers to maintain a benefit derived from the conditions of service of public employees, which no longer applied to them due to their transfer under different conditions of service.

The Committee observes, therefore, that the status of teachers, in the context of the 2009 representation, raises new questions governed by contested domestic law. The Committee notes that although the new representation concerns allegations similar to those raised by the 1999 and 2007 representations, the legal facts on which the 2009 representation is based are different from these earlier representations. Accordingly, the Committee, replying to the mandate assigned by the Governing Body, concludes that the follow-up to the recommendations adopted previously by the Governing Body are not relevant in the context of the examination of the 2009 representation.

Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government had stated previously that it is not in a position to provide information that would enable the Committee to assess the application of Articles 13, 14 and 18 (in relation with Articles 19 and 20), as well as Articles 21, 23 and 24(2) of the Convention, in view of the difficult political and economic situation experienced by the country. With regard to the draft text to add to the schedule of occupational diseases, in accordance with Article 8 of the Convention, diseases caused by the toxic halogen derivatives of hydrocarbons of the aliphatic series and diseases caused by benzene or its toxic homologues, the Government had undertaken to transmit the extended schedule of occupational diseases as soon as it has been adopted by the National Labour Council. The Committee hopes that, despite the difficulties to which the Government is confronted, the extended schedule of occupational diseases will be adopted in the near future in order to give full effect to Article 8 of the Convention and that the Government will make every effort to provide information concerning the application of the other provisions of the Convention referred to above, as requested in its 1995 observation. The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would indicate any progress achieved in the formulation and adoption of the new Social Security Code.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Ever since the Convention was ratified in 1978, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to amend section 29 of Decree No. 57-245 of 1957 on the compensation of occupational accidents and diseases in order to bring the national regulations into conformity with Article 1(2) of the Convention. According to this provision, the nationals of States that have ratified the Convention and their dependants must receive the same treatment as Djibouti grants to its own nationals in respect of workers' compensation. Under the terms of this section of the Decree, unlike nationals, foreign workers injured in industrial accidents who transfer their residence abroad no longer receive a periodical payment but a lump-sum payment equal to three times the periodical payment they received previously. The Government previously referred to a draft reform of the labour legislation aimed at the full application of the principle of equal treatment and the formal repeal of the residence requirement laid down by the Decree of 1957. The Government also stated that this residence requirement has only been applied occasionally to foreigners. In its last report, the Government indicates that the Committee's observations will be studied by the National Council for Labour, Employment and Vocational Training with a view to bringing the national legislation into conformity with the Convention. It hopes that the conditions allowing for this process to resume will be met as soon as possible. Nevertheless, the Government points out that the Djiboutian system does not apply any reduction to the amount of the periodical payment transferred abroad. The Committee trusts that, in view of the situation which prevails in practice, the Government will seize the opportunity represented by the reform of the system of social protection currently under way and will formally repeal section 29 of Decree No. 57-245 so as to bring both the letter and spirit of the national legislation into full conformity with Article 1(2) of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ecuador

Invalidity, Old-Age and Survivors' Benefits Convention, 1967 (No. 128) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee regrets to note that the report supplied by the Government in 2007 reproduced the text of its report of 2001 and is therefore not at all responsive to the Committee's observation of 2005. It therefore expects the Government to supply a new detailed report containing reliable information on the application of all Articles of the Convention according to the report form adopted by the Governing Body, covering the developments in pension insurance for the whole period since 2001. Meanwhile, the Committee has examined the Law on Social Security of 2001, the statistics of the Ecuadorian Social Security Institute (IESS) annexed to the report and the Government's reply to the questions raised in the Committee's previous observation. It has also examined the recent ILO study Assessment of the social security system of Ecuador (June 2008) (Diagnóstico del sistema de seguridad social del Ecuador) (hereinafter the Assessment).

Part I (General provisions). Article 4(2) and (3) of the Convention, in conjunction with Articles 9(2)(a), 16(2)(a) and 22(2)(a). Scope of coverage. In reply to the Committee's previous observation, the Government has supplied the statistics of the IESS for the year 2003, which contain data on the population covered (1,184,484 persons) by the Statutory General Insurance (Seguro General Obligatorio – SGO). The Committee observes however that the statistics supplied by the Government still do not permit the Committee to ascertain whether the scope of coverage required by these provisions of the Convention (25 per cent of all employees in the country) is attained in Ecuador, as they do not specify the number of employees protected in the prescribed classes in relation to the total number of employees in Ecuador. The Committee hopes that these numbers will be specified by the Government in its next report.

Part II (Invalidity benefit). Articles 7–13 and Part VI (Common provisions). Article 32. Suspension of benefits. The Committee notes that the information concerning the application of these Articles of the Convention was missing in the reports supplied by the Government in 2001 and 2007 and asks the Government to furnish it as soon as possible.

Part V (Standards to be complied with by periodical payments). Article 29. Review of benefits. According to section 204 of the Law on Social Security, the IESS has the authority to determine the periodicity and the rate of pension adjustments depending on the evolution of the Technical Reserve of the Pension Fund. The Government's report of 2007 on the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), indicated, for example, that in 2006 pensions were increased twice by Resolutions CD 088 of 4 January and CD 107 of 24 April 2006. The Committee would like the Government to provide the statistical information for the time period starting from 2001 on the effective adjustments of pensions in comparison with the corresponding evolution of the cost-of-living index. It would also like the Government to state its position regarding the need to establish in law a mechanism for the regular periodic adjustment of pensions highlighted in the ILO Assessment, page 100.

Part VII (Miscellaneous provisions). Article 38. Coverage of agricultural employees. Upon ratifying the Convention, Ecuador has availed itself of the temporary exclusion from its provisions of the employees in the sector comprising agricultural occupations on condition that it shall gradually increase the number of agricultural employees protected and regularly report the progress achieved in the application of the Convention to such employees. Such exclusion is permitted by the Convention in case agricultural employees were not protected by the legislation of the country in question at the time of the ratification and may be maintained until the legislation applying the provisions of the Convention in respect of the persons protected is extended to cover also agricultural employees. The Committee recalls that, after the ratification of the Convention in 1978, agricultural workers were incorporated into the social security system under a special scheme for the protection of agricultural workers by virtue of Decree No. 21 of 1986. The statistics of the IESS supplied by the Government for the year 2003 are structured by the regime of affiliation to the SGO and include, besides such categories as employees in the banking, domestic and construction sector, the category of agricultural affiliates (agricolas), whose number amounted to 18,664 persons out of the total number of 1,184,484 persons covered by the SGO. With respect to those categories, the new Law on Social Security of 2001 establishes a special scheme only for workers in the construction sector and does not refer to any special scheme for agricultural workers. Moreover, according to sections 2a and 9a of the Law on Social Security of 2001, workers in a relation of dependency, irrespective of the nature of their occupation or place of work, are subject to the SGO, which includes an intergenerational solidarity pension scheme providing old-age, invalidity and survivors' benefits required by the Convention. The Committee understands therefore that agricultural employees are now fully covered by the Ecuadorian legislation applying the Convention in the same manner as employees in industrial undertakings and that the initial reason for excluding agricultural employees from the application of the Convention subsists no more. It would like the Government to furnish in its next report all the appropriate explanations and statistics requested in Article 38(2) of the Convention. If agricultural employees are indeed covered, the Committee invites the Government to consider renouncing its right to avail itself of the exclusion authorized by this Article as from a stated date.

Medical Care and Sickness Benefits Convention, 1969 (No. 130) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee regrets to note that the report supplied by the Government in 2008 reproduced the text of its report of 1998 and is therefore entirely unresponsive to the Committee's observation of 2007. Both reports did not contain any information concerning the application of Articles 21–32 of the Convention. The Committee would like to believe that the Government of Ecuador takes its reporting obligation under article 22 of the ILO Constitution seriously and endeavours to apply international Conventions in good faith. It therefore expects the Government to supply a new detailed report containing reliable information on the application of all Articles of the Convention according to the report form adopted by the Governing Body, covering the developments in medical care and sickness insurance for the whole period since 1993. Meanwhile, the Committee has examined the Law on Social Security of 2001, the statistics of the Ecuadorian Social Security Institute (IESS) annexed to the report and the Government's brief reply to the questions raised in the Committee's previous observation. It has also examined the recent ILO study – Assessment of the social security system of Ecuador (June 2008) (Diagnóstico del sistema de seguridad social del Ecuador) (hereinafter the Assessment).

Part I (General provisions). Article 2, in conjunction with Articles 11(a) and 20(a). Scope of coverage. The Committee observes that the statistics of the IESS for the year 2003 do not permit it to ascertain whether the scope of coverage required by these provisions of the Convention (at least 25 per cent of all employees in the country) is attained in Ecuador, as the statistics do not specify the number of employees protected in the prescribed classes in relation to the total number of employees in Ecuador. The Committee hopes that these numbers will be specified by the Government in its next report.

Article 3. Coverage of agricultural employees. Upon ratifying the Convention, Ecuador has availed itself of the temporary exclusion from its provisions of the employees in the sector comprising agricultural occupations on condition that it shall gradually increase the number of agricultural employees protected and regularly report the progress achieved in the application of the Convention to such employees. Such exclusion is permitted by the Convention in case agricultural employees were not protected by the legislation of the country at the time of the ratification and may be maintained until the legislation applying the provisions of the Convention is extended to cover also agricultural employees. The Committee recalls that, after the ratification of the Convention in 1978, agricultural workers were incorporated into the social security system under a special scheme for the protection of agricultural workers by virtue of Decree No. 21 of 1986. The statistics of the IESS are structured by the regime of affiliation to the Compulsory General Social Security (Seguro General Obligatorio – SGO) and include, besides such categories as employees in the banking, domestic and construction sector, the category of agricultural affiliates (agricolas), whose number in 2003 amounted to 18,664 persons out of the total number of 1,184,484 persons covered by the SGO. With respect to those categories, the Law on Social Security of 2001 establishes a special scheme only for workers in the construction sector and does not refer to any special scheme for agricultural workers. Moreover, according to sections 2a and 9a of this Law, workers in a relation of dependency, irrespective of the nature of their occupation or place of work, are subject to the SGO, which includes the General Health Insurance Scheme providing medical care and sickness benefits required by the Convention. The Committee understands therefore that agricultural employees are now fully covered by the Ecuadorian legislation applying the Convention in the same manner as employees in industrial undertakings and that the initial reason for excluding agricultural employees from the application of the Convention subsists no more. It would like the Government to furnish in its next report all the appropriate explanations and statistics requested in Article 3(2) and (3) of the Convention. If agricultural employees are indeed covered, the Committee invites the Government to consider renouncing its right to avail itself of the exclusion authorized by this Article as from a stated date.

Part II (Medical care). Articles 11(a) and 12, in conjunction with Article 14 (Coverage of the wives and children of insured persons). In reply to the Committee's previous observation concerning the need to extend coverage by health insurance of the family members of the insured person, the Government states that medical care is given to children of the insured person during the first year of their life. The Government's report repeats however under Articles 5 and 12 of the Convention the statement made in 1998 that medical care for the family members of the insured person was not developed in Ecuador. The description of the health insurance provided by the IESS and attached to the Government's report (Annex 2) begins by stating that coverage is extended to affiliated persons and children of affiliated women (los afiliados y los hijos de las afiliadas), which means that children of male affiliates are not covered. In contrast, section 102 of the Law on Social Security extends comprehensive medical care to the affiliated person, his or her spouse or partner, and children under 6 years of age. However, the 2008 ILO Assessment (pages 52–53) determined that in practice this provision has not been implemented, medical coverage has not been extended to the wives of insured persons, and their children remain covered by medical care only for the first year of their life.

Notwithstanding the contradictory character of some of the above information, which the Government is invited to clarify, the Committee understands that, with regard to medical coverage of the wives and children of insured persons in Ecuador, there exists a huge gap between what is prescribed in law and what is achieved in practice. Besides undermining the effectiveness of law, such situations point to the lack of a resolute and consistent public policy in the area of health care of the population. The Committee notes that there has been no apparent progress in the extension of coverage over the last ten years. Failure to provide basic medical care to children of small age results subsequently in an adult population becoming less healthy and requiring more medical care during their productive life, thus increasing the social and economic costs for the society as a whole. The Committee considers that recalling the country's legal obligation under the Convention to raise the level of medical care to the internationally agreed minimum could be, together with the related international technical assistance, an important factor inducing the Government to elaborate effective policies and measures for improving the state of health of the nation and its labour resources. Fulfilling its obligations under the Convention would require of the Government, inter alia, to put in place a clearly defined national programme for the development of medical coverage of the wives and children of the insured persons. Such programme should be time-bound and result-oriented, setting out benchmarks to monitor progress particularly with respect to children of defined age, which should be progressively raised. For additional guidance in the elaboration of such a programme the Government may wish to turn to the Medical Care Recommendation, 1944 (No. 69), as well as to the advice from the technical departments of the Office.

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1955)

The Committee refers to its comments under the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), with regard to the observations communicated by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) with the support of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC) on the impact of the measures introduced in the framework of the mechanism to support the Greek economy, on the application of the Convention.

The GSEE refers to the adoption of Act No. 3845 of 5 May 2010 on "Measures to implement a mechanism to support the Greek economy by the Member States of the Euro area and the International Monetary Fund". The appendix to this Act contains two Memorandums of Understanding concerning economic and financial policies and specific economic conditionality concluded between the Greek Ministry of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Greece on one side and the President of the Eurogroup, the European Commission, the European Central Bank and the International Monetary Fund on the other side, which list a series of time-bound commitments to be undertaken by the Government, including efforts to moderate pensions. According to the GSEE these commitments resulted in the adoption on 8 July 2010 of Act No. 3863/2010 on the "New Social Security System and relevant provisions" (FEK A'115) introducing a radical reform of the pension system for all current and future employees, which provides for the withdrawal of the State from the obligation to co-fund the social security system and limits its liability only to the funding of basic pensions as of 2015, as well as for the withdrawal of the State's guarantee as regards payment of supplementary pensions. The unified statutory retirement age is raised to 65 years by December 2015 and the retirement age of women in the public sector is raised to 65 by 2013. The Act also provides for the calculation of pensions on the basis of the entire working career; the rise of the minimum contribution period from 37 to 40 years by 2015; the restriction of early retirement and the increase of the minimum retirement age of 60 years by 1 January 2011, including for workers in heavy and arduous professions and those with 40 years of contributions; the introduction of reduced pension benefits for people retiring between the ages of 60–65 with less than 40 years of contribution; indexation of pensions on the basis of GNP and the consumer price index; the introduction of a means-tested minimum guaranteed pension for people aged above 65 years of age.

According to the GSEE, these substantial parametric changes established by Act No. 3863/2010 without adequate consultations with the social partners violate workers' social security rights and negate their entitlements and rightful expectations, as the reform will result in a reduction in the replacement rate of pensions by 20 per cent on average. The GSEE further refers to a decision of the Greek Court of Audit which confirmed the existence of constitutional irregularities and the reversal of acquired rights in this Act. The GSEE considers that by introducing permanent reforms the Government has failed to observe the Convention and disregarded alternative ways to address the long-term viability and efficiency of the social security system, which do not inflict so much hardship on the persons protected.

The Committee recalls the importance it attaches to the general responsibility to be assumed by the State for the sustainable financing and management of the national social security system, which is set out in Articles 71(3) and 72(2) of the Convention. The Committee therefore asks the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the application of each Article of the Convention in accordance with the report form adopted by the Governing Body, including as regards the concrete provisions of the new legislation and precise the basis of the calculation of the replacement level of pensions according to the new rules. The Committee will examine the comments by the GSEE, along with the Government's observations thereto, as well as the Government's report due in 2011, at its next session.

Guinea

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 5 of the Convention. Payment of benefits in case of residence abroad. The Committee recalls that the Government, in its earlier reports, indicated that the new Social Security Code, when adopted, would give full effect to Article 5 of the Convention under which the provision of old-age benefits, survivors benefits and death grants, and employment injury pensions must be guaranteed in the case of residence abroad, irrespective of the country of residence and even in the absence of agreements with such country, both to nationals of Guinea and to nationals of any other State which has accepted the obligations of the Convention for the corresponding branch. However, in its last report, the Government indicates that the new Social Security Code does not entirely fulfil the requirements of the provisions of Article 5 of the Convention, in that it does not provide for maintenance of payment of the various benefits in case of change of residence, and that this restriction is a constant feature of the legislation governing the field in the States in the subregion. However, the Government hopes that further negotiation of bilateral agreements with other States will make good this weakness in the Social Security Code.

In this connection, the Committee notes that under section 91, paragraphs 1 and 2, of the new Code, benefits are cancelled when the beneficiary definitively leaves the territory of the Republic of Guinea, or are suspended while she or he is not resident on national territory. It notes however that, under the last paragraph of that section, these provisions "are not applicable in the case of nationals of countries which have subscribed to the obligations of the international Conventions of the International Labour Office regarding social security ratified by the Republic of Guinea, or where there are reciprocal agreements or multilateral or bilateral social security agreements on the provision of benefits abroad". Since, by virtue of this exception, the nationals of any State which has accepted the obligations of Convention No. 118 for the corresponding branch, may in principle now claim benefits in case of residence abroad, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether this is in fact the case and, if so, whether a procedure for the transfer of benefits abroad has been established by the national social security fund, to meet the possible demands for such foreign transfer. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to state whether the exception provided in the last paragraph of section 91 is also applicable to Guinean nationals in the event of their transferring their residence abroad, in accordance with the principle of equal treatment established under Article 5 of the Convention as regards the payment of benefits abroad.

Article 6. Payment of family allowances. With reference to the comments it has been formulating for many years regarding the provision of family allowances in respect of children residing abroad, the Committee notes that, under section 94, paragraph 2, of the new Code, to obtain the right to family allowances, dependent children "must reside in the Republic of Guinea, subject to the special provisions of the international Conventions on social security of the International Labour Office, reciprocal agreements or bilateral or multilateral agreements". With respect to reciprocal agreements or bilateral or multilateral agreements, the Committee recalls that to date Guinea has concluded no agreement of this sort for the payment of family allowances in respect of children residing abroad. Regarding the special provisions of the ILO Conventions, it recalls that under Article 6 of Convention No. 118 any State which has accepted the obligations of the Convention for branch (i) (family benefit) must guarantee payment of family allowances both to its own nationals and to the nationals of any other member which has accepted the obligations of this Convention for that branch, as well as for refugees and stateless persons, in respect of children who reside on the territory of any such State, under conditions and within limits to be agreed upon by the States concerned. In this connection, the Government states in its report that the payment of family benefits is guaranteed to families of whom the breadwinner has been regularly insured by the social security system, and is in order regarding the payment of his own contributions, and those of his successive employers. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will be able to confirm formally in its next report that the payment of family allowances will also be extended to cover insured persons up to date with their contributions, whether they are nationals, refugees, stateless persons or nationals of any other States which have accepted the obligations of the Convention for branch (i), whose children reside on the territory of one of these States and not in Guinea. The Committee would also like to know in these cases how the condition of residence is dispensed with for the application of section 99, paragraph 2, of the new Code, which only recognizes as dependent those children "that live with the insured person", and also for section 101, which makes payment of family allowances subject to an annual medical examination of the child, up to the age where she or he comes under the school medical service, and the regular medical care for beneficiaries of school age attending courses in educational or vocational training establishments.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 8 of the Convention. Occupational diseases. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the list of occupational diseases revised in 1992, indicating whether it is now in force.

Article 15(1). Conversion of periodical payments into a lump sum. In accordance with the provisions of section 111 of the Social Security Code, periodical payments for employment injury are converted into a lump sum when the permanent incapacity is at most equal to 10 per cent. The Committee recalls, however, that its comments concerned the possibility of converting the benefit granted in the event of employment injury in the circumstances provided for in sections 114 (conversion after expiry of a five-year period) and 115 of the Social Security Code (conversion into a lump sum of part of the periodical payment at the request of the person concerned). The Committee again expresses the hope that the necessary measures will be taken to ensure that in all these cases periodical payments may be converted into a lump sum only in exceptional cases and with the consent of the victim where the competent authority has reason to believe that the lump sum will be utilized in a manner which is particularly advantageous for the injured person.

Articles 19 and 20. Amount of benefits. In the absence of the statistical information requested which the Committee needs so that it can determine whether the amount of benefits paid in the event of temporary incapacity, permanent incapacity and death of the breadwinner, reaches the level prescribed by the Convention, the Committee once again asks the Government to indicate whether it avails itself of Article 19 or of Article 20 of the Convention in establishing that the percentages required by Schedule II of this instrument have been reached, and to provide the statistical information required by the report form adopted by the Governing Body under Article 19 or 20, depending on the Government's choice.

Article 21. Review of employment injury benefit rates. In view of the importance it attaches to this provision of the Convention which establishes that the rates of employment injury benefits must be reviewed to take account of trends in the cost of living and the general level of earnings, the Committee hopes that the Government's next report will contain information on the amount of the increases already established and that it will not fail to provide all the statistics required by the report form under this Article of the Convention.

Article 22(2). Payment of employment injury benefits to dependants. The Committee once again expresses the hope that the Government will be able to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in all cases where employment injury benefits are suspended and particularly in the cases provided for in sections 121 and 129 of the Social Security Code, part of these benefits will be paid to the dependants of the person concerned in accordance with the provisions of this Article of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the provisions of the Conditions of Service of the Public Service give public servants and their families full satisfaction as regards social coverage. It once again asks the Government to provide the text of the provisions of the above Conditions of Service dealing with compensation for employment injury with its next report.

Lastly, the Committee asks the Government in its future reports to provide information on any progress made in the revision of the Social Security Code, to which the Government referred previously.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guinea-Bissau

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention, 1925 (No. 18) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government states in its last report that the National Social Insurance Institute, which has competence for workers' compensation for occupational accidents and diseases, is having difficulty in identifying occupational diseases. The situation therefore remains unchanged in that, having been unable to determine occupational diseases, the Ministry of Public Health has not been able to adopt a list of such diseases.

The Committee takes note of this information. It can only note once again with regret the lack of progress in amending the national legislation to include a list of occupational diseases. In view of the importance of this matter, the Committee again expresses the hope that the Government will take all necessary steps in the very near future to ensure the adoption of a list of occupational diseases including at least those set out in the Schedule to Article 2 of the Convention. The diseases in question can then be recognized as occupational where contracted in the conditions prescribed in the Schedule. The Committee reminds the Government that it may seek technical assistance from the Office.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 1(1) of the Convention. Equality of treatment. In its previous comments, the Committee drew the Government's attention to section 3(1) of Decree No. 4/80 of 1981, concerning compulsory insurance against industrial accidents and occupational diseases. It pointed out that the abovementioned provision is inconsistent with the Convention in that it lays down reciprocity as a requirement for equal treatment between foreign workers employed in Guinea-Bissau and Guinean workers. In response, the Government states that the matter is still receiving its attention but that, as yet, no text has been adopted regarding the reciprocity required by section 3(1) of the abovementioned Decree. The Committee recalls in this connection that the Convention lays down a system of automatic reciprocity between member States which have ratified it. In these circumstances, it hopes that the Government will very shortly take all necessary steps to bring the abovementioned provision of its legislation into line with Article 1(1), of the Convention by ensuring that all nationals of States which have ratified this Convention are automatically afforded the same treatment as nationals of Guinea-Bissau with regard to accident compensation.

Article 1(2). Transfer of benefits abroad. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any compensation paid for injured persons or their dependants residing outside the country.

Article 2. Temporary or intermittent work. In its previous comments the Committee noted that section 3(3) of Decree No. 4/80 which excludes from the scope of the Decree foreign workers temporarily employed in Guinea-Bissau by foreign undertakings or international bodies is not fully consistent with this provision of the Convention. Article 2 of the Convention allows the exclusion of workers employed temporarily or intermittently in the territory of one Member on behalf of an undertaking located in the territory of another Member only under a special agreement concluded between the Members concerned. The Government indicated that, in practice, such workers have labour contracts under which they are protected by the legislation of their country of origin or the country of the undertaking or international body. The Government further stated that a bill had been drafted to regulate the conditions of foreign workers employed temporarily in Guinea-Bissau on behalf of a foreign undertaking. The Committee notes that the Government's last report provides no information on the bill – to which the Government has been referring since 1987. It asks the Government to keep it informed of progress made in ensuring better application of this provision of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guyana

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention (Revised), 1934 (No. 42) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee recalls that it has been drawing the Government's attention since 1971 to the need to amend the list of occupational diseases attached to Regulation No. 34 of 1969, implementing Act No. 15 of 1969 on national insurance and social security. It notes with regret, from the information communicated by the Government in its last report, that this list has still not been amended but that the competent authorities have been requested to accelerate the review procedure of the relevant regulation. It further notes that the Government no longer refers to the legislative reform regarding occupational safety and health. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to take the measures necessary as soon as possible to amend the list of occupational diseases to ensure full application of the Convention on the following points:

- (a) No. 1(x), (xi), (xii) and (xiv) on this list are to be replaced by a heading containing in general terms all halogen derivatives of hydrocarbons of the aliphatic series;
- (b) No. 7, which refers to certain disorders due to radiation should include all pathological manifestations due to radium and other radioactive substances or X-rays and the list of processes likely to induce these should be completed;
- (c) No. 1(i) and (v) relating to poisoning by lead and its compounds and mercury and its compounds should include lead alloys and mercury amalgams respectively;
- (d) No. 1(iii), which refers to poisoning by phosphorus and its compounds, should include the inorganic compounds of phosphorus;
- (e) No. 2 should include, among the processes likely to induce anthrax infection, all loading and unloading or transport of merchandise of any kind;
- (f) silicosis with or without pulmonary tuberculosis and the industries or processes involving the risk of this infection should also be added to the list.

The Committee wishes to remind the Government that it may request technical assistance from the ILO in this domain.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Hungary

Sickness Insurance (Industry) Convention, 1927 (No. 24) (ratification: 1928)

With reference to its previous observation, the Committee notes with interest that Act I of 2008 on health insurance offices based on Bill T/4221, which aimed at privatizing health insurance funds and moving the social partners away from participation in the management of these funds, has been repealed by Act No. XXIV of 2008. The Government reports that the reason for repeal was that the health model specified in this Act has led to discord in the political, social and professional opinions.

According to the Government, given the current economic and political situation, the reform of health insurance management is no longer a topical issue in Hungary. The Committee invites the Government, in its next detailed report on the Convention due in 2012, to explain its plans or proposals for the future model of health insurance management in Hungary. The Committee further invites the Government to explain its plan to administrate sickness insurance in line with Article 6 of the Convention.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Part IV of the Convention. Unemployment benefit. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the adoption of Decision No. 109 of 2006 (1374 H) on the establishment of an employment fund aimed at contributing to economic and social development through the provision of decent and productive job opportunities to specific categories of jobseekers. It also notes that section 15 of the Decision lays down the granting of a monetary benefit worth 60 dinars a month for jobseekers of specific categories. The Committee would like the Government to indicate whether these categories cover all persons protected, both from private and public sectors, who have lost employment involuntarily and who are unable to obtain suitable employment and are capable of, and available for, work. It would also like the Government to indicate the net and gross wage of the ordinary adult male labourer determined in accordance with Article 66 of the Convention, and to indicate whether the 60 dinars are net or gross benefit, its duration, the qualifying conditions (length of employment, etc.), if any. It would also like the Government to communicate the text of Decision No. 109.

The Committee wishes again to draw the Government's attention to the fact that the Convention is intended to afford effective protection against unemployment by means of a system of social security which makes it possible to finance unemployment benefit through collective contributions from all those concerned, thereby avoiding the situation in which they are payable directly by employers, which may become too burdensome if the level of unemployment in the country rises. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government would endeavour, with the help of the ILO, to adopt the necessary rules to permit the Social Security Fund to receive contributions and to pay unemployment benefit, thereby giving effect to Part IV of the Convention through a system of social security and taking into account more fully the principles of organization and financing set out in Articles 71 and 72.

Part VII. Family benefit. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 24 of Act No. 13 of 1980 only provided for the granting of family allowances to pensioners under the social security system, whereas Article 41 of the Convention covers other categories of employees or residents. In its report, the Government indicates that section 18 of the Order taken by the Council of Ministers, which relates to the regulations of employees with contracts, promulgated on 14 December 1971 specifies that the provisions of the Civil Service Act No. 55 of 1976 and the regulations issued thereof, shall apply to employees hired with contracts. The provisions of other laws and regulations also apply to them, in accordance with section 18 of the regulations on employees who have contracts as non-nationals, who become entitled to family benefits such as their national counterparts. The Committee notes this information. It would like the Government to communicate in its next report information on the application in practice of the above legislation, providing detailed statistics on the different categories of workers protected and the benefits provided, covering both the public and the private sectors, in accordance with Article 44 of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Malaysia

Peninsular Malaysia

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1957)

For many years, the Committee of Experts as well as the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, have been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that the national legislation and practice need to be brought in compliance with the principle of equality of treatment between nationals and non-nationals with regard to compensation for industrial accidents, in conformity with Article 1(1) of the Convention. In 1993, foreign workers were transferred from the Employees' Social Security Scheme (ESS) which provides for periodical payments to victims of industrial accidents and their dependants, to the Workmen's Compensation Scheme (WCS), which only guarantees the payment of a lump sum. In 1997, the Conference Committee concluded that the level of benefits granted under the ESS was significantly higher than that guaranteed by the WCS and insisted that foreign workers benefit from the same protection as Malaysian nationals. An ILO high-level technical advisory mission visited the country in May 1998 to examine ways of giving effect to the conclusions of the Conference Committee. As a result, the Government stated in its 1998 report that it was planning to review the coverage of foreign workers under the ESS and to propose amendments to the Social Security Act of 1969 in this regard. Since then, however, no steps were undertaken to bring the law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

In its previous observation of 2008, the Committee noted that, taking into account the large number of foreign workers concerned and their high accident rate, the situation called for special efforts from the Government of Malaysia to overcome administrative and practical difficulties, that were impeding equal treatment of foreign workers who suffer industrial accidents. The Committee invited the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this respect. In particular, the Government was asked to demonstrate the actuarial equivalence of the lump sum paid under the WCS to foreign workers in cases of temporary or permanent incapacity, invalidity or survivors' rights to the amount of the periodical payments granted under the ESS to Malaysian workers in similar cases. With respect to the difficulties mentioned by the Government concerning the payment of compensation abroad, the Committee pointed out that these difficulties could be overcome by way of special arrangements between the Members concerned in line with Article 1(2) of the Convention. Such arrangements should be concluded in the first place with the main countries supplying workforce to Malaysia. Among the 1.9 million foreign workers currently employed in Malaysia, more than 1.5 million come from Indonesia, followed by India, Myanmar, Bangladesh, the Philippines, Thailand, Pakistan and China. All of these countries are parties to the Convention.

In its response to the Committee's observation, the Government limited itself to reiterating its position that the WCS is a suitable and practical approach for managing compensation of industrial accidents for foreign workers in Malaysia, and expressed the opinion that the system is reliable and suitable to the needs of the workforce in Malaysia.

The Committee regrets to note that the Government, in its reply received on 30 July 2010, sees no need to modify the national law and practice to bring it into conformity with the Convention or to resort to the technical assistance which the international community is willing to provide for this purpose. In such a situation, it is the obligation of the Committee to advise the Government that it is breaching its obligations under international law by not observing the principle of equality of treatment between nationals of any other member State which has ratified the Convention and its own nationals. Such violation of the Convention by the Government of Malaysia undermines the system of automatic reciprocity in granting equality of treatment to nationals of ratifying States that the Convention establishes between them. Given the gravity of the situation, the Committee requests the Government to reconsider its position.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 100th Session and to report in detail in 2011.]

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1968)

The Committee notes that pursuant to Decree 008/2006 of 9 January 2006 increasing the minimum wage (SMIG), the minimum monthly pension has been increased by 267 per cent (from 4,715 Ouguiya (MRO) to MRO12,600) and that new pensions paid as of 1 January 2005 have been readjusted. Pensions not concerned by the increase of the SMIG have been increased by 30 per cent. Furthermore, the Committee notes the information received in 2009 and 2010 from the Association of Pensioners of the National Social Security Fund (CNSS), stating that pensioners have not benefited from the increase of pensions, despite the increase of the SMIG. The Association states further that the CNSS acts in breach of the national laws and decrees and escapes the necessary supervision by the Government.

In the light of these allegations, the Committee would like the Government to give a general appreciation of the manner in which the Convention is applied in Mauritania including, for instance, extracts from official reports and information on any practical difficulties in the application of the Convention.

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee, for many years, has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that the Workmen's Compensation Act (Cap. 220), which covers certain categories of workers excluded from the application of the National Pensions Act, 1976, does not contain any provisions giving effect to Article 5 (the principle of the payment of compensation in the form of periodical payments in the case of permanent incapacity or death), Article 7 (additional compensation for workmen injured in such a way as to require the constant help of another person), Article 9 (free entitlement to the necessary medical and surgical aid), Article 10 (supply and renewal of artificial limbs and surgical appliances) and Article 11 (guarantees against the insolvency of the employer or insurer) of the Convention. Since 1999, the Government has indicated that a merger was envisaged of the Workmen's Compensation Act and the National Pensions Act (NPA) to ensure the full application of the Convention. In its latest report, the Government indicates that the delay in finalizing the Bill is due to the fact that the Ministry of Social Security, National Solidarity and Reform Institutions has embarked on a wider examination of the NPA with a view to amend it holistically. The draft Bill will be introduced to the National Assembly as soon as it has been approved by the State Law Office. The Committee hopes that the draft law will be adopted soon and that it will include the provisions giving full effect to the abovementioned Articles of the Convention. It would also appreciate receiving a copy of the draft Bill when the State Law Office review process has been completed.

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1969)

Article 1 of the Convention. Equal treatment. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to section 3 of the National Pensions (Non-Citizens and Absent Persons) Order, 1978, as amended by the National Pensions Act (NPA), under which foreign nationals may not be affiliated to the insurance scheme unless they have resided in Mauritius for a continuous period of not less than two years. Foreign workers who do not meet this residence condition are covered by the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1931 (WCA), which does not ensure a level of protection equivalent to that guaranteed under the national pension scheme in the event of employment injury. The Committee has been reminding the Government that under the terms of Article 1(2) of the Convention, the nationals of other member States that have ratified the Convention as well as their dependants should be guaranteed equality of treatment in respect of industrial accidents without any condition as to residence.

In its reports since 2006, the Government states that a bill has been introduced to revise section 3 of the Order of 1978. The delay in finalizing the necessary amendments is due to the fact that the Ministry of Social Security, National Solidarity and Reform Institutions has embarked on a wider examination of the NPA with a view to amend it holistically, taking into account other issues requiring review, such as the need to merge the WCA into the NPA. The Government states that the draft bill will be introduced to the National Assembly as soon as it has been accepted by the State Law Office. The Committee hopes that the Government will be able to amend section 3 of the Order of 1978 in the very near future, so as to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee would appreciate receiving a copy of the draft Bill when the State Law Office review has been completed. The Committee thanks the Government for providing very detailed statistics on the number of work permits issued to foreign nationals and the number and nature of occupational accidents of foreign workers.

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee took note of the Government's report received in September 2008 containing a reply to the Committee's previous comments, in which the Committee has also referred to the Government's reply of 27 November 2007 to the observations of a number of trade unions (the Trade Union of Workers of the National Autonomous University of Mexico; the National Trade Union of Workers of the Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock, Rural Development, Fisheries and Food; the Single Trade Union of Workers of the Nuclear Industry; the Independent Trade Union of Workers of the Autonomous Metropolitan University; the National Union of Education Workers (14 sections); the Trade Union of the National Council for Culture and the Arts; the Administrative Union of the Autonomous University of San Luis Potosí) in 2007 alleging breaches of the Convention by the new Act on the State Workers' Social Security and Services Institute (ISSSTE). Further observations on this issue, dated 26 August 2008, were received from the Union of Lawyers of Mexico acting in the name of the Alianza de Tranviarios de Mexico, Single Union of Government Workers of the Federal District (SUTGDF), de la Sección XVIII (Michoacan) of the National Union of Education Workers (SNTE) y de la Sección XXII (Oaxaca) del SNTE. The United Trade Union of Government Workers of the Federal District (SUTGDF) has supplied additional observations in the communication dated 27 August 2008. The Committee notes that the trade unions' allegations contest the application by Mexico of virtually every Article of the Convention. In view of the volume and the detailed nature of these allegations and the fact that the next report of the Government should be a detailed report containing full information on the application of every Article of the Convention according to the report form adopted by the Governing Body, the Committee decided to concentrate its present comments on the main questions, which would help the Government to prepare a fully informative report for the Committee's examination next year. To conduct such an examination in full knowledge of the situation, the Committee needs the report to enlighten it in particular on the following two issues: on the legal certainty as to the state of the current legislation in view of the constitutionality of the ISSSTE being challenged in the Supreme National Court of Justice, and certainty as to the level and sustainability of benefits provided by the reformed social security system after the previous defined benefit collectively financed pay-as-you-go scheme was replaced by a defined contribution individual savings account system.

Legal certainty as to the state of the applicable national legislation

According to the information communicated by the trade unions, 85 per cent of the 2.3 million public employees insured by ISSSTE consider that this Act violates their acquired rights and imposes stricter conditions for entitlement to certain benefits. Hence, more than 2 million public workers submitted constitutional complaints (amparos constitucionales) contesting the constitutionality of the Act and of the Regulation on the exercise of the right of option under section Ten of the transitional provisions ((Décimo Transitorio o BONOISSSTE). According to the Law on constitutional complaints (Ley de Amparo), any such complaint has to be resolved in the period of 60 days and suspends during this period the application of the contested provision of the legislation. To deal with the mass of these complaints, the Supreme National Court of Justice (SCNJ) has set up two special tribunals mandated to consider these complaints.

The Committee notes that the Government's report was received in September 2008 when the Supreme Court had just started to consider these cases and therefore contained no information in this respect. To the extent that the application of the contested provisions of the ISSSTE might have been suspended, the Committee asks the Government to explain the decisions taken by the Supreme Court in these cases and their effect on the application of the ISSSTE Act in law and practice. The Committee further notes that the Supreme Court declared unconstitutional sections 20, 25, 60 final part, 136, 251 and subsection IV of section ten transitional, as well as, in June 2008, the provision on the calculation of pension on the basis of average wage received for the last three years before retirement, which reduced the possibility for public employees to receive a higher pension, and decided instead that the pension should be calculated taking into account only the last year's wage. The Committee asks the Government to indicate whether there were other decisions of the Supreme Court declaring unconstitutional the provisions of the ISSSTE and to supply the new text of all provisions, which were modified.

Certainty as to the level and sustainability of benefits

In its previous observation, the Committee pointed out that the reform of the ISSSTE made it necessary to conduct an overall actuarial valuation of the entire social security system to ensure the financial equilibrium of the new system and assess estimated level of benefits, in particular the replacement rate of the new scheme. Such actuarial valuation should be comprehensive and, henceforth include all liabilities of the new ISSSTE scheme, and asked the Government to indicate whether such a valuation has been carried out and, if so, to provide the results thereof. The Government's report of 2008 has not provided the information requested, indicating that the information processing systems of the two social security institutions – ISSSTE and IMSS – are in the process of coordination. In the meantime, the managing board of the ISSSTE has approved the actuarial report for 2008, which concludes that in the period 2008–13 the resources available to the Institute would on average cover only 88 per cent of the total cost of benefits it would have to deliver under the new law.

The Committee asks the Government to supply a copy of this report and to indicate measures taken or envisaged by the Government to make up the deficit and ensure the due provision of benefits under the ISSSTE scheme.

Taking into account that the reform of the state workers' scheme necessitated transfer to the ISSSTE of the social security funds from the general scheme (IMSS), the Committee once again stresses the importance of an actuarial evaluation of the entire social security system, which should cover the various pension schemes recapitulating at a specific evaluation date the fixed and contingent liabilities, as well as all the debts and commitments of the State deriving from the old and the new social security systems. Indeed, only an overall actuarial valuation of the entire system will make it possible to estimate the contingent deficits to be underwritten by the State and to make the corresponding forecasts. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to take the necessary measures to conduct such an actuarial study, as required by Article 71(3) of the Convention.

With regard to the question of the level of benefits, which the Committee has been addressing to the Government in its previous comments under Part XI of the Convention (Standards to be complied with by periodical payments), in the fully funded defined contributions scheme the amount of the pension is not determined in advance but depends on the capital saved in the workers' personal accounts and on the return thereon. The Committee therefore requests the Government to explain, with reference to the relevant actuarial forecasts, what replacement level the ISSSTE scheme aims to achieve after 30 years of contributions and whether the replacement level of 40 per cent required by the Convention would be attained for the standard beneficiary. If such is the case, The Committee requests information on the standard assumptions of the actuarial in terms of real interest rate, density of contribution that would guarantee the 40 per cent required by the Convention. Also the Committee requests to describe the mechanism of the adjustment of changes in the cost of living and the general level of wages.

Pursuant to section 92 of the ISSSTE Act, for workers meeting the requirements on age and qualifying period laid down in section 89 of the Act, the State provides a "guaranteed pension" in a monthly amount of 3,034.20 pesos. The Government indicated in its report of 2008 that this amount represents the double of the minimum pension level established by the Convention and that the amount of the average pension equalled four minimum wages and was four times higher than the Convention's minimum. The Committee notes this information with interest. However, it has not found in the Government's report the statistical information requested in its previous observation under Article 66 of the Convention, to enable the Committee to ascertain whether the minimum amount of the old-age pension attains the percentage prescribed by the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to substantiate the above statements by comparing the amount of the guaranteed pension with the reference wage of an ordinary adult male labourer, as required in the report form under Article 66 of the Convention.

In the general IMSS scheme, under section 170 of the Social Security Act, the State guarantees to workers who fulfil the age conditions and qualifying periods set out in section 162 of the Social Security Act, the provision of a "guaranteed pension", the amount of which is equal to the general minimum wage for the Federal District. According to the statistics provided previously by the Government, the amount of the minimum guaranteed pension for 2006 attained 42.95 per cent of the wage of an ordinary adult male labourer selected in accordance with the provisions of Article 66 of the Convention. The Committee wishes the Government to explain the difference between the guaranteed pension under the ISSSTE, which, according to the Government, represents the double of the minimum pension level established by the Convention, and the guaranteed pension of the IMSS, which is hardly above this minimum.

The Committee notes in this respect that, according to the trade unions' observation of 2007, neither the guaranteed pension under section 92 of the ISSSTE, nor the old-age and invalidity pensions under sections 91, 121 and 139 of the ISSSTE ensured the replacement level of 40 per cent required by the Convention. Referring to the Government's reply to the trade unions' observation, the Committee observes that in contesting these allegations the Government does not refer to any statistical data and seems to confuse the general minimum wage for the Federal District with the wage of an ordinary adult male labourer, which should be used as the reference wage for measuring the replacement level of the guaranteed pensions. The Committee therefore once again asks the Government in its next detailed report due in 2011 to provide the statistical information requested by the report form under Article 66 of the Convention (Titles I, II and IV). It also asks the Government to indicate whether the guaranteed pension also applies to the pension arising out of death and, if so, under which provisions.

Communications from representative organizations on the application of the Convention. The Committee notes the information transmitted by the Trade Union of Telephone Operators of the Mexican Republic in the communication dated 22 February 2010 concerning the situation of the AVON company workers and the settlement reached with the IMSS, which were the subjects of the Committee's previous comments. The Committee will examine this communication at its next session together with the comments that the Government would wish to formulate in this respect.

Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes the Government's reply dated 23 February 2009 to the direct request of 2007 and the detailed report on the application of the Convention received in October 2009. It also notes the observations of the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) supplied in October 2008, August 2009 and August 2010, where it maintained that the new Dutch legislation on employment injury benefits, the Work and Income (Employment Capacity) Act of 2006 (WIA), is not compatible with the Convention. In light of the trade union's observations, the Committee has decided to limit the present comments to the examination of the main aspects of the WIA. The Committee will consider changes in other implementing legislation on the occasion of the Government's next detailed report on the application of the Convention, which is due in 2011.

The Committee recalls that, since the adoption of the Disablement Benefits Act (WAO) in 1967, in the Dutch social security system the employment injury insurance scheme was merged with the general invalidity scheme and ceased to exist as a separate branch. Since 1 January 2006, the WAO has been replaced by the WIA, which establishes social security benefits for total and partial incapacity for work. As was true for the WAO, the WIA does not distinguish between employment injuries and general invalidity and covers both risks. This design of disability benefits in principle is compatible with the Convention, which does not prevent the possibility of covering the risks of employment injury through compensatory benefits provided by other branches of social security (medical care, sickness benefit, invalidity benefit and survivors' benefit). However, these compensatory benefits should then satisfy the more stringent requirements of the Convention as regards provision of the employment injury benefits for the contingencies covered by the Convention. In this respect, the Committee notes the following developments and would like to draw attention to the following questions.

According to Article 6 of the Convention, employment injury may result in the following covered contingencies, which are covered by different branches of the Dutch social security system:

- (a) A morbid condition covered by the medical care and allied benefits (Article 11), which in the Dutch system are provided by the health care branch.
- (b) Temporary or initial incapacity for work covered by cash benefit (Article 13), which in the Dutch system is provided by the mixed private/public system based on employers' civil liability to maintain wages during the first two years of sickness underpinned by the public safety net established by the Sickness Benefit Act (ZW).
- (c) Total or partial loss of earning capacity likely to be permanent or corresponding loss of faculty compensated by cash benefits (Article 14), which in the Netherlands are provided by the mixed public/private system under the WIA and the PEMBA Act, 1998, which empowers employers to assume the risk themselves for five years or to have recourse to private insurance.
- (d) The loss of support due to death of the breadwinner covered by cash benefits (Article 18), which in the Netherlands are provided under the General Surviving Relatives Act (ANW).

The Committee requests the Government to give particular attention in its forthcoming detailed report to examining the extent to which the Dutch legislation, especially following the privatization of the health-care branch and the sickness benefit, continues to ensure protection against contingencies (a), (b) and (d) on conditions and at the level required by the Convention. In view of the fact that, as indicated in the Government's report, victims of employment injuries are required to share costs for certain types of medical care, and are subject to limitations in duration and number of treatments, the Committee asks the Government to examine whether victims of employment injuries in need of prolonged care or particularly expensive treatment find themselves in a situation of hardship.

Within the above continuum of benefits ensured by the Convention, the Committee understands that the WIA provides the following benefits in case of loss of earning capacity:

- Under Income Provision Scheme for Fully Occupationally Disabled Persons (IVA) benefit for full and permanent incapacity until pension age at the rate of 70 per cent of the monthly wage (Chapter 6).
- WGA benefit for fully but not permanently disabled.
- WGA wage-related benefit for employees who are partially capable of working, 70 per cent of the (maximum) daily wage plus wage supplement for those working, paid for up to five years depending on employment history.
- WGA wage supplement benefit for those performing sufficient paid work.
- WGA follow-up flat rate benefit at the rate of 70 per cent of the legal minimum wage (or daily wage, if lower) multiplied by the percentage of disability for unemployed persons.

Prescribed degree of the loss of earning capacity

According to sections 1.2.2 and 2.2.4(3) of the WIA, partial disability is recognized and compensated only when 35 per cent or more of earning capacity is lost. If an employee experiences a loss of capacity for work of less than 35 per cent, he will not qualify for any WIA benefit (sections 7.1.3(2) and 7.2.3(6)). The Committee notes that this threshold is set too high to comply with the Convention. Article 14(1) of the Convention permits to prescribe a minimum degree of loss of earning capacity for which cash benefits become payable. Incapacity below this degree (e.g. less than 10 per cent) may be disregarded for the purpose of compensation under the Convention. Article 14(3) further permits to prescribe a higher degree of incapacity giving entitlement to periodical cash benefit for “substantial partial loss of earning capacity” (e.g. over 25 per cent). Between the minimum degree of loss of earning capacity, which marks the entry point into the scheme, and the higher degree for substantial loss, Article 14(4) covers the range of incapacity corresponding to the partial loss of earning capacity which is not substantial and which could be compensated not by the periodical pension but by the lump-sum payment. The Committee has accepted in some cases that a minimum degree of incapacity fixed below 10 per cent may be compatible with the Convention and that incapacity below 25 per cent could be regarded as not substantial and compensated by lump-sum payments. Depending on the existence of other complementary income guarantees, lump-sum compensation has been admitted by the Committee in certain cases for incapacity up to 35 per cent. The WIA Act does not include lump-sum benefits and does not pay any benefit at all for incapacity below 35 per cent. Thus, persons with less than 35 per cent incapacity are excluded from protection against employment injury, which is contrary to the Convention. The possibility for them to apply for unemployment benefit or for social assistance is not relevant within the legal framework of the Convention.

The Committee notes that in the opinion of the FNV the situation with workers suffering less than 35 per cent capacity loss is alarming. The labour market in the Netherlands is extremely tight and thousands of persons with disabilities less than 35 per cent lost their jobs and are no longer entitled to a disability benefit because of the high incapacity threshold. According to the Institute for Employee Benefit Schemes (UWV) monitoring report, only 52 per cent of all workers who became less than 35 per cent disabled between 2006 and mid 2007 worked in 2008. The Committee further notes that, according to the Government, it is the employers who bear the responsibility for the employees with less than 35 per cent disability. Employers should seek solutions within their own company and, in case of failure to do so, the possibility exists to start working for another employer. The Government sees the finding of the in-depth monitoring of the group of employees with less than 35 per cent capacity loss as promising: while in January 2007 only 46 per cent of the interviewed individuals were working, in February 2008 already 62 per cent of them were employed, showing an increase of 16 per cent. The report states that “the Dutch Government therefore does not intend to change policy in this regard. The main focus for this group of less than 35 per cent disability now lies in giving both employers and employees time and space to continue to improve the situation”. The Committee regrets the Government’s position, and notes that the Government, while recognizing non fulfilment of its international obligation under the directly applicable provision of the Convention, has not yet brought national law and practice into compliance with the Convention on this point and leaves victims of employment injuries with incapacity up to 35 per cent without any form of compensatory benefit.

The Income Provision Scheme for Fully Occupationally Disabled Persons (IVA)

According to the FNV, income protection for the fully disabled has been well organized, as all of them will receive at least 70 per cent of their former wage. However, the eligibility for full disability benefits has become too strict because of the sharpened assessment of disability. Under the terms of the WIA, an employee (section 1.3.1) who is fully and permanently incapable of work (section 6.1.1, subsection 1(b)) shall be entitled to an incapacity benefit of 75 per cent of the monthly wage (section 6.2.1, subsection 1), provided that the benefit shall be reduced by 70 per cent of the income earned by this person from employment or self-employment during this month (section 6.2.2, subsections 1 and 4). The Government’s report states that the eventual earnings or assets of the members of the family of the beneficiary are not taken into account in determining the IVA benefit. The Committee notes that the amount of the incapacity benefit payable to a fully and permanently incapacitated employee who is not engaged in any gainful employment or self-employment, exceeds the level of 60 per cent of the previous wage prescribed by the Convention. The Convention, however, does not authorize any reduction of the benefit in case a fully incapacitated person (80–100 per cent disabled) finds the force to earn additional income from any gainful occupation, leaving him free to combine invalidity benefit with work. The Committee observes that the IVA scheme could be made fully consistent with the Convention by deleting section 6.2.2 of the WIA. It would therefore invite the Government to consider this option with a view to enhance the social protection and well-being of fully disabled persons in line with the Convention, taking into account the likely minimal financial impact of this measure on the insurance scheme.

The Return to Work Scheme for the Partially Disabled (WGA)

Section 1.1.1 of the WIA defines the WGA benefit not as a compensatory benefit for a disablement, but as “work resumption benefit for persons partially capable of work”. The WGA scheme consists of two phases: the wage-related WGA benefit and the subsequent phase, during which the benefit is related to the statutory minimum wage. The Committee recalls that it had previously examined the benefits provided by the WGA scheme in its conclusion of 2008 on the application by the Netherlands of the European Code of Social Security in the context of the invalidity benefit.

Wage-related WGA benefit. Under the wage-related WGA benefit scheme, a person with partial disability of between 35–80 per cent retains a certain working capacity and is for that remaining part considered to be unemployed, and as a consequence is obligated to register as a jobseeker, to make sufficient attempts to obtain suitable work, and to accept an offer of such work (section 4.1.4(1) of the WIA) – all conditions which normally apply to unemployment benefit recipients. By combining the unemployment benefit (WW) with the previous disability benefit (WAO), the WIA makes it possible for a partially disabled person to apply for a single benefit, instead of for two benefits, which is calculated so that it is equal to the sum of the WW and the WAO benefits that he would have received.

The Committee observes that this new design integrating social security benefits for unemployment and partial disability is unique and could not have been foreseen by the Convention. The Committee recognizes that this arrangement has the merit of ensuring on the one hand that a partially disabled person automatically receives compensation for his loss in earnings as a result of unemployment and, on the other hand, that he is immediately stimulated to resume work and to use the employment service to speed up the reintegration process. However, subjecting the employment injury benefit to the conditions laid down in section 4.1.4 (being partially capable of work, available for work and actually seeking work) transforms it into an unemployment benefit, as defined in the ILO standards. The entitlement to WGA benefit depends on the insured being also entitled to unemployment benefit. Those not eligible for unemployment benefit are not entitled to the WGA wage-related benefit and can get only WGA wage supplement benefit or the follow-up benefit (section 7.1.1(4)). The Committee considers that under such conditions the wage-related WGA benefit falls outside the scope of the Convention because its eligibility requirements are those of the unemployment benefit and not of the employment injury benefit.

According to section 7.1.1(1) of the WIA, an insured person who becomes sick shall be entitled to the benefit for partial incapacity (WGA) if (a) he has completed the qualifying period, and (b) he is partially capable of work. Section 7.1.5(1) specifies that the entitlement to the WGA benefit is subjected to the qualifying period of performing work as an insured person for at least 26 weeks during the 39 weeks immediately preceding the loss of entitlement to wage in case of sickness or to the sickness (ZW) benefit. The Committee has pointed out in its previous comments that under Article 9(2) of the Convention, eligibility for benefits may not be made subject to the length of employment or the duration of insurance and has asked the Government to explain whether the above requirement (see also sections 7.1.1(3 and 4) of the WIA) of having a period of previous insured employment is applied also in case of sickness and incapacity resulting from employment injury. In reply, the Government states that no conditions with regard to the duration of the employment history are imposed on the entitlement to a WGA benefit, which satisfies all the standards of the Convention. While noting this statement, the Committee requests the Government to explain in further detail to what benefits the abovementioned sections 7.1.1 and 7.1.5 of the WIA refer and how one should understand their provisions.

Section 7.2.1 subjects the duration of the wage-related WGA benefit to the length of previous employment history, the rules of the computation of which are laid down in the three pages of section 1.6.1. As the Convention does not permit the benefit to be affected in this way by the length of previous employment, the wage-related WGA benefit can be taken into account for the purpose of the application of the Convention only in its minimum duration of six months. Furthermore, by virtue of section 7.2.1(3) this benefit may be reduced by the period of previously received unemployment benefit, which is not permitted by the Convention. These provisions and the above qualification requirement impose restrictive conditions, which lead the Committee to believe that the wage-related WGA benefit should be disregarded for the purpose of the application of the Convention. After the wage-related WGA benefit, the disabled person will be entitled either to a wage supplement in case he works and fulfils an income requirement based on his residual earning capacity (section 7.2.3, subsection 3), or to a follow-up benefit (section 7.2.2, subsection 1). Hence, the level of protection guaranteed by the Convention would now be assessed only by reference to the wage supplement benefit and the follow-up benefit.

Wage supplement. Of these, the wage supplement benefit is further subjected to the income requirement (section 7.2.2) that the insured person partially capable of work must earn per calendar month an income from work which is at least equal to 50 per cent of his remaining earning capacity. The requirement to use the residual earning capacity as a condition for entitlement is contrary to the basic philosophy of the Convention, which guarantees benefits at the prescribed level without regard to the residual earning capacity and additional income which can be earned by the workers with incapacity. It appears therefore that only the follow-up WGA benefit could be taken into account for the purpose of the application of the Convention.

Follow-up WGA benefit. If the WGA recipient does not work, s/he is entitled to the follow-up benefit. The Government indicates that any recipient of the WGA benefit is considered to be unemployed to the extent that his remaining working capacity is not utilized and is therefore placed under the obligation to register as a jobseeker, to make sufficient attempts to obtain suitable work, and to accept such work, if offered (section 4.1.4, subsection 1, of the WIA). The WGA recipients are also obliged to prevent the occurrence of incapacity, to limit the existence of such incapacity, to acquire the potential to perform suitable work and to make sufficient reintegration efforts (sections 4.1.2 and 4.1.3). Non-fulfilment of these obligations or failure to do so properly is sanctioned by the benefit being refused wholly or partially, permanently or temporarily, or by applying fines (Chapter 10 of the WIA). The Committee observes that the nature and the extent of many of these obligations go beyond limitations permissible under Article 22(1) of the Convention. Taking into account that the Convention does not permit subjecting the entitlement to the benefit to an obligation to make use of the remaining earning capacity, the Committee would ask the Government to consider bringing the regime of legal obligations and sanctions imposed by the WIA on the recipients of the follow-up WGA benefit into line with Article 22 of the Convention.

The level of benefits

The WIA scheme includes wage-related benefit (IVA benefit for total incapacity and wage-related WGA benefit) and flat benefit (follow-up WGA benefit). It appears that the replacement level fixed by Article 19 of the Convention for wage-related benefits – 60 per cent of the reference wage of the skilled manual male employee for a standard beneficiary – would be attained by the IVA and WGA benefits for total incapacity, as well as by the WGA wage-related benefit. The situation however may be more problematic as regards the level of the WGA follow-up benefit for partial incapacity.

According to Article 14(3) of the Convention, the benefit for partial incapacity should represent a suitable proportion of the benefit for total incapacity. The WGA follow-up benefit should therefore represent a suitable proportion of the IVA benefit calculated on the basis of the monthly wage. This apparently would not always be the case taking into account that the follow-up benefit is a flat rate benefit calculated on the basis of the legal minimum wage and not as a percentage of previous wage. The example given by the FNV shows that an employee with incapacity of 50 per cent will receive the follow-up WGA benefit representing only 12 per cent of his last-earned wage, which is not “suitably” proportional either to the IVA benefit for total incapacity, which would amount to 75 per cent of his last-earned wage, or to the wage-related WGA benefit, which would in that case amount to 60 per cent of the previous wage. The FNV concludes that there is an unacceptably large difference of income protection between the IVA and wage-related WGA benefits on the one hand, and the follow-up WGA benefit, which results in hardship for many recipients of the follow-up WGA benefit.

The FNV points out that since the entry into force of the WIA, the labour participation of the partially disabled in the Netherlands has dropped sharply: while 69 per cent of the beneficiaries of the WAO worked five months after their disability assessment, for the WGA beneficiaries this figure is only 49 per cent. The explanation for this, according to the FNV, is found in the continuously deteriorating health condition of the WGA beneficiaries and the fact that employers are very hesitant to employ partially disabled with severe infirmities. There is no obligation for the employers to employ persons with disabilities. On the contrary, the employers are free to terminate partially disabled workers, who then have to find another job, which is not easy in the Netherlands, particularly in the context of the economic downturn. It is the full responsibility of the employee with disabilities to find and keep a job or else face a very low income. The FNV further observes that the requirement to use the residual earning capacity could cause deterioration of the health condition of the partially disabled. The situation becomes particularly hard for temporary workers, who represent 15 per cent of all workers in the country. It is much more difficult for a partially disabled flexible worker to stay in the labour market because he is not covered by the employer’s responsibility for his sick pay, rehabilitation and reintegration during the first two years of sickness. The FNV does not support a system whereby partially disabled persons who cannot find a job, have to turn to unemployment benefit and to social assistance.

The Committee observes that the disproportionately low level of the follow-up WGA benefit might result, contrary to the objective of Article 14(5) of the Convention, in hardship for many partially disabled persons obliging them to apply for social provisions or assistance in case they do not find sufficiently paid employment. This is a situation that the Convention was designed to avoid by obliging the ratifying State to institute a scheme that excluded the need for victims of employment injury to have recourse to social assistance. Means-tested social assistance benefits, such as the TW supplement, therefore are not considered as the appropriate forms of protection under the Convention. It appears that the low level of the follow-up benefit, while encouraging partially incapacitated persons to resume employment, might at the same time push the categories of persons who could not do so, including for labour market reasons beyond their control, into hardship and poverty, which would be against the objectives of the Convention. The Committee invites the Government to explain its position, including the provision of additional information with respect to this level of benefit situation.

Peru

Unemployment Provision Convention, 1934 (No. 44) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes the Government’s report, received in September 2010. The Committee observes that for the last 20 years the Government continues to refer to the system of compensation on the basis of length of service established by Legislative Decree No. 650 of 1991, which may not be considered as constituting an unemployment protection system in accordance with the requirements set forth in this Convention. The Committee regrets to note that the Government has been unable to set up an unemployment insurance scheme, which it had pledged to establish when ratifying the Convention half a century ago. The Committee wishes to draw the Government’s attention to the Committee’s recommendation made in its comprehensive observation published in the report of 2010, concerning the need to elaborate a national strategy in Peru for the consolidation and development of a sustainable social security system, which would allow the State to fully exploit all of the potential offered by international social security standards to ensure the good administration of the schemes and allow the gradual extension of coverage to the entire population. In this context, the Committee hopes that the Government will spare no effort in the very near future to set up an unemployment insurance system in accordance with the Convention.

Sao Tome and Principe

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention, 1925 (No. 18) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the change of administration prevented the finalization of the adoption of the schedule of occupational diseases which should have supplemented Act No. 1/90 on social security. However, the Government indicates that its programme includes the reactivation of this process and the reopening of dialogue with UNDP with a view to the adoption of a schedule of occupational diseases recognized in the country. Recalling that it has been examining the issue of the establishment of the schedule of occupational diseases for many years, the Committee hopes that the Government will spare no effort for the adoption of a schedule of occupational diseases recognized in the country as soon as possible, including at least those enumerated in the schedule attached to Article 2 of the Convention. It also draws the Government's attention to the possibility of having recourse to ILO technical assistance in this respect. This is a fundamental protection which, in accordance with the Convention, has to be guaranteed to men and women workers in the country engaged in certain industries and occupations involving exposure to the risk of contracting certain diseases, which must therefore be duly recognized and compensated by reason of their occupational origin.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Sierra Leone

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 5 of the Convention. In its last report, the Government indicates, in reply to the comments made for many years by the Committee, that a Bill on Workmen's Compensation has been formulated but not adopted as yet. It further states that the abovementioned draft legislation reflects the provisions of the Convention concerning the payment of injury benefits throughout the period of contingency and that copy of the revised legislation will be communicated to the ILO as soon as it is adopted. The Committee notes this information as well as the Government's request for technical assistance from the Office in order to accelerate the implementation process of the revised legislation. The Committee expresses the hope that the draft legislation will soon be adopted and requests the Government to provide a copy of it. On the basis of the new legislation, the ILO would certainly be able to discuss with the Government the terms of the requested technical assistance.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Slovenia

Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) (ratification: 1992)

In its previous direct request of 2007, the Committee had asked the Government to reply in detail in 2008. In September 2008, the Office had received the Government's report on the application of the Convention for the period from 1 June 1999 to 31 May 2006, which had been already furnished to the ILO in November 2006. No reply has been given to the Committee's previous direct requests of 2006 and 2007. The Committee is bound to draw the Government's attention to its obligation under article 22 of the ILO Constitution to comply with the reporting obligation in good faith. It trusts that the Government will do its utmost to supply in 2011 a full detailed report on the Convention, according to the report form adopted by the Governing Body, and that this report will also contain a detailed reply to the Committee's previous direct request, which read as follows:

Article 8 of the Convention. The Committee notes from the Government's report that the list of occupational diseases adopted in 1983 under a "self-management agreement" is still in use, but that it shall be replaced by a new list which is currently being prepared for the purpose of harmonizing it with the European legislation. The Committee hopes that the new list will also be in compliance with the list of occupational diseases contained in Schedule I to the Convention, in particular as regards the list of work involving exposure to the risk concerned (items 1–12, and 15 of Schedule I), and that the Government will supply a copy of it, when adopted.

Articles 13 (temporary incapacity benefit), 14 (permanent incapacity benefit) and 18 (survivors' benefit), (in conjunction with Article 19). The Committee once again asks the Government to supply, with respect to each of the benefits provided by the abovementioned Articles, the statistical information in the manner set out in the report form adopted by the Governing Body under the corresponding titles of Article 19. The Committee trusts that the Government will have no difficulty to determine the reference wages of a skilled manual male employee as defined in Article 19(6)(d) of the Convention, by using for this purpose the average gross wage in the Republic of Slovenia which it had indicated in its report for the year 1999.

Uruguay

Invalidity, Old-Age and Survivors' Benefits Convention, 1967 (No. 128) (ratification: 1973)

In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government refers to its report of August 2009, which provides information on Law 18.395 of 24 October 2008 concerning flexible retirement. The Committee however has not found in the text of the report any reply to the questions it has raised in its previous observation and direct request of 2008. In view of the fact that the Government's next report on the Convention due in 2011 will be a detailed report providing information on the application of each Article of the Convention in accordance with the report form adopted by the Governing Body, the Committee trusts that the Government will make an effort to assess the impact of the abovementioned law, as well as other new legislation, on compliance with the relevant provisions of the Convention and that it will reply in detail to the Committee's previous observation which read as follows:

Article 29 of the Convention. Review of periodical benefits currently payable. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information concerning increases of pension benefits in relation to the general level of earnings and the cost of living index corresponding to the 2001–05 period. It notes in particular that during that period the cost of living index was 61.71 per cent, while the index of earnings and the revised amount of cash benefits were 35.69 per cent and 26.89 per cent, respectively. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will adopt the necessary measures to revise the amount of cash benefits, at least up to the level of the index of earnings. It requests the Government to supply in its next report the statistical information required under Article 29 in the report form. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the observations made by the Inter-Union Assembly of Workers–National Convention of Workers (PIT–CNT).

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 12 (Comoros, Guinea-Bissau, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia); Convention No. 17 (Guinea-Bissau, United Kingdom: St Helena); Convention No. 19 (Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Dominica, Guyana, Islamic Republic of Iran, Nigeria); Convention No. 38 (Djibouti); Convention No. 102 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Slovakia); Convention No. 118 (Guinea); Convention No. 121 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Japan); Convention No. 128 (Ecuador, Slovakia, Uruguay); Convention No. 130 (Ecuador, Slovakia); Convention No. 168 (Romania).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following State in answer to a direct request with regard to Convention No. 102 (Serbia).

San Marino

Maternity Protection Convention (Revised), 1952 (No. 103) (ratification: 1998)

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction that section 7(2) of the Decree of 11 July 2008 on the protection of pregnant women workers and nursing mothers prohibits explicitly any dismissal on grounds linked to pregnancy or nursing, thus giving better effect to Article 6 of the Convention.

Sri Lanka

Maternity Protection Convention (Revised), 1952 (No. 103) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee shares the conclusions of the Lanka Jathika Estate Workers' Union (LJEWU) that the application of the Convention is not satisfactory and regrets that no measures have been adopted by the Government in response to the Committee's previous comments to comply with the provisions of the Convention.

Article 3(3) of the Convention. Maternity leave. Compulsory post-natal leave of at least six weeks. The Government states that a woman worker who is entitled to four weeks' post-natal leave can nonetheless take six weeks following her confinement if she has not taken two weeks before. The Government also states that it has taken note of the Committee's concern of the need to establish compulsory post-natal leave of at least six weeks as requested by the Committee. The Committee therefore trusts that the Government's next report will indicate measures taken to ensure full compliance with these provisions of the Convention.

Article 3(2) and (3). Distinction in the length of maternity leave based on the number of children. In Sri Lanka, maternity leave cannot exceed six weeks after the birth of the third child, whereas the Convention provides for maternity leave of at least 12 weeks which must include a minimum period of six weeks post-natal leave irrespective of the number of births given. The Committee regrets that, notwithstanding the promises made by the Government in its previous report to ensure the same benefits for all female workers, no measures have been taken. The Committee notes that the LJEWU requests the Government to amend the national legislation in this respect. The Committee therefore trusts that the Government's next report will indicate the legislative measures taken to ensure that full effect is given to this provision of the Convention for all women workers regardless of the number of children.

Article 4(4) and (8). Cash and medical benefits. The Government states that the country is so far unable to provide maternity benefits by means of a compulsory social insurance scheme or out of government funds; cash benefits continue to be provided by the employer. The Government also states that nationals are covered by free medical services provided by the State, including maternal and childcare. Recalling that the employer shall not be individually liable for the payment of maternity cash benefits, the Committee hopes that, in its next report, the Government will be in a position to indicate measures taken or envisaged towards ensuring that maternity cash benefits are provided by means of compulsory social insurance or out of public funds.

Article 4(1) (in conjunction with Article 3(4), (5) and (6)). Entitlement to cash benefits during supplementary leave. The Committee notes the reply of the Government stating that, in the event of delayed confinement or sickness resulting from pregnancy or confinement, a woman worker may take supplementary leave without pay and that female employees in the public service can take their own unutilized leave. The Committee recalls that, according to Article 4(1) of the Convention, any extension of maternity leave resulting from the application of Article 3(4), (5) and (6) must qualify for cash benefits. The Committee notes that the Government has taken note of this matter but that no action has so far been undertaken to amend the law. The Committee therefore expresses the hope that the Government will, in the very near future, take all the necessary measures to fully apply these provisions of the Convention.

Article 1(1). Scope of coverage. Domestic and agricultural workers. The Government indicates that, due to constraints with regard to enforcement and especially for the reason that they are not covered by the maternity benefit laws, female domestic workers and subsistence agricultural workers still do not benefit from the protection guaranteed by the Convention. The Committee recalls that, in the previous report, the Government promised to undertake measures to cover, inter alia, female domestic workers in private households, wage-earning women working at home, as well as agricultural workers. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the progress made in this respect in its next report.

Article 1(4). Application of the Convention to women workers on plantations. In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government indicates that most estates ceased to apply alternative maternity benefits specified by the Maternity Benefits Ordinance No. 32 of 1939. Since the alternative maternity benefits scheme is now not in operation, action would be taken in consultation with the constituents to repeal the relevant provisions. However, no policy decisions have yet been taken in this regard. The Committee once again hopes that such decisions will soon be taken in order to bring the legislation into conformity with existing practice in the country and eliminate any differences between the maternity benefits granted to workers on plantations and those granted to other workers.

Article 5. Nursing. The Committee trusts that the Government will, in the very near future, take measures in order to amend the Shop and Office Employees Act No. 19 of 1954 so as to provide for interruptions of work for the purpose of nursing to be counted as working hours and remunerated accordingly.

Article 6. Protection against dismissal during maternity leave. The Committee again expresses the hope that in its next report the Government will indicate the measures taken or envisaged to amend the Establishment Code so as to ensure protection for public employees both against dismissal and the receipt of a notice of dismissal during the period of maternity leave.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Zambia

Maternity Protection Convention (Revised), 1952 (No. 103) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee regrets that, despite its previous comments, the Government has maintained the requirement of two years' continuous employment from the date of recruitment as a condition for maternity leave in its national legislation. It also notes that this condition has been reproduced in the text of a number of collective agreements which have been brought to its attention. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will take the necessary steps, as soon as possible, to bring the national legislation, particularly section 15(A) of the Employment Act and section 7(1) of the Schedule to the Order of 14 January 2002, into conformity with Article 3(1) of the Convention.

The Committee is also constrained to note that the Government's report makes no reference to any progress made to ensure the full application of the following provisions of the Convention.

Article 3, paragraphs 2, 3 and 4. Compulsory nature of six-week postnatal leave. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that sections 15(A) and 54(1) of the Employment Act, to which the Government refers in its report, do not provide for a compulsory six-week period of postnatal leave or that, when the confinement takes place after the presumed date, prenatal leave must be extended, in all cases, until the actual date of confinement and the period of compulsory postnatal leave must not be reduced. The Committee once again expresses the hope that the Government will be able to take the necessary steps to bring the national legislation into conformity with these provisions of the Convention.

Article 4(4), (6), (7) and (8). Maternity benefits. The Committee recalls that, under these provisions of the Convention, the employer shall in no case be individually liable for the cost of maternity benefits in cash due to women employed by him. The Committee therefore requests the Government to ensure that these benefits are provided either by means of public funds or by means of compulsory insurance; the latter does not necessarily call for public financing but can be funded by employers' and workers' contributions.

Article 5. Nursing breaks. The Committee notes that certain collective agreements provide for nursing breaks and considers in this respect that equal treatment must be given to women workers covered by these collective agreements and other women workers covered by the Convention. The Government is therefore requested to consider the possibility of incorporating provisions in its national legislation which provide for nursing breaks; these interruptions of work must be counted as working hours and remunerated accordingly.

Article 6. Protection against dismissal during maternity leave. The Committee trusts that the Government will not fail to amend section 15(B) of the Employment Act (the content of which is reproduced in section 7(4) of the Schedule to the Order of 14 January 2002) by establishing a prohibition on the dismissal of a woman during maternity leave or on giving her notice of dismissal at such a time that the notice would expire during her absence, irrespective of the grounds for dismissal.

The Committee also requests the Government once again to supply copies of any legal provisions enacted, instructions or directives which have been issued stating the nature and scope of the medical benefits which shall be guaranteed to women workers in conformity with Article 4(1) and (3), of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 3 (Guinea); Convention No. 103 (Equatorial Guinea, Mongolia, San Marino).

Social policy

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Social Policy (Basic Aims and Standards) Convention, 1962 (No. 117) (ratification: 1967)

Parts I and II of the Convention. Improvement of standards of living. The Committee notes the Government's report received in June 2010. In its previous comments the Committee expressed concern at the fact that the Government had not provided information on the application of the Convention since June 2002 and had emphasized that technical assistance might be useful to rectify this situation. The ILO undertook a mission to Kinshasa in May 2010 precisely for this purpose. The Government brought to the attention of the Committee the Growth and Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (GPRSP) of July 2006 and the Priority Action Programme (PAP) 2009–10. The PAP aims to alleviate the effects of the international financial crisis and food crisis on macroeconomic results with a view to improving the socio-economic conditions of the population. According to World Bank estimates, economic growth fell from 6.2 per cent in 2008 to 2.8 per cent in 2009 because of the effects of the global economic and financial crisis on the country. Growth is expected to be positive in 2010. Average growth is expected to be 6.5 per cent in the medium term, with the support of public and private investment and the revival of the economic sector. The Committee invites the Government to supply up-to-date information in its next report on the manner in which the provisions of the Convention have been taken into account in the drawing up of economic programmes and the implementation of measures established in the context of the Poverty Reduction Strategy and the Priority Action Programme.

Part VI. Education and vocational training. The Committee notes that, in the context of the PAP 2009–10, the Government is seeking to guarantee education for all children by 2010. The Committee again requests the Government to describe in greater detail the measures taken for the progressive development of broad systems of education, vocational training and apprenticeship, with a view to the effective preparation of children and young persons of both sexes for a useful occupation, as provided for by Article 15 of the Convention.

Guinea

Social Policy (Basic Aims and Standards) Convention, 1962 (No. 117) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its previous comments:

Parts I and II of the Convention. Improvement of standards of living. The Committee requests that the Government provide indications of the way in which the improvement of standards of living is regarded as the principal objective in the planning of economic development within the strategy to combat poverty (Article 2 of the Convention). In this regard, the Committee reminds the Government that, pursuant to Article 1(1), of the Convention, "all policies shall be primarily directed to the well-being and development of the population".

Portugal

Social Policy (Basic Aims and Standards) Convention, 1962 (No. 117) (ratification: 1981)

The Committee notes the replies provided by the Government to its 2008 observation. It further notes the remarks by the General Workers' Union (UGT) and the Confederation of Portuguese Tourism (CTP).

Parts I and II of the Convention. Improvement of standards of living. Article 2. The Committee notes the measures taken in the context of the global crisis to boost the economy, investments and employment. Various social policy priorities were identified within the Major Planning Options 2010–13 with an aim to combat social inequalities, strengthen social security and improve social protection. The Government indicates that measures taken between June 2008 and May 2010 to support the improvement of standards of living include: a tripartite agreement establishing the increase of minimum monthly wages up to €500 in 2011, the updating of family allowance values and pensions, and the extended duration of compulsory education. Various measures were taken in the framework of the Initiative for Investment and Employment and the Initiative for Employment 2010 which, inter alia, were aimed at promoting employment and vocational training for the unemployed and youth and at increasing income support for the unemployed. The UGT indicates that the December 2006 tripartite agreement establishing the minimum monthly wage increase had a positive impact on the fight against poverty, but its impact was minimized by the economic crisis and the new policies adopted to combat its effects. The CTP refers to the social security legislation that may limit employment promotion and suggest that some matters might be renegotiated through a tripartite agreement to better take into account the current socio-economic framework. The Committee invites the Government to provide, in its next report, an evaluation of the manner in which “the improvement of standards of living”, as required by Article 2 of the Convention, has been taken into account in the social policies pursued in the context of the economic and financial crisis.

Part IV. Remuneration of workers. In reply to the 2008 observation, the Government indicates that Act No. 7 of 12 February 2009 reviewed some provisions of the Labour Code regarding, amongst others, discrimination with regard to employment, working time, the limitation of the use of temporary employment contracts, access to education and vocational training for young workers and labour law enforcement. As regards the measures adopted to apply Article 12 of the Convention, the Government refers to section 279 of the Labour Code, as amended by Act No. 7 of 12 February 2009. Paragraph 1 of this section provides that, during the duration of the contract of employment, the employer may not make a deduction from the worker’s remuneration for the repayment of a loan made by the employer to the worker, nor any deduction from the worker’s remuneration, except in the case envisaged in section 279(2)(f) of the Labour Code. The Committee further notes that, in conformity with section 279(3), deductions allowed by section 279(2)(f) cannot exceed, in total, one sixth of the remuneration. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the manner in which competent authorities or tribunals have given decisions involving questions of principle relating to the application of section 279 of the Labour Code in accordance with Article 12 of the Convention.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 82 (France: French Polynesia, United Kingdom: Bermuda, United Kingdom: British Virgin Islands, United Kingdom: Falkland Islands (Malvinas), United Kingdom: Montserrat); Convention No. 117 (Plurinational State of Bolivia, Guatemala, Senegal, Zambia).

Migrant workers

Benin

Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143) (ratification: 1980)

Article 14(a) of the Convention. Restrictions on employment and geographical mobility. The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it urged the Government to adopt without delay measures to repeal Decree No. 77-45 of 4 March 1977, issuing regulations respecting the movement of foreigners and requiring special authorization for foreigners to leave their town of residence. While noting the Government's statement that Decree No. 77-45 of 4 March 1977 is obsolete, the Committee remains concerned that the failure to repeal Decree No. 77-45 gives rise to ambiguity in terms of the legal provisions to apply the Convention, and raises particular difficulties in the application of Article 14(a) of the Convention under which migrant workers lawfully in the country should enjoy geographical mobility in the same conditions as nationals. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to adopt without delay the necessary measures to repeal Decree No. 77-45 of 4 March 1977 and to communicate the relevant text to the Office.

Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143) (ratification: 1978)

Article 9(1) and (2) of the Convention. Rights arising out of past employment. The Committee recalls that, pursuant to Article 9(1) and (2) of the Convention, migrant workers in an irregular situation shall enjoy equality of treatment for themselves and their families in respect of rights arising out of past employment as regards remuneration, social security and other benefits, and shall have the possibility to present their case to a competent body, either themselves or through their representative, in the case of a dispute regarding these rights. The Committee previously raised issues relating to the difficulties encountered by migrant workers whose contracts of employment were declared null and void to claim their rights arising out of past employment, such as remuneration and social security. The Committee considered that the possibility of recourse to labour inspectors did not afford migrant workers adequate protection, in accordance with the terms of Article 9(1) of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's reply that recourse to the labour inspectors is the only way for these workers to claim their rights, and that no complaints have been received from migrant workers in an irregular situation. The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary legislative measures to establish that migrant workers who have been unable to regularize their situation are not deprived of their rights that have been lawfully acquired, and that they and their families enjoy equality of treatment with migrant workers lawfully admitted into the country in respect of rights arising out of past employment as regards remuneration and social security. The Government is also requested to examine any obstacles faced by such migrant workers to submit claims to the labour inspectorate in relation to rights derived from past employment and the progress made in this regard.

Article 10. Exercise of trade union rights. The Committee recalls its previous observation requesting clarification as to whether section 10(1) and (2) of the Labour Code providing that foreign nationals are required to have resided for not less than five years in the territory before being allowed to establish a trade union and take positions of responsibility for its administration or leadership, also makes the possibility for foreign nationals to join a trade union subject to this requirement. The Committee notes the Government's statement that section 10(2) will be addressed in the context of the revision of the Labour Code. Recalling the Government's previous statement that membership in a trade union is free for both nationals and migrant workers, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that the new Labour Code explicitly provides for the right of foreign workers to join a trade union on an equal footing with nationals, without being subject to any residence requirements or other preconditions.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

France

Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) (ratification: 1954)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 2, 3, 4 and 6 of the Convention. Measures to assist and inform migrant workers, promote their social and economic integration and address discrimination against them. The Committee notes that the Government has taken a series of measures relevant to the application of the Convention. In particular, the Act No. 2006-911 of 24 July 2006 concerning immigration and integration introduces a number of changes aimed at facilitating economic integration, such as the residency permit on competencies and talents and the residency permit for seasonal workers; the possibility for French placement agencies to propose temporary employment contracts; the establishment of lists of occupations for which there is a need for foreign workers and the opportunity for foreign students to seek employment during the six-month period after the completion of their master's degree, or to be engaged in wage employment. The Committee further notes that the Act 2007-1631 of 20 November 2007 concerning immigration control, integration and asylum further simplifies certain provisions of the Act of 24 July 2006. Furthermore, a new Ministry of Immigration, National Identity, Integration and Co-development was established in 2007 with the objectives of controlling migration flows, promoting French national identity, improving integration and encouraging co-development. In addition, a number of bilateral agreements have been concluded relating to the exchange of young professionals and work-holiday programmes. France is further proposing to certain migrant sending countries a new generation of bilateral agreements aimed at organizing regular migration, fighting against irregular migration and promoting co-development and cooperation.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Government's policy on the reception and integration of migrants has become a priority since 2002 and that new measures have been taken to improve the reception and integration of migrants such as the creation of the National Agency for the Reception of Foreigners and Migration (ANAEM) and the contract of reception and integration (contrat d'accueil et d'intégration) (CAI). The Government has also been taking steps to improve housing conditions in France, such as the Plan to convert "Migrant Workers' Houses" (Foyers de Travailleurs Migrants) into social residences, measures to improve living and housing conditions of older immigrants and measures to combat discrimination in housing through the High Authority to Combat Discrimination and in Favour of Equality (HALDE) and the Act respecting the national housing commitment, 2006. The Committee notes in this regard the Government's statement that with respect to housing the fight against discrimination remains one of the main difficulties especially due to the lack of data and the difficulty in proving that discrimination with respect to housing has occurred.

While acknowledging the efforts by the Government to facilitate the reception of migrants and promote their integration and equal opportunities, the Committee notes from the report of the UN Independent Expert on Minority Issues (A/HRC/7/23/Add.2, 4 March 2008) and the concluding observations of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR) (E/C.12/FRA/CO/3, May 2008), as well as the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW/C/FRA/CO/6) that major problems continue to exist with respect to integration of the immigrant population in French society, including a climate of suspicion and negativity, as well as widespread discrimination against migrant workers, having an impact on their general living conditions as well as their educational and employment opportunities. According to the CESCR, migrant workers and persons of immigrant origin "are disproportionately concentrated in poor residential areas characterized by low quality, poorly maintained large housing complexes, limited employment opportunities, inadequate access to health care facilities and public transport, under-resourced schools and high exposure to crime and violence" (E/C.12/FRA/CO/3, May 2008, paragraph 21). The UN Independent Expert states that "when poor immigrants arrive, those belonging to ethnic or religious groups are allocated to the poorest housing in specific neighbourhoods that have become highly ethnicized resulting in a discriminatory pattern of de facto segregation ... Government officials acknowledge areas of some 70 per cent 'foreign' residents and the creation of what has become recognized as the 'ghetto' phenomenon" (A/HRC/7/23/Add.2, 4 March 2008). The Committee also recalls its comments in 2007 on the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), in which it had already raised concerns regarding the lack of progress made in addressing racial and ethnic discrimination against migrant workers.

The Committee is aware that the social and economic situation of migrant workers in the country is complex and that an effective strategy to promote the integration and equal treatment of migrant workers involves a combination of measures, some of which are required to achieve full application of this Convention. In particular, the Committee draws the attention of the Government to Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention emphasizing the importance of adequate measures to assist and inform migrant workers and to facilitate their reception, and Article 3 of the Convention requiring steps against misleading propaganda, including false information targeting the national population propagating stereotypes on migrant workers generating racism and discrimination. Most importantly, Article 6(1)(a) to (d) of the Convention aims to guarantee equality of treatment with respect to conditions of work, social security, trade union rights, accommodation and legal proceedings. With regard to accommodation, the Committee points out that segregating the migrant population from the national population may not be conducive to social integration (General Survey on migrant workers of 1999, paragraph 281). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the following:

- (i) the activities carried out by ANAEM to facilitate the reception and effective integration in French society of migrant workers from third countries, in accordance with Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention. Please also provide information on the impact of the CAIs on the integration of migrant workers;
- (ii) the steps taken to combat the dissemination of misleading and false information, including on certain stereotypes relating to the educational and employment abilities of migrant workers as well as their being more susceptible to crime, violence and diseases, targeting both the national and foreign population. Please also provide any information on the impact of these measures on the incidence of discrimination against migrant workers;
- (iii) the measures taken, and the results achieved, to ensure that migrant workers lawfully in the country and their families accompanying them are not being treated less favourably than nationals with respect to housing, whether in law or in practice. Such measures could include further steps to improve the housing and living conditions of migrant workers as well as measures to reduce their de facto segregation with respect to housing;
- (iv) the measures taken to ensure that the principle of equal treatment between migrant workers lawfully in the country and nationals is also effectively applied in practice with regard to the other matters listed in Article 6(1)(a)(i) and (ii), (b), (c) and (d) of the Convention. Please include information on any measures particularly addressed to women migrant workers, as well as on any complaints by migrant workers regarding these matters that have been dealt with by HALDE, the courts, or other bodies competent to monitor the application of the relevant national legislation and the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Sabah

Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes the Government's very brief report merely confirming that the Workmen's Compensation Act 1952 is not applicable to domestic workers, and that the amendment to include domestic workers under the Workmen's Compensation Scheme will be applicable throughout Malaysia, including Sabah. The Committee further notes that the Government's report contains no reply to the other points raised in its observation. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 6(1)(b) of the Convention. Equality of treatment with respect to social security. For over ten years, the Committee, as well as the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, have been pursuing a dialogue with the Government regarding differences in treatment between nationals and foreign workers with respect to payment of social security benefits. The Committee had noted that, as of 1 April 1993, foreign workers in the private sector were no longer covered by the Employees' Social Security Act, 1969 (SOCSO), which provided for periodical payments to victims of industrial accidents and their dependants. Instead they were transferred to the Workmen's Compensation Scheme (WCS) which only guarantees the payment of a lump sum. The Committee had considered that this change was not in conformity with Article 6(1)(b) of the Convention. A review of the two schemes had also shown that the level of benefits in the case of industrial accident provided under the Employees' Social Security Scheme (ESS) was substantially higher than that provided under the WCS.

The Committee recalls that foreign workers permanently residing in Malaysia (Sabah) continue to be covered by the ESS, while foreign workers working in the country for a period of up to five years are covered only by the WCS. The Committee notes the detailed comparison provided by the Government of the benefits awarded according to each system in identical circumstances. The comparison shows, however, that the level of benefits in the case of industrial accident provided under the WCS is substantially lower than that provided under the SOCSO. Moreover, the Committee notes that some other differences exist between temporary foreign workers and foreign workers permanently residing in the country and nationals in respect of, for example, the invalidity pension scheme and survivors' pension rehabilitation, as well as accidents outside work. The Committee further notes that the Government maintains its position that the system is reliable and suitable to the needs of the workforce of the country. The Committee notes from the UNDP-Sabah development statistics that in 2005, 24.8 per cent of the population were non-citizens. The Committee understands that the percentage of foreign workers has been increasing ever since, and that many of them are working in manufacturing, plantation work, domestic work, construction, services and agriculture.

The Committee recalls that Article 6(1)(b) of the Convention applies to all foreign workers, both those with permanent and temporary residence status, who shall not be treated less favourably than nationals in respect of social security (that is to say, legal provision in respect of employment injury, maternity, sickness, invalidity, old age, death, unemployment and family responsibilities, and any other contingency which, according to national laws or regulations, is covered by a social security scheme). The Committee also recalls Article 10 of the Convention, providing that in cases where the number of migrants going from the territory of one Member to that of another is sufficiently large, the competent authorities shall, where necessary or desirable, enter into agreements for the purpose of regulating matters of common concern arising in connection with the application of the provisions of the Convention. With respect to industrial accidents, the Committee refers the Government to the comments made under the Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19), with respect to Peninsular Malaysia. With respect to other social security benefits, and taking into account the large number of foreign workers concerned, the Committee hopes that the Government will consider making every effort to take special steps, including the conclusion of bilateral or multilateral agreements, to ensure that migrant workers do not receive treatment which is less favourable than that applied to nationals or foreign workers permanently residing in the country with respect to other social security benefits. ...

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 97 (France, Guyana, Malaysia: Sabah, Nigeria, Saint Lucia, United Republic of Tanzania: Zanzibar, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, United Kingdom: British Virgin Islands); Convention No. 143 (Albania, Benin, Cameroon, Guinea, San Marino, Tajikistan, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Uganda).

Food and Catering (Ships' Crews) Convention, 1946 (No. 68) (ratification: 1956)

Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention. Setting and enforcing food and catering standards. The Committee has been formulating observations for a considerable number of years concerning the measures to be taken in order to give effect to various provisions of the Convention, namely: Article 5(2) (laws and regulations requiring the provision of food supplies of suitable quality and quantity and the arrangement and equipment of the catering department); Article 6 (laws or regulations establishing a system of inspection of food supplies and catering spaces and equipment); Article 7 (duly recorded inspection of ship's food supplies, catering spaces and galley equipment by the master at prescribed intervals); Article 9 (powers of inspectors and penalties for infringements); Article 10 (preparation of an annual report on food and catering); and Article 12 (collection and dissemination of relevant information).

The Government maintains that the quantity and quality of food on board merchant vessels is adequately regulated through collective agreements while the General Confederation of Labour (CGT) refers to food committees (comisión de gamela), provided for in collective agreements, as giving effect to the requirements of the Convention. While noting these explanations and while recalling that certain provisions of the Convention may in effect be implemented through collective agreements, the Committee feels obliged to reiterate its view that matters such as fixing standards for food supplies and catering services or setting up and operating a system of inspection need to be dealt with through laws and regulations and not exclusively by collective agreements. The Committee therefore considers that the Government has still not fully addressed the issues raised in earlier observations. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to provide full particulars on the implementation of Articles 5(2), 6, 7, 9, 10 and 12 of the Convention. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to supply it with a copy of the following texts: Decree No. 1521 of 18 September 2008; Act No. 26354 of 28 February 2008; Health Regulations concerning Maritime and Inland Navigation of 1971; and all applicable collective agreements.

In addition, the Committee takes this opportunity to recall that most of the provisions of Convention No. 68 have been incorporated in Regulation 3.2, Standard A3.2 and Guideline B3.2.1 of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006). Moreover, the MLC, 2006, introduces some new provisions regarding the obligation to take into account the differing cultural and religious backgrounds, to provide food free from charge and to carry a fully qualified cook. The Committee invites the Government to consider the possibility of ratifying the MLC, 2006, in the very near future and to keep the Office informed of any decision taken in this respect.

Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention, 1958 (No. 108) (ratification: 1967)

Article 2 of the Convention. Seafarers' identity documents. Since 1999, the Committee has been commenting on the Government's failure to apply the Convention and has been requesting it to: (i) reinstate the identity document for seafarers who are Barbadian nationals; (ii) enact new regulations or amend existing ones so that foreign seafarers may enter Barbados with a valid identity document issued pursuant to this Convention; and (iii) provide copies of the relevant legislative and/or regulatory texts ensuring the application of the Convention. In its latest report, the Government indicates that there are no active seafarers employed, no seafarer or shipowner representative organizations and no formal employment agencies. The Government adds that it has not denounced the Convention and that identity documents would be issued in the future if there is demand for them. While noting the explanations regarding the current situation with respect to Barbadian seafarers, the Committee also notes that the Government has not given any indication as to whether foreign seafarers holding identity documents issued pursuant to the Convention are accorded the facilities provided for in that instrument. Under the circumstances, the Committee concludes that the basic requirements of the Convention are still not implemented in either law or practice. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that its obligations under the Convention are fully respected and to inform the Office of all measures taken in this regard.

Chile

Seamen's Articles of Agreement Convention, 1926 (No. 22) (ratification: 1935)

Article 3 of the Convention. Conditions and safeguards for the signature of the agreement. The Committee recalls that the Convention requires that reasonable facilities be given to the seafarer to examine the articles of agreement before they are signed (Article 3(1)), the agreement be signed under conditions prescribed by national law (Article 3(2)), and that adequate provisions be made to ensure that the seafarer has understood the agreement (Article 3(4)). The Committee understands that the national legislation does not contain any provisions giving effect to the above requirements. Recalling that the same requirements have been incorporated in Standard A2.1(1)(b) of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to fully implement this Article of the Convention.

Article 5(2). Record of employment. While noting that under section 23 of Supreme Decree No. 90 of 15 June 1999 on standards of training, certification and watchkeeping, a seafarer's book (libreta de embarco) must contain information on the seafarer's duties on board, the Committee understands that national law does not expressly prohibit the inclusion of any statements concerning the quality of the seafarer's work or his/her wages. Recalling that the same requirement has been incorporated in Standard A2.1(3) of the MLC, 2006, the Committee requests the Government to consider appropriate measures in order to give effect to this requirement of the Convention. It also requests the Government to transmit a specimen copy of the seafarer's book currently in use.

Article 6. Contract details. The Committee notes sections 10, 98 and 103 of the Labour Code that set out the particulars that need to be included in the seafarer's contract (contrato de embarco) but observes that no mention is made of the annual leave or the conditions for termination among the mandatory contract details. Recalling that the contract details listed in this Article of the Convention have been incorporated in Standard A2.1 of the MLC, 2006 (with the addition of the seafarer's entitlement to repatriation and health and social security benefits), the Committee requests the Government to take appropriate measures to ensure that all these particulars are properly reflected in the national legislation.

Article 9(1). Termination of the agreement. The Committee recalls its previous comment in which it noted that section 120 of the Labour Code and section 77 of the Navigation Act of 1978, which provide that no crew member may give up his work without the agreement of the maritime or consular authority of the port in which the vessel is located, are inconsistent with Article 9(1) of the Convention which permits either party to terminate an agreement for an indefinite period in any port where the vessel loads or unloads, on condition that the period of notice is observed. In the absence of the Government's reply on this point, the Committee is obliged to once more request the Government to take the necessary steps in order to bring the national legislation into line with this Article of the Convention.

Article 12. Immediate discharge. The Committee recalls its previous comment, in which it noted that section 159(2) of the Labour Code, which requires the worker to give 30 days' notice to terminate his/her employment contract, is not in harmony with Article 12 of the Convention which provides that national law will determine the circumstances in which the seafarer may demand his/her immediate discharge. In the absence of any progress in this respect, the Committee is obliged to once again request the Government to take appropriate action in order to give effect to this Article of the Convention.

Article 14(2). Certificate. In the absence of the Government's reply on this point, the Committee again requests the Government to take all necessary measures in order to give effect to this provision of the Convention.

Finally, the Committee recalls that the MLC, 2006, contains in Regulation 2.1, Standard A2.1 and Guideline B2.1 up-to-date and more detailed requirements on seafarers' employment agreements that revise existing standards set out in Convention No. 22. The Committee invites the Government to consider the possibility of ratifying the MLC, 2006, in the very near future and to keep the Office informed of any decision taken in this respect.

China

Repatriation of Seamen Convention, 1926 (No. 23) (ratification: 1936)

Article 3 of the Convention. Seafarers' entitlement to repatriation. The Committee has been commenting for several years on the need to adopt implementing legislation to give effect to the main requirements of the Convention. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of the Regulations of the People's Republic of China on Seafarers of 14 April 2007, in particular sections 31–34 which specifically address the seafarers' right to repatriation.

Egypt

Placing of Seamen Convention, 1920 (No. 9) (ratification: 1982)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Prohibition of fee charging. The Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to amend section 21 of the Labour Code of 2003 which permits recruitment agencies to obtain fees from a worker during the first year of employment in order to cover administrative expenses. In its latest report, the Government indicates that a preparatory technical committee has been established by the Order of the Minister of Manpower and Migration No. 69 of 22 March 2010 to review the Labour Code of 2003 and the Trade Unions Act of 1976 to ensure compliance with international labour standards. The Government also indicates that a working party for the maritime transport sector has been established in order to consider the possible ratification of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), and to prepare its implementation. The Committee wishes to recall, in this respect, that the Convention provides for an absolute prohibition against charging fees, directly or indirectly, in relation to finding employment for seafarers on any ship. The Committee also wishes to emphasize that under Standard A1.4(5)(b) of the MLC, 2006, private seafarer recruitment services are also prohibited from requiring fees or other charges for seafarer recruitment or placement. The Committee trusts that in preparing their recommendations for revision of the Labour Code of 2003, the preparatory technical committee and the working party for the maritime sector will take fully into account Article 2 of this Convention and Regulation 1.4 and the corresponding Code of the MLC, 2006. The Committee asks the Government to take all necessary measures for the amendment of section 21 of the Labour Code and to provide information on any further developments concerning the legislative review process and the process of ratification and effective implementation of the MLC, 2006.

Articles 4(1) and 5. Public employment offices and advisory committees. The Committee has been commenting on section 17 of the Labour Code of 2003, which appears to authorize the operation of private recruitment agencies contrary to the requirements of the Convention. Moreover, the Committee has been requesting the Government to constitute advisory committees, as required by Article 5 of the Convention, to advise on matters concerning the operation of public employment offices. In this connection, the Committee considers it necessary to refer to Standard A1.4(2) of the MLC, 2006, which, contrary to Convention No. 9, permits private recruitment and placement services for seafarers to operate in the context of a standardized system of licensing or certification or other form of regulation. It also wishes to point out that, even though the MLC, 2006, does not provide for the establishment of advisory committees, it requires the system of licensing or certification to be established, modified or changed only after consultation with the concerned shipowners' and seafarers' organizations. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will take appropriate action to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention in a manner that would also facilitate the implementation of the respective provisions of the MLC, 2006.

Guinea

Prevention of Accidents (Seafarers) Convention, 1970 (No. 134) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Prevention of occupational accidents. For many years, the Committee has been asking the Government to indicate the specific instruments that govern the prevention of occupational accidents of seafarers. The Government has so far indicated that appropriate regulatory texts were in preparation and would be reviewed with the technical assistance of the ILO to ensure their compliance with the provisions of the Convention. In its last report, the Government refers only to the provisions of the Labour Code and Merchant Shipping Code, noting that they provide for the adoption of regulations on occupational safety and health. The Government further indicates that the authorities responsible for framing and supervising maritime regulations were also to draft a whole series of texts in this area. The Committee emphasizes that Guinea ratified this Convention more than 30 years ago. It also points out that the provisions of the national legislation are general in nature and do not always ensure that full effect is given to the requirements of the Convention. Consequently, the Committee once again asks the Government to adopt legislative texts giving full effect to the Convention and requests it to provide copies of them as soon as these texts have been enacted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guinea-Bissau

Certification of Ships' Cooks Convention, 1946 (No. 69) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 4 of the Convention. Certificates of qualification. The Committee notes that there is no naval school in the country, and that, therefore, the certificates of qualification are for internal use only. The Committee hopes that the state services and national institutions will soon be operating normally again, and that the necessary legislation and practical measures to implement the Convention will be put in place. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed about any progress made in this respect.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ireland

Repatriation of Seamen Convention, 1926 (No. 23) (ratification: 1930)

Article 3 of the Convention. Seafarers' entitlement to repatriation. For the last 50 years, the Committee has been commenting on the need to revise section 32 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1906 in order to extend the right to repatriation to those seafarers who are currently excluded from its coverage. To date, despite numerous reassurances that the necessary amendments would be carried out, no concrete progress has been made.

In its latest report, the Government states that in anticipation of the ratification of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), the Merchant Shipping Act 1906 would be amended accordingly. Recalling the fact that the Government has been indicating its intention to amend this Act since 1985, the Committee highlights the fact that compliance with the Convention will facilitate future compliance with the MLC, 2006. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take steps to ensure that the existing national legislation and practice is brought into full conformity with the requirements of the Convention and again encourages the Government to ratify the MLC, 2006, and to provide information to the Office on any decisions taken in this regard.

Italy

Accommodation of Crews Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 92) (ratification: 1981)

Article 3(1) and Part III of the Convention. Crew accommodation requirements. The Committee has been commenting since the ratification of the Convention in 1981 on the Government's failure to adopt laws or regulations giving effect to all of the detailed requirements of the Convention. In its reports submitted over the past 20 years, the Government has been announcing its intention to draft new legislation, while since 1997 it has been indicating that it is in the process of revising Act No. 1045 of 16 June 1939 on hygiene and living conditions of crews on board national merchant vessels. Moreover, following the adoption of Legislative Decree No. 271 of 27 July 1999 on adaptation of standards on the safety and health of seafarers on board national merchant and fishing vessels, the Government initiated a process of consultations for the preparation of implementing regulations which, according to section 34, were to be issued within 90 days of the entry into force of the Legislative Decree. In its latest report, the Government makes reference to Legislative Decree No. 81 of 2008 which has extended to 24 months the period for issuing the relevant regulations. The Government states that these regulations are currently under preparation.

Under the circumstances, the Committee notes with regret that despite numerous reassurances, no concrete progress has been made, and as a result, the Convention is still implemented through Act No. 1045/1939, which contains manifestly obsolete provisions and no longer corresponds to modern crew accommodation standards. By way of example, the Committee refers to section 36 of Act No. 1045/1939, presumably implementing Article 16 of the Convention, which provides that where coloured persons form part of the crew, they must have special accommodation, washing and sanitary arrangements or facilities separate from those of other personnel, in order to enable them to observe their own habits and customs, and also that coloured personnel must be able to cook their own food according to their own habits and customs. The Committee considers that this provision clearly illustrates the need for bringing the national legislation up to date and that discriminatory provisions must be repealed. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to take all necessary measures without further delay in order to finalize and adopt the regulations implementing Legislative Decree No. 271/1999 which would also entail the abrogation of Act No. 1045/1939. The Committee requests the Government to transmit a copy of the new regulations as soon as they are adopted.

Finally, the Committee recalls that most of the crew accommodation standards of Conventions Nos 92 and 133 have been incorporated in Regulation 3.1 and the corresponding Code of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), and therefore ensuring compliance will facilitate compliance with the respective provisions of the MLC, 2006. Noting that the Government has committed to examining the possibility of ratifying the MLC, 2006, especially in light of the 2007 EU Council Decision authorizing Member States to ratify the MLC, 2006, the Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decision taken with respect to the ratification of the MLC, 2006.

Accommodation of Crews (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1970 (No. 133) (ratification: 1981)

Article 3 and Part II of the Convention. Crew accommodation requirements. The Committee requests the Government to refer to the comments made under the Accommodation of Crews Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 92).

Luxembourg

Food and Catering (Ships' Crews) Convention, 1946 (No. 68) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2(a) and (b) of the Convention. Inspection. The Committee once again requests the Government to adopt the legislative texts that will give effect to the provisions of the Convention or to indicate the collective agreements that address the following points: preparation and application of regulations concerning food and water supplies; catering; construction; location; ventilation; heating; lighting; water systems and equipment of galleys; storerooms and refrigerated chambers; or for the storage, handling and preparation of food.

Article 7. Inspection at sea. The Committee once again requests the Government to adopt and indicate the texts giving effect to the obligation to provide for inspection at sea.

Article 9(1). Powers of inspectors. The Committee notes that the legislation in force makes no provision for inspectors to be given authority to make recommendations with a view to the improvement of the standard of catering. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention in this regard.

Article 12. Information. The Government is once again requested to provide information on the measures taken to give effect to this Article.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Mauritius

Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention, 1958 (No. 108) (ratification: 1969)

Article 2 of the Convention. Seafarers' identity documents. The Committee notes the adoption of the new Merchant Shipping Act, No. 26 of 2007. It notes, however, that contrary to the Government's earlier statements that the new Merchant Shipping Act would give full effect to the provisions of the Convention and that the Passport and Immigration Office would be the issuing authority of the seafarers' identity documents, the new legislation section 228(1)(c) merely provides for regulations that the Minister may make as he thinks fit "for giving effect to any international Convention to which Mauritius is a party". In addition, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the technical committee set up to look into putting into effect the use of the seafarers' identity document is still considering the issue in view of the complexity of certain security features required for the operationalization of such a document. The Government further states that the State Law Office is awaiting the completion of the work of the technical committee before finalizing the regulations to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention. Under the circumstances, the Government concludes that the basic requirements of the Convention are still not implemented in either law or practice. Recalling that the Committee has been expressing its concern since 2001 about the discontinuation of the issuance of seafarers' identity documents, the Committee hopes that the Government will take all appropriate measures to ensure compliance with the requirements of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress made by the technical committee established in 2005 for preparing the new regulations on seafarers' identity documents and to transmit a copy of these regulations as soon as they are finalized.

Finally, the Committee takes this opportunity, particularly in view of the Government's concerns with respect to security features, to recall that Convention No. 108 has been revised by the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185). To enhance port and border security, Convention No. 185 aims to develop a more secure and globally uniform seafarers' identity document. The Convention, which was adopted by the ILO to complement action being taken within the framework of the International Maritime Organization (IMO) through the adoption of the International Ship and Port-facility Security Code (ISPS), sets out basic parameters regarding the content and form of the documents, and provides technical guidance in the annexes in order to ensure that member States may easily adapt their systems while taking national circumstances into account. The Committee therefore invites the Government, while considering new legislation to give effect to Convention No. 108, to also examine the possibility of ratifying Convention No. 185 in the near future and to keep the Office informed of any decisions taken in this respect.

Seamen's Articles of Agreement Convention, 1926 (No. 22) (ratification: 1934)

Article 3(1) and (4) of the Convention. Conditions and safeguards for the signature of the agreement. The Committee understands that national law does not contain any provisions seeking to ensure that seafarers are given an opportunity to examine and seek advice on the agreement before signing and that they enter into an agreement with a sufficient understanding of their rights and responsibilities. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that national law gives full effect to the requirements of this Article of the Convention.

Article 6(10). Contract details. The Committee notes that section 195 of the Federal Labour Act does not include the conditions for the termination of the agreement, whether made for a definite period, for a voyage or for an indefinite period, among the particulars that need to be included in the agreement. The Committee asks the Government to take appropriate action to ensure conformity with the Convention in this regard.

Article 7. Crew list. The Committee understands that there are no provisions in national legislation that require seafarers' articles of agreement to be either recorded in or annexed to the crew list. The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures to give effect to this Article of the Convention.

Article 8. Information on conditions of employment available on board. The Committee understands that national law does not provide for measures enabling clear information to be obtained on board as to the conditions of employment, for instance by posting the conditions of the agreement in a place easily accessible. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to take the necessary measures in order to implement the requirements of this Article of the Convention in law and practice.

Article 9(1). Termination of agreement. For a considerable number of years, the Committee has been asking the Government to amend section 209 III of the Federal Labour Act, to ensure that the agreement may be terminated at any time by either party provided that due notice is given. In the absence of any progress in this respect, the Committee is obliged once more to urge the Government to take all necessary measures in order to bring the national legislation into conformity with this Article of the Convention.

Article 13(1). Termination of agreement by the seafarer in the event of promotion. The Committee understands that there are no provisions in national legislation permitting seafarers to claim their discharge, in the event of promotion or other circumstances that render it essential for their interests, on condition that they furnish a competent and reliable replacement. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to give effect to this Article of the Convention.

Article 14(1). Discharge. The Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that the seafarer's document issued in accordance with Article 5 of the Convention, provided no space to enter the discharge of the seafarer and the duties they performed on board. In its latest report, the Government indicates that it is currently working on a new model maritime book (libreta de mar) that will include a space to enter the discharge of the seafarer and the duties performed on-board. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments in this regard and to transmit a sample copy of the new maritime book once it has been prepared.

Finally, the Committee takes this opportunity to recall that the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), contains in Regulation 2.1, Standard A2.1 and Guideline B2.1 up-to-date and more detailed requirements on seafarer's employment agreements that revise existing standards set out in Convention No. 22. The Committee invites the Government to consider the possibility of ratifying the MLC, 2006, in the very near future and to keep the Office informed of any decision taken in this respect.

Repatriation of Seafarers Convention (Revised), 1987 (No. 166) (ratification: 1990)

Article 2(1)(c) of the Convention. Repatriation in the event of illness, injury or other medical condition. The Committee notes that, under section 204(VII) of the Federal Labour Act, the employer has the obligation, in the event of a seafarer's illness, to provide for food, accommodation and medical treatment but this does not include repatriation within the meaning of this Article of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to indicate specific provisions of national laws, regulations or collective agreements establishing the shipowner's duty to repatriate a seafarer in the event of illness or injury or other medical condition which requires his/her repatriation when found medically fit to travel.

Article 2(1)(e). Repatriation in the event of inability for the shipowner to fulfil legal or contractual obligations. While noting that under section 209(VI) of the Federal Labour Act, in case of change of registration of the ship, the shipowner has to proceed to the repatriation of the seafarers, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the provisions ensuring the seafarer's right to repatriation in case of bankruptcy or sale of the ship.

Article 2(1)(f). Ship bound for war zone. The Committee requests the Government to specify any provisions in national laws, regulations or collective agreements guaranteeing the seafarer's right to repatriation in the event of a ship being bound for a war zone, to which the seafarer does not consent to go.

Article 2(1)(g). Termination or interruption of employment in accordance with an industrial award or collective agreement. The Committee understands that the national legislation makes no specific provision for the seafarer's right to repatriation in the event of termination or interruption of employment in accordance with an industrial award or collective agreement. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the measures adopted or envisaged to bring national law and practice into conformity with this provision of the Convention.

Article 2(2). Maximum duration of service. Further to its previous comment, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the maximum duration of service periods on board, following which a seafarer is entitled to repatriation, as may be prescribed by national laws, regulations or collective agreements.

Article 3(2). Destinations of repatriation. The Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that under the terms of the Convention the seafarers must be able to choose from among several destinations, namely the place at which they agreed to enter into the engagement, the place stipulated by an applicable collective agreement, their country of residence or such other place as may be mutually agreed at the time of the engagement. In the absence of any legislative or regulatory provisions implementing this requirement of the Convention, the Committee again requests the Government to take all necessary measures to bring national law and practice into conformity with the Convention in this regard.

Articles 4 and 5. Responsibility of the shipowner to arrange for repatriation. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it noted: (i) that the shipowner's obligation to arrange for repatriation was limited to cases of termination of employment attributable to him/her; (ii) the absence of legal provisions requiring the competent authority to meet the cost of repatriation if the shipowner fails to discharge his/her responsibilities; (iii) that no provision is made for air transport as being the appropriate and expeditious means of repatriation of seafarers (the few provisions in collective agreements to which the Government refers in its report apply in very limited cases, e.g. repatriation following shipwreck); and (iv) that the expenses of repatriation to be borne by the shipowner are not detailed to include travel cost but also accommodation, food and pay. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take prompt action to ensure that full effect is given to Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention.

Article 6. Passport and other identity documents. In the absence of any indication in the Government's reports on this point, the Committee requests the Government to specify how it is ensured that seafarers who are to be repatriated are able to obtain their passport and other identity documents for the purposes of repatriation.

Article 7. Paid leave. The Committee understands that national legislation and regulations do not contain any specific provisions guaranteeing that time spent awaiting repatriation and repatriation travel time are not deducted from paid leave accrued by the seafarer. Therefore, the Committee is obliged to reiterate its request for all necessary measures to be taken in order to give full effect to this Article of the Convention.

Article 12. Availability of Convention text in appropriate language. With a view to allowing seafarers to know their rights, the Convention requires that the text of the Convention be available in an appropriate language on board. The Committee requests the Government to indicate how it is given effect to this requirement of the Convention in law and practice.

Finally, the Committee takes this opportunity to recall that the main provisions of Convention No. 166 have been incorporated in Regulation 2.5, Standard A2.5 and Guideline B2.5 of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006) and therefore ensuring compliance with Convention No. 166 would facilitate the implementation of the corresponding requirements of the MLC, 2006, once ratified and entered into force. The Committee therefore invites the Government to consider the possibility of ratifying the MLC, 2006, in the very near future and to keep the Office informed of any decisions taken in this respect.

Netherlands

Seamen's Articles of Agreement Convention, 1926 (No. 22) (ratification: 1937)

*Articles 2(b) and 3(1) of the Convention. Signature of articles of agreement both by shipowner and seafarer. The Committee notes the comments made by the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV), dated 30 August 2010, on the application of the Convention. The FNV contends that at the time of ratification, the Convention was fully implemented in Dutch legislation, but that currently the Convention was being seriously violated, because many seafarers do not have a labour contract with the shipowner. These seafarers are employed by an employment agency in the Netherlands or a crewing agency outside the country, work without an agreement signed by the shipowner or the shipowner's representative, and as a consequence do not enjoy the protection of the Convention. The FNV also indicates that the Government has not been supervising the implementation of the Convention and adds that the FNV's Seamen's Union (FWZ) has repeatedly addressed the Government which has remained passive. Finally, the FNV makes reference – as a solution to the problem – to the agreement between the social partners on ander werkgeverschap, i.e. other employment relations, according to which the shipowner will also be held accountable in case no direct employment relation exists between the shipowner and the seafarer. Recalling that the requirement for an employment agreement signed both by the seafarer and the shipowner has been incorporated in Standard A2.1(1)(a) of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, the Committee asks the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in reply to the observations of the FNV and also provide explanations on the social partners' agreement on other employment relations referred to by the FNV.

New Zealand

Seamen's Articles of Agreement Convention, 1926 (No. 22) (ratification: 1938)

*Articles 3–12 of the Convention. Articles of agreement. The Committee has been commenting on the absence of specific legislation to implement the Convention and the reliance on texts of a general scope, such as the Employment Relations Act or certain provisions of the Maritime Transport Act which apply exclusively on ships engaged on overseas voyages. The Committee has been highlighting that the Convention calls for legislation adapted to the specificity and complexity of maritime employment. The Government's position remains that general employment legislation covers all employees and provides adequate protection of seafarers' interests. The Committee therefore notes that the discrepancies between national legislation and the requirements of the Convention have not been addressed. These discrepancies relate among others to the application of the Convention to all seagoing vessels (Article 1); the conditions under which an agreement is concluded (Article 3); the obligation to issue an employment record (Article 5); the particulars to be contained in an agreement in the case of domestic voyages (Article 6); the period of notice for termination (Article 9); and the determination of circumstances for immediate discharge (Articles 11 and 12). The Committee accordingly requests the Government to make every effort to bring the national legislation into full conformity with the specific requirements of the Convention.

Moreover, while noting the persistent gaps in the implementation of the Convention, the Committee recalls that Convention No. 22, as well as 67 other international maritime labour instruments, are revised by the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006). Most of the provisions of this Convention have been incorporated without significant changes in Regulation 2.1, Standard A2.1 and Guideline B2.1 of the MLC, 2006. The Committee, therefore, invites the Government to take measures to ensure compliance with the provisions of Convention No. 22, in a manner that would also facilitate the implementation of corresponding requirements of the MLC, 2006, once ratified and entered into force.

Nigeria

Prevention of Accidents (Seafarers) Convention, 1970 (No. 134) (ratification: 1973)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which reads as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Investigation into occupational accidents. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to supply copies of relevant extracts of reports of inquiry into occupational accidents, as well as samples of statistics compiled in conformity with the provisions of this Article, drawing the attention of the Government to the obligation of the competent authority to ensure that, in accordance with Article 2(1) and (2) of the Convention, all occupational accidents are adequately reported, that comprehensive statistics shall not be limited to fatalities or to accidents involving the ship, and that statistics of accidents are kept and analysed. Taking into account the Government's indication that accidents on board ships had been reported only when the ship sustained structural damage or when there had been loss of life or serious injury, the Committee earlier expressed the hope that records of minor accidents kept by private and government shipping companies would be integrated into reporting procedures and statistics. The Committee notes that no such information has been provided by the Government. It asks the Government to indicate measures taken to give effect to this Article and to supply copies or relevant extracts of reports of inquiry into occupational accidents, as well as samples of statistics compiled in accordance with the provisions of the Convention.

Article 3. Research. In its previous comments, the Committee, taking into consideration the Government's indication that the necessary measures would be undertaken for research to be conducted into the causes and prevention of accidents aboard Nigerian ships, expressed the hope that such research would be carried out and that the Government would provide detailed information on progress made in this respect. Since no information has been supplied on this subject in the Government's latest report, the Committee, once again, asks the Government to supply such information on any research undertaken into general trends and hazards revealed by statistics, in order to provide a sound basis for the prevention of accidents which are due to particular hazards specific to maritime work.

Articles 4 and 5. Occupational accident prevention. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to supply information concerning provisions adopted or contemplated in order to prevent occupational accidents and covering the specific field of stage and mooring ropes (Article 4(3)(h)) as well as the various matters listed in Article 4(3)(a), (b), (c), (d) and (i). The Committee notes the Government's indication in its latest report that the Merchant Shipping (Life-saving Appliances) Rules 1967 provide for occupational accident prevention standards and deal extensively with Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to supply details of provisions related to the prevention of occupational accidents of seafarers which are required by virtue of the abovementioned subparagraphs of Article 4 and to specific obligations of shipowners and seafarers in this respect under Article 5.

Article 7. Accident prevention committees. The Committee asked the Government to supply a copy of a statutory instrument establishing the responsibility of national surveyors and engineers, who are crew members, to conduct inspections on board ships, and the duties of a safety or accident committee on board, chaired by the Master, with the Chief Engineer, the Chief Officer, the Second Engineer and the Radio Officer as members. Since such an instrument has not been furnished with the Government's latest report, the Committee again requests the Government to supply a copy of any provisions which have been made to give effect to this Article.

Articles 8 and 9. Programmes and instructions in accident prevention. In previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to provide details concerning the tripartite establishment and implementation of programmes for the prevention of occupational accidents (Article 8) and the inclusion of instruction in accident prevention and health protection in employment in the curricula of vocational training institutions for all categories and grades of seafarers (Article 9(1)). Since such information has not been supplied with the Government's latest report, the Committee again requests the Government to provide information on: (i) programmes which have been undertaken for the prevention of occupational accidents, indicating the manner in which the cooperation and participation of shipowners, seafarers, and their organizations are assured; and (ii) measures ensuring the inclusion, as part of the instruction in professional duties of all categories and grades of seafarers, of instruction in the prevention of accidents and in the protection of health in employment.

Moreover, the Committee understands that a new Merchant Shipping Act 2007 was adopted. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether this Merchant Shipping Act repeals any relevant provisions of the Merchant Shipping (Life-saving Appliances) Rules 1967, and to identify any new provisions which give effect to the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Norway

Seamen's Articles of Agreement Convention, 1926 (No. 22) (ratification: 1940)

The Committee notes with interest that on 10 February 2009, Norway ratified the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006). The entry into force for Norway of the MLC, 2006, will result in the denunciation of, inter alia, the present Convention. Pending the entry into force of the MLC, 2006, however, the Committee will continue to examine the conformity of national legislation with the relevant requirements of the present Convention. Recalling that the provisions of the Convention have been incorporated in Regulation 2.1 and the corresponding Code of the MLC, 2006, and that therefore compliance with this Convention would facilitate the implementation of the respective provisions of the MLC, 2006, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the following points.

Article 2(b) of the Convention. Scope of application, definition of "seaman". The Committee has been commenting for more than 20 years on the exclusion of seafarers, who are neither residents in Norway nor Norwegian nationals, are hired from a foreign employer and serve passengers on cruise ships, from the protective coverage of the legislation applying the Convention. In its latest report, the Government states that section 3 of the Seamen's Act has been amended to ensure that, when the MLC, 2006, enters into force, all seafarers will be entitled to the rights embodied in that Convention. The Government further indicates that, in the meantime, the provision referred to by the Committee in its observation has no practical effect since there are no vessels on Norwegian registers to which it would have applied. However, the Committee notes that section 1(2) of the Seamen's Act, as last amended in 2008, still provides for the exemption of the seafarers in question from its provisions concerning articles of agreement. Recalling the unequivocal requirement for any person who is employed or engaged or works in any capacity on board a ship to have a seafarer's employment agreement, as provided for in Standard A2.1(1)(a) of the MLC, 2006, read in conjunction with Article II(1)(f), the Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with the requirements of the Convention.

Panama

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Sea) Convention, 1921 (No. 16) (ratification: 1970)

Article 3 of the Convention. Interval for renewal of medical examination. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Resolution ADM No. 054-2007 of 26 February 2007, under section 5 of which the period of validity of the medical certificate for seafarers under 18 years of age is now one year. This new provision not only brings the national legislation into line with the Convention, but also gives effect to Standard A1.2(7) of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), ratified by Panama, which revises many Conventions applying to seafarers, including Convention No. 16, and contains provisions similar to those of Convention No. 16 as regards minimum age and compulsory medical certificates for seafarers.

Poland

Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention, 1958 (No. 108) (ratification: 1993)

Articles 2(2), 3 and 5(2) of the Convention. Issuance of seafarers' identity documents, continuous possession and admission to territory. For the last 13 years, the Committee has been raising a number of points concerning the conformity of certain provisions of Act No. 258 of 1991 on employment on seagoing merchant vessels with the requirements of the Convention. More concretely, the Committee has been requesting the amendment of certain provisions concerning the refusal to issue seafarers' identity documents and the adoption of supplementary provisions ensuring that seafarers' identity documents remain in seafarers' possession at all times and guaranteeing the right of foreign seafarers to return to Poland on expired Polish seafarers' identity documents.

To date, no concrete measures have been taken with a view to ensuring full compliance with the Convention on these points. The Government has been stating that Act No. 258 of 1991 would be revised taking into consideration both the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185), and the comments of the Committee. In its latest report, the Government indicates that a draft law amending Act No. 258 is currently at the stage of inter-ministerial consultations. Welcoming the Government's intention to align national legislation with the provisions of Convention No. 185, which aims to enhance port and border security by developing a more secure and globally uniform seafarers' identity document, the Committee asks the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments concerning the finalization of the new legislation on work on board seagoing merchant vessels and to transmit a copy as soon as it has been adopted. The Committee also invites the Government to consider the possibility of ratifying Convention No. 185 in the very near future and to keep the Office informed of any decisions taken in this respect.

Russian Federation

Recruitment and Placement of Seafarers Convention, 1996 (No. 179) (ratification: 2001)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Tripartite Committee (representation made under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO). The Committee notes the adoption by the Governing Body at its 308th Session in June 2010 (GB.308/6/1) of the report of the tripartite committee set up to consider the representation made by the Federation of Maritime Transport Trade Unions (FPRMT) under article 24 of the ILO Constitution alleging non-observance by the Russian Federation of the Recruitment and Placement of Seafarers Convention, 1996 (No. 179). The Committee recalls that according to the conclusions of the tripartite committee, the Government should review the Regulations considering the licensing of activities in connection with the placement of Russian citizens in employment outside the Russian Federation (hereinafter referred to as Regulations), take the necessary measures to implement the Regulations, and hold bona fide consultations on the issue with the shipowners' and seafarers' organizations concerned. Following the recommendations of the tripartite committee, the Governing Body invited the Government to take, in consultation with the social partners, effective measures through regulations or otherwise, to ensure full compliance with specific provisions of the Convention and to submit a report to the present session of the Committee of Experts indicating any progress made in this respect.

In its report, the Government refers to the adoption of Government Decree No. 1009 of 24 December 2008, which designated the Ministry of Health and Social Development as the competent authority for recruitment and placement of seafarers on Russian-registered vessels, and Presidential Decree No. 933 of 11 August 2009 which designated the Federal Migration Service as the competent authority for the recruitment and placement of seafarers on foreign-flagged vessels. In addition, the Government indicates that by Decree No. 129, the Ministry of Health and Social Development set up a working group to prepare laws for the implementation of the Convention with the participation of representatives of the Federal Employment Service, the Ministry of Transport, the Federal Migration Service, and seafarers' and shipowners' organizations. To date, the working group has adopted two texts: Ordinance No. 939 of 2 December 2009 approving the model seafarer's employment contract, and Ordinance No. 962 of 8 December 2009 approving the procedure for the registration of employment contracts concluded through the intermediary of recruitment and placement services. Moreover, the Government reports that with a view to fully implementing the requirements of the Convention, Decree No. 322 of 11 May 2010 was adopted amending the Regulations. While noting the concrete steps taken for the review and improvement of the regulatory framework governing the operation of recruitment and placement services, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the following points.

Article 4(1)(a) of the Convention. Prohibition of fee charging. The Committee recalls that according to the conclusions of the tripartite committee set up to examine the representation made by the FPRMT, the Government had not fulfilled its obligations under Article 4(1)(a) of the Convention. The Committee notes with interest that following the adoption of Decree No. 322 of 11 May 2010 amending the Regulations, express reference is now made to the free of charge nature of services provided in the case of placement of seafarers abroad. In this respect, the Committee wishes to recall that the same requirement has been incorporated in Standard A1.4(5)(b) of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006).

Article 4(2)(a), (b). Close supervision of private recruitment agencies – system of licensing. The Committee recalls that according to the conclusions of the tripartite committee set up to examine the representation made by the FPRMT, the Government had not fulfilled its obligations under Article 4(2)(a), (b) of the Convention as supervision of recruitment and placement services by the competent authority was found to be lacking. In this respect, the Government refers to sections 7 and 8 of the Regulations, as amended, which set out the documents that need to be submitted when applying for a licence and the verification by the licensing authority of the exactitude of the submitted information. The Government also refers to Ordinance No. 168 of 11 June 2010 on the establishment and maintenance of a Unified Registry of employment contracts concluded through the intermediary of recruitment and placement services. In addition, the Government reports that following the adoption of Decree No. 322 of 11 May 2010 amending the Regulations, keeping a registry book of all seafarers placed abroad has been inserted as a precondition for obtaining a licence. Finally, the Government indicates that at present 507 recruitment agencies hold licenses to place Russian citizens abroad, of which 255 are active at placing seafarers to foreign-flagged vessels. These agencies have placed 56,320 persons in 2008, 52,711 in 2009 and 26,719 in 2010.

Article 4(2)(c). Qualification of management and staff of recruitment and placement services. The Committee notes with interest that following the adoption of Decree No. 322 of 11 May 2010 amending the Regulations, managers and staff of recruitment and placement services are required to have professional experience from one to three years in the field of seafarers' placement abroad while the managers should also have work experience of at least five years on a ship as part of command staff.

Article 4(2)(d). Prohibition of blacklisting or similar practices. The Committee recalls that according to the conclusions of the tripartite committee set up to examine the representation made by the FPRMT, the Government had not fulfilled its obligations under Article 4(2)(d) of the Convention as the Regulations did not contain any provision prohibiting blacklisting. The Committee notes that the Government's report is silent on this point and therefore the Committee understands that no specific legislative action has been taken with a view to prohibiting recruitment and placement services from using means, mechanisms or lists intended to prevent or deter seafarers from gaining employment. Recalling that the same requirement has been incorporated in Standard A1.4(5)(a) of the MLC, 2006, the Committee asks the Government to take appropriate action in order to give full effect to this provision of the Convention.

Article 4(2)(f). System of protection. The Committee recalls that according to the conclusions of the tripartite committee set up to examine the representation made by the FPRMT, the Government had not fulfilled its obligations under Article 4(2)(f) of the Convention as no arrangements were put in place to compensate seafarers for any possible failure of the recruitment agency to meet its obligations. The Committee notes the Government's general reference to the possibility of seeking redress through ordinary judicial means, but recalls that the Convention calls for a system of protection, such as a compulsory insurance scheme, offering greater certainty of payment. Recalling that the same requirement has been incorporated in Standard A1.4(5)(c)(vi) of the MLC, 2006, the Committee asks the Government to take appropriate action in order to give full effect to this provision of the Convention.

Article 5(2)(a), (b). Verification of contracts and seafarers' qualifications. The Committee notes with interest that following the adoption of Decree No. 322 of 11 May 2010 amending the Regulations, two new preconditions for obtaining a licence have been introduced: first, the recruitment and placement agency must ensure the conformity of the employment contract with the legislation and applicable collective agreements of the country whose flag the ship flies, and secondly, it must also ensure that recruited seafarers hold the necessary documents confirming their professional qualifications, thus giving effect to the requirements of Article 5(2)(a), (b) of the Convention. In this respect, the Committee wishes to highlight that the same requirements have been incorporated in Standard A1.4(5)(c)(iii) of the MLC, 2006.

Article 6(1). Investigation of complaints. The Committee recalls that according to the conclusions of the tripartite committee set up to examine the representation made by the FPRMT, the Government had not fulfilled its obligations under Article 6 of the Convention as no special machinery or procedures seemed to exist for the investigation of complaints. The Government refers, in this respect, to civil court procedures as being available for the investigation of complaints and resolution of possible disputes. The Committee notes, however, that according to its sections 8 and 17, the Civil Code is only applicable to Russian citizens. The Committee therefore asks the Government to indicate how it is ensured that all complaints concerning the activities of recruitment and placement services are investigated, involving, as appropriate, representatives of shipowners and seafarers. It further asks the Government to indicate how it is ensured that where complaints concerning working and living conditions on board ships are brought to the attention of recruitment and placement services, these complaints are forwarded by the services in question to the appropriate authority. In this respect, the Committee wishes to point out that the same provisions have been incorporated in Standard A1.4(5)(c)(v), (7) of the MLC, 2006.

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Sea) Convention, 1921 (No. 16) (ratification: 1998)

The Committee notes with interest that, on 9 November 2010, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines ratified the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006). The entry into force for Saint Vincent and the Grenadines of the MLC, 2006, will result in the denunciation of, inter alia, the present Convention. Pending the entry into force of the MLC, 2006, however, the Committee will continue to examine the conformity of national legislation with the relevant requirements of the present Convention. Recalling that the provisions of the Convention have been incorporated in Regulation 1.2 and Standard A1.2 of the MLC, 2006, and that therefore compliance with Convention No. 16 will facilitate the implementation of the respective provisions of the MLC, 2006, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the following points.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Pre-employment and periodic medical examinations. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it drew the Government's attention to the fact that the Convention makes the employment at sea of any young person under 18 years of age conditional on the production of a medical certificate attesting fitness for work. The Committee notes, in this respect, that although section 10(1) of the Merchant Shipping (Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping for Seafarers) (No. 2) Regulations, 2001 provides for a medical certificate, section 10(7) of the same Regulations fixes the validity of such certificate, irrespective of the seafarer's age, to two years, which is inconsistent with the requirement of Article 3 of the Convention. The Committee therefore asks the Government to bring national law and practice in full conformity with Article 3 of the Convention, and to keep the Office informed of any progress made in this regard.

In addition, the Committee notes that the Government is still not in a position to provide full information on the number of young persons employed on vessels registered in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines or on any periodic medical examinations carried out. While noting that the Maritime Administration Office is taking concrete steps to build its organizational capacity, and that the investigative mechanisms of the Maritime Administration Office are still not in place, the Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary steps to permit the Maritime Administration Office to effectively carry out its functions in the very near future.

Spain

Accommodation of Crews Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 92) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes with interest that on 4 February 2010 Spain ratified the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006). The entry into force for Spain of the MLC, 2006, will result in the automatic denunciation of, inter alia, the present Convention. Pending the entry into force of the MLC, 2006, however, the Committee will continue to examine the conformity of national legislation with the relevant requirements of the present Convention.

Article 3 of the Convention. Implementing legislation. Further to its previous observation, the Committee recalls that the Convention calls for the adoption of laws or regulations which ensure the application of the provisions of Parts II (Planning and Control of Crew Accommodation), III (Crew Accommodation Requirements) and IV (Application of Convention to Existing Ships) and also for the establishment of a system of inspection adequate to effectively enforce these laws and regulations. The Committee also recalls that the obligation to adopt laws and regulations requiring that flag State ships meet minimum standards and are inspected to ensure initial and ongoing compliance with those standards has been incorporated in Standard A3.1 of the MLC, 2006.

The Committee notes the information included in the Government's report concerning new legislation adopted since June 2005 but observes that reference is made to enactments that are only applicable to fishing vessels. In addition, the Committee notes that the Government refers to Royal Decree 1837/2000 of 10 November 2000 on ship inspection that is no longer in force, following the adoption of Royal Decree 91/2003 of 24 January 2003 on inspection of foreign vessels in Spanish ports. Moreover, the Committee notes that the national legislation that previously gave effect to the Convention is either no longer in force or no longer contains provisions relevant to the application of the Convention, including the Labour Ordinance for the Merchant Marine of 20 May 1969, which was replaced by the arbitral award of 15 December 2004; the Regulation on Inspection of Ships and Merchant Vessels which was amended by Resolution of the Ministry of Transport of 7 May 1979 and by Royal Decree 1887/2000 of 10 November 2000; Royal Decree 91/2003 of 24 January 2003 which was amended by Royal Decree 1249/2003 of 3 October 2003; and Royal Decree 2122/1971 of 23 July 1971 which was amended by Royal Decree 138/2000 of 4 February 2000.

In view of the succinct character of Government's reports over the past years, and frequent legislative changes in the area of maritime legislation, the Committee notes that no indication has been given with respect to laws or regulations that give effect to the following requirements of the Convention: Article 5 (inspection of crew accommodation upon registration, alteration or complaint); Article 6 (construction, design and materials of crew accommodation spaces); Articles 7, 8 and 9 (ventilation, heating and lighting of crew spaces); Article 10 (floor area, occupancy and fittings of crew sleeping rooms); Article 11 (mess rooms); Article 12 (recreation facilities); and Article 13 (sanitary accommodation).

The Committee once again asks the Government to send a full and detailed report on the application of the Convention, in accordance with the report form approved by the ILO Governing Body, indicating for each provision of the Convention the corresponding provision in the national legislation in force. The Committee also asks the Government to forward copies of all applicable collective agreements, as well as a copy of the Order in application of Royal Decree 543/2007, to which reference was made in the Government's report, once it has been issued.

Finally, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the fact that the MLC, 2006, essentially reproduces and further expands on the provisions of Conventions Nos 92 and 133 concerning crew accommodation, and therefore ensuring compliance with the requirements of these Conventions would facilitate the implementation of the respective provisions of the MLC, 2006.

Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention, 1958 (No. 108) (ratification: 1995)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention. Seafarers' identity documents. The Committee notes that the continuous discharge certificate issued to seafarers by Sri Lankan authorities fails to give effect to substantial provisions of the Convention. The Committee recalls that all obligations concerning identity documents pursuant to the Convention are applicable, irrespective of the denomination of the document or its other uses. It notes that, 15 years after ratification, the Government has not yet taken the required steps to ensure compliance with this instrument. The Committee therefore asks the Government to make the necessary efforts to bring national law and practice governing seafarers' identity documents into conformity with the requirements of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Seafarers' Hours of Work and the Manning of Ships Convention, 1996 (No. 180) (ratification: 2000)

Articles 4 and 5 in conjunction with Article 11 of the Convention. Normal working hours' standard, minimum hours of rest and safe manning of ships. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not replied to most of the points raised in the previous observation. It is therefore obliged to once again draw the Government's attention to a number of important issues that impact on seafarers' health and well-being and call for specific action on the part of the competent authority. First, the Committee has taken the view that the Convention may not be construed to allow all hours beyond the minimum hours of rest fixed in Article 5(1)(b) of the Convention, to be considered as permissible hours of work. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to indicate how it is ensured that the minimum hours of rest prescribed by Act No. 958/1998 are applied in a manner that is consistent with the letter and the spirit of the Convention which seeks to protect above all the health and safety of seafarers.

Secondly, the Committee has expressed its concern about the possible existence of uniform pay agreements under which seafarers would get overtime compensation on the basis of a standard 10- or 11-hour working day irrespective of the number of hours actually worked per day (in some cases, as many as 14 hours in a 24-hour period). It again asks the Government to explain how it discharges its responsibility under the Convention to ensure that limits on hours of work or rest are scrupulously respected and that seafarers are effectively remunerated for all overtime hours performed, as required by section 7 of Act No. 958/1998.

Thirdly, the Committee has observed that a two-watch system (six hours on, six hours off) represented a higher risk of fatigue than the three-watch system. In its latest report, the Government states that there are a number of ships with two nautical officers, which might be devastating from a fatigue point of view but no statistics exist to show that these ships are more accident prone. The Government adds that the Swedish Transport Agency has been active in the process of revision of IMO Res.A.890(21)(1999) in order to provide for at least three nautical officers and thus preventing fatigue. The Committee once more asks the Government to consider measures which would allow the watchkeeping system of a vessel to be fully taken into account when supervising compliance with applicable hours of rest standards.

Article 5(3)–(5). Rest in case of drills and in the event of call-outs to work. The Committee recalls that, in principle, the question of granting compensatory rest in case of call-outs to work or minimizing disturbance of rest periods during drills is left to be regulated through collective agreements. It is only in the absence of such agreements, or if the competent authority determines that any collectively agreed provisions are inadequate, that the Government is expected to regulate these matters. The Committee recalls that the same provisions are now incorporated in Standard A2.3(7)–(9) of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006). The Committee therefore again requests the Government to clarify whether there are any collective agreements containing provisions on the matters dealt with in Article 5(3)–(4) of the Convention, and if not, to take all necessary measures to establish such provisions, as required by Article 5(5) of the Convention.

Article 7. Suspension of schedule of hours of work or rest. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not reply to a previous comment regarding the master's right to suspend the hours of rest under section 6 of Act No. 958/1998 in cases that go beyond those provided for in the Convention. Recalling that suspension of the schedule of the hours of rest are only allowed under the Convention if necessary for the immediate safety of the ship, persons onboard or cargo, or for the purpose of giving assistance to other ships or persons in distress at sea – a provision now incorporated in Standard A2.3(14) of the MLC, 2006 – the Committee once more asks the Government to take appropriate measures to ensure compliance with the Convention in this regard.

Article 9. Examination of records at appropriate intervals. In the absence of a reply concerning the periodicity of controls of records of seafarers' daily hours of rest, the Committee once again refers to section 5(4), (5) of Chapter 5 of Act No. 364/2003, which do not provide for specific intervals for the examination of records, and asks the Government to specify how effect is given to the requirements of this Article of the Convention.

In addition, as regards the control of annual hours of work in practice, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it has no system to control the observance of the requirements of hours of rest in the case of a seafarer changing ship or employer. Recalling that in earlier observations seafarers' unions and the shipowners' association had both questioned the relevance and enforceability of the provision prescribing a maximum of yearly working hours, the Committee is obliged to once more ask the Government: (i) to explain the purpose of this provision as compared to the daily and weekly minimum hours of rest; (ii) to furnish details on methods to effectively verify maximum yearly working hours; and (iii) to provide a general appreciation of the practical application of this provision.

Article 12. Minimum age. The Committee notes the Government's indication that employing any person under 16 years of age for shipboard work is a punishable offence. It also notes that, to date, section 45 of Act No. 282/1973 which authorizes persons under the age of 16 to be employed in ship work, if it is part of training, has not been amended. Recalling that the Convention establishes an absolute prohibition for persons under 16 years of age to work on board a vessel, and also recalling that the same provision is now incorporated in Standard A1.1(1) of the MLC, 2006, the Committee once again asks the Government to take the necessary measures to bring its legislation on this matter into conformity with the Convention.

Finally, the Committee takes this opportunity to recall that most of the provisions of Convention No. 180 have been incorporated in Regulations 1.1, 2.3 and 2.7, and Standards A1.1(1) and (2), A2.3 and A2.7 of the MLC, 2006, and therefore ensuring compliance with Convention No. 180 would greatly facilitate compliance with the corresponding requirements of the MLC, 2006. Noting that the Government has committed to examining the possibility of ratifying the MLC, 2006, especially in light of the 2007 EU Council decision authorizing Member States to ratify it, the Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments regarding the process of ratification and effective implementation of the MLC, 2006.

Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention, 1958 (No. 108) (ratification: 1962)

Articles 2–6 of the Convention. Seafarers' identity documents. The Committee recalls that the Government has not so far communicated the text of any laws, regulations or administrative instructions or circulars relating to the issuance of seafarers' identity documents. The Committee also recalls that, in the absence of any relevant legal provisions, it is unclear whether and how the rights of entry (Article 6), and readmission (Article 5), or the requirement that a seafarer's identity document should remain at all times in the seafarer's possession (Article 3), are implemented. In addition, the Committee notes that, since 1994, the Government reports that no consultations have taken place concerning the form and content of the seafarer's identity document and that the issuance of special identity for seafarers might be considered in the course of preparation of the national identity document, while the last specimen copy of a seaman's identity book which has been transmitted to the Office was issued in 1972. Moreover, the Committee notes that the recently adopted Merchant Shipping Act of 2003 and the Merchant Shipping Regulations of 2005 contain provisions on discharge or record books but make no reference to a seafarer's identity document as that required under this Convention. The Committee therefore asks the Government to explain in detail the state of law and practice in relation to the issuance of seafarers' identity documents and to provide copies of any relevant legislative or regulatory text implementing the requirements of Articles 3–6 of the Convention, as well as a specimen copy of the seaman's identity book currently in use.

Finally, the Committee takes the opportunity to recall that the Convention has been revised by the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185), which was adopted by the ILO to enhance port and border security, while at the same time protecting the seafarer's right to shore leave, by developing a more secure and globally uniform seafarers' identity document. In fact, Convention No. 185 complements actions taken within the framework of the International Maritime Organization (IMO) through the adoption of the International Ship and Port-facility Security Code (ISPS), sets out basic parameters regarding the content and form of the documents, and provides technical guidance in the annexes in order to ensure that members may easily adapt their systems while taking national circumstances into account. While noting the Government's indication that it is taking measures to initiate the process of ratifying Convention No. 185, the Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any further progress made in this regard.

Merchant Shipping (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 147)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Scope of application. With reference to the Committee's previous query regarding the applicability of the new Employment Act 2000 to seafarers, the Government indicates that the Ministry of Labour, Home Affairs and Public Safety has posed the question to the Attorney General's Chambers and is awaiting their legal advice. Noting that the Employment Amendment Act of 2006 contains an amendment of the term "employee", the Committee hopes that the Government will soon be able to clarify whether the Employment Act covers seafarers and, if so, how it interacts with the provisions contained in the Merchant Shipping Act 2002 and the regulations issued thereunder.

Article 2(a)(i). Safety standards – Medical examination. In its previous comments, the Committee has requested the Government to ensure substantial equivalence of national legislation with Article 5(1) of the Medical Examination (Seafarers) Convention, 1946 (No. 73). The Committee notes with interest that legislation is being enacted, which requires that seafarers aged from 18 to 40 years undergo medical examinations every two years, and that the new Merchant Shipping (Medical Examination) Regulations are currently at drafting stage. The Committee hopes that the new legislation will enter into force shortly and asks the Government to supply a copy.

The Committee is also addressing a request concerning certain points directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Seamen's Articles of Agreement Convention, 1926 (No. 22) (ratification: 1944)

Articles 3–14 of the Convention. Articles of agreement. The Committee recalls that it has been formulating observations for many years on the need to adopt legislative or other provisions giving effect to the various Articles of the Convention. It also recalls that this situation gave rise to a discussion within the Committee on the Application of Standards at the session of the Conference held in 1977 and that the Government has announced on several occasions that new legislation would be drafted to ensure the full application of the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that, to date, despite the adoption of the Navigation Act in 1998 and the Maritime Activities Act in 2002, the Government has still not taken the necessary measures to transpose several basic rules and principles of the Convention into the national legislation.

As explained in detail by the Committee in its previous comments, the Government should take measures as soon as possible to: (i) ensure the conclusion of written articles of agreement signed by both the shipowner and the seafarer (Article 3(1) of the Convention); (ii) ensure conditions allowing the seafarer to examine and understand the provisions of the articles of agreement (Article 3(1) and (4)); (iii) require that the articles of agreement list the rights and obligations of the two parties and contain essential information such as the seafarer's wages, annual leave and the right to terminate the agreement (Article 6(2) and (3)); (iv) allow either party to terminate an agreement for an indefinite period in any port where the vessel loads or unloads, provided that the notice period laid down is given (Article 9(1)); (v) determine the circumstances in which seafarers may demand their immediate discharge (Article 12); and (vi) ensure that seafarers have the right to obtain from the master a certificate as to the quality of their work or, failing that, a certificate indicating whether they have fully discharged their obligations under the agreement (Article 14(2)).

The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that most of the provisions of Convention No. 22 have now been incorporated into Regulation 2.1 and the corresponding Code of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006). Ensuring the implementation of Convention No. 22 will therefore facilitate the application of the provisions of the MLC, 2006, once that Convention has been ratified and has entered into force. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all necessary measures to give full effect to all provisions of the Convention.

Furthermore, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to ratify the MLC, 2006, which revises Convention No. 22 as well as numerous other Conventions applicable to seafarers, establishes an up-to-date and comprehensive framework of standards regulating the living and working conditions of seafarers, particularly concerning the seafarers' employment agreement, and encourages the establishment of conditions of fair competition for shipowners. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decisions taken in that regard.

Liberia

Minimum Age (Fishermen) Convention, 1959 (No. 112) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee notes with regret that, 49 years after its ratification, the Convention has still not been given effect in its entirety. It recalls that, under the terms of Article 1 of the Convention, the term "fishing vessel" includes all ships and boats, of any nature whatsoever, whether publicly or privately owned, which are engaged in maritime fishing in salt waters. Only fishing in ports or in river estuaries, and individuals fishing for sport or recreation, are excluded from the scope of the Convention. However, the Committee observes that section 326 of the Maritime Act of Liberia, which establishes the minimum age for work on board vessels (including fishing vessels) at 15 years, only applies to vessels registered under the Act. Section 51 of the Maritime Act limits the registration procedure to certain types of vessels. This procedure is open to any vessel under 20 tonnes, the owner of which is a national of Liberia and which only makes voyages between Liberian ports or between Liberia and other West African countries, as well as any vessel of over 1,600 tonnes engaged in international trade, the constructor or owner of which is a national of Liberia. Furthermore, by virtue of section 290 of the Maritime Act, Chapter 10 of the Act, which covers seafarers and includes, among its provisions, the rules respecting minimum age, only applies to persons engaged on board vessels of at least 75 tonnes. The Committee wishes once again to draw the Government's attention to the fact that the scope of the provisions of the national legislation respecting the minimum age required for work on board fishing vessels is much narrower than that of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to adopt the necessary measures without further ado to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention on this point. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice including, for instance, extracts from reports of the inspection services and, if such statistics are currently available, information on the number and nature of the contraventions reported and the measures taken as a consequence. It further requests the Government to indicate the number of fishing vessels and fishers who are currently excluded from the scope of application of the Convention.

Finally, the Committee understands that the tripartite representatives of Liberia participated in a subregional workshop organized in Accra (Ghana) in October 2009 which was intended to promote the ratification of the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188). It requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any measures taken, in the context of the follow-up to this workshop, with a view to the ratification of Convention No. 188.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Medical Examination (Fishermen) Convention, 1959 (No. 113) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3 of the Convention. Nature of medical examination and particulars to be included in medical certificate. For many years the Committee has asked the Government to indicate whether certain provisions applicable to merchant vessels, i.e. the Requirements for Merchant Marine Personnel (RLM-118) and Maritime Regulation No. 10.325(2), also apply to fishing vessels. The Committee once again expresses the hope that the Government will provide full explanations regarding the applicability of the Liberian maritime laws and regulations to the medical examination of fishermen. The Government is requested to indicate whether consultations with the fishing-boat owners' and fishermen's organizations concerned, if they exist, had taken place prior to the adoption of the applicable laws and regulations on the nature of the medical examination and the particulars to be included in the medical certificate as required by Article 3(1) of the Convention and to provide particulars on how the age of the person to be examined and the nature of the duties to be performed are taken into account in prescribing the nature of the examination as required by Article 3(2).

The Committee also draws the Government's attention to the new Work in Fishing Convention, adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 96th Session (June 2007), which revises and updates most ILO instruments on fishing, including Convention No. 113. While noting the Subregional Seminar on the promotion of the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188), which was held in Accra from 27 to 30 October 2009, the Committee requests the Government to give all due attention to this new comprehensive instrument on the working and living conditions of fishers and to keep the Office informed of any decision that it may take with a view to its eventual ratification.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Fishermen's Articles of Agreement Convention, 1959 (No. 114) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 3–9 of the Convention. Articles of agreement. The Committee notes the Government's earlier indication that the Committee's comments have been submitted to the Commissioner of the Bureau of Maritime Affairs for immediate action. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any possible reaction by the Commissioner. It also urges the Government to provide full information on each of the provisions of the Convention and each question in the report form approved by the Governing Body.

The Committee also draws the Government's attention to the new Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188), adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 96th Session (June 2007), which revises and updates most ILO instruments on fishing, including Convention No. 114. The Committee requests the Government to give all due attention to this new comprehensive instrument on the working and living conditions of fishers and to keep the Office informed of any decision that it may take with a view to its eventual ratification.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Accommodation of Crews (Fishermen) Convention, 1966 (No. 126) (ratification: 1969)

Article 3 of the Convention. Laws and regulations which ensure the application of the provisions of Parts II, III and IV of the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the information provided in the Government's report reproduces essentially the same information provided in the previous report concerning the matters that it has been raising since 2005. However, it notes the indication that a draft text is being prepared to update the provisions of Regulation No. 1814-77 of 22 December 1977 issuing sanitary rules for Soviet vessels and boats, which will be in conformity with the provisions of the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188). In this respect, the Committee recalls that Annex III of Convention No. 188 essentially reproduces the provisions of Convention No. 126. It therefore hopes that, when preparing the draft text referred to above, the Government will take into consideration the comments that it has been making for several years concerning the application of the following provisions of the Convention: penalties for violations of the relevant legislation (Article 3(2)(d) and (e)); periodical inspection of fishing vessels (Article 5); bulkheads being watertight and gastight (Article 6(3)); prohibition of heating on board by open fires (Article 8(3)); indication of maximum sleeping room capacity (Article 10(9)); one wash basin for every six persons or less (Article 12(2)(c)); quality of soil and waste pipes and facilities for drying clothes (Article 12(7) and (11)); sick bay required for vessels of 45.7 meters in length or over (Article 13(1)); and alterations to existing vessels to ensure conformity with the Convention (Article 17(2) to (4)). The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments in the process of the adoption of the draft text and to provide a copy when it has been finalized. In this context, the Committee also invites the Government to consider favourably the ratification of Convention No. 188, which updates in an integrated manner most of the existing ILO instruments on fishing, and to keep the Office informed of any decision in this respect.

Furthermore, as it has not received any further indications on these points, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide precise information on the application in practice of the following provisions of the Convention: Article 6(2), (4), (7) and (9) to (11), (13) and (14); Article 8(2); Article 9(5); Article 10(1), (5) and (13) to (26); Article 11(7) and (8); and Article 16(6).

Finally, in view of the significance of the fishing fleet in the country and the economic difficulties experienced by the sector, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the application of the Convention in practice, including up-to-date statistics on the size of the fishing fleet disaggregated by vessel category and age, the number of jobs created, the number of enterprises active in the sector, the importance of fisheries in the national economy and current trends in the sector, as well as copies of official reports or studies of the State Committee for Fishing or other competent bodies.

Fishermen's Competency Certificates Convention, 1966 (No. 125) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 3-15 of the Convention. Certificates of competency. The Committee has been commenting for a number of years on the absence of laws and regulations giving effect to the Convention. The Government stated in its report communicated in 2004 that progress was being made in this respect and that a national workshop on the formulation of fishing policies was organized. The Government also indicated that copies of the new legislation and the texts defining the new policies would be communicated to the ILO as soon as they were adopted.

The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on the outcome of the national workshop on the formulation of fishing policies and on any concrete progress made in respect of the adoption of national laws implementing the Convention. The Committee understands that the Office remains ready to offer expert advice and to respond favourably to any specific request for technical assistance in this regard. Finally, the Committee would appreciate receiving up to date information concerning the fishing industry, including statistics on the composition and capacity of the country's fishing fleet, the approximate number of fishers gainfully employed in the sector, etc.

The Committee also draws the Government's attention to the new Work in Fishing Convention (No. 188), adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 96th Session (June 2007), which revises and updates most ILO instruments on fishing. The Committee requests the Government to give all due attention to this new comprehensive instrument on the working and living conditions of fishers and to keep the Office informed of any decision that it may take with a view to its eventual ratification.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 113 (Guinea, Panama, Tajikistan); Convention No. 114 (Panama); Convention No. 125 (Panama); Convention No. 126 (Panama, Sierra Leone).

Protection against Accidents (Dockers) Convention (Revised), 1932 (No. 32) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 12, 13 and 15 of the Convention. Application of the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report of 2008 is almost identical to the one which was sent in 2007, that it contains no reply to the Committee's comments despite its repeated requests over a number of years and that the Government still does not appear to have taken the necessary steps to adopt the legislative text concerning ports and dockers pursuant to Act No. 88-07 as planned. However, the Committee notes the Government's efforts to improve the situation relating to occupational safety and health by ratifying the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155). It notes that this Convention applies to all branches of economic activity, including dock enterprises and dockworkers, and that it therefore constitutes a general context for the application of Convention No. 32. However, the Government continues to be bound by its obligation to adopt specific legislative provisions giving full effect to the provisions of Convention No. 32. The Committee requests the Government once again to take the necessary steps in the very near future to give full effect, in law and in practice, to the provisions of the present Convention, particularly Articles 12, 13 and 15, and to send copies of all relevant legislative texts once they have been adopted.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. Article 17(2). Labour inspection. The Committee notes the lack of information concerning the application in practice of the Convention. With specific reference to the provisions of Article 17(2) of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to send its general observations on the manner in which the Convention is applied, including, for example, extracts of the reports of the inspection services, up-to-date statistical information on the number of inspection visits carried out, the number of infringements reported and also the number, nature and causes of accidents recorded, etc.

The Committee takes this opportunity to remind the Government that the ILO Governing Body invited the States parties to Convention No. 32 to envisage ratifying the Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152), which revises Convention No. 32 (GB.268/LILS/5(Rev.1), paragraphs 99–101). Ratification of Convention No. 152 would entail ipso jure the immediate denunciation of Convention No. 32. The Committee would also like to draw the Government's attention to the code of practice recently adopted by the ILO entitled Safety and health in ports (Geneva, 2005), which is available, inter alia, on the ILO website: www.ilo.org/public/english/protection/safework/cops/english/index.htm. The Government is requested to keep the Office informed of all progress made in this field.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) (ratification: 1986)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government according to which a national advisory technical committee on occupational safety and health has been set up pursuant to Decree No. 2000-29 of 17 March 2000 which gives effect to Article 7 of the Convention. It also notes, however, that the information requested concerning Articles 2, 4, 5, 6 and 11–36 are to be provided by the Government subsequently. As regards the further information the Committee has requested the Government to provide, the Committee notes that the Government has either not replied to questions raised by the Committee in its previous comments or it has provided information that is applicable to enterprises in general. The Government appears to imply that dockworkers should be treated in the same manner as other workers and ports be treated like any other enterprise. With reference to Articles 4–7, the Committee wishes to recall that the Government is required to take measures to give effect to the specific provisions in the Convention. The Committee must therefore once again repeat its previous observation which read as follows.

The Committee draws the Government's attention to the absence of specific health and safety provisions for dock work. The Committee noted previously that a draft Order on safety and health in dock work had been prepared by the technical departments of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. In its report for the period ending 30 June 1993, the Government repeated this information and added that the draft had been submitted for adoption. The Committee hopes that the provisions of this text will ensure the application of the following provisions of the Convention: Article 4 (objectives and areas to be covered by measures to be established by national laws and regulations, in accordance with Part III of the Convention); Article 5 (responsibility of employers, owners, masters or other persons as appropriate, for compliance with safety and health measures; duty of employers to collaborate whenever two or more of them undertake activities simultaneously at one workplace); Article 7 (consultation of and collaboration between employers and workers). It asks the Government to provide a copy of the above Order as soon as it has been adopted.

In its previous reports, the Government referred to Orders No. 9033/MTERFPPS/DGT/DSSHT on the organization and functioning of the socio-medical centres of enterprises in the People's Republic of the Congo and No. 9034/MTERFPPS/DGT/DSSHT laying down the procedures for the establishment of socio-medical centres which are common to several enterprises in the People's Republic of the Congo. Since these texts have not been received, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of them.

Article 6. The Committee notes from the Government's report for the period ending 30 June 1993 that briefings are to be organized to inform workers about safety provisions in the place of work at which heads of establishment can alert them about the dangers arising from the use of machinery and the precautions to be taken. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the provisions concerning the organization of these briefings and the measures taken to give effect to paragraph 1(c) of this Article.

Article 8. The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993 that all safety measures are provided for in Chapter II of Order No. 9036 of 10 December 1986. The Committee notes that the above part of the Order provides for general protective measures whereas the Convention requires the adoption of measures specific to dock work. It asks the Government to indicate which provisions require the adoption of effective measures (fencing, flagging or other suitable means including, when necessary, cessation of work) to ensure that when the workplace has become unsafe, workers are protected until it has been made safe again.

Article 14. The Committee notes from the Government's report for the period ending 30 June 1993 that the application of this Article is ensured by labour inspectors by means of inspections in enterprises. The Committee asks the Government to indicate which provisions ensure that electrical equipment and installations are so constructed, installed, operated and maintained as to prevent danger, and which standards for electrical equipment and installations have been recognized by the competent authorities.

Article 17. The Committee notes that section 41 of Order No. 9036, cited by the Government in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993 as giving effect to this Article of the Convention, includes specific measures only for the use of lifting gear in particular weather conditions (wind). The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that the means of access to a ship's hold or cargo deck are in conformity with the provisions of this Article.

Article 21. The Committee notes the provisions of sections 47–49 of Order No. 9036 which the Government cites in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993 as giving effect to this Article of the Convention. It notes that the above sections provide for protective measures for some machinery or parts of machines which can be dangerous. It asks the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that all lifting appliances, every item of loose gear and every sling or lifting device forming an integral part of a load comply with the provisions of the Convention.

Articles 22, 23, 24 and 25. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993, the Government refers to the certification of machinery, including lifting appliances, which is conducted by technical inspectors and advisory bodies, as a general measure to ensure that lifting appliances are sound and in proper working order. However, these Articles of the Convention provide for a set of measures to ensure that appliances and loose gear can be used by workers without any danger or risk: testing of all lifting appliances and loose gear (every five years in ships); thorough examination (at least once every 12 months); regular inspection before use. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the provisions requiring the above measures to be taken in respect of all lifting appliances – on shore and on board – and of all loose gear.

Article 30. The Committee notes that section 43 of Order No. 9036 referred to by the Government, does not relate to the attaching of loads to lifting appliances. It asks the Government to indicate which provisions relate to this matter.

Article 34. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the instructions concerning the wearing of personal protective equipment referred to by the Government in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993.

Article 35. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that section 147 of the Labour Code regulates the evacuation of injured persons who are able to be moved and who are not able to be treated by the facilities made available by the employer. It notes that the Government also refers in its reports to Orders Nos 9033 and 9034 mentioned in paragraph 2 above. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken either under the above texts, or otherwise, to ensure that adequate facilities, including trained personnel, are available for the provision of first aid.

Article 37(1). The Committee recalls that, under this provision of the Convention, committees which include employers' and workers' representatives must be formed at every port where there is a significant number of workers. Recalling the Government's statement that the health and safety committees provided for by the law have not been formed, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure the establishment of such committees in ports with a significant number of workers.

Article 38(1). The Government indicates in its report that, in the absence of health and safety committees, instruction and training are entrusted to a specialist in the matter within the enterprise. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the activities of these specialists.

Article 39. The Committee notes that section 61 of Act No. 004/86 of 25 February 1986 establishing the Social Security Code gives effect in part to this Article of the Convention. It asks the Government to indicate the provisions which ensure that this Article is applied to occupational diseases.

Article 41(1)(a). Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government refers to Order No. 9036 of 10 December 1986 as being the text which lays down general obligations for the persons and bodies concerned with dock work (ports being treated as any industrial enterprise) and that no specific measures have been taken in respect of dock work. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to set out the specific obligations taken for the persons and bodies concerned with dock work.

In the absence of any information on the application of the above provisions, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the specific measures which give effect to the following provisions of the Convention:

- Article 9(1) and (2). Safety measures with regard to lighting and marking of dangerous obstacles.
- Article 10(1) and (2). Maintenance of surfaces for traffic or stacking of goods and safe manner of stacking goods.
- Article 11(1) and (2). Width of passageways and separate passageways for pedestrians.
- Article 16(1) and (2). Safe transport to or from a ship or other place by water, safe embarking and disembarking, and safe transport to or from a workplace on land.
- Article 18(1)–(5). Regulations concerning hatch covers.
- Article 19(1) and (2). Protection around openings and decks, closing of hatchways when not in use.
- Article 20(1)–(4). Safety measures when power vehicles operate in the hold; hatch covers secured against displacement; ventilation regulations; safe means of escape from bins or hoppers when dry bulk is being loaded or unloaded.

- Article 26(1)–(3). Members’ mutual recognition of arrangements for testing and examination.
- Article 27(1)–(3). Marking lifting appliances with safe working loads.
- Article 28. Rigging plans.
- Article 29. Strength and construction of pallets for supporting loads.
- Article 31(1) and (2). Operation and layout of freight container terminals and organization of work in such terminals.
- Article 38(2). Minimum age limit for workers operating lifting appliances.

Hoping that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary measures in the very near future, the Committee invites the Government to solicit technical assistance of the ILO to resolve any problems related to the application of this Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) (ratification: 1988)

In its observation of 2005 the Committee noted the Government’s repeated statement that it planned to update existing standards on safety and health in dock work; that the Handbook of Standards on Safety and Risk Prevention for Dockworkers was being revised; and that the Committee’s more specific comments had been forwarded to the Directorate-General of the Merchant Navy and that the Government was awaiting information. Moreover, further to the many comments made since 1993, the Committee urged the Government to take all the necessary steps to bring its national law and practice into line with the Convention. The Committee also requested information on the application of the Convention in practice. In its latest report the Government repeats that the National Council for the Merchant Navy and Docks will deal with the relevant subjects in order to bring the national legislation into line with the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report does not provide any information on the steps taken to bring its law and practice into line with the Convention; on the process of revision of the abovementioned handbook; on the various matters raised by the Committee for many years; or on the practical application of the Convention as requested by the Committee. The Committee also recalls that in its last observation it indicated to the Government that it had the possibility of availing itself of technical assistance from the Office in order to bring its legislation into line with the Convention and notes the Government’s statement in this regard that such a possibility was communicated to the competent authorities and that it would forward any available information in this respect to the Committee. The Committee again urges the Government to take all the necessary steps to bring its law and practice into line with the Convention, including the revision of the abovementioned Handbook, and to provide detailed information in this respect. The Committee also urges the Government to supply detailed information on the manner in which it currently ensures the application of the provisions of the Convention to which it has been referring since 1993, which are set out in detail in its direct request of 2005 and which cover matters referred to in the following articles of the Convention: Article 1; Article 4(1)(f) and (2)(d) in conjunction with Article 16(2) and Article 4(2)(g); Article 5(1); Article 7(1); Article 8; Article 9(2); Article 10; Article 11; Article 13(2) and (4); Article 17(2); Article 18(1), (4) and (5); Article 19(2); Article 20(1), (2) and (4); Article 22(2) and (3); Article 25(1), (2) and (3); Article 26; Article 27(2) and (3)(b) and (c); Articles 28, 29 and 31; Article 32(2) and (4); Article 34(3); Article 36(1) and (3); and Article 38(1) and (2).

Dock Work Convention, 1973 (No. 137) (ratification: 1977)

National policy aimed at providing permanent or regular employment for dockworkers. Further to the comments that it has been making for many years, the Committee notes the Government’s detailed report received in February 2010. The Government indicates that work aimed at optimizing the national collective agreement on dock work is going ahead in close collaboration with the social partners by means of amendments relating to vocational training, wages, the complementary retirement scheme and the reduction in hours of work. As at 31 August 2008, the total of 1,684 professional dockworkers comprised 1,319 monthly workers and 365 casual workers. The Government indicates that approximately 2,106 dockworkers who were not part of the former system have been employed on a monthly basis, including young persons who previously held “qualification” contracts and “employment initiative” contracts now hired on contracts of unlimited duration. In the extension to the interoccupational agreements of July 2005 and December 2006, vocational qualification certificates have been created and an individual entitlement to 20 hours of training has been established. The Government states that these certificates are intended to create objective qualification standards in the profession whose validity can be upheld in relation to third parties, demonstrating that dock work is an individual occupation in its own right. The Committee notes this approach with interest and requests the Government to continue to supply up-to-date information on changes in the number of dockworkers and also on the impact of the implementation of collective agreements on improving the efficiency of dock work.

Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 6(1)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Measures to ensure the safety of portworkers. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that sections 170 and 172 of the Labour Code, establishing that workers have a general obligation to use health and safety equipment correctly and that those responsible for workplaces have an obligation to organize appropriate practical training with regard to safety and hygiene issues for the benefit of workers, ensure the application of Article 6, (1)(a) and (b), of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to ensure that these general provisions are applied to portworkers.

Article 7. Consultation with employers and workers. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government with regard to sections 288 and 290 of the Labour Code, which provide for the establishment of a consultative committee which is to be responsible, amongst other things, for issuing opinions and formulating proposals and resolutions on labour legislation and regulations and social laws. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application, in practice, of the measures taken to ensure the collaboration between workers and employers provided for in Article 7 of the Convention.

Article 12. Fighting fire. The Committee notes that sections 71, 72 and 76 of the Merchant Marine Code briefly touch upon the question of fire protection systems and equipment, but only in the context of inspections of vessels engaged in international voyages. The Committee requests the Government to take the measures necessary to ensure that appropriate and sufficient firefighting measures are made available for use wherever dock work is carried out.

Article 32(1). Dangerous cargoes. The Committee notes that section 174 of the Labour Code states, in general, that vendors or distributors of dangerous substances, as well as those responsible for workplaces where such substances are used, are required to mark and label them. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure the application, in practice, of this provision, which is general in scope, in the dock sector.

The Committee notes that the information provided by the Government in its report of May 2005 on the application of Articles 16, 18, 19(1), 29, 30, 35 and 37, are general in nature and do not permit the Committee to ascertain whether they are being applied in the dock sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the measures taken to ensure the application of Articles 16, 18, 19(1), 29, 30, 35 and 37, of the Convention and to attach copies of the relevant national laws and regulations.

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain replies to its request for further information contained in the previous direct request regarding the application of Articles 19(2) and 33, of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide the information requested, as well as information on the measures taken with regard to the application of these Articles.

The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government does not provide any clarification with regard to the measures taken to give effect to Article 6(1)(c), and Articles 2, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 31, 32(2-5), and 34 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure the application of these Articles and to keep the Committee informed of any action taken in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guyana

Dock Work Convention, 1973 (No. 137) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its previous direct request, which read as follows:

The Committee noted the Government's report for the period ending September 2002, according to which there has been no change in the application of the Convention. It requests the Government to give a general appreciation on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, including for instance extracts from the reports of the authorities entrusted with the application of the laws and regulations, and the available information on the numbers of dockworkers on the registers of workers in docks maintained in accordance with Article 3 of the Convention and of any variations in their numbers (Part V of the report form).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Panama

Protection against Accidents (Dockers) Convention (Revised), 1932 (No. 32) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the General Docks Act (Act No. 56) was adopted on 6 August 2008. It notes that section 106 of the Act states that the Maritime Authority of Panama shall establish standards and procedures for the prevention of occupational accidents and diseases, occupational safety and health, fire prevention and the proper handling of cargo, in order to ensure the safety and efficiency of dock work. The Committee notes with interest that section 107 states that, for the purposes of the previous section, dock safety inspectors must comply with the standards and procedures laid down in the Dock Safety and Health Regulations and in the international Conventions ratified by Panama, and also in the industry codes of practice. It also notes that the Docks and Auxiliary Maritime Industries Directorate of the Maritime Authority of Panama, which is responsible for the application of the Convention, has drawn up a first draft of Regulations on Safety and Health in Dock Work, the approval of which is pending. The Committee expresses the strong hope that the draft Regulations on Safety and Health in Dock Work will be approved in the near future and that account will be taken of all the points indicated in its observation of 2007, which contains comments that the Committee has been making since 1996. Should the draft Regulations on Safety and Health in Dock Work be approved during the next reporting period, the Committee requests the Government to report on them in detail. Should the Regulations still be at the draft stage, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which effect is given in practice to the matters raised in its observation of 2007.

As regards the Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152), the Government states that for the time being its ratification has not been contemplated but considerable account has been taken of it in the adoption of legal instruments and in the practical application of measures relating to dock work. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information in this regard.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 27 (Denmark, Pakistan); Convention No. 32 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Nigeria, Tajikistan); Convention No. 137 (Kenya); Convention No. 152 (Republic of Moldova, Netherlands, Russian Federation, Seychelles).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 27 (France); Convention No. 32 (Malta).

Indigenous and tribal peoples

General observation

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169)

The Committee has been examining detailed reports on Convention No. 169 since the Convention came into force in 1991. The Committee notes that to date 22 countries have ratified the Convention. It also notes that one of the issues that it has most often examined since the Convention has been adopted relates to the “obligation to consult”.

The Committee has taken note of the comments made in June 2010 during the 99th Session of the International Labour Conference (ILC) in the Committee on the Application of Standards concerning the comments made in respect of the application of Convention No. 169 by a number of member States and the Employer members and, in particular, the comments made on the meaning and scope of “consultation” as provided for by the Convention. The Committee considers that it is important, in view of the significance of this concept under the Convention for the indigenous and tribal peoples, for governments and the social partners to further clarify its understanding of the concept.

The Committee of Experts has, on a number of occasions, stated that, although its mandate does not require it to give definitive interpretation of ILO Conventions, in order to carry out its function of determining whether the requirements of Conventions are being respected, it has to consider and express its views on the legal scope and meaning of the provisions of Conventions, where appropriate.<sup>1</sup> In doing so, the Committee has always paid due regard to the textual meaning of the words in light of the Convention’s purpose and object as provided for by Article 31 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, giving equal consideration to the two authoritative texts of ILO Conventions, namely the English and French versions (Article 33 of the Vienna Convention). In addition and in accordance with Articles 5 and 32 of the Vienna Convention, the Committee takes into account the Organization’s practice of examining the preparatory work leading to the adoption of the Convention. This is especially important for ILO Conventions in view of the tripartite nature of the Organization and the role the tripartite constituents play in standard setting.

In examining this question, the Committee has taken special note of the comments made by the Employer members of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards that it had interpreted the right to consultation in such a way as to impose a more exacting requirement upon the government beyond that envisaged by the Convention.<sup>2</sup> This comment was made in the context of the request made by the Committee of Experts in a case concerning the application by the Government of Peru of Convention No. 169 and which was discussed by the Conference Committee in June 2010.<sup>3</sup>

In light of the above, the Committee makes this general observation in order to clarify its understanding of the concept of “consultation” in the hope that this will result in an improved application of the Convention particularly as it concerns this right. This would be a follow-up to the general observation made by this Committee in 2008. It notes the statement made by the Employer spokesperson during the general discussion of the Conference Committee in June 2009 that “the general observations on social security and indigenous and tribal peoples did not raise any particular issues and were an illustration of the correct approach to making general observations that were useful and contributed to the implementation of the Conventions concerned”.<sup>4</sup>

As a general matter the Committee notes that, in view of the tripartite nature of the ILO, most of its Conventions make specific provision for consultation between governments and representatives of employers and workers or their organizations and of those concerned by the issues involved on the matters covered by the Conventions. Convention No. 169 is no exception. However, the provisions relating to “consultation” in Convention No. 169 specifically address consultation with indigenous and tribal peoples. The relevant provisions of the Convention are Articles 6, 7, 15 and 17.<sup>5</sup> Articles 27 and 28 also refer to consultation specifically regarding education.

<sup>1</sup> See ILC, 63rd Session, 1977, Report III (Part 4A), Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, para. 32; ILC, 73rd Session, 1987, Report III (Part 4A), Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, para. 21; ILC, 77th Session, 1990, Report III (Part 4A), Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, para. 7; ILC, 78th Session, 1991, Report III (Part 4A), Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, paras 11 and 12.

1. In applying the provisions of this Convention, governments shall:

- (a) consult the peoples concerned, through appropriate procedures and in particular through their representative institutions, whenever consideration is being given to legislative or administrative measures which may affect them directly;
- (b) establish means by which these peoples can freely participate, to at least the same extent as other sectors of the population, at all levels of decision-making in elective institutions and administrative and other bodies responsible for policies and programmes which concern them;

The presence of consultation in the abovementioned provisions signifies a comprehensive approach. These provisions on consultation were among the fundamental principles included in the revision of the Indigenous and Tribal Populations Convention, 1957 (No. 107), as a necessary requirement to eliminate the integrationist approach of that Convention. In order to properly understand the scope of this new principle inserted in Convention No. 169, the Committee undertook an exhaustive review of the preparatory work leading up to the inclusion of this principle and right in Convention No. 169.

The Committee notes that Articles 6 and 15 were the subject of extensive debate and amendments during the two years of preparatory discussions leading to the adoption of Convention No. 169.

Concerning Article 6, the extensive preparatory work on this provision suggests that the tripartite constituents sought to recognize:

- (a) that indigenous and tribal peoples have a right to participate in the decision-making process in the countries in which they live for all issues covered by the revised Convention and which affect them directly;
- (b) that this right of participation should be an effective one, offering them an opportunity to be heard and to have an impact on the decisions taken;
- (c) that in order for this right to be effective it must be backed up by appropriate procedural mechanisms to be established at the national level in accordance with national conditions; and
- (d) that the implementation of this right should be adapted to the situation of the indigenous and tribal peoples concerned in order to grant them as much control as is possible in each case over their own economic, social and cultural development.<sup>6</sup>

The Committee notes the evolution of the text of Article 6 during the course of the two discussions by the Conference and the wording in Article 6(a). The text proposed by the Office prior to the first discussion stated that governments should “seek the consent of the peoples concerned ...”. This wording was amended by the Conference

(c) establish means for the full development of these peoples’ own institutions and initiatives, and in appropriate cases provide the resources necessary for this purpose.

2. The consultations carried out in application of this Convention shall be undertaken, in good faith and in a form appropriate to the circumstances, with the objective of achieving agreement or consent to the proposed measures.

Article 7

1. The peoples concerned shall have the right to decide their own priorities for the process of development as it affects their lives, beliefs, institutions and spiritual well-being and the lands they occupy or otherwise use, and to exercise control, to the extent possible, over their own economic, social and cultural development. In addition, they shall participate in the formulation, implementation and evaluation of plans and programmes for national and regional development which may affect them directly.

2. The improvement of the conditions of life and work and levels of health and education of the peoples concerned, with their participation and co-operation, shall be a matter of priority in plans for the overall economic development of areas they inhabit. Special projects for development of the areas in question shall also be so designed as to promote such improvement.

3. Governments shall ensure that, whenever appropriate, studies are carried out, in co-operation with the peoples concerned, to assess the social, spiritual, cultural and environmental impact on them of planned development activities. The results of these studies shall be considered as fundamental criteria for the implementation of these activities.

4. Governments shall take measures, in co-operation with the peoples concerned, to protect and preserve the environment of the territories they inhabit.

Article 15

1. The rights of the peoples concerned to the natural resources pertaining to their lands shall be specially safeguarded. These rights include the right of these peoples to participate in the use, management and conservation of these resources.

2. In cases in which the State retains the ownership of mineral or sub-surface resources or rights to other resources pertaining to lands, governments shall establish or maintain procedures through which they shall consult these peoples, with a view to ascertaining whether and to what degree their interests would be prejudiced, before undertaking or permitting any programmes for the exploration or exploitation of such resources pertaining to their lands. The peoples concerned shall wherever possible participate in the benefits of such activities, and shall receive fair compensation for any damages which they may sustain as a result of such activities.

Article 17

1. Procedures established by the peoples concerned for the transmission of land rights among members of these peoples shall be respected.

2. The peoples concerned shall be consulted whenever consideration is being given to their capacity to alienate their lands or otherwise transmit their rights outside their own community.

3. Persons not belonging to these peoples shall be prevented from taking advantage of their customs or of lack of understanding of the laws on the part of their members to secure the ownership, possession or use of land belonging to them.

during the first discussion to read that governments should “consult fully the (peoples/population) concerned”. Based on comments received from constituents between the first and second discussions by the Conference, the Office deleted the word “fully”. In its place, the Office proposed an additional paragraph 2 to Article 6 as follows:

1. In applying the provisions of this Convention, governments shall:
  - (a) consult the peoples concerned, through appropriate procedures and in particular through their representative institutions, whenever consideration is being given to legislative or administrative measures which may affect them directly;
  - (b) ...
2. The consultations carried out in application of this Convention shall be undertaken, in good faith and in a form appropriate to the circumstances, with the objective of achieving agreement or consent to the proposed measures.<sup>7</sup>

The Office explained that paragraph 2 sought to clarify the meaning and scope of paragraph 1(a). This was the final version of the text as adopted by the Conference during the second discussion. A number of amendments proposed during that discussion were not retained. Reference was made to the consensus reached that the term “consult” meant to consult in good faith.<sup>8</sup> The Committee also noted the statement by a representative of the Office during the second discussion that in drafting the text of paragraph 2 it “had not intended to suggest that the consultations referred to would have to result in the obtaining of agreement or consent of those being consulted, but rather to express an objective for the consultations”.<sup>9</sup>

Article 15(2) states that “... governments shall establish and maintain procedures through which they shall consult these peoples, with a view to ascertaining whether and to what degree their interests would be prejudiced, before undertaking or permitting any programmes for the exploration or exploitation of such resources pertaining to their lands”.

During the second stage of the preparatory work, the Office explained that, while the original proposal that had been contained in the proposed Conclusions concerning this provision had included the phrase “seek the consent”, which would have required that consent be obtained, it was clear from the first discussion that this phrase was not acceptable to a sufficiently large proportion of the membership and it could therefore not include it in the proposed text being submitted to the Conference for a second discussion. The Office had instead proposed alternative wording intended to convey that an attempt should be made in good faith to obtain the consent of the peoples concerned before undertaking exploration and exploitation activities in their territories, without indicating that they should have a veto over government decisions.<sup>10</sup> The text of the Office had referred to Article 6 of the proposed Convention, which used the words “seek to obtain the agreement of these peoples”. The final text adopted by the Conference was the result of a negotiated solution concerning a number of provisions.<sup>11</sup> As a result, the text of Article 15(2) was modified to read “they shall consult these peoples”.

It is only in Article 16, concerning removal, relocation and the right of return to their traditional lands, that a very precise formulation of consent exists.<sup>12</sup> Article 16(2) expressly provides for the “free and informed consent” of indigenous and tribal peoples where their relocation from lands they occupy is considered necessary as an exceptional measure.

Concerning Article 17(2) dealing with the transmission of land rights, the Office had modified its original proposal which would have required the consent of the peoples concerned. In the text prepared by it for the second discussion, it proposed instead the wording “[t]he peoples concerned shall be consulted ...”, which was adopted by the Conference unchanged.

<sup>11</sup> Most of these provisions were referred to a working group and the proposals were submitted to the Committee for adoption as a package. They were adopted by consensus.

Article 16

1. Subject to the following paragraphs of this Article, the peoples concerned shall not be removed from the lands which they occupy.
2. Where the relocation of these peoples is considered necessary as an exceptional measure, such relocation shall take place only with their free and informed consent. Where their consent cannot be obtained, such relocation shall take place only following appropriate procedures established by national laws and regulations, including public inquiries where appropriate, which provide the opportunity for effective representation of the peoples concerned.
3. Whenever possible, these peoples shall have the right to return to their traditional lands, as soon as the grounds for relocation cease to exist.
4. When such return is not possible, as determined by agreement or, in the absence of such agreement, through appropriate procedures, these peoples shall be provided in all possible cases with lands of quality and legal status at least equal to that of the lands previously occupied by them, suitable to provide for their present needs and future development. Where the peoples concerned express a preference for compensation in money or in kind, they shall be so compensated under appropriate guarantees.
5. Persons thus relocated shall be fully compensated for any resulting loss or injury.

Finally, the Committee notes that the Conference adopted a resolution, at the same time as the Convention, in which it specifically called upon governments to establish appropriate consultative machinery enabling indigenous and tribal peoples to express their views on all aspects of the Convention.<sup>13</sup>

The Committee of Experts in reviewing countries' compliance with the Convention has remained true to the above understanding of the Convention. It has consistently indicated that "consultation and participation" constitute the cornerstone of Convention No. 169 on which all its provisions are based. Its general observation of 2008, published in 2009, reflected the above understanding of the relevant provisions of the Convention concerning the concept of consultation. The Committee stated:

With regard to consultation, the Committee notes two main challenges: (i) ensuring that appropriate consultations are held prior to the adoption of all legislative and administrative measures which are likely to affect indigenous and tribal peoples directly; and (ii) including provisions in legislation requiring prior consultation as part of the process of determining if concessions for the exploitation and exploration of natural resources are to be granted. The form and content of consultation procedures and mechanisms need to allow the full expression of the viewpoints of the peoples concerned, in a timely manner and based on their full understanding of the issues involved, so that they may be able to affect the outcome and a consensus could be achieved, and be undertaken in a manner that is acceptable to all parties. If these requirements are met, consultation can be an instrument of genuine dialogue, social cohesion and be instrumental in the prevention and resolution of conflict. The Committee, therefore, considers it important that governments, with the participation of indigenous and tribal peoples, as a matter of priority, establish appropriate consultation mechanisms with the representative institutions of those peoples. Periodic evaluation of the operation of the consultation mechanisms, with the participation of the peoples concerned, should be undertaken to continue to improve their effectiveness.

The Committee encourages governments to continue their efforts, with the participation of indigenous and tribal peoples, in the following areas, and to provide information in future reports on the measures taken in this regard:

- developing the measures and mechanisms envisaged in Articles 2 and 33 of the Convention;
- establishing mechanisms for participation in the formulation of development plans;
- including the requirement of prior consultation in legislation regarding the exploration and exploitation of natural resources;
- engaging in systematic consultation on the legislative and administrative measures referred to in Article 6 of the Convention; and
- establishing effective consultation mechanisms that take into account the vision of governments and indigenous and tribal peoples concerning the procedures to be followed.<sup>14</sup>

The Committee notes the positive statement made by the Employer members concerning its general observation of 2008 on the Convention and referred to above. It also notes that the above understanding of the relevant provisions of Convention No. 169 has also been endorsed by a number of tripartite committees examining representations against governments for failure to comply with the provisions of the Convention.<sup>15</sup>

In the case of Ecuador, the tripartite committee, in its report approved by the Governing Body in 2001, referred to the preparatory work of the Convention and stated that it considered that the "concept of consulting the indigenous communities ... includes establishing a genuine dialogue between both parties characterized by communication and understanding, mutual respect, good faith and the sincere wish to reach a common accord".<sup>16</sup> It indicated that a simple information meeting cannot be considered as complying with the provisions of the Convention and that the consultation should occur beforehand, which implies that the communities affected should participate as early as possible in the process, including in the preparation of environmental impact studies. Taking into account the preparatory work, the tripartite committee in that case concluded that, while Article 6 did not require consensus to have been reached in the process of prior consultation, it does stipulate that the peoples involved should have the opportunity to participate freely at all levels in the formulation, implementation and evaluation of measures and programmes that affect them directly, as from the date on which the Convention comes into force in the country.<sup>17</sup>

In the representation filed against Colombia under the Convention, the tripartite committee, in its report approved by the Governing Body in 2001, considered that the concept of consultation under the Convention must encompass genuine dialogue between the parties, involving communication and understanding, mutual respect and good faith and the sincere desire to reach consensus. The tripartite committee concluded that a meeting conducted merely for information purposes or meetings or consultations conducted after the granting of an environmental licence did not meet the requirements of Articles 6 and 15(2) of the Convention.<sup>18</sup>

<sup>14</sup> See ILC, 98th Session, 2009, Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, Report III (Part 1A), pp. 672–673.

In the case of the representation filed against Argentina, the tripartite committee, in its report approved by the Governing Body in 2008, pointed out that Article 6 of the Convention does not stipulate that consent must be obtained in order for the consultation to be valid, but that it does require pursuit of the objective of achieving consent, which means setting in motion a process of dialogue and genuine exchange between the parties to be carried out in good faith.<sup>19</sup>

Finally, in the representation filed against Brazil, the tripartite committee, in its report approved by the Governing Body in 2009, gave an extensive explanation of the consultation process provided for under Article 6 of the Convention.<sup>20</sup> The tripartite committee in that case recalled that consultation and participation are the cornerstone of the Convention and that such mechanisms are not merely a formal requirement, but are intended to enable indigenous peoples to participate effectively in their own development.<sup>21</sup> It stated that consultation must take place in accordance with procedures that are appropriate to the circumstances, through indigenous peoples' representative institutions, in good faith and with the objective of achieving agreement or consent to the proposed measures. Concerning "appropriate procedures", the tripartite committee stated that there is no single model, which should take into account national circumstances, the circumstances of the indigenous peoples concerned and the nature of the measures which are the object of the consultation process.<sup>22</sup> The tripartite committee also made it clear that Article 6 must be understood within the broader context of consultation and participation, particularly within the framework of Article 2(1) and Article 33, which require the development, with the participation of the peoples concerned, of coordinated and systematic action to protect their rights and guarantee their integrity,<sup>23</sup> and to ensure that agencies or other appropriate mechanisms exist to administer the programmes affecting the peoples concerned.<sup>24</sup> The tripartite committee noted that "consultation, as envisaged in the Convention, extends beyond consultation on specific cases: it means that application of the provisions of the Convention must be systematic and coordinated, and undertaken with indigenous peoples ...".<sup>25</sup>

Taking into account all the elements indicated above, the Committee wishes thus to restate its understanding of the concept of consultation as concerns: the subject matter of consultation or participation; who should be responsible for such consultation; and the characteristics of consultation.

Concerning the subject matter, the Committee considers that consultation of indigenous and tribal peoples is specifically required in respect of the following: legislative or administrative matters which may affect them directly (Article 6(1)(a)); undertaking or permitting any programmes for the exploration or exploitation of mineral or sub-surface resources pertaining to their lands (Article 15(2)); whenever consideration is being given to their capacity to alienate their lands or otherwise transmit their rights outside their own community (Article 17(2)); and specific matters related to education (Articles 27(3) and 28(1)).

Free and informed consent of indigenous and tribal peoples is required where relocation of these peoples from lands which they occupy is considered necessary as an exceptional measure (Article 16(2)).

The participation of indigenous and tribal peoples is required in respect of the following: the development of coordinated and systematic action to protect the rights of indigenous and tribal peoples and to guarantee respect for their integrity (Article 2(1)); the adoption of policies aimed at mitigating the difficulties experienced by these peoples in facing new conditions of life and work (Article 5(c)); decision-making in elective institutions and administrative and other bodies responsible for policies and programmes which concern them (Article 6(1)(b)); the formulation, implementation and evaluation of plans and programmes for national and regional development which may affect them directly (Article 7(1)); the improvement of the conditions of life and work and levels of health and education (Article 7(2)); the use, management and conservation of the natural resources pertaining to their lands (Article 15(1)); and ensuring that traditional activities are strengthened and promoted (Article 23(1)).

With respect to the authority responsible for consultation, Articles 2 and 6 put that responsibility on governments. Governments are required under Article 6 to "consult the peoples concerned, through appropriate procedures ..." and to "establish means by which these peoples can freely participate ...".

Concerning the nature of consultation, from the review of the preparatory work concerning Convention No. 169 and from the review of the wording of the two authoritative texts of the Convention, the Committee concludes that it was the intention of the drafters of the Convention that the obligation to consult under the Convention was intended to mean that:

- (1) consultations must be formal, full and exercised in good faith;<sup>26</sup> there must be a genuine dialogue between governments and indigenous and tribal peoples characterized by communication and understanding, mutual respect, good faith and the sincere wish to reach a common accord;

- (2) appropriate procedural mechanisms have to be put in place at the national level and they have to be in a form appropriate to the circumstances;
- (3) consultations have to be undertaken through indigenous and tribal peoples' representative institutions as regards legislative and administrative measures;
- (4) consultations have to be undertaken with the objective of reaching agreement or consent to the proposed measures.

It is clear from the above that pro forma consultations or mere information would not meet the requirements of the Convention. At the same time, such consultations do not imply a right to veto,<sup>27</sup> nor is the result of such consultations necessarily the reaching of agreement or consent.<sup>28</sup>

The Committee hopes that the above clarifications will assist governments to effectively implement the Convention and the indigenous and tribal peoples to be able to enjoy the protection and benefits of the Convention. It also hopes that it will strengthen the dialogue between governments, employers' and workers' organizations concerning the objectives and content of the Convention, with the active participation of organizations and institutions of indigenous and tribal peoples as called for by the resolution adopted by the Conference in 1989.

The Committee considers that its understanding of the meaning of consultation has remained faithful to both the letter and the spirit of the relevant provisions of Convention No. 169, the preparatory work leading to its adoption and the findings of the tripartite committees that the Governing Body has established to examine representations filed against certain member States concerning non-compliance with Convention No. 169.

In its functions, the Committee makes recommendations to promote the effective implementation of the Convention. Concerning the issue as to whether the Committee can make recommendations regarding the suspension of activities pending consultation, the Committee wishes to state that it is clearly not a court of law and as a result cannot issue injunctions or provisional measures. It notes that, in the cases in which it made a recommendation that has been interpreted as such, it had been communicating with the countries concerned for a number of years requesting them to take the necessary measures to consult the indigenous and tribal peoples concerned in accordance with the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee therefore concludes that the Convention requires that there should first be real in-depth consultations with the representative institutions of indigenous and tribal peoples and that sufficient efforts should be made, in so far as possible, to reach joint solutions, since this is the cornerstone of dialogue. It is also an important tool in achieving the goals of sustainable development.

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the communication of 12 June 2009 by the Association of Health Professionals of Salta (APSADES) and the communication of 31 August 2009 by the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA). It also notes the communication of 27 August 2010 by the Association of Staff of Supervisory Bodies (APOC). The Committee also notes the comments of 31 August 2010 by the CTA. It also notes the comments of 29 October 2010 by the General Confederation of Labour (CGT). The Committee requests the Government to send its comments thereon and on the communication of 28 July 2008 by the Education Workers' Union of Rio Negro (UNTER) alleging non-observance of Articles 6, 7, 15(2) and 17(2) of the Convention.

Brazil

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes the communication from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 1 September 2010, which was sent to the Government on 8 September 2010 for their comments thereon.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the communication from the Union of Rural Workers of Alcántara (STTR) and the Union of Family Agriculture Workers of Alcántara (SINTRAF), of 20 October 2009, forwarded to the Government on 6 November 2009. The Committee will examine this communication at its next session together with the observations of the Government in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to respond to the communication of the STTR and SINTRAF.

The Committee recalls that on 27 August 2008 it received a communication from the STTR and SINTRAF on the application of the Convention in the country, which was sent to the Government on 5 September 2008. It also recalls that, on 1 September 2008, it received a communication from the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT) sent to the Government on

18 September 2008. This communication also attached comments made by the following indigenous organizations: the Coordinating Committee of the Indigenous Peoples of the North-East, Minas Gerais and Espírito Santo (APOINME), the Indigenous Council of Roraima (CIR), the Coordinating Committee of the Indigenous Organizations of Brazilian Amazonia (COIAB) and the Warã Brazilian Indian Institute. Furthermore, the Committee recalls that it received a communication, dated 19 September 2008, from the Workers' Union of the Federal University of Santa Catarina (SINTUFSC), forwarded to the Government on 4 November 2008.

Quilombola communities of Alcântara. The Committee notes that by means of a communication of 26 December 2008, the Government provided information with regard to the observations formulated by the STTR and SINTRAF. The Committee notes that the information submitted by the Government only refers to one of the issues raised by the STTR and SINTRAF, namely the situation of Quilombola communities in the face of the establishment and expansion of the Alcântara Launch Centre (CLA) and the Alcântara Space Centre (CEA) on territory traditionally occupied by Quilombola communities, without their being consulted and without their participation.

The Committee notes that, according to what emerges from the information submitted by the Government, the Technical Study on Identification and Demarcation was published. Following an administrative conciliation procedure between the governmental institutions concerned (Ministry of Science and Technology, Ministry of Agricultural Development, National Institute for Settlement and Agrarian Reform (INCRA), the Brazilian Spatial Agency and the Alcântara Space Centre), the Study established that 78,105,3466 hectares will be considered as territory of the Quilombola communities of Alcântara. The Committee understands that this entailed the reduction of the territory occupied by Quilombola communities and notes that the indications regarding the extent of such reduction differ. The Committee also notes that, according to article 11 of Decree No. 4887/2003, when the lands occupied by descendants of Quilombola communities overlap with, among others, national security areas, appropriate measures shall be taken to ensure the sustainability of these communities, conciliating, at the same time, States' interests. In this regard, the Committee notes that according to the Advisory Opinion/AGU/MC/N.1/2006 of the Attorney General, in the event of overlapping interests, conflicts shall be settled in the light of the principle of "reasonableness".

The Committee recalls that, as indicated in its previous observation, the communities in question appear to meet the requirements for being covered by the Convention and they identify themselves as tribal peoples within the meaning of Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Inasmuch as these communities meet the requirements set out in Article 1 of the Convention, the Articles of the Convention shall be applied when addressing the issue which is the object of the communication. The Committee recalls the special importance for the cultures and spiritual values of the peoples covered by the Convention of their relationship with the lands or territories which they occupy or otherwise use and the obligation of governments to respect that relationship. The Committee considers that the recognition and effective protection of the rights of these peoples to the lands that they traditionally occupy in accordance with Article 14 of the Convention is of vital importance for safeguarding the integrity of these peoples and, consequently, for respecting the other rights established in the Convention.

Likewise, the Committee emphasizes that governments have the obligation, under Article 6(1)(a) and (2) of the Convention, to consult the peoples covered by the Convention, through their representative institutions, whenever consideration is being given to legislative or administrative measures which may affect them directly, with the objective of achieving agreement or consent to the proposed measures. The Committee also draws the Government's attention to the fact that, pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Convention, governments shall ensure that studies are carried out, in cooperation with the peoples concerned, to assess the social, spiritual, cultural and environmental impact on them of planned development activities. The Committee cannot overemphasize that the results of these studies shall be considered as fundamental criteria for the implementation of these activities. The Committee notes that the information provided by the Government does not contain any reference to the participation of the affected communities in the procedure mentioned above. Neither does it contain references to their consultation. In light of the above, the Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on:

- (i) the way in which the participation and consultation of the Quilombola communities affected were ensured, through their representative institutions, with the objective of achieving agreement or consent about the solution of the case, including information on the participation of these communities in the elaboration of the Technical Study on Identification and Demarcation;
- (ii) the way in which due account was taken of the obligation to ensure the cultural, social and economic integrity of the Quilombola communities affected when reconciling the conflicting interest of the parties involved in the issue at hand;
- (iii) the measures adopted to carry out studies in cooperation with the peoples concerned, to assess the social, spiritual, cultural and environmental impact on them of the establishment and expansion of the CLA and the CEA, including with a view to ensuring the viability of the traditional activities of these communities;
- (iv) the progress made in identifying and demarcating the lands traditionally occupied by the Quilombola communities following the adoption of the Technical Study on Identification and Demarcation and the measures adopted to guarantee the rights of ownership and possession of these communities over their traditional lands and to safeguard their right to use lands not exclusively occupied by them but to which they have traditionally had access for their subsistence and traditional activities; and
- (v) the special measures adopted, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention, to safeguard the persons, institutions, property, labour, cultures and environment of the communities concerned for as long as the recognition and demarcation of their lands is pending.

Communication from the Workers' Union of the Federal University of Santa Catarina (SINTUFSC), dated 19 September 2008. The Committee asks the Government to reply to the communication from SINTUFSC so as to allow the Committee to examine it in detail at its next session.

Article 1(2). Undermining of the application of the criterion of self-identification. The CUT also states that the criterion of self-identification established in Article 1(2) of the Convention was incorporated in national law by means of Decree No. 4887/2003, which regulates the procedure for granting titles regarding lands occupied by the remaining Quilombola communities. Nevertheless, the Government is allegedly undermining self-identification by means of subsequent legislation (Decree No. 98/2007), thereby preventing issues regarding land titles from being settled since doing so depends on registration of communities. It is, according to the trade union, more and more difficult to obtain registration and thus secure the application of other rights, in particular with regard to land. The violation of the criterion of self-identification is also visible in the dispute between the Quilombola community of Isla de Marambai and the Navy. The communities identify themselves as indigenous and claim the protection afforded by the Convention. Although occurring less frequently, the indigenous identity of the Indians of the North-East is sometimes not recognized either, and this makes the recognition of their rights to the lands they have traditionally occupied more difficult. In the light of the information received, the Committee considers that the Quilombola communities appear to meet the requirements laid down by Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, according to which the Convention applies to “tribal peoples in independent countries whose social, cultural and economic conditions distinguish them from other sections of the national community, and whose status is regulated wholly or partially by their own customs or traditions or by special laws or regulations”. Article 1(2) states that “self-identification as indigenous or tribal shall be regarded as a fundamental criterion for determining the groups for which the provisions of this Convention apply”. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of the Convention to the Quilombola communities, and should the Government consider that these communities do not constitute tribal peoples within the meaning of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to state the reasons for its viewpoint.

Communication from the CUT. Articles 2, 6, 7 and 33. Consultation and participation. The communication indicates that although there has been an increase in social dialogue, the effectiveness of such forums is questioned by the indigenous peoples because of their defining features (places which are difficult to access, convocations issued with little notice or superficial discussions) and the impression exists that the sole purpose of such consultations with the peoples, when they are actually held, is to rubber-stamp public policies. The Committee reminds the Government, as it has done repeatedly, that consultation and participation must not just be formal and devoid of content but must constitute a genuine dialogue, by means of appropriate mechanisms, so that they can result in projects including those in which the peoples covered by the Convention may participate in their own development. The Committee requests the Government to examine the existing mechanisms for consultation and participation, in cooperation with the indigenous organizations, so as to ensure that they are in conformity with the Convention, and to supply information in this respect.

Article 6. Consultation and legislation. The communication indicates that no consultation takes place with regard to the legislative and administrative measures referred to in Article 6 of the Convention. Examples of this are Decree No. 98/2007 concerning the Palmares Cultural Foundation referred to above, the draft Act concerning mining on indigenous lands (PL No. 1610/1996) and draft Decree No. 44/2007, which suspends the application of Decree No. 4887/2003 regulating the procedure for granting titles regarding Quilombola lands. The Committee notes that governments have the obligation to consult the peoples covered by the Convention whenever consideration is given to legislative or administrative measures which may affect them directly, and requests the Government to supply information in this respect.

Article 14. Lands. The CUT points out that the Constitution guarantees for Indians and Quilombola communities the right to the lands which they occupy but, although there are 343 indigenous territories and 87 Quilombola territories which are registered, land titles have still not been regularized for most of the lands; 283 indigenous lands and 590 Quilombola lands are the subject of administrative proceedings and 224 indigenous lands have not even reached this stage. The number of indigenous persons who have been killed has increased, particularly in Mato Grosso do Sul, as a result of unresolved land disputes. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the application of Article 14 of the Convention with regard to the Quilombola communities.

Articles 6, 7 and 15. Participation, consultation and natural resources. Detailed reference is made to five projects in which the CUT alleges there has been no participation or consultation: (1) the Belo Monte hydroelectric project; (2) diversion of the River San Francisco; (3) draft Act No. 2540/2006, which proposes authorization for a hydroelectric project at the Tamanduá Falls on the River Cotingo in the Raposa Serra do Sol indigenous territory; (4) the Guaraní-K'itwoá indigenous territory, where 12,000 indigenous persons live confined to reserves such as Dourados, living in abject poverty, with projects and policies implemented without any consultation or participation; (5) mining in the Cinta Larga indigenous territory, which will be severely affected by the draft law on mining, regarding which there has been no consultation with the peoples concerned. The Committee expresses its concern regarding the allegations and reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 7, it must ensure that studies are carried out, in cooperation with the peoples concerned, to assess the social, spiritual, cultural and environmental impact on them of planned development activities. The results of these studies shall be considered as fundamental criteria for the implementation of these activities. The Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information regarding the cases referred to above.

The Committee hopes that the Government will supply detailed information in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to send its comments on these communications, together with its reply to the present comments. Noting that the Government's report does not provide a reply to the questions posed by the Committee in its 2005 direct request, it requests the Government to also include a reply to the 2005 comments.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) (ratification: 2008)

The Committee notes the detailed first report and the comprehensive appendices supplied by the Government, which show the special attention the Government pays to the application of the Convention. It also notes the comments of the National Confederation of Artisanal Fishers of Chile (CONAPACH), and the Single Central Organization (CUT) on behalf of the Coordination of Mapuche Organizations and Communities, Araucanía Region and the Mapuche Pelón Xaru Peoples' Cultural Centre, both dated 30 August 2010, and the CUT's comments of 1 October 2010. The Committee also notes the comments submitted by the National Confederation of Unions of Bakery Workers (CONAPAN) on 3 November 2010. The Committee will examine these communications at its next session, together with any observations the Government may wish to make thereon. The Committee requests the Government to respond to the comments of CONAPACH, the CUT and CONAPAN.

Colombia

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the comments sent by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on 31 August 2009 and those of the Union of Workers of the National Mining Enterprise "Minercol Ltda." (SINTRAMINERCOL) received on 28 August 2010. The Committee also notes the comments of the General Confederation of Workers (CGT) of 3 June 2010 and the comments of the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT) and the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC) of 30 August 2010, which refer to pending issues. It also notes the communication by the National Employers Association of Colombia (ANDI), received on 2 September 2010. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Peru

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes the discussion which took place in the Conference Committee in June 2010 and its conclusions. The Committee also notes the comments dated 27 July 2010 from the General Confederation of Workers of Peru (CGTP) prepared with the cooperation of the Inter-Ethnic Association for the Development of the Peruvian Rainforest (AIDSESEP), the National Confederation of Communities of Peru affected by Mining (CONACAMI), the National Agrarian Confederation (CNA), the Farmers' Confederation of Peru (CCP), the Peace and Hope Association, the Amazonian Centre of Anthropology and Practical Application (CAAP), CARE Peru, Law, Environment and Natural Resources (DAR), the Institute of Public Welfare (IBC) and the Indigenous Information Service (SERVINDI), which refer to outstanding issues, particularly the failure to promulgate the Act concerning the right of indigenous and original peoples to prior consultation and the existence of a bill which allows the displacement of people in large-scale projects, and the existence of numerous decrees aimed at dividing up and reducing communal territories. The Committee also notes the comments from the Single Confederation of Workers of Peru (CUT) of 25 August 2010 concerning the lack of recognition of indigenous peoples in the country, disregard for the right of consultation of indigenous peoples, problems regarding the definition of lands traditionally occupied by indigenous peoples, and the lack of adequate institutions in the country to deal with the issues of indigenous peoples since the National Institute of Andean, Amazonian and Afro-Peruvian Peoples (INDEPA) is not fulfilling its mandate and there is no indigenous participation in its executive council. According to the CUT, as a result the Government has been obliged to set up round tables for dialogue to settle disputes with the Amazonian indigenous peoples. The Committee notes that the Government sent its observations on the comments from the CGTP in a communication dated 7 October 2010. The Committee points out that some of the issues raised by the trade union organizations are the subject of a representation under article 24 of the Constitution and will therefore be examined in that context.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Conference Committee. The Conference Committee in 2009 raised a range of issues, including the incidents in Bagua, resulting in numerous deaths and injuries among indigenous peoples and the police. The Conference Committee in 2010 urged the Government to provide information on the promulgation and application of the Act concerning the right of indigenous or original peoples to prior consultation adopted on 19 May 2010 by the Congress and the related transitional measures in order to evaluate compliance with the provisions of the Convention. The Conference Committee also considered it necessary to reform INDEPA with the full participation of the representative organizations of the indigenous peoples in order to ensure its legitimacy and authentic capacity for action and to guarantee the application of the Act concerning consultation. The Conference Committee also requested information on the application of the development plan for the Amazonian region. It also considered that progress needed to be made in relation to the formulation and application of plans of action to deal systematically with pending issues relating to the protection of the rights of peoples covered by the Convention, and it emphasized the need to ensure that these plans of action are formulated and implemented with the participation of the representative organizations of the indigenous peoples, in accordance with Articles 2 and 6 of the Convention. Finally, the Conference Committee asked the Government to send information on the impact on the training of bilingual teachers of Ministerial Decision No. 0017-2007-ED establishing admission criteria for candidates as teachers. It encouraged the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance to ensure that adequate progress is made in the application of the Convention.

Investigation of incidents in Bagua. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to conduct an effective and impartial investigation into the incidents of June 2009 in Bagua, in which 23 police officers and ten civilians died, and provide detailed information in this regard. The Committee notes the Government's statement that, in the context of the National Coordinating Group for the Development of the Amazonian Peoples (Dialogue Group), Round Table No. 1 was established composed of three representatives of the Executive Authority, three representatives of the indigenous peoples and one representative of the regional governments. The round table drew up one report by the majority and one report by the minority of its members, and these, according to the Government, were approved by the Presidency of the Council of Ministers and referred to the corresponding departments of the Executive Authority, Office of the Public Prosecutor and Judicial Authority. The Committee also notes that the Congress set up the “Multi-Party Commission of Inquiry into the events in the city of Bagua and surrounding area”, which also drew up reports which were submitted to the plenary of Congress, and that the Office of the Provincial Prosecutor of Utcubamba instituted various judicial proceedings for the criminal offences of murder, violence, resistance towards the authorities and the carrying of firearms. The Committee notes the indication of the CGTP that the majority report drawn up by Round Table No. 1 does not shed light on the events that took place or assign responsibilities for what happened and was not accepted by the indigenous peoples. The CGTP also emphasizes that the report of Congress concluded that the events were caused by violations of the fundamental rights of the indigenous peoples. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken as a consequence of the various reports drawn up in the context of Round Table No. 1 of the National Coordinating Group for the Development of the Amazonian Peoples, the conclusions reached by the plenary of the Congress in relation to the reports drawn up by the Multi-Party Commission of Inquiry, and also on the outcome of the judicial proceedings in progress regarding the events that took place in Bagua.

Article 6. Consultation. The Committee recalls that the Conference Committee welcomed the adoption by the Congress of the Republic of the Act concerning prior consultation and indicated that it trusted that the Act would be promulgated in the very near future by the President of the Republic. The Committee also recalls that the Act had been the result of negotiations between the Executive Authority and the Amazonian organizations in the context of Round Table No. 3, whose objective was to reach a consensus on legislation concerning consultations. In this respect, the Committee notes with regret the statement from the Government to the effect that since the adoption by Parliament of the Act concerning the right of indigenous or original peoples to prior consultation, the Act was not promulgated by the Executive Authority, which made certain observations relating to it (Official Letter No. 142-2010-DP/SCM). The Government adds that the Act was referred back to Parliament for revision, that the Commission for the Constitution and Regulations and the Commission for Andean, Amazonian and Afro-Peruvian Peoples, Ecology and the Environment have already issued opinions in this respect, which will be examined by the plenary of Congress in the near future. The Committee notes that, in its observations on the Act approved by Congress, the Executive Authority: (1) remarked that it should be made clear in the Act that indigenous peoples do not have any right of veto in the consultation process concerning projects for the exploration and exploitation of natural resources which have been duly notified and analysed together with the indigenous peoples in the areas covered by the said projects (observation No. 1); (2) considered that the possibility established in section 9 of the Act that indigenous peoples may challenge the decisions of the Executive Authority with respect to the participation of certain indigenous peoples vis-à-vis the Judicial Authority was “reiterative inasmuch as any person or institution may now file appeals to assert guarantees, applications for decisions to be set aside or for compensation with the Judicial Authority” (observation No. 5); (3) considered that “the Act must clearly state the difference between territories under public ownership in Amazonia and areas assigned to the ownership of native communities . . . . It is in the context of the latter that the right to consultation must be exercised” (observation No. 6).

In this context the Committee refers to its general observation of this year, on the “obligation to consult” under the Convention which is intended to mean that: (1) consultations must be formal, full and exercised in good faith; there must be a genuine dialogue between governments and indigenous and tribal peoples characterized by communication and understanding, mutual respect, good faith and the sincere wish to reach a common accord; (2) appropriate procedural mechanisms have to be put in place at the national level and it has to be in a form appropriate to the circumstances; (3) consultations have to be undertaken through indigenous and tribal peoples’ representative institutions as regards legislative and administrative measures; (4) consultations have to be undertaken with the objective of reaching agreement or consent to the proposed measures. The Committee therefore emphasizes that the right of indigenous peoples to consultation cannot be limited exclusively to measures affecting indigenous lands in respect of which ownership title has already been granted, as observation No. 6 of the Executive Authority appears to suggest, but must also encompass administrative or legislative measures which may affect them directly, including those concerning indigenous lands or territories traditionally occupied or used regardless of whether or not ownership title has been granted with respect to them. They must also be able, pursuant to Article 12 of the Convention, to take legal proceedings, either individually or collectively, for the effective protection of their rights, including their right to consultation. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Act on the right of indigenous or original peoples to prior consultation will be approved in the near future by Congress, that the Act will be the result of an ongoing process of consultation with the representative institutions of the indigenous peoples, including regarding the observations of the Executive Authority and that the Act will be in full conformity with the provisions of the Convention. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to ensure full observance of the right of indigenous and tribal peoples to participate and be consulted prior to the adoption of legislative or administrative measures which may affect them directly. The Committee also requests the Government to guarantee that there are specific provisions in the Act so that indigenous peoples can take legal proceedings, either individually or through their representative bodies, in the event that they consider that their right to be consulted on measures affecting them directly has not been observed. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

The Committee also notes the explanatory decision of the Constitutional Court dated 24 August 2010 (in relation to file No. 06316-2008-PA/TC), which provides that it is necessary to establish that the mandatory nature of the right to consultation shall be considered binding as from the publication of Constitutional Court Ruling No. 022-2009-PI/TC, in light of the considerations set out therein. The Committee emphasizes that Ruling No. 022-2009-PI/TC is dated 9 June 2010, and therefore that the right to consultation was not considered binding before that date. In this respect, the Committee recalls that, in conformity with Article 38 of the Convention, the Convention shall come into force for any Member of the ILO 12 months after the date on which its ratification has been registered. Taking account of the fact that Peru ratified the Convention on 2 February 1994, the Committee reminds the Government that all the provisions of the Convention, including those relating to the obligation of consultation, have been binding on it since 2 February 1995. Pursuant to Article 38 of the Convention and in the light of Article 12 of the Convention concerning the legal protection of the rights recognized in the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to indicate how it ensures that indigenous peoples have been able to enjoy effective judicial protection of the right to consultation from the date of entry into force of the Convention.

Articles 2 and 33. Coordinated and systematic plan of action. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to ensure full and effective participation and consultation of the indigenous peoples through their representative institutions in preparation of the plan of action drawn up to address, in a coordinated and systematic manner, outstanding problems relating to the protection of the rights of the peoples covered by the provisions of the Convention and to align national law and practice with the Convention. The Committee also asked the Government to supply information on this matter and on the work of the various bodies concerned, indicating how the participation of the peoples concerned and the coordination of the activities of these bodies are ensured, as well as coordination between the work of these bodies and the preparation of the plan of action. The Committee notes the indication from the CGTP that there is still no agreed plan of action or any dialogue or consultation on its implementation and that the various state bodies are continuing their sectoral policies without any real participation from the indigenous peoples. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, in the context of the National Coordinating Group for the Development of the Amazonian Peoples, Round Table No. 4 (National Development Plan for Amazonia) was established, in which 82 working meetings were held and a National Development Plan for the Amazonian Peoples was drawn up, based on consensus between representatives of the national Government, regional governments and the two most representative indigenous organizations (the Inter-Ethnic Association for the Development of the Peruvian Rainforest (AIDSEP) and the Confederation of Indigenous Nationalities of Peru (CONAP)). This Plan provides for measures (some of which were requested by the Committee) in the following areas: right of ownership and legal certainty, bilingual intercultural education, inter-cultural health system, participation of indigenous peoples in the use of natural resources, development policies and production projects. The Committee reiterates its concern that the proliferation of bodies with mandates that sometimes overlap may hamper the development of a coordinated and systematic response to the problems of protecting and ensuring the rights of indigenous peoples and recalls that Articles 2 and 33 of the Convention provide for coordinated and systematic action with the participation of the indigenous peoples from the planning through to the evaluation of the measures provided for in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to:

- (i) state whether the National Development Plan for the Amazonian Peoples is being implemented and the results achieved;
- (ii) clarify whether any other plan has been drawn up in consultation with the indigenous peoples at national or regional level intended for indigenous peoples in general or specifically covering the Andean communities;
- (iii) send additional information on the functions performed by the various entities mentioned by the Government and whether they are still active and on the manner in which coordination is ensured between them.

National Institute of Andean, Amazonian and Afro-Peruvian Peoples (INDEPA). The Committee emphasizes that the Conference Committee noted the Government's indication that the Act concerning the right of indigenous and original peoples prior consultation assigns a central role to INDEPA and considered that INDEPA needed to be reformed with the full participation of the representative organizations of the indigenous peoples in order to ensure its legitimacy and its genuine capacity for action. The Committee notes that the CGTP indicates once again that there have been no consultations with indigenous peoples regarding the institutional reform of INDEPA. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in compliance with the conclusions of the round tables established in the context of the National Coordinating Group, in which the representatives of the organizations of the indigenous peoples participated, INDEPA was transferred to the Presidency of the Council of Ministers and was declared a specialized technical public entity (Supreme Decree No. 022-2010-PCM and Supreme Decree No. 048-2010-PCM). The Government also indicates that the establishment is envisaged of an executive council composed of representatives of the Andean, Amazonian and Afro-Peruvian peoples. The Government indicates that INDEPA has four national coordination centres, with indigenous representatives, which have been set up recently. This enables coordination between the Andean, Amazonian and Afro-Peruvian peoples and the regional and local governments, and makes it possible to prevent disputes, promote participation and create an ongoing participation machinery. The Committee observes that the Council of Ministers is currently revising the regulations governing the operating structures of INDEPA and that, since the adoption of Act No. 29565 of 22 July 2010, is now no longer attached to the Presidency of the Council of Ministers but to the Under-Ministry of Inter-Cultural Affairs, which is under the responsibility of the Ministry of Culture. The Committee observes that for years the INDEPA has been affected by considerable institutional instability, that it has changed hierarchical structure on various occasions, and that it has been under the responsibility of different ministries and authorities at different times. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the effective participation of the representative institutions of the indigenous peoples in the institutional reform of INDEPA, in the constitution of its executive council and in the revision of the regulations governing its functions, in order to ensure its legitimacy and its genuine capacity for action. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this matter and also on the impact of the recent establishment of the four INDEPA centres on the dialogue between the regional and local governments and the indigenous peoples concerned, on the participation of the latter in INDEPA's activities and on the prevention of disputes.

Follow-up to the Committee's comments. Article 1. Peoples covered by the Convention. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it noted a framework Bill concerning the indigenous or original peoples of Peru, which lays down a definition of indigenous or original peoples with a view to removing ambiguities from the national legislation regarding identification of the peoples covered. The Committee asked the Government to align, in consultation with the indigenous peoples, the definition in the framework Bill with the Convention. The Committee also asked the Government to supply information on the manner in which effective consultation and participation was ensured with indigenous peoples in the preparation of the Bill and also on the measures taken to ensure that all the peoples covered by Article 1 of the Convention are covered by all the provisions of the Convention and enjoy the rights set forth therein on an equal footing. The Committee notes the comments from the CUT that there is no political will to consult the indigenous peoples with a view to establishing unified criteria for their identification. The Committee also notes that the CGTP refers to the exclusion of the communities of the Andean and coastal zone from the protection of the Act concerning the right to prior consultation.

In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that a participatory consultation process was conducted in the context of the National Coordinating Group with representatives of the indigenous peoples with a view to aligning national legislation in relation to the definition of indigenous peoples (Round Table No. 3). The opinions presented were analysed in the Commission for Andean, Amazonian and Afro-Peruvian Peoples, Ecology and the Environment, which prepared a preliminary opinion on the Bill concerning the right to prior consultation. The Committee notes that sections 5–7 of the Bill refer to the persons covered by the Bill and that section 7 in particular refers to the criteria for identification, namely: direct descent from original peoples; lifestyles and spiritual and historic links with the territory that they occupy; own social institutions and customs; different cultural patterns and ways of life from those of other sections of the population. The Committee notes that the Government in its comments on the Bill concerning the right to prior consultation, set out in Official Letter No. 142-2010-DP/SCM opposes the inclusion of the Andean and coastal-rural communities in the definition of indigenous peoples (observation No. 6). The Committee recalls that in previous comments it noted the Government's indication that section 2 of Act No. 28945 concerning the National Institute of Andean, Amazonian and Afro-Peruvian Peoples refers to the Andean, Amazonian and Afro-Peruvian peoples and that rural communities and native communities are included in the recognition of their ethnic and cultural rights as communities similar to indigenous peoples, with emphasis on the social, political and cultural aspects, which coincides with the provisions of articles 89 and 149 of the Constitution of the Republic. The Committee recalls that it emphasized the need for indigenous communities to be covered by the Convention regardless of their designation. The Committee also notes that Article 1 of the Convention refers to "descent" and is concerned that the reference to "direct descent" in the draft Act may be too restrictive. Recalling the need to ensure that the criteria for identification of the indigenous peoples are unified, in consultation with the indigenous peoples themselves, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that the Bill on the right of indigenous and original peoples to prior consultation ensures that these peoples fully enjoy the protection established in the Convention, regardless of their designation, and to provide information on any developments in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the progress made in Parliament in the adoption of the draft framework Bill concerning the indigenous or original peoples of Peru.

Article 7. Participation. In its previous observation, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary steps to bring national law and practice into conformity with Articles 2, 6, 7 and 15 of the Convention, taking into account the right of peoples covered by the Convention to decide on their own priorities and participate in national and regional development plans and programmes. The Committee notes the statement by the CGTP that no standards or institutions have been established to enable implementation of the right of indigenous peoples to decide on their own priorities for development, nor have any forums for dialogue in this area been opened. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the most significant measure is the dialogue conducted in the context of the National Coordinating Group, which had the full participation of the Amazonian communities. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the measures taken as a result of the dialogue conducted in the context of the National Coordinating Group for the Development of the Amazonian Peoples, and on their implementation and impact, and also on any other plan or programme adopted for the benefit of other indigenous communities or peoples. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted with a view to aligning national law and practice with the Convention in order to guarantee the right of indigenous peoples to decide on their own priorities and participate in national and regional development plans and programmes.

National development plans, programmes and projects. The Committee notes that the Executive Authority, in its observations on the Bill concerning the right to prior consultation (Official Letter No. 142-2010-DP/SCM), objects to the fact that section 2 provides that consultations should also be held with respect to national and regional development plans, programmes and projects which directly affect the collective rights of the indigenous peoples and maintains that the Convention does not establish the obligation of consultation with respect to national and regional development plans, programmes and projects, which would extend the scope of the Convention in an unnecessary and inappropriate way, and this could paralyse the execution of important infrastructure works for the country. Observing that Article 7 establishes that the peoples concerned shall participate in the formulation, implementation and evaluation of plans and programmes for national and regional development which may affect them directly, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which the participation provided for in the Convention is ensured.

Impact studies and environmental protection. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the measures taken, in cooperation with the indigenous peoples, to protect and preserve the environment of the territories which they inhabit, in accordance with Article 7(4) of the Convention, including information on coordination between the Energy and Mining Investment Supervisory Body (OSINERGMIN) of the Ministry of Energy and Mines and the Environmental Evaluation and Control Agency (OEFA) of the Ministry of the Environment. The Government indicates that the Ministry of Energy and Mines takes care of the promotion of investments while the supervision of mining and energy projects comes under the responsibility of the Ministry of the Environment, for which reason this function was then transferred to the OEFA.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication that: (1) the Regulations concerning public consultation and participation regarding activities related to oil, gas and electricity (Supreme Decree No. 012-2008-EM and Ministerial Decision No. 223-2010-MEM/DM) provide for public consultation and participation with regard to the preparation of environmental studies and also provide for citizen's monitoring and supervision mechanisms subsequent to the approval of such studies in order to involve the indigenous peoples and the population in environmental protection; (2) the special regime for the administration of communal reserves approved by Administrative Decision No. 019-2005-INRENA-IANP provides for a mechanism of coordination with the indigenous peoples for the safeguarding of protected natural areas; (3) tripartite dialogue has been conducted in relation to oil and gas activities in the Peruvian rainforest aimed at protecting the environment of the Department of Madre de Dios; (4) the development of a national forest conservation programme has been approved, in the context of which 67 consultation sessions have been held with the Ashaninka native communities in the central rainforest; and (5) the project on mitigation and adaptation to climate change for the protection of areas of the central rainforest has been approved, with funding provided for a programme of sustainable economic activities with the indigenous peoples of the area. The Committee also notes that Supreme Decree No. 002-2009-MINAM approves the Regulations on transparency, access to public information on the environment and public participation and consultation in environmental matters, which provide for a mechanism for the participation of citizens in the determination and application of policies relating to the environment, in the process of public decision-making on environmental matters, and on their execution and supervision, and that dialogue with civil society shall be sought in decisions and actions relating to environmental management (section 21). The consultation mechanisms may also assume various forms: participatory workshops, public hearings, opinion surveys, suggestion boxes, environmental, regional and local commissions, technical groups and management committees, and these must be held in Spanish and in the predominant language of the place concerned (section 29). The draft environmental study must also be drawn up in Spanish or in the language of the location concerned, be easy to understand and mention the types of impact which have been identified and the impact mitigation or compensation measures which have been established (section 34). The Committee welcomes this information in view of the fact that the Convention requires the establishment of genuine dialogue between the parties concerned to enable concerted solutions to be sought and, if these requirements are fulfilled, consultations may play a decisive role in the prevention and settlement of disputes. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on all the measures taken, in cooperation with the indigenous peoples, to protect and preserve the environment of the territories which they inhabit. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the specific application in practice with regard to the indigenous peoples of Supreme Decree No. 002-2009-MINAM concerning citizen's participation and consultation in environmental matters and of the sectoral legislation concerning citizen's participation, and to indicate whether environmental impact studies also evaluate the social, spiritual and cultural impact of development activities on the indigenous peoples, as provided for in Article 7(3) of the Convention.

Article 14. The Committee recalls that, in its previous comments, it referred to Legislative Decree No. 994 of 2008 which establishes a special regime for promoting private investment in irrigation projects on unclaimed land (tierras eriazas) with agricultural potential belonging to the State, section 3 of which establishes as state property all unclaimed land with agricultural potential other than such lands for which a title for private or communal ownership is entered in the public records. It also noted that Decree No. 994 of 2008 does not protect the rights of indigenous peoples over traditional lands where there is no official title of ownership. The Committee asked the Government to provide information on the measures taken to determine the lands that the peoples concerned traditionally occupy and to guarantee effective protection of their rights of ownership and possession, including through effective access to appropriate procedures for settling their land claims. The Committee notes that the CGTP and CUT refer to this matter, making reference to Legislative Decree No. 1089 respecting rural occupancy and ownership. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the various projects concerning the ownership and registration of lands implemented between 2002 and 2006 benefited 550 farming communities and 55 native communities in the Amazon rainforest, with ownership title having been granted to 84 per cent of all farming communities and 87.42 per cent of native communities by the end of 2009. The Government adds that between 1975 and 2009 a total of 1,447 native communities were recognized, of which 1,265 were granted ownership title to their lands, and that the procedures for demarcating and granting ownership in respect of territory are governed by the Act on native communities and agrarian development of the rainforest regions (Legislative Decree No. 22175) and its implementing regulations (Supreme Decree No. 003-79-AA). In addition, Act No. 24657 on demarcating and granting ownership of the lands of farming communities provides for the formalization of the right of ownership of native communities with respect to the territories that they occupy. The Government also indicates that Legislative Decree No. 1089 and its regulations (Supreme Decree No. 032-2008-VIVIENDA) establishes an extraordinary temporary regime to formalize and grant ownership title with respect to rural properties. It also explicitly provides that the mechanism is not applicable in areas located within the territory of farming and native communities. The Committee further notes that the Constitutional Court confirmed that Legislative Decree No. 1089 and its implementing regulations are not applicable to the territories of indigenous peoples, regardless of whether or not they have been officially recognized, as laid down by sections 3(1) and 15 of the regulations (case No. 0022-2009-PI/TC, ruling of 9 June 2010). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to guarantee the protection of the rights of indigenous peoples to the lands that they traditionally occupy. Noting that Legislative Decree No. 1089 is not applicable to the territories that indigenous peoples traditionally occupy, the Committee requests the Government to supply information on the manner in which the full application of Article 14 of the Convention is ensured, in particular the processes for granting ownership with respect to, and for registration of, lands which are in progress, the areas in respect of which ownership title has been granted, the communities which have benefited, and also to indicate the legislation applicable to these processes. The Committee asks the Government to ensure that section 12 of Legislative Decree No. 994 of 2008, which provides for the possibility of eviction from unclaimed lands in case of invasion or usurpation, does not apply to indigenous peoples who traditionally occupy lands even if they do not have any formal title of ownership.

Article 15. Consultations in relation to natural resources. The Committee notes the existence of preliminary draft regulations for the consultation of indigenous peoples with respect to energy and mining activities drawn up by the Ministry of Energy and Mines, pursuant to the ruling of the Constitutional Court of 30 June 2010 ordering the Ministry to issue, in areas within its competence, special regulations establishing the right of indigenous peoples to consultation, in conformity with the principles and rules established by the Convention (TC No. 05427-2009-PC/TC). The Committee also notes a Bill amending the legislative framework relating to the electricity sector and authorizing the drawing up of a single consolidated text of the regulations governing activities in the electricity sector was transmitted by the Executive Authority to Congress (No. 4335/2010-PE) and the draft Act on forestry which is pending before Congress, in respect of which the Office of the People's Ombudsman requested consultations to be held. The Committee requests the Government to supply additional information on these Bills and draft regulations and on the progress of their adoption by Parliament, and to indicate the measures taken with a view to submitting them to a process of consultation with the representative organizations of the indigenous peoples.

With regard to the Committee's previous comments concerning the exploration and exploitation of natural resources affecting the peoples covered by the Convention and the need to ensure the participation and consultation of the peoples affected through their representative institutions in a climate of full respect and trust, the Committee notes that the Government emphasizes the importance of mining for the development of the local economies and the improvement of the living conditions of the inhabitants of the districts in which mining is present. The Government also indicates that it promotes corporate social responsibility, and adds that no mining concessions are granted in the natural areas protected from indirect use and in declared indigenous reserves. The Government points out that mining concessions only grant the right of exploration or exploitation in a preferential manner and the start of activities is subject to environmental authorization and negotiation with the surface owner concerned. The Government adds that once the holder of the concession decides to undertake exploration or exploitation activities, the citizen's consultation and participation procedure provided for in the regulations on citizen's participation (Supreme Decree No. 028-2008-EM) must be launched. While noting this information, the Committee observes that the Government does not supply any information on the cases of exploration and exploitation of natural resources affecting indigenous peoples (the Cacataibo people, who live in voluntary isolation, the Awajun and Wampis peoples, and the communities of Chumbivilcas province), to which it referred in its previous comments and which were also cited by the CGTP. The Committee notes that the CGTP refers in its latest comments to the mining exploitation activities taking place in the caserio of San Antonio de Juprog (Quechua-speaking community), in the district of San Marcos in Huaria province, and which, according to various studies which have been conducted, are causing contamination and damaging the health of the inhabitants (contamination through lead, cadmium, zinc and arsenic). According to the CGTP's comments, there are also plans to displace this community, but none of the measures adopted so far has been the subject of consultations with the indigenous peoples concerned. The CGTP also refers to the concessions granted for oil and gas exploitation in the territory of the Matses people without any prior consultation. The Committee underlines the importance of the duty of the State to undertake prior consultations on any measures that may directly affect the indigenous peoples. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to conduct consultations with the indigenous peoples referred to above concerning the exploration and exploitation of natural resources in the territories that they occupy or otherwise use (Article 13 of the Convention), before undertaking or authorizing any activity, and to determine whether the interests of those peoples have been harmed and to what extent, with a view to adopting the appropriate impact reduction and compensation measures. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary steps to have complaints investigated relating to the contamination of territories occupied by the indigenous peoples and, should the existence of such contamination be proven, to take all the necessary steps to protect the life and safety of the members of these communities.

Participation in benefits. As regards the measures taken to ensure that the peoples concerned participate in the benefits accruing from the exploitation of natural resources on their lands and that they receive fair compensation for any damage suffered as a result of these activities, the Committee notes the Government's indication that Emergency Decree No. 028-2006 provides that regional and local governments must invest 5 per cent of funds assigned by way of levies to the funding of public investment and social expenditure projects in the communities located within the areas of exploitation. The Committee also notes that Emergency Decree No. 026-2010 increased the planned allocation of funds (10 per cent for regional governments and 5 per cent for local governments). The Committee notes that the Decree provides for the participation of representatives of farming and native communities in the control of decisions for the allocation of these funds. The Government also refers to private initiatives ensuring the participation of indigenous peoples in the benefits and compensation provided for in sectoral legislation. The Government indicates that in the 2007–09 period transfers to the regions under the mining levy amounted to PEN13,300 million (nuevos soles) and the transfers under the standard and extra levies relating to oil and gas amounted to PEN3.9 million. Recalling that Article 15 of the Convention states that the indigenous peoples shall wherever possible participate in the benefits of activities which exploit the resources existing on their lands, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that the planned levies enable such participation in practice and to provide information on the measures taken in this respect and on their real impact on the lives of the indigenous peoples, their development and the areas which they inhabit.

Articles 26 to 29. Education. With regard to the Conference Committee's request to supply information on the impact on the training of bilingual teachers of Ministerial Decision No. 0017-2007-ED, which establishes the requirement of achieving a minimum mark of 14 out of 20 points to be able to take up training as a bilingual teacher, which might result in indigenous candidates being excluded from the education process, the Committee notes the information supplied by the Government on the legal provisions which regulate education and indicates that the Directorate of Higher Education for Teaching (DESP) governs institutes and schools of higher education for teacher training so that they can make provision for professional teaching careers in bilingual education. The Directorate approves plans for teacher training proposed by the institutions themselves so that they can meet the training needs of their own communities. It also regulates training and approval of proposed curriculum context for higher education geared to teacher training. Five institutes in the Andean region offer training for teachers in primary education. As regards the conditions for entry to teacher training courses, the Government states that, according to the statistics, there was an increase in participation and that students who did not achieve the minimum mark of 14 but scored between 11 and 13.99 points can enrol in the academic foundation course. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the measures taken and their impact on the numbers of indigenous bilingual teachers who have been trained.

Finally, noting the suggestion of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee of Experts reminds the Government that it may avail itself of technical assistance from the ILO.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Tunisia

Indigenous and Tribal Populations Convention, 1957 (No. 107) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received, despite the fact that the Committee had requested the Government to reply in detail to its comments. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's brief report which indicates that issues related to indigenous and tribal populations do not arise in Tunisia. In addition, the Government indicates that under article 6 of the Constitution all Tunisians have equal rights and duties and are equal before the law.

While noting these indications, the Committee also notes that the 2003 Report of the Working Group of Experts on Indigenous Populations/Communities of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights has addressed the situation of the Berbers (Amazigh) of North Africa which identify themselves as indigenous peoples. The Working Group refers to estimates according to which 5 per cent of the population of Tunisia are believed to be Amazigh.

The Committee recalls that the Convention has been revised by the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169), which is oriented towards respect for and protection of indigenous and tribal peoples' cultures, ways of life and traditional institutions. As indicated in its 1992 general observation, the Committee therefore encourages the Government to consider ratifying Convention No. 169.

The Committee notes that pending such consideration, the Government remains under the obligation to give effect to the provisions of Convention No. 107 which remain relevant, including Articles 5, 7 and 11, or any other provisions which may be applied while respecting generally accepted human rights principles pertaining to indigenous and tribal peoples. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of the relevant provisions of the Convention, including information on the measures taken to seek the collaboration of any populations which fall under the scope of the Convention as envisaged in Article 5(a).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 169 (Chile, Denmark, Fiji, Nepal, Peru, Spain).

Specific categories of workers

France

Nursing Personnel Convention, 1977 (No. 149) (ratification: 1984)

Article 5(1) of the Convention. Participation of nursing personnel in the planning of nursing services. The Committee notes the adoption of Decree No. 2005-1656 of 26 December 2005 concerning the councils covering areas of activity and the committee for nursing, rehabilitation and medico-technical care in public health establishments. Further to its previous comments, it notes with satisfaction that the members of this committee, which has replaced the nursing care committee, are elected and no longer appointed by drawing lots. The Committee notes, however, that the members of this body are designated by three groups of voters, one of which regroups three occupational groups: nursing, rehabilitation and medico-technical personnel. The Committee understands that some representatives of nursing personnel fear that grouping nursing staff with the other two occupational groups referred to above does not allow to express their views on behalf of their profession within the framework of the committee for nursing, rehabilitation and medico-technical care. Furthermore, the Committee notes the adoption of Decree No. 2010-449 of 30 April 2010 concerning the committee for nursing, rehabilitation and medico-technical care in public health establishments. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the manner in which it is ensured that the concerns of the nursing staff are taken into account in the context of the new regulations.

The Committee raises other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guinea

Nursing Personnel Convention, 1977 (No. 149) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 2–7 of the Convention. Employment and conditions of work and life of nursing personnel. The Committee notes that the information provided by the Government in its last report remains fragmentary, and estimates that, in the interest of maintaining a meaningful dialogue on the application of the Convention in law and practice, the Government should make a genuine effort to collect and transmit all relevant information, including legislative texts or other official documents, dealing with health care policy and nursing services. For instance, despite repeated requests in the last ten years, the Committee has still not received a copy of Decree No. 93/043/PRG/SGG of 26 March 1993, establishing general regimes for hospitals; nor has it received copies of the statutory texts and collective agreements applicable to nursing staff, particularly as regards remuneration and hours of work. Moreover, the Government has been referring since 1992 to ongoing negotiations on two sets of general regulations, one for medical and paramedical staff and another for nurses, without any indication as to the time frame for the possible conclusion of those negotiations. In addition, the Committee notes with concern the Government's last statement to the effect that there is no specific policy concerning nursing services and that accordingly there are no particular texts or provisions addressing the special nature of nursing work.

Under the circumstances, the Committee asks the Government to prepare a detailed and fully documented report on the effect given to the main requirements of the Convention, particularly as regards: (i) the formulation of a national policy on nursing services designed to improve the quality standards of public health care but also to create a stimulating environment for the exercise of the nursing profession (Article 2(1)); (ii) measures relating to nursing education and training as may be taken in consultation with the National Nurses Association (ANIGUI) (Article 2(2)(a) and Article 3); (iii) the institutional framework and practical modalities of the process of consultation with employers' and workers' organizations in matters of nursing policy (Article 2(3) and Article 5(1)); (iv) sufficient protection for nursing personnel, in light of the constraints and hazards inherent in the profession, especially in terms of hours of work and rest periods, paid absence and social security benefits (Article 6); and (v) measures to improve the occupational safety and health conditions of health workers, including any specific initiative aimed at protecting nursing personnel from HIV/AIDS infection (Article 7).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Jamaica

Nursing Personnel Convention, 1977 (No. 149) (ratification: 1984)

Article 5(3) of the Convention. Settlement of disputes. The Committee notes the comments of the Nurses Association of Jamaica (NAJ), dated 25 February 2010 and transmitted to the Government on 6 April 2010, concerning the application of the Convention. The NAJ refers to the decision of the Industrial Disputes Tribunal of 15 January 2010, which has called upon the Government to immediately fix a date for the implementation of the reclassification exercise for the health sector, and alleges that the Government has failed to comply with that ruling and remains unresponsive to industrial action undertaken by its members.

The Committee understands that the dispute concerning the Government's alleged failure to implement the reclassification exercise relates to the retroactive payment of pay increase which had been agreed upon in December 2009. It also understands that the protest of NAJ members has so far taken different forms of civil disobedience, such as wearing black armbands or engaging in sickout action, and the Supreme Court has issued an injunction to prevent further industrial action that might result in severe disruptions in public hospitals.

In view of the apparent escalation of the dispute, the Committee wishes to recall that the Convention requires that the settlement of disputes arising in connection with the determination of terms and conditions of employment of nursing personnel be sought through negotiations between the parties or, in such a manner as to ensure the confidence of the parties involved, through independent and impartial machinery such as mediation, conciliation and voluntary arbitration. This provision reflects the special nature of health care services and seeks to make it unnecessary for the organizations representing nursing personnel to have recourse to such other steps as are normally open to other workers' organizations in defence of their interests. Moreover, the Committee recalls its previous comment in which it had noted the Government's indication that despite the Memorandum of Understanding 2006–08 concluded between the NAJ and the Ministry of Health, there had been insufficient negotiations with respect to working conditions, and as a result, hospitals were faced with serious inconvenience, including critical staff shortage in some cases. The Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in response to the observations of the NAJ. It also asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in order to reach a negotiated solution to the ongoing dispute in a manner consistent with the requirements of the Convention, and to keep the Office informed of any progress made in this respect.

Kyrgyzstan

Nursing Personnel Convention, 1977 (No. 149) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Policy concerning nursing services and personnel. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not communicated a report on the application of the Convention for more than ten years. It once again requests the Government to provide detailed information concerning the application of all the provisions of the Convention, especially in the light of the new Labour Code (Act No. 106 of 4 August 2004) and of Act No. 6 of 9 January 2005 on the protection of citizens' health.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 149 (Congo, France, France: French Polynesia, France: New Caledonia, Guyana, Russian Federation, Tajikistan); Convention No. 172 (Fiji, Guyana, Ireland); Convention No. 177 (Ireland).

II. Observations concerning the submission to the competent authorities of the Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the International Labour Conference (article 19 of the Constitution)

Angola

The Committee notes the communication provided by the Government in June 2010 in which the Ministry of Public Administration, Employment and Social Security indicates that it has encountered difficulties in forwarding the submission files to the competent authorities. The Government reiterates its request for ILO technical assistance to organize an activity on international labour standards with the objective of making those responsible for the various areas of government and the social partners aware of the need to comply with the provisions of the ILO Constitution. The Committee hopes that the Government and other interested parties will receive the requested assistance on international labour standards. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to provide the required information on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted at the 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions of the Conference (2003–10). The Committee also recalls that the Government is requested to provide information on the submission to the National Assembly of the Protection of Workers' Claims (Employer's Insolvency) Recommendation, 1992 (No. 180) (79th Session, 1992), the 1995 Protocol to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (82nd Session, 1995), and the Job Creation in Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises Recommendation, 1998 (No. 189) (86th Session, 1998).

Antigua and Barbuda

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not replied to its previous observations. It asks the Government to supply the relevant information concerning the submission to the Parliament of Antigua and Barbuda of the instruments adopted by the Conference during 13 sessions held between 1996 and 2010 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions).

Azerbaijan

The Committee notes that the Milli Mejlis (National Assembly) adopted Law No. 1004-IIIQ of 11 May 2010, thereby ratifying the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183). It refers to its previous observations and requests the Government to provide information with regard to the submission to the Milli Mejlis (National Assembly) of Recommendation No. 180 (79th Session), and the instruments adopted at the 83rd, 84th, 89th, 90th, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions of the Conference. Please also indicate the date of submission of Recommendation No. 195 to the National Assembly.

Bahamas

The Committee asks the Government to supply information on the submission to Parliament of the remaining 17 instruments adopted by nine sessions of the Conference held between 1997 and 2010 (85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 92nd, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions).

Bahrain

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement made by the Government representative at the Conference Committee in June 2010. The Committee refers to its previous comments and recalls that under article 19 of the ILO Constitution, the competent national authority shall normally be the legislature, in the case of Bahrain, the National Assembly. The Committee therefore reiterates its hope that the Government will be soon in a position to provide the relevant information indicating that the 16 instruments adopted by the Conference at nine sessions held between 2000 and 2010, were submitted to the National Assembly.

Bangladesh

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the submission to Parliament of the remaining instruments adopted at the 77th Session (Convention No. 170 and Recommendation No. 177), the 79th Session (Convention No. 173 and Recommendation No. 180), the 84th Session (Convention No. 179 and Recommendations Nos 185, 186 and 187), and the 85th Session (Recommendation No. 188), as well as all the instruments adopted at the 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the 34 pending instruments to Parliament.

Belize

Serious failure to submit. The Committee recalls the Government's communication received in September 2009, indicating that the Labour Advisory Board will review all unratified Conventions and make recommendations to the Ministry of Labour for onward submission to the National Assembly. The Committee refers to its previous observations and asks the Government to provide information on the submission to the National Assembly of the 41 instruments adopted by the Conference at its 84th (Maritime) Session (October 1996), and during the other 18 sessions held between 1990 and 2010. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit that 41 pending instruments to the National Assembly.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

The Committee recalls that the international labour Conventions adopted by the Conference from 1990 to 2003 were submitted to the National Congress on 26 April 2005. The Committee asks the Government to report on the decision taken by the National Congress with regard to the Conventions submitted. It also requests the Government to indicate the representative organizations of employers and workers to which the information forwarded to the Director-General concerning the submission of the abovementioned Conventions was communicated. The Committee asks the Government to provide all the information required on the submission to the National Congress of the remaining Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference between 1990 and 2010.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Submission to the competent authorities and ratification of Conventions. The Committee notes with interest that the ratification of Conventions Nos 174, 175, 176, 177, 181, 184, 186, as well as of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, and of Convention No. 188 were registered in February 2010. In addition, the ratification of Convention No. 187 was registered in March 2010. The corresponding international labour Recommendations adopted between 1993 and 2007 were also submitted to the relevant authorities at the entity level. The Committee welcomes this progress and hopes that the Government will continue to provide regularly the required information on the obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the relevant competent authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Brazil

The Committee notes that the ratification of Convention No. 185 was registered in January 2010. It recalls that Conventions Nos 128 to 130, 149 to 151, 156 and 157 and the other instruments adopted at the 52nd, 78th, 79th, 81st, 82nd (1995 Protocol), 83rd, 84th (Conventions Nos 179 and 180; 1996 Protocol, Recommendations Nos 186 and 187), 85th, 86th, 88th, 90th, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions of the Conference are still waiting to be submitted to the National Congress. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon report on other measures that have been taken to submit the 38 pending instruments to the National Congress. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the Tripartite

Committee on International Relations (CTRI) requested the Ministry of External Relations in March 2006 to take the necessary steps to submit to the National Congress the Tenants and Share-croppers Recommendation, 1968 (No. 132), the Job Creation in Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises Recommendation, 1998 (No. 189), the Promotion of Cooperatives Recommendation, 2002 (No. 193), the List of Occupational Diseases Recommendation, 2002 (No. 194), and the Human Resources Development Recommendation, 2004 (No. 195).

Cambodia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement by the Government representative of Cambodia at the Conference Committee in June 2010, indicating that all the instruments to be submitted to the competent authorities had been translated into Khmer with ILO technical assistance. The Government representative also indicated that technical assistance remained crucial to ensure rapid transmission to the legislative body. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, welcomes the progress achieved in translating the instruments adopted by the Conference and urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the instruments to the National Assembly.

Cape Verde

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to provide the information required on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference during 14 sessions held between 1995 and 2010 (82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions). It urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to the National Assembly.

Central African Republic

Serious failure to submit. ILO assistance. The Committee notes the statement made by the Government representative of the Central African Republic to the Conference Committee in June 2010 expressing appreciation for the explanations provided by the Office concerning the concept “competent authorities”. The Government also stated that measures will be taken to ensure that instruments are submitted to the National Assembly within two years of their adoption and that steps had already been taken in October 2008 to ensure that the instruments adopted over the past 20 years are submitted to the National Assembly, but that the Office had not been so informed. The Committee notes that the ratification of the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, (1989) No. 169 was registered in August 2010. Consequently, the Committee urges the Government, as did the Conference Committee, to transmit the required information indicating that the 48 remaining instruments adopted by the Conference between 1988 and 2010 have been submitted to the National Assembly.

Chile

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement by the Government representative to the Conference Committee in June 2010 and the communication received in September 2010. The Government undertook to examine the situation arising out of the failure to submit and to inform the Office of the measures which would be taken to resolve the situation. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide the information required on the submission to the National Congress of the instruments adopted at 13 sessions of the Conference held between 1996 and 2010 (the 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, and 99th Sessions). The Committee urges the Government to take measures immediately to submit the pending instruments to the National Congress.

Colombia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to provide all relevant information on the submission to the Congress of the Republic of the 32 instruments adopted at the 75th (Convention No. 168), 79th (Convention No. 173), 81st (Recommendation No. 182), 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th (Recommendation No. 191), 89th (Recommendation No. 192), 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions of the Conference.

Comoros

Serious failure to submit. In its previous comments the Committee noted that the Government was awaiting the renewal of the National Assembly for the purpose of gradually submitting to it the instruments adopted by the Conference. Given that the Assembly was invested in January 2010, the Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, hopes that that the Government will soon be in a position to announce that the 37 instruments adopted at the 17 sessions held between 1992 and 2010 have been submitted to the Assembly of the Union of Comoros.

Congo

Serious failure to submit. ILO assistance. The Committee notes that an ILO mission went to Brazzaville in May 2010 to gain a clear understanding of the reasons for the substantial delay in the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference. It notes that, in order to deal with the backlog which has accumulated between 1970 and 2007 in relation to 86 Conventions, Recommendations and protocols, the departments of the Ministry of Labour and the Secretariat-General of the Government have established a new methodology whereby each instrument should be examined separately and then be followed by a draft text for ratification. At the end of this process, only five Conventions would possibly be submitted to a forthcoming session of the National Assembly with a view to ratification. The Committee notes the efforts made by the administrations concerned. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, invites the Government to complete the procedure for the submission of 87 Conventions, Recommendations and protocols not yet submitted to the National Assembly. It recalls that this concerns the instruments adopted at the 54th (Recommendations Nos 135 and 136), 55th (Recommendations Nos 137, 138, 139, 140, 141 and 142), 58th (Convention No. 137 and Recommendation No. 145), 60th (Conventions Nos 141 and 143, Recommendations Nos 149 and 151), 62nd, 63rd (Recommendation No. 156), 67th (Recommendations Nos 163, 164 and 165), 68th (Convention No 157 and Recommendation Nos 167 and 168), 69th, 70th, 71st (Recommendations Nos 170 and 171), 72nd, 74th and 75th (Recommendations Nos 175 and 176) Sessions of the Conference and the instruments adopted at the 19 sessions of the Conference held between 1990 and 2010.

Côte d'Ivoire

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to provide the respective information on the submission to the National Assembly of the 28 instruments adopted at 13 sessions of the Conference held between 1996 and 2010 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions).

Croatia

The Committee notes with interest that the ratification of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 was registered on 12 February 2010. It further notes the information provided by the Government in December 2009, indicating that the translation of the instruments adopted at the 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st and 92nd Sessions of the Conference has already been done. The Government further indicated that the submission of the above instruments has not yet been completed because of the many obligations the Croatian Parliament has to fulfil regarding the alignment of the national legislation and implementation of the acquis communautaire. The Committee invites the Government to take appropriate measures in order to ensure that the 16 remaining instruments adopted by the Conference between 1998 and 2010 are submitted soon to the Croatian Parliament.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Serious failure to submit. The Government indicates in a report on the application of Convention No. 144 received in June 2010 that the Ministry of Labour has prepared submission reports for the instruments adopted by the Conference from its 83rd to its 98th Sessions with a view to forwarding them to the competent authorities for examination and adoption. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide other relevant information on the effective submission to Parliament of the 28 instruments adopted at the 13 sessions of the Conference held between 1996 and 2010.

Djibouti

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with serious concern that the failure of submission by Djibouti concerns the instruments adopted at the 27 sessions of the Conference held between 1980 and 2010. The Committee expresses serious concern and requests the Government to make every effort in a tripartite framework to ensure that it is in a position in the near future to provide the required information on the submission to the National Assembly of the 62 instruments adopted at the 27 sessions of the Conference held between 1980 and 2010 (66th, 68th, 69th, 70th, 71st, 72nd, 74th, 75th, 76th, 77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions).

Dominica

Serious failure to submit. The Committee regrets that the Government has not replied to its previous observations. It reiterates its hope that the Government will soon announce that the 35 instruments adopted by the Conference during 16 sessions held between 1993 and 2010 (80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions) have been submitted to the House of Assembly.

El Salvador

In its previous comments, the Committee observed the failure to submit to the Congress of the Republic the instruments adopted at the 62nd, 65th, 66th, 68th, 70th, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th and 89th Sessions of the Conference, as well as the remaining instruments from the 63rd (Convention No. 148 and Recommendations Nos 156 and 157), 67th (Convention No. 154 and Recommendation No. 163) and 69th (Recommendation No. 167) Sessions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the submission to the Congress of the Republic of all the remaining instruments, including Recommendations Nos 193 and 194 (90th Session, 2002) and the instruments adopted at the 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions (2003–10).

Equatorial Guinea

Serious failure to submit. The Committee recalls the communication dated 9 May 2008 in which the Ministry of Labour and Social Security requested the Head of Government to proceed with the submission to the House of People's Representatives of the instruments adopted by the Conference at 13 sessions held between 1993 and 2006. The Committee asks the Government to provide the other relevant information on compliance with the obligation of submission, and particularly the date on which the instruments adopted between 1993 and 2006 were in fact submitted to the House of People's Representatives. The Committee requests the Government to report on the submission to the House of People's Representatives of the HIV and AIDS Recommendation, 2010, adopted by the Conference at its 99th Session.

Ethiopia

The Committee asks the Government to provide the relevant information on the submission to the House of People's Representatives of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 88th (Recommendation No. 191), 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions.

Fiji

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in May 2010 indicating that Fiji has not had a Parliament since 2006. The Government further stated that it is committed to adopt a progressive and democratic Constitution by 2013 and to hold for the first time a non-race based election in 2014 after which a Parliament will be constituted. The Committee thus notes that the Government will be able to submit all instruments adopted by the Conference at its 84th Session (Maritime, October 1996) and at its 83rd, 85th, 86th, 88th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions to Parliament only after its establishment. The Committee would therefore appreciate being informed about any developments in regard to the submission to Parliament of 24 instruments adopted by the Conference at 12 sessions held between June 1996 and June 2010, as required by article 19 of the ILO Constitution.

Gabon

The Committee recalls its previous comments, inviting the Government to report on Parliament's decision regarding Conventions Nos 142, 155, 176, 177, 179, 181, 184 and 185. In February 2008 the Government indicated that it intends to submit to Parliament the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, for its ratification. The ratification of Conventions Nos 122 and 153 was registered in October 2009. The Committee invites the Government to provide information concerning the submission to Parliament of the other Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols not yet submitted to Parliament that were adopted at the 74th, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions of the Conference.

Gambia

Submission to the National Assembly. The Committee notes with interest the communication forwarded in May 2010, indicating that the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1994 and 2007 have been submitted to the National Assembly, on 22 March 2010, for its consideration. The Committee welcomes this progress and hopes that the Government will continue to provide regularly the required information on the obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the National Assembly.

Georgia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee refers to its previous observations and asks the Government to report on the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference at the 14 sessions held between 1993 and 2010 (80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions). The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the instruments to Parliament.

Ghana

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement by the Government representative of Ghana at the Conference Committee in June 2010 indicating that the submission procedure will be completed very soon. In the same way as the Conference Committee, the Committee urges the Government to report on the submission to Parliament of all the instruments adopted by the Conference at nine sessions held between 2000 and 2010. In addition, the Committee recalls its previous comments and once again asks the Government to supply the indications required with regard to the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 80th Session (Convention No. 174 and Recommendation No. 181), 81st Session (Convention No. 175 and Recommendation No. 182), 82nd Session (Convention No. 176 and Recommendation No. 183, and the Protocol of 1995) and 84th Session (Recommendations Nos 185 and 186).

Guinea

Serious failure to submit. The Committee refers to its previous comments and asks the Government to provide the information requested regarding the submission to the National Assembly of the 26 instruments adopted at the 12 sessions held by the Conference between October 1996 and June 2010 (84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions).

Guinea-Bissau

The Committee requests the Government to supply up-to-date information on the submission to the National People's Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions.

Haiti

Serious failure to submit. The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort in the near future to be in a position to announce soon the submission to the National Assembly of the following instruments:

- (a) the remaining instruments from the 67th Session (Conventions Nos 154 and 155, and Recommendations Nos 163 and 164);*
- (b) the instruments adopted at the 68th Session;*
- (c) the remaining instruments adopted at the 75th Session (Convention No. 168, and Recommendations Nos 175 and 176); and*
- (d) the instruments adopted at 20 sessions of the Conference held between 1989 and 2010.*

Iraq

The Committee notes the brief communication forwarded in September 2010 indicating that no Convention has been submitted. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to provide information on the submission to the Council of Representatives established under the 2005 Iraqi Constitution of the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference from 2000 to 2010.

Ireland

Serious failure to submit. The Committee hopes that the Government will be able to announce soon that the instruments adopted by the Conference at the nine sessions held between 2000 and 2010 (88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions) were submitted to the Oireachtas (Parliament).

Kazakhstan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee refers to its previous observations and asks the Government to supply the requested information on the submission to Parliament of the 33 instruments still pending submission which were adopted by the Conference between 1993 and 2010. It urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to Parliament.

Kenya

Submission to the National Assembly. The Committee notes with interest that the protocols adopted at the 82nd and 84th Sessions and all other instruments adopted by the Conference between 2000–07 have been submitted to the National Assembly on 13 September 2010. The Committee welcomes this progress and hopes that the Government will continue to regularly provide information concerning the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference to the National Assembly.

Kiribati

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the detailed replies provided by the Government in April 2010. The Government indicates that submission to Cabinet is the first step before submission to Parliament. Submission to Cabinet requires comprehensive explanations of the Conventions, article by article, and in particular, identification of all potential costs and benefits of ratifying Conventions or using Recommendations. The Committee further notes that, in order to meet the constitutional obligation to submit to Parliament through Cabinet, the Ministry of Labour and Human Resources Development is required to cooperate with the Office of the Attorney General and the relevant stakeholders to examine each Convention and Recommendation. It also notes with interest that the ILO Suva Office is currently providing technical advice to Kiribati in order to progress with the submission obligation. It further notes that the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006) and the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188) will be the first two Conventions to be submitted to Parliament through Cabinet once all costs and benefits of its obligations are identified. Thus, a decision to ratify or not, based on the obligations that derive from the Conventions, will be taken at that point. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon announce that the MLC, 2006 and Convention No. 188 have been submitted to Parliament. It recalls that 16 instruments adopted by the Conference at the nine sessions held between 2000 and 2010 (88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions) are to be submitted to Parliament in conformity with article 19 of the ILO Constitution.

Kuwait

The Committee recalls the information provided by the Government in September 2009, indicating that it will solicit the views of the social partners on the possibility of ratifying Conventions before referring the matter to the National Assembly. The Committee hopes that the Government will complete soon the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions to the National Assembly (Majlis al-Ummah).

The Committee hopes that the Government will also provide the date of submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted at the 77th Session (1990: Conventions Nos 170 and 171, Recommendations Nos 177 and 178, and the Protocol of 1990), 80th Session (1993: Recommendation No. 181), 86th Session (1998: Recommendation No. 189) and 89th Session (2001: Convention No. 184 and Recommendation No. 192) of the Conference.

Kyrgyzstan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with serious concern that the Government has not communicated information on the submission to the competent authorities of instruments adopted by the Conference at the 17 sessions held between 1992 and 2010.

The Committee notes that Kyrgyzstan has been a Member of the Organization since 31 March 1992. It recalls that, under article 19 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization, every Member undertakes to bring the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies “for the enactment of legislation or other action”. The Governing Body of the International Labour Office has adopted a Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, asking for particulars on this subject. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide all the information requested by the questionnaire at the end of the Memorandum about the competent authority, the date on which the instruments were submitted and any proposals made by the Government on measures to be taken with regard to the instruments that have been submitted.

The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to make every effort to comply with the constitutional obligation of submission and recalls that the Office can provide technical assistance to overcome this serious delay.

Lao People's Democratic Republic

Submission to the National Assembly. The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government in November 2010 indicating that a report was submitted, on 29 October 2010, to the Social and Cultural Affairs Committee of the National Assembly on 12 Conventions, 15 Recommendations and one Protocol adopted by the Conference between 1995 and 2010. The Committee welcomes this progress and hopes that the Government will provide information regularly on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Liberia

The Committee recalls the information provided by the Government in May 2009 indicating that the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 88th, 89th, 90th, 92nd and 95th Sessions, as well as the Protocols of 1990 and of 1995, have yet to be submitted to the National Legislature. The Committee reiterates its hope that the Government will soon be in a position to submit to the National Legislature the 16 remaining instruments adopted by the Conference between 2000 and 2010, as well as the 1990 and 1995 Protocols.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to provide the information requested concerning the submission to the competent authorities, within the meaning of article 19, paragraphs 5 and 6, of the ILO Constitution, of Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted at 13 sessions of the Conference held between 1996 and 2010 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions). It urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to the competent authorities.

Madagascar

The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government in a report received in October 2010. The Government indicates that, given the current political situation of the country, it is still not possible to submit to the National Assembly, which has been dissolved, the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 90th, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions. In these circumstances, the Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on any developments concerning the submission to the National Assembly of ten instruments adopted at six sessions held between 2002 and 2010.

Mali

The Committee asks the Government to provide the relevant information concerning the submission to the National Assembly of the Protocols of 1996 and 2002, as well as of the instruments adopted at the 86th, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions of the Conference.

Mongolia

The Committee asks the Government to indicate if the instruments adopted by the Conference at the 12 sessions held between 1995–2010 (82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions) were submitted to the State Great Khural.

Mozambique

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement by the Government representative of Mozambique to the Conference Committee in June 2010. The Government representative reiterated that the process of submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference to the competent authorities had been re-launched in 2009. The Government representative added that the process would be completed shortly. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to provide all the relevant information on the submission to the Assembly of the Republic of the 28 instruments adopted by the Conference at the 13 sessions held between 1996 and 2010.

Nepal

Submission to the Parliament of Nepal. The Committee notes with interest the communication forwarded in June 2010, indicating that the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1995 and 2007 have been submitted to the Parliament of Nepal, on 16 November 2008, for its consideration. The Committee welcomes this progress and hopes that the Government will continue to provide regularly the required information on the obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Parliament of Nepal.

Niger

The Committee recalls that the ratification of Conventions Nos 155, 161 and 187 was registered in February 2009. It invites the Government to provide the information required concerning the submission to the National Assembly of the 24 instruments adopted by the Conference at 12 sessions (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th (for the Employment Relationship Recommendation, 2006 (No. 198)), 96th and 99th Sessions) held between 1996 and 2010.

Pakistan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to report on the measures taken to submit to Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament) the instruments adopted by the Conference at 15 sessions held between 1994 and 2010 (81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions). The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the 32 pending instruments to Parliament.

Papua New Guinea

Serious failure to submit. The Committee refers to its previous observations and asks the Government to report on the submission to the National Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference at nine sessions between 2000 and 2010 (88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions). It urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the instruments to the National Parliament.

Paraguay

Submission to the National Congress. The Committee notes with interest the communication from the President of the Republic to the National Congress dated 9 March 2010 submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference at the sessions held between 1997 and 2007. The Committee welcomes this progress and hopes that the Government will continue to provide regularly the information required on the obligation to submit to the National Congress the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Peru

The Committee recalls its previous observations and requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted for the submission to the Congress of the Republic of the remaining instruments adopted at the 84th, 88th and 90th Sessions of the Conference, and at the sessions held between 2002 and 2010.

Russian Federation

Serious failure to submit. The Committee recalls the communication dated 17 June 2009 that was sent by the Chair of the Committee on Labour and Social Policy of the State Duma to the Ministry of Health and Social Development of the Russian Federation requesting the Government of the Russian Federation to comply in a timely manner with its obligations under article 19 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee further recalls the resolution adopted by the State Duma on 29 June 2007 requesting the Government of the Russian Federation to take additional measures to ensure unconditional observance of article 19 of the ILO Constitution with regard to the mandatory and timely submission to the State Duma of the Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the Conference. In conformity with article 19 of the ILO Constitution, the Committee asks the Government to take appropriate measures to comply with the requirement of the submission to the State Duma of the instruments adopted by the Conference at eight sessions held between 2001 and 2010 (89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions).

Rwanda

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to report on the submission to the National Assembly of the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference at 15 sessions held between 1993 and 2010 (80th, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions). The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the 33 pending instruments to the National Assembly.

Saint Kitts and Nevis

The Committee recalls that the Government indicated in its report on the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) that it has submitted the instruments adopted at various sessions of the Conference to the tripartite members and to the Ministry of Labour. The Government further states its intention to pursue further discussions on the need to communicate these instruments to the National Assembly for consideration and action. The Committee asks the Government to provide the required information about the date on which the instruments were submitted to the National Assembly and the proposals made by the Government on the measures which might be taken with regard to the instruments adopted by the Conference at 13 sessions held between 1996 and 2010 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions). It again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure full compliance with the constitutional obligation to submit.

Saint Lucia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not replied to its previous comments. It recalls that, in accordance with article 19, paragraphs 5 and 6, of the Constitution of the Organization, Saint Lucia, as a Member of the Organization, has the obligation to submit to Parliament all the remaining Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference from 1980 to 2010 (66th, 67th (Conventions Nos 155 and 156 and Recommendations Nos 164 and 165), 68th (Convention No. 157 and Protocol of 1982), 69th, 70th, 71st, 72nd, 74th, 75th, 76th, 77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions). The Committee again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure full compliance with the constitutional obligation to submit.

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines

The Committee notes with interest that the ratification of Conventions Nos 122, 129, 144 and of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 was registered on 9 November 2010. It also recalls that, under the 1979 Constitution of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, the Cabinet is the executive authority which has the responsibility for making final decisions on ratification and for determining any matter that is brought before the House of Assembly for legislative action. The Committee asks the Government to fulfil its obligations under article 19, paragraphs 5 and 6, of the ILO Constitution by submitting to the House of Assembly the 22 instruments (Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols) adopted by the Conference at 11 sessions held from June 1995 to June 2010 (82nd, 83rd, 85th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions).

Sao Tome and Principe

Serious failure to submit. The Committee recalls that the Government has not provided the required information on the submission to the competent authorities of 42 instruments adopted by the Conference between 1990 and 2010 (77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions). The Committee asks the Government to make every effort to fulfil the constitutional obligation of submission and recalls that the International Labour Office is available to provide the necessary technical assistance to give effect to this essential obligation.

Seychelles

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to indicate whether the instruments adopted by the Conference at eight sessions held between 2001 and 2010 (89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions) have been submitted to the National Assembly.

Sierra Leone

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not replied to its previous comments. The Committee asks the Government to report on the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference in October 1976 (Convention No. 146 and Recommendation No. 154, adopted at the 62nd Session) and the instruments adopted between 1977 and 2010. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the 92 pending instruments to Parliament.

Solomon Islands

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with serious concern that the Government has not replied to its previous comments. The Committee requests the Government to make every effort to comply with the constitutional obligation to submit to the National Legislature the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1984 and 2010. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the 58 pending instruments to the National Legislature.

Somalia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee trusts that, when the national circumstances permit, the Government will provide information on the submission to the competent authorities with regard to the instruments adopted by the Conference between October 1976 and June 2010.

Sudan

Serious failure to submit. Assistance from the ILO. The Committee recalls that it noted in its observation of 2009 that the Government had requested technical assistance with respect to international labour standards from the ILO Subregional Office in Cairo. The Committee reiterates its hope that the Government will soon announce that the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1994 and 2010 have been submitted to the National Assembly.

Suriname

The Committee recalls the information provided by the Government in September 2009 indicating that the instruments adopted at the 90th and 91st Sessions have been forwarded to the Labour Advisory Board to be discussed by social partners, after which, they will be submitted to the competent authorities. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon announce that the instruments adopted at the 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions of the Conference have been submitted to the National Assembly.

Syrian Arab Republic

The Committee recalls that 41 of the instruments adopted by the Conference are still waiting to be submitted to the People's Council. The Committee hopes that the Government will shortly be in a position to announce that the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 66th and 69th Sessions (Recommendations Nos 167 and 168) and at its 70th, 77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 90th (Recommendations Nos 193 and 194) 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions have been submitted to the People's Council.

Tajikistan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with regret that the information on submission to the legislature required by article 19 of the ILO Constitution for the instruments adopted by the Conference at the 11 sessions of the Conference held between October 1996–June 2010 (84th, 85th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions) has not been received. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the 25 pending instruments to the Supreme Council (Majlisi Oli).

The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided the information concerning the submission to the competent authorities of instruments adopted by the Conference at 13 sessions held between 1996 and 2010 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions). The Committee urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to the competent authorities.

Togo

The Committee refers to its previous comments and asks the Government to indicate the date on which the instruments on maternity protection (88th Session, 2000) were submitted to the National Assembly and the representative employers' and workers' organizations to which the information supplied to the Office was communicated. The Committee asks the Government to indicate whether the instruments adopted by the Conference at seven sessions held between 2002 and 2010 have been submitted to the National Assembly.

Turkmenistan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with serious concern that the Government has not provided information on the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference at 15 sessions held by the Conference between 1994 and 2010.

The Committee notes that Turkmenistan has been a Member of the Organization since 24 September 1993. It recalls that, under article 19 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization, every Member undertakes to bring the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies "for the enactment of legislation or other action". The Governing Body of the International Labour Office adopted a Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, asking for particulars on this subject. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide all the information requested by the questionnaire at the end of the Memorandum about the competent authority, the date on which the instruments were submitted and any proposals made by the Government on the measures to be taken with regard to the instruments that have been submitted.

The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to make every effort to comply with the constitutional obligation of submission and recalls that the Office can provide technical assistance to overcome this serious delay.

Uganda

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to provide the required information on the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference at 15 sessions held between 1994 and 2010

(81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions). It urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to Parliament.

Ukraine

The Committee recalls the reply provided by the Government, in May 2009, to its previous comments indicating that the instruments adopted by the Conference between 2003 and 2007 were referred to the competent bodies of the executive authority in order to examine the possibility of their ratification. The Government further stated that these instruments were not submitted to the Supreme Rada of Ukraine since no proposals were made with regard to their ratification.

The Committee notes that, by virtue of the relevant provisions of article 19, paragraphs 5, 6 and 7, of the Constitution, the Members of the Organization have undertaken to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies for the enactment of legislation or other action. In the Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, the Governing Body indicated that the competent authority is the authority which, under the Constitution of each State, has the power to legislate or to take other action in order to implement Conventions and Recommendations. The competent national authority should normally be the legislature. Even in the case of instruments not requiring action in the form of legislation, it would be desirable to ensure that the purpose of submission, which is also to bring Conventions and Recommendations to the knowledge of the public, is fully met by submitting these instruments to the parliamentary body.

The Committee also notes that for many years the Government has provided information on the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Supreme Rada. Submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Supreme Rada does not imply any obligation for the Government to propose the ratification of a Convention or Protocol, or the application of a Recommendation. Governments have complete freedom as to the nature of the proposals to be made when submitting instruments to the competent authorities. Furthermore, the proposals to be made to the competent authority or authorities in connection with submission have to be the subject of consultation in accordance with the tripartite procedures required in Article 5(1)(b) of the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144), which has been ratified by Ukraine.

The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will be in a position in the near future to provide all the information requested in the questionnaire at the end of the Memorandum on the submission to the Supreme Rada of Ukraine regarding the instruments adopted at the 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th and 99th Sessions of the Conference (2003–10).

Uzbekistan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with serious concern that the Government has not communicated information on the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference during 15 sessions held between 1993 and 2010.

The Committee notes that Uzbekistan has been a Member of the Organization since 31 July 1992. It recalls that, under article 19 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization, every Member undertakes to bring the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies “for the enactment of legislation or other action”. The Governing Body of the International Labour Office has adopted a Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, asking for particulars about this subject. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide all the information requested by the questionnaire at the end of the Memorandum about the competent authority, the date on which the instruments were submitted and the proposals made by the Government on the measures which might be taken with regard to the instruments that have been submitted.

The Committee urges the Government, in the same way as the Conference Committee, to make every effort to comply with the constitutional obligation of submission and recalls that the Office can provide technical assistance to overcome this serious delay.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Submission to the National Assembly. The Committee notes with interest the communication received in September 2010 informing the ILO that, on 30 August 2010, the President of the National Assembly received information concerning 41 international labour Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference between 1992 and 2007. The Committee notes that the Government is following the action taken by the National Assembly on this matter and the policy pursued by the national executive authority in relation to each of the instruments submitted for consideration. The Committee welcomes this progress and hopes that the Government will provide information regularly on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Zambia

Submission to the National Assembly. The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government in September 2010 indicating that 12 instruments adopted by the Conference from 1996 to 2007 were submitted to the National Assembly. The Committee would appreciate receiving further information on the date on which the abovementioned instruments were submitted to the National Assembly. It also invites the Government to report on the proposals tabled and the decisions taken by the National Assembly, as well as on the tripartite consultation that took place with the social partners prior to the submission to the National Assembly.

Appendix I. Table of reports received on ratified Conventions as of 10 December 2010
(articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution)

Article 22 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization provides that “each of the Members agrees to make an annual report to the International Labour Office on the measures which it has taken to give effect to the provisions of the Conventions to which it is a party. These reports shall be made in such form and shall contain such particulars as the Governing Body may request”. Article 23 of the Constitution provides that the Director-General shall lay before the next meeting of the Conference a summary of the reports communicated to him by Members in pursuance of article 22, and that each Member shall communicate copies of these reports to the representative organizations of employers and workers.

At its 204th Session (November 1977), the Governing Body approved the following arrangements for the presentation by the Director-General to the Conference of summaries of reports submitted by governments under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution:

- (a) the practice of tabular classification of reports, without summary of their contents, which has been followed for several years in respect of reports subsequent to first reports after ratification, should be applied to all reports, including first reports;
- (b) the Director-General should make available, for consultation at the Conference, the original texts of all reports received on ratified Conventions; in addition, photocopies of the reports should be supplied on request to members of delegations.

At its 267th Session (November 1996), the Governing Body approved new measures for rationalization and simplification.

Reports received under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution appear in simplified form in a table annexed to the report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations; first reports are indicated in parentheses.

Requests for consultation or copies of reports may be addressed to the secretariat of the Committee on the Application of Standards.

Appendix IV. Summary of information supplied by governments with regard to the obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference to the competent authorities

Article 19 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization prescribes, in paragraphs 5, 6 and 7, that Members shall bring the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the International Labour Conference before the competent authorities within a specified period. Under the same provisions, the governments of member States shall inform the Director-General of the International Labour Office of the measures taken to submit the instruments to the competent authorities, and also communicate particulars of the authority or authorities regarded as competent, and of the action taken by them.

In accordance with article 23 of the Constitution, a summary of the information communicated in pursuance of article 19 is submitted to the Conference.

At its 267th Session (November 1996), the Governing Body approved new measures to rationalize and simplify proceedings. As a result, the summarized information appears in an appendix to the report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations.

The present summary contains the most recent information on the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 96th Session (May–June 2007). The Conference adopted no international labour Conventions or Recommendations at its 97th (June 2008) and 98th (June 2009) Sessions.

The summarized information also consists of communications which were forwarded to the Director-General of the International Labour Office after the closure of the 99th Session of the Conference (Geneva, June 2010) and which could not therefore be laid before the Conference at that session.

In the next report, the summary will contain information showing how far governments have progressed in the submission to the competent authorities of the HIV and AIDS Recommendation, 2010 (No. 200), adopted by the Conference at its 99th Session (June 2010).

Bosnia and Herzegovina. The ratification of Conventions Nos 174, 175, 177, 181, 184, 186 and the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 was registered on 12 February 2010. The ratification of Conventions Nos 176 and 188 was registered on 4 February 2010. The ratification of Convention No 187 was registered on 9 March 2010. Recommendations Nos 189, 193, 194, 195 and 198 were submitted to the competent authorities in December 2009.

Costa Rica. The Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188) was submitted to the Legislative Assembly on 21 May 2009.

Cuba. The competent legislative authorities have examined the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions.

Gambia. On 22 March 2010, the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1994 and 2007 were submitted to the National Assembly.

Germany. The ratification of Convention No. 187 was registered on 21 July 2010.

Kenya. On 13 September 2010, the Protocols adopted at the 82nd and 84th Sessions and all the other instruments adopted by the Conference between 2000 and 2007 were submitted to the National Assembly.

Lao People's Democratic Republic. The instruments adopted by the Conference between 1995 and 2010 were submitted to the National Assembly on 29 October 2010.

Latvia. The Work in Fishing Convention and Recommendation, 2007, adopted at the 96th Session of the Conference were submitted to the Saeima in 2010.

Republic of Moldova. The ratification of Convention No. 187 was registered on 12 February 2010.

Nepal. On 3 June 2010, the Government reported on the submission to the Parliament of Nepal, on 16 November 2008, of the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1995 and 2006.

Paraguay. On 9 March 2010, the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1997 and 2007 were submitted to the National Congress.

Portugal. The Work in Fishing Convention and Recommendation, 2007, adopted at the 96th Session of the Conference were submitted to the Assembly of the Republic in April 2008.

Slovakia. The ratification of Convention No. 187 was registered on 22 February 2010.

South Africa. The instruments adopted at the 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions of the Conference were submitted to the National Assembly in October 2007.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela. On 30 August 2010, 41 Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference between 1992 and 2007 were submitted to the National Assembly.

Zambia. The instruments adopted by the Conference between 1996 and 2007 were submitted to the National Assembly in 2010.

The Committee has deemed it necessary, in certain cases, to request additional information on the nature of the competent authorities to which the instruments adopted by the Conference have been submitted, as well as other particulars required by the questionnaire at the end of the Memorandum of 1980, as revised in March 2005.

Appendix V. Information supplied by governments with regard to the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities

(31st to 98th Sessions of the International Labour Conference, 1948-2009)

Note. The number of the Convention or Recommendation is given in parentheses, preceded by the letter "C" or "R" as the case may be, when only some of the texts adopted at any one session have been submitted. The Protocols are indicated by the letter "P" followed by the number of the corresponding Convention. When the ratification of a Convention was registered, that Convention and the corresponding Recommendation are considered as submitted.

Account has been taken of the date of admission or readmission of States Members to the ILO for determining the sessions of the Conference whose texts are taken into consideration.

The Conference did not adopt any Conventions or Recommendations at its 57th Session (June 1972), 73rd Session (June 1987), 93rd Session (June 2004), 97th Session (June 2008) and 98th Session (June 2009).
